It's been another eventful year! Among the many changes, the Legislature enacted the Affordable Housing on Faith and Higher Education Lands Act of 2023, sellers who accept offers for the sale of single-family residential property must, among other things, disclose room additions and structural modifications, as statutorily specified, and the California Supreme Court determined in a case of "first impression" that an exclusive, implied easement precluding a servient owner from making the most practical use of the easement's area is permissible.

These Highlights summarize the most significant developments over the past year. The paragraph numbers are keyed to the 2024 edition of the Practice Guide where the topics are discussed in greater detail. Our cut-off date for this Update was July 30, 2024. Some of the new cases cited were not final as of that date, so be sure to check the subsequent histories before citing or relying on them.

Thank You! As always, we appreciate your comments and suggestions regarding this Practice Guide. Please keep them coming!

2024 UPDATE HIGHLIGHTS

CHAPTER 2

REAL ESTATE BROKERS AND LISTING AGREEMENTS

Disclosure Obligations

[2:214-214.1] Room additions, structural modifications, alterations, or repairs made by contractors: On or after July 1, 2024, a seller who accepts an offer for the sale of a single-family residential property within 18 months from the date title to the property was transferred to the seller must, among other things, disclose to the buyer any room additions, structural modifications, other alterations, or repairs made to the property by a contractor with whom the seller entered into a contract since the transfer of title. [New Civ.C. § 1102.6h]

TITLE INSURANCE

Policy Liability

[3:372] Insured owners; measuring differential value damages: One case has concluded that loss should be based on the diminution in a property's value according to its "highest and best use" as of the date the covered defect is discovered. [Tait v. Commonwealth Land Title Insurance Co. (2024) 103 CA5th 271, _, 322 CR3d 877, 888]

CHAPTER 4

PURCHASE AND SALE AGREEMENT

Mineral, Oil and Gas Rights

[4:53.1] Reserved: The holders of mineral rights in 19 parcels of land were entitled to a one-half interest in the sand and gravel extracted by the surface estate owners. Reason: The sand and gravel had commercial value, could be mined, and had been mined in the area since the 1920s. [Vulcan Lands, Inc. v. Currie (2023) 98 CA5th 113, 117, 123, 316 CR3d 494, 497, 502]

Covenants Running with the Land

[4:66.2] Recordation of planned community CC&Rs: A tree-cutting covenant contained in the original recorded declaration that established a subdivision's general plan did not bind the purchaser of property that was not described therein. [Colyear v. Rolling Hills Community Ass'n of Rancho Palos Verdes (2024) 100 CA5th 110, 125-127, 31 CR3d 805, 817-818 (certified for partial publication)]

Public Permits

[4:69.2] Short-term rentals (STRs) in coastal zone: An online marketplace that connected residential STR owners with renters was neither directly nor vicariously liable for allowing STR owners to list and rent unpermitted STRs on its website. [Coastal Protection Alliance, Inc. v. AIRBNB, INC. (2023) 95 CA5th 207, 212, 215-219, 313 CR3d 262, 265, 267-271]

Laws Facilitating Higher Density Housing

[4:89.7] Residential development on land owned by higher education or religious institutions: The Affordable Housing on Faith and Higher Education Lands Act of 2023 provides a streamlined, ministerial process for approving housing development projects that meet specified criteria with respect to land owned by independent higher education or religious institutions. Projects that meet all the Act's specific criteria are deemed a "use by right" on the land. [New Gov.C. § 65913.16]

Exclusive Implied Easements

[4:102.1c; 4:102.2; 4:102.4j] Permissibility: Although not favored, the California Supreme Court has determined in a case of "first impression" that an exclusive implied easement precluding a servient owner from making the most practical use of the easement's surface area is permissible. [Romero v. Shih (2024) 15 C5th 680, 687-688, 317 CR3d 478, 481]

Prescriptive Easements

[4:102.16] Judicial determination requirement: Although a judicial determination ordinarily is required before a prescriptive easement can arise, the California Coastal Commission did not err in relying on its own staff report when it concluded the public "very likely" acquired a prescriptive right to use an existing trail situated over private property. [Cave Landing, LLC v. California Coastal Comm'n (2023) 94 CA5th 654, 656-657, 659, 312 CR3d 447, 448, 440]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Sale of Real Property Negotiated at Settlement Conference

[4:263.2] Enforceability under CCP § 664.6: A settlement term sheet entered into between a commercial landlord and its cannabis dispensary tenant following mediation was fully enforceable under CCP § 664.6. However, an unauthorized prejudgment interest award that differed "materially" from the parties' agreement was reversed. [BTHHM Berkeley, LLC v. Johnston (2024) 100 CA5th 1220, 1222, 1225-1226, 319 CR3d 853, 853, 855-856 (certified for partial publication)]

Written Agreements

[4:270.4; 4:270.6; 4:270.7] Parol evidence: With the help of parol evidence, a hand-written deal to purchase multiple gas stations was deemed sufficiently definite for judicial enforcement even though it (i) failed to indicate whether the transaction included only the parties or also their business entities, (ii) used "X" to denote a price-related term, and (iii) failed to identify the stations' locations. [Tiffany Builders, LLC v. Delrahim (2023) 97 CA5th 536, 545-547, 315 CR3d 582, 588-590]

Attorney Fees

[4:516] Civ.C. § 1717 reciprocal prevailing party fee recovery right in actions "on the contract": See ¶ 11:138 & 11:138.2a of the Highlights Summaries.

CHAPTER 5

ENVIRONMENTAL HAZARDS LIABILITY

Federal Clean Water Act (CWA, 33 USC § 1251 et seq.)

[5:21] "Citizen suits": An environmental organization's "citizen suit" against a miner who committed ongoing CWA violations by operating a suction dredge in a river without a proper CWA permit was upheld. [Idaho Conservation League v. Poe (9th Cir. 2023) 86 F4th 1243, 1244]

California Superfund (Remediation and Clean-Up Liability)

[5:29] Disclosure requirements: A lease provision limiting a commercial landlord/owner's liability was invalid and therefore did not preclude a tenant/lessee's damages award. Reason: The provision necessarily violated the landlord/owner's statutory duty to disclose the presence of asbestos on the leased property. [Epochal Enterprises, Inc. v. LF Encinitas Properties, LLC (2024) 99 CA5th 44, 49-50, 57, 317 CR3d 573, 577, 583-584]

Resource Conservation and Recovery Act (RCRA, 42 USC § 6901 et seq.)

[5:125.10] "Citizen suits": An environmental group's suit against the U.S. Forest Service for allegedly contributing to the contamination of a national forest through the disposal of hazardous lead ammunition by hunters was denied. [Center for Biological Diversity v. United States Forest Service (9th Cir. 2023) 80 F4th 943, 946-955]

CHAPTER 6

FINANCING AND APPRAISALS

Government Loans and Grants

[6:22.8] CalHome Program: Commencing January 1, 2024, units within home ownership development projects that are receiving CalHome funds must be initially sold to and occupied by lower income households. [Amended Health & Saf.C. § 50650.3(c)(3)]

Promissory Notes

[6:241; 6:242.2] Attorney Fees and Costs of Collection (Civ.C. § 1717): See ¶ 11:138 of the Highlights summaries.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Personal Property Security Agreements

[6:495] Signed record: Security agreements must be signed by the debtor (borrower). And "sign" means to execute or adopt a tangible symbol, or attach an electronic symbol, to a record with present intent to authenticate or adopt the record. [Amended Comm'l C. §§ 9203(b)(3)(A) & 1201(b)(37)]

CHAPTER 7

GROUND LEASEHOLDS

Tax Concerns

[7:267.2] Sale of property subject to lease: See ¶ 13:70 of the Highlights summaries.

CHAPTER 11

REMEDIES IN PURCHASE AND SALE TRANSACTIONS

Attorney Fees

[11:138; 11:138.2a] Civ.C. § 1717 reciprocal prevailing party right of recovery in actions "on the contract": It was error to deny § 1717 fees to a homeowner seeking rescission of loan agreements that impermissibly limited the fee provisions to judicial foreclosure actions. [Andrade v. Western Riverside Council of Governments (2024) 99 CA5th 1020, 1026-1027, 318 CR3d 396, 401-402]

Lis Pendens Expungement

[11:708] Based on failure to establish "probable validity" of underlying claim: It was error to apply a prima facie standard in determining whether a commercial property purchaser established her claim's probable validity. Reason: The party who records a lis pendens must show by a preponderance of the evidence that the underlying action is "probably valid." [De Martini v. Sup.Ct. (Gupta) (2024) 98 CA5th 1269, 1278-1280, 317 CR3d 441, 448-449]

[11:735] Refiling prohibited: A commercial property purchaser was required to obtain court permission before filing a second lis pendens in a subsequent action following the vendor's successful expungement of the purchaser's original lis pendens in an earlier related action. [De Martini v. Sup.Ct. (Gupta) (2024) 98 CA5th 1269, 1276-1277, 317 CR3d 441, 446-447]

REAL PROPERTY PURCHASE AND SALE TAX CONCERNS

Change in Ownership

[13:70] Lessor transfers subject to leases of less than 35 years: A change in ownership was triggered where a property lessor's lease term was less than 35 years even though the lessor was the property's original owner. [Equinix LLC v. County of Los Angeles (2024) 101 CA5th 1108, 1117-1118, 320 CR3d 803, 809]

[13:78] Transfers involving entities: The California Supreme Court has confirmed a "change in ownership" is measured by proportional beneficial ownership interests in corporate real property and cannot be limited to an analysis of voting stock only. [Prang v. Los Angeles County Assessment Appeals Bd. (Amen) (2024) 15 C5th 1152, 1168, 1176-1179, 321 CR3d 351, 358, 364-366]

$7000 Homeowner's Exemption

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

[13:96.8a] Owners confined to hospitals or other care facilities: If persons receiving the homeowner's exemption are not occupying certain statutorily specified dwellings because they are confined to a hospital or other care facility, they may still be eligible for the homeowner's exemption. [Amended Rev. & Tax.C. § 218(b)(4)]

Property Damaged/Destroyed by Disaster

[13:107] Base-year value transfers: The five-year period for transferring the base-year value of damaged or destroyed property to comparable property is extended by three years provided the original property was substantially damaged or destroyed on or after November 1, 2018, but on or before November 20, 2018. [Amended Rev. & Tax.C. § 69(i)]

Foreclosure

[13:117] Public auctions: If a property owner defaults on its property tax obligations, the county tax collector can sell the property to the highest bidder in a public auction (Rev. & Tax.C. § 3691 et seq.). Although the auction might produce a price that exceeds the amount of property tax owed, the original owner is entitled to the difference between the property tax due and the proceeds from the foreclosure. [Tyler v. Hennepin County, Minnesota (2023) 598 US 631, 647, 143 S.Ct. 1369, 1380]

Charitable Contributions of Conservation Easements

[13:394.4a] Extinguishment clauses: A majority of the Tax Court has reversed its own ruling that was upheld on appeal by concluding Treas.Reg. § 1.170A-14(g)(6)(ii) is invalid under the Administrative Procedure Act (APA). [Valley Park Ranch LLC v. Commissioner (2024) 162 T.C. No. 6]

Moreover, the Supreme Court's 2024 decision overturning the Chevron Doctrine could affect any appellate court decision. [See Loper Bright Enterprises v. Raimondo (2024) _ US _, _, 144 S.Ct. 2244, 2273—per APA, courts may not defer to agency's legal interpretation simply because statute is ambiguous]

Valuation

- [13:394.7a] Inventory issue: The IRS has challenged some deductions on the ground the donated property was inventory in the taxpayer's hands and therefore either sold in violation of the five-year disposition rule or excluded from the capital asset definition. [See Glade Creek Partners, TC Memo 2023-82; Mill Roads 36 Henry, LLC v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2023-129; Oconee Landing Property LLC v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2024-25]

- [13:394.7b] Qualified appraisal requirement: Some courts, but not all, have accepted almost any appraisal as evidence for valuation purposes. [See Elgin 78 LLC v. Commissioner, No. 26892-21 (T.C. 2024) (accepting appraisal despite numerous omissions); compare Savannah Shoals LLC v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2024-35 (rejecting "qualified appraisal" where conclusions were inconsistent with facts)]

- [13:394.9] Listed transactions: The 11th Circuit has upheld a district court's holding that struck down the IRS's syndicated conservation easements listing notice. Reason: The notice failed to comply with the Administrative Procedure Act's notice and comment requirements. [Green Rock, LLC v. Internal Revenue Service (11th Cir. 2024) 104 F4th 220, 222]

- [13:394.12] Penalties: Disclosing a taxpayer's cost basis in donated property may negate the intent to conceal which is necessary for a fraud penalty. [Mill Road 36 Henry, LLC v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2023-129]

  On the other hand, doing so may not be enough on its own if there are other indicia of fraud. [North Donald LA Property LLC v. Commissioner, No. 24703-21 (TC 4/10/24)]

Timing of Recognition of Income, Gain or Loss

[13:514.3] Common Improvement Costs: For common improvement costs, which include improvements to real property that benefit two or more properties for sale (e.g., streets, sidewalks, sewer lines, etc.), developers may use an optional "safe harbor" method of accounting called the "Alternative Cost Method." [See Rev.Proc. 2023-9, 2023-7 IRB 471]

PREFACE

This book is designed to guide practitioners through the plethora of legal and practical issues pertaining to the purchase and sale of real property interests, commencing with the inception of negotiations through consummation of the transaction (including certain postclosing issues). Toward that end, this Practice Guide takes the following general approach:

• Pertinent statutory, case and administrative law is cited and explained.

• Where appropriate, explanations are presented in a checklist format to facilitate step-by-step guidance through the particular matter.

• Various chapters include sample forms of instruments and agreements which are commonly necessary or desirable in a purchase and sale transaction.

• A separate tax analysis chapter (written by Professor Michael Asimow) alerts counsel to the tax issues and tax consequences with which the client needs to be concerned.

• Finally, each issue is discussed and analyzed with a view toward providing practical guidance in dealing with the client, negotiating with the other side, and creatively and expeditiously solving problems and drafting the relevant documentation.

There are, however, two caveats:

• This Practice Guide is not intended as a treatise on all areas of real estate law or on every issue that could affect a purchase and sale transaction. The book's principal focus is a practical guide to the purchase and sale of real property. Many subjects and doctrines, although pertinent to a real property transaction, are too broad or too attenuated to warrant extensive discussion; when applicable, however, other Rutter Group Practice Guides are cross-referenced for more detailed treatment.

• The forms presented in this Practice Guide should, like any form, be used as a starting point and not as a substitute for your own analysis. Do not assume that the author's language is necessarily appropriate for the deal at hand. Tailor these forms as necessary to fit your particular transaction.

This book will be updated annually to keep tack of current developments in the law, as well as emerging trends and approaches. Your comments for future revisions are also invited.

1. [1:1] In General: One of the first tasks for attorneys approached to represent a party (or parties) in a real estate transaction is to determine the scope of work to be performed in order to consummate the transaction. Certain functions legal counsel can and should perform; but others, counsel cannot or should not perform.

Identifying who will perform the various tasks required to close the transaction is principally a function of cost, time, efficiency and competence.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

a. [1:2] Checklist approach: At the outset, counsel should generate a checklist of matters to be attended to and the persons who will be responsible for them—i.e., attorney, client, real estate broker, architect, engineer, accountant, escrow holder, etc. A thorough and thoughtfully prepared checklist facilitates (1) costs management, coordination and efficient timing of the multifaceted components of the transaction, (2) identification of competence and conflict of interest issues, and (3) significantly, the avoidance of malpractice exposure.

Checklist items will vary with each particular transaction. Broadly, however, a comprehensive checklist in a real estate transaction will cover the points addressed in this Chapter at ¶ 1:6 ff.

b. [1:3] Clarification in attorney fee agreement: The scope of work to be performed by counsel on the client's behalf should always be formalized in a written fee agreement. This is both statutorily required (Bus. & Prof.C. § 6148(a)(2)—agreement must specify "general nature of the legal services to be provided for the client," ¶ 1:192) and a matter of prudent practice (circumventing potential charges that counsel agreed to perform matters beyond the scope of the undertaking). See ¶ 1:195 ff.; and Form 1:A.1.

c. [1:4] Relevance of type of property involved: The scope of work in any real property transaction depends in large part upon the kind of property being sold. Clearly, some purchase and sale transactions are relatively "routine" and can be consummated faster and with less attorney involvement than others.

➪ [1:5] PRACTICE POINTER: Even so, never assume consummation of the purchase and sale of a given type of property will always be easier as compared with any other type of property.

For example, many lawyers are inclined to believe the purchase and sale of undeveloped ("raw") land is a relatively "routine" or "problem free" transaction because it does not involve the transfer of improvements, and, typically, the land is not substantially encumbered by leases or other third-party rights. Nevertheless, in many ways, the sale of undeveloped land can present the greatest complexities because there are a host of subdivision, environmental and other development issues that counsel for both buyer and seller may be called upon to analyze and resolve.

Similarly, the purchase and sale of a single-family home is often regarded as a "simple" transaction. While this generally may be the case, clients buying or selling their own homes tend to be emotionally involved in the transaction; even the most seemingly minor issue can become of great consequence to the parties and their counsel, requiring an inordinate amount of negotiation, time, energy and expense.

2. [1:6] Defining Scope of Work—Fundamental Steps: The scope of counsel's work and the time and expense involved necessarily turn on several fundamental aspects of the contemplated transaction. Thus, in approaching representation on a real property purchase and sale matter, the following points should be addressed at the outset:

a. [1:7] Extent of property being sold—real, personal and intangible: First of all, ascertain what type of property is being sold. In addition to the underlying real property, determine whether the transaction contemplates a sale of personal and/or intangible property (contract rights and other choses in action). (See ¶ 4:1 ff.)

For example, a transaction involving the transfer of substantial or complicated personal property, intangible property or appurtenances will affect the amount of documentation to be reviewed and prepared and, therefore, the timing of counsel's work and the structure and amount of counsel's fees.

b. [1:8] Current use of property: Determine the current usage of the real property to be sold—e.g., residential, industrial, commercial (office or retail), mixed use, tenant-occupied (or vacant), improved or unimproved.

The particular usage will determine how much investigation you and third-party experts will need to conduct regarding the property (¶ 4:367 ff.). For example:

• [1:9] Industrial property transactions present a significant concern over the existence of hazardous materials (see Ch. 5). In contrast, environmental (pollution) issues are generally of little concern in most single-family residence transactions.

• [1:10] If the property to be sold is presently vacant, the attorney's work may be less cumbersome in certain respects because there are no leases and often no management contracts or other third-party agreements to review.

c. [1:11] Interest to be sold: Determine what type of interest is to be transferred:

• Fee interest: Establish whether the parties contemplate a sale of the entire fee interest or something less. (See ¶ 4:90 ff.)

• Ground lease: See Ch. 7.

• License or easement: See ¶ 4:101 ff.

• Installment land contract: See ¶ 4:112 ff.

• Option to purchase: See Ch. 8.

(1) [1:12] Effect of collateral issues: The type of interest to be conveyed impacts a host of collateral issues incident to the transaction and, necessarily, the time, cost and expertise that will be required. For example:

• [1:13] The sale of an interest in a ground lease is typically more complicated than the sale of a fee interest. More documents need to be reviewed and/or prepared by counsel, more tax issues need to be considered, and financing issues are more complex. (See Ch. 7.)

• [1:14] Similarly, a conveyance to be effected by an installment land contract, license or easement presents several issues not typically encountered in the conveyance of a fee interest. (See ¶ 4:101 ff., 4:112 ff.)

d. [1:15] Vesting of title: Determine how the buyer intends to take title to the property—e.g., individually, as community property, partnership, tenants in common, joint tenancy, corporation, limited liability company, trust, etc. (See ¶ 4:132 ff.)

If more than one buyer is taking title, it may be necessary to draft a tenancy in common, partnership or other co-ownership agreement. (See Ch. 12.)

Or, the several buyers may contemplate acquisition and operation of the property as a business entity that does not yet exist. They may need threshold advice about the comparative advantages of taking title as a corporation, general partnership, limited partnership, limited liability company or trust, and then will need legal assistance in forming the desired entity. (See ¶ 1:27.)

e. [1:16] Physical condition of property: Determine what investigations need to be conducted concerning the physical condition of the property—e.g., geological, construction, access issues, etc. (See ¶ 4:367 ff.)

f. [1:17] Buyer's intended use: Determine the buyer's intended use of the property—e.g., owner occupancy, lease to new tenants, development, construction, etc. The intended use may require your services in connection with such things as preparing leases, investigating zoning, subdivision or other development matters, and/or hiring architects, contractors or other third parties (such as property managers or real estate brokers).

g. [1:18] Condition of title: To the extent possible, ascertain at the outset whether the condition of title might present significant problems.

• [1:19] Comment: Unfortunately, it is often difficult, if not impossible, to determine the existence and/or magnitude of title problems at the beginning of the transaction. This is because a preliminary title report is often not made available until several days (or more) after the purchase contract is signed. (See ¶ 4:327 ff.)

h. [1:20] Compliance with law: Determine whether the client needs or desires guidance with respect to such things as building permits, occupancy certificates or other legally-required permits or official approvals. Also determine whether the client wants or needs you to be involved in issues of environmentally hazardous materials, zoning, subdivision or other land use matters.

i. [1:21] Financing: Determine how the client contemplates financing the purchase transaction. (See Ch. 6.) They may want or need attorney guidance. (At a minimum, buyer's counsel ordinarily will be asked to review the loan documents on the buyer's behalf.)

➪ [1:22] PRACTICE POINTERS FOR BUYER'S COUNSEL: If the buyer is obtaining third-party financing (i.e., seller is not providing a purchase money loan), you and your client should be aware of two important preliminary points:

• Generally, institutional lenders (such as banks, savings and loans, insurance companies, pension funds, etc.) utilize preprinted standard form loan documents that are rarely negotiated or changed. Accordingly, your client should be advised that it may be a waste of time to even attempt engaging in expensive, time-consuming (and ultimately fruitless) negotiations with an institutional lender over many of the terms in the lender's standard form loan documents. (See Ch. 6.)

• Before any loan documents are signed, also review carefully the terms of the loan (amount, interest rate, duration, etc.) to be sure the client is actually getting a loan on the terms they expected.

j. [1:23] Tax considerations: Many clients (both buyers and sellers) will need tax advice. Of course, you should not attempt to counsel on tax and other specialized areas of law unless you have the appropriate expertise (see ¶ 1:46 ff.). But, minimally, you should be prepared to spot the relevant tax issues; for example:

- Tax advantages of allocating purchase price between real property, personal property, goodwill, etc.: See ¶ 4:305 ff.

- Documentary transfer tax: See ¶ 4:306.

- Real property taxes—including reassessment (see ¶ 13:65 ff.); and proration between buyer and seller (see ¶ 4:612 ff.).

- The "basis" of the acquired property, which becomes especially important for purposes of calculating depreciation, as well as gain or loss upon disposition of the property. See ¶ 13:2 ff.

- IRC § 1031 tax-deferred "like-kind" exchanges: See ¶ 13:304 ff.

- Other income tax issues upon acquisition or disposition of the property: See comprehensive discussion in Ch. 13.

k. [1:24] Real estate broker issues: Almost every real property sales transaction involves a listing agreement between the seller and a real estate broker for the payment of a commission. Consequently, issues regarding brokers are particularly important to seller's counsel (see Ch. 2).

Seller's counsel should determine at the outset whether the client expects counsel to prepare or review the broker's listing agreement, or otherwise to play a role in negotiation or payment of the broker's commission. Even if the seller has already signed a listing agreement, you will probably be involved in arranging for payment of the commission at the closing (see ¶ 4:578 ff.; and comprehensive discussion of brokers and listing agreements in Ch. 2).

➪ [1:25] PRACTICE POINTER FOR BUYER'S COUNSEL: Though principally a seller's concern, buyer's counsel also need to address the subject of broker issues. Typically, there are at least three potential broker issues for buyers:

- Purchase and sale agreements should contain a provision indicating who, as between buyer and seller, is required to pay the broker's commission; and also providing for cross-indemnifications between the parties (see ¶ 4:512).

- Because the buyer's broker is the buyer's agent in the transaction, buyer and counsel need to be concerned about actions taken by the broker that might bind the buyer (as principal) (see ¶ 2:120 ff., 2:240 ff.).

- Even the seller's broker may have certain obligations to the buyer (see ¶ 2:170 ff., 2:225 ff.).

l. [1:26] Existing agreements: Identify any agreements (written or oral) affecting the transaction that your client may have entered into before consulting you. Often, a purchase and sale agreement will have been negotiated before counsel are consulted; indeed, the agreement and/or escrow instructions may already have been prepared (if not signed). In such cases, attorney roles could be minimal; your services may simply be needed in the preparation and review of a limited number of documents and in monitoring progress of the transaction.

m. [1:27] Formation of entity to take title: Some real property purchase transactions are part of a larger real estate venture among a group of persons who contemplate acquisition, development and operation of the property as a business entity. These buyers often need preliminary advice and counsel about the formation of an appropriate business entity that will meet their primary objectives.

As a threshold step, the buyers may need to be educated about the comparative advantages and disadvantages (tax and nontax considerations) of a corporation, general partnership, limited partnership, limited liability company and business trust. Although the various types of entities share some common characteristics, each also has distinct features. Counsel will have to probe the buyers to identify which features are most desirable. Then, having identified the type of entity that most satisfies the buyers' needs and goals, steps must be taken to properly form the entity.

Cross-refer: For a comprehensive treatment of choice of business entity and the comparative characteristics, see Friedman, Soza & Jann, Cal. Prac. Guide: Corporations (TRG), Ch. 2.

➪ [1:27.1] PRACTICE POINTER: Advising about choice and formation of business entity is itself a specialized field of practice that is beyond the expertise of many real estate transactional lawyers. You may have to recommend the association of competent counsel in this area before the clients venture too far toward acquisition of the property. (See ¶ 1:46 ff. re attorney competence.)

[1:28 - 1:29] Reserved.

3. [1:30] Impact of Client's Relative Sophistication and Expectations: An extremely important but often overlooked issue bearing on the scope of counsel's work is the client's experience and level of sophistication in real property transactions. Counsel representing unsophisticated clients generally must play a greater role in such things as negotiations, due diligence investigations, and document review and preparation, as well as simply explaining the meaning of the various documents and the process of the transaction. Indeed, relatively routine transactions involving clients with little or no transactional experience may be more demanding of your time and attention than complex transactions involving clients with substantial business acumen.

A related concern is the client's expectations, which are not necessarily a reflection of their level of sophistication. Ascertain at the outset what the client expects of you both in terms of work to be performed and all collateral matters that will attend the attorney-client relationship—including your availability to the client (for telephone consultations and meetings), your fees, particular time-frames (e.g., “turn-around” time for document preparation), etc. Be direct with your client about all of these matters; and immediately dispel any unrealistic client expectations.

➪ [1:31] PRACTICE POINTER: The intensity of your tasks will naturally escalate where the client expects quick results (requiring you to do work within a compressed period of time) or where the transaction appears to present problems that might create various emergencies. The enhanced burdens from time pressures may justify charging higher fees or, alternatively, may require you to decline taking on the matter. Evaluate these points before investing time, energy and expense in the matter and, therefore, before accepting the proffered representation.

4. [1:32] CAVEATS: Several “caveats” merit consideration in determining the scope of attorney work.

a. [1:33] Satisfying third parties: Never assume any issue or problem is one that must be resolved solely to the buyer's and/or seller's satisfaction. In many instances, third parties must also be satisfied if the problem is to be solved and the transaction is to close. Therefore, carefully analyze all apparent issues to ascertain the identity of all potentially concerned parties.

Several matters appearing to present an issue for only one party will actually involve both buyer and seller; and/or, on further analysis, will pose issues for third parties—such as lenders, title insurance companies, escrow holders, or government entities having jurisdiction over the property. For example:

(1) [1:34] Third-party claim impacting financing: Assume the seller's title is clouded by the existence of a third-party claim. The buyer might be willing to accept the risk of a possible third-party claim, but the cloud on title might hinder the buyer's ability to obtain financing—i.e., a lender may be unwilling to fund a loan unless the cloud is removed (regardless of whether a title insurance policy can be obtained to cover the potential claim).

(2) [1:35] Zoning, code violations impacting financing: Assume the property violates existing zoning laws, or the improvements do not meet building code (or other legal) requirements. Again, a lender may be unwilling to make a loan even though the buyer is willing to accept the property in its deficient condition.

b. [1:36] Attention to details: Details tend to be of far greater importance in the sale of real property than in other transactions. Real property interests cannot be transferred in a piecemeal fashion. Unlike the sale of goods, “partial performance” of a real property sale contract is of no value to either party. The parties are generally dealing with an indivisible asset and one minor mistake (e.g., an error in the property's legal description, the misspelling of a name on a deed, or failing to timely record the deed) can cause significant—if not disastrous—consequences. Real property transactions historically have been one of the most fertile areas for attorney malpractice (¶ 1:46), and much of that exposure can be avoided by attention to details.

c. [1:37] Lasting effect of attorney's work: The sale of real property involves the recordation of conveyancing instruments in the land records, and those documents will be in existence, read and relied upon for years to come. Consequently, counsel's work in real property sale transactions has a lasting effect—indeed, perhaps a far greater permanent effect than in other transactional matters. Bear in mind that poorly drafted language in an easement agreement, lease, deed or other relevant document could literally affect generations to come (and, again, increase your malpractice exposure).

d. [1:38] Short time fuse: Real property sales transactions are typically consummated within a relatively short time-frame. The interested parties (buyer and seller, as well as brokers, etc.) generally want the transaction documented, signed and closed as quickly as possible. In turn, counsel are under tremendous pressure to give immediate and complete attention to the matter. This necessarily requires you to evaluate at the outset whether you will have the resources and availability to handle the transaction within the expected time period.

➪ [1:39] PRACTICE POINTER: The demands on your time will vary throughout the course of the transaction; hence, you have to budget your availability accordingly. Be prepared to devote immediate and extensive energy to the matter during the initial stages—e.g., in negotiating and preparing the purchase and sale agreement. Depending upon the complexities of the transaction, a period of relative inactivity may follow; but, invariably, you will have to gear up again as the closing nears.

e. [1:40] Unpredictability: Defining the scope of attorney work is not a science and is subject to countless unpredictable variables and scenarios. Each element of a given transaction (title insurance, zoning, financing, brokerage, etc.) will present a range of problems and, in essence, has a life of its own. In turn, each single problem is likely to impact the timing and cost associated with other issues and, indeed, the parties' ability to consummate the transaction.

➪ [1:41] PRACTICE POINTER: Forewarn your clients that there are a myriad of unpredictable variables but that you will use your "best efforts" to consummate the transaction in a timely manner with a view toward keeping costs down. Beyond that, never guarantee results. Because you cannot pinpoint the various problems that might arise, any "guarantees" or "representations" regarding a particular "result" literally invite malpractice charges from a disappointed client.

4. [1:128] Reporting Attorney Misconduct

[1:45] Before the scope of attorney work is determined, counsel must make a threshold decision on two preliminary crucial issues: (1) whether you have the competence to undertake representation in connection with the particular transaction; and (2) assuming you have the requisite expertise, whether you presently, or might in the foreseeable future, have an actual or potential conflict of interest.

Cross-refer: Ethical rules concerning attorney competence and conflicts of interest are overviewed in the sections at ¶ 1:46 ff. For a comprehensive treatment of these issues, see Tuft, Peck & Mohr, Cal. Prac. Guide: Professional Responsibility & Liability (TRG), Chs. 4 & 6.

1. [1:46] Attorney Competence: Your competence to handle the client's real estate matter is an essential threshold concern, for reasons of both attorney ethics (¶ 1:47 ff.) and an attorney's duty of care owed to a client (¶ 1:57 ff.).

(A report released by the ABA in 2016 ranks real estate transactions the second highest category of legal malpractice claims (14.89%; a drop from 23.36% in 2008). The report also notes that a large percentage of these claims arise from inadequate document preparation—e.g., drafting errors in contracts, leases and deeds. ABA "Profile of Legal Malpractice Claims: 2012-2015.")

a. [1:47] California ethical standards: Lawyers should never accept cases they are not competent to handle. The California Rules of Professional Conduct (CRPC) impose minimum standards of competence on California lawyers as a condition to accepting employment (or continuing employment) as counsel.

The California Rules state attorneys "shall not intentionally, recklessly, with gross negligence, or repeatedly fail to perform legal services with competence." [CRPC 1.1(a); see also ABA Model Code of Professional Responsibility, Canon 6, EC 6-1 & ABA Model Rules of Professional Conduct, Rule 1.1]

"Competence" for this purpose means "to apply the (i) learning and skill, and (ii) mental, emotional, and physical ability reasonably necessary for the performance" of the particular legal service. [CRPC 1.1(b)]

[1:48 - 1:49] Reserved.

(1) [1:50] Attorneys having managerial authority and supervisory duties, subordinate attorneys: The duty of "competence" extends to lawyers with managerial authority and supervisory duties. Indeed, they must make "reasonable efforts" to establish internal policies and procedures that foster ethical conduct within a law firm and "reasonable efforts" to supervise the work of subordinate attorney and nonattorney employees or agents. [See CRPC 5.1 & 5.3; Trousil v. State Bar (1985) 38 C3d 337, 342, 211 CR 525, 527-528 (decided under former CRPC 3-110); Palomo v. State Bar (1984) 36 C3d 785, 795-796, 205 CR 834, 840 (decided under former CRPC 3-110)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Subordinate lawyers also have a duty of "competence" that extends to complying with the CRPC. This is so notwithstanding the fact they act at the direction of another lawyer or other person. In short, a subordinate lawyer generally cannot defend a disciplinary charge by blaming their supervisor. Nonetheless, a subordinate lawyer does not violate the CRPC if they act in accordance with a supervisory lawyer's "reasonable resolution of an arguable question of professional duty." [See CRPC 5.2]

➪ [1:50.1] PRACTICE POINTER: Burdens presented by complex and time-pressured matters may be mitigated somewhat by a sufficient and properly-managed support staff. But the duty of "competent" representation may not be "passed off" to subordinates in your office. Again, you must properly supervise those working under you; and you (the attorney) are ultimately responsible for their work. [CRPC 5.1-5.3; see Farnham v. State Bar (1988) 47 C3d 429, 445, 253 CR 249, 258 (decided under former CRPC 3-110)—failure to perform legal services not mitigated by attorney's "lack of management skills"; McMorris v. State Bar (1981) 29 C3d 96, 99, 171 CR 829, 831 (decided under former CRPC 3-110)—attorney misconduct not mitigated by failure to secure adequate secretarial help]

(2) [1:51] Options in event of insufficient "competence": An attorney lacking sufficient "learning and skill" need not necessarily decline representation. Either of these options is ethically available:

(a) [1:52] Associate competent counsel: Associate or professionally consult with another lawyer "reasonably" believed to be competent in the matter (CRPC 1.1(c)); or

(b) [1:53] Become competent: Acquire "sufficient learning and skill before performance is required" (CRPC 1.1(c)).

➪ [1:53.1] PRACTICE POINTERS: The first option (associating or professionally consulting with another lawyer) does not mean counsel may sit back and rely solely on another attorney's supposed expertise. "[E]ven when work on a case is performed by an experienced attorney, competent representation still requires knowing enough about the subject matter to be able to judge the quality of the attorney's work." [Cole v. Patricia A. Meyer & Assocs., APC (2012) 206 CA4th 1095, 1100, 1117, 142 CR3d 646, 651, 664—attorneys who appeared on all pleadings and papers filed by plaintiffs in underlying case could not avoid malicious prosecution liability merely by showing they took passive role as standby counsel who would try case should it go to trial]

The second option (gearing up to acquire the requisite learning and skill) is viable only if the time involved will not compromise your concomitant duty to diligently handle the matter (CRPC 1.3; ¶ 1:47). An attorney's failure to use "best efforts" to accomplish with "reasonable speed" the purpose for which they were employed breaches the fiduciary duty owed the client and is itself ground for professional discipline. [See generally Bus. & Prof. § 6068; and, e.g., Van Sloten v. State Bar (1989) 48 C3d 921, 931-932, 258 CR 235, 240-241; Farnham v. State Bar (1988) 47 C3d 429, 446, 253 CR 249, 259]

In any event, consider whether you really want to venture into entirely new areas. Taking on a matter that you may have to stumble through could be a frustrating, negative experience for you and your client; and it may leave your client with the impression that you are not competent.

(3) [1:54] Caveat—aiding and abetting unauthorized practice of law: Following the California residential mortgage crisis, a number of real estate attorneys began working with various foreclosure consultants and other nonattorneys to assist distressed homeowners. As a result, the State Bar Committee on Professional Responsibility and Conduct issued an "Ethics Alert" to remind California lawyers of the rules that may apply in the event nonattorneys request assistance and/or refer potential distressed homeowner clients to the lawyers (see ¶ 6:546.8).

Specifically, California attorneys are subject to discipline if, among other things, they aid foreclosure consultants or anyone else in the unauthorized practice of law (e.g., lawyers must not only closely supervise the work of nonattorney employees or agents (¶ 1:50), they may not form partnerships or joint ventures with nonattorneys if any of the business activities involve providing legal services). [See CRPC 5.5(a)(2); Matter of Huang (Rev.Dept. 2014) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct.Rptr. 296, 303 (decided under former CRPC 1-300)—attorney aided and abetted unauthorized practice of law by allowing nonattorney staff to perform loan modification services and by failing to supervise their work]

Cross-refer: For a detailed treatment of the unauthorized practice of law and the ethical limitations placed on lawyers who utilize nonattorney services, see Tuft, Peck & Mohr, Cal. Prac. Guide: Professional Responsibility & Liability (TRG), Ch. 1.

b. [1:55] Practical considerations: Assuming you meet (or can diligently acquire the requisite "ability" to meet) the ethical standards of "competence," also consider whether your expertise is at a level that makes representation on the particular matter practically feasible:

(1) [1:56] Cost and time: If the matter will require your investment of time in learning or brushing up on an unfamiliar area, you will need to consider several factors: (a) whether you have the time; (b) if so, whether you can justify passing the cost of your "learning curve" on to the client (or whether that time have to go uncompensated); and (c) even if you can pass the cost on to your client, whether it is ethically permissible to do so. (See ¶ 1:149 ff.)

Also, though you may have the requisite expertise, consider whether the proposed transaction is one you can expediently handle without infringing on other commitments or overextending yourself. Even the most experienced practitioners must continually reevaluate their time and resources so as to avoid disservice to new clients, existing clients and themselves.

(2) [1:57] Malpractice exposure: "Incompetent" representation breaches the duty of care owed to the client and is actionable malpractice. For this purpose, "competent" representation is measured by whether counsel exercised "such skill, prudence, and diligence as lawyers of ordinary skill and capacity commonly possess and exercise" when confronted with a similar factual situation. [Neel v. Magana, Olney, Levy, Cathcart & Gelfand (1971) 6 C3d 176, 180, 98 CR 837, 838-839; Kirsch v. Duryea (1978) 21 C3d 303, 308, 146 CR 218, 221-222]

By the same token, adherence to "customary practice" is not necessarily a defense to a claim of professional negligence. [See Starr v. Mooslin (1971) 14 CA3d 988, 1000-1001, 92 CR 583, 590—attorney negligence in giving escrow instructions]

➪ [1:57.1] PRACTICE POINTER: The American Bar Association and most malpractice carriers report that real estate transactions account for a high percentage of all legal malpractice claims (see ¶ 1:46). Keep this in mind in deciding whether you are, or can become, "competent" to properly handle a proposed new real estate matter.

(a) [1:58] Research and informed decision-making: Attorneys are not insurers or predictors of accuracy; nor are they bound to anticipate the manner in which uncertain areas of the law ultimately will be resolved. [Lucas v. Hamm (1961) 56 C2d 583, 591, 15 CR 821, 825; Smith v. Lewis (1975) 13 C3d 349, 358-359, 118 CR 621, 627 (disapproved on other grounds by Marriage of Brown (1976) 15 C3d 838, 851, 126 CR 633, 641, fn. 14)]

Even so, the requisite standard of care requires that, regardless of the level of experience, counsel must ascertain the applicable law and rules which can readily be found by standard research techniques. Thus, attorneys owe a duty to their clients to undertake reasonable research to ascertain relevant legal principles and to make informed decisions as to a course of conduct based upon an intelligent assessment of the problem. [Smith v. Lewis, supra, 13 C3d at 358-359, 118 CR at 627; see Stanley v. Richmond (1995) 35 CA4th 1070, 1092-1095, 41 CR2d 768, 780-782]

(b) [1:58.1] "Specialist" standard of care: Malpractice exposure runs higher for attorneys who profess to be "specialists" in a given matter: Counsel who hold themselves out as a legal specialist in a particular area of law will be held to the standard of skill, prudence and diligence exercised by specialists in that field. [Wright v. Williams (1975) 47 CA3d 802, 810, 121 CR 194, 199]

(c) [1:59] Duty to identify apparent legal problems and options: Even when counsel is hired for a limited purpose, the duty of competent representation includes an obligation to alert the client to all reasonably apparent legal problems, alternatives and remedies, even though they are beyond the scope of retention.

"Not only should an attorney furnish advice when requested, but he or she should also volunteer opinions when necessary to further the client's objectives." The theory is that, as between lay client and attorney, the attorney is more qualified to recognize and analyze the client's legal needs. [See Nichols v. Keller (1993) 15 CA4th 1672, 1683-1686, 19 CR2d 601, 608-610 (emphasis added) (a workers' comp case involving potential third-party tort claim, but same general principle applicable to any legal services matter)]

➪ [1:59.1] PRACTICE POINTER: You have the right to limit the scope of your employment. [See CRPC 1.8.8, Comment [2]] Nonetheless, your duty to provide competent legal services requires you to assume the client lacks the experience, training and ability to recognize and analyze their legal needs and options and that they are likely to offer a selective or incomplete recitation of the pertinent facts and circumstances. Therefore, regardless of the breadth of legal advice or assistance the client purports to be seeking, you must be prepared to identify the full ambit of issues, rights and remedies pertinent to the client's matter; and, where appropriate, to advise the client of the need to consult another attorney competent in the relevant matters which are beyond the scope of your retention. [See Nichols v. Keller (1993) 15 CA4th 1672, 1684, 19 CR2d 601, 608]

For example, counsel to a real property purchase and sale transaction might limit the scope of their representation to exclude tax matters. However, despite those limitations on scope of retention, counsel minimally must alert their clients to the fact there will be potential tax consequences, that there might be strategies to avoid or minimize those consequences and, therefore, the client should consult with appropriate tax counsel.

Cross-refer: For a more detailed discussion of legal malpractice, see Tuft, Peck & Mohr, Cal. Prac. Guide: Professional Responsibility & Liability (TRG), Ch. 6.

(3) [1:60] Other considerations: Finally, despite your apparent competence (sufficient to meet ethical standards and minimize malpractice risks), give some thought to the less tangible factors. For example, determine:

— whether the transaction will be enjoyable to handle;

— whether the prospective client is someone you will be able to work with; and — whether accepting the matter will lead to other worthwhile business and referrals.

c. [1:61] Special concerns re out-of-jurisdiction transactions—associating local counsel: You may be called upon to represent a client in a transaction involving the conveyance of out-of-state real property. Because the law of the situs state is likely to differ markedly from that of California, the duty to provide "competent" representation may require you to associate local counsel—at least for the purpose of ensuring that the sale contract, the closing and other procedures comply with the foreign state's law and customary practice (see CRPC 1.1(c); ¶ 1:52).

(Similarly, if a purely California-based transaction might require compliance with a local municipal code (or other local land use law, such as rent control ordinances, zoning restrictions, building or occupancy permit requirements), you may not be competent to handle the matter without, at a minimum, associating local counsel in the particular county or city.)

(1) [1:62] Disclosure and client consent: In these circumstances, you should first disclose to your client your inability to represent them outside the jurisdiction. It is ultimately the client's choice whether they want you to associate competent co-counsel or instead wish to take the entire transaction to another lawyer. [See CRPC 1.5.1—client must consent to fee-splitting among co-counsel (see ¶ 1:154)]

(2) [1:63] Cost and expedience factors: Even if the client is agreeable, associating local counsel may not be the most appropriate or practical option. Also consider whether it might be less expensive and/or more efficient to have the client retain local counsel for the entire transaction, rather than piecemealing the legal work across jurisdictional borders.

➪ [1:64] PRACTICE POINTER: When associating out-of-jurisdiction co-counsel, prudence suggests that you obtain some form of written opinion or other written confirmation that the documents, procedures and structure of the transaction (as drafted by you) do not violate local law and that the transaction is otherwise acceptable and appropriate under local law standards and customary practices.

Cross-refer: For a comprehensive discussion of the use of opinion letters in real property transactions, see Ch. 9.

(3) [1:65] Attorney's "licensed" status affecting right to compensation: Before spending time on an out-of-state transaction, look into the state's law regarding the authority of counsel not licensed by the state to "practice law" in the state. This might affect your right to collect attorney fees for the out-of-state services.

Other states may have restrictive laws similar to California's: The State Bar Act generally limits the authority to "practice law" in California to active members of the California State Bar—meaning attorneys licensed by California (Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 6125, 6126). Unless authorized by statute or court rule to practice law in California at the time of doing so (see, e.g., CRC 9.40 re pro hac vice appearance; and CRC 9.45, 9.46, 9.47 & 9.48 re limited practice, including under State Bar registration system), out-of-state counsel who are not active members of the California State Bar cannot collect compensation for legal services rendered in California because they have engaged in the unauthorized practice of law. [Birbrower, Montalbano, Condon & Frank, P.C. v. Sup.Ct. (ESQ Business Services, Inc.) (1998) 17 C4th 119, 137, 70 CR2d 304, 314; see also Golba v. Dick's Sporting Goods, Inc. (2015) 238 CA4th 1251, 1261-1265, 190 CR3d 337, 344-347—although out-of-state firm retained licensed local counsel to represent class action plaintiff, no error in denying attorney fees request for portion of work performed by out-of-state attorneys lacking pro hac vice admission; Bus. & Prof.C. § 6126—misdemeanor punishable by fine and/or imprisonment; and Bus. & Prof.C. § 6126.3 (granting superior court power to assume jurisdiction over law practice conducted by person engaged in unauthorized practice of law)]

(a) [1:65.1] Activities constituting "practice of law": "Practicing law" in California does not necessarily depend on or require the lawyer's physical presence in the state. Out-of-state counsel may engage in the practice of law "in" California simply by rendering legal advice and preparing legal instruments and contracts for a California client. [Birbrower, Montalbano, Condon & Frank, P.C. v. Sup.Ct. (ESQ Business Services, Inc.) (1998) 17 C4th 119, 128-129, 70 CR2d 304, 308-309; see Estate of Condon (1998) 65 CA4th 1138, 1142-1143, 76 CR2d 922, 925]

1) [1:65.1a] Negotiating contracts: Contracts may, of course, be negotiated without the assistance of counsel. However, an attorney hired by a client to negotiate a contract may not delegate the negotiations to a nonattorney; i.e., in those circumstances, negotiations conducted by counsel's nonattorney employees constitute the unauthorized practice of law. [In re Carlos (BC CD CA 1998) 227 BR 535, 538-539]

(b) [1:65.2] Effect of out-of-state license: Admission to practice law in a sister state does not ipso facto authorize the "practice of law" in California. "Competence in one jurisdiction does not necessarily guarantee competence in another." [Birbrower, Montalbano, Condon & Frank, P.C. v. Sup.Ct. (ESQ Business Services, Inc.) (1998) 17 C4th 119, 132, 70 CR2d 304, 311]

Under narrowly-drawn Rules of Court, however, attorneys in good standing of another state's bar may qualify to practice law in California on a limited basis, including under a State Bar registration system. [See CRC 9.45, 9.46, 9.47 & 9.48]

(c) [1:65.3] Associating licensed counsel not enough: Nor does California law allow out-of-state attorneys to practice law in California simply by associating local counsel in good standing with the California State Bar. [See Birbrower, Montalbano, Condon & Frank, P.C. v. Sup.Ct. (ESQ Business Services, Inc.) (1998) 17 C4th 119, 126, 70 CR2d 304, 307, fn. 3]

(d) [1:66] Compare—legal services on behalf of *nonresident client: Bus. & Prof.C. § 6125 is intended to protect California citizens from incompetent practitioners. The statute is not implicated when a lawyer lacking a California license performs services in California for a nonresident client. In that situation, there is no § 6125 violation. [See Estate of Condon (1998) 65 CA4th 1138, 1145-1148, 76 CR2d 922, 927-928]

Cross-refer: For a more detailed discussion of statutes and rules regulating the "practice of law," see Tuft, Peck & Mohr, Cal. Prac. Guide: Professional Responsibility & Liability (TRG), Ch. 1.

2. [1:70] Conflicts of Interest: Notwithstanding your competence to handle the transaction, actual or potential conflicts of interest may require that you decline representation. As developed at ¶ 1:71 ff., conflict of interest issues turn fundamentally on prescribed ethical standards.

Cross-refer: The sections at ¶ 1:71 ff. overview significant conflict of interest scenarios and the consequences for lawyers and parties involved. For a more in depth discussion of the topic, see Tuft, Peck & Mohr, Cal. Prac. Guide: Professional Responsibility & Liability (TRG), Ch. 4.

a. [1:71] California ethical standards, generally: The California Rules of Professional Conduct prescribe ethical standards for several discrete conflict of interest situations (see CRPC 1.7, 1.8.1, 1.8.6, 1.8.7 and 1.9; ¶ 1:72 ff.). California lawyers must adhere to these standards under risk of professional discipline and/or, in a litigation matter, disqualification.

(1) [1:72] Application to attorney rendering combined legal *and nonlegal services: Attorneys rendering both legal and nonlegal services for a client (e.g., acting as real estate broker or investment adviser as well as providing legal advice, drafting legal documents, etc.) are bound to adhere to the conflict of interest rules (and, indeed, all professional conduct rules) in the provision of all those services. In such a "mixed services" scenario, all of the lawyer's services are considered to be legal in nature for purposes of applying attorney ethical rules and standards. [See Kelly v. State Bar (1991) 53 C3d 509, 517, 280 CR 298, 302; Cal. State Bar Form.Opn. 1999-154]

(2) [1:73.1] Avoiding representation of adverse interests: CRPC 1.7, 1.8.6, 1.8.7 and 1.9 address conflicts of interest arising out of the representation of adverse interests. The Rules provide in pertinent part:

(a) [1:73.2] Disclosure of attorney's adverse interests: An attorney "shall not without informed written consent from each client" and, as otherwise provided:

• Represent a client if the representation is directly adverse to another client in the same or a separate matter (CRPC 1.7(a)); or

• Represent a client if there is a significant risk the lawyer's representation will be materially limited by their responsibilities to or relationships with another client, former client or third person, or by the lawyer's own interests. [CRPC 1.7(b)]

1) [1:73.2a] Required "disclosure" and "informed written consent": The "informed written consent" contemplated by the CRPC consists of a client's or former client's written agreement to the representation following written disclosure. [See Gilbert v. National Corp. for Housing Partnerships (1999) 71 CA4th 1240, 1255, 84 CR2d 204, 214 (decided under former CRPC 3-310)—"Clearly, as a threshold matter one must know of, understand and acknowledge the presence of a conflict of interest before one can give informed consent to its existence" (emphasis in original)]

• FORM: Client Waiver of Conflict of Interest, see Form 1:D.

(b) [1:73.3] Representing potentially conflicting interests: Even when a significant risk requiring the lawyer to comply with CRPC 1.7(b) (¶ 1:73.2) is not present, they must not represent a client without written disclosure to the client, and as otherwise provided, where the lawyer (i) has or knows that another lawyer in the firm has a legal, business, financial, professional or personal relationship with or responsibility to a party or witness in the same matter, or (ii) knows or reasonably should know that another party's lawyer is a spouse, parent, child or sibling of the lawyer, lives with the lawyer, is a client of the lawyer or another lawyer in the firm, or has an intimate relationship with the lawyer. [See CRPC 1.7(c); see also Havasu Lakeshore Investments, LLC v. Fleming (2013) 217 CA4th 770, 778, 158 CR3d 311, 318 (decided under former CRPC 3-310(C))—"conflict" exists when attorney's duty to one client obligates them to take action prejudicial to another client]

(c) [1:73.4] Duties to former clients; potential breach of client confidences: An attorney who previously represented a client in a matter must not thereafter represent another person in the same or a substantially related matter in which that person's interests are materially adverse to the interests of the former client unless the former client gives informed written consent (¶ 1:73.2a). [CRPC 1.9(a); see Costello v. Buckley (2016) 245 CA4th 748, 754, 199 CR3d 891, 896 (decided under former CRPC 3-310(E))—if attorney possesses confidential information adverse to former client, and former client has not consented to current representation, disqualification follows "as a matter of course" (¶ 1:79.4)]

Absent informed written consent (¶ 1:73.2a), the CRPC also prohibits an attorney from representing a person in the same or a substantially related matter where the "firm with which the lawyer formerly was associated had previously represented a client whose interests are materially adverse to that person." This is so, however, only if the attorney actually acquired material, confidential information protected under Bus. & Prof.C. § 6068(e) (duties of attorneys) and the CRPC. [CRPC 1.9(b), Comment [4]]

(d) [1:73.5a] Attorney-client or other fiduciary relationship required: The CRPC proscription against conflict of interest representation operates in the context of an attorney-client or other fiduciary relationship with the affected parties, from which the duties of loyalty (¶ 1:74) and confidentiality (¶ 1:79) arise. [American Airlines, Inc. v. Sheppard, Mullin, Richter & Hampton (2002) 96 CA4th 1017, 1032-1035, 117 CR2d 685, 696-698 (lawyer acted as witness/fiduciary for one adverse party); DCH Health Services Corp. v. Waite (2002) 95 CA4th 829, 832, 115 CR2d 847, 849]

Thus, a party has no standing to seek to disqualify an attorney under the CRPC with whom the party had no attorney-client or other fiduciary relationship. [DCH Health Services Corp. v. Waite, supra, 95 CA4th at 833, 115 CR2d at 850 (decided under former CRPC 3-310); Marriage of Murchison (2016) 245 CA4th 847, 851-852, 199 CR3d 800, 803 (former CRPC 3-300 proceeding)—standing requirement "implicit" in disqualification motions (noting even under minority view, moving nonclient must have "personal stake" sufficient to satisfy standing requirements); compare

Shen v. Miller (2012) 212 CA4th 48, 56, 150 CR3d 783, 789, fn. 3 (decided under former CRPC 3-310)—generally, complaining party must have (or have had) attorney-client relationship with attorney before disqualification is proper; and Kennedy v. Eldridge (2011) 201 CA4th 1197, 1205, 135 CR3d 545, 551 (decided under former CRPC 3-310) —even if opposing litigant was never attorney's client, they may bring motion to disqualify attorney under court's inherent power when attorney's continued representation threatens litigant with cognizable injury or would undermine integrity of judicial process]

1) [1:73.5b] Attorney-client relationship—actual retention not required: A formal retention agreement is not required. For purposes of a conflict of interest analysis, an attorney represents a "client" when the attorney knowingly obtains material confidential information from the client and renders legal advice or services as a result. [People ex rel. Dept. of Corporations v. SpeeDee Oil Change Systems, Inc. (1999) 20 C4th 1135, 1148, 86 CR2d 816, 825; see also Shen v. Miller (2012) 212 CA4th 48, 57, 150 CR3d 783, 790—attorney-client relationship is established prima facie when party seeking legal guidance consults attorney and secures advice]

2) [1:73.5c] Payment of attorney's fees not determinative: Conversely, simply paying an attorney's fees does not itself make the payor the attorney's "client" for conflict of interest disqualification purposes. [See Strasbourger Pearson Tulcin Wolff Inc. v. Wiz Tech., Inc. (1999) 69 CA4th 1399, 1404-1405, 82 CR2d 326, 329-330]

(3) [1:73.6] Avoiding interests adverse to a client: The California Rules also limit business transactions between attorney and client:

An attorney "shall not enter into a business transaction with a client; or knowingly acquire an ownership, possessory, security, or other pecuniary interest adverse to a client, unless each of the following requirements has been satisfied:

"(a) the transaction or acquisition and its terms are fair and reasonable to the client and the terms and the lawyer's role in the transaction or acquisition are fully disclosed and transmitted in writing to the client in a manner that should reasonably have been understood by the client;

"(b) the client either is represented in the transaction or acquisition by an independent lawyer of the client's choice or the client is advised in writing to seek the advice of an independent lawyer of the client's choice and is given a reasonable opportunity to seek that advice; and

"(c) the client thereafter provides informed written consent to the terms of the transaction or acquisition, and the lawyer's role in it." [CRPC 1.8.1; Marriage of Murchison (2016) 245 CA4th 847, 850, 199 CR3d 800, 802, fn. 2 (¶ 1:91); see also Matter of Allen (Rev.Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct.Rptr. 198, 204-205 (decided under former Rule 3-300)—restrictions normally are imposed on business transactions with current, not former, clients; and ¶ 1:73.2a (re informed written consent)]

[1:73.7 - 1:73.9] Reserved.

(4) [1:73.10] Compare—ABA and other conflict of interest rules: Similar, but not identical, conflict of interest standards are prescribed by the ABA Model Rules of Professional Conduct (see ABA Model Rules, Rule 1.7). However, the ABA Rules have not been adopted in California and are not binding on California lawyers with regard to conduct expressly regulated by California rules. [See CRPC 1.0, Comment [4]—ethics opinions and rules and standards promulgated by other jurisdictions and bar associations may "also be considered" but are not binding; Hetos Investments, Ltd. v. Kurtin (2003) 110 CA4th 36, 46, 1 CR3d 472, 479; see also State Comp. Ins. Fund v. WPS, Inc. (1999) 70 CA4th 644, 655-656, 82 CR2d 799, 807—ABA formal opinion "does not establish an obligatory standard of conduct imposed on California lawyers" and thus cannot be basis for attorney sanctions]

• [1:73.10a] A law firm representing a client in challenging the validity of a document it prepared for the client arguably may create an "appearance of professional impropriety" in violation of ABA rules (see ABA Model Code, Canon 9). But an appearance of impropriety does not itself support a lawyer's disqualification under California ethical rules. [Hetos Investments, Ltd. v. Kurtin (2003) 110 CA4th 36, 47-48, 1 CR3d 472, 479-480—law firm that prepared promissory note for borrower not disqualified from representing borrower in borrower's lawsuit claiming note was usurious]

(5) [1:73.11] Impact of conflict on attorney fees entitlement: Attorneys who violate the ethical rules against conflict-free representation may jeopardize their entitlement to legal fees. Unless counsel obtained the affected client's "informed written consent" (¶ 1:73.2a), they may have to forfeit the right to recover fees for services rendered after the ethical breach. [Cal Pak Delivery, Inc. v. United Parcel Service, Inc. (1997) 52 CA4th 1, 14-16, 60 CR2d 207, 215-216; A.I. Credit Corp.,

Inc. v. Aguilar & Sebastinelli (2003) 113 CA4th 1072, 1076, 6 CR3d 813, 817; but see also Pringle v. La Chapelle (1999) 73 CA4th 1000, 1006-1007, 87 CR2d 90, 94—must be "serious violation" of attorney's responsibilities before ethical rule violation will require forfeiture of fees]

b. [1:74] Representation compromising duty of loyalty to existing clients (simultaneous conflicting representations): Attorneys owe their existing clients a duty of undivided loyalty. Therefore, counsel cannot accept representation of a new client on a matter adverse to the interests of existing clients, unless the affected clients give their informed written consent (¶ 1:73.2a). [CRPC 1.7(a); ABA Model Rule 1.7; Flatt v. Sup.Ct. (Daniel) (1994) 9 C4th 275, 284, 36 CR2d 537, 543; see also Sheppard, Mullin, Richter & Hampton, LLP v. J-M Mfg. Co, Inc. (2018) 6 C5th 59, 84, 86, 237 CR3d 424, 442, 444—to be informed, consent must be based on "all material facts the attorney knows and can reveal," including existing conflicts (applying former CRPC 3-310(C)(3)); In re Charlisse C. (2008) 45 C4th 145, 160, 84 CR3d 597, 607; Santa Clara County Counsel Attys. Ass'n v. Woodside (1994) 7 C4th 525, 548, 28 CR2d 617, 630 (superseded by statute on other grounds as stated in Coachella Valley Mosquito & Vector Control Dist. v. California Pub. Employment Relations Bd. (2005) 35 C4th 1072, 1077, 1084, 29 CR3d 234, 236, 243)—"attorney is precluded from assuming any relation which would prevent him from devoting his entire energies to his client's interests"]

(1) [1:75] Subject matter relationship immaterial: In such a scenario, disqualification on the new matter is mandatory and automatic whether or not there is any subject matter relationship between the simultaneous representations (and, indeed, even if they have nothing in common)—unless, after full disclosure, the clients agree in writing to waive the conflict. [Flatt v. Sup.Ct. (Daniel) (1994) 9 C4th 275, 284-286, 36 CR2d 537, 542-543 & fn. 4; see also Havasu Lakeshore Investments, LLC v. Fleming (2013) 217 CA4th 770, 777, 158 CR3d 311, 317—"with few exceptions," attorneys may not simultaneously represent clients (even as to unrelated matters) whose interests are adverse; Banning Ranch Conservancy v. Sup.Ct. (City of Newport Beach) (2011) 193 CA4th 903, 912, 123 CR3d 348, 354—prohibition against simultaneous conflicting representations is analogous to "biblical injunction" against serving two masters (rule precludes attorneys from having to choose between conflicting duties or reconcile conflicting interests)]

(2) [1:76] Dropping existing client not an option: A simultaneous representation conflict of interests cannot be cured by dropping the existing client in favor of the new client. The automatic disqualification rule applicable to simultaneous conflicting representation cannot be avoided by "unilaterally converting a present client into a former client" in order to trigger the more lenient "substantial relationship" disqualification standard applicable to former clients (¶ 1:79). [Truck Ins. Exch. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1992) 6 CA4th 1050, 1059, 8 CR2d 228, 233; see also Flatt v. Sup.Ct. (Daniel) (1994) 9 C4th 275, 288, 36 CR2d 537, 544-545]

Indeed, such action may itself be a type of breach of the attorney's duty of loyalty that the concurrent representation rule is intended to avoid. [American Airlines, Inc. v. Sheppard, Mullin, Richter & Hampton (2002) 96 CA4th 1017, 1037, 117 CR2d 685, 700]

(3) [1:76.1] Law firm vicarious disqualification: Simultaneous representation of clients with conflicting interests (absent informed written consent, ¶ 1:73.2a) is so patently improper that the conflict will be imputed to the attorney's entire law firm; and the entire firm ordinarily will be vicariously disqualified. [In re Charlisse C. (2008) 45 C4th 145, 161, 84 CR3d 597, 608; see generally, People ex rel. Dept. of Corporations v. SpeeDee Oil Change Systems, Inc. (1999) 20 C4th 1135, 1153-1154, 86 CR2d 816, 829; and ¶ 1:80 (re successive conflicting representations)]

(4) Application to representation of business organizations

(a) [1:77] Conflict between individual member of entity and another client: The automatic disqualification rule (¶ 1:74 ff.) does not necessarily apply when one of the clients is a business organization (e.g., a partnership) and the conflict arises between an individual member of the entity (e.g., a partner) and another client. Here, the threshold issue is whether there is an attorney-client relationship between counsel and the entity's individual.

Generally, where the client is a business entity, counsel's primary duty runs to the entity, not to its principals (see CRPC 1.13(f)). Accordingly, absent the attorney's express or implied agreement to represent a particular member individually, there is no basis for disqualification based on a conflict between the entity member and another client (i.e., the member individually is not an "existing client"). [Responsible Citizens v. Sup.Ct. (Askins) (1993) 16 CA4th 1717, 1731-1732, 20 CR2d 756, 765—automatic disqualification improper where lawyer, while representing partnership in real estate escrow, filed suit on unrelated matter against partner individually; see also Lynn v. George (2017) 15

CA5th 630, 641-642, 223 CR3d 407, 417—"potential" attorney-client relationship with alleged partnership formed by real estate broker and investment company insufficient to disqualify investment company's attorney in broker's action against investment company (¶ 1:79.5)]

(b) [1:77.1] Conflict between entity and its constituents: By contrast, automatic attorney disqualification generally is triggered by simultaneous representation of a business entity and one or more of its constituents (directors, officers, members, shareholders, employees, etc.) once an actual conflict arises between them. [La Jolla Cove Motel & Hotel Apartments, Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Jackman) (2004) 121 CA4th 773, 785, 17 CR3d 467, 475-476; see also M'Guinness v. Johnson (2015) 243 CA4th 602, 617-624, 196 CR3d 662, 673-678—although law firm may have completed its last specific engagement for corporation, error not to automatically disqualify firm from representing corporate constituent in litigation against corporation and its other constituents ("undisputed facts" showed law firm had ongoing relationship with corporation, including retention of deposit to secure future legal services, control over shareholder's access to corporate records and fee agreement evidencing parties' intent to establish "ongoing attorney-client relationship of an open-ended nature")]

The same is not true, however, for "potential conflicts": Disqualification is mandated only if there is a reasonable likelihood that an actual conflict will arise. [See CRPC 1.13(g) (expressly permitting counsel to represent organizations and their constituents subject to CRPC 1.7, 1.8.2, 1.8.6 and 1.8.7); see also Havasu Lakeshore Investments, LLC v. Fleming (2013) 217 CA4th 770, 773, 778, 158 CR3d 311, 314, 318 (decided under former CRPC 3-600(E))—error to disqualify law firm from simultaneously representing LLC and nonmember individual who managed LLC's managing member (a partnership) in action against LLC's two minority members where no actual conflict existed between LLC and nonmember individual and no reasonable likelihood such conflict would arise]

(5) [1:77.5] "Framework" retainer agreements distinguished: "Framework" retainer agreements (i.e., open-ended agreements affording counsel and clients the option of creating future engagements without new writings) do not by themselves create "current" attorney-client relationships within the meaning of CRPC 1.7. Indeed, these agreements merely provide a structure for establishing future attorney-client relationships on an "as-requested" basis, subject to confirmation by the firm: "Framework retainer agreements are not the same as 'classic' retainer agreements, where the client pays a fee to secure the attorney's future time and availability, and where the attorney gives up the right to decline future legal work." [Banning Ranch Conservancy v. Sup.Ct. (City of Newport Beach) (2011) 193 CA4th 903, 908, 912, 123 CR3d 348, 351, 354—two framework retainer agreements between City and law firm entered into more than five years earlier did not create "current" attorney-client relationship so as to preclude firm from representing nature conservancy with interests adverse to City; but see Sheppard, Mullin, Richter & Hampton, LLP v. J-M Mfg. Co, Inc. (2018) 6 C5th 59, 83, 237 CR3d 424, 441—agreement permitting firm to represent client in general employment matters, under which firm regularly provided services over many years, was not framework agreement, but instead continuing agreement for work on employment matters as needed (absent express agreement severing relationship during periods of inactivity, client could reasonably believe it had ongoing attorney-client relationship, even when firm not currently working on specific project)]

c. [1:78] Representation adverse to former client (successive conflicting representations): Another type of disqualifying conflict of interest arises primarily in a litigation context, where counsel (or counsel's law firm) represented an opposing party in the past. Here, only potentially adverse interests are at stake and, therefore, disqualification is not automatic. [Flatt v. Sup.Ct. (Daniel) (1994) 9 C4th 275, 283, 36 CR2d 537, 541; Adams v. Aerojet-General Corp. (2001) 86 CA4th 1324, 1328, 104 CR2d 116, 119]

(1) [1:79] "Substantial relationship" test for disqualifying breach of confidence conflict: The "chief fiduciary value" at jeopardy in a "successive representation" situation is that of client confidentiality—i.e., the potential that the proposed new representation might involve reference to material confidential information obtained from the former client who is now on the opposing side. [CRPC 1.9; In re Charlisse C. (2008) 45 C4th 145, 159-160, 84 CR3d 597, 607; Flatt v. Sup.Ct. (Daniel) (1994) 9 C4th 275, 283, 36 CR2d 537, 541]

Whether the successive representation risks a potential breach of former client confidences so as to trigger disqualification is evaluated by a "substantial relationship" test: If there is a "substantial relationship" between the subjects of the former and current representations, counsel's knowledge of confidential information adverse to the former client is presumed. [See Banning Ranch Conservancy v. Sup.Ct. (City of Newport Beach) (2011) 193 CA4th 903, 918, 123 CR3d 348, 358; Knight v. Ferguson (2007) 149 CA4th 1207, 1213, 57 CR3d 823, 827; Adams v. Aerojet-General Corp. (2001) 86 CA4th 1324, 1331, 104 CR2d 116, 120-121]

In turn, absent the former client's informed written consent (¶ 1:73.2a), or proof that no pertinent confidential information was in fact obtained, counsel is disqualified from representing the proposed new client. [Flatt v. Sup.Ct. (Daniel), supra, 9 C4th at 283, 36 CR2d at 541; see also Fiduciary Trust Int'l of Calif. v. Sup.Ct. (Brown) (2013) 218 CA4th 465, 479, 160 CR3d 216, 226—disqualification is mandatory if former client's representation was "direct and personal" and "substantial relationship" between subjects of prior and current representations is demonstrated]

(a) [1:79.1] Three-pronged inquiry: Application of the "substantial relationship" test requires inquiry into (i) similarities between the two factual situations; (ii) similarities between the legal issues posed; and (iii) the nature and extent of counsel's involvement with the former and proposed new representations and whether counsel was in a position to learn of the client's policy or strategy. [H.F. Ahmanson & Co. v. Salomon Bros., Inc. (1991) 229 CA3d 1445, 1455, 280 CR 614, 620; see also Jessen v. Hartford Cas. Ins. Co. (2003) 111 CA4th 698, 709, 3 CR3d 877, 884-885; see Banning Ranch Conservancy v. Sup.Ct. (City of Newport Beach) (2011) 193 CA4th 903, 918, 123 CR3d 348, 359—former representation alone does not give rise to "lifetime prohibition" against future representation of opposing party]

(b) Application

1) [1:79.2] Former representation of joint clients—mandatory disqualification: Where the prior representation involved joint clients and the new action relates to the same subject matter (e.g., Attorney represented Clients A and B in formation of their partnership and acquisition of partnership property, and thereafter A wants Attorney to represent her in litigation against B over mishandling of partnership affairs), a "substantial relationship" between the former representation and the subsequent action will always exist. In this situation, therefore, disqualification is mandatory unless the former joint clients consent to waive the conflict. [Zador Corp., N.V. v. Kwan (1995) 31 CA4th 1285, 1294, 37 CR2d 754, 759—conflict waived by written agreement not to disqualify Attorney "notwithstanding any adversity [between joint clients] that may develop"; see also Fiduciary Trust Int'l of Calif. v. Sup.Ct. (Brown) (2013) 218 CA4th 465, 482-485, 160 CR3d 216, 228-231 (rejecting Ev.C. § 962 "blanket exception" argument to ethical limitations on adverse, successive representations)—law firm jointly retained by H and W to prepare wills and trusts (including marital trust) disqualified from representing marital trust trustees in subsequent dispute with W's personal representative over estate tax liability; compare Capra v. Capra (2020) 58 CA5th 1072, 1097-1098, 273 CR3d 402, 420-421 (emphasizing former client must show past and present actions relate to same subject matter before mandatory disqualification applies)—attorney not disqualified from representing defendant in dispute over family cabin rights even if attorney previously represented plaintiffs and their corporation in various unrelated matters]

2) [1:79.3] Switching sides in ongoing dispute—mandatory disqualification: When a lawyer switches sides in an ongoing dispute (i.e., the two representations are in the same matter or the current representation involves the work performed for the former client), the nature of the former representation will always be such that the exchange of relevant confidences must be presumed; absent the clients' informed written consent (¶ 1:73.2a), disqualification will be required. [City Nat'l Bank v. Adams (2002) 96 CA4th 315, 330, 117 CR2d 125, 138]

(c) [1:79.4] Compare—where access to confidential information *independently established: The "substantial relationship" test for a disqualifying conflict of interest (¶ 1:79 ff.) applies only when the former client cannot independently establish that counsel acquired, or could have acquired, confidential information while representing the former client. If evidence is presented showing confidential information was or may have been acquired during the first representation, disqualification is required even when there is no "substantial relationship" between the subjects of the former and current representations. [See Costello v. Buckley (2016) 245 CA4th 748, 755-756, 199 CR3d 891, 896-897—P's former attorney disqualified from representing D in P's debt collection action (while representing P in unrelated matter, counsel had access to confidential information about P's prior romantic relationship with D that could be used against her)]

(d) [1:79.5] Confidential, *nonclient relationships: An attorney also may be subject to disqualification when they owe a duty to a nonclient to preserve confidential information. In sum, "if an attorney is deemed to have a duty of confidentiality to a nonclient arising out of … past representation, courts apply the substantial relationship test from successive representation doctrine to determine whether to disqualify counsel in a case against the nonclient." [Acacia Patent Acquisition, LLC v. Sup.Ct. (Reddy) (2015) 234 CA4th 1091, 1102, 184 CR3d 583, 591; see also Lynn v. George (2017) 15 CA5th 630, 637-641, 223 CR3d 407, 413-416—where evidence was insufficient to support finding of confidential nonclient relationship between broker and real estate investment company's attorney, error to disqualify counsel from representing investment company in broker's action against investment company (¶ 1:77)]

(2) [1:80] Law firm vicarious disqualification: The conflicted attorney's presumptive knowledge of the former client's (now adverse party's) material confidential information taints the entire law firm. Consequently, the entire firm ordinarily will be disqualified. [Flatt v. Sup.Ct. (Daniel) (1994) 9 C4th 275, 283, 36 CR2d 537, 541]

(a) [1:80.1] "Ethical screening" rebuttal? It is unclear, however, whether the presumption of shared confidences within a private law firm can be rebutted in a successive representation conflicts scenario, avoiding vicarious law firm disqualification, by evidence of an effective "ethical screening" within the firm. One appellate court, finding the California Supreme Court's apparent "absolute rule" of vicarious law firm disqualification to be dicta, sides with the view that, in proper circumstances, an ethical screening rebuttal is permitted. [Kirk v. First American Title Ins. Co. (2010) 183 CA4th 776, 814, 800-801, 108 CR3d 620, 637-638, 649]

Comment: The California Supreme Court has expressly approved of an ethical screening rebuttal in the context of public sector law firms (In re Charlisse C. (2008) 45 C4th 145, 162-163, 166, 84 CR3d 597, 609-610, 612-613 & fn. 11); but the Court has not yet considered and definitively decided the issue in a nongovernmental attorney context.

(b) [1:80.2] Compare—vicarious disqualification of firm-switching attorney: The situation may be different when an attorney leaves the former client's firm and later represents others in a suit against the former client on a "substantially related" matter: The attorney has a conflict of interest only when they have actual knowledge of material, confidential information protected by Bus. & Prof.C. § 6068(e) and the CRPC. [See CRPC 1.9(b), Comment [4], Executive Summary, 2., codifying Adams v. Aerojet-General Corp. (2001) 86 CA4th 1324, 1337, 104 CR2d 116, 125 (decided under former CRPC 3-310(E))—Lawyer's former firm advised Client on land use and toxic waste disposal at Client's manufacturing site but Lawyer was never personally involved in that representation (Lawyer started new firm years later and filed groundwater contamination suit on behalf of several plaintiffs against Client)]

Instead, in this situation, disqualification depends on a fact-based examination of the nature and extent of the attorney's involvement with and exposure to the former firm's earlier representation of the client and, specifically, whether confidential information material to the current lawsuit would "normally have been imparted" to the attorney while at the former firm. Disqualification should not be ordered where there is no reasonable probability the firm-switching attorney had access to confidential information while at the former firm that is related to the current representation. [Adams v. Aerojet-General Corp., supra, 86 CA4th at 1328, 1340, 104 CR2d at 119, 127 (crafting modified version of Ahmanson "substantial relationship" test)]

d. [1:81] Joint representation conflicts of interest: Attorneys cannot ethically represent more than one client in the same matter unless each joint client gives informed written consent (¶ 1:73.2a). [CRPC 1.7(a) & (b), Comment [2]; see also ABA Model Rule 1.7; Zador Corp., N.V. v. Kwan (1995) 31 CA4th 1285, 1295, 37 CR2d 754, 759]

(1) [1:82] Notwithstanding absence of presently conflicting interests: This rule applies even if it appears there is only a potential conflict between the joint clients (no existing dispute among them). Should the "potential" conflict ripen into an "actual" conflict, continued joint representation requires their informed written consent anew. [CRPC 1.7(a) & (b), Comment [2]; see ¶ 1:73.2a]

(a) [1:83] Conflicts disclosure—notice of "joint client waiver" of attorney-client privilege required: A joint client's consent to waive the potential conflict is not "informed" unless counsel's written disclosure of the potential adverse consequences advised the clients that joint representation on a matter of common interest will result in each client's waiver of the attorney-client privilege with respect to communications with the common attorney in the event of subsequent litigation between themselves (Ev.C. § 962—"joint client exception to attorney-client privilege"). [Zador Corp., N.V. v. Kwan (1995) 31 CA4th 1285, 1294, 37 CR2d 754, 759; see also Wortham & Van Liew v. Sup.Ct. (Clubb) (1987) 188 CA3d 927, 933, 233 CR 725, 728-729—joint clients also waive any confidences from each other with respect to common matter]

(2) Application

(a) [1:85] Joint buyer or joint seller clients: In real estate transactions, the "seller" or "buyer" may actually be two or more persons or entities. Because their interests will usually be aligned (if not identical) at the outset, they naturally will seek out one lawyer to represent them jointly. Nonetheless, it is reasonably foreseeable that they could develop divergent opinions or desires at some point during the transaction: For example, one may want to affirm the purchase and sale contract and the other may want to find a basis for its termination. The possibility of a subsequent conflict of interests must be disclosed at the outset; and counsel must obtain the clients' written consent (¶ 1:73.2a) to joint representation both at the inception and again later should the "potential" conflict become a reality (¶ 1:82).

➪ [1:86] PRACTICE POINTER: Multiple client interests may be identical in regard to one aspect of the transaction and divergent as to another. In this situation, it is ethically permissible to represent them jointly on those aspects as to which they share common interests and to advise them to retain separate counsel on other divergent aspects.

For example, assume two buyers wish to purchase property as co-owners. Their interests purely as buyers may be identical; but they could well have differing objectives and desires regarding the terms of their co-ownership agreement (as to which they should prudently obtain independent legal advice). See Ch. 12.

(b) [1:87] Representing both buyer and seller: A far more apparent conflict of interest situation arises where counsel is approached to represent both buyer and seller in a transaction. Their interests are necessarily and inherently adverse from the outset and likely to become even more divergent as the deal progresses. As such, even if both are willing to sign a written waiver of conflicts, it is difficult to imagine a scenario when a single attorney can justify representing both buyer and seller in an arm's length purchase and sale transaction.

➪ [1:88] PRACTICE POINTER: Prudent counsel always avoid representing both buyer and seller—even when they profess to be in 100% agreement on all terms and conditions. As a practical matter, their objectives can never be identical; and representing clients with divergent interests undoubtedly will impair your independent judgment and duty of loyalty to each, posing a serious malpractice trap.

1) [1:89] Special problem—related buyers and sellers: A more difficult problem arises when buyer and seller are related in some manner and intend to effectuate the transaction for a mutually desirable objective that is not fundamentally an arm's length purchase and sale.

For example, spouses may want to transfer property between themselves or to another family member for tax or estate planning purposes; or a corporation may be interested in transferring certain realty to some of its shareholders; or a partnership may want to "cash out" one of its partners by way of a transfer of partnership real property.

➪ [1:89.1] PRACTICE POINTER: In the situations discussed at ¶ 1:89, all concerned parties may view the attorney's job as a mere ministerial task of documenting the deal points and preparing and recording a preprinted title company form deed. Even so, there are potentially conflicting interests which must be disclosed. Notably, the ownership of real property always carries with it various benefits and burdens, and attention must be given to a host of substantive issues (see Ch.4). Separate counsel may be required to advise and consult on matters of potential adverse interests; but even if independent counsel is not essential, a written waiver of the potential conflicts should be procured.

e. [1:90] Conflict from attorney's participation in client transaction: Ethical restrictions on acquiring a pecuniary interest adverse to a client (CRPC 1.8.1; ¶ 1:73.6) effectively forbid counsel from participating with clients on a transactional (or business) matter unless:

- the transaction and its terms are "fair and reasonable" to the client, and the terms and the lawyer's role in the transaction are fully disclosed in writing (in an understandable manner) to the client;

- the client either is represented by an independent lawyer of the client's choice or is given written advice and reasonable opportunity to consult an independent lawyer of their choice; and

• the client thereafter provides informed written consent (¶ 1:73.2a) to the terms of the transaction and the lawyer's role in it. [CRPC 1.8.1; Connor v. State Bar (1990) 50 C3d 1047, 1056, 269 CR 742; BGJ Assocs., LLC v. Wilson (2003) 113 CA4th 1217, 1225-1226, 7 CR3d 140, 146-147 (decided under former CRPC 3-300)—client's consultation with independent counsel does not obviate duty to comply with all other Rule 3-300 requirements; see also Matter of Allen (Rev.Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct.Rptr. 198, 204-205 (decided under former CRPC 3-300)—CRPC restrictions normally are imposed on business transactions with current, not former, clients]

(1) [1:91] Regardless of actual effect on client's interests: The concern is that counsel not be tempted to put personal interests ahead of the client's. Thus, neither the attorney's avowed “good intentions” to act in the client's best interests, nor the absence of actual injury to the client, excuses adherence to the ethical standards set forth at ¶ 1:90. [Connor v. State Bar (1990) 50 C3d 1047, 1057, 269 CR 742, 747 (decided under former rule)—acquiring legal title to client's property for purpose of assisting client in avoiding foreclosure triggers CRPC 3-300; compare Marriage of Murchison (2016) 245 CA4th 847, 854, 199 CR3d 800, 805 (decided under former rule)—purchasing marital residence from client (W) during dissolution proceeding to avoid foreclosure did not trigger CRPC 3-300 (order disqualifying W's attorney for his alleged violation of CRPC 3-300 reversed given W's desire to continue being represented, H's lack of standing to bring disqualification motion, no independent authority requiring disqualification and importance of respecting W's right to counsel); Matter of Allen (Rev.Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct.Rptr. 198, 204 (decided under former rule)—purchasing former client's duplex did not trigger CRPC 3-300 (no attorney-client relationship existed at time of negotiation and sale)]

(2) [1:92] Written recommendation to seek “independent” legal advice: The ethical obligation to advise the client in writing to consult an “independent” lawyer is not discharged by referring the client to a partner, associate or other member of the interested attorney's law firm. “Independent” counsel cannot be one who (directly or indirectly) stands to profit from the attorney-client business transaction (e.g., by client's fee payments). [Connor v. State Bar (1990) 50 C3d 1047, 1058-1059, 269 CR 742, 748; see Mayhew v. Benninghoff (1997) 53 CA4th 1365, 1369-1370, 62 CR2d 27, 30—attorney with whom divorce client entrusted over $600,000 for “side business deal” (investments) failed to advise client to seek independent counsel]

(3) [1:92.1] Transaction presumptively tainted by undue influence; voidable by client: All business transactions between attorney and client in which the attorney is charged with obtaining an advantage over the client are presumptively the product of undue influence and are closely scrutinized for unfairness. In a client's suit to void the transaction, the attorney bears the burden of showing no advantage was taken and that the client was given full disclosure and advice. [See Beery v. State Bar (1987) 43 C3d 802, 812-813, 239 CR 121, 126; BGJ Assocs., LLC v. Wilson (2003) 113 CA4th 1217, 1227-1228, 7 CR3d 140, 148 (decided under former CRPC 3-300); see Mayhew v. Benninghoff (1997) 53 CA4th 1365, 1369-1370, 62 CR2d 27, 29-30 (decided under former CRPC 3-300)—having failed to make required disclosures, attorney could not dispel presumption he took advantage of client in connection with independent financial dealings and thus could not invoke ambiguous arbitration clause in unrelated retainer agreement to compel arbitration of client's claim that attorney converted sums entrusted to him for investment]

(4) [1:93] Rule 1.8.1 as measure of fiduciary duty: A violation of the Rules of Professional Conduct does not itself give rise to an independent cause of action (CRPC 1.0(b)(3)). However, together with statutes and general principles of law, the ethical rules help define counsel's fiduciary duty to a client and are relevant for that purpose in a client's civil suit against counsel. Indeed, the “scope of an attorney's fiduciary duty may be determined as a matter of law based on the Rules of Professional Conduct.” [Stanley v. Richmond (1995) 35 CA4th 1070, 1086, 41 CR2d 768, 776 (emphasis added); BGJ Assocs., LLC v. Wilson (2003) 113 CA4th 1217, 1227, 7 CR3d 140, 147]

Thus, in a client's breach of fiduciary duty suit against counsel for loss allegedly suffered on account of counsel's proscribed adverse interest, CRPC 1.8.1 conclusively establishes counsel's duty to the client. The attorney's breach of fiduciary duty may be measured by the CRPC 1.8.1 violation (and the jury may be instructed accordingly). [Mirabito v. Liccardo (1992) 4 CA4th 41, 45-47, 5 CR2d 571, 573-575 (decided under former rule)—attorney who induced client to make bad investments in violation of CRPC 3-300 liable for client's consequential losses on breach of fiduciary duty theory; see also Day v. Rosenthal (1985) 170 CA3d 1125, 1147-1148, 217 CR 89, 102-103]

(5) Compare—transactions not implicating Rule 1.8.1

(a) [1:94] Independent parallel investments: CRPC 1.8.1 does not apply where attorney and client each make parallel investments on terms offered to the general public or a significant portion of the public—so long as counsel did not solicit the client's investment. [See CRPC 1.8.1, Comment [6]]

(b) [1:94.1] Independent escrow for payment of attorney fees: CRPC 1.8.1 does not apply to an arrangement for the payment of attorney fees from funds deposited by the client in an independent escrow, so long as the fees are disbursed to the attorney only after the legal services are rendered in accordance with the attorney-client fee agreement and the escrow instructions condition payment to the attorney on the client's prior opportunity to review and contest the attorney's bill. [See Cal. State Bar Form.Opn. 2002-159 (decided under former CRPC 3-300); see also ¶ 1:160.1, 1:178.1]

(c) [1:94.2] Unsecured note for fees: Nor does a lawyer acquire a pecuniary interest "adverse to the client" so as to trigger the CRPC 1.8.1 requirements by taking the client's unsecured promissory note as security for the payment of fees. [Hawk v. State Bar (1988) 45 C3d 589, 600-601, 247 CR 599, 605-606 (decided under former CRPC 3-300); see Fletcher v. Davis (2004) 33 C4th 61, 68, 14 CR3d 58, 63 (distinguishing attorney's charging lien, which is within ambit of former Rule 3-300); and ¶ 1:175]

(d) [1:94.3] Business transaction with *former client: CRPC 1.8.1 normally does not apply to business transactions with a former client. Indeed, the existence of an attorney-client relationship at the time of the transaction is an essential element of a Rule 1.8.1 violation. [See Matter of Allen (Rev.Dept. 2010) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct.Rptr. 198, 204-205 (decided under former CRPC 3-300)—attorney's prior relationship with client did not give attorney any advantage in negotiating purchase of client's duplex]

➪ PRACTICE POINTERS

• [1:95] Practical implications from representation of potentially adverse interests: Even when an actual or potential conflict of interest representation passes ethical muster (¶ 1:90 ff.), attorneys should think twice before taking on matters that might possibly involve divided loyalties or a breach of client confidences. In consultations, negotiations and, if necessary, litigation, clients expect their attorneys to take a posture consistent with the client's interests and to be an advocate for the client's interests. An appearance of divided loyalties could impact your ability to collect fees, jeopardize the potential for receiving additional work and/or referrals from the client, perhaps affect your professional reputation, and (in the worst scenario) make you vulnerable to malpractice charges by a disappointed client.

• [1:96] Early focus on potential conflicts advisable: Parties to real property sales transactions are often quite willing to waive any actual or potential conflicts of interest. Typically, buyers and sellers are equally motivated to enter into a contract and consummate the transaction as rapidly as possible; for expedience sake, they do not want to be sidetracked with potential conflicts concerns and, in any event, frequently do not fully understand or appreciate those concerns. Also, most buyers and sellers do not view their relationship as necessarily "adversarial" (the way they would in a litigation context). Indeed, negotiations may have been completed (price and other material terms agreed upon) before an attorney is even consulted. Thus, counsel are often viewed simply as "mechanics" who finalize the paperwork and coordinate the closing—not individuals who will be an "advocate" for one party or an "adversary" of another.

For all of these reasons, it is extremely important that the attorneys directly and immediately focus on conflicts issues. You will be doing your client a disservice—in terms of both cost and time—if, halfway into the transaction, you become compelled to cease representation because a potential conflict has materialized into a reality.

f. [1:97] Soliciting gifts from client: An attorney may not solicit a client to make a "substantial gift," including a testamentary gift, directly to the attorney or a person related to the attorney unless the attorney or his/her relative is related to the client. [See CRPC 1.8.3(a)(1) & Comment [1]—attorneys and/or their relatives may accept gifts from clients subject to general standards of fairness and undue influence, but discipline is appropriate where impermissible influence occurs; see also Cal. State Bar Form.Opn. 2011-180 (decided under former rule)—attorney violated CRPC 4-400 by persuading reluctant client to let attorney stay at client's vacation property without payment of usual weekly rental fee; see also ABA Model Rule 1.8(c); Rest.3d Law Governing Lawyers § 127]

An attorney also may not prepare on behalf of a client an instrument giving the attorney (or their relative) any "substantial gift" unless (i) the attorney or their relative is related to the client or (ii) the client has been advised by an independent lawyer who has provided a certificate of independent review that complies with Prob.C. § 21384(a) requirements. [See CRPC 1.8.3(a)(2), (b)—"related persons" include those who are "related by blood or affinity" as defined in Prob.C. § 21374(a)]

[1:98 - 1:99] Reserved.

3. Initial Client Consultations and Preliminary Steps

a. [1:100] First client contact: In real property sales transactions, there is typically a perceived—and often actual—need for immediate attorney involvement. A seller who has an interested buyer wants to "sign the buyer up" or go on to a new buyer. Similarly, the buyer is anxious to "lock up the property" by securing a signed agreement or otherwise move on and pursue another parcel. Therefore, prospective clients usually want to meet with their counsel and provide counsel with the pertinent documents and information as quickly as possible.

Nevertheless, despite the client's perceived need for "immediate" legal attention, the time for counsel's first involvement and agenda for initial attorney-client substantive consultations should be fixed by counsel (not the client). The reasons are two-fold:

(1) [1:101] Preliminary conflict screening: It is best to avoid learning too much about the substantive aspects of the transaction until you have had an opportunity to perform a "conflict check" for potential conflicts of interest that might require you to decline representation.

Thus, your initial inquiry should be about the principal parties involved in the transaction (buyer, seller, broker, lender, tenants, etc.) to make certain neither you nor your law firm presently has or has had a professional relationship with any of them. [See CRPC 1.7, discussed at ¶ 1:73.1 ff.]

(2) [1:102] Caseload management: Busy lawyers, handling several matters at once, necessarily must budget their time and, indeed, are in the best position to do so. While clients are naturally inclined to want their attorneys' "undivided" attention, as a practical matter counsel must prioritize their workloads. Having skill, knowledge and training in the particular matter, the attorney (not the client) is best equipped to determine when counsel first needs to become involved and whether the situation actually requires "immediate" legal attention.

Transactional attorneys learn to expect phone calls from clients in an excited state, imploring counsel to meet with them and/or review and prepare documents the very same day. Sometimes the matter is in fact "urgent" (frequently with regard to single-family residence transactions) and sometimes it is not. Therefore, counsel should be prepared to weed out unjustifiable "panic" calls from prospective clients and fix a realistic schedule for attorney involvement.

➪ [1:103] PRACTICE POINTER: By the same token, if the matter is one that you would like to handle, do not indefinitely put off meeting with a new client. Timing is a crucial element of virtually all real property sales transactions; and clients who are put "on hold" may be compelled to take their business elsewhere.

b. Initial substantive consultations

(1) [1:104] In person or by telephone? The first substantive attorney-client consultations need not necessarily be at a face-to-face meeting. Indeed, as a practical matter, it may make better sense to proceed with preliminary discussions by telephone. There are several reasons:

• [1:105] If the client is truly "new" (i.e., neither you nor your law firm represented them in prior similar transactions), the first objective is not to identify and resolve all potential substantive issues. Rather, the client will want to decide whether you can and should represent them; and you will need to decide whether you can and should accept the proposed representation. Apart from personal preferences, that decision must turn on a couple of important preliminary determinations:

As indicated, before expending any time on the substantive aspects of the proposed new matter, you should ascertain whether there might be a conflict of interest bar to representation (¶ 1:70 ff.). A similarly important threshold concern is whether you are competent to undertake the proposed representation (¶ 1:46 ff.). These determinations do not require a face-to-face meeting with the prospective client; indeed, it is best to resolve these issues before the client comes to your office (where, in all likelihood, they will expect some "immediate" substantive advice).

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

• [1:106] Except in very rare circumstances, the client will be able to provide you with the germane information orally, by mail, or via fax or email. For busy practitioners (and/or clients), this approach may be more expedient than waiting the several days it might otherwise take to arrange a mutually convenient in-person meeting.

• [1:107] If the client already has documents for you to review, there is little you will be able to tell them until you have read those documents. Prudence suggests that you review and analyze the pertinent documents without the client sitting on the other side of your desk waiting for "instant advice" and "answers." (In many cases, competent advice may have to await further investigation and research.)

➪ [1:108] PRACTICE POINTER: At this stage, while you are assimilating the pertinent information, make it clear you have not yet agreed to represent the client. Give the prospective client a timetable, fixing a date when you will get back to them or scheduling an in-office meeting.

By the same token, do not keep the prospective client "on hold" for too long. As noted, they undoubtedly will be expecting some immediate legal advice and, if your decision is not to accept representation, will want to seek out other counsel post haste.

(2) [1:109] Protecting attorney-client privilege: Confidential communications between attorney and client (including prospective clients who merely consult with but do not retain the attorney) are privileged. [Ev.C. § 952; ABA Model Code, Canon 4; Sullivan v. Sup.Ct. (Spingola) (1972) 29 CA3d 64, 69, 105 CR 241, 243; see also McDermott Will & Emery LLP v. Sup.Ct. (Hausman) (2017) 10 CA5th 1083, 1100-1102, 217 CR3d 47, 63-64 (discussing legal principles governing attorney-client privilege)]

However, the privilege is likely to be waived if another party (a nonclient) not essential to the attorney-client consultations is present. [See Ev.C. § 952—attorney client communications not "confidential" if disclosed to third persons other than those present "to further the interest of the client in the consultation or those to whom disclosure is reasonably necessary for … the accomplishment of the purpose for which the lawyer is consulted …"]

➪ [1:110] PRACTICE POINTER: Be careful about who is in attendance at attorney-client meetings, who is present during telephone calls between attorney and client, and what is said during those meetings and phone conversations. Obviously, you may need to confer jointly with the client and certain other nonclient third parties—such as the client's real estate broker, or other representative or consultant. However, to ensure that the attorney-client privilege is not inadvertently waived, any information intended to be kept confidential (inadmissible evidence) should be discussed in private with the client by asking all other parties to leave the room or get off the telephone line.

c. Special concerns re joint representation

(1) [1:111] Keeping clients informed: Among other obligations, lawyers have a duty to communicate regularly with their clients—i.e., to keep them "reasonably informed" about "significant developments" relating to the representation and to promptly comply with the client's reasonable requests for information and copies of significant documents when necessary to keep the client so informed. [See CRPC 1.4(a)(3); Bus. & Prof.C. § 6068(m); see Matter of Yagman (Rev.Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct.Rptr. 788, 795; Kent v. State Bar (1987) 43 C3d 729, 735, 239 CR 77, 80]

It follows that, when representing more than one client jointly (such as multiple sellers or multiple buyers), you owe a professional obligation to make certain each is kept equally apprised of the status of the transaction.

Cross-refer: For more detailed coverage of the communication-related duties attorneys owe their clients, see Tuft, Peck & Mohr, Cal. Prac. Guide: Professional Responsibility & Liability (TRG), Ch. 3.

(2) [1:112] Joint directions from multiple clients: When representing joint clients, also make certain all of them consent to any action you are taking.

For example, several co-owners may want to use the same lawyer, but may have vastly different ideas about what should be negotiated and how the transaction should otherwise be handled. (Of course, in such a situation, you should not go forward with the joint representation unless and until the several clients give their "informed written consent" (¶ 1:73.2a) to waiving their potential conflicts of interest; see ¶ 1:81 ff.) Assuming the joint representation is properly accepted notwithstanding conflicts of interest, one method of avoiding miscommunications between you and the clients is to have the multiple clients designate one representative with authority to negotiate the deal and give you instructions.

➪ [1:113] PRACTICE POINTER: This point may be covered in your fee agreement, acknowledged and signed by each of the several clients. However, make sure each understands the designated "representative" will essentially be acting as

"agent" for the others in attorney-client communications, with authority to bind the others by the directions given. Also, as a matter of prudence, directions given and decisions made by the representative should be documented by memos to the file, with a written confirmation to each of the several clients.

(3) [1:114] Waiver of attorney-client privilege among joint clients: Communications between you and any one or more of the joint clients regarding the subject of the representation do not enjoy attorney-client privilege protection as against the other joint clients. Make sure each of the several clients understands this point before you get too deeply into consultations. [Ev.C. § 962; see ¶ 1:83]

d. [1:115] Agenda for undertaking representation: Having made the threshold decisions on competence and conflict of interest concerns (and assuming you otherwise wish to accept the matter), it is wise to educate the client about certain fundamental ground rules before you are formally retained:

(1) [1:116] Clarify client or clients to be represented: Explain who you will and will not represent. A lawyer's professional obligation to communicate with the client(s) and keep the client(s) informed about the representation (¶ 1:111) runs to persons who, to the attorney's knowledge, reasonably believe they are clients—at least to the extent of advising them they are not clients. [Butler v. State Bar (1986) 42 C3d 323, 329, 228 CR 499, 503]

(2) [1:117] Define responsibilities and timelines: Assess the client's level of sophistication and expectations, and clearly identify those services you will and will not perform. Depending on the matter and the client, it may be necessary to "spell out" any related legal issues (e.g., tax and estate planning concerns) and/or specific tasks (e.g., reviewing property inspection reports) you will not be addressing as part of your representation. Correspondingly, let the client know (at least generally) the essential tasks they will have to perform.

Work with the client to assemble a team of consultants or representatives and divide up various tasks between them. Set up a preliminary timeline (or "critical path" of events) and corresponding responsibilities for each member of the team.

(3) [1:118] Essential documents: Give the client a sense of the various documents that will need to be procured, negotiated, prepared and reviewed. Provide a realistic estimate of how much time it will take you to draft or review those documents.

(For example, many clients believe a purchase and sale agreement can be generated off a standard word processing "form," with a minimal investment of counsel's time. This is rarely the case and the client should be advised accordingly.)

(4) [1:119] Attorney availability and deadlines: Educate the client as to your availability and explain the difference between true "emergencies" and the client's perceived emergencies.

For example, the preparation (or review) of certain documents need not be completed at the earliest possible time and your client should have a realistic understanding of when you will complete your various tasks. By the same token, it may be necessary to prod the client as to certain matters (e.g., a buyer is best advised to seek third-party financing at the earliest possible date).

(5) [1:120] Client availability and deadlines: Similarly, confirm the availability of your client (and other necessary parties) during critical times in the transaction.

For example, several documents inevitably must be executed just prior to the closing. Make certain the client will not be out of town (or otherwise unavailable) at this critical time when their notarized signature will be required.

(6) [1:121] Fees and costs; advances: Discuss and negotiate attorney fees, a retainer, and the various out-of-pocket costs you may incur on the client's behalf (see detailed discussion at ¶ 1:130 ff.).

Also clarify what costs you will or will not advance on behalf of the client. For example, counsel may want the client to order the preliminary title report at client expense; or, alternatively, may expect the client to advance counsel the funds to do so.

➪ PRACTICE POINTERS

• [1:122] So as to leave no room for misunderstanding, it may make sense to follow up with a letter to the client recapitulating the salient points discussed in your preliminary consultations. (This practice is particularly recommended when undertaking representation of a client with whom you have had no prior professional dealings or a client who is relatively unsophisticated in transactional matters.)

• [1:123] If you decline representation, always make that decision clear to the prospective client as quickly as possible; ordinarily, it is also advisable to confirm the decision in a prompt letter. Many malpractice suits are based on allegations that counsel orally agreed to accept representation and then "abandoned" the matter. Avoid the risk that a prospective client might erroneously contend you gave advice or undertook responsibilities by setting the record straight—in writing—at the moment your decision is made.

[1:124] Reserved.

e. [1:125] Preliminary caveat about real estate and mortgage brokers: There is frequently considerable friction between the real estate (and/or mortgage) broker and counsel for buyer or seller—typically when they represent the same party. This is because many brokers are more concerned about closing the sale than they are about completing the transaction properly. On the other hand, many lawyers do not think creatively enough to solve the very problems they identify and are dilatory in performing their own responsibilities in the transaction.

Regardless of who is to blame, attorney and client should come to a clear understanding as to the method and timing of dealing with the broker.

For example, brokers often want to contact you to discuss various issues or the progress of the transaction. They may be inclined to give instructions or “assignments” to counsel. Clients are often surprised—and disturbed—to subsequently learn they are expected to pay for the time you have spent dealing with their broker.

f. USA Patriot Act obligations

(1) [1:126] Ensuring clients not engaged in money laundering: Section 352 of the USA Patriot Act generally requires “financial institutions” to establish highly technical “anti-money laundering and countering the financing of terrorism” programs (31 USC § 5318(h)). “Financial institutions” as defined by the Act expressly include “persons involved in real estate closings and settlements” (31 USC § 5312(a)(2)(U) (emphasis added)). However, the statute is unclear whether the term specifically includes lawyers representing clients in the real estate transaction, brokers, title companies, appraisers, property inspectors and others who do not actually conduct the closing or settlement.

The Treasury Department's Financial Crimes Enforcement Network (FinCEN) has adopted a regulation that temporarily exempts a “[p]erson involved in real estate closings and settlements” from the Act's anti-money laundering requirements. [See 31 CFR § 1010.205(b)(1)(v), 75 Fed. Reg. 65816]

(2) [1:126.1] Checking names against “Specially Designated Nationals” (SDN) List: Pending the adoption of Treasury Regulations on the issue, Executive Order 13224 bars transactions involving individuals or groups named on the government's “Specially Designated Nationals” (SDN) List (persons and groups identified as committing or posing a significant risk of committing terrorist acts); also, under the Order, any assets from these transactions may be frozen by the Treasury Department. Although lawyers involved in real estate closings are exempted temporarily from the Patriot Act's anti-money laundering activities (¶ 1:126), they are required to check the buyers' and sellers' names against the government's SDN List. (The list is updated frequently; it is available online (www.ustreas.gov).) [See 66 Fed.Reg. 49079]

If a match is discovered or a name arouses suspicion, counsel should phone the Office of Foreign Assets Control (OFAC) Hotline at (800) 540-6322; or email the OFAC (ofac_feedback@do.treas.gov).

g. [1:127] Professional liability insurance disclosure obligation: Attorneys who know or reasonably should know they do not have professional liability insurance must so inform their clients in writing at the time of engagement. The disclosure may be included in the written fee agreement (see Form 1:A.1) or a separate writing. [CRPC 1.4.2(a)& Comment [2]]

Likewise, attorneys who, subsequent to their retention, know or reasonably should know they no longer have professional liability insurance must so inform their clients in writing within 30 days of that fact. [CRPC 1.4.2(b)]

Exemptions: The CRPC 1.4.2 disclosure obligation does not apply (1) to attorneys who know or reasonably should know at the time of their engagement that their legal representation will not exceed four hours, provided said disclosure obligation is complied with when their representation subsequently exceeds four hours; (2) to government attorneys or in-house counsel when they represent or provide legal advice to a client in that capacity; (3) when legal services are rendered in an emergency to avoid foreseeable prejudice to a client's rights or interests; and (4) where attorneys have previously advised their clients in writing they do not have professional liability insurance. [CRPC 1.4.2(c)]

4. [1:128] Reporting Attorney Misconduct: California lawyers must report misconduct by other California attorneys. Specifically, reporting is required when an attorney "has committed a criminal act or has engaged in conduct involving dishonesty, fraud, deceit, or reckless or intentional misrepresentation or misappropriation of funds or property that raises a substantial question as to that lawyer's honesty, trustworthiness, or fitness as a lawyer in other respects." [CRPC 8.3 (oper. 8/1/23)]

1. [1:130] Fees, Costs and Retainers: Acceptance of representation culminates with the formalization of an attorney fees and costs agreement. Preliminarily, counsel should explain to the client the difference between counsel's fees, the client's obligation to reimburse counsel for various costs, the costs the client will be required to pay directly to third parties, and a "retainer."

a. [1:131] Legal fees: Depending on your internal billing practices, legal "fees" usually relate to time spent and legal services performed by attorneys, paralegals and law clerks (billed at varying rates). However, some attorneys bill secretarial time, word processing time, and time spent by file clerks and other employees. If you intend to bill for time spent by anyone other than attorneys and paralegals, that should be specially noted in your fee agreement along with the applicable rates or charges. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 6148(a)(1); ¶ 1:191; and Form 1:A.1]

b. [1:132] Reimbursable (separately billed) costs: The client should understand they will be responsible for certain of your internal costs (such as telephone, telecopier, travel and copying charges, etc.). Clients who have not had much occasion to hire attorneys may be surprised to learn they are separately charged for internal costs (thinking instead those costs are absorbed in the attorney's "fee"); hence, costs to be separately billed the client should be clearly identified in the fee agreement. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 6148(a)(1); ¶ 1:191; and Form 1:A.1]

To the extent feasible, preferred practice is to require the client to advance costs to be incurred by counsel (and, perhaps, to replenish those advances when necessary); see ¶ 1:157 ff. However, counsel may instead agree to advance "reasonable" costs on the client's behalf; see ¶ 1:165.

c. [1:133] Costs payable to third parties: Also describe (at least in general terms) what types of third-party expenses the client should anticipate (i.e., additional costs related to the transaction that will not be billed by counsel).

For example, unsophisticated clients may not otherwise know they will be required to purchase a preliminary title report or survey; explain that you will not be advancing these costs. (However, if it will be necessary for your office to order a preliminary title report, you may want to increase the amount of your retainer to cover that cost.)

d. [1:134] Attorney "retainer": A "retainer" may or may not be an earned "fee." In practice, the term is used to refer both to a "classic retainer" and to an advance against fees to be earned.

(1) [1:134.1] "Classic retainer": California law and ethical rules recognize the right of an attorney to collect a "classic retainer"—i.e., an up-front fee "earned in full" when paid by the client to secure counsel's availability over a certain period of time. A classic retainer is earned when paid since the attorney is entitled to the money regardless of whether they actually perform any services for the client. [See CRPC 1.16(e)(2); Baranowski v. State Bar of Calif. (1979) 24 C3d 153, 164, 154 CR 752, 757, fn. 4; SEC v. Interlink Data Network of Los Angeles, Inc. (9th Cir. 1996) 77 F3d 1201, 1205]

(2) [1:134.2] Retainer collected as "advance": More commonly, attorneys request a "retainer" as an advance deposit against fees for future legal services. Such a retainer is not earned upon receipt; it remains the client's property until the services are rendered and, therefore, must be held in a separate client trust account (see ¶ 1:158). [SEC v. Interlink Data Network of Los Angeles, Inc. (9th Cir. 1996) 77 F3d 1201, 1205]

Typically, retainers collected as an advance deposit are automatically applied as future fees are earned. However, it may be advisable to require the client to maintain a minimum retainer balance at all times (i.e., replenishing the "retainer" deposit as it is depleted); see ¶ 1:163 ff.

2. [1:135] Types of Fee Agreements: There are various types of fee agreements; some are more common in transactional matters and others in litigation:

a. [1:136] Fixed or "task based" fee: Many clients want to "budget" for attorney fees and thus prefer a "fixed fee" arrangement—i.e., an agreement to pay a specified amount (or at least an agreed-upon range) of total attorney fees to complete a transaction. Sometimes each component task is broken out as a separate fee item. For example, a fixed fee may be separately set for the negotiation and preparation of a broker's listing agreement; the negotiation and preparation of a purchase contract; review of a preliminary title report; coordination of closing with escrow, etc.

(1) [1:137] Drawbacks: From counsel's perspective, a fixed fee arrangement generally is not advisable even if based on the performance of definitive tasks. Each aspect of the transaction involves potential problems, the magnitude of which is not discernible at the inception of representation—e.g., unanticipated financing issues, unknown title matters, unsuspected environmental contamination, unpredictable zoning regulations, and, of course, the inherent uncertainty of negotiations generally. Accordingly, by agreeing to a fixed fee, you may ultimately find that a large portion of your time will be uncompensated, unless the client is willing to renegotiate the fee arrangement. [See Grossman v. State Bar (1983) 34 C3d 73, 78, 192 CR 397, 399—"under a fixed fee contract, an attorney may not take compensation over the fixed fee without the client's consent to a renegotiated fee agreement … even if the work becomes more onerous than originally anticipated"]

Similarly, a fixed fee or task-based arrangement will not always work to the client's advantage. Where the transaction proceeds relatively "problem free," the client may end up saving money by agreeing to an hourly rate.

➪ [1:137.1] PRACTICE POINTERS: As between buyer's and seller's counsel in a real estate transaction, a fixed fee arrangement is probably more appropriate when representing sellers because seller's counsel will be less involved in so-called "due diligence" investigations. Also, seller's counsel is often in a better position to pinpoint the number and scope of potential problems from the outset (before negotiation of a purchase agreement).

In any event, counsel amenable to fixed or task-based fees should leave some leeway in the written fee agreement for unforeseeable occurrences. For example, include language to the effect that the quoted fixed fee assumes there are no environmental, zoning, building code, etc. impediments to expeditious negotiation of a purchase agreement and consummation of the transaction; and that you reserve the right to renegotiate fees to handle such unexpected occurrences (as specified).

b. [1:138] Hourly rate: Under an hourly rate arrangement, the client pays for counsel's time (and, usually, designated support staff time) at an agreed-upon rate per hour. The rates typically vary for the "lead" attorney, associates, paralegals, legal secretaries and law clerks.

(1) [1:139] Advantages: Clients may benefit from an hourly rate arrangement because it enables them to use counsel's time more efficiently. For example, after counsel has identified the various tasks to be performed, the client can designate from a cost efficiency standpoint who will perform each component of the work (e.g., broker, accountant, client, attorney). Moreover, attorney and client can agree on the person in counsel's office who is the most cost efficient to perform the task (e.g., partner, associate, paralegal, clerk, etc.) (see ¶ 1:117, 1:203; and Form 1:A.1).

From counsel's perspective, an hourly rate arrangement offers the advantage of not "locking into" any ceiling on fees, thus ensuring no part of counsel's work will go uncompensated by the risk of unforeseeable events (¶ 1:136).

➪ [1:140] PRACTICE POINTERS: Maintaining accurate time sheets is critical to an hourly rate arrangement; if your fees are ever called into question, time records will be important evidence in support of your fee claims. Attorney time records should contain precise descriptions of the services performed, the date they were performed and the amount of time spent. [See Martino v. Denevi (1986) 182 CA3d 553, 558, 227 CR 354, 357 (noting that lawyers who fail to keep accurate time records may lose or waste up to 40% of their billable time)]

Although bills to clients for fees and charges must include certain statutorily-prescribed information (¶ 1:210 ff.), an attorney's detailed time logs need not necessarily be duplicated in client billings (see ¶ 1:212.1).

(2) [1:140.1] Caveat re "usual" or "customary" rate arrangements: Attorneys and clients who have had an ongoing professional relationship may be inclined to bypass a full-blown detailed fee contract, opting instead for a summary consensus to pay and receive counsel's (or the firm's) "usual" or "customary" rates. This approach is risky. At the very least, it invites later misunderstandings or disputes as to the "usual" or "customary" rate. Moreover, the "usual" or "customary" rate inevitably will change (increase) over time; and counsel cannot subject the client to a rate hike without the client's express consent. [See Severson & Werson v. Bolinger (1991) 235 CA3d 1569, 1572-1573, 1 CR2d 531, 533, discussed further at ¶ 1:152]

c. [1:141] Percentage basis: In some states, legal fees in real property sales transactions are based on a percentage of the purchase price; however, that approach is rarely (if ever) used in California (but see ¶ 1:148 ff. re real estate broker commission as legal fee).

In any event, "percentage basis" fee arrangements are likely to carry the same pitfalls as fixed fee arrangements. Notably, there is no certainty that the scope of legal services required in a given transaction will bear any relationship to the purchase price of the property. Negotiating obstacles, title problems, financing issues, zoning difficulties and other complexities can arise completely independent of the price tag for the property. (Conversely, a disadvantage from the clients' perspective is that, if the transaction proceeds relatively "problem free," they may end up paying a fee far in excess of what would have been due at an hourly rate.)

d. [1:142] Contingency fees: There is no ethical or legal prohibition per se against contingency fees in real property sales transactions—e.g., an agreement that legal fees are not earned, and hence not due, unless and until a closing occurs. Some clients may prefer such an arrangement, on the theory it might motivate counsel's "full-time" efforts and expedite the transaction.

(1) [1:143] Disadvantages: Nonetheless, a contingency fee generally is not advisable from the attorney's standpoint: The transaction may fail to close for a variety of reasons, virtually all of which are beyond counsel's control and many of which are beyond any of the parties' control.

e. [1:144] Equity participation in property: Buyer's counsel may want to take legal fees in the form of an interest in the property. However, this type of arrangement should be avoided:

(1) [1:145] Conflict of interest: First of all, contracting for an equity participation interest in the client's property puts counsel in a potential (if not actual) conflict of interest position. [See CRPC 1.8.1—ethical proscription against acquiring an "ownership, possessory, security or other pecuniary interest adverse to a client" unless specified requirements are met; and discussion at ¶ 1:90 ff.]

Even if the minimum ethical requirements can be satisfied, as a practical matter it is not a good idea to mix professional and business dealings with clients. Should your "business" relationship (as co-equity owners) sour, the disgruntled client may be tempted to press malpractice charges (be they well-founded or not). Moreover, prudent attorneys avoid any situation in which it might appear they are putting their personal interests ahead of the professional obligations owed their clients.

(2) [1:146] Risk of no fees: Also, as with a contingency fee arrangement, an equity participation agreement runs the risk that buyer's counsel will end up with nothing (legal services will go uncompensated) should the transaction not be consummated.

f. [1:147] "Mixed fee" arrangement: To meet the desires of both counsel and client, it may make sense to combine one or more fee arrangements; e.g., an hourly or fixed fee for certain tasks, plus a contingency bonus if the transaction closes or closes within a specified period of time.

g. [1:148] Commission-based fee: There is no blanket prohibition against a lawyer receiving both a legal fee and a commission or "finder's" fee; or a real estate broker's commission as the attorney's legal fee (see ¶ 2:86, 2:91 re attorney exemption from real estate license requirements when rendering legal services to client).

(1) [1:148.1] Payment of commission-based fee to attorney-broker's law firm: It may even be permissible under the real estate licensing law for a real estate commission-based legal fee to be paid to the attorney's law firm:

A partner in a law firm who holds a California real estate broker's license may represent a party to a real estate transaction in which the client agrees to pay the law firm a real estate brokerage commission instead of an hourly fee for legal services rendered in connection with the transaction, provided no person in the firm who does not hold a real estate license performs any act related to the transaction that requires a real estate license. [See 88 Ops.Cal.Atty.Gen. 203 (2005)]

Cross-refer: For a detailed discussion of the conditions for compensation under the real estate licensing law, see ¶ 2:64 ff. and 2:277 ff.

(2) [1:148.2] Dual representation concerns: There are, however, several "dual representation" ethical and legal concerns for attorneys who act as both lawyer and real estate broker for a client (see 88 Ops.Cal.Atty.Gen. 203 (2005), fn. 3 (noting ethical issues but leaving them undecided)). Significantly, such a "two hat" attorney will have various obligations (and potential liabilities) to the client that are different—and often greater—than the professional obligations owed strictly in an attorney capacity. Indeed, whereas attorney obligations ordinarily run strictly to the client, counsel acting in a broker capacity may have obligations to the party on the other side of the transaction (see ¶ 2:120 ff.).

3. [1:149] Limitations on Amount of Fees: While the amount of attorney fees may properly be the subject of attorney-client negotiations, there are ethical limitations on the ultimate amount that may be charged or collected.

The California Rules of Professional Conduct prohibit attorneys from entering into an agreement for, or charging or collecting, an "illegal" or "unconscionable" fee. [CRPC 1.5(a); see also ABA Model Rule 1.5 (limiting lawyer fees to "reasonable" amount)]

a. [1:150] "Unconscionable" fees—relevant factors: A particular legal fee may pass ethical muster even though it exceeds what other lawyers in the community commonly charge for the same services. "Reasonableness" or "unconscionability" is a question of all the facts and circumstances existing at the time the agreement is entered into (except where the parties contemplate the fee will be affected by later events—e.g., a contingency fee). [CRPC 1.5(b); Matter of Yagman (Rev.Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct.Rptr. 788, 800]

A fee is unconscionable when it is "so exorbitant and wholly disproportionate to the services performed as to shock the conscience." Most such cases involve an "element of fraud or overreaching by the attorney, so that the fee charged … constitute[s] a practical appropriation of the client's funds." [Bushman v. State Bar (1974) 11 C3d 558, 563, 113 CR 904, 906; see Matter of Taylor (Rev.Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct.Rptr. 221, 233—illegal residential mortgage loan modification fee may have been high but not unconscionable]

Essentially, the issue is addressed on a case-by-case basis. Among the factors to be considered in determining the "conscionability" of a fee are (CRPC 1.5(b)):

• Whether the attorney engaged in fraud or overreaching in negotiating or setting the fee;

• Whether the attorney has failed to disclose material facts;

• The amount of the fee in proportion to the value of services performed;

• The relative sophistication of attorney and client;

• The novelty and difficulty of the questions involved and the skill required to perform the legal services properly;

• The likelihood, if apparent to the client, that counsel's acceptance of the employment will preclude them from accepting other employment;

• The amount involved and the results obtained (see Matter of Yagman, supra, 3 Cal. State Bar Ct.Rptr. at 800—fee found "unconscionable" under former Rule 4-200(B) "particularly in that the amount of the fee outweighs the value of the services in light of the results obtained");

• The time limitations imposed by the client or the circumstances;

• The nature and length of counsel's professional relationship with the client;

• Counsel's experience, reputation and ability;

• Whether the fee is fixed or contingent;

• The time and labor required; and

• The client's informed consent to the fee. [CRPC 1.5(b)(1)-(13); see also ABA Model Rule 1.5(a)(1)-(8) (providing similar standards)]

(1) [1:150a] Disproportion between fees and client's recovery: A fee may be found "unconscionable" because it disproportionately exceeds the amount recovered for the client. [See Matter of Yagman (Rev.Dept. 1997) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct.Rptr. 788, 800]

(2) [1:150.1] Attorney's profit margin irrelevant: By contrast, "conscionability" of legal fees cannot be measured by the attorney's or law firm's costs or profit margin. Indeed, profit margin is irrelevant to the issue. [Shaffer v. Sup.Ct. (Simms) (1995) 33 CA4th 993, 1003, 39 CR2d 506, 513]

b. [1:151] "Illegal" fees: CRPC 1.5 does not define what amounts to prohibited "illegal" fees, leaving the matter largely to case law.

• [1:151.1] A fee is "illegal" to the extent it charges for services not actually performed. [In re Goldstone (1931) 214 C 490, 497-498, 6 P2d 513, 516 (billing for work not performed)]

• [1:151.2] A fee is also "illegal" to the extent the amount charged or collected exceeds that permitted by an applicable statute. [See Matter of Harney (Rev.Dept. 1995) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct.Rptr. 266, 273 (statutory limits in medical malpractice case); Estate of Hastings (1952) 108 CA2d 713, 716, 239 P2d 684, 686-687 (probate proceedings)]

• [1:151.3] An attorney fee is "illegal" when collected in violation of a statute requiring prior court approval. [See Rossman v. State Bar (1985) 39 C3d 539, 545, 216 CR 919, 922 (conservatorship proceedings)]

• [1:151.4] An attorney fee contract is "illegal" to the extent it requires compensation for legal services performed in California for a California client by someone not licensed or otherwise authorized to practice law in California (see ¶ 1:65 ff.). [Compare Estate of Condon (1998) 65 CA4th 1138, 1148, 76 CR2d 922, 928—Birbrower no bar to statutory fee award to out-of-state probate attorney performing services for out-of-state client related to Calif. probate (see ¶ 1:66)]

• [1:151.5] A fee arrangement might also be "illegal" if it fails to comply with applicable truth-in-lending laws (¶ 1:180).

(1) [1:151.6] Advance fees for residential mortgage loan modifications: It is illegal in California for an attorney (or real estate licensee) to demand or receive advance fees, or any other type of pre-performance compensation, in connection with a residential mortgage loan modification or other form of residential mortgage loan forbearance. An attorney who violates this prohibition is subject to disciplinary action and can be fined and/or imprisoned for up to one year. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6106.3; see also Civ.C. §§ 2944.7 & 2944.8 (authorizing state and local government officials to commence civil actions to recover up to $20,000 for each such violation, as well as additional penalties up to $2500 for every violation perpetrated against senior citizen or disabled person); Matter of Taylor (Rev.Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct.Rptr. 221, 226 (attorney suspended and thereafter placed on probation for, among other things, charging illegal preperformance fees)—legislation prohibiting preperformance compensation was designed to prevent loan modification consultants from charging borrowers up-front fees, providing borrowers limited services that fail to help and leaving borrowers worse off than before seeking consultant's services]

c. [1:152] No unilateral fee increases: Counsel cannot unilaterally determine their own fees. Thus, even if the legal work turns out to be more onerous than anticipated, agreed-upon fees or fee rates cannot be changed midstream without notification to the client (presumably, giving the client an opportunity to consent or, instead, to switch attorneys). [Severson & Werson v. Bolinger (1991) 235 CA3d 1569, 1572-1573, 1 CR2d 531, 533—clients who agreed to pay quoted "regular hourly rates" could not be assessed higher rates without prior notice; see also Grossman v. State Bar (1983) 34 C3d 73, 78-79, 192 CR 397, 399-400—attorney subject to professional discipline for charging higher fees than agreed upon with client for same work]

4. [1:153] Fee Sharing: Lawyers handling real property sales transactions commonly retain co-counsel to consult and advise on particular areas of expertise (e.g., tax or bankruptcy matters); or, if the transaction involves extraterritorial issues, to provide guidance on applicable local law and procedure (¶ 1:61). Indeed, as a matter of attorney competence, associating or consulting with another lawyer may be an ethical necessity (CRPC 1.1(c); ¶ 1:51 ff.).

a. [1:154] Enforceable fee-sharing agreement requirements: Ethically, counsel may divide fees with another lawyer who is not in the same law firm only if:

• the lawyers enter into a written agreement to divide the fee;

• the client consents in writing either at the time the lawyers enter into the fee division agreement or as soon thereafter as reasonably practicable following full written disclosure to the client of (a) the fact that a division of fees will be made, (b) the identity of the lawyers or firms that are parties to the division, and (c) the terms of the fee division; and

• the total fee charged by all lawyers is not increased solely by reason of the agreement to divide fees. [CRPC 1.5.1(a); see also Barnes, Crosby, Fitzgerald & Zeman, LLP v. Ringler (2012) 212 CA4th 172, 180, 151 CR3d 134, 140 (decided under former rule)—rule's purpose is to protect clients from their attorneys' potential conflicts of interest created by fee-sharing agreements]

CRPC 1.5.1 is not limited to pure "referral fee" arrangements (where a lawyer receives a fee for doing nothing more than obtaining the client's signature on a retainer agreement while the lawyer to whom the case is referred does all the work). It applies as well to fee divisions in which the client's work is also divided (unless between members of the same firm; ¶ 1:154.1 ff.). [See Chambers v. Kay (2002) 29 C4th 142, 148-150, 126 CR2d 536, 541 (decided under former rule)]

(1) [1:154a] Timing of client consent: CRPC 1.5.1 requires the client's written consent after full disclosure at or near the time that the lawyers enter into the agreement to divide the fee (¶ 1:154).

Compare: Under former CRPC 2-200, there was no requirement that the client's consent be obtained before the lawyers entered into a fee-splitting agreement or before they commenced work on the case. [See Mink v. Maccabee (2004) 121

CA4th 835, 838, 17 CR3d 486, 488; see also Cohen v. Brown (2009) 173 CA4th 302, 320, 93 CR3d 24, 38 (decided under former Rule 2-200)—associated counsel's ability to recover under noncomplying fee-sharing agreement remains possible even after case concludes provided client gives written consent before actual fee division]

(2) [1:154.1] Exemption for members of same law firm: A fee-sharing agreement among lawyers in the same firm is not subject to the CRPC 1.5.1 client disclosure and consent requirements. [CRPC 1.5.1(a); Chambers v. Kay (2002) 29 C4th 142, 150, 126 CR2d 536, 542 (decided under former CRPC 2-200(A)); see also Anderson, McPharlin & Connors v. Yee (2005) 135 CA4th 129, 133, 37 CR3d 627, 630—law firm partnership agreement requiring departing partner to pay firm percentage of revenues received on firm's pending matters for clients who followed partner was not "fee-splitting" agreement subject to former CRPC 2-200(A)]

(a) [1:154.2] "Law firm" defined: A "law firm" means a law partnership, a professional law corporation, a lawyer acting as a sole proprietorship, an association authorized to practice law, or lawyers employed in a legal services organization or in the legal department, division, or office of a corporation, government organization or another organization. [CRPC 1.0.1(c)]

1) [1:154.2a] Compare—former Rule: Former CRPC 1-100(B)(1) defined "law firm" as any of the following:

• two or more lawyers whose activities constitute the practice of law, and who share its profits, expenses, and liabilities;

• a law corporation that employs more than one member;

• a division, department, office, or group within a business entity that includes more than one lawyer who performs legal services for the business entity; or

• a publicly funded entity that employs more than one lawyer to perform legal services. [Former CRPC 1-100(B)(1)]

(b) [1:154.2b] "Partner" defined: A "partner" means a member of a partnership, a shareholder in a law firm organized as a professional corporation, or a member of an association authorized to practice law. [CRPC 1.0.1(g)]

(c) [1:154.2c] "Associate" defined; salaried relationship requirement: An "associate" (which is not defined in the current or former Rules) is included within the former Rule 2-200(A) exemption. As such, it contemplates an employer-employee, salaried relationship between the "referring" and "referred" attorneys. The fact that one attorney controlled and supervised the other attorney's involvement in the matter does "not transmute the [attorneys'] compensation arrangement from one based on a division of fees to one reflecting an employer-employee relationship." [Chambers v. Kay (2002) 29 C4th 142, 152-154, 126 CR2d 536, 544-546 & fn. 7]

Arguably, former Rule 2-200(A)'s definition of "associate" continues to apply under CRPC 1.5.1.

(d) [1:154.2d] Lawyers sharing office space distinguished: A joint venture in which two lawyers share office space and facilities but maintain independent law practices with separate identities, addresses, clients, expenses, and liabilities does not constitute a "law firm," and fee-sharing agreements between such lawyers are unenforceable absent compliance with CRPC 1.5.1. [Chambers v. Kay (2002) 29 C4th 142, 150, 126 CR2d 536, 543 (decided under former rule)]

(3) [1:154.3] Fee-sharing agreement must be in writing: Under CRPC 1.5.1, the fee-sharing agreement must be in writing (¶ 1:154).

Compare: There was no requirement under former CRPC 2-200 that the attorneys' fee-sharing agreement be in writing (the Rule required only that the client's consent be written). [See Mink v. Maccabee (2004) 121 CA4th 835, 838, 17 CR3d 486, 488]

(4) [1:154.4] Noncomplying agreements unenforceable: Absent strict compliance with CRPC 1.5.1, a fee-sharing agreement among attorneys who are not in the same law firm is void and unenforceable. [Chambers v. Kay (2002) 29 C4th 142, 156-161, 126 CR2d 536, 549-551; Margolin v. Shemaria (2000) 85 CA4th 891, 899-903, 102 CR2d 502, 507-511 (decided under former CRPC 2-200(A))—no "equitable estoppel" relief from bar to enforcement of noncomplying fee-sharing agreement; but see also Barnes, Crosby, Fitzgerald & Zeman, LLP v. Ringler (2012) 212 CA4th 172, 173, 185, 151 CR3d 134, 136, 145 (decided under former CRPC 2-200(A) and finding noncomplying agreements "potentially unenforceable")—attorney may be "equitably estopped" from claiming agreement is unenforceable where they are responsible for such noncompliance and have unfairly prevented another lawyer from complying with Rule 2-200(A)]

(a) [1:154.5] Compare—quantum meruit recovery: On the other hand, noncompliance with CRPC 1.5.1 does not bar recovery between the attorneys on a quantum meruit theory for the reasonable value of services rendered. "[S]uch an award involves no apportionment of the fees that the client paid or has agreed to pay and therefore is not a fee division subject to [former] rule 2-200's client disclosure and consent requirements." [Huskinson & Brown, LLP v. Wolf (2004) 32 C4th 453, 456, 459, 9 CR3d 693, 695, 697]

But the associated attorney has no right to quantum meruit fees from the client who neither contracted with that attorney nor requested their services. [Strong v. Beydoun (2008) 166 CA4th 1398, 1404, 83 CR3d 632, 635-636; see also ¶ 1:155]

b. [1:155] Client's liability to associated attorney: Even when the client agrees to association of co-counsel, the client is personally liable to pay the associate's fee share only if they explicitly consented to do so. Otherwise, the associate's claim for fees is against the primary attorney whom the client hired (not against the client). [See Trimble v. Steinfeldt (1986) 178 CA3d 646, 651-652, 224 CR 195, 197-198 (decided under former CRPC 2-200(A))—retainer agreement authorized attorney to associate any other lawyer "at no expense to me" (the client)]

c. [1:156] Prohibited fee splits for referrals: Competence and/or practical considerations may require you to decline representation and, occasionally, you may deem it appropriate to refer the prospective client to another competent lawyer. Except to the extent a fee-sharing arrangement is permitted by CRPC 1.5.1 (¶ 1:154 ff.) or otherwise under the CRPC, attorney "referral fees," "gifts" or "gratuities" for the purpose of recommending or securing employment or as a "reward" for having done so are prohibited if made pursuant to a preexisting understanding or agreement between the forwarding and receiving attorneys. [CRPC 7.2(b)(4), (5)]

(1) [1:156.1] Compare—lawyer's receipt of fee for nonlegal services referral as adverse pecuniary interest: A lawyer's receipt of a fee from a nonlegal services provider for referring the client to the provider (e.g., lawyer refers client to real estate broker or investment manager) is not impermissible fee-splitting within the scope of CRPC 1.5.1. However, the referral fee arrangement gives the lawyer a financial interest in the client's matter, thus triggering the CRPC 1.8.1 disclosure and client consent requirements (¶ 1:73.6, 1:90 ff.). [See Cal. State Bar Form.Opn. 1999-154 (decided under former CRPC 3-300)]

5. [1:157] Fees and Costs Advances: Whether to insist upon an advance deposit against your legal fees (as distinguished from a "classic retainer," ¶ 1:134 ff.) and/or the costs you will need to incur on the client's behalf is ordinarily a judgment call. The decision may turn on your past professional relationship with the client (if any), the client's financial condition ("creditworthiness") and level of sophistication, and/or your office overhead and "cash flow."

a. [1:157.1] Limitation if prohibited by law: Of course, advance fees and costs cannot be collected to the extent prohibited by law—e.g., advance fees for residential loan modification services (Bus. & Prof.C. § 6106.3; Civ.C. §§ 2944.7 & 2944.8). See discussion at ¶ 1:151.6.

b. [1:158] Segregation in client trust account: A client's advance deposit represents unearned fees for services to be performed. Until the legal services are rendered, the advance against fees is technically property of the client. [SEC v. Interlink Data Network of Los Angeles, Inc. (9th Cir. 1996) 77 F3d 1201, 1205]

Except as otherwise provided for "a flat fee paid in advance," all funds received or held by counsel for the benefit of the client or another person to whom the attorney owes a contractual, statutory or other legal duty—including advances for fees, costs and expenses—must be held in a client trust account (one or more identifiable bank accounts labeled "Trust Account" or words of similar import), maintained separately from counsel's and the law firm's funds. A client trust account may be created in California, or with the client's written consent, in any other jurisdiction "where there is a substantial relationship between the client or the client's business and the other jurisdiction." [CRPC 1.15(a)-(c)]

(1) [1:159] Interest on lawyer's trust account (IOLTA) deposits: "Nominal" or "short term" client deposits must be maintained or invested in an "IOLTA account" with an eligible financial institution that meets detailed statutory requirements. The interest and dividends earned are paid to the State Bar of California to fund free legal services programs for the indigent. [See Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 6211, 6212—attorney/law firm must report IOLTA account compliance and all other IOLTA account information required by State Bar in manner specified by State Bar; Carroll v. State Bar (1985) 166 CA3d 1193, 1203-1208, 213 CR 305, 311-314 (upholding constitutionality of California's former IOLTA program);

[1:159.1 - 1:159.4] Reserved.

(2) [1:159.5] Recordkeeping and accounting requirements: Complete records of the client's or another person's funds (as well as securities and other properties) coming into counsel's possession must be maintained and preserved for at least five years after "final appropriate distribution of such funds" (or property); and appropriate accountings therefor must be given the client. [CRPC 1.15(d)(3)-(5)]

The explicit recordkeeping requirements for the client or another person's trust account funds, securities and properties are prescribed by the State Bar Board of Trustees' standards adopted pursuant to CRPC 1.15. [See CRPC 1.15, Standards]

➪ [1:160] PRACTICE POINTER: Commingling attorney and client funds, misappropriating client funds, or failing to adequately supervise a client trust account usually will warrant significant professional discipline—even disbarment. [In re Basinger (1988) 45 C3d 1348, 1358, 249 CR 110, 114—"misappropriation of client trust funds" deemed most serious offense; Read v. State Bar (1991) 53 C3d 394, 425, 279 CR 818, 833; but see also In re Malek-Yonan (Rev.Dept. 2003) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct.Rptr. 627 (attorney's gross inattention to safeguarding client funds from theft by office staff)—significant discipline warranted, but not disbarment]

(3) [1:160.1] Compare—advance fees/costs held in independent escrow account: An arrangement under which the client deposits "advance" fees and costs into an independent escrow account for payment to the attorney only as the legal services are rendered pursuant to the fees and costs agreement does not require compliance with CRPC 1.15. In this scenario, the "advance" fees are never "received or held" by the attorney; the lawyer is paid the fees from the escrow only when they are "fixed and earned," at which point they belong to the attorney and should not be placed in a client trust account (see ¶ 1:161 ff.). [See Cal. State Bar Form.Opn. 2002-159]

c. [1:161] Withdrawals from client trust account: Where funds on deposit in a client trust account belong partly to the client or another person and in part presently or potentially to counsel (e.g., advances that have been "earned" by counsel), the portion belonging to counsel (or the law firm) must be withdrawn "at the earliest reasonable time" after counsel's interest therein becomes "fixed." [CRPC 1.15(c)(2) (emphasis added)]

However, when the client or other person disputes counsel's right to receive a portion of the client trust account funds, the disputed portion "shall not be withdrawn until the dispute is finally resolved." [CRPC 1.15(c)(2) (emphasis added)]

➪ [1:162] PRACTICE POINTER: You cannot "invade" a client trust account to pay yourself attorney fees unless those fees have been earned (i.e., they represent compensation owing for legal services actually performed) and the client does not dispute the amount owing. Otherwise, withdrawal from the account for your own benefit amounts to prohibited "misappropriation," for which professional discipline may be imposed. [See Sternlieb v. State Bar (1990) 52 C3d 317, 329-330, 276 CR 346, 352-353; Chang v. State Bar (1989) 49 C3d 114, 128, 260 CR 280, 287-288]

d. [1:163] Minimum retainer balance: Clients have no obligation to replenish advance fee deposits (as funds are depleted therefrom to compensate for services performed and costs incurred) unless they have agreed to do so. Hence, counsel should decide at the outset whether they want the client to maintain a minimum retainer balance at all times during the transaction.

➪ [1:164] PRACTICE POINTER: Again, the decision is essentially a judgment call. But prudence may dictate insisting upon a minimum retainer balance until the transaction is completed (or substantially completed).

For example, though the initial retainer may seem like a hefty sum up front, as soon as you incur that amount in time (legal services) and costs, you will have no security for the balance of your fees and expenses. That may be of little concern in representing a financially sound ("credit-worthy") client; but it could be problematic for attorneys who have high office overheads, unpredictable cash flows, and/or unreliable clients. In such circumstances, it may make sense to require the client to keep the retainer balance at a specified minimum.

Of course, once the transaction closes and your legal services are completed, any retainer balance to which the client or another person is entitled must promptly be distributed, as requested. [See CRPC 1.15(d)(7)]

e. Compare—costs advances by counsel and personal loans to client

(1) [1:165] Client obligation to reimburse advances, subject to agreed-upon contingencies: Counsel may ethically agree to advance legal services costs on the client's behalf (i.e., no retainer). Normally, the client must be obligated to reimburse counsel therefor; however, the repayment may be "contingent on the outcome of the matter" (apparently meaning, e.g., that attorney and client may agree that counsel's right to be reimbursed for costs advances will be triggered only if the transaction closes). [CRPC 1.8.5(b)(3); see also ¶ 1:142 re contingency fees]

(2) [1:166] Personal loans to client: A related issue concerns the propriety of counsel's making personal loans to a client, not related to the legal services to be rendered. (For example, client approaches counsel for a "loan" to cover part of a down payment, "points" or closing costs until client's current property sells.)

There are ethical as well as practical constraints on an attorney's loaning personal funds to a client:

(a) [1:167] Improper before representation formalized: Lawyers may not pay (directly or indirectly), or agree to pay, guarantee or represent that they or their firm will pay, a prospective or existing client's personal or business expenses or agree to loan or actually loan funds for this purpose before the lawyers are actually hired by the client. [CRPC 1.8.5(a), (b)(1) & (2)]

(b) [1:168] Ethically permissible after attorney retained: However, once employed by the client, counsel may lend the client money for any reason, upon the client's written promise to repay the loan—provided the attorney complies with CRPC 1.7(b)-(c) (conflict of interests rule) and CRPC 1.8.1 (business transactions/pecuniary interests adverse to client rule) and before making the loan or agreeing to do so. [CRPC 1.8.5(b)(2)]

(c) [1:169] Payment of client debts out of funds to be collected: Also, with the client's consent, counsel may pay or agree to pay the client's personal or business debts owed to a third party out of funds collected or to be collected for the client as a result of the representation (CRPC 1.8.5(b)(1)). (Thus, e.g., seller's counsel could agree to use part of the sale proceeds to pay client third-party debts.)

➪ [1:170] PRACTICE POINTER: Notwithstanding the ethical propriety (¶ 1:166 ff.), it is best to avoid making personal loans to clients. The practice could increase the risk of malpractice charges; i.e., if you loan money to a client who ultimately is dissatisfied with your services, the client may be tempted to "blame" you for the unsatisfactory results in order to avoid repaying the loan. [See, e.g., Donnelly v. Ayer (1986) 183 CA3d 978, 981-982, 228 CR 764, 766]

[1:171 - 1:174] Reserved.

6. Security for Fees and Interest Charges

a. Promissory notes—secured vs. unsecured

(1) [1:175] Unsecured notes permissible; CRPC 1.8.1 requirements inapplicable: Counsel may ethically accept the client's unsecured promissory note for legal fees. Such an arrangement is not subject to the CRPC 1.8.1 restrictions against counsel acquiring a possessory or pecuniary interest "adverse to a client" (¶ 1:73.6, 1:90 ff.) because, if a fee dispute arises, the attorney can enforce the note against the client's assets only through a judicial proceeding where the court will oversee the fundamental fairness of the transaction. [Hawk v. State Bar (1988) 45 C3d 589, 600-601, 247 CR 599, 605-606 (decided under former CRPC 3-300); see also Fletcher v. Davis (2004) 33 C4th 61, 68, 14 CR3d 58, 63 (decided under former CRPC 3-300)]

• [1:176] Comment: The Hawk reasoning is debatable. Even an unsecured promissory note may be transferred to a holder in due course, and certain defenses that would otherwise be available to the client against the attorney might not be available against the third party holder. (See ¶ 6:196 ff.)

(2) [1:177] Ethical restraints on secured notes: On the other hand, there are significant ethical restraints on securing legal fees by a secured promissory note—e.g., accepting a deed of trust on the client's property:

(a) [1:178] CRPC 1.8.1 "adverse interest" obligations: A secured note gives the lawyer a present possessory interest in the client's property which can be used to summarily extinguish the client's interest in the property without judicial supervision (e.g., under a private foreclosure sale of personal property pursuant to Comm'l C. § 9503; or a nonjudicial real property foreclosure proceeding under Civ.C. § 2924 et seq.; see ¶ 6:514 ff.). Therefore, by taking a secured note for past due or future fees, counsel acquires an interest adverse to the client, triggering the CRPC 1.8.1 conflict of interest obligations. [See Hawk v. State Bar (1988) 45 C3d 589, 600-601, 247 CR 599, 605-606; see also Fletcher v. Davis (2004) 33 C4th 61, 67-68, 14 CR3d 58, 62-63 (decided under former CRPC 3-300)]

It follows that secured promissory note fee arrangements are enforceable against the client only if (i) the transaction and its terms are fair and reasonable, (ii) the implications to the client and the lawyer's role are fully explained in writing and in a manner understandable by the client, (iii) the client is either represented by independent counsel of their choice or advised in writing to seek independent legal counsel, and (iv) the client then consents in writing. [See CRPC 1.8.1; and ¶ 1:90 ff.]

1) [1:178.1] Compare—referral to independent broker for real property secured loan to finance attorney fees through independent escrow: An attorney may ethically refer a client to an independent broker to arrange for a real property secured loan to finance the legal representation where the resulting loan funds will be placed in an independent escrow account for payment to the attorney only as the legal services are rendered and pursuant to the fee agreement. Such an arrangement does not require compliance with the CRPC requirements. [See Cal. State Bar Form.Opn. 2002-159 (decided under former CRPC 3-300); and ¶ 1:94.1]

(b) [1:179] CRPC 1.8.9 "power of sale" bar: At least for purposes of avoiding professional discipline, counsel may not take advantage of any power of sale granted through a secured instrument given to counsel for fees. CRPC 1.8.9 expressly bars attorneys from, directly or indirectly, purchasing property "at a probate, foreclosure, receiver's, trustee's, or judicial sale" in an action or proceeding in which the attorney (or an affiliated attorney) is "acting as a lawyer for a party or as executor, receiver, trustee, administrator, guardian, or conservator." [CRPC 1.8.9(a) & Comment—attorneys may lawfully participate in transactions involving probate proceedings that concern clients by following process described in Prob.C. § 9880 et seq.]

In addition to the above, an attorney may not represent the seller at a probate, foreclosure, receiver, trustee, or judicial sale in any action or proceeding in which the purchaser is a spouse or relative of the attorney or of another lawyer in the attorney's firm, or is an employee of the attorney in the attorney's firm. [CRPC 1.8.9(b)]

Comment: CRPC does not prohibit a lawyer's participation in transactions that are specifically authorized by and comply with Prob.C. §§ 9880-9885, but such transactions remain subject to CRPC 1.8.1 (business transactions/ pecuniary interests adverse to client rule) and 1.7 (conflicts of interest rule). [CRPC 1.8.9(c)]

(3) [1:179.5] Caution—securing payment of fees for residential mortgage loan modifications prohibited: It is unlawful in California for an attorney to take any type of lien on real or personal property, or any other form of security, to secure the payment of their fees for services rendered or to be rendered in connection with a residential mortgage loan modification or other form of residential mortgage loan forbearance. An attorney who violates this prohibition is subject to disciplinary action and can be fined and/or imprisoned for up to one year. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6106.3; see also Civ.C. §§ 2944.7 & 2944.8 (authorizing state and local government officials to commence civil actions to recover up to $20,000 for each such violation, as well as additional penalties up to $2500 for every violation perpetrated against a senior citizen or disabled person)]

b. [1:180] Credit terms and interest charges: Promissory notes for fees, or other credit arrangements with the client (as where client agrees to pay fees in installments), may be subject to federal truth-in-lending laws (e.g., 15 USC § 1601 et seq.; and see 12 CFR § 226.1 et seq. ("Regulation Z")). Briefly, pursuant to Regulation Z, the client may have to be furnished with a written disclosure statement detailing the interest rate (if any), the dollar cost of credit provided, a payment schedule, an itemization of interest and late charges, etc. [See 12 CFR § 226.18]

Further, the client should expressly agree to any provision for interest charges on past-due fee obligations (i.e., incorporate same into the written fee agreement to be signed by the client). Unilaterally advising the client that interest will be charged on overdue or installment payments will not contractually bind the client to pay the interest.

7. Fee Agreement and Client Billing Formalities

a. [1:181] Written fee agreement usually mandatory: A lawyer's "contract for services" must be in writing whenever it is "reasonably foreseeable that total expense" to the client (including attorney fees and costs) will exceed $1,000. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6148(a) (emphasis added)]

➪ [1:181.1] PRACTICE POINTER: It is always prudent to reduce attorney-client fees and costs arrangements to a written agreement; this is so even when a signed writing is not statutorily required (see ¶ 1:181). Accepting representation on a verbal understanding invites misunderstandings over the applicable terms and inevitably results in attorney-client fee disputes. Moreover, committing your agreement to writing will impress upon clients less sophisticated in real property sales transactions the nature and scope of the work to be performed, who is to perform it, the sequence of events likely to transpire, as well as the legal fees and costs commitment.

b. [1:183] Type of written fee agreement: No special statutes or rules dictate the form of a written fee agreement. So long as the agreement accomplishes the desired results, its form is really a matter of personal preference.

(1) [1:184] Letter agreement: Particularly in transactional matters, many attorneys prefer to use a letter agreement "confirming" the client's retention of counsel (or the law firm), recapitulating the oral understanding reached, and requesting the client to sign and return a copy as evidence of their agreement and acceptance on the terms stated.

Typically, these letters are informal in tone and thus may be the best approach when representing less sophisticated clients and clients whom you have represented on prior occasions.

FORM: Sample Fee Letter, see Form 1:A.1.

(2) [1:185] Formal fee contract: Another approach is to reduce the agreement to a more formal "contract." While contract agreements are used by many firms, their formal "legalistic style" may be intimidating to clients not well-versed in transactional matters.

➪ [1:185.1] PRACTICE POINTER: The most important goal in drafting a written retention agreement is to ensure the client understands the scope of the agreed-upon representation and the terms and conditions for payment of legal fees and costs. Accordingly, whether documented in an informal letter or a formal "contract," the agreement should use lay language and be free from ambiguities.

Under general rules of contract interpretation, ambiguous provisions will be construed against the drafter (Civ.C. § 1654); and that rule applies with even greater force when the person who prepared the agreement is a lawyer. [Mayhew v. Benninghoff (1997) 53 CA4th 1365, 1370, 62 CR2d 27, 30—ambiguous arbitration clause in retainer agreement construed against attorney-drafter]

Encourage the client to discuss uncertain provisions with you before signing; and always have the client acknowledge by signature that they have read and understand the terms. (See Form 1:A.1.)

c. [1:187] Minimum statutory requirements for fee agreements: All attorney fee agreements must comply with minimum standards imposed by statute. Those agreements for which the basis of compensation is hourly, a flat rate or set by statute are governed by Bus. & Prof.C. § 6148 (see ¶ 1:189 ff.).

(1) [1:187.1] Compare—contingency fee agreements: Contingency fee agreements are governed by Bus. & Prof.C. § 6147, requiring, among other things, a written agreement that includes both the client's and attorney's signatures and a statement that the fee is not set by law but is negotiable. [See Arnall v. Sup.Ct. (Liker) (2010) 190 CA4th 360, 366-371, 118 CR3d 379, 383-387—failure to include fee negotiability statement renders any contingency fee agreement voidable, including transactional and/or "hybrid" agreements (i.e., those that combine fixed monthly payments with variable success fees); Stroud v. Tunzi (2008) 160 CA4th 377, 381, 72 CR3d 756, 759—material changes to contingency fee agreement also must comply with § 6147]

Cross-refer: For further discussion, see Tuft, Peck & Mohr, Cal. Prac. Guide: Professional Responsibility & Liability (TRG), Ch. 5.

[1:188] Reserved.

(2) [1:189] Conformed executed copy to client: At the time the contract is entered into, counsel must provide the client with a duplicate copy signed by both attorney and client. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6148(a)]

(3) [1:190] Contents: Agreements subject to Bus. & Prof.C. § 6148 must contain all of the following:

(a) [1:191] Charges: The basis of compensation, including, but not limited to, "hourly rates, statutory fees or flat fees, and other standard rates, fees, and charges applicable to the case" (i.e., the legal "fees" per se; in hourly rate cases, the method of computing fees for services performed; plus costs to be billed the client). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6148(a)(1)]

(b) [1:192] Work to be performed: The "general nature of the legal services to be provided to the client." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6148(a)(2)]

(c) [1:193] Division of responsibility: The "respective responsibilities of the attorney and the client as to the performance of the contract." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6148(a)(3)]

(4) [1:194] Residential mortgage loan modification fee agreements; preliminary written disclosure required: Before entering into any fee agreement, an attorney who renders compensable services in connection with a residential mortgage loan modification or other form of residential mortgage loan forbearance must provide their client with a statutorily-prescribed written disclosure, in minimum 14-point boldface type, as follows (Civ.C. § 2944.6(a) & Bus. & Prof.C. § 6106.3):

> "It is not necessary to pay a third party to arrange for a loan modification or other form of forbearance from your mortgage lender or servicer. You may call your lender directly to ask for a change in your loan terms. Nonprofit housing counseling agencies also offer these and other forms of borrower assistance free of charge. A list of nonprofit housing counseling agencies approved by the United States Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) is available from your local HUD office or by visiting www.hud.gov."

(a) [1:194.1] Violation of written disclosure requirement: An attorney who violates the above written disclosure requirement (¶ 1:194) is subject to disciplinary action and can be fined and/or imprisoned for up to one year. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6106.3 & Civ.C. § 2944.6(c); see also Matter of Taylor (Rev.Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct.Rptr. 221, 231—attorney suspended and thereafter placed on probation for, among other things, failing to provide statutory written disclosure requirement]

(b) [1:194.2] Translated copies: If loan modification services are offered or negotiated in one of the Civ.C. § 1632 languages (i.e., Spanish, Chinese, Tagalog, Vietnamese or Korean), a translated copy of the Civ.C. § 2944.6(a) written disclosure (¶ 1:194) must be provided to the client in that language. An attorney who violates this requirement is subject to disciplinary action and can be fined and/or imprisoned for up to one year. [Civ.C. § 2944.6(b) & Bus. & Prof.C. § 6106.3]

d. [1:195] Fee agreement checklist: Consider the following checklist items when preparing your fee agreements:

(1) [1:196] Work to be performed: Provide a general description of the matter for which you have been hired and explain the specific scope of work or tasks you will perform.

(2) [1:197] Excluded services: If there might be confusion about the services you will and will not perform, identify those tasks you will not perform.

(3) [1:198] Client(s): Identify precisely whom you are representing. If necessary to clarify the matter, also identify those whom you are not representing (e.g., if retained by a partnership, indicate you are not representing the partners individually).

(4) [1:199] Authority and decision-making among joint clients: When representing joint clients (e.g., several buyers or sellers), set up some methodology for expeditious transmission of communications and decision-making.

For example, identify one party as the client "representative" with authority to make certain (or all) decisions on behalf of the others (see ¶ 1:112 ff.).

(5) [1:200] Legal fees and billings: Describe the legal fees arrangement (fixed or task-based fee, hourly rate, etc.) and billing methodology. For example, note your periodic billing cycles (e.g., every 30 days) and the time period within which payment will be required. If applicable, carefully delineate interest to be charged on past due amounts. If you represent several parties, make it clear in the agreement that each is jointly and severally liable for billings.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

If your fees might vary from a strict hourly rate, you may want to list the various factors determining a "reasonable" fee (see ¶ 1:150). And, if it appears the matter could extend over a protracted period of time, you may want to reserve the right to increase your hourly rate at a later date (but see ¶ 1:152—client must consent to fee increases).

➪ [1:200.1] PRACTICE POINTER FOR SELLER'S COUNSEL— TIME FOR PAYMENT*: Seller's counsel should make every effort to ensure their fees are paid, at the latest, upon closing of the sale, when the seller will have readily available cash funds. Seller's counsel can prepare a simple disbursement instruction from (and to be executed by) the seller, directing the escrow holder to pay counsel out of the seller's proceeds upon close of escrow. (However, a simple letter or any other written instruction from the client to the escrow will usually suffice.)

To pass ethical scrutiny, be sure any disbursement of your fees out of the escrow is conditioned on the client's prior opportunity to review and contest your billings; i.e., the disbursement instructions should come from the client after approving your final bill. [See Cal. State Bar Form.Opn. 2002-159]

FORM: Seller's Disbursement Instruction to Escrow for Payment of Counsel Fees, see Form 1:B.

(6) [1:201] Costs: Discuss the anticipated costs and describe those costs you will (and will not) advance on the client's behalf, spelling out the reimbursement obligation.

For example, advise the client you intend to charge separately for such things as long-distance telephone calls, messenger charges, travel expenses, etc. Specify per item charges, such as rates per page for telecopying and copying charges.

(Depending on the client's sophistication and experience in real property sales transactions, it may be prudent also to identify those costs you will not be advancing on the client's behalf—e.g., recording costs, title fees, filing fees in connection with the formation of a partnership or corporation, etc.)

(7) [1:202] Retainer against future fees: If a deposit against future fees will be expected, identify the amount and (if applicable) the client's obligation to replenish the deposit when it falls below a specified level.

(8) [1:203] Division of attorney work, varying rates: Where the work will be divided among different lawyers and support staff in your firm (at varying hourly rates), it is a good idea to specify who will be the principal attorney working on the matter. Also include a schedule of the various hourly billing rates as between attorneys (or classes of attorneys), law clerks, paralegals, etc.

(9) [1:204] Conflicts of interest: Where there are actual or potential conflicts of interest requiring the client's "informed written consent" (¶ 1:73.2a), some attorneys make the requisite disclosures and obtain the client's waiver by a separate conflicts letter executed prior to, or in conjunction with, the fee agreement. Others incorporate conflicts disclosures and provide for the requisite client waiver directly in the written fee agreement.

Under the latter approach, by signing the fee agreement, the client should effectively waive actual or potential conflicts. As an added precaution, to be certain the client understands the disclosures and their rights in the face of an actual or potential conflict of interest, the client should be asked to separately initial the conflicts paragraph, thereby explicitly acknowledging their informed written consent (¶ 1:73.2a) to counsel's representation notwithstanding the conflict.

(10) [1:205] Right of withdrawal: To encourage prompt payment of fees and costs, some attorneys include a provision expressly reserving the right to cease representation, upon reasonable notice to the client, in the event bills are not timely paid (or for any other legitimate reason). Conversely, since the attorney-client relationship is basically an "at will" employment, some counsel also include a concomitant provision indicating the client's right to discharge counsel at any time (before the matter otherwise draws to a natural conclusion).

➪ [1:205.1] PRACTICE POINTER: An express withdrawal provision is not essential, since counsel has the right to withdraw when, among other things, the client "renders it unreasonably difficult" for counsel to "carry out the representation effectively" or "breaches a material term of an agreement with, or obligation" to, counsel relating to the representation, and the lawyer has given the client a reasonable warning after the breach that the lawyer will withdraw unless the client fulfills the agreement or performs the obligation. [See CRPC 1.16(b)(4)-(5) (compare former 3-700(C)(1)(f)—expressly permitting withdrawal where client breaches agreement or obligation to counsel "as to expenses or fees")] Likewise, whether or not specified in the agreement, a client has the absolute right to discharge counsel at any time, with or without "cause." [Fracasse v. Brent (1972) 6 C3d 784, 790-791, 100 CR 385, 389]

Unlike in a litigation setting, withdrawal as counsel in sales transactions is relatively easy and court approval need not be obtained (even if the client objects thereto; compare CCP § 284). Nonetheless, should you reach the point where withdrawal is deemed necessary or prudent, be sure to adhere to your ethical obligations (see ¶ 1:234 ff.); significantly, always time your withdrawal to be sufficiently in advance of any critical date in the transaction so that the client will have adequate opportunity to obtain new counsel (see CRPC 1.16(d)); ¶ 1:235).

(11) [1:206] Arbitration of disputes: As a general rule, attorneys may legally and ethically include in their retention agreements a provision requiring binding arbitration of attorney-client disputes arising out of the engagement. [Powers v. Dickson, Carlson & Campillo (1997) 54 CA4th 1102, 1108-1109, 63 CR2d 261, 264; Cal. State Bar Form.Opn. 1989-116]

(a) [1:206.1] Enforceability: So long as the contract is not one of adhesion (not a standardized contract presented to the client on a "take it or leave it basis"), and the terms of the arbitration clause are unambiguous and understandable to the client, retention agreements requiring arbitration of client disputes—including legal malpractice claims—are valid and enforceable. [Powers v. Dickson, Carlson & Campillo (1997) 54 CA4th 1102, 1115, 63 CR2d 261, 269—provisions requiring arbitration of "any dispute arising out of or related to professional services" held to encompass legal malpractice claims (enforceable even though clients did not carefully read agreement)]

1) [1:206.2] Limitation re provision for binding MFAA arbitration of fees/costs disputes: See discussion at ¶ 1:225.6 ff.

(b) [1:206.3] Warning to client required: To ensure clients understand the legal effect of binding arbitration, they should be fully advised of the possible consequences—i.e., no right to jury trial, possible limitations on discovery, limited appellate review, etc. "Absent notification and at least some explanation, the [client] cannot be said to have exercised a 'real choice' in selecting arbitration over litigation." [See Wheeler v. St. Joseph Hosp. (1976) 63 CA3d 345, 361, 133 CR 775, 786]

The requisite warnings can—and, as a matter of prudence, should—be included in the retention agreement. See Form 1:A.1.

On the other hand, an enforceable arbitration provision need not contain an express waiver of the right to jury trial or any other client waivers. [Powers v. Dickson, Carlson & Campillo (1997) 54 CA4th 1102, 1115, 63 CR2d 261, 269]

(c) [1:206.4] Higher disclosure standards re existing clients: In an advisory opinion, the State Bar distinguishes between arbitration provisions in an initial retainer agreement by which the attorney-client relationship is first established and those negotiated with an existing client (e.g., in an amendment to an existing fee agreement).

With regard to an initial agreement with a new client, the State Bar opinion states that the extent to which the client is aware of the provision and freely consents to it goes to the legal enforceability of the agreement and not its ethical propriety. By contrast, where the arbitration provision is negotiated with an existing client, ethical considerations (distinct from any legal considerations) require the attorney fully disclose the terms and consequences of the provision and that the client knowingly consent to it. [Cal. State Bar Form.Opn. 1989-116; Powers v. Dickson, Carlson & Campillo (1997) 54 CA4th 1102, 1113, 63 CR2d 261, 267-268—both initial retainer agreement and amendment thereto satisfied disclosure and client consent requirements, unambiguously requiring arbitration of legal malpractice claims; compare Desert Outdoor Advertising v. Sup.Ct. (Murphy) (2011) 196 CA4th 866, 875-877, 127 CR3d 158, 165-167—attorney had no duty to separately explain clearly written arbitration clause to existing, sophisticated business clients who failed to carefully read new fee agreement (explaining Cal. State Bar Form.Opn. 1989-116 and Powers decision "presume" clients "will read" retainer agreements)]

(d) [1:206.5] Scope of coverage—ambiguities resolved against attorney: As the drafter of the retention agreement, the attorney is chargeable with the consequences of ambiguities therein (¶ 1:185.1). Any uncertainty about the scope or validity of an arbitration clause will be resolved against the attorney and therefore against arbitration of the particular dispute (Civ.C. § 1654). [Mayhew v. Benninghoff (1997) 53 CA4th 1365, 1370, 62 CR2d 27, 30]

1) Examples

• [1:206.6] An ambiguous provision in a divorce retainer agreement requiring arbitration of "any controversy arising out of or related to [Client's] engagement for legal matters" could not be construed to compel arbitration of an unrelated dispute arising out of the client's "side business deal" with counsel. [Mayhew v. Benninghoff (1997) 53 CA4th 1365, 1368, 62 CR2d 27, 28]

• [1:206.7] A provision requiring binding arbitration of disputes "regarding fees, costs or any other aspect of our attorney-client relationship" was construed (from the client's perspective) as most likely limited to financial matters and thus inapplicable to legal malpractice claims. [Lawrence v. Walzer & Gabrielson (1989) 207 CA3d 1501, 1507, 256 CR 6, 10]

(e) [1:206.8] No special form required: An enforceable attorney-client arbitration provision need not adhere to any statutory formalities. [See Powers v. Dickson, Carlson & Campillo (1997) 54 CA4th 1102, 1115, 63 CR2d 261, 269 (rejecting suggestion in Cal. State Bar Form.Opn. 1989-116 that attorney-client dispute arbitration provisions comply with CCP § 1295 formalities for arbitration of medical malpractice claims in physician-patient contracts); Desert Outdoor Advertising v. Sup.Ct. (Murphy) (2011) 196 CA4th 866, 877, 127 CR3d 158, 167 (same)]

Nonetheless, to ensure the client is aware of the arbitration provision, prudence suggests that it be highlighted in prominent type; and that it be separately initialed by the client to signify their understanding and acknowledgment.

FORM: A sample arbitration clause and client acknowledgment are included in the Sample Fee Letter, Form 1:A.1.

Cross-refer: For further discussion of arbitration provisions in fee agreements, see Weil & Brown et al., Cal. Prac. Guide: Civ. Pro. Before Trial (TRG), Ch. 1; and Tuft, Peck & Mohr, Cal. Prac. Guide: Professional Responsibility & Liability (TRG), Ch. 5.

(12) [1:207] Disposition of client files: Though not essential, some attorneys include a statement in the fee agreement indicating how and when client files will be disposed of once representation has ceased. (Other attorneys prefer to send a separate letter on this subject upon conclusion of the representation.)

On this issue, bear in mind your ethical obligations regarding the return of client files; see ¶ 1:236.

(13) [1:208] Disclosure re no professional liability insurance: See discussion at ¶ 1:127.

(14) [1:209] Signatures: Attorney and client(s) should each date and sign the agreement; and the client (or each of several joint clients) should be given a conformed copy (¶ 1:189).

FORM: Sample Fee Letter, see Form 1:A.1.

e. Client billings

(1) [1:210] Mandatory specifications: All bills to clients for services rendered must "clearly state the basis thereof." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6148(b)]

More particularly:

(a) [1:211] Fee portion: The fee portion of the bill must include the amount, rate, basis for calculation, or other method of determining counsel's "fees and costs." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6148(b)]

(b) [1:212] Expense portion: The costs and expense portion of the bill must clearly identify the costs and expenses incurred and the amount thereof. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6148(b)]

➪ [1:212.1] PRACTICE POINTER: Bus. & Prof.C. § 6148(b) essentially requires only "bare bones" itemized information in client bills. In practice, client bills rarely mirror the detailed time logs counsel should keep for their files (¶ 1:140).

Various billing approaches are utilized:

- Some attorneys simply provide clients with a statement of the amount due, the applicable rate, accompanied by a general description (e.g., "for legal services in connection with … [a general reference to the matter]"), plus an itemization of related expenses.

- Other lawyers give their clients a breakdown of the specific acts performed—such as telephone conferences, meetings, preparation of certain documents, etc., providing dates and some specifics, but no hourly breakdown.

- Still others furnish an hourly breakdown either by the day or the specific act performed (e.g., telephone call, attend meeting, draft document, etc.).

Of course, a large bill accompanied by only a general notation (e.g., "for services rendered") is likely to be met with a phone call from the client for further explanation. Hence, at least when a monthly bill might exceed the client's expectations, it may be prudent to include detailed descriptions and itemizations regarding each particular service rendered and expense incurred.

(2) [1:213] How often: Counsel must provide the client with a bill no later than 10 days after the client's request for same —except that, if a bill was provided the client within 31 days before the request, the next bill may be furnished up to 31 days after the last billing date. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6148(b)]

Clients are entitled to make similar billing requests at intervals of no less than 30 days following the initial request. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6148(b)]

(3) [1:214] Estimates: In responding to client requests for billing information, counsel "may use billing data that is currently effective on the date of the request"; or, to the extent fees or costs as of the date of the request cannot be accurately determined, they "shall be described and estimated." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6148(b)]

f. [1:215] Exceptions: The requirements of Bus. & Prof.C. § 6148 do not apply in the following situations:

(1) [1:216] Emergencies: When legal services are rendered in an "emergency" to avoid foreseeable prejudice to the client's rights or interests "or where a writing is otherwise impractical." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6148(d)(1)]

(2) [1:217] Fee arrangement implied by prior similar dealings: When an arrangement as to legal fees can be implied by the fact counsel's services "are of the same general kind as previously rendered to and paid for by the client." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6148(d)(2)]

(3) [1:218] Client's waiver: When, after full disclosure of Bus. & Prof.C. § 6148, the client knowingly states in writing that a writing concerning fees is not required. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6148(d)(3)]

(4) [1:219] Corporate clients: When the client is a corporation. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6148(d)(4)]

➪ [1:219.1] PRACTICE POINTER: As indicated earlier (¶ 1:181.1), a written fee agreement is always prudent—even when the circumstances bring the matter outside the scope of Bus. & Prof.C. § 6148. Relying on informal oral "understandings" or "implied" agreements based on prior dealings all too often invites later fee disputes.

g. [1:220] Effect of noncompliance: Absent an applicable exception (¶ 1:215 ff.), failure to comply with Bus. & Prof.C. § 6148 renders the agreement voidable at the client's option. Should the client exercise the right of avoidance, counsel will be limited to "reasonable fees" for services rendered (i.e., a quantum meruit claim). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6148(c); see Flannery v. Prentice (2001) 26 C4th 572, 589, 110 CR2d 809, 822]

h. [1:221] Confidentiality: A written fee contract is deemed a confidential communication for purposes of Bus. & Prof.C. § 6068(e) (attorney's duty to "maintain inviolate the confidence, and at every peril to himself or herself to preserve the secrets, of his or her client") and Ev.C. § 952 (attorney-client privilege). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6149]

Cross-refer: For further discussion of the confidentiality of attorney fee agreements and billing statements, see Tuft, Peck & Mohr, Cal. Prac. Guide: Professional Responsibility & Liability (TRG), Ch. 7.

[1:222 - 1:224] Reserved.

8. [1:225] Client's Statutory Right to Arbitrate Fees/Costs Disputes: The Mandatory Fee Arbitration Act (MFAA) provides a "quick and inexpensive method" for clients to resolve fees and costs disputes with their attorneys. [Law Offices of Dixon R. Howell v. Valley (2005) 129 CA4th 1076, 1083, 29 CR3d 499, 502] Pursuant to the MFAA, the State Bar regulates and administers a system for the arbitration of such disputes, conducted under approved local bar association programs. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6200 et seq.; State Bar Rule 3.500 et seq.]

a. [1:225.1] Notice to client of right to MFAA arbitration: Counsel wishing to sue a client over disputed fees and costs must give the client written notice (in a form prescribed by the State Bar), before or with service of summons, advising of the client's right to submit the dispute to arbitration under the MFAA. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6201(a); State Bar Rule 3.501(B); Schatz v. Allen Matkins Leck Gamble & Mallory LLP (2009) 45 C4th 557, 566, 87 CR3d 700, 706]

(1) [1:225.1a] "Client" defined: A "client" entitled to the notice is the person who has agreed to pay the lawyer's fees (i.e., the attorney's debtor on account of the services provided); this person may actually be a nonclient (e.g., a third-party guarantor). [Wager v. Mirzayance (1998) 67 CA4th 1187, 1190, 79 CR2d 661, 663]

(2) [1:225.1b] Timing: This notice also must be given before commencing arbitration proceedings through another dispute resolution provider pursuant to a contract between attorney and client. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6201(a); Schatz v. Allen Matkins Leck Gamble & Mallory LLP, supra]

• FORM: The requisite client notice must be served on a State Bar-approved form "Notice of Client's Right to Arbitration" (available at www.calbar.ca.gov, under "Forms"; see Form 1:C).

(3) [1:225.1c] Must be given after dispute arises, *not in retention agreement: A notice of right to arbitrate included in the retention agreement or the initial billing is ineffective. The Bus. & Prof.C. § 6201 notice must be given after the fees/costs dispute arises. [Huang v. Cheng (1998) 66 CA4th 1230, 1234, 78 CR2d 550, 552—notice sent 2 years before dispute (around time of original billing) insufficient]

(4) [1:225.2] Dismissal of action for failure to give client notice: Counsel's failure to give the right to arbitrate notice is ground for dismissal of the attorney's lawsuit for fees/costs. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6201(a); State Bar Rule 3.501(C)] But dismissal is discretionary with the trial court, not mandatory. [Law Offices of Dixon R. Howell v. Valley (2005) 129 CA4th 1076, 1088-1090, 29 CR3d 499, 506-508 (collecting cases)]

b. [1:225.3] Arbitration mandatory upon client's timely request; exemptions and waiver: There are limited exceptions to Bus. & Prof.C. § 6200 et seq. arbitration (e.g., fees/costs disputes with out-of-state lawyers who maintain no California office and rendered no "material part" of the legal services in this State). [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 6200(b)]

Clients also can waive their right to § 6200 et seq. arbitration (e.g., by failure to request same within the postnotice 30-day period). [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 6201(a), (b), (d) & (e); and ¶ 1:225.7]

Otherwise, unless the client has agreed in writing (e.g., in the retention contract) to § 6200 et seq. arbitration of all fees/costs disputes, arbitration under § 6200 et seq. is voluntary for the client but mandatory for the attorney if timely commenced by the client. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6200(c); Fagelbaum & Heller, LLP v. Smylie (2009) 174 CA4th 1351, 1360, 95 CR3d 252, 260]

(1) [1:225.4] Compare—State Bar mediation program: The State Bar also is empowered to establish a system and procedure for mediation of attorney-client fees and costs disputes. Such mediation is voluntary for both attorney and client. Moreover, no notice of right to mediate is required. [Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 6200(a), (c), (h) & 6201(a)]

(2) [1:225.5] Client's timely arbitration request stays other proceedings: The client's timely request for arbitration (within 30 days of receipt of the notice of right to arbitrate and before filing an answer in the attorney's lawsuit or an equivalent response in another dispute resolution proceeding) stays the attorney's lawsuit or other dispute resolution proceeding until the arbitration award issues, the arbitration is otherwise terminated, or the stay is vacated by court order finding the dispute not arbitrable. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 6201(b), (c); State Bar Rule 3.511]

c. [1:225.6] Predispute agreement for binding MFAA arbitration ineffective; right to trial de novo: An agreement for binding MFAA arbitration is enforceable only if the agreement is reached after the fees/costs dispute arises. Otherwise, either party is entitled to request a trial de novo within 30 days after mailing of notice of the arbitration award (optional Judicial Council form ADR-104 may be used for this purpose). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6204(a); see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 6204(b), (c) re procedure for initiating right to trial de novo; State Bar Rule 3.508; Maynard v. Brandon (2005) 36 C4th 364, 369, 30 CR3d 558, 559—30-day deadline for requesting trial de novo is jurisdictional and cannot be extended by CCP § 473(b) relief]

Exception: A party who willfully fails to appear at the arbitration hearing forfeits the right to a trial after arbitration. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6204(a)]

(1) [1:225.7] Subject to client's waiver of MFAA rights: Clients waive their MFAA rights by commencing suit against the attorney seeking (a) judicial resolution of the fees/costs dispute; or (b) damages for attorney malpractice (Bus. & Prof.C. § 6201(d); State Bar Rule 3.502(A)(2)). In that event, a provision for binding arbitration of fees/costs disputes in a preexisting contract between attorney and client is fully enforceable against the client. [Aguilar v. Lerner (2004) 32 C4th 975, 989-990, 12 CR3d 287, 297; and see Fagelbaum & Heller, LLP v. Smylie (2009) 174 CA4th 1351, 1362, 95 CR3d 252, 261—client waived right to MFAA arbitration by filing cross-demand for attorney malpractice damages in pending contractual arbitration proceeding]

(2) [1:225.8] Compare—predispute agreement for private binding arbitration *after nonbinding MFAA arbitration: Moreover, after nonbinding MFAA arbitration has concluded, a pre-dispute agreement for private binding arbitration under the California Arbitration Act (CCP § 1280 et seq.) is enforceable; in effect, the private contractual arbitration is the "trial de novo" to which either party is entitled upon timely request after a nonbinding MFAA arbitration award. [Schatz v. Allen Matkins Leck Gamble & Mallory LLP (2009) 45 C4th 557, 562, 572, 575, 87 CR3d 700, 703, 711, 714—client's MFAA right to "trial de novo" not limited to court litigation; Fagelbaum & Heller, LLP v. Smylie (2009) 174 CA4th 1351, 1361, 95 CR3d 252, 260 (same); see also Greenberg Glusker Fields Claman & Machtinger LLP v. Rosenson (2012) 203 CA4th 688,

694, 137 CR3d 489, 492—following nonbinding MFAA award, law firm had valid contractual right to binding arbitration pursuant to preexisting retainer agreement provision]

d. [1:225.9] State Bar enforcement of arbitration award: The State Bar Act provides for an internal administrative enforcement remedy to expedite an attorney's compliance with a Bus. & Prof.C. § 6200 et seq. fees and costs arbitration (or mediation) award to the client (attorney may be placed on involuntary inactive status pending payment of the award; and administrative penalties and costs may be assessed for noncompliance). [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 6203(d); State Bar Rule 3.560]

- 1. [1:230] "Natural" Termination Upon Conclusion of Transaction
  - a. [1:232] Returning client materials and other property
- 2. [1:233] Early Termination Before Conclusion of Transaction
  - a. [1:234] Attorney ethical obligations
    - (1) [1:235] Avoiding client prejudice; reasonable notice to client
    - (2) [1:236] Return of client materials and property
      - (a) [1:237] No "retaining liens"
    - (3) [1:238] Return of unearned fees
  - b. Fees for services rendered to date
    - (1) [1:239] Upon early discharge by client
      - (a) [1:240] Hourly rate cases
      - (b) [1:241] Fixed fee (and other) cases
    - (2) [1:242] Upon early withdrawal by counsel

1. [1:230] "Natural" Termination Upon Conclusion of Transaction: Normally, legal representation ceases at or shortly after closing of the transaction, even though various postclosing matters are contemplated by the purchase and sale agreement.

➪ [1:231] PRACTICE POINTER: When negotiating a fee agreement, explain to your clients that the scope of your undertaking ceases when the transaction closes. Further, so as to leave no room for misunderstanding, this point should be clarified in the written fee agreement. In other words, dispel any client expectations that you will attend to various postclosing matters.

For example, some clients may assume that because you drafted the purchase-money note, you will be calendaring dates for notices and/or maturity; or clients may expect you to remind them of a date for the exercise of an option to purchase. It is almost never advisable to assume responsibility to clients with regard to postclosing deadlines for notices, payments and the like. Among other reasons, (i) you greatly enhance your malpractice exposure for missing any number of pertinent deadlines; and (ii) your calendar will eventually become overwhelmed with a multitude of postclosing tasks for different clients.

Upon the closing of a transaction, cautious counsel should give their clients written confirmation that legal representation has ceased and you are "out of the loop" on these (or any other) postclosing steps (unless and until a new agreement directed at those tasks is reached).

a. [1:232] Returning client materials and other property: As soon as employment ceases, upon client request, counsel must return to the client all client materials and property relating to the representation—whether or not fees are still owing. [CRPC 1.16(e)(1); see ¶ 1:236]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

2. [1:233] Early Termination Before Conclusion of Transaction: Counsel and client, respectively, have the right to terminate representation at any time, even before the matter comes to a natural conclusion (¶ 1:230 ff.). [CRPC 1.16(b)—attorney's "permissive" right of withdrawal; Fracasse v. Brent (1972) 6 C3d 784, 790-791, 100 CR 385, 389—client's "absolute right" to discharge counsel at any time; see ¶ 1:205.1]

a. [1:234] Attorney ethical obligations: In purely transactional matters (including representation in a purchase and sale) where there are no pending court or administrative proceedings, counsel's withdrawal is not conditioned on prior court approval. However, minimum ethical obligations must be adhered to:

(1) [1:235] Avoiding client prejudice; reasonable notice to client: Counsel may not withdraw from employment until they have taken "reasonable steps to avoid reasonably foreseeable prejudice" to the client's rights—including giving the client "sufficient notice" to permit the client to retain other counsel, and complying with CRPC 1.16(e) (¶ 1:236 ff.). [CRPC 1.16(d); see also ABA Model Rule 1.16—counsel may withdraw if it can be accomplished "without material adverse effect" on client's interests]

(2) [1:236] Return of client materials and property: Upon withdrawal, and at the client's request, counsel must promptly release to the client all "client materials and property," including correspondence, exhibits, experts' reports and other writings, "whether in tangible, electronic or other form, and other items reasonably necessary to the client's representation, whether the client has paid for them or not." [CRPC 1.16(e)(1) (emphasis added)]

(a) [1:237] No "retaining liens": It is both unethical and unlawful for counsel to unilaterally insist on retaining the client's files and other materials as security for fees still owing (so-called "retaining liens"). Withdrawing (or discharged) counsel may retain copies of the original papers and files at their own expense; but the originals must be released even if the client owes money for expenses incurred in connection with them. [See CRPC 1.16 & Comment [6]; Academy of California Optometrists, Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Damir) (1975) 51 CA3d 999, 1005-1006, 124 CR 668, 671-672; Kallen v. Delug (1984) 157 CA3d 940, 950, 203 CR 879, 884-885; see also Cal. State Bar Form.Opn. 1994-134]

(3) [1:238] Return of unearned fees: Also, upon withdrawal, counsel must promptly refund "any part of a fee or expense paid in advance that the lawyer has not earned or incurred." [CRPC 1.16(e)(2)—inapplicable to "classic retainer" fee paid solely to ensure counsel's availability for matter (¶ 1:134.1)]

If attorney and client dispute the amount of "unearned" fee advances to be returned to the client, the disputed sum must be left in the client trust account until the matter is finally resolved. [See CRPC 1.15(c)(2); and ¶ 1:161]

b. Fees for services rendered to date

(1) [1:239] Upon early discharge by client: Of course, a client's inherent right to discharge counsel at any time does not relieve the client of the obligation to pay for legal services rendered. [Fracasse v. Brent (1972) 6 C3d 784, 791, 100 CR 385, 389-390]

(a) [1:240] Hourly rate cases: If the fee agreement called for an hourly rate, discharged counsel is entitled to recover on the hourly rate basis for the time expended so far. [See Oliver v. Campbell (1954) 43 C2d 298, 306, 273 P2d 15, 20; Countryman v. California Trona Co. (1917) 35 CA 728, 736, 170 P 1069, 1073]

(b) [1:241] Fixed fee (and other) cases: If the fee agreement called for a lump-sum amount (or another form of compensation that cannot be reduced to hourly rate computation), and no provision was made for compensation in the event of premature discharge by the client, counsel has a quantum meruit claim for the reasonable value of services rendered to date.

[Fracasse v. Brent, supra; Hansen v. Jacobsen (1986) 186 CA3d 350, 356, 230 CR 580, 584—discharged attorney's contractual lien survives as lien for quantum meruit fees]

However, if the obligation to pay legal fees was made contingent on a particular event (or events), discharged counsel is entitled to recover fees only upon occurrence of the specified contingency. [Fracasse v. Brent (1972) 6 C3d 784, 792, 100 CR 385, 390-391]

(2) [1:242] Upon early withdrawal by counsel: Like a discharged attorney (¶ 1:239 ff.), an attorney who withdraws prematurely may recover specified hourly rate fees for services rendered to date. But if hourly rate fees were not contracted for, the right to a quantum meruit recovery (compensation for "reasonable value" of services rendered) depends on the reason for the withdrawal.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

A quantum meruit fee recovery turns on whether counsel had “justifiable cause” for withdrawal. Generally, the withdrawal must be mandated by ethical rules (see CRPC 1.16(a)). On the other hand, a permissive withdrawal under ethical rules (see CRPC 1.16(b)) is not necessarily “justifiable cause” warranting quantum meruit fees. [See Estate of Falco (1987) 188 CA3d 1004, 1016, 233 CR 807, 814 (five-part test for what attorney must show to warrant fees on allegation ethics compelled their withdrawal); Rus, Miliband & Smith v. Conkle & Olesten (2003) 113 CA4th 656, 674-678, 6 CR3d 612, 625-627]

[Form 1:A] Sample Joint Representation Disclosure and Consent Letter

[Letterhead of Counsel]

[Date] [Clients]
Re: Joint Representation Disclosure and Consent
Dear ___ and ___:

You have asked this firm to represent _____ on the one hand, and _____, on the other hand, respectively, in connection with. Our joint representation of multiple clients may involve or otherwise lead to conflicts of interest between you. Thus, our representation of multiple interests has significant implications that each of you should consider.

Our representation of multiple parties could result in the following circumstances (which are not exhaustive):

- Conflicting client instructions, where following one client's instructions violates another client's instructions;
- Disputes that may arise among the clients;
- Disagreements among clients as to the matter or how any agreement is to be structured or drafted;
- Your interests and objectives on certain issues may become inconsistent with the interests and objectives of one another;
- Advocating certain positions that are advantageous to one client may be disadvantageous to another client; and/or
- One client discloses information to the attorney and demands that it not be disclosed to the other clients.

Further, under California Evidence Code § 962 and California case law, there is no attorney-client privilege between or among joint clients. Thus, the attorney-client privilege does not apply to communications between us and each of you if subsequent litigation arises between you. However, the privilege will remain intact as to other third parties. Also, we caution you that any communications among you outside of our presence or communications with other third parties would be discoverable by third parties.

WESTLAW © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Pursuant to the California Rules of Professional Conduct, Rule 1.7 requires us to obtain your informed written consent in order to accept representation of more than one client in a matter in which the interests of the clients potentially conflict. Specifically, Rule 1.7 provides in part:

“(a) A lawyer shall not, without informed written consent from each client and compliance with paragraph (d), represent a client if the representation is directly adverse to another client in the same or a separate matter.

(b) A lawyer shall not, without informed written consent from each affected client and compliance with paragraph (d), represent a client if there is a significant risk the lawyer's representation of the client will be materially limited by the lawyer's responsibilities to or relationships with another client, a former client or a third person, or by the lawyer's own interests.

(c) Even when a significant risk requiring a lawyer to comply with paragraph (b) is not present, a lawyer shall not represent a client without written disclosure of the relationship to the client and compliance with paragraph (d) where:

(1) the lawyer has, or knows that another lawyer in the lawyer's firm has, a legal, business, financial, professional, or personal relationship with or responsibility to a party or witness in the same matter; or

(2) the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that another party's lawyer is a spouse, parent, child or sibling of the lawyer, lives with the lawyer, is a client of the lawyer or another lawyer in the lawyer's firm, or has an intimate personal relationship with the lawyer.

(d) Representation is permitted under this rule only if the lawyer complies with paragraphs (a), (b), and (c), and:

(1) the lawyer reasonably believes that the lawyer will be able to provide competent and diligent representation to each affected client;

(2) the representation is not prohibited by law; and

(3) the representation does not involve the assertion of a claim by one client against another client represented by the lawyer in the same litigation or other proceeding before a tribunal.”

By signing this letter, you acknowledge that (1) we have advised you of Rule 1.7 and of the potential conflicts associated with your respective interests; (2) you have the right to consult with separate legal counsel concerning your potential conflicts and should do so.

We stress that each of you remains completely free to seek other counsel at any time even if you decide to sign the consent set forth below. Should you have any questions concerning this disclosure, or the consent, please discuss them with your own counsel before signing and returning this letter.

Very truly yours,
ACKNOWLEDGED AND AGREED TO:

[Form 1:A.1] Sample Fee Letter

RE: ________________*(Client matter)*
Dear (Client):

This letter confirms the terms under which you have retained this firm in the above-referenced matter and our fees and costs arrangement.

You have requested this firm to represent you in connection with ___________ (specify by general description; e.g., "the [sale] [purchase] of Blackacre." Also, consider detailing specific services to be rendered; e.g., negotiating the purchase agreement, reviewing the inspection reports, monitoring escrow, etc.). At this time, the scope of our representation will concern only the aforementioned matter and will not relate to general or other legal representation of you, although, should you desire, we would be delighted to represent you in other matters on terms to be separately agreed upon.

[If Client May Expect Services You Will Not Provide, Add:]

As discussed with you, we will not be performing the following in connection with this transaction (specify):

[For example]

1. Procuring financing for you.
2. ___________ (Continue)

We have agreed to represent you through the closing of this transaction. Postclosing matters are not covered by this Agreement; any obligation to represent, advise or consult with you on postclosing matters will arise only in the event we separately undertake to do so by mutual agreement with you. Thus, unless a new Agreement is reached with you, this letter shall serve as the only Agreement between us.

Fees to be Paid

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Our fees are based upon guidelines in the California Rules of Professional Conduct, Rule 1.5, which, among other things, focus on the novelty and difficulty of the questions involved and the skill required to perform the legal service properly; time limitations imposed by the client or the circumstances; the time and labor required; the attorney's experience, reputation and ability; the amount involved and results obtained; and the nature and length of the attorney-client professional relationship.

In general, the principal consideration is the time involved, which includes not only time spent directly on the matter, but also in conferences (by phone, in person or otherwise) with you and others. This firm's time is normally billed at rates between $________ and $________ per hour, although the precise rate may vary depending on who in our firm (partner, associate or paralegal) is working on the matter and the factors enumerated above.

It is presently anticipated that I will be doing the majority of the work in this matter. My rate is currently $________ per hour. A schedule of our various hourly rates is attached. However, we reserve the right to change fee rates at any time by giving you 10 days' written notice. Services rendered after the date of a revised rate notice will be billed at the revised rate.

Costs and Expenses to be Paid

You have authorized us to incur on your behalf whatever costs and expenses are reasonably required in connection with the rendition of legal services in this matter. Without limitation, those costs and expenses may include: _____ (specify; e.g., photocopying at $________ per page, long distance telephone calls, facsimile transmission and messenger charges, travel expenses, fees and mileage to investigators, court filing fees, process server fees, (continue)).

Billings

[Where Retainer Required]

We acknowledge receipt of your check in the sum of $________, which will be deposited in our Client Trust Account, subject to future billings. At the end of each month, we will send you an itemized statement of our time, costs and expenses for services rendered on your behalf and will deduct that amount from the balance credited to you in the Client Trust Account. Any unexpended balance credited to you in the Client Trust Account shall be returned to you upon termination of our services under this Agreement.

[If Minimum Retainer Balance Required, Continue:]

We also require that you maintain a minimum of $________ in the Client Trust Account at all times as against our final billing. Our monthly statements will indicate a balance due as necessary to bring your Client Trust Account deposit up to that minimum amount. Balance due amounts shall be paid within _ days of your receipt of the monthly statement. If at any time you ask us to discontinue legal services on this matter, we will of course do so and provide you with a final billing within 30 days, returning to you any funds credited to you in the Client Trust Account that are not necessary to pay our fees and costs then owing.

[If No Retainer Required, Substitute:]

At the end of each month, we will send you an itemized statement of attorney fees, costs and expenses for services rendered on your behalf through the 25th day of the month. Balances shown are due upon your receipt of each month's statement. In the event any monthly statement balance remains unpaid for more than 30 days after receipt of the statement, interest thereon at the rate of _ percent (____%) shall be due and payable from the date of the statement until the date of ultimate payment. We also reserve the right to discontinue rendering legal services for you on any matter for which a bill is in arrears, but we trust this will not be necessary. By your signature on this Agreement, you grant us a security interest in all claims, suits, causes of action, remedies, judgments and settlements in which we represent you, now or in the future, to secure payment of all unpaid fees and costs.

[If Mandatory Arbitration is Desired] Arbitration of Disputes

Any dispute between the parties as to attorney fees and/or costs charged shall be arbitrated pursuant to the provisions of California Business & Professions Code § 6200 et seq.

Any other dispute arising under this Agreement or in connection with the provision of legal services by this firm, including, without limitation, any claim for breach of contract, professional negligence or breach of fiduciary duty, shall be resolved by binding arbitration in accordance with the rules of ___ (e.g., American Arbitration Association or JAMS, or CCP § 1280 et seq.).

We have explained to you that, by agreeing to arbitration, (i) the parties are waiving their right to a jury trial and to seek remedies available in court proceedings; (ii) prearbitration discovery is generally more limited than and different from court proceedings; (iii) the arbitrator's award is not required to include factual findings or legal reasoning; and (iv) any party's right to appeal or to seek modification of the arbitration award is strictly limited, and the award is final and binding on the parties.

You acknowledge that we have explained to you that such binding arbitration may deprive you of various rights that you otherwise might have in a legal action, including, without limitation, the right to a jury trial, the right to appeal, and full discovery rights. Your initials below signify your acknowledgment and understanding of this explanation.

*[If Desired]*Fees and Costs Recovery in Action Arising Under Agreement; Place of Forum

1. [2:1] Basic Functions of Real Estate Brokers: Many (if not most) buyers and sellers approach the use of real estate brokers with trepidation, typically out of a misconceived notion about the utility of brokerage services in purchase and sale transactions; few buyers and sellers know how to effectively maximize the use of a broker.

Sellers tend to view their broker's function as simply procuring a buyer; and buyers tend to view their broker's role as limited to finding a property. However, as indicated at ¶ 2:3 ff., experienced brokers can perform many other valuable functions.

➪ [2:2] PRACTICE POINTER: Despite the vast range of potential brokerage services (¶ 2:3 ff.), very few brokers have strengths in each of these areas. Depending on the nature of the transaction, the type of property involved, and the particular broker's expertise, it may be necessary for counsel to step in at certain points to perform or reassign particular broker functions.

Relying on a broker to perform services in any step of a purchase and sale transaction will save the client money (to the extent counsel undertakes such services, it is likely to be reflected in increased attorney fees and costs). Even so, buyers and sellers should never rely on brokers to do anything for which they lack essential knowledge, training and expertise; indeed, counsel who suggest a client look to a broker to perform services which the broker is not adept at handling could be inviting a malpractice claim.

a. [2:3] Seller's broker: Depending upon individual training and expertise, a seller's broker can perform a broad range of services:

• Ascertain the best time for putting the property up for sale.

• Conduct market studies (reviewing “comparable sales” in the locale, etc.) to determine an appropriate fair market value for the property.

• Determine an appropriate “asking” (or “listing”) price, from which the actual desired selling price can realistically be negotiated.

• Prepare a marketing strategy—i.e., where the property will be advertised for sale, how often it will be advertised, whether there will be “open houses” (typically, only for residential property), and precisely how and when the property will be shown to prospective buyers.

• Determine the seller's long-range goals (e.g., whether the sale needs to be structured with tax considerations in mind or to conform to the timing of the purchase of another piece of property, etc.).

• Catalog what is to be included in the purchase price (e.g., whether certain development permits or other entitlements should be transferred and, if so, at what value; whether certain built-in amenities or appliances are to be included, etc.).

• Advise and assist the seller in making necessary disclosures to the buyer.

• Assist in determining what work may need to be completed to put the property in compliance with law (or, alternatively, advise on the disclosure of such noncompliance to the buyer).

• Determine if the seller needs additional professional guidance—e.g., from accountants, attorneys, contractors, movers, etc.

• Prepare counteroffers, conduct negotiations on the seller's behalf and assist in getting a purchase contract signed.

• Identify and help resolve problems relating to the condition of title to the property.

• Assist in opening the escrow, procuring a title report, monitoring progress of the escrow, and completing the closing (e.g., making certain the escrow holder timely receives essential documents; verifying the buyer is in a position to close; and reviewing the escrow holder's closing statement).

• Coordinate and work with others involved in the transaction—including attorneys, accountants, escrow officers, title officers, etc.

• Prepare or procure various operating, financial and other information concerning the property which the buyer may need (e.g., a rent roll, operating statements, geological reports, surveys, plans and specifications, etc.).

b. [2:4] Buyer's broker: The range of potential services by a buyer's broker (again, depending on individual experience and expertise) is equally broad in scope:

• Assist in defining the buyer's needs—e.g., kind of property, price range and location.

• Select and show the buyer suitable property on the market.

• Advise the buyer regarding financing and assist in applying for same.

• In a commercial property matter, review financial and operating information about prospective properties.

• Assist in reviewing reports concerning the physical condition of the property (geological and building inspection reports, etc.).

• Direct the buyer to, and coordinate with, various experts … including, as appropriate, attorneys, appraisers, accountants, loan brokers, architects, space planners, contractors, etc.

• Prepare offers and counteroffers on the buyer's behalf and, ultimately, arrange for execution of the purchase contract.

• Assist in resolving title problems.

• Help determine a property's compliance with law (zoning ordinances, building codes, environmental regulations, etc.).

• Assist in the opening, monitoring and closing of escrow, including procuring and delivering necessary documents to the escrow holder and/or seller.

c. [2:5] Limitation—nonattorney brokers cannot practice law: As a general rule, only active licensees of the California State Bar are authorized to practice law in California. [Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 6125, 6126; see also CRPC 5.5(a)(2) (formerly CRPC 1-300)—lawyer admitted to practice in CA shall not "knowingly assist a person in the unauthorized practice of law in that jurisdiction"]

Although there are narrow exceptions under which out-of-state licensed attorneys may practice law in California to a limited extent, none of these exceptions authorize the "practice of law" by a nonattorney real estate broker. [See, e.g., CRC 9.40 (counsel pro hac vice), 9.45 (registered legal aid attorneys), 9.46 (registered in-house counsel), 9.47 (attorneys practicing law temporarily in California as part of litigation) & 9.48 (nonlitigating attorneys temporarily in California to provide legal services)] Thus, unless they are also duly-licensed by the California State Bar (or fall within a limited exception for certain out-of-state licensed attorneys), real estate brokers cannot perform functions amounting to the "practice of law" in this state.

Moreover, the unauthorized practice of law in California is a misdemeanor, punishable by fine and/or imprisonment. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 6126; see also CCP § 1029.8—treble damages liability for injury or damages suffered from unlicensed practice of law] And no compensation may be recovered for legal services amounting to the unauthorized practice of law in California. [See Birbrower, Montalbano, Condon & Frank, P.C. v. Sup.Ct. (ESQ Business Services, Inc.) (1998) 17 C4th 119, 127, 136, 70 CR2d 304, 308, 313-314; and further discussion at ¶ 1:65 ff.]

(1) [2:6] Activities constituting "practice of law"—giving legal advice re legal documents: The "practice of law" is not statutorily defined. But case law explains that it clearly includes the giving of legal advice in the preparation of legal instruments or contracts, as well as the drafting of legal instruments and contracts (whether or not in the course of litigation). [Birbrower, Montalbano, Condon & Frank, P.C. v. Sup.Ct. (ESQ Business Services, Inc.) (1998) 17 C4th 119, 127, 128, 70 CR2d 304, 308; see Baron v. City of Los Angeles (1970) 2 C3d 535, 542, 86 CR 673, 677; Estate of Condon (1998) 65 CA4th 1138, 1142-1143, 76 CR2d 922, 925]

Deciding when a nonattorney broker crosses the line into this "off limits" territory is not clear-cut. But in "close cases," courts have held that the "resolution of legal questions for another by advice and action is practicing law if difficult or doubtful legal questions are involved which, to safeguard the public, reasonably demand the application of a trained legal mind." [Baron v. City of Los Angeles, supra, 2 C3d at 543, 86 CR at 678 (internal quotes omitted)]

(a) [2:7] Preparing offers/counteroffers: Brokers customarily prepare offers and counteroffers for their clients … which, if accepted, constitute a legally binding purchase and sale contract (¶ 4:264 ff.). Nonetheless, pursuant to general case law guidelines, this activity does not amount to the "unauthorized practice of law" so long as the broker is performing a strictly clerical role of filling in nondiscretionary information on the form as directed by the client (buyer or seller). [See People v. Landlords Professional Services (1989) 215 CA3d 1599, 1605, 264 CR 548, 551; People v. Sipper (1943) 61 CA2d Supp. 844, 846-847, 142 P2d 960, 962 (disapproved on other grounds by Murgia v. Mun.Ct. (People) (1975) 15 C3d 286, 301, 124 CR 204, 214, fn. 11)]

On the other hand, any work on a buyer's or seller's behalf involving legal judgment must be performed by a licensed attorney (or at least under the attorney's supervision and direction). [People v. Sipper, supra, 61 CA2d Supp. at 846-847, 142 P2d at 962—broker engaged in "unauthorized practice of law" by determining for parties kind of legal document they should execute to secure loan]

(2) [2:8] Comment: As a practical matter, under the foregoing standards, almost every broker probably engages in the "unauthorized practice of law" to a certain extent. This is because brokers routinely assist their clients in everything from choosing the form of the purchase and sale agreement to selecting which provisions to leave in and which ones to delete or modify; typically, they also offer suggestions on the pros and cons of particular provisions (e.g., a liquidated damages clause). Nonetheless, no known reported authority has held these traditional broker functions "off limits" (but see People v. Sipper (1943) 61 CA2d Supp. 844, 846-847, 142 P2d 960, 962 (disapproved on other grounds by Murgia v. Mun.Ct. (People) (1975) 15 C3d 286, 301, 124 CR 204, 214, fn. 11, re broker advice concerning loan documents).

d. Considerations re using broker

(1) [2:10] Buyer's perspective: Generally, it makes little sense for buyers not to use the services of a broker.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(a) [2:11] Cost-savings concerns: From the buyer's perspective, cost concerns are usually irrelevant:

• Buyers rarely directly pay a real estate broker's commission (but see ¶ 2:327 ff.).

• Moreover, although the impact of a broker's commission will usually be reflected in a higher purchase price, the seller typically has already committed to pay a full commission to its broker … which will ultimately be shared with any buyer's broker. Thus, a buyer who foregoes the use of a broker will not thereby reduce the seller's brokerage commission costs nor, in turn, reduce the purchase price; rather, when there is no buyer's broker, the seller's broker simply takes the entire commission.

It follows that the only conceivable situation in which it might be cost effective to forego a buyer's broker is where the seller is proceeding without a broker (see ¶ 2:13), thereby eliminating commission costs from the transaction and (theoretically, at least) leaving greater room to negotiate a lower purchase price.

(b) [2:12] Market familiarity; negotiating skills concerns: Though not affecting the buyer's pocketbook, other concerns will militate in favor of buyers utilizing a real estate broker.

Notably, it can take time to find suitable property meeting the buyer's specifications and budget; particularly in large metropolitan areas, buyers may need a broker simply to get them pointed in the right direction (narrowing the prospective properties for consideration). Likewise, even after a suitable property (or properties) is identified, it takes time, effort and skill to negotiate a deal (preparing a suitable offer/counteroffer); brokers—who, by profession, are experts at doing this work—can perform an invaluable service for buyers.

(2) Seller's perspective

(a) [2:13] Cost-savings concerns: In theory, sellers who are schooled and experienced in matters performed by brokers (¶ 2:3 ff.) could forego the use of a broker and save themselves commission costs. But the cost-savings expediency of such a decision necessarily depends on whether a buyer's broker will be involved in the transaction: Brokers representing buyers are not likely to pursue a property on behalf of their clients without compensation.

(b) [2:14] Marketing and negotiating concerns: Notwithstanding the seller's expertise in property brokerage matters, a broker listing may be prudent from a pure marketing standpoint: Properties listed for sale through a broker get maximum exposure when they appear in a multiple listing service (which is received by all brokers in the community; see ¶ 2:371 ff.). Sellers who forego a broker rarely get this kind of marketing exposure.

Also, like buyers, sellers will often benefit from the well-honed negotiating skills of a seasoned broker.

e. [2:15] Choosing a broker: Counsel are frequently asked to recommend a broker or advise the client in selecting one.

(1) [2:16] Relevant considerations: Two fundamental qualities in a broker are essential:

• Knowledge of, and experience with, the kind of property to be bought or sold; and

• Knowledge of the relevant geographical area.

Secondarily, because brokers may be called upon to provide so many other services (¶ 2:3 ff.), it is also important to consider such things as the broker's:

• Negotiating skills;

• Competence in preparing offers and counteroffers;

• Experience in dealing with financing issues;

• Knowledge of construction; and

• Ability to understand and familiarity in dealing with such matters as a survey, appraisal, title report, geological study, architectural plans and specifications, etc.

(2) [2:17] Referral sources: Unlike many bar associations and other professional organizations that offer "referral services" to the public, very few broker organizations provide such a service. Therefore, locating a reputable broker is usually accomplished by making inquiries of colleagues and friends whose judgments are trusted. As stated, the key concern in finding a competent broker is to ascertain whether the broker has experience with similar property in the same geographic locale.

➪ [2:17.1] PRACTICE POINTER: In handling transactions for other clients, counsel may have had dealings with several brokers, and may have formed opinions (pro and con) on the brokers' competence. Nonetheless, counsel should be cautious in recommending brokers to clients:

Significantly, if the broker you recommend does a poor job, your client's view of your judgment will be diminished. Further, a client who concludes you recommended an "incompetent" broker might contend you have committed malpractice. Also, there may be potential ethical problems if the broker you recommend is a source of business for you (at a minimum, you would have to disclose that relationship to the client; see ¶ 1:70 ff.).

(3) [2:18] Selective assignment of broker tasks: Again, not all brokers have the knowledge and experience needed to competently perform the full range of potential brokerage services. Therefore, early in the transaction, counsel may need to assist in identifying which services the broker is competent (and legally permitted) to perform as opposed to those services the broker cannot (or should not) perform. As noted in greater detail in Ch. 4, counsel should be prepared in such cases to help allocate specific tasks among the brokers and various other parties involved in the transaction.

2. [2:20] Definitions: Real estate brokerage activities are highly regulated in California and subject to strict licensing requirements. Although there are certain specialty licenses, it is important to first understand the fundamental difference between a real estate "broker," a "salesperson" and a "finder."

[Ed. Note: In practice, the term "broker" is customarily used to refer not only to true real estate "brokers," but also to real estate sales agents (i.e., the "salesperson"). For convenience, this Practice Guide uses the term "broker" in the same "loose" sense: Except where specifically noted otherwise, reference to "broker" in this text generally means the licensed real estate broker or the particular sales agent involved in the transaction.]

a. [2:21] "Real estate broker": A "real estate broker" within the meaning of the state "broker" licensing laws is "a person who, for a compensation or in expectation of a compensation, regardless of the form or time of payment, does or negotiates to do one or more [certain statutorily specified] acts for another or others …" [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131 (emphasis added); Horning v. Shilberg (2005) 130 CA4th 197, 203, 29 CR3d 717, 723; see ¶ 2:22 ff. re statutorily specified acts]

In the hierarchy of various real estate brokerage licenses, a "broker's" license is the highest and most encompassing.

(1) [2:21.1] Acting on behalf of another: By definition (¶ 2:21), a person acts as a "broker" only if they are acting both (a) for compensation and (b) on behalf of someone else. Someone acting on their own behalf (i.e., as buyer or seller) in a real estate transaction is not a broker within the meaning of Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131 even though they are performing activities regulated by the broker licensing statutes. [Horning v. Shilberg (2005) 130 CA4th 197, 203, 29 CR3d 717, 723]

(2) [2:22] General activities requiring "broker" license: The general statutory definition of a "broker" (¶ 2:21) contemplates one who does, or negotiates to do (again, for compensation and on behalf of another), any of the following:

(a) [2:23] Purchase and sale transactions: "Sells or offers to sell, buys or offers to buy, solicits prospective sellers or buyers of, solicits or obtains listings of, or negotiates the purchase, sale, or exchange of real property or a business opportunity." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131(a); see also Salazar v. Interland, Inc. (2007) 152 CA4th 1031, 1036, 62 CR3d 24, 27]

(b) [2:24] Rental transactions: "Leases or rents or offers to lease or rent, or places for rent, or solicits listings of places for rent, or solicits for prospective tenants, or negotiates the sale, purchase, or exchanges of leases on real property, or on a business opportunity, or collects rents from real property, or improvements thereon, or from business opportunities." CR3d 899, 904—property management company needed broker's license to lease apartments and collect rents, but not for causing repairs to be made, decorating and general maintenance]

(c) [2:25] Government land purchase/lease transactions: "Assists or offers to assist in filing an application for the purchase or lease of, or in locating or entering upon, lands owned by the state or federal government." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131(c)]

(d) [2:26] Financing-related activities: "Solicits borrowers or lenders for or negotiates loans or collects payments or performs services for borrowers or lenders or note owners in connection with loans secured directly or collaterally by liens on real property or on a business opportunity." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131(d); see Smith v. Home Loan Funding, Inc. (2011) 192 CA4th 1331, 1335, 121 CR3d 857, 860 (broker acting as borrower's agent); Onofrio v. Rice (1997) 55 CA4th 413, 420, 64 CR2d 74, 77 (citing text)]

(Individuals who make certain specified loans from their "own funds" also are considered real estate brokers; see ¶ 2:30 ff.)

(e) [2:27] Real property sales contracts/secured notes: "Sells or offers to sell, buys or offers to buy, or exchanges or offers to exchange a real property sales contract, or a promissory note secured directly or collaterally by a lien on real property or on a business opportunity, and performs services for the holders thereof." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131(e)]

[2:28] Cross-refer—exemptions: Certain persons, though performing the activities described at ¶ 2:22 ff., are exempt from the broker license requirement. See ¶ 2:86 ff.

(3) [2:29] Additional "broker" activities: "Real estate brokers" under the California licensing law also include:

(a) [2:30] Loans and publicly-traded real property sales contracts/secured notes: Any "person who engages as a principal in the business of making loans or buying from, selling to, or exchanging with the public, real property sales contracts or promissory notes secured directly or collaterally by liens on real property, or who makes agreements with the public for the collection of payments or for the performance of services in connection with real property sales contracts or [such] promissory notes …" [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131.1(a) (emphasis added)]

1) [2:30.1] "In the business": A person who acquires for resale or sells to, or exchanges with, the public eight or more real property sales contracts or secured promissory notes is considered "in the business"—i.e., a real estate broker. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131.1(b)(1)(A), (B)]

Likewise, individuals who use their "own funds" in one calendar year to make eight or more secured residential loans to the public (i.e., loans on single condo/cooperative dwelling units or parcels containing only residential buildings of four units or less) are considered "in the business" and therefore real estate brokers. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131.1(b)(1)(C) & (b)(3)—"own funds" means cash, corporate capital or warehouse credit lines at commercial banks, S&Ls, etc., that are liability items, secured or otherwise, on individual's or their affiliate's financial statements]

2) [2:30.2] Residential mortgage loans: Brokers (and their salespeople) who are in the business of making, buying, etc., loans and publicly-traded real property sales contracts or secured promissory notes (¶ 2:30), and who make, arrange or service residential mortgage loans, are deemed "mortgage loan originators" and subject to specified statutory requirements. [See Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10166.01(b)(1) & 10166.02(a) (discussed further at ¶ 2:109.5 ff.)]

(b) [2:31] Advance fees: Any "person who engages in the business of claiming, demanding, charging, receiving, collecting or contracting for the collection of an advance fee in connection with any employment undertaken to promote the sale or lease of real property or of a business opportunity by advance fee listing, advertisement or other offering to sell, lease, exchange or rent property or a business opportunity, or to obtain a loan or loans thereon." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131.2]

1) [2:31.1] "Advance fee" defined: An "advance fee" within the meaning of the real estate licensing law is a fee, regardless of form, that is claimed, demanded, charged, received or collected by a licensee for services requiring a license, or for a listing, as defined, before the licensee fully completes the services they contracted to perform or represented would be performed. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10026(a)]

An "advance fee" does not include (i) "security" regulated by Civ.C. § 1950.5 (advance payment, deposit, etc. given by a tenant for a residential rental agreement); (ii) an applicant "screening fee" regulated by Civ.C. § 1950.6 (fee charged prospective residential tenants to investigate references and creditworthiness); (iii) a fee that is claimed, demanded, charged, received or collected for the purpose of advertising the sale, lease or exchange of real estate or a business opportunity in a newspaper, written publication or other electronic media, as specified; (iv) money earned for real estate services under a "limited service" contract, as defined, for stand-alone task-by-task services; and (v) the commission to be paid to a real estate broker by its principal after the underlying contract is fully performed (i.e., the broker-principal compensation contract does not represent an advance fee agreement). [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10026(b), (c)]

(c) [2:32] Real property securities transactions: Any "person who, for another or others, for compensation or in expectation of compensation, issues or sells, solicits prospective sellers or purchasers of, solicits or obtains listings of, or negotiates the purchase, sale, or exchange of securities as specified in Section 25206 of the Corporations Code." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131.3—exception for broker-dealers or agents of broker-dealers licensed by Commissioner of Financial Protection and Innovation under 1968 Corporate Securities Law]

The securities transactions contemplated are those "in any interest in any general or limited partnership, joint venture, unincorporated association, or similar organization (but not a corporation) owned beneficially by no more than 100 persons and formed for the sole purpose of, and engaged solely in, investment in or gain from an interest in real property, including, but not limited to, a sale, exchange, trade, or development." [See Corps.C. § 25206 (emphasis added)]

(d) [2:33] Mineral, oil and gas transactions: Persons engaging in a range of activities or transactions involving mineral, oil or gas property are also "real estate brokers" within the meaning of the licensing law. [See Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10131.4 & 10131.45; see also Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10500 & 10500.5 (either mineral, oil and gas broker license or real estate broker license suffices)]

(4) [2:34] Mobilehome/manufactured home sales: A person licensed as a real estate broker "may sell or offer to sell, buy or offer to buy, solicit prospective purchasers of, solicit or obtain listings of, or negotiate the purchase, sale, or exchange of any manufactured home or mobilehome," provided the manufactured home or mobilehome is registered under Health & Saf.C. § 18000 et seq. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131.6]

(5) [2:34.5] Prepaid rental listing services: Licensed real estate brokers may also conduct a "prepaid rental listing service" (supplying prospective tenants, in exchange for a fee, with listings of available residential rentals; see Bus. & Prof.C. § 10167(a)) under their broker's license. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10167 et seq.]

However, prepaid rental listing services may be provided at a real estate brokerage office only if business is conducted under the immediate supervision of the broker or of a real estate salesperson (¶ 2:35 ff.) licensed to, and acting on behalf of, the broker. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10167.3(b)]

b. [2:35] "Real estate salesperson": As distinguished from a "broker" (¶ 2:21), a "real estate salesperson" is statutorily defined as "a natural person licensed as a salesperson … who, for a compensation or in expectation of a compensation, is retained by a real estate broker to do one or more of the acts set forth in Sections 10131, 10131.1, 10131.2, 10131.3, 10131.4, and 10131.6" (i.e., acts for which a real estate broker's license is required, discussed at ¶ 2:22 ff.). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10016; see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 10018.01—"'Retained' means the relationship between a broker and a licensee who is either an independent contractor affiliated with, or an employee of, a broker to perform activities that require a license and are performed under a broker's supervision"]

Indeed, there must be a written agreement between the broker and salesperson that covers the "material aspects of the relationship." [10 CCR § 2726]

Thus, the critical distinction is that a salesperson operates under the authority of a licensed broker; while a salesperson does not hold a "broker's" license, they cannot operate independently of a broker's license (¶ 2:47). In other words, for purposes of administration of the Real Estate Law, a salesperson—whether an independent contractor or employee—is the employee and agent of a real estate broker. [See Grubb & Ellis Co. v. Spengler (1983) 143 CA3d 890, 895, 192 CR 637, 640 (decided under former law); Venturi & Co. LLC v. Pacific Malibu Develop. Corp. (2009) 172 CA4th 1417, 1424, 92 CR3d 123, 129—broker under whose authority salesperson may act must itself be party to real estate contract]

c. [2:37] "Finders": A "finder" (sometimes called a "middleman" or "intermediary") is a judicially-created term. Those who act strictly in the capacity of a finder (¶ 2:38 ff.) need not hold a broker's or salesperson's license. [Tyrone v. Kelley (1973) 9 C3d 1, 8, 106 CR 761, 765—so-called "finder's exception" to real estate licensing laws; GreenLake Capital, LLC v. Bingo Investments, LLC (2010) 185 CA4th 731, 736, 111 CR3d 82, 85]

(1) [2:38] "Introduces" parties; no role in negotiations: The fundamental distinction from a "broker" or "salesperson" is that a "finder" simply "introduces" the parties but does not negotiate terms or engage in any other transactional activity. A finder's employment "is limited to bringing the parties together so that they may negotiate their own contract, and the distinction between the finder and the broker frequently turns upon whether the intermediary has been invested with authority or duties beyond merely bringing the parties together, usually the authority to participate in negotiations." [Tyrone v. Kelley (1973) 9 C3d 1, 9, 106 CR 761, 766; Lindenstadt v. Staff Builders, Inc. (1997) 55 CA4th 882, 893, 64 CR2d 484, 490-491; Rees v. Department of Real Estate (1977) 76 CA3d 286, 295, 142 CR 789, 794-795]

"If the broker takes any part in the negotiations, no matter how slight, he is not a middleman [finder] but a broker." [Rees v. Department of Real Estate (1977) 76 CA3d 286, 295, 142 CR 789, 795; see Preach v. Monter Rainbow (1993) 12 CA4th 1441, 1452, 16 CR2d 320, 326—alleged "finder" continued to communicate with and advise parties in negotiations after introducing them, thus functioning as "broker"]

(a) [2:38.1] "Two-hat" finders in series of acquisitions: Whether an unlicensed person has acted as a mere finder or crossed the line into brokerage activities in a series of purchase and sale transactions on behalf of a particular party is not an "all or nothing" proposition. The finder's exception to the real estate licensing law applies on a transaction-by-transaction basis. [Lindenstadt v. Staff Builders, Inc. (1997) 55 CA4th 882, 894, 64 CR2d 484, 491; see ¶ 2:280.6]

(2) [2:39] No agency relationship or fiduciary duties: A secondary distinction is that a finder, unlike a broker/salesperson, has no agency relationship with, or fiduciary duty toward, any party to the transaction. (Real estate brokers and salespersons stand in a clear fiduciary relationship with their principals. See ¶ 2:123, 2:155 ff.)

(3) [2:40] Compare—statute of frauds applies: Although purely "finder" activities are exempt from the licensing laws, an agreement employing a licensed broker to act as finder, like an agreement employing a licensee to perform brokerage services, is subject to the statute of frauds (Civ.C. § 1624(a)(4)). See ¶ 2:303.

[2:41 - 2:45] Reserved.

3. Relationship Between Brokers and Salespersons

a. [2:46] Two major distinctions: In practice, the day-to-day activities of real estate brokers and salespersons (at least vis-à-vis the client) are virtually identical. Nonetheless, the two licenses are substantially different. Aside from the distinct licensing requirements (¶ 2:70 ff.), the chief differences are two-fold:

(1) [2:47] Salesperson operates under responsible broker's retention: A salesperson cannot engage in any activities requiring a real estate license unless licensed under the "responsible broker" who retained or is compensating that salesperson. [Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10016 & 10137; see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 10015.1 (defining "responsible broker")]

(2) [2:48] Broker supervision of salesperson activities: A licensed real estate broker must supervise the licensed acts of salespersons who the broker has retained (¶ 2:47). [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10010.5(a)(5) & (b) (explaining responsible broker's duty to supervise/oversee licensed acts of its salespersons, whether they are independent contractors or employees, and broker's liability for their "actions or negligence")]

Where the licensed broker is a corporation, its "designated officer/broker" (see ¶ 2:108) is personally responsible for such supervision. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10159.2; Holley v. Crank (9th Cir. 2005) 400 F3d 667, 671-672 (applying Calif. law)]

Brokers who fail to exercise reasonable supervision over their salespersons' brokerage activities are subject to disciplinary action (license suspension, revocation or delayed renewal). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177(h); Holley v. Crank, supra, 400 F3d at 673; Schaffter v. Creative Capital Leasing Group, LLC (2008) 166 CA4th 745, 757, 83 CR3d 19, 27; see also Sandler v. Sanchez (2012) 206 CA4th 1431, 1434, 142 CR3d 771, 773—designated officers who fail to reasonably supervise corporate employees in violation of § 10159.2 are subject to disciplinary action but not third-party liability]

(a) [2:48a] Scope: A broker is responsible for supervising a salesperson's compliance with state and federal laws. [Holley v. Crank (9th Cir. 2005) 400 F3d 667, 672-673; see also Milner v. Fox (1980) 102 CA3d 567, 575-576, 162 CR 584, 590; Norman v. Department of Real Estate (1979) 93 CA3d 768, 776-777, 155 CR 715, 720]

(b) [2:48.1] Licensed salesperson appointed to manage responsible broker's branch office: Responsible brokers (or corporate designated broker officers) may appoint a licensed salesperson to manage their branch office or a division of their real estate business and delegate to that manager responsibility for overseeing and supervising its day-to-day operations and activities, as statutorily specified. [Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10164, 10015.1 (defining "responsible broker") & 10015.2 (defining "manager")]

Appointing a manager, however, does not in any way limit the responsibilities of the responsible broker (or corporate designated broker officer) to supervise the salesperson (¶ 2:48). Moreover, the Commissioner may suspend or permanently revoke the appointed manager's license for failure to properly oversee and supervise operations. [See Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10164(b) & 10165]

b. [2:49] Salesperson as "employee" vs. "independent contractor"—limited effect of "independent contractor" status: As a practical matter, many broker-salesperson arrangements are structured as an "independent contractor" relationship (rather than as "employer-employee"). Such "independent contractor" arrangements are perfectly valid for purposes of defining the legal relationship between the broker and salesperson and their obligations to each other. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10032(b)]

On the other hand, brokers and salespersons cannot evade their statutory and regulatory obligations—including their obligations to the public—under the umbrella of a purported "independent contractor" agreement. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10032(a)]

(1) [2:50] Salespersons treated as broker "employees" vis-à-vis brokerage activities: For purposes of the Business and Professions Code and the California Code of Regulations regarding broker and salesperson obligations, a salesperson is deemed to be a broker's "employee" regardless of whether the written agreement between them creates an "independent contractor" or "employer and employee" relationship. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10032(a)]

(2) [2:51] Application: As a result, even though a broker and salesperson characterize their relationship as "independent contractor," the following consequences obtain:

(a) [2:52] Agency: A real estate salesperson is the broker's "agent" and, therefore, cannot truly be an "independent contractor." [Payne v. White House Properties, Inc. (1980) 112 CA3d 465, 471, 169 CR 373, 376; Gipson v. Davis Realty Co. (1963) 215 CA2d 190, 206, 30 CR 253, 262—salesperson is broker's agent "as a matter of law"]

(b) [2:53] Vicarious tort liability: Notwithstanding the salesperson's purported "independent contractor" status, the broker under whom they are acting remains vicariously liable (under doctrine of respondeat superior) for the salesperson's tortious acts within the course and scope of the licensing activities. [Gipson v. Davis Realty Co. (1963) 215 CA2d 190, 206-207, 30 CR 253, 262-263; see Meyer v. Holley (2003) 537 US 280, 285-286, 123 S.Ct. 824, 829]

"[R]eal estate salespersons cannot be classified as independent contractors for purposes of liability to third parties and … any provision in a contract which purports to change that relationship from that of an agent to independent contractor is invalid as being contrary to law for purposes of tort liability to third parties." [See Stats. 1991, Ch. 679, § 2 (uncodified statement of legislative intent) (emphasis added); and Gipson v. Davis Realty Co., supra, 215 CA2d at 207, 30 CR at 263]

1) [2:53.1] Individual officer/owner imputed liability under *corporate license: Under general (common law) principles of corporate liability, the corporation, not its individual officers or owners, is the principal or employer and thus subject to vicarious liability for its employees' torts. [Meyer v. Holley (2003) 537 US 280, 286, 123 S.Ct. 824, 829—Fair Housing Act does not change traditional vicarious liability principles so as to render corporate licensee's officer/owner liable for salesperson's discriminatory brokerage services in violation of FHA; see Sandler v. Sanchez (2012) 206 CA4th 1431, 1442-1443, 142 CR3d 771, 779]

Liability may be imputed to the corporation's designated officer/broker, however, if the officer and salesperson were in a true agency relationship (¶ 2:53.2); and, in exceptional circumstances, liability may be imputed to the corporation's individual owners on a corporate "veil-piercing" theory. [Meyer v. Holley, supra, 537 US at 291-292, 123 S.Ct. at 832; see Holley v. Crank (9th Cir. 2005) 400 F3d 667, 671-676 (remanded to consider whether corporate licensee's sole shareholder could be liable under veil-piercing theory for FHA violation)]

a) [2:53.2] Agency basis for vicarious liability: The corporate officer's/broker's right to control (supervise) the salesperson does not itself create the requisite agency. But a principal-agent relationship may arise from the officer's delegation of its duties under the real estate law to the salesperson; in turn, the officer may be vicariously liable for the salesperson's wrongdoing within the scope of that "delegated agency." [Holley v. Crank (9th Cir. 2005) 400 F3d 667, 671-674—corporate officer's/broker's delegation of supervisorial responsibility to employee salesperson created agency relationship, making officer vicariously liable for salesperson's discriminatory actions within scope of agency; but see also Sandler v. Sanchez (2012) 206 CA4th 1431, 1445, 142 CR3d 771, 782—"We need not decide whether we agree with the Ninth Circuit [in Holley v. Crank] that, by way of an express agreement or some other similar circumstance, a designated officer and real estate salesperson can ever create a principal-agent relationship"]

(c) [2:54] Other issues not involving brokerage licensing activities: A salesperson designated as an independent contractor may be treated as such for purposes other than administration of the real estate broker law—e.g., income tax wage withholding or workers' compensation claim coverage.

"Characterization of a relationship as either 'employer and employee' or 'independent contractor' for statutory purposes, including, but not limited to, withholding taxes on wages and for purposes of unemployment compensation, shall be governed by [Unemp.Ins.C. §§ 650 and 13000-13054]. For purposes of workers' compensation the characterization of the relationship shall be governed by [Lab.C. § 3200 et seq.]." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10032(b) (emphasis added); see generally, S.G. Borello & Sons, Inc. v. Department of Industrial Relations (1989) 48 C3d 341, 353-359, 256 CR 543, 550-554 (detailed discussion of "independent contractor" vs. "employee" status for workers' comp purposes)]

1. Regulatory Framework

a. [2:60] Governing law: All real property purchase and sale transactions included within the statutory definitions of "real estate broker" activities (¶ 2:21 ff.) are subject to licensing and other requirements under the laws of the State of California. Laws relating to real estate brokerage licensing requirements are principally set forth in the Business and Professions Code (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10130 et seq.) and the California Code of Regulations (Real Estate Commissioner Regulations, 10 CCR § 2700 et seq.).

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

b. [2:61] Department of Real Estate jurisdiction: The California Department of Real Estate (DRE), within the Business, Consumer Services, and Housing Agency (BCSH), is the state agency in charge of regulating real property brokerage matters. It maintains offices in Sacramento, San Francisco, Los Angeles and such other cities as are approved by the California Department of Finance. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10077]

(The DRE was formerly known as the Bureau of Real Estate. Wherever the term "Bureau of Real Estate" appears in Division 4 of the Business and Professions Code or any other law, it means the DRE; see Bus. & Prof.C. § 10005.)

(1) [2:62] Real Estate Commissioner: The DRE's chief officer is the Real Estate Commissioner (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10050), appointed by the Governor (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10051).

The Real Estate Commissioner has "full power to regulate and control the issuance and revocation, both temporary and permanent, of all [real estate] licenses …" [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10071]

[2:63] Reserved.

2. [2:64] Necessity for License: It is unlawful for anyone to "engage in the business of, act in the capacity of, advertise as, or assume to act" as a real estate broker or real estate salesperson in the State of California "without first obtaining a real estate license" from the DRE. Likewise, it is unlawful for anyone, including real estate licensees, to function as a mortgage loan originator (¶ 2:109.5 ff.) in California "without having obtained a license endorsement." [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10130 (emphasis added); see also MKB Mgmt., Inc. v. Melikian (2010) 184 CA4th 796, 804, 108 CR3d 899, 906; GreenLake Capital, LLC v. Bingo Investments, LLC (2010) 185 CA4th 731, 736, 111 CR3d 82, 85]

In addition, except for paying a commission to an out-of-state broker, it is unlawful for a licensed real estate broker to retain or compensate any person to perform acts requiring a real estate license if that person is not a licensed real estate broker or real estate salesperson licensed under the responsible broker who has retained or is compensating them. Also, except for paying a commission to an out-of-state broker, it is unlawful to retain or compensate any licensee engaged in any activity for which a mortgage loan originator license endorsement is required, if that licensee does not hold a mortgage loan originator license endorsement (¶ 2:109.6). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10137—license suspension or revocation penalty (¶ 2:115.20); see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 10509(a) (same re retention to perform mineral, oil and gas transactions requiring license)]

And, it is unlawful for any person (obligor, escrowholder or otherwise) to pay or deliver compensation for the performance of acts requiring a real estate license where the payee is not known to be licensed or does not present evidence of the payee's licensed status at the time the compensation is earned. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10138—$100 misdemeanor fine for each offense; see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 10509(b) (same re payment to person performing mineral, oil and gas transactions requiring license)]

Cross-refer: As earlier discussed, the range of brokerage activities requiring a real estate license is vast; see ¶ 2:21 ff.

➪ [2:65] PRACTICE POINTER: There are no exceptions to the Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131 licensing rule. Hence, an unlicensed person who conducts any activity in California for which a license is required (even an isolated act in a series of brokerage activities), in any one transaction, violates the law (Rench v. Harris (1947) 79 CA2d 125, 127, 179 P2d 341, 342) and suffers the consequential penalties (¶ 2:66 ff.).

a. [2:65.1] Application to out-of-state brokers: Out-of-state brokers are subject to the California licensing requirements if any regulated activity takes place in California. [See Consul Ltd. v. Solide Enterprises, Inc. (9th Cir. 1986) 802 F2d 1143, 1148-1149]

b. Consequences of acting without license

(1) [2:66] Compensation barred: A valid real estate license is a mandatory condition precedent to the collection of compensation for activities requiring a real estate broker or salesperson's license: No person acting in the capacity of a real estate broker or salesperson within California may bring or maintain any action in a California court to collect compensation for the performance of licensed acts without alleging and proving they were a duly licensed broker or salesperson at the time the alleged cause of action arose—i.e., when the activities were performed (¶ 2:279 ff.). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10136; Venturi & Co. LLC v. Pacific Malibu Develop. Corp. (2009) 172 CA4th 1417, 1421, 92 CR3d 123, 127—unlicensed finance company not entitled to compensation for portion of contractually-agreed upon activities related to real estate broker services; see also Salazar v. Interland, Inc. (2007) 152 CA4th 1031, 1033-1034, 62 CR3d 24, 25 (affirming summary judgment in favor of Internet service provider on unlicensed broker's contractual claim for commissions)]

Compare: Third-party nonbrokers who are assigned the rights to earned commissions may file suit thereon; see ¶ 2:280.15 ff.

(a) [2:67] Comment: The denial of compensation for what otherwise may have been the rendition of valuable services is itself an onerous penalty. Bus. & Prof.C. § 10136 effectively nullifies any contract for the payment of compensation to an unlicensed broker/salesperson. [Salazar v. Interland, Inc. (2007) 152 CA4th 1031, 1041, 62 CR3d 24, 31—statute prohibits compensating unlicensed broker regardless of how compensation is characterized]

Section 10136 also rules out any noncontractual basis for the unlicensed claimant's recovery of brokerage services compensation (e.g., a claim in quantum meruit or one based on defendant's waiver or estoppel).

(b) [2:67.1] Compare—compensation as "finder": Persons who act strictly as "finders" (intermediaries in bringing the parties together, ¶ 2:38) need not be licensed under the real estate law. Therefore, unlicensed persons may recover an agreed-upon finder's fee in transactions where they acted strictly in a finder's capacity. [Tyrone v. Kelley (1973) 9 C3d 1, 11-12, 106 CR 761, 768]

- [2:67.2] An unlicensed finance company was entitled to a contractually agreed-upon fee for finding potential financing sources. [Venturi & Co. LLC v. Pacific Malibu Develop. Corp. (2009) 172 CA4th 1417, 1421, 92 CR3d 123, 127]
- [2:67.3] An individual who may have acted as an unlicensed broker for some business opportunities was still entitled to compensation for those transactions in which he acted strictly as a finder. [See Lindenstadt v. Staff Builders, Inc. (1997) 55 CA4th 882, 893-894, 64 CR2d 484, 490-491; and ¶ 2:280 ff.]
- [2:67.4] An unlicensed company retained to assist a "bridge" lender in identifying and procuring a $150 million credit facility was not barred from recovering compensation for the portion of its services rendered as a "finder and facilitator." [GreenLake Capital, LLC v. Bingo Investments, LLC (2010) 185 CA4th 731, 739-742, 111 CR3d 82, 88-90 (discussed further at ¶ 2:280.12)]

(c) [2:67.5] Compare—compensation for severable nonbrokerage services: Similarly, the real estate licensing law does not preclude an unlicensed person from recovering compensation for any other severable services not requiring a broker's license even though the principal object of the agreement may have contemplated services requiring a license. [MKB Mgmt., Inc. v. Melikian (2010) 184 CA4th 796, 804-805, 108 CR3d 899, 906-907; GreenLake Capital, LLC v. Bingo Investments, LLC (2010) 185 CA4th 731, 739-740, 111 CR3d 82, 88] See discussion at ¶ 2:280.10 ff.

(2) [2:67.10] Citation: Unlicensed persons engaged in activities for which a real estate license or prepaid rental listing service license (¶ 2:34.5) is required may be issued a citation by the Commissioner that contains an order to correct the violation and/or assesses an administrative fine of up to $2,500. Failure to comply with the citation's terms or pay the assessed fine "shall" result in disciplinary action. [Bus & Prof.C. § 10080.9(a), (f)]

(3) [2:68] "Desist and refrain" orders: Activities in violation of the state licensing laws may be enjoined by DRE administrative action ("cease and desist" orders). In effect, the violator may be put out of the brokerage business until the requisite license is obtained. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10086; Rees v. Department of Real Estate (1977) 76 CA3d 286, 294-295, 142 CR 789, 794]

After the filing of a "desist and refrain" order, and upon a finding that action is warranted to protect and prevent "grievous harm" to the public, the Commissioner may publicly confirm the existence of an investigation into or proceeding regarding an unlicensed person's real estate activities as statutorily specified. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10088]

(4) [2:69] Fine/imprisonment: Moreover, acting as a real estate broker, salesperson or mortgage loan originator without a license or license endorsement (¶ 2:109.6), or simply advertising one's self as a real estate broker, salesperson or mortgage loan originator without being so licensed or having obtained a license endorsement, is a "public offense" punishable by a maximum $20,000 fine and/or up to six months' imprisonment (maximum $60,000 fine if the violation is by a corporation). [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10139]

(If a Real Estate Fraud Prosecution Trust Fund exists in the county where the person or corporation is convicted, any fine collected in excess of $10,000 from the convicted person (or in excess of $50,000 from the convicted corporation) must be deposited in that Fund. (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10139).)

c. [2:70] Requirements for broker's/salesperson's license: The issuance of a real estate broker's or salesperson's license is subject to the following conditions:

(1) [2:71] Brokers—experience and training: There are statutory threshold experience and training conditions to the issuance of an “original” real estate broker's license (as opposed to renewal of the license). The requisite experience and training depends upon whether the applicant previously held a real estate salesperson's license. [See Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10150.6 & 10153; Salazar v. Interland, Inc. (2007) 152 CA4th 1031, 1036, 62 CR3d 24, 27—purpose of licensing requirements is to protect public from incompetent or untrustworthy practitioners]

(2) [2:72] Proof of character: The Real Estate Commissioner “may” require proof concerning the applicant's “honesty and truthfulness,” and may call a hearing for that purpose. Additionally, every applicant for an original license must be fingerprinted. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10152(a) (corporate applicant to provide character proof for its officers, directors or persons owning 10% or more of stock)]

(3) [2:73] Written examination: Broker and salesperson applicants must pass a written examination (testing knowledge of English language and mathematical skills; and understanding of relevant real estate principles of law, principal-agent obligations, canons of business ethics, and DRE regulations). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10153; see also Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10150, 10151, 10153.3, 10153.4, 10210 & 10213.5 (re applications for license examination and fees)]

Application for the exam may be made contemporaneously with an application for a broker or salesperson license, but a license may not be issued until the applicant passes the requisite exam. [Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10150(b), 10151(b)] And if the applicant fails to pass the exam within two years of filing the license application, the license application “shall lapse and no further proceedings thereon shall be taken.” [Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10210(b), 10215(b)]

(a) [2:73.1] Penalty for cheating, subverting or attempting to subvert examination: “No person shall cheat on, subvert, or attempt to subvert a licensing examination.” The Commissioner may bar “any candidate” who willfully engages in such conduct from taking any license examination and from holding an active real estate license for up to three years. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10153.01]

(4) Education

(a) [2:74] Prerequisite to written examination: Eligibility to take the written examination for a real estate broker's or salesperson's license (¶ 2:70 ff.) is conditioned on satisfaction of specified educational requirements:

1) [2:74.1] For broker's license: The requirements for taking the broker's license exam are set forth in Bus. & Prof.C. § 10153.2(a).

2) [2:74.2] For salesperson's license: The requirements for taking the salesperson's license exam are set forth in Bus. & Prof.C. § 10151(c)(2).

3) [2:74.3] Waiver for State Bar members: These requirements are waived for members of the California State Bar. [See Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10151(d), 10153.2(b)]

[2:75] Reserved.

(b) [2:76] Continuing education for license renewal: As a condition for renewal of a broker's or salesperson's license, applicants must have successfully completed a minimum “45 clock hours” of approved continuing education in the four-year period preceding the renewal application, including minimum hours in specified subjects. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10170.5(a)-(b)—brokers must, as part of their “45 clock hours,” successfully complete 3-hour course in office management and supervision of licensed activities, as statutorily specified; see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 10170.4 & 10 CCR § 3005 et seq.]

“Successful completion” of any of the specified courses means passing a final examination. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10170.5(d)]

(5) [2:77] Compare—restricted license: The Commissioner has discretion to issue a “restricted license” to certain applicants not meeting all of the conditions set forth at ¶ 2:70 ff. (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10156.5). See ¶ 2:83.

(6) [2:77.1] Military applicants; expedited process: If an individual applying for licensure is, or previously was, a member of the United States Armed Forces, as defined, the Commissioner must expedite and assist the initial licensure process, provided the applicant supplies satisfactory evidence to the DRE that they served as an active duty member and were honorably discharged. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10151.2(c)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

In addition, the Commissioner must expedite the licensure process for an applicant who (i) supplies satisfactory evidence that they are married to, or in a domestic partnership or other legal union with, an active duty member of the Armed Forces assigned to a duty station in California, and (ii) holds a current license in another state, district, or U.S. territory in the profession/vocation for which the applicant is seeking a California license. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10151.2(d)]

d. [2:78] Term of license: A real estate broker's or salesperson's license is valid for a four-year term (and hence must be renewed every four years). [Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10153.6 (broker's license) & 10153.7 (salesperson's license); see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 10170 et seq. (continuing education prerequisites to license renewal)]

(1) [2:79] "Military licensees": Real estate licensees entering active military service (or in training/education preliminary thereto) who notify the Commissioner within six months of such entry are not required to renew their licenses or license endorsements (¶ 2:109.6) until (a) the beginning of the license or license endorsement period first commencing after they return to the real estate business; or (b) one year following termination of their military service, whichever is earlier. [See Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10460 & 10461]

For license renewal purposes, only the following qualify as military personnel: members of the U.S. Army, Navy, Air Force, Marine Corps, Merchant Marine in time of war, Coast Guard, National Guard and all Army/Naval officers of the Public Health Services. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10460(b)]

e. [2:83] Restricted license: The Real Estate Commissioner "may" (in the Commissioner's discretion) issue a "restricted license" to (1) a broker or salesperson whose license could be suspended or revoked for a violation of the licensing laws, or (2) applicants who have satisfied the examination and experience requirements but who have not met all other requirements for the license "where such failure would justify the denial of the license applied for." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10156.5]

(1) [2:84] Authorized restrictions: Such a license may be restricted as follows (in the Commissioner's discretion):

• By term;

• If a salesperson, to employment by a particular real estate broker;

• By "conditions to be observed in the exercise of the privileges granted"; and/or

• If a salesperson licensee or applicant has not complied with Bus. & Prof.C. § 10153.4 (regarding education) within 18 months after issuance of the license. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10156.6]

(2) [2:85] Bond; revocable "privilege": The Commissioner may require the filing of surety bonds as a condition to issuance of a restricted license. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10156.8] Further, a restricted license is a pure "privilege" (no "property rights" therein) and may be suspended or revoked in the Commissioner's sole discretion. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10156.7 (no absolute right to renewal)]

(3) [2:85.1] Monitoring costs; restitution: The Commissioner also may require the restricted licensee to pay the costs associated with monitoring the licensee's licensed activities and, if applicable, pay restitution to any person damaged by the licensee's prior misconduct. The restrictions may not be removed, nor may an unrestricted license be reinstated, if the licensee fails to pay all costs ordered. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10186]

f. Exemptions from licensing requirements

(1) [2:86] General exemptions—brokerage activities performed by specified persons for specified purposes: By statute, certain persons are authorized to perform activities normally requiring a real estate broker's license even though lacking a valid broker's license. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133]

(a) [2:87] Which persons: Brokerage activities described in Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131 (¶ 2:22 ff.) "are not acts for which a real estate license is required if performed by" (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133(a)):

1) [2:88] Corporate/partnership officers for corporate/partnership purpose: A "regular" officer of a corporation or general partner of a partnership in connection with real property owned or leased by the corporation or partnership or the proposed purchase or leasing of real property by the corporation or partnership … provided the activities are not performed in expectation of "special compensation." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133(a)(1); Broffman v. Newman (1989) 213 CA3d 252, 261, 261 CR 532, 538-539]

2) [2:89] Holder of power of attorney: A person holding a duly executed power of attorney from the property owner with respect to the acts performed. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133(a)(2)]

a) [2:90] Isolated transactions only: The power of attorney exemption, like all of the Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133 exemptions, may not be used as a subterfuge to evade the licensing law (¶ 2:94). Thus, the exemption applies only where "personal necessity" compels a property owner to empower another to consummate a particular or isolated brokerage transaction; it does not excuse licensing to conduct brokerage activities on an ongoing basis. [See Sheetz v. Edmonds (Lein) (1988) 201 CA3d 1432, 1435-1436, 247 CR 776, 778—personal friend managing over 23 properties for compensation under owners' power of attorney not exempt from broker licensing requirements (cease and desist order issued)]

3) [2:91] Attorney at law: An attorney at law rendering legal services to a client. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133(a)(3); see Queen of Angels Hosp. v. Younger (1977) 66 CA3d 359, 375, 136 CR 36, 45—attorney negotiating lease of hospital properties for hospital client (immaterial that attorney also member of hospital's board of directors); 88 Ops.Cal.Atty.Gen. 203 (2005); but see also Del Mar v. Caspe (1990) 222 CA3d 1316, 1333, 272 CR 446, 456—attorney exemption from broker license requirement does not qualify lawyers lacking broker's license for real estate broker exemption from usury law (Cal.Const. Art. XV; Civ.C. § 1916.1)]

4) [2:92] Receivers, bankruptcy trustees, etc.: A receiver, trustee in bankruptcy "or other person acting under order of a court of competent jurisdiction." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133(a)(4)]

5) [2:93] Trustee under deed of trust: A trustee for the beneficiary of a deed of trust when selling under authority of that deed of trust. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133(a)(5)]

(b) [2:94] Limitation—not to evade licensing laws: The Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133 exemptions (¶ 2:86 ff.) are narrowly construed. They do not apply to a person who uses or attempts to use the exemptions "for the purpose of evading" the license laws. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133 (b); see, e.g., Sheetz v. Edmonds (Lein) (1988) 201 CA3d 1432, 1435-1436, 247 CR 776, 778; and ¶ 2:90]

(2) [2:95] Other exemptions: Other Code provisions delineate more limited exemptions for certain persons performing specified brokerage activities:

(a) [2:96] Clerical exemption: The license requirements do not apply to stenographers, bookkeepers, receptionists, telephone operators or other clerical help "in carrying out their functions as such" (i.e., clerical functions only). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133.2; see Grand v. Griesinger (1958) 160 CA2d 397, 409, 325 P2d 475, 483—exemption inapplicable to activities not purely clerical and routine (interviewing, filling out registration cards and accepting registration fees)]

(b) [2:97] Rental activities by property managers, etc.: Rental/leasing activities normally requiring a real estate license (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131(b); ¶ 2:24) may be performed by:

1) [2:97.1] Property managers: Unlicensed managers of hotels, motels, auto and trailer parks and resident managers of apartment buildings (or their employees). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131.01(a)(1)]

2) [2:97.2] Agents handling reservations or payments: An unlicensed person or entity, including persons employed by a real estate broker, who, on behalf of others, solicits or arranges, or accepts reservations and/or money for transient occupancies (described in Civ.C. § 1940(b)(1), (2)) in a dwelling unit in a common interest development (as defined in Civ.C. § 4100), in a dwelling unit in an apartment building, or in a single-family home. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131.01(a)(2)]

3) [2:97.3] Employees of apartment property management firms: An unlicensed person, other than the resident manager or manager's employees, who is the employee of the property management firm retained to manage a residential apartment building and who is performing under the supervision and control of a broker of record who is an employee of that property management firm or a salesperson licensed to the broker "who meets certain minimum requirements as specified in a regulation issued by the commissioner." This exemption is limited to the following activities:

— showing rental units and common areas to prospective tenants;

— providing or accepting preprinted rental applications, or responding to inquiries from prospective tenants concerning completion of the application;

— accepting deposits or fees for credit checks or administrative costs and accepting security deposits and rents;

— providing information about rental rates and other terms and provisions of a lease or rental agreement, as set out in a schedule provided by an employer; and

— accepting signed leases and rental agreements from prospective tenants. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131.01(a)(3)(A)-(E)] In any event, a licensed broker or salesperson must exercise "reasonable supervision and control" over unlicensed persons acting under the Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131.01(a)(3) exemption. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131.01(b); see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131.01(c)—broker employing such unlicensed persons must comply with Bus. & Prof.C. § 10163 (broker's branch office licenses) for each building where the person is employed]

(c) [2:98] Real estate securities broker/dealers—sale, lease or exchange of "business opportunities": A person licensed as a securities broker or dealer (or any employee, officer or agent of such securities broker/dealer) need not have a real estate license to engage in transactions involving the "sale, lease or exchange of a business opportunity." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10008.5]

But the exemption does not apply to activities described in Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10131 or 10131.2 (¶ 2:22 ff., 2:31) "if the substance of the transaction is to transfer, sell, lease, or exchange an interest in real property for the purpose of evading" the real estate licensing laws. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10008.5]

(d) [2:99] Mortgage loan exemption: Mortgage loan transactions covered by the real estate licensing law (¶ 2:26, 2:27, 2:30) may be performed by a broad range of persons/associations lacking a real estate license including (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133.1):

These persons and associations include:

1) [2:100] Financial institutions: Persons or their employees doing business under any state or federal law relating to banks, trust companies, savings and loan associations, industrial loan companies, pension trusts, credit unions or insurance companies. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133.1(a)(1)]

2) [2:101] Attorneys: Attorneys licensed to practice in California, not actively and principally engaged in the business of negotiating loans secured by real property, when rendering legal services and when the attorney's disbursements, whether paid by the borrower or other person, are not charges or costs and expenses regulated by or subject to Bus. & Prof.C. § 10240 et seq. (re broker's loan statement to borrower), provided the fees and disbursements "are not shared, directly or indirectly, with the person negotiating the loan or the lender." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133.1(a)(5)]

3) [2:102] Licensed securities broker/dealers: Any licensed securities broker/dealer (or the broker's/dealer's agents, officers or employees) if acting within the scope of authority granted by the license in connection with a transaction involving the offer, sale, purchase or exchange of a security representing an ownership interest in a pool of promissory notes secured directly or indirectly by liens on real property, "which transaction is subject to any law of this state or the United States regulating the offer or sale of securities." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133.1(a)(9); see Venturi & Co. LLC v. Pacific Malibu Develop. Corp. (2009) 172 CA4th 1417, 1424, 92 CR3d 123, 129—no exemption for finance company's managing principal notwithstanding fact he passed certain securities-related tests (no evidence tests meant he was licensed securities broker/dealer or that subject transaction involved promissory note pool)]

4) [2:102.1] Federally-approved organizations providing no-cost loan modification counseling: Organizations (and their employees) approved by the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development to provide no-cost counseling services in connection with residential mortgage loan modifications. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133.1(a)(11)]

5) [2:102.2] PACE program administrators, solicitors and solicitor agents: Any person licensed as a PACE program administrator when acting under the authority of that license, as well as (i) PACE solicitors enrolled by a licensed program administrator and acting pursuant to an agreement with that administrator, and (ii) PACE solicitor agents enrolled by a licensed program administrator and acting pursuant to an agreement between a PACE solicitor and that administrator. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133.1(a)(12), (13), (14)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

6) [2:103] Other licensees: Any person licensed as a finance lender, or a residential mortgage lender or servicer, when acting under the authority of that license. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133.1(a)(6) & (10)]

7) [2:103.1] Broker employees assisting broker: In addition, financing activities ordinarily requiring a broker's license under Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131(d) (¶ 2:26) may be performed by a real estate broker's unlicensed employees who are simply assisting the broker in meeting the broker's obligations to its customers in residential mortgage loan transactions, where the lender is an institutional lender, provided those employees do not participate in negotiations between the principals. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133.1(c)(1)]

Brokers must, however, exercise "reasonable supervision and control" over the nonlicensed employees' activities, and are subject to professional discipline (¶ 2:112 ff.) for the misconduct of nonlicensed employees acting under this exemption. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133.1(c)(2)—brokers also must comply with Bus. & Prof.C. § 10163 (broker's branch office licenses) for each location employing nonlicensed persons]

[2:103.2 - 2:103.4] Reserved.

8) [2:103.5] Miscellaneous persons and associations: Associations lending money for food and agricultural purposes on a cooperative nonprofit basis, cemetery authorities, authorized agents of savings institutions, and various other persons and associations also are covered by the Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133.1 mortgage loan exemption. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133.1(a)(2), (3), (4), (7), (8) & (b)]

(e) [2:104] Certain mineral, oil or gas property transactions: Several activities with respect to mineral, oil or gas property may be performed without a license (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133.35):

• Acting as a depository under an oil/gas lease other than for purposes of a sale (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133.35(a));

• Engaging in a transaction subject to court order (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133.35(b));

• Engaging in the business of drilling for or producing oil or gas or mining for or producing minerals (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133.35(c));

• Negotiating leases or agreements between an owner of mineral, oil or gas lands, leases or mineral rights, and a person organized for or engaging in oil or gas or mineral or metal production; or entering into leases or agreements with an owner of mineral, oil or gas lands, leases, or mineral rights on behalf of a person (disclosed or undisclosed) organized for or engaging in oil or gas or mineral or metal production (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133.35(d)); and

• Dealing with mineral rights or land, other than oil or gas rights or land, as the owner thereof (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133.35(e)).

(f) [2:105] Miscellaneous activities: Some exemptions relate solely to brokerage services performed in specialty industries, not typically encountered in ordinary purchase and sales transactions. [See, e.g., Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133.3 (radio, television or cable enterprise brokering); Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133.4 (certain film location representative activities)]

g. [2:106] Licensed activities by partnerships and corporations: Brokers may, under California law, conduct their brokerage services through a corporation or partnership and/or under a fictitious name:

(1) [2:107] Partnerships: A partnership entity cannot obtain a real estate license in the partnership name. However, partnerships may perform actions for which a broker's license is required provided every partner through whom the partnership so acts is a licensed real estate broker. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10137.1; see 88 Ops.Cal.Atty.Gen. 203 (2005)]

(2) [2:108] Corporations: In contrast, a real estate license may be issued to a corporation. But the entity may operate as a corporate real estate broker only through and because of a designated officer's license. If there is no licensed officer, no licensed activities may be performed for or in the name of the corporation. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10211; 10 CCR § 2740; see Meyer v. Holley (2003) 537 US 280, 283, 123 S.Ct. 824, 827; Holley v. Crank (9th Cir. 2005) 400 F3d 667, 671; Amvest Mortg. Corp. v. Antt (1997) 58 CA4th 1239, 1243, 68 CR2d 457, 459 & fn. 4]

Only the designated officer may conduct licensed activities on the corporation's behalf. Other officers may act under its license only if the corporation procures additional licenses to retain each additional officer (unless the designated broker-officer dies or is incapacitated, in which case the corporation may operate as a licensee without interruption under its existing license, as statutorily prescribed). [See Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10158 & 10211; see also Creative Ventures, LLC v. Jim Ward & Assocs. (2011) 195 CA4th 1430, 1442, 126 CR3d 564, 573—mortgage lender and loan processing corporation with no "designated officer's license" could not qualify for Civ.C. § 1916.1 usury exemption even though its primary officer/director was personally licensed; compare Bock v. California Capital Loans, Inc. (2013) 216 CA4th 264, 268, 156 CR3d 874, 876—"arranging" broker's wholly owned corporation qualified for Civ.C. § 1916.1 usury exemption (discussed further at ¶ 6:293 ff.)]

(a) [2:108.1] No individual broker authority under corporate license: Corporate officers acting under a corporation's real estate license (rather than an individual broker's license) are authorized to conduct brokerage activities only "for and on behalf of the corporation as an officer" (not in an individual capacity). This does not, however, preclude a designated corporate officer who has a separate individual license from conducting licensed activity for another entity so long as that entity is clearly disclosed and apparent to any member of the public using the officer's services outside the corporation. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10159 (emphasis added)—corporations wishing to act as real estate brokers must be licensed by DRE through qualified broker-officers, as statutorily prescribed; see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 10159.2 (responsibilities of designated officer under corporate license); Sandler v. Sanchez (2012) 206 CA4th 1431, 1434, 142 CR3d 771, 773—designated officer's statutory responsibilities include supervising and controlling activities conducted on corporation's behalf by its officers and employees (¶ 2:48)]

(3) [2:109] Fictitious business name: Brokers (whether individuals or entities) and their salespersons, as statutorily specified, may operate under a fictitious business name by filing with the license application a certified copy of a fictitious business name statement filed with the county clerk pursuant to Bus. & Prof.C. § 17900 et seq. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10159.5(a); see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 10159.7 (defining "fictitious business name" and related content)]

h. [2:109.5] Licensees acting as residential "mortgage loan originators": Real estate licensees are "mortgage loan originators" with respect to activities involving residential mortgage loans if they, pursuant to Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131(d), solicit borrowers or lenders, negotiate loans, collect payments, or perform services for borrowers or lenders relative to loans secured by real property. As such, they are subject to additional statutory requirements (¶ 2:109.5 ff.). [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10166.01 et seq.]

(1) [2:109.6] Special license endorsement: A real estate broker (as well as any salesperson under the broker's supervision) may not act as a mortgage loan originator without first obtaining and maintaining a real estate license endorsement to act as a mortgage loan originator. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10166.02(b), (c)—endorsement valid for one year, expiring every 12/31; see also Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10150(d) & 10151(e) re endorsement applications]

(2) [2:109.7] DRE notification: A real estate broker (and any salesperson under the broker's supervision) who engages in financing-related activities; or who sells, buys, exchanges or offers to sell, buy or exchange real property sales contracts and/or secured notes; or who is in the business of making loans or publicly-traded real property sales contracts or secured loans; and who makes, arranges or services loans secured by residential real property, must so notify the DRE in writing by 1/31/10, or within 30 days of commencing that activity, whichever is later. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10166.02(a)]

(3) [2:109.8] Consequences of failure to notify DRE or obtain license endorsement: A real estate broker or salesperson acting as a mortgage loan originator who fails to so notify the DRE or obtain the requisite license endorsement (¶ 2:109.6) "shall be" assessed statutorily-prescribed monetary penalties; and the Commissioner may suspend or revoke the broker's or salesperson's license for failure to pay the penalties. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10166.02(f), (g)]

(4) [2:109.9] Background information; educational requirements; written examination: Applicants for a mortgage loan originator license endorsement must furnish the Nationwide Multistate Licensing System and Registry with prescribed information concerning their identity (e.g., fingerprints, personal history, experience, etc.). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10166.04; see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 10166.17 (Commissioner's authority to establish requirements for furnishing identity information)]

Applicants also must complete at least 20 hours of education courses, as specified, and pass a qualified written test. Once endorsed, they must complete annually at least eight hours of continuing education requirements. [See Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10166.06 & 10166.10]

(5) [2:109.10] Business activity reports; condition reports; special reports: A real estate broker who engages in financing-related activities; sells, buys, exchanges or offers to sell, buy or exchange real property sales contracts and/or secured notes; or who is in the business of making loans or publicly-traded real property sales contracts or secured loans; and who makes, arranges or services one or more loans in a calendar year that are secured by residential real property, must file annually a specified business activities report. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10166.07] The broker also must make any special reports the Commissioner may require. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10166.13]

In addition, mortgage loan originators must submit "reports of condition" to the Nationwide Multistate Licensing System and Registry. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10166.08]

(6) [2:109.11] Documents and records; examination of licensee's affairs: A real estate broker who engages in financing-related activities; sells, buys, exchanges or offers to sell, buy or exchange real property sales contracts and/or secured notes; or who is in the business of making loans or publicly-traded real property sales contracts or secured loans; and who makes, arranges or services loans secured by residential real property, must keep documents and records that will properly enable the Commissioner to determine whether the residential mortgage brokerage, servicing and lending functions performed by the broker comply with all applicable statutes, rules and orders made by the Commissioner. As often as the Commissioner deems necessary and appropriate, the Commissioner will examine the affairs of each such real estate broker. [See Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10166.11(a), 10166.12(a)]

The Commissioner may impose a penalty against a real estate broker or salesperson based on the findings of the above examination, and may suspend or revoke the license or license endorsement of a broker/salesperson who fails to pay the penalty. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10166.12(b)]

(7) [2:109.12] Use and disclosure of unique identifier in advertisements/solicitations: Recipients of a mortgage loan originator license endorsement are required to use or disclose in advertisements and solicitations a "unique identifier" provided by the Nationwide Multistate Licensing System and Registry. [See Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10140.6(b)(1), 10166.01(e), 10166.03(c)]

(8) [2:109.13] Denial, suspension, revocation, etc., of license endorsement: In addition to any other authorized penalties, the Commissioner may, after notice and opportunity for hearing, deny, suspend, revoke, restrict, condition or decline to renew a mortgage loan originator license endorsement if the applicant/holder (a) fails to meet various rules and/or regulatory/statutory requirements (e.g., fails to satisfy annual continuing education requirements or has a felony conviction involving fraud, dishonesty, breach of trust or money laundering); or (b) withholds information or makes a material misstatement in an application for a license endorsement/license endorsement renewal. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10166.051(a), (b); see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 10166.05(b)(1) (prohibiting issuance of mortgage loan originator license endorsement if, among other things, applicant convicted of felony during 7-year period preceding application date)]

In addition, the Commissioner may, among other things, issue orders/directives instructing license endorsement holders to desist and refrain from conducting business and/or cease engaging in harmful activities. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10166.051(c)]

(a) [2:109.14] Expunged or pardoned felony conviction: An expunged or pardoned felony conviction does not require denial of a license endorsement. However, the Commissioner may consider "the underlying crime, facts, or circumstances" when deciding whether to issue a license endorsement. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10166.05(b)(2)]

i. [2:109.15] Licensees engaging in escrow activities: Real estate brokers exempt from the Escrow Law who engage in escrow activities for five or more transactions in a calendar year, or whose escrow activities equal or exceed $1,000,000 in a calendar year, must file a specified report with the DRE within 60 days following completion of the calendar year. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10141.6(a)]

Brokers who fail to provide the above report are subject to statutory penalties and their licenses may be suspended or revoked for failure to pay those penalties. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10141.6(c), (d)]

3. [2:110] Licensing of Real Estate Appraisers: Any person engaging in "federally related real estate appraisal activity" must be licensed pursuant to the California Real Estate Appraisers' Licensing and Certification Law (Bus. & Prof.C. § 11300 et seq.). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 11320—willful violation of licensing requirement punishable by imprisonment and/or maximum $10,000 fine]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

For purposes of the appraisers' license requirement, a "federally related real estate appraisal activity" means "the act or process of making or performing an appraisal on real estate or real property in a federally related transaction and preparing an appraisal as a result of that activity." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 11302(s)]

A "federally related transaction" is "any real estate-related financial transaction that a federal financial institution[']s regulatory agency engages in, contracts for or regulates and that requires the services of a state licensed real estate appraiser regulated by [Bus. & Prof.C. § 11300 et seq.]." It also includes "any transaction identified as such by a federal financial institution's regulatory agency." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 11302(t)]

Cross-refer: The California real estate appraiser licensing law is discussed in greater detail at ¶ 6:690 ff. in connection with real estate appraisals.

4. [2:112] Disciplinary Matters: Standards of conduct for brokers and salespersons, and grounds for professional discipline against real estate licensees, are set forth in the Business and Professions Code and the California Code of Regulations. Additionally, internal codes of ethics have been promulgated by the California Association of Realtors, the National Association of Realtors and other broker professional organizations (which also provide for private broker dispute and disciplinary procedures).

a. [2:113] Department of Real Estate disciplinary action: The California DRE (through the Commissioner) has the authority to discipline licensees for violation of the licensing laws—including the power to suspend or revoke real estate licenses or levy monetary penalties. [See Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10071, 10080.9, 10137, 10175, 10175.2]

Investigation of and disciplinary action against licensees may be initiated at the Commissioner's behest and must be initiated upon receipt of a verified complaint filed by any member of the public. Indeed, protecting the public is the DRE's "highest priority" in exercising its licensing, regulatory and disciplinary functions. [See Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10050.1 & 10176 et seq.; see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 10088 (authorizing public disclosure of certain investigations/proceedings)]

However, a noticed hearing with opportunity to respond to the charges must be held before a license or license endorsement (¶ 2:109.6) may be suspended or revoked. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10100(a)] (The procedure that must be followed by the DRE when a license/license endorsement application is denied is set forth at Bus. & Prof.C. § 485 et seq.; see ¶ 2:118.)

(1) [2:113.1] "Internet" information: The DRE is responsible for publishing on the Internet information regarding the status of every license issued, including any accusations, suspensions or license revocations relative to persons or businesses subject to licensure or regulation (see www.dre.ca.gov). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10083.2]

Licensees may petition to remove disciplinary items that have been posted on the DRE's internet website for no less than 10 years and for which the licensees provide evidence of rehabilitation as statutorily prescribed. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10083.2(c); see also Skulason v. California Bureau of Real Estate (2017) 14 CA5th 562, 570, 223 CR3d 7, 12-13—neither labor statute nor licensee's privacy right imposed duty on DRE to remove from its website public information regarding said licensee's three dismissed misdemeanor convictions (¶ 2:115.3a)]

b. Statutory grounds for discipline

(1) [2:114] Improper acts in performance of licensed activities (Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10176 & 10177.3): Salespersons or brokers are subject to discipline for doing any of the following while performing brokerage activities:

- Making any "substantial misrepresentation" (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10176(a); Warren v. Merrill (2006) 143 CA4th 96, 109, 49 CR3d 122, 131, fn. 5);
- Making any "false promises of a character likely to influence, persuade, or induce" (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10176(b); Warren v. Merrill, supra);
- Engaging in a "continued and flagrant course of misrepresentation" or making "false promises through licensees" (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10176(c));

• "Acting for more than one party in a transaction without the knowledge or consent of all parties" to the transaction (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10176(d); see ¶ 2:139 ff. on "dual agency" disclosure requirements);

• Commingling their own money or property with the property of others received and held by the licensee (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10176(e));

• "Claiming, demanding, or receiving" compensation under any exclusive agreement where the agreement does not contain a "definite, specified date of final and complete termination" (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10176(f); see ¶ 2:379);

• Claiming or taking "any secret or undisclosed amount of compensation" or failing to reveal to the buyer/seller contracting with the licensee the full amount of compensation under any agreement authorizing or employing the licensee to engage in activities requiring a license prior to or coincident with the signing of the agreement (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10176(g); Roberts v. Lomanto (2003) 112 CA4th 1553, 1563, 5 CR3d 866, 874; see also ¶ 2:162);

• Using any provision allowing the licensee an option to purchase in an agreement with a buyer/seller that authorizes the licensee to sell, buy or exchange real estate or a business opportunity for compensation, except when the licensee, prior to or coincident with an election to exercise the option to purchase, reveals in writing to the buyer/seller the full amount of the licensee's profit and obtains the buyer's/seller's written consent thereto (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10176(h));

• "Any other conduct, whether of the same or of a different character than specified in [§ 10176], which constitutes fraud or dishonest dealing" (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10176(i); see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177(j));

• Obtaining a prospective buyer's signature to an agreement which provides the buyer shall either transact the purchasing, leasing, renting or exchanging of a business opportunity property through the broker obtaining such signature, or pay a compensation to such broker if the property is purchased, leased, rented or exchanged without the broker first having obtained the owner's written authorization to offer such property for sale, lease, exchange or rent (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10176(j));

• Failing to disburse funds pursuant to a loan commitment (¶ 6:130 ff.) that has been accepted by the borrower when the broker represents to the borrower that they are either the lender or authorized to issue the commitment on the lender's behalf (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10176(k));

• Intentionally delaying the closing of a mortgage loan for the sole purpose of increasing interest, costs, fees or other charges payable by the borrower (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10176(l));

• Violating any provision of law that constitutes a violation of the licensing law applicable to the licensee, as specified (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10176(m)); or

• Knowingly or intentionally misrepresenting the value of real property; moreover, any licensee offering or providing an opinion of value regarding residential real property that is used as the basis for originating a mortgage loan may not have a "prohibited" interest in the property as specified under federal law (see Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177.3(a), (b)).

(2) [2:115] Incidental improper activities (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177): Additionally, a real estate license may be suspended or revoked, its renewal may be delayed, or an applicant may be denied a license, for any of the following conduct by the applicant or licensee (or officer, director or shareholder owning/controlling 10% or more of a corporate licensee):

• Procuring, or attempting to procure, a license or license renewal by fraud, misrepresentation or deceit, or by making any material misstatement of fact in a license application (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177(a));

• Entering a plea of guilty or no contest to, or being convicted of, a felony or a crime substantially related to a real estate licensee's qualifications, functions or duties (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177(b)(1); see also Arneson v. Fox (1980) 28 C3d 440, 448-449, 170 CR 778, 783 (concluding Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177(b), read in conjunction with Bus. & Prof.C. § 490's "substantially related" requirement, meets due process requirements); and further discussion at ¶ 2:115.2 ff.);

(Notwithstanding the above, a license suspended due to a guilty plea must be rescinded and the license reinstated if the guilty plea is withdrawn; see Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177(b)(2)—Department must notify subject licensee of their right to have suspension issue heard as statutorily prescribed.)

- Knowingly authorizing, directing, conniving at or aiding in the publication, advertisement, distribution or circulation of a material false statement or representation concerning the licensee's designation or special education certification, credential, trade organization membership, business, or any business opportunity or property offered for sale (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177(c));

- Willfully disregarding or violating Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10000 et seq., 11000 et seq. or DRE rules and regulations (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177(d); see Handeland v. Department of Real Estate (1976) 58 CA3d 513, 518, 129 CR 810, 813);

- Willfully using the term "realtor" or a trade name or insignia of membership in any real estate organization of which the licensee is not a member (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177(e));

- Acting in a manner that would have warranted denial of an application for a real estate license, having another license revoked, surrendered or suspended, or receiving a debarment order, for acts that would be grounds for suspension or revocation of a California real estate license, if the denial, revocation, surrender, suspension, or debarment by the other agency or entity occurred only after giving the licensee/applicant fair notice of the charges, an opportunity to be heard, and "other due process protections … and only upon an express finding of a violation of law by the agency or entity" (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177(f); see Berg v. Davi (2005) 130 CA4th 223, 225, 29 CR3d 803, 804 (attorney disbarment); Herrera v. Department of Real Estate (2001) 88 CA4th 776, 778, 106 CR2d 232, 234 (suspension of law license));

- Demonstrating negligence or incompetence in performing an act for which a license is required (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177(g));

- Failure by a broker to exercise reasonable supervision over its salespersons (or failure by the designated officer under a corporate broker's license to exercise reasonable supervision and control of the corporation's activities for which a real estate license is required) (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177(h); see Norman v. Department of Real Estate (1979) 93 CA3d 768, 776-777, 155 CR 715, 720; Sandler v. Sanchez (2012) 206 CA4th 1431, 1434, 142 CR3d 771, 773—designated officer's failure to reasonably supervise corporate employee was ground for suspending/revoking officer's license (¶ 2:48));

- Using employment by a governmental agency in a capacity giving access to records, other than public records, in a manner that violates the confidential nature of the records (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177(i));

- Engaging in any other conduct that constitutes "fraud or dishonest dealing" (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177(j); see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 10176(j); Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177.5—final judgment against licensee for fraud, misrepresentation or deceit with respect to transaction requiring real estate license; and Grubb Co., Inc. v. Department of Real Estate (2011) 194 CA4th 1494, 1503-1505, 124 CR3d 894, 901-903—professional licensee's due process rights require proof of misconduct by clear and convincing evidence (Commissioner could not discipline licensee under § 10177.5 based on final civil judgment for license-related misconduct that was procured by mere preponderance of evidence));

- Violating any of the terms, conditions, restrictions and limitations in an order granting a "restricted license" (¶ 2:83 ff.) (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177(k));

- Soliciting or inducing the sale, lease or listing for sale or lease of residential property on the ground (in whole or in part) of loss of value, increase in crime, or decline of the quality of the schools, due to the present or prospective entry into the neighborhood of a person or persons of another race, color, religion, ancestry or national origin (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177(l));

• Violating the Franchise Investment Law (Corps.C. § 31000 et seq.) or Financial Protection and Innovation Commissioner's regulations relating thereto (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177(m); • Violating the Corporate Securities Law of 1968 (Corps.C. § 25000 et seq.) or Financial Protection and Innovation Commissioner's regulations relating thereto (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177(n);

• Failing to disclose to the buyer, in a transaction in which the licensee is the buyer's agent, the nature and extent of the licensee's direct or indirect ownership interest in the property (including the direct or indirect ownership by a person related to the licensee by blood or marriage, by an entity in which the licensee has an ownership interest, "or by any other person with whom the licensee has a special relationship") (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177(o));

• Violating the requirements imposed by Bus. & Prof.C. § 10237 et seq. on transactions involving the sale of, or offer to sell, a series of notes secured by an interest in real property (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177(p)); or

• Violating or failing to comply with the Civ.C. § 2920 et seq. requirements relating to mortgages (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177(q)).

(a) [2:115.1] Limitation re corporate brokers: The Real Estate Commissioner may not suspend or revoke, or deny issuance or delay reissuance of, a corporate real estate broker's license (¶ 2:108) if:

• the corporation has not done any of the foregoing prescribed acts, either directly or through its employees, agents, officers, directors or persons owning/controlling 10% or more of the corporation's stock; and

• the corporate officer, director or shareholder who individually (not on behalf of the corporation) engaged in the proscribed activity has been completely disassociated from any affiliation or ownership in the corporation. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177, last para. (abrogating more liberal rule under Amvest Mortg. Corp. v. Antt (1997) 58 CA4th 1239, 1246, 68 CR2d 457, 461, that protected corporation's license so long as wrongdoing individual became disassociated from corporation before imposition of discipline, without regard to corporation's involvement in wrongful act)]

(b) [2:115.2] Limitation re discipline based on criminal conviction: A real estate license may be denied, suspended or revoked, or its renewal may be delayed, for the applicant's/licensee's conviction of a felony, or a crime if the crime is "substantially related" to the applicant's/licensee's qualifications, functions or duties. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177(b)(1); and ¶ 2:115]

Thus, the Commissioner may not deny, suspend, revoke or delay renewal of a real estate license based on a criminal conviction absent a "reasoned determination" that the applicant's/licensee's conduct was in fact related to the applicant's/licensee's fitness to engage in the real estate profession. Discipline may not be imposed merely because of the moral reprehensibility of the underlying conduct. [Donaldson v. Department of Real Estate of State of Calif. (2005) 134 CA4th 948, 955-956, 36 CR3d 577, 581-582]

1) Application

• [2:115.3] Revocation of a real estate salesperson's license was not authorized pursuant to Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 490 and 10177(b) because the licensee's misdemeanor conviction for unlawful sex with a minor, however troubling, was not substantially related to his fitness to engage in real estate activities. [Donaldson v. Department of Real Estate of State of Calif. (2005) 134 CA4th 948, 955-956, 36 CR3d 577, 581-582]

• [2:115.3a] Revocation of a real estate salesperson's license was not authorized pursuant to Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177(b) after a trial court set aside her misdemeanor hit-and-run conviction nunc pro tunc, allowed her to withdraw her no contest plea and plead to a basic speed law infraction, and dismissed the hit-and-run charge. Although a misdemeanor hit-and-run conviction arguably relates substantially to a licensee's qualifications, functions or duties, "section 10177 does not allow discipline when there has been a dismissal unless the dismissal is based on Penal Code section 1203.4 [i.e., expungement]." [See Ryan-Lanigan v. Bureau of Real Estate (2013) 222 CA4th 72, 82, 165 CR3d 582, 590; compare Skulason v. California Bureau of Real Estate (2017) 14 CA5th 562, 568-569, 223 CR3d 7, 11-12 (noting § 1203.4, while sometimes inaccurately described as "expungement," is in no way equivalent to finding of factual innocence)—Department had no duty to remove from its website public information regarding licensee's three dismissed misdemeanor convictions (¶ 2:113.1)]

• [2:115.4] By contrast, a felony conviction for conspiracy to create a false financial picture for a real estate development was substantially related to the licensee's fitness to engage in broker activities, warranting revocation of his broker's license. [Arneson v. Fox (1980) 28 C3d 440, 450-452, 170 CR 778, 784-785]

• [2:115.5] Likewise, a licensee's misdemeanor convictions for jeopardizing renter safety and his history of building code violations with the intent to obtain an economic advantage were "substantially related" to his fitness to engage in broker activities, justifying revocation of his broker's license. [Robbins v. Davi (2009) 175 CA4th 118, 125-127, 95 CR3d 792, 797-798 (applying 10 CCR § 2910 criteria to determine whether licensee's convictions were "substantially related" to relevant professional qualifications)]

• [2:115.6] And an application for an unrestricted real estate salesperson's license was properly denied where the applicant's misdemeanor conviction for domestically abusing his girlfriend was (i) deemed moral turpitude under the then-applicable (former) version of the licensing statute; and (ii) "substantially related" to the qualifications, functions and duties of a salesperson licensee: "[A] conviction involving an unlawful act done with 'the intent or threat of doing substantial injury' is deemed substantially related to the duties of a licensee." [Donley v. Davi (2009) 180 CA4th 447, 465, 103 CR3d 1, 16 (applying 10 CCR § 2910 criteria in deciding whether to deny license application)]

2) [2:115.7] Compare—automatic suspension following incarceration for felony conviction: A real estate license is suspended automatically during any time the licensee is incarcerated after being convicted of a felony, even if the conviction is on appeal. The DRE must notify the licensee of the suspension, however, and of the licensee's right to a specified hearing (below). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10186.1; see Bus. & Prof.C. § 10186.1(a)]

If, after a hearing before an administrative judge, it is determined the felony for which the licensee was convicted is "substantially related to the qualifications, functions, or duties of a licensee," the Commissioner must suspend the license until the time for appeal has elapsed or until the judgment of conviction is affirmed on appeal or otherwise becomes final, and until further order of the DRE. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10186.1(b)]

a) [2:115.8] Felony convictions involving drug use/sex offenses: No hearing is required if the conviction is for using dangerous drugs or controlled substances, or for certain sex offenses, in violation of federal or state law. These crimes are "conclusively presumed" to be substantially related to the licensee's qualifications, functions and duties, rendering a hearing unnecessary. However, upon its own motion, or for good cause shown, the Commissioner may decline to impose, or may set aside, the suspension when "it appears to be in the interest of justice to do so …" [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10186.1(c)]

3) [2:115.8a] Seven-year restriction: The DRE can only deny a license based on a criminal conviction if the conviction occurred within seven years of the application date. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 480(a)(1)]

Compare: This seven-year limitation does not apply if the applicant was convicted of a serious Pen.C. § 1192.7 felony, or a crime requiring registration per Pen.C. § 290(d)(2), (3), or a felony financial crime that is directly and adversely related to a broker's fiduciary qualifications, functions, or duties. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 480(a)(1)]

a) [2:115.8b] Applicants subject to formal discipline: In addition to a criminal conviction, formal discipline by a licensing board in or outside California within seven years of the application date also may disqualify an applicant from a license if the professional misconduct would have been cause for DRE discipline and it is substantially related to a broker's qualifications, functions, or duties. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 480(a)(2)]

Compare: Prior disciplinary action by a licensing board within the previous seven years is not a basis for denying a license if that disciplinary action was a conviction that has been dismissed or expunged as statutorily specified. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 480(a)(2)]

4) [2:115.8c] Rehabilitated applicants distinguished: No person may be denied a real estate license on the basis of a criminal conviction, or acts underlying a criminal conviction, if that person has obtained a statutorily-prescribed certificate of rehabilitation, been granted clemency or a pardon by a state or federal executive, or has made a showing of rehabilitation under Bus. & Prof.C. § 482. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 480(b); Singh v. Davi (2012) 211 CA4th 141, 148, 149 CR3d 265, 269 (decided under predecessor statute) (noting Bus. & Prof.C. § 480 general prohibition prevails over specific Code sections prescribing licensing requirements)—former police officer who met all rehabilitation criteria entitled to broker's license despite prior misdemeanor conviction for theft by false pretenses]

5) [2:115.8d] Dismissed/expunged convictions distinguished: No person may be denied a real estate license on the basis of any conviction, or acts underlying the conviction, if the conviction has been dismissed or expunged as statutorily prescribed. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 480(c)]

6) [2:115.8e] Arrests resulting in infractions, citations or juvenile adjudications distinguished: The DRE may not deny a license on the basis of an arrest that resulted in a disposition other than a conviction, including an arrest resulting in an infraction, citation or juvenile adjudication. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 480(d)]

(3) [2:115.10] Improper acts affecting "public interest"; criminal/civil offenses involving dishonesty, fraud or deceit (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10087): A salesperson or broker, or an unlicensed person issued a Bus. & Prof.C. § 10086 "cease and desist" order, may be suspended, barred from any position of employment, management or control, or barred from participating in a licensure examination, for up to 36 months, if the Commissioner finds either of the following (Bus & Prof.C. § 10087):

- Suspension/bar is in the public interest, and the salesperson, broker or unlicensed person has committed or caused a violation of the California Real Estate Law (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10000 et seq.), or of a rule or order of the Commissioner, which violation was either known or should have been known to the person or has caused material damage to the public (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10087(a)(1)); or

- The salesperson, broker or unlicensed person has been convicted of or pleaded nolo contendere to any crime, or has been held liable in any civil action by final or administrative judgment, if that crime or civil/administrative judgment involved any offense entailing dishonesty, fraud or deceit, or any other offense reasonably related to the qualifications, functions or duties of a person engaged in the real estate business (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10087(a)(2); see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177(b); and ¶ 2:115.2).

(a) [2:115.11] Prohibited activities following receipt of § 10087 notice/order: Persons who receive a notice of intention to issue a Bus. & Prof.C. § 10087 order are immediately prohibited from engaging in any business activity involving real estate that is subject to regulation under the California Real Estate Law (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10000 et seq.). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10087(c)]

Persons actually suspended or barred under § 10087 are prohibited from participating in any capacity in real estate-related activities, including activities involving finance lenders, residential mortgage lenders, banks, credit unions, escrow companies, title companies and underwritten title companies. They also are prohibited from participating in licensure examinations. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10087(d)]

(b) [2:115.11a] Reporting requirement: Licensees must report any of the following to the DRE:

— An criminal complaint, information or indictment charging the licensee with a felony;

— The licensee's conviction of a felony or misdemeanor (including any guilty verdict or guilty or no contest plea);

— Any disciplinary action taken against the licensee by another licensing entity or authority of California or of another state, or by a federal agency. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10186.2(a)(1)]

The licensee's report must be made in writing within 30 days of the date of bringing the indictment, charging the felony or the date of the conviction or disciplinary action. Failure to make the report is cause for discipline. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10186.2(a)(2), (b)]

(4) [2:115.12] Improper publication of real estate-related matter; disclosure of license identification number, etc. (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10140.6): A licensee is subject to discipline for publishing, distributing or circulating any matter related to any licensed activity that does not include a designation disclosing the fact the licensee is performing acts for which a real estate license is required. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10140.6(a), (c) ("for sale," "rent," "lease," "open house," and directional signs, as defined, are exempt); see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 10071 (Commissioner's duty to enforce)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Licensees also are subject to discipline for failure to disclose their name, license identification number, responsible broker's identity, as statutorily defined (and, if that licensee is a mortgage loan originator (¶ 2:109.5), their unique identifier (¶ 2:109.12)) on all solicitation materials intended to be the "first point of contact with consumers" (e.g., business cards, stationery, advertising fliers, advertisements on tv, in print or electronic media, "for sale," "rent," "lease," "open house," signs, and other materials designed to solicit the creation of a professional relationship between licensee and consumer), and on real property purchase agreements when acting in a manner requiring a real estate license/ mortgage loan originator license endorsement in those transactions. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10140.6(b)(1), (3); see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 10071 (Commissioner's duty to enforce)]

(a) [2:115.12a] Change in licensee's surname: A "natural person" real estate licensee who legally changes the surname in which their license was originally issued may continue to use their former surname for purposes of conducting license-related business so long as both names are filed with the DRE. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10140.6(b)(2)]

(5) [2:115.13] Failure to disclose roles in arranging financing for real property transactions (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177.6): Real estate agents are subject to discipline for failure to disclose (within 24 hours) their role in arranging financing for a real property sale, lease or exchange. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177.6; see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 10071 (Commissioner's duty to enforce); and discussion at ¶ 2:215.2]

(6) [2:115.20] Retaining/compensating unlicensed salesperson/mortgage loan originator (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10137): A broker's license may be suspended or revoked for retaining or compensating an unlicensed person to perform acts requiring a real estate license (a person retained or compensated as a real estate salesperson must be licensed under the responsible broker retaining or compensating them). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10137 (provided, however, that licensed broker may pay commission to out-of-state broker); see also Sanowicz v. Bacal (2015) 234 CA4th 1027, 1038-1039, 1041, 184 CR3d 517, 526, 528—although § 10137 prohibits salespersons from accepting compensation from anyone other than brokers under whom they are licensed, or from paying any part of commissions received except "through" those brokers, salespersons may enter into commission-sharing agreements (¶ 2:280.3)]

Likewise, a broker's license may be suspended or revoked for retaining or compensating any licensee engaged in any activity for which a mortgage loan originator license endorsement is required, if that licensee does not hold a mortgage loan originator license endorsement (¶ 2:109.6). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10137 (provided, however, that licensed broker may pay commission to out-of-state broker)]

(7) [2:115.21] Referring customers for compensation (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177.4): Further, a real estate license may be suspended or revoked when the licensee claims, demands or receives a commission, fee or "other consideration" (see Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177.4(b)) for referring customers to an escrow agent, structural pest control firm, home protection company, title insurer, controlled escrow company or underwritten title company. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177.4(a) (also providing that licensee may not be disciplined for reporting violations of Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177.4 unless they had "guilty knowledge of" or also committed or participated in the violation)]

(8) [2:115.22] Violating prepaid rental listing services regulations (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10167.12): A real estate broker's license may be suspended or revoked when prepaid rental listing services conducted under the license (¶ 2:34.5) violate the provisions of Bus. & Prof.C. § 10167 et seq. or if the broker (or agent acting under the broker) is convicted of a crime substantially related to the qualifications, functions or duties of a prepaid rental listing service licensee. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10167.12(a)]

(9) [2:115.23] Failing to pay DRE audit charges in connection with mortgage-related activities (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10232.2): Brokers who engage in certain mortgage-related activities (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131(d), (e); see ¶ 2:26 ff.) must file prescribed annual reports with the DRE; and a broker who fails to do so must pay the DRE's charges in conducting an audit and preparing its own report (see Bus. & Prof.C. § 10232.2). A broker's license may be suspended, or its renewal may be denied, if the broker does not pay those charges within 60 days of mailing of the DRE's bill. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10232.2(e)]

(10) Violating residential mortgage loan modification laws

(a) [2:115.25] Preperformance compensation, etc. (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10085.6): It is illegal in California for anyone, including a real estate licensee, to (i) demand or receive advance fees (¶ 2:31.1) or any other type of preperformance compensation; (ii) require security as collateral for compensation; or (iii) take a power of attorney from the borrower for any purpose in connection with a residential mortgage loan modification or other form of residential mortgage loan forbearance. A real estate licensee who violates this prohibition can be fined and/or imprisoned for up to one year. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10085.6; see also Civ.C. §§ 2944.7 & 2944.8 (authorizing state and local government officials to commence civil actions to recover up to $20,000 for each such violation, as well as additional penalties up to $2,500 for every violation perpetrated against a senior citizen or disabled person); Matter of Taylor (Rev.Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct.Rptr. 221, 226—legislation prohibiting preperformance compensation was designed to prevent loan modification consultants from charging borrowers up-front fees, providing borrowers limited services that fail to help and leaving borrowers worse off than before seeking consultant's services]

(b) [2:115.26] Preliminary written disclosure requirement (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10147.6): Before entering into any fee agreement with the borrower, real estate licensees who render compensable services in connection with a residential mortgage loan modification or other form of residential mortgage loan forbearance must provide their clients with a statutorily-prescribed written disclosure in minimum 14-point boldface type, as follows (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10147.6(a) & Civ.C. § 2944.6(a)):

> "It is not necessary to pay a third party to arrange for a loan modification or other form of forbearance from your mortgage lender or servicer. You may call your lender directly to ask for a change in your loan terms. Nonprofit housing counseling agencies also offer these and other forms of borrower assistance free of charge. A list of nonprofit housing counseling agencies approved by the United States Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) is available from your local HUD office or by visiting www.hud.gov."

A real estate licensee who violates the above written disclosure requirement can be fined and/or imprisoned for up to one year. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10147.6(c) & Civ.C. § 2944.6(c)]

1) [2:115.27] Translated copies: If loan modification services are offered or negotiated in one of the languages specified in Civ.C. § 1632 (i.e., Spanish, Chinese, Tagalog, Vietnamese or Korean), a translated copy of the requisite written disclosure must be provided to the client in that language. A real estate licensee who violates this requirement can be fined and/or imprisoned for up to one year. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10147.6(b), (c) & Civ.C. § 2944.6(b), (c)]

(c) [2:115.30] Compare—federal law: Under the Federal Trade Commission's Mortgage Assistance Relief Services Rule, mortgage modification and foreclosure-rescue services generally are prohibited from charging or collecting any advance fees. Indeed, they cannot be paid until they secure a modification—i.e., until the homeowner has a written offer from their lender or servicer that the homeowner decides is acceptable. [See 12 CFR § 1015.5(a)]

1) [2:115.31] Attorney exemption: Attorneys who provide mortgage assistance relief services as part of their practice to consumers who reside (or whose dwellings are located) in states where the attorneys are licensed are completely exempt from the federal ban on advance fees provided they (a) comply with state laws and regulations covering the same type of conduct; (b) keep the fees in client trust accounts; and (c) comply with all state laws and regulations applicable to client trust accounts. [See 12 CFR § 1015.7]

However, California lawyers apparently cannot take advantage of this exemption because of the federal provision requiring them to comply "with state laws and regulations that cover the same type of conduct" (see Civ.C. § 2944.7 (prohibiting anyone from collecting advance fees until they have "fully performed each and every service … contracted to perform"); ¶ 2:115.25).

(11) [2:116] Failure to maintain real estate records (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10148): A broker must retain for three years copies of all "listings, deposit receipts, canceled checks, trust records, and other documents" executed or obtained by them in connection with any transaction for which a real estate license is required. Electronic messages of an "ephemeral nature" need not be retained. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10148(a); see also Civ.C. § 1624(d)—electronic messages of an "ephemeral nature" include text messages and instant message format communications unless confirmed in writing as statutorily described]

After notice, the broker's "books, accounts, and records" must be made available for "examination, inspection, and copying" by the commissioner as statutorily prescribed and, "upon the appearance of sufficient cause," are subject to audit without further notice. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10148(a)]

The license of any broker, salesperson or corporation licensed as a real estate broker may be suspended or revoked if the broker, salesperson or a licensed director, officer, employee or agent of the corporation knowingly "destroys, alters, conceals, mutilates, or falsifies" any of the above "books, papers, writings, documents, or tangible objects." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10148(e)]

c. [2:117] Voluntary surrender of license with disciplinary charges pending: A real estate licensee against whom a disciplinary investigation is pending or an accusation has been filed (Gov.C. § 11503) may petition the Commissioner to voluntarily surrender their license. A surrendered licensee may be relicensed only if the Commissioner, after considering all relevant evidence, grants a petition for reinstatement (Gov.C. § 11522). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10100.2; see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 10152(b)—reinstatement petition must be accompanied by surrendered licensee's fingerprints]

d. [2:117.1] Settlement in lieu of accusation: The DRE may enter into a settlement with a licensee or applicant instead of issuing an accusation or statement of issues. The settlement must identify the factual basis for the action being taken and the statutes or regulations violated. All such settlements are "considered discipline" by the DRE. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10100.4; see Bus. & Prof.C. § 10100.4(a), (b), (d)]

A licensee or applicant who enters into a § 10100.4 settlement may file a timely petition to modify the settlement's terms or for early termination of probation, if applicable. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10100.4(c)]

e. [2:118] License/license endorsement suspension, revocation or denial procedure: Before suspending or revoking a real estate license or license endorsement (¶ 2:109.6), the DRE must file an "accusation" notifying the holder of the license or license endorsement of the alleged grounds and thereafter must convene a hearing pursuant to Gov.C. § 11500 et seq. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10100(a); Herrera v. Department of Real Estate (2001) 88 CA4th 776, 778, 106 CR2d 232, 234]

Upon denial of an application for a license or license endorsement, the DRE must follow the procedures set forth at Bus. & Prof.C. § 485 et seq. (i.e., file and serve statement of issues, notify applicant, etc.). [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10100(b)]

(1) [2:118.1] Statute of limitations (suspension or revocation): The DRE must file its accusation (Gov.C. § 11503) no later than three years from the occurrence of the alleged grounds for disciplinary action. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10101]

(a) [2:118.2] Commencement of limitations period: The three-year limitations period commences on the date of occurrence of the grounds for revocation or suspension. [Herrera v. Department of Real Estate (2001) 88 CA4th 776, 779, 106 CR2d 232, 234]

Thus, the exact commencement date turns on the particular ground for discipline (Herrera v. Department of Real Estate, supra, 88 CA4th at 780, 106 CR2d at 235):

1) [2:118.3] Discipline predicated on misconduct: Where the ground for discipline is the actual misconduct of the licensee, the date of the misconduct commences the limitations period. [Herrera v. Department of Real Estate (2001) 88 CA4th 776, 780, 106 CR2d 232, 235]

2) [2:118.4] Discipline predicated on conviction, judgment or other regulatory action: Where, however, the ground for DRE disciplinary action is a criminal conviction, a civil judgment or another regulatory agency's disciplinary action, the three-year limitations period begins to run on the date of the final official action. [Herrera v. Department of Real Estate (2001) 88 CA4th 776, 780, 106 CR2d 232, 235]

• [2:118.5] Thus, a DRE accusation based on suspension of a broker's law license (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177(f), ¶ 2:115) must be filed within three years after the date the broker's law license was suspended (the three-year period does not commence on the earlier date of the underlying misconduct). [Herrera v. Department of Real Estate (2001) 88 CA4th 776, 780, 106 CR2d 232, 235 (misappropriation of client funds resulted in State Bar suspension of broker's law license and DRE accusation was filed within 3 years of State Bar suspension order)]

• [2:118.6] Where the ground for DRE disciplinary action is a final civil judgment for fraud (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177.5, ¶ 2:115), the limitations period commences on the date of the final judgment (not the acts or omissions underlying the judgment). [California Real Estate Loans, Inc. v. Wallace (1993) 18 CA4th 1575, 1585, 23 CR2d 462, 468-469]

[2:118.7 - 2:118.9] Reserved.

(2) [2:118.10] Payment of reasonable investigative and enforcement costs: Upon the Commissioner's request, any licensee found to have violated the licensing laws may be ordered to pay the reasonable costs of investigating and prosecuting the case filed against the licensee. If the licensee is a corporation or partnership, the order may be made against the licensed corporate entity or licensed partnership. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10106; see Bus. & Prof.C. § 10106(a), (b)]

Subject to a limited financial hardship exemption, determined in the Commissioner's discretion, the Commissioner may not renew or reinstate the license of any licensee who fails to pay all of the costs ordered. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10106(g)(1)]

1. Applicable Law

a. [2:120] Contractual, agency and statutory obligations: By executing a brokerage contract, a principal effectively employs a broker as the principal's agent to perform brokerage services. Therefore, the broker-principal relationship is governed by both (1) contract law (based on the employment agreement) and (2) agency law. [RC Royal Develop. & Realty Corp. v. Standard Pac. Corp. (2009) 177 CA4th 1410, 1418, 100 CR3d 115, 121; Horning v. Shilberg (2005) 130 CA4th 197, 204, 29 CR3d 717, 723; R.J. Kuhl Corp. v. Sullivan (1993) 13 CA4th 1589, 1599, 17 CR2d 425, 431]

The duties arising out of general contract and agency law are further supplemented by certain statutory obligations, which require brokers to make specific disclosures to their principals and other parties to the transaction. Thus, “general principles of agency … combine with the statutory duties created by the Real Estate Law …” [Wyatt v. Union Mortgage Co. (1979) 24 C3d 773, 782, 157 CR 392, 397; see Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage Co., Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Salazar) (2004) 117 CA4th 158, 164, 11 CR3d 564, 569—“Real estate brokers are subject to two sets of duties: those imposed by regulatory statutes, and those arising from the general law of agency” (internal quotes and citation omitted)]

Where no statutory duties are involved, a real estate broker's duties may derive from the general law of agency—i.e., from the agreement between principal (seller or buyer) and agent (broker). [Padgett v. Phariss (1997) 54 CA4th 1270, 1279, 63 CR2d 373, 377; RC Royal Develop. & Realty Corp. v. Standard Pac. Corp. (2009) 177 CA4th 1410, 1418, 100 CR3d 115, 121—broker's employment may depend upon any lawful condition inserted into agreement]

b. [2:121] Independent operation of contractual and agency relationship: The contractual and agency broker-principal relationships are independent of each other. Indeed, the law of agency cannot substitute for the law of contracts. Instead, it constitutes an additional, overlapping legal framework that governs the relationship. [Hall v. Aurora Loan Services LLC (2013) 215 CA4th 1134, 1140, 155 CR3d 739, 743]

• [2:121.1] For example, although a broker's right to recover compensation turns on the existence of a written agreement (¶ 2:281 ff.), there can be an enforceable agency relationship even in the absence of a written agreement. Consequently, a broker might be held an agent of the seller or buyer even though they have no enforceable compensation claim (because lacking a written agreement). [Civ.C. § 2308; see Vargas v. Ruggiero (1961) 197 CA2d 709, 715, 17 CR 568, 570-571]

c. [2:121.3] Compare—court-appointed broker acting on court's behalf: A broker appointed by a court to help settle a property dispute may be acting as the court's "agent." As such, the broker, while ordered to act in the parties' best interests, does not "advocate" for or "represent" any party. Instead, the broker is "vested" with "limited discretionary authority" to assist the court in resolving the subject dispute (e.g., by marketing and selling property for a price the broker deems appropriate, subject to the court's final approval). In short, the broker functions as an "arm of the court" and is entitled to quasi-judicial immunity with respect to the broker's determinations. [See Holt v. Brock (2022) 85 CA5th 611, 623-625, 301 CR3d 412, 421-423 (case of first impression)—quasi-judicial immunity extended to court-appointed broker acting as court's agent in settling partition action between siblings]

2. Agency Law as Applied to Brokers, Generally

a. [2:122] Nature of "agency": An "agent" is "one who represents another" (the "principal") in dealings with third persons. Representation by an agent on behalf of a principal is called an "agency." [Civ.C. § 2295; see Lombardo v. Santa Monica Young Men's Christian Ass'n (1985) 169 CA3d 529, 541, 215 CR 224, 231; RSB Vineyards, LLC v. Orsi (2017) 15 CA5th 1089, 1100, 223 CR3d 458, 467—§ 2295 "makes clear" agent must act for another's benefit "in dealings with third persons" (emphasis added)]

In a typical real estate brokerage contract, the prospective seller is the principal and the broker is the agent. But an agency relationship may also arise between broker and buyer, where the buyer (as principal) employs the broker to find and negotiate a purchase of certain real estate on specified terms. [RC Royal Develop. & Realty Corp. v. Standard Pac. Corp. (2009) 177 CA4th 1410, 1418, 100 CR3d 115, 121; R.J. Kuhl Corp. v. Sullivan (1993) 13 CA4th 1589, 1599-1600, 17 CR2d 425, 431-432; Salahutdin v. Valley of Calif., Inc. (1994) 24 CA4th 555, 559, 29 CR2d 463, 464 (buyers retained broker to find home on parcel suitable for subdivision)]

(1) [2:123] Fiduciary relationship: Agents stand in a fiduciary relationship with their principals. Thus, real estate agents owe their principals the "same obligation of undivided service and loyalty" owed by trustees to their beneficiaries. [Wyatt v. Union Mortgage Co. (1979) 24 C3d 773, 782, 157 CR 392, 397; Warren v. Merrill (2006) 143 CA4th 96, 109-111, 49 CR3d 122, 131-133—evidence was "more than sufficient to show broker's egregious violation" of duties of loyalty and undivided interest owed to buyer/client; Roberts v. Lomanto (2003) 112 CA4th 1553, 1562-1563, 5 CR3d 866, 873]

As fiduciaries, real estate agents must act in the "highest good faith" toward their principals and may not obtain any advantage over the principal in any transaction arising out of the agency relationship. They must make full and complete disclosure of all material facts that might influence their principal's decision to enter into a transaction. [Wyatt v. Union Mortgage Co., supra, 24 C3d at 782, 157 CR at 397; Ryan v. Real Estate of the Pacific, Inc. (2019) 32 CA5th 637, 646, 244 CR3d 129, 136 (¶ 2:157.10); Assilzadeh v. California Fed'l Bank, FSB (2000) 82 CA4th 399, 414-415, 98 CR2d 176, 185-186; see further discussion at ¶ 2:155 ff.]

(a) [2:123.1] Impact on right to compensation: Under agency law, a real estate agent's breach of fiduciary duty may forfeit the right to a commission for even properly performed services—at least where the breach involves intentional disloyalty, bad faith or fraud. [Ziswasser v. Cole & Cowan, Inc. (1985) 164 CA3d 417, 424-425, 210 CR 428, 432—sellers' broker's inadvertent failure to disclose loan to buyer for part of purchase price did not warrant forfeiture of commission; Roberts v. Lomanto (2003) 112 CA4th 1553, 1570, 5 CR3d 866, 879—no forfeiture of commission where record did not show broker's failure to disclose amount of assignment fee was deliberately deceptive or fraudulent (discussed further at ¶ 2:157.10 ff.); compare In re Mehdipour (9th Cir. BAP 1996) 202 BR 474, 481, aff'd (9th Cir. 1998) 139 F3d 1303 (applying Calif. law)—10% forfeiture of commission where seller's broker did not fully disclose relationship with and terms of loans made to buyers]

(2) [2:124] "Special agency": Real estate brokers are "special agents" because they are authorized to represent the principal only in a particular transaction. (Distinguish "general agents," who are empowered to act on behalf of their principals in any or all transactions.) [Civ.C. § 2297]

b. [2:125] Creation of agency: As between principal and agent, an agency relationship is consensual in nature. As such, it can be created only when it is clear that the principal intended to bestow upon a person the status of agent (authority to represent and bind the principal in a given transaction) and the agent, in turn, has accepted the appointment. [Civ.C. §§ 2299 ("actual agency" created when agent "is really employed by the principal"), 2307 (agency may be created by "precedent authorization" or "subsequent ratification"); see Holley v. Crank (9th Cir. 2005) 400 F3d 667, 673 (citing Rest.2d Agency § 1); Meyer v. Holley (2003) 537 US 280, 291, 123 S.Ct. 824, 832—right to control another not itself sufficient to establish principal-agent relationship]

(1) [2:126] No special formalities: Nevertheless, no particular formalities are required. An agency relationship can be created without an express agreement and without any obligation to pay agent compensation. [See Civ.C. §§ 2307 (creation of agency "by precedent authorization or by a subsequent ratification"), 2308 (no consideration necessary); Vargas v. Ruggiero (1961) 197 CA2d 709, 715, 17 CR 568, 570-571]

(a) [2:126.1] Compare—right to compensation subject to statute of frauds: However, although the agency relationship may not be dependent on an express written agreement, the principal's obligation to pay a real estate agent compensation must be evidenced by a writing sufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds (Civ.C. § 1624(a)(4)). See ¶ 2:281 ff.

(2) [2:127] "Ostensible" agency: Indeed, insofar as necessary to protect the rights of third parties, an agency relationship can arise whenever the principal intentionally, or by "want of ordinary care, causes a third person to believe another to be their agent who is not really employed by" the principal (so-called "ostensible" agency). [Civ.C. § 2300]

More specifically, an ostensible agency arises when (a) a third person deals with the supposed "agent" under a reasonable belief in the agent's authority; (b) the "principal" sought to be charged, by act or neglect, generated the third person's belief that the agency existed; and (c) the third person is not guilty of negligence in relying on the "agent's" apparent authority. [Kaplan v. Coldwell Banker Residential Affiliates, Inc. (1997) 59 CA4th 741, 747, 69 CR2d 640, 643; see also ¶ 2:242]

c. [2:128] Delegation and subagencies: Unless expressly forbidden by the principal, agents may delegate their powers to another person when either:

• The act to be performed is purely mechanical;

• The act is one that the agent cannot, but the subagent can, lawfully perform;

• It is commonplace to delegate such powers; or

• The principal has expressly authorized such delegation. [Civ.C. § 2349]

(1) [2:129] Effect: To the extent an agent's powers are lawfully delegated (¶ 2:128), a subagent represents the principal "in like manner with the original agent"; and the original agent is not responsible to third persons for the subagent's acts. [Civ.C. § 2351; but see George F. Hillenbrand, Inc. v. Insurance Co. of North America (2002) 104 CA4th 784, 822-824, 128 CR2d 586, 615-616—§ 2351 does not insulate corporate agent from liability for acts of its employees]

(a) [2:130] Compare—unauthorized delegation: On the other hand, if a subagent is improperly employed, the principal and subagent have no agency relationship; rather, the agent is deemed the subagent's principal for purposes of agency law. [Civ.C. § 2350]

(2) [2:131] Application in connection with multiple listing services: In real estate sales transactions, subagency problems typically arise when the seller's broker uses a "multiple listing service." (Many local brokerage associations create a multiple listing service in which properties are listed for sale by seller's brokers. Participating brokers must agree to share in commissions paid in respect to any multiple listed property. See Civ.C. § 1087, and ¶ 2:371 ff.)

Because most listing agreements permit the seller's broker to utilize a multiple listing service (see ¶ 2:384), a subagency relationship can arise between the seller and broker representing the buyer. This could create a situation where both buyer and seller have the same "agent" (i.e., the listing broker and the buyer's broker), in turn creating a "dual agency" and its attendant obligations (¶ 2:139 ff.). Therefore, most multiple listing services in California provide that a so-called "cooperating broker" (i.e., the buyer's broker) is not a subagent of the seller. Instead, the multiple listing simply creates an obligation on the part of the seller's broker to share its commission with the cooperating broker and does not offer the cooperating broker a true "subagency."

(a) [2:132] "Cooperating broker" lacks standing to sue seller for commission: Moreover, even though utilization of a multiple listing service may create a subagency relationship between the seller and buyer's broker, cooperating brokers ordinarily cannot sue on their own behalf for their expected share of the commission; the cooperating broker is simply an incidental beneficiary of the seller's agreement to pay a commission and thus lacks standing to sue thereon. [See Colbaugh v. Hartline (1994) 29 CA4th 1516, 1523-1525, 35 CR2d 213, 216-217]

d. [2:133] Scope of agent's authority: The precise scope of a broker's agency authority ordinarily turns on the contract with its principal. [See generally, Civ.C. §§ 2315, 2316; Lyne v. Bonner (1954) 129 CA2d 743, 745-746, 277 P2d 941, 943] However, in addition to the authority expressly conferred upon them, agents are clothed with implicit incidental authority to do "everything necessary or proper and usual, in the ordinary course of business, for effecting the purpose" of their agency. [Civ.C. § 2319 (emphasis added)]

(1) [2:133.1] Ostensible authority: Although lacking express contractual authority (or authority incidental thereto, ¶ 2:133), an agent has such "ostensible authority" as the principal, either intentionally or through want of ordinary care, causes or allows a third person to believe the agent possesses. [Civ.C. § 2317; see also ¶ 2:242]

(2) [2:134] Ordinarily, no power to execute contracts for principal: Generally, absent the principal's express authorization, a broker has no authority to execute a contract of sale on behalf of the principal. [Lyne v. Bonner (1954) 129 CA2d 743, 746, 277 P2d 941, 943; see Holway v. Malloy (1945) 70 CA2d 317, 319-320, 160 P2d 893, 894-895]

Indeed, under the so-called "equal dignities rule," an agent's authority to enter into a contract must be in writing whenever the contract itself is required by the statute of frauds to be in writing (¶ 4:226.1). [Civ.C. § 2309; Jacobs v. Locatelli (2017) 8 CA5th 317, 324, 213 CR3d 514, 520]

(3) [2:135] Limitations on handling funds: The Real Estate Law and regulations promulgated thereunder also severely restrict the manner in which brokers may handle funds belonging to the parties in a purchase and sales transaction. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10145 (generally requiring deposit into trust fund account unless immediately placed into neutral escrow depository); 10 CCR § 2830 et seq.]

e. [2:138] Duration of agency: Unless the listing agreement provides for a shorter term, a real estate agent's duties terminate when the subject matter of the agency (the property) is "sold or otherwise disposed of." Therefore, the agency generally terminates with the close of escrow; and the agent has no post-escrow agency duties to the principal (seller or buyer). [Robinson v. Grossman (1997) 57 CA4th 634, 646, 67 CR2d 380, 387; but see Blickman Turkus, LP v. MF Downtown Sunnyvale, LLC (2008) 162 CA4th 858, 887, 76 CR3d 325, 348—agent's disclosure duty may continue after agency relationship terminates if it is foreseeable principal will continue to rely on agent for information and agent fails to inform principal no further information will be provided]

Again, however, a broker may have an enforceable right to compensation even though the agency has terminated (see ¶ 2:355 ff.).

3. [2:139] "Dual Agency" Problems: A "dual agency" (or dual representation") arises when the same salesperson (or same brokerage firm, through different salespersons, ¶ 2:139.1) represents both buyer and seller. In such cases, the broker (and any salesperson acting on the broker's behalf) is a fiduciary for both buyer and seller. [See Horiike v. Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage Co. (2016) 1 C5th 1024, 1028, 210 CR3d 1, 2; Fragale v. Faulkner (2003) 110 CA4th 229, 235, 239, 1 CR3d 616, 621, 624 & fn. 9]

This scenario raises one of the most serious problems in the real estate brokerage field … because a broker who is agent for both buyer and seller is put in the difficult (if not incongruous) position of being a fiduciary to parties who have directly competing interests. [See Glenn v. Rice (1917) 174 C 269, 272, 162 P 1020, 1021]

Nevertheless, under narrowly-defined circumstances (¶ 2:140 ff.), the law permits such dual agencies.

a. [2:139.1] Salespersons/broker associates: In carrying out its duties, including those of a dual agent, a broker may act through one or more salespersons or broker associates who operate under the broker's license and supervision. [See Civ.C. § 2079.13(a); Bus. & Prof.C. § 10010.5(a)(5) & (b) (explaining responsible broker's duty to supervise/oversee licensed acts of its salespersons/broker associates, whether they are independent contractors or employees, and broker's liability for their "actions or negligence"); see also Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10015.1 & 10015.3 (defining "responsible broker" and "broker associate")]

A salesperson or broker associate, however, does not have an independent agency relationship with the broker's clients. Instead, its agency relationship is derived from the broker's relationship with the clients and, as such, the "[salesperson or broker associate] owes the parties to the transaction the same duties as the broker on whose behalf [the salesperson or broker associate] acts." [See Horiike v. Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage Co. (2016) 1 C5th 1024, 1028, 1037-1038, 210 CR3d 1, 2, 9-10 (interpreting former Civ.C. § 2079.13(b) (now Civ.C. § 2079.13(a), 2nd para.))—listing salesperson who functioned on brokerage's behalf in dual agency transaction "stood in the shoes" of brokerage and owed buyer a disclosure duty "equivalent" to that of the brokerage—i.e., to disclose all facts materially affecting property's value or desirability]

(1) [2:139.2] Comment: In Horiike, supra, the Cal. Supreme Court acknowledged that in other dual agency cases a plaintiff's allegations may raise difficult questions regarding the scope of a real estate salesperson's fiduciary duties (e.g., if salespeople owe precisely the same duties as their employers, buyers and sellers could be denied the benefit of an exclusive salesperson's undivided loyalty and, worse, salespersons could have a duty to harm their original client by disclosing to the other side confidential information about the client's motivations or the salesperson's beliefs). Nonetheless, the Court concluded former § 2079.13(b) (now Civ.C. § 2079.13(a)), as presently written, "provides no basis for distinguishing between a broker's duty to learn of and disclose all facts materially affecting the value or desirability of the property and its [salesperson's or broker associate's] duty to do the same." Moreover, the Court concluded, "to the extent there is any uncertainty about the scope of a dual agent's fiduciary duties in other contexts," the Legislature is free to resolve the issue "by, for example, adopting legislation to uncouple [salesperson's or broker associate's] duties from those of the brokers they represent." [Horiike v. Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage Co. (2016) 1 C5th 1024, 1041-1042, 210 CR3d 1, 13]

b. [2:140] Principals' informed consent required: A real estate agent's fiduciary duty to faithfully represent the interests of the agent's principal includes the duty to make full disclosure of adverse interests. This is both a common law and statutory duty (¶ 2:141 ff.). [Brown v. FSR Brokerage, Inc. (1998) 62 CA4th 766, 777, 72 CR2d 828, 833; see also Ryan v. Real Estate of the Pacific, Inc. (2019) 32 CA5th 637, 646, 244 CR3d 129, 136 (¶ 2:157.10)]

Thus, a broker may properly act as "dual agent" for buyer and seller only with both parties' informed consent. [Civ.C. § 2079.16; Horiike v. Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage Co. (2016) 1 C5th 1024, 1028, 210 CR3d 1, 2; see also McConnell v. Cowan (1955) 44 C2d 805, 809, 285 P2d 261, 264; Brown v. FSR Brokerage, Inc., supra, 62 CA4th at 768-769, 72 CR2d at 828]

Brokers violate the real estate licensing law, and risk discipline, damages liability and a loss of compensation, if they act for more than one party in a transaction without the knowledge and consent of all parties thereto. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10176(d); see Brown v. FSR Brokerage, Inc., supra, 62 CA4th at 778, 72 CR2d at 834; and ¶ 2:149 ff. (remedies for nondisclosure)]

c. [2:141] Statutory written disclosure statement required: Seller's and buyer's agents for all real property (including mobilehomes) must provide the seller and buyer with a statutory written disclosure statement prescribed by Civ.C. § 2079.16. [Civ.C. § 2079.14(a); see Brown v. FSR Brokerage, Inc. (1998) 62 CA4th 766, 777, 72 CR2d 828, 833—"contemplated disclosure is to be in writing" (decided under former law)]

The § 2079.16 statement makes certain disclosures about the agent's fiduciary duties to the parties and about which party or parties to the transaction the agent is representing. The statutory form includes a section describing the effect of a "dual agency" and explaining that brokers and their salespersons and broker associates can legally act as agents for both buyer and seller in a transaction only with the knowledge and consent of both buyer and seller. The statutory form also includes a section explaining the seller's and buyer's responsibilities (see Civ.C. § 2079.16). [See Assilzadeh v. California Fed'l Bank, FSB (2000) 82 CA4th 399, 414, 98 CR2d 176, 185 (decided under similar former law)]

It is not enough simply to disclose the fact of dual representation. "The agent must also disclose all facts which would reasonably affect the judgment of each party in permitting the dual representation …" [Huijers v. DeMarrais (1992) 11 CA4th 676, 686, 14 CR2d 232, 238 (decided under similar former law)]

(1) [2:142] Timing: The statutory scheme times presentation of the disclosure statement in a manner intended to provide the parties with optimum opportunity to make an informed decision whether to retain the broker as agent in the transaction before signing an agency agreement. [Huijers v. DeMarrais (1992) 11 CA4th 676, 685, 14 CR2d 232, 238 (decided under former law)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

"We read [the statutes] as a legislative determination that the information required to be disclosed alerts the parties to the potentially harmful consequences of dual representation, so they can make an informed judgment." [Huijers v. DeMarrais, supra, 11 CA4th at 686, 14 CR2d at 238-239 (decided under former law)] Thus, the statement must be provided to the parties early in the transaction, as follows:

(a) [2:143] Seller/listing agents: A "seller's agent" (i.e., the person who has obtained a listing of real property to act as an agent for compensation; Civ.C. § 2079.13(f)) must provide the seller with the statement before entering into a listing agreement. [Civ.C. § 2079.14(a); see also Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10018.03 & 10018.04 (defining "listing agent" as licensee who provides services requiring real estate license for or on behalf of seller per listing agreement, and includes seller's agent who may or may not be listing agent)]

(b) [2:144] Buyer agents: A "buyer's agent" (i.e., the agent who represents a buyer in a real property transaction; Civ.C. § 2079.13(n); see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 10018.06 (defining "buyer's agent" as licensee who provides services requiring real estate license for or on behalf of buyer)) must provide the buyer with the disclosure statement "as soon as practicable" before execution of the buyer's offer to purchase; however, if the purchase offer is not prepared by the buyer's agent, the buyer's agent "shall present" the disclosure statement to the buyer no later than the next business day after receiving the offer to purchase from the buyer. [Civ.C. § 2079.14(b)]

[2:145] Reserved.

(c) [2:146] Subsequent assumption of dual agency: Information about whether an agent represents both buyer and seller may not always be known before the seller signs a listing agreement. Therefore, the Civil Code also provides that the buyer's agent must disclose to the buyer and seller "as soon as practicable" whether that agent represents the buyer only or both buyer and seller. Similarly, the seller's agent must disclose to the seller "as soon as practicable" whether they represent the seller only or both buyer and seller. Thus, a subsequent disclosure statement is required when an agent assumes a dual agency relationship with buyer and seller after the listing agreement is signed. [Civ.C. § 2079.17(a)-(d) (also stating agent's duty to provide disclosure and confirmation of representation may be performed by broker's real estate salesperson or broker associate); see Huijers v. DeMarrais (1992) 11 CA4th 676, 684, 14 CR2d 232, 237 (decided under similar former law)]

[2:146.1 - 2:146.4] Reserved.

(2) [2:146.5] Seller's/buyer's signed acknowledgment of receipt: The seller's agent and buyer's agent ordinarily must obtain the seller's and buyer's signed acknowledgment of receipt of the § 2079.16 disclosure statement (the statement includes an acknowledgment section; see Civ.C. § 2079.16). [Civ.C. § 2079.14]

• [2:146.6] Seller/buyer refuses to sign: If the seller or buyer refuses to sign the acknowledgment of receipt (¶ 2:146.5), the agent must execute a signed and dated written declaration of the facts of the refusal. [Civ.C. § 2079.15]

(3) [2:147] Additional written confirmation upon execution of sale contract: The buyer's agent's relationship (whether acting solely as agent for buyer or as dual agent for both buyer and seller) must be confirmed in the purchase and sale contract or in a separate writing executed or acknowledged by the seller, buyer and buyer's agent prior to or coincident with the parties' execution of the contract. [Civ.C. § 2079.17(a); and see Civ.C. § 2079.17(c) for form of confirmation]

The seller's agent's relationship (whether acting solely as the agent for seller or as dual agent for both buyer and seller) must be confirmed in the purchase and sale contract or in a separate writing executed or acknowledged by the seller and seller's agent prior to or coincident with execution of the contract by the seller. [Civ.C. § 2079.17(b); and see Civ.C. § 2079.17(c) for form of confirmation]

This separate disclosure and confirmation is in addition to the disclosure statement required by Civ.C. § 2079.14 (¶ 2:141). [Civ.C. § 2079.17(d)] And neither may be deemed a substitute for the other. [See Huijers v. DeMarrais (1992) 11 CA4th 676, 685, 14 CR2d 232, 237-238 (decided under former law)—providing Civ.C. § 2079.16 disclosure statement at time purchase contract signed insufficient]

(4) [2:148] Limitation on dual agent's disclosures: The broad disclosure requirements are limited by two important exceptions: Unless the seller expressly consents, a dual agent "may not" disclose to the buyer any "confidential information" obtained from the seller. Conversely, a dual agent "may not" disclose to the seller any confidential information obtained from the buyer without the express permission of the buyer. [Civ.C. § 2079.21(a), (b)]

Section 2079.21 defines "confidential information" as "facts relating to the client's financial position, motivations, bargaining position, or other personal information that may impact price" (e.g., seller's willingness to accept a price less than the listing price or buyer's willingness to pay a price greater than the price offered). [See Civ.C. § 2079.21(c), (d) (also providing Civ.C. § 2079.21 "does not alter in any way the duty or responsibility of a dual agent to any principal with respect to confidential information other than price"); Brown v. FSR Brokerage, Inc. (1998) 62 CA4th 766, 777, 72 CR2d 828, 834 (decided under former law)]

(5) Remedies for nondisclosure

(a) [2:149] Professional discipline: Failure to make the requisite dual agency disclosures violates the licensing law (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10176(d); see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 10176(a) & § 10177(o); and ¶ 2:114, 2:140), for which the Real Estate Commissioner may suspend or revoke the agent's real estate license (¶ 2:113). [McConnell v. Cowan (1955) 44 C2d 805, 812-813, 285 P2d 261, 266]

(b) [2:150] Avoidance of transaction; relief from compensation agreement; damages: But the consequences are not confined to professional discipline. There is also a private remedy on behalf of the aggrieved principal:

"The remedy for a real estate agent's breach of a duty to disclose a dual representation of both buyer and seller is that the principal is not liable to pay the agent's commission, and the principal may avoid the transaction … It makes no difference that the principal was not in fact injured, or that the agent intended no wrong or that the other party acted in good faith …" [Huijers v. DeMarrais (1992) 11 CA4th 676, 686, 14 CR2d 232, 238 (emphasis added); see McConnell v. Cowan (1955) 44 C2d 805, 809-810, 285 P2d 261, 264; L. Byron Culver & Associates v. Jaoudi Industrial & Trading Corp. (1991) 1 CA4th 300, 305, 1 CR2d 680, 682—"unless both principals know of the dual agency at the time of the transaction, the agent cannot recover a commission from either"]

1) [2:151] Limitation on avoidance of purchase contract where disclosure statement ultimately provided—relief turns on rescission remedy: However, a delayed disclosure statement, given after the time prescribed by statute (¶ 2:142 ff.) but before the parties signed the purchase contract, does not itself trigger the right to avoid the purchase contract. While the principal may be relieved of the obligation to pay a commission, avoidance of the purchase contract turns on the right to a rescission remedy (e.g., whether other party to the deal misrepresented any material facts). [Huijers v. DeMarrais (1992) 11 CA4th 676, 686, 14 CR2d 232, 239—reversed for further findings on whether seller had right to rescind based on buyer's misrepresentation about seller's obligation to pay commission notwithstanding listing broker's noncompliance with statute governing timing of disclosure statement]

Cross-refer: The remedy of rescission in purchase and sale transactions is discussed in detail at ¶ 11:460 ff.

2) [2:152] Limitation on avoidance of listing agreement where disclosure statement would be "superfluous" (principal aware of disclosure information): Moreover, courts have discretion to enforce the listing agreement (obligation to pay agent's commission) notwithstanding the agent's failure to provide the requisite disclosure statement where the principal nonetheless was aware of the statutory information:

"We do not mean to say that the failure to provide a disclosure form will always result in a voidable listing agreement. A seller, for example, who has sufficient knowledge concerning the information contained in the disclosure form may be held to the listing agreement even though [the seller] did not receive the disclosure form." But a finding that the principal had "considerable knowledge and experience with respect to real estate and other transactions" is "not the equivalent to a finding of sufficient knowledge to make the disclosure form superfluous." [Huijers v. DeMarrais (1992) 11 CA4th 676, 687, 14 CR2d 232, 239 (emphasis added)]

3) [2:153] Compare—principal's "acceptance of benefits" immaterial to avoidance of compensation obligation: That the principal consummated the transaction notwithstanding the broker's nondisclosure of the dual agency and thus received a "financial benefit" from the broker's efforts does not change the rule barring the broker's recovery of a commission. "A bar to recovery is a matter of public policy." [L. Byron Culver & Associates v. Jaoudi Industrial & Trading Corp. (1991) 1 CA4th 300, 306, 1 CR2d 680, 683, fn. 4]

4) [2:153.5] Damages remedy as alternative to rescission: The aggrieved principal is not confined to a rescission remedy. In the alternative, they may elect to "stand behind" the sale transaction and instead sue the dual agent for losses suffered in reliance on the agent's advice, unaware the agent was representing both sides in the deal. But the damages remedy is, of course, limited to whatever monetary loss the principal can prove on account of the agent's misconduct. [Brown v. FSR Brokerage, Inc. (1998) 62 CA4th 766, 778, 72 CR2d 828, 834—seller, unaware until after transaction closed that his agent was also representing buyer, could pursue damages cause of action against agent for persuading him to sell for less than asking price on agent's representation "this was the best he was going to get" (triable issue of fact whether buyer in fact would have paid more)]

d. [2:154] Distinguish—"finders": As indicated earlier, a "finder" is not held to broker/salesperson licensing requirements and fiduciary standards (¶ 2:37 ff.). If the scope of a broker's employment is limited to bringing the parties together so they may negotiate their own purchase and sale contract, the broker is a mere "finder" and, upon performance, is entitled to agreed-upon compensation even though the other party is unaware of the finder's employment—i.e., disclosure to the other party is not a condition to receipt of the agreed-upon compensation. [McConnell v. Cowan (1955) 44 C2d 805, 810-811, 285 P2d 261, 265]

Again, however, a mere "finder" has no authority to negotiate and does not negotiate terms on which the buyer and seller will deal … so, that, unlike a dual agent, there is no opportunity for the finder to sacrifice either principal's interests to the detriment of the other. The so-called "finder's exception" to the limitations on dual agency does not apply where the purported "finder," engaged by both parties, is clothed with some discretion in advising or negotiating the transaction; in such event, they cannot recover compensation from either unless both buyer and seller know of the dual agency at the time of the transaction. [See McConnell v. Cowan, supra, 44 C2d at 811, 285 P2d at 265—supposed "finder" was in fact a dual agent and thus denied compensation because of failure to disclose dual agency]

4. [2:155] Broker's Agency Duties and Standards of Conduct, Generally: Standing in a fiduciary relationship with their principals, real estate brokers are subject to the same highest duty of good faith and fair dealing that is imposed on trustees acting on behalf of their beneficiaries (see ¶ 2:123).

More particularly, as fiduciaries for their principals, brokers are bound by a host of specified duties and obligations:

a. [2:156] Duty of loyalty and good faith: [Burch v. Argus Properties, Inc. (1979) 92 CA3d 128, 131, 154 CR 485, 487]

b. [2:157] Duty to be honest and truthful: [Ward v. Taggart (1959) 51 C2d 736, 741, 336 P2d 534, 537]

c. [2:157.1] Duty to investigate and disclose material facts that might affect principal's decision: Real estate brokers have a fiduciary duty to disclose to their principal(s) (including both buyer and seller in a "dual agency" situation, ¶ 2:139) all "material facts—that is, all facts which might affect the principal's willingness to enter into or complete a transaction." Roberts v. Lomanto (2003) 112 CA4th 1553, 1567, 5 CR3d 866, 876 (emphasis added)]

In this context, "[t]he test of materiality is objective: whether a reasonable person in the principal's position would have acted differently had he known the undisclosed facts." [Roberts v. Lomanto, supra, 112 CA4th at 1567, 5 CR3d at 876 (emphasis added)]

(1) [2:157.2] Buyer's agent's fiduciary duty: The buyer's agent's fiduciary duty to disclose material facts to the buyer includes a duty to disclose reasonably obtainable material information, which may require the agent to investigate facts not directly known to the agent. [Field v. Century 21 Klowden-Forness Realty (1998) 63 CA4th 18, 25-26, 73 CR2d 784, 789-790; see also William L. Lyon & Assocs., Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Henley) (2012) 204 CA4th 1294, 1311, 139 CR3d 670, 683—broker's duty to use reasonable skill and care on buyer's behalf operates independently of statutory/contractual duties owed; Leko v. Cornerstone Bldg. Inspection Service (2001) 86 CA4th 1109, 1115-1116, 103 CR2d 858, 863-864—broker's duty to buyer includes obligation to discover and disclose material defects in property]

A buyer's broker who breaches this fiduciary duty may be liable for, among other things, negligence, negligent misrepresentation and actual or constructive fraud (¶ 2:157.3 ff.). [William L. Lyon & Assocs., Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Henley), supra, 204 CA4th at 1311, 139 CR3d at 683]

• [2:157.3] The failure of a home buyer's broker to investigate and disclose efflorescence, bubbling, blistering and cracking stucco covered up with dark paint supported the buyer's complaint for breach of fiduciary duty, fraud, negligence and negligent misrepresentation. [See William L. Lyon & Assocs., Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Henley) (2012) 204 CA4th 1294, 1311, 139 CR3d 670, 683—broker acting as dual listing agent owed both statutory and (more extensive) common law fiduciary duties to buyer]

• [2:157.4] The failure by an employee of a buyer's broker to disclose property defects observed prior to close of escrow supported the buyer's action for negligent nondisclosure and constructive fraud against the broker. [Michel v. Moore & Assocs., Inc. (2007) 156 CA4th 756, 762-763, 67 CR3d 797, 801-803]

[2:157.5] Reserved.

(a) [2:157.6] When duty arises: The broker's fiduciary duty to disclose material facts about the property arises upon creation of the principal-broker relationship—before the purchase contract is entered into. [Exxess Electronixx v. Heger Realty Corp. (1998) 64 CA4th 698, 711, 75 CR2d 376, 385]

(b) [2:157.7] Verifying information from others: When transmitting material information from the seller (or others) to the buyer, the buyer's broker must either verify the accuracy of the information or disclose to the buyer that the information has not been verified. [Salahutdin v. Valley of Calif., Inc. (1994) 24 CA4th 555, 562-563, 29 CR2d 463, 466-467 & fn. 3]

A buyer's broker who accepts material information from others as being true and transmits it to the buyer without verification or disclosing to the buyer that it has not been verified breaches the broker's fiduciary duty and may be liable to the buyer for negligent misrepresentation or "constructive fraud." [Salahutdin v. Valley of Calif., Inc., supra, 24 CA4th at 562-563, 29 CR2d at 466-467 & fn. 3; Field v. Century 21 Klowden-Forness Realty (1998) 63 CA4th 18, 26, 73 CR2d 784, 789]

On the other hand, the "buyer's agent is not required to verify information received from the seller and passed on to the buyer if the buyer understands the agent is merely passing on unverified information." [Pagano v. Krohn (1997) 60 CA4th 1, 11, 70 CR2d 1, 6; see Assilzadeh v. California Fed'l Bank, FSB (2000) 82 CA4th 399, 417, 98 CR2d 176, 187-188]

(2) [2:157.10] Seller's agent's fiduciary duty: A broker engaged by a property owner to market and sell the owner's property likewise has a fiduciary duty to the seller (the broker's principal) to disclose all "material facts" (again, meaning those facts that might affect the seller's decision to proceed with the transaction). [Roberts v. Lomanto (2003) 112 CA4th 1553, 1563, 5 CR3d 866, 873; see also Ryan v. Real Estate of the Pacific, Inc. (2019) 32 CA5th 637, 646, 244 CR3d 129, 136—seller's broker who knew neighbor's extensive remodeling plans would adversely affect value of seller's property had duty to inform seller]

(a) [2:157.11] Effect of agent also acting as principal in transaction: The broker's fiduciary duty remains the same even if the broker (or the broker's relative or associate) may also be a principal in the real estate transaction. "In other words, once an agency relationship has been created between the agent and the seller, the agent is not absolved of fiduciary duties merely because [the agent] is also buying or selling as a principal." [Roberts v. Lomanto (2003) 112 CA4th 1553, 1563, 1566, 5 CR3d 866, 873, 875 (internal brackets and quotes omitted)]

In this situation, the broker's fiduciary duty to their principal does not terminate once the purchase agreement between the seller and the broker (buyer) is executed. [Roberts v. Lomanto, supra, 112 CA4th at 1563, 1566, 5 CR3d at 873, 875]

• [2:157.12] Seller executed an agreement to sell his property to his Broker for $11 million. Subsequently, and while still acting as Seller's agent, Broker assigned the purchase agreement to Third Party Buyer with Seller's consent. Broker told Seller that Third Party Buyer was paying her an assignment fee but refused to disclose the amount of the fee or the total price Third Party Buyer had agreed to pay. After the deal closed, Seller learned Third Party Buyer had paid Broker $12.2 million for the property, which included a $1.2 million assignment fee.

Broker's failure to disclose to Seller the details of the assignment transaction deprived Seller of his ability to insist that the assignment fee be paid to him as part of the property purchase price. "In this transaction, [Broker] clearly acted in her best interest and not in the best interest of her principal, in breach of her fiduciary duty to [Seller]." [Roberts v. Lomanto (2003) 112 CA4th 1553, 1563, 1568, 5 CR3d 866, 873, 877; see also ¶ 2:162 ff.]

(3) [2:157.15] Compare—seller's agent's *nonfiduciary statutory duty to buyer: The seller's agent owes a limited statutory duty of inspection and disclosure to the buyer (Civ.C. § 2079). But, absent "dual agency" situations (¶ 2:139 ff.), the seller's agent is not in a fiduciary relationship with the buyer and thus owes no fiduciary duties to the buyer. A broker's fiduciary duty of inspection and disclosure is independent of and more extensive than the § 2079 statutory duty (¶ 2:173 ff.). [Field v. Century 21 Klowden-Forness Realty (1998) 63 CA4th 18, 25, 73 CR2d 784, 789; Michel v. Moore & Assocs., Inc. (2007) 156 CA4th 756, 762, 67 CR3d 797, 802; see also Saffie v. Schmeling (2014) 224 CA4th 563, 568, 168 CR3d 766, 769—brokers owe third parties, including adverse parties in real estate transactions, only those duties imposed by regulatory statutes (i.e., the general obligation of honesty, fairness and full disclosure)]

(4) [2:157.16] Joint and several liability issues: The inspection and disclosure duty of the buyer's broker overlaps to some degree with the seller's broker's duty of inspection and disclosure owed prospective purchasers (¶ 2:170 ff.). And each of those duties may overlap with the statutory duty owed by a home inspection company retained by the buyer to conduct an inspection with due care (Bus. & Prof.C. § 7196; see ¶ 4:350.3).

When the brokers and home inspection company all breach coextensive duties by failure to discover and disclose the same condition or defect in the property, each will be jointly and severally liable to the buyer for consequential injury and may pursue equitable indemnity claims among themselves. [Leko v. Cornerstone Bldg. Inspection Service (2001) 86 CA4th 1109, 1116, 1119, 103 CR2d 858, 864, 866 (buyers sued seller's and buyers' agents for failure to discover and disclose structural defects from Northridge earthquake; realtors could pursue equitable indemnity claim against home inspection company that allegedly failed to discover and disclose same defects)]

d. [2:158] Duty to disclose relationship with other party: [Smith v. Zak (1971) 20 CA3d 785, 794-795, 98 CR 242, 248—seller's broker must disclose relationship with buyer even though broker has no financial interest in buyer or the transaction (other than right to commission); see In re Mehdipour (9th Cir. BAP 1996) 202 BR 474, 480-481, aff'd (9th Cir. 1998) 139 F3d 1303 (applying Calif. law)—seller's broker breached fiduciary duty by failing fully to disclose unrelated partnership with buyers and that he loaned them part of purchase price; and ¶ 2:139 ff. re duty to disclose dual agency]

e. [2:159] Duty to disclose intent to purchase: [Batson v. Strehlow (1968) 68 C2d 662, 675-676, 68 CR 589, 598—seller's broker breaches fiduciary duty by becoming purchaser (or purchasing on behalf of entity in which broker has an interest) without seller's full knowledge and consent]

f. [2:160] Duty to disclose all offers: [Nguyen v. Scott (1988) 206 CA3d 725, 736, 253 CR 800, 806; Smith v. Zak (1971) 20 CA3d 785, 793, 98 CR 242, 246—duty to disclose all offers to buy, in addition to offer accepted]

g. [2:161] Duty of care and diligence: Brokers are obligated to exercise reasonable skill and care in the performance of their duties. Holding themselves out as professionals with superior knowledge in real estate transactions, brokers are subject to the standard of care that would be exercised by a reasonably prudent real estate broker or salesperson acting in a similar capacity. [Wilson v. Hisey (1957) 147 CA2d 433, 438, 305 P2d 686, 690]

h. [2:162] Duty to disclose profits: Absent the principal's consent, profits from a real estate transaction belong to the principal, not the broker. Thus, brokers are not permitted to make any "secret" profits or compensation from or through their agency, and must disclose any and all profits to be received in connection with their agency. [Roberts v. Lomanto (2003) 112 CA4th 1553, 1569-1570, 5 CR3d 866, 878-879; Bate v. Marsteller (1965) 232 CA2d 605, 616, 43 CR 149, 157; see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 10176(g) (¶ 2:114); and 12 USC § 2607—brokers may not receive any "kickback" from transactions involving a "federally related mortgage loan" (¶ 4:639)]

(1) [2:162.1] Subject to disgorgement: Undisclosed compensation, commissions or profits received by a broker from the broker's agency activities must be returned (disgorged) regardless of whether the principal incurred any loss because of the nondisclosure. [Savage v. Mayer (1949) 33 C2d 548, 551, 203 P2d 9, 10; Roberts v. Lomanto (2003) 112 CA4th 1553, 1570, 5 CR3d 866, 878-879—broker not entitled to retain "secret" assignment fee even though transaction yielded principal full asking price]

A broker is liable for "secret" profits even though the benefits flowed strictly to a third party and the broker did not share in the profits. [St. James Armenian Church of Los Angeles v. Kurkjian (1975) 47 CA3d 547, 553, 121 CR 214, 218]

i. [2:163] Duty to account for monies: Similarly, brokers must account to their principals for all funds belonging to others which they receive in connection with the real estate transaction; and are prohibited from commingling their own funds with the funds of others. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10145 (funds not immediately turned over to principal or placed in neutral escrow depository must generally be placed in trust fund account); 10 CCR §§ 2830-2832, 2835]

j. [2:164] Statutory disclosure duties: Aside from the general disclosure obligations inherent in any agency relationship, real estate brokers are subject to several express statutory disclosure requirements. See ¶ 2:139 ff. (dual agency disclosures); and ¶ 2:173 ff.

k. [2:165] Duty to review instruments: Every instrument prepared or signed by a real estate salesperson which has a "material effect" on the rights or obligations of a party to the transaction must be reviewed, initialed and dated by the broker employing the salesperson. [10 CCR § 2725(a)]

l. [2:166] Duty not to discriminate: Real estate agents also are bound not to engage in discriminatory conduct in connection with real estate brokerage activities. [10 CCR § 2780; see also 10 CCR § 2725—licensed broker has duty to familiarize salespersons with federal and state antidiscrimination laws]

More specifically, brokers are bound by state and federal statutes barring discrimination, including:

- California Fair Employment and Housing Act (Gov.C. § 12900 et seq.), which prohibits discrimination with respect to housing (see also Gov.C. § 12956.1—before giving copies of previously-recorded deeds, declarations or governing documents to others, realtor must affix prescribed statement advising any restrictive covenants in said documents that violate state/federal fair housing laws are void and may be removed by submitting "Restrictive Covenant Modification" form, together with copy of attached document with unlawful provision redacted, to county recorder's office pursuant to Gov.C. § 12956.2 (discussed further at ¶ 3:235.6 ff.); similarly, when delivering copies of deeds, declarations or governing documents directly to persons holding record ownership interests in property, a "Restrictive Covenant Modification" form must be provided with procedural information for appropriate processing along with said documents (Gov.C. § 129561));

- Fair Housing Act of 1968 (42 USC § 3601 et seq.), the federal statutory scheme prohibiting discrimination in housing;

- Unruh Civil Rights Act (Civ.C. § 51 et. seq.), which bans discrimination by a "business establishment" regarding housing accommodations.

5. Specific Disclosure Obligations

a. Inspection and disclosure of condition of property—seller/listing broker's duty to prospective buyers

(1) [2:170] Common law genesis of statutory duty—"Easton investigation and disclosures": A residential real estate broker's statutory inspection and disclosure obligations (Civ.C. § 2079 et seq., ¶ 2:173 ff.) derive from the common law duty found to exist in case law. [Easton v. Strassburger (1984) 152 CA3d 90, 102, 199 CR 383, 390]

Under Easton, brokers have an affirmative obligation to conduct a "reasonably competent and diligent inspection" of residential property listed for sale and to "disclose to prospective purchasers all facts materially affecting the value or desirability of the property that such an investigation would reveal." [Easton v. Strassburger, supra, 152 CA3d at 102, 199 CR at 390 (emphasis added); see Robinson v. Grossman (1997) 57 CA4th 634, 640, 67 CR2d 380, 383; Loken v. Century 21-Award Properties (1995) 36 CA4th 263, 269-270, 42 CR2d 683, 687]

(a) [2:170.1] Scope of duty and liability: The Easton disclosure duty (as now defined by statute, ¶ 2:173 ff.) applies to material facts affecting the value or desirability of the property and of which the broker is actually aware or should have been aware by a reasonable inspection. Undisclosed facts are "material" if they would have a significant and measurable effect on the property's market value. [Assilzadeh v. California Fed'l Bank, FSB (2000) 82 CA4th 399, 410, 98 CR2d 176, 182; Sweat v. Hollister (1995) 37 CA4th 603, 608, 43 CR2d 399, 402 (disapproved on other grounds by Santisas v. Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 609, 71 CR2d 830, 836, fn. 5, and Brannon v. Sup.Ct. (Crippen) (2004) 114 CA4th 1203, 1205, 1211, 8 CR3d 491, 492, 496); see also Holmes v. Summer (2010) 188 CA4th 1510, 1518-1519, 116 CR3d 419, 424-425—monetary liens and encumbrances may affect value and desirability of residential properties]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

For a breach of the duty to inspect and disclose known and knowable material facts affecting the value of the property, a seller's broker is subject to consequential liability to the buyer on a common law negligence or fraud theory. [See Easton v. Strassburger (1984) 152 CA3d 90, 103, 199 CR 383, 390-391 (residential property that suffered soil subsidence)—seller's broker should have been aware of various "red flags" indicating problems with soil movement and had duty to disclose same to buyer, rendering broker liable to buyer on negligence theory; Holmes v. Summer (2010) 188 CA4th 1510, 1528, 116 CR3d 419, 432 (overencumbered residential property)—seller's broker had duty to disclose substantial risk that overencumbered residential property could not be freely transferred, rendering broker potentially liable to buyer on negligence theory; Lingsch v. Savage (1963) 213 CA2d 729, 735-740, 29 CR 201, 204-207 (buyers granted leave to amend to allege fraud cause of action)]

1) [2:170.2] Not legal consequences of factual conditions: Brokers satisfy their duty to inspect and disclose by informing the buyer of the facts affecting desirability or value of the property. It is not up to the broker to disclose to the buyer the legal consequences or ramifications of the factual nature of realty or offer conclusions as to how those facts may adversely impact value. [Sweat v. Hollister (1995) 37 CA4th 603, 608-609, 43 CR2d 399, 402 (disapproved on other grounds by Santisas v. Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 609, 71 CR2d 830, 836, fn. 5, and Brannon v. Sup.Ct. (Crippen) (2004) 114 CA4th 1203, 1205, 1211, 8 CR3d 491, 492, 496); Assilzadeh v. California Fed'l Bank, FSB (2000) 82 CA4th 399, 412, 98 CR2d 176, 183-184]

- [2:170.3] For example, a buyer who purchases a residence after being informed by the seller's broker the property is located in a flood plain has no actionable nondisclosure claim against the broker for failure also to advise that a city ordinance prevented homes in designated flood plains from being remodeled or enlarged.

  Although the value of the home was adversely affected by the building restrictions, the fact that made the property subject to the ordinance (location in a flood plain) was disclosed; it was not necessary for the seller to further disclose the legal disabilities associated with that fact. "It is not the obligation of the seller to research local land use ordinances and advise a buyer as to their effect on the realty." [Sweat v. Hollister (1995) 37 CA4th 603, 609, 43 CR2d 399, 402 (disapproved on other grounds by Santisas v. Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 609, 71 CR2d 830, 836, fn. 5, and Brannon v. Sup.Ct. (Crippen) (2004) 114 CA4th 1203, 1205, 1211, 8 CR3d 491, 492, 496)]
- [2:170.4] Similarly, when a buyer is accurately informed about applicable zoning, the seller's broker need not also advise concerning the detrimental aspects and consequences of specific zoning. Like local ordinances regulating construction in a flood plain, the existence and effect of zoning regulations is information as readily available to buyers as to sellers and seller's agents. [Sweat v. Hollister (1995) 37 CA4th 603, 609, 43 CR2d 399, 402 (dictum) (disapproved on other grounds by Santisas v. Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 609, 71 CR2d 830, 836, fn. 5, and Brannon v. Sup.Ct. (Crippen) (2004) 114 CA4th 1203, 1205, 1211, 8 CR3d 491, 492, 496)]
- [2:170.5] Where a condominium buyer was aware of the "essential facts" concerning moisture intrusion in some of the units, the buyer's broker fulfilled its fiduciary duty to the buyer by disclosing the existence of a pending lawsuit by the homeowners association against the developer and the fact it arose from water intrusion problems at the development. The broker had no duty to tell the buyer the lawsuit might adversely affect the value of the buyer's unit. [Pagano v. Krohn (1997) 60 CA4th 1, 12, 70 CR2d 1, 7]
- [2:170.6] Likewise, brokers who disclosed to a condo buyer that the project's homeowners association had sued the developer for construction defects and that the litigation had settled were not further bound to investigate and disclose that because of the defects the floor in buyer's unit could not bear the weight of marble. Brokers had no actual knowledge of the details of the lawsuit; and once the buyer was informed of the litigation, the details were within buyer's "diligent attention" (she could have examined the court file). [Assilzadeh v. California Fed'l Bank, FSB (2000) 82 CA4th 399, 411, 98 CR2d 176, 183]

2) [2:170.8] Not opinions re value: The common law (and statutory) disclosure duty pertains to material facts. It does not include a duty to disclose opinions learned from others concerning how the practical ramifications of disclosed facts might adversely impact the property's value. [Assilzadeh v. California Fed'l Bank, FSB (2000) 82 CA4th 399, 411-412, 98 CR2d 176, 183-184—statements in "Broker's Price Opinion" constituted "no more than a vague and general speculation concerning the possible market value of [buyer's] unit at some unspecified future time," not an additional fact about construction defect litigation that required disclosure; see also ¶ 2:170.2]

3) [2:170.9] Includes matters of public record: Although a buyer is deemed to have constructive notice regarding matters of public record, the seller's broker still has a duty to disclose the recorded matters if they affect the value or desirability of the property (e.g., significant liens and encumbrances that may affect free transferability of the property; ¶ 2:170.1).

Indeed, residential buyers typically do not perform preliminary title searches since sellers generally provide preliminary title reports during escrow; moreover, title reports generally do not disclose current encumbrance balances. Thus, constructive notice of such matters does not mean "a cause of action in tort arising out of failure to disclose will not lie." [See Holmes v. Summer (2010) 188 CA4th 1510, 1521-1522, 116 CR3d 419, 426-427]

4) [2:170.10] No liability to third parties: The broker's inspection and disclosure obligations run only to the "intended beneficiaries" of the broker's advice—ordinarily, only the buyer and prospective buyers. No inspection and disclosure duties are owed to third persons who are not parties (or in privity with parties) to the purchase and sale transaction. [Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage Co., Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Salazar) (2004) 117 CA4th 158, 166, 11 CR3d 564, 570 (citing text)—no broker disclosure duties owed to those with whom broker has no "broker-customer" relationship; see also ¶ 2:234.1]

A broker may be liable to a third party only if they intended to supply information about the property for that party's benefit and as an objective of the particular broker service rendered. [Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage Co., Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Salazar), supra, 117 CA4th at 166-167, 11 CR3d at 570-571]

• [2:170.11] Partygoers at Buyer's newly-purchased home were injured and some killed when the home's balcony collapsed from a defective beam that was allegedly not disclosed by Seller's Brokers. Brokers owed no duty to the partygoers and thus were not liable to plaintiffs in their suit for personal injury and wrongful death because the partygoers had no customer relationship with Brokers and could not be classified as "intended beneficiaries" of the allegedly negligent information provided by Brokers concerning the balcony's defect. [FSR Brokerage, Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Blanco) (1995) 35 CA4th 69, 73-74, 41 CR2d 404, 408—no plaintiffs or their heirs were sellers, buyers or prospective buyers, nor in contractual privity with brokers]

• [2:170.12] While living in his mother's newly-purchased house, plaintiff minor allegedly developed asthma caused by toxic mold in the house that allegedly was not disclosed by Seller's Broker. Plaintiff failed to state a cause of action against Broker because a broker-customer relationship existed only between his mother and Broker. The information supplied by Broker regarding the property was solely for the mother's benefit (to guide her in a real estate transaction). "Any benefit to, or effect on, [plaintiff minor] resulted not as an intended objective or purpose of [Broker's] role as broker in the real estate transaction, but rather from [plaintiff's] relationship to [his mother] as buyer of the house." [Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage Co., Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Salazar) (2004) 117 CA4th 158, 166-167, 11 CR3d 564, 570-571]

(b) [2:171] Commercial real estate? The court in Easton limited its holding to residential property, expressing "no opinion" whether a broker's obligation to conduct an inspection for defects for the buyer's benefit applies to the sale of commercial real estate. [Easton v. Strassburger (1984) 152 CA3d 90, 102, 199 CR 383, 390, fn. 8]

Even so, dictum in Easton suggests a comparable duty of inspection and disclosure does not exist in the commercial property arena and that any common law negligence or fraud liability will be limited to the failure to disclose defects of which the broker had actual knowledge: "Unlike the residential home buyer who is often unrepresented by a broker, or is effectively unrepresented because of the problems of dual agency …, a purchaser of commercial real estate is likely to be more experienced and sophisticated in his dealings in real estate and is usually represented by an agent who represents only the buyer's interests …" [Easton v. Strassburger, supra, 152 CA3d at 102, 199 CR at 390, fn. 8]

Cases postdating Easton, construing the now-statutory duty of inspection and disclosure (¶ 2:173 ff.), have declined to extend the Easton obligation to the sale of commercial properties. [See Smith v. Rickard (1988) 205 CA3d 1354, 1360, 254 CR 633, 636; RSB Vineyards, LLC v. Orsi (2017) 15 CA5th 1089, 1097-1098, 223 CR3d 458, 464-466 (involving sale of vineyard and residence previously converted into commercial wine-tasting room)—sellers who lacked actual/constructive knowledge of deficiencies in converted building not liable for failure to disclose same; and ¶ 2:176]

(c) [2:172] Compare—breach of fiduciary duty: The Easton obligation (as now defined by statute, ¶ 2:173 ff.) applies to sellers' brokers even though they are not in an agency relationship with, and hence owe no fiduciary duties to, the buyer—i.e., a seller's broker has a duty to inspect and reveal to prospective buyers known or knowable material defects in residential property even though the broker is acting strictly as the seller's agent.

On the other hand, a broker who is the buyer's agent (including a "dual agent") is a fiduciary for the buyer and may be held negligent as a fiduciary for failing to inspect the property and disclose reasonably discoverable defects to the buyer. These fiduciary duties, incident to the agency relationship, are broader than the Easton duty that runs between broker and a nonclient (see also ¶ 2:157.1 ff.). [Field v. Century 21 Klowden-Forness Realty (1998) 63 CA4th 18, 25, 73 CR2d 784, 789; see also William L. Lyon & Assocs., Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Henley) (2012) 204 CA4th 1294, 1311, 139 CR3d 670, 677, 683—broker serving as dual agent owes purchaser not only statutory inspection/disclosure duty but also "higher fiduciary duty" to act with "utmost care, integrity, honesty and loyalty"; compare Assilzadeh v. California Fed'l Bank, FSB (2000) 82 CA4th 399, 415-417, 98 CR2d 176, 186-187 (no breach of fiduciary duty)—having been told by dual agent of construction defect suit and settlement and that condo unit was being purchased "as is," buyer had duty to investigate further to determine whether defects would affect her plans to alter unit]

"An agent must exercise reasonable skill and care for the benefit of the principal in the performance of agency duties, and will be liable for any damages suffered by the principal as a result of the agent's negligence … Those duties may include inspecting the property and disclosing any material defects to the principal." [Smith v. Rickard (1988) 205 CA3d 1354, 1363-1364, 254 CR 633, 638-639 (emphasis added); see Montoya v. McLeod (1985) 176 CA3d 57, 64-65, 221 CR 353, 358; see also Salahutdin v. Valley of Calif., Inc. (1994) 24 CA4th 555, 562-563, 29 CR2d 463, 466-467 & fn. 3—buyer's broker breaches fiduciary duty to buyer by failing to investigate accuracy of third-party representations broker transmits to buyer or to disclose lack of verification]

The fiduciary duty of inspection/disclosure applies both in residential and commercial real estate transactions. [See Smith v. Rickard, supra, 205 CA3d at 1363-1364, 254 CR at 638-639 (dictum because defendant broker not in agency relationship with buyer)]

(2) [2:173] Statutory inspection and disclosure obligations (Civ.C. § 2079 et seq.)—residential property: The common law duty of inspection and disclosure under the Easton line of authority is now codified and clarified by Civ.C. § 2079 et seq. [William L. Lyon & Assocs., Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Henley) (2012) 204 CA4th 1294, 1304, 139 CR3d 670, 677]

(a) [2:173.1] Impact on common law Easton duty and other broker duties: The statutory scheme includes a statement of legislative intent expressly providing that Civ.C. §§ 2079-2079.6 should be construed as a definition of the duty of care found to exist in Easton (¶ 2:170 ff.) and the manner of its discharge; and that the Legislature's purpose was to "codify and make precise" the Easton holding. [Civ.C. § 2079.12(a)(4), (b); Assilzadeh v. California Fed'l Bank, FSB (2000) 82 CA4th 399, 412-413, 98 CR2d 176, 184; Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage Co., Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Salazar) (2004) 117 CA4th 158, 164, 11 CR3d 564, 569]

The statutes are deemed declarative of the common law regarding the Easton inspection and disclosure duty (effectively "trumping" inconsistent common law regarding this duty). But the Legislature has not preempted the court's ability to interpret §§ 2079-2079.6; nor does the enactment of these statutes modify or restrict existing duties owed by real estate licensees. [See Civ.C. § 2079.12(a)(4) & (b); Field v. Century 21 Klowden-Forness Realty (1998) 63 CA4th 18, 24, 73 CR2d 784, 788; Robinson v. Grossman (1997) 57 CA4th 634, 641, 67 CR2d 380, 383 & fn. 3; see Williams v. Wells & Bennett Realtors (1997) 52 CA4th 857, 862-863, 61 CR2d 34, 37—pursuant to Civ.C. § 2079.12, neither Easton nor statutory scheme changes preexisting law regarding broker's fraudulent concealment of material defects known to broker but unknown to prospective buyer]

(b) [2:174] Limited to residential properties and used manufactured homes/mobilehomes: Civ.C. § 2079 et seq. applies to the sale of residential real property improved with one-to-four dwelling units, or to the sale of used manufactured homes (as defined in Health & Saf.C. § 18007) and mobilehomes (as defined in Health & Saf.C. § 18008) by brokers or salespersons licensed under the Real Estate Law. [See Civ.C. § 2079(a); Health & Saf.C. §§ 18025(c), 18046(c)]

(Parallel inspection/disclosure obligations apply to the sale of used manufactured homes and mobilehomes by dealers and salespersons licensed under the Mobilehomes-Manufactured Housing Act. See Health & Saf.C. § 18046(d); and ¶ 2:176.5.)

1) [2:175] Certain leases included: The statutory scheme also applies to (i) leases of such property which include an option to purchase; (ii) ground leases of land on which one to four dwelling units have been constructed; and (iii) real property sales contracts (as defined by Civ.C. § 2985, ¶ 4:112) for such property. [Civ.C. § 2079.1]

2) [2:176] Not commercial property: On the other hand, Civ.C. § 2079 et seq. does not apply to commercial real estate transactions. [Civ.C. §§ 2079, 2079.1; Smith v. Rickard (1988) 205 CA3d 1354, 1360, 254 CR 633, 636]

(But see ¶ 2:172—dual agent may be liable to buyer on breach of fiduciary duty theory.)

[2:176.1 - 2:176.4] Reserved.

(c) [2:176.5] Which brokers/salespersons: The duty imposed by Civ.C. § 2079 et seq. applies to real estate brokers and salespersons, licensed under the Real Estate Law, who have a "written contract with the seller to find or obtain a buyer" or who act in cooperation with such a broker to find and obtain a buyer. Thus, the seller's/listing agent (or cooperating agent) bears the statutory obligation of inspection and disclosure. [Civ.C. § 2079(a) (emphasis added); see also Health & Saf.C. § 18046(c)—sale of used manufactured homes or mobilehomes by broker or salesperson licensed under Real Estate Law "shall be subject to" Civ.C. § 2079]

The same inspection/disclosure duty applies to resales of manufactured homes and mobilehomes by dealers and salespersons licensed under the Mobilehomes-Manufactured Housing Act who have a written contract with the seller to find or obtain a buyer or who act in cooperation with others to find and obtain a buyer. [See Health & Saf.C. § 18046(d)]

1) [2:176.6] Not brokers exclusively representing buyers; broader fiduciary duty distinguished: The Civ.C. § 2079 statutory duty is imposed solely on seller's brokers and cooperating brokers. Brokers who exclusively represent the buyer are outside the ambit of § 2079 but owe their principals (buyers) far more expansive fiduciary duties of inspection and disclosure (see ¶ 2:157.1 ff.). [Field v. Century 21 Klowden-Forness Realty (1998) 63 CA4th 18, 20-21, 73 CR2d 784, 786; see also Michel v. Moore & Assocs., Inc. (2007) 156 CA4th 756, 762, 67 CR3d 797, 802—fiduciary duty owed buyer is substantially greater than § 2079 negligence standard of due care (¶ 2:178 ff.)]

2) [2:176.7] Dual agents: Arguably, the Civ.C. § 2079 inspection/disclosure duty equally applies to a broker representing both seller and buyer ("dual agent," ¶ 2:139 ff.) so long as such a broker has a "written contract with the seller to find or obtain a buyer" as provided by Civ.C. § 2079(a) (¶ 2:176.5). [See Assilzadeh v. California Fed'l Bank, FSB (2000) 82 CA4th 399, 414, 98 CR2d 176, 185]

As a practical matter, however, the point is academic because Civ.C. § 2079.16 incorporates equivalent obligations for dual agents; and those obligations are also part of the broader fiduciary duties owed by dual agents to both buyer and seller. [Assilzadeh v. California Fed'l Bank, FSB, supra, 82 CA4th at 414-415, 98 CR2d at 185-186]

3) [2:176.8] "Cooperating brokers" subject to § 2079: A buyer's broker is not a "cooperating broker" within the meaning of Civ.C. § 2079 simply because they helped the seller's broker complete the sale transaction. A cooperating broker encompassed by the statute is one who acts in cooperation with the seller's broker to "find or obtain a buyer" (Civ.C. § 2079(a); see also Health & Saf.C. § 18046(d)). Section 2079 was not meant to apply to brokers who exclusively represent the buyer as direct fiduciary. [Field v. Century 21 Klowden-Forness Realty (1998) 63 CA4th 18, 27, 73 CR2d 784, 790—broker contracted to act as buyer's sole agent in search for residence to purchase, not to find buyer for seller's residence]

(d) [2:176.15] To whom duty owed: The duties imposed on brokers under Civ.C. § 2079 are owed exclusively to prospective buyers, and not to other persons who are not parties to the real estate transaction. "Only a transferee, that is, the ultimate purchaser, can recover from a broker or agent for breach of these duties." [Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage Co., Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Salazar) (2004) 117 CA4th 158, 165, 11 CR3d 564, 569; see also ¶ 2:170.10 ff.]

Third parties cannot circumvent this duty limitation by alleging that the broker actively concealed or intentionally suppressed facts subject to the Civ.C. § 2079 disclosure requirements. "[A]llegations of willful misconduct are not determinative. The broker's disclosure duty is to the transferee whether the breach is willful or negligent." [Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage Co., Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Salazar), supra, 117 CA4th at 168, 11 CR3d at 572 (internal quotes and citation omitted)—characterizing broker as "actively negligent" does not change analysis or result; see also ¶ 2:234.1]

1) [2:176.16] Compare—homeowners association's standing to sue on members' behalf: Although not owed any duties itself, the homeowners association for a common interest development is statutorily empowered to pursue its members' claims against real estate agents for breach of fiduciary duty, concealment and intentional misrepresentation in matters concerning damage to the common areas. [See Civ.C. § 5980; Glen Oaks Estates Homeowners Ass'n v. Re/Max Premier Properties, Inc. (2012) 203 CA4th 913, 919-922, 137 CR3d 865, 870-872; see also River's Side at Washington Square Homeowners Association v. Sup.Ct. (River's Side LLC) (2023) 88 CA5th 1209, 1238, 305 CR3d 532, 555 (order sustaining demurrer without leave to amend reversed)—homeowner's association had standing to pursue its members' claims against individual unit vendors as to defects in common areas]

(e) [2:177] Nature and scope of duty: Brokers and salespersons subject to Civ.C. § 2079 (or Health & Saf.C. § 18046(d)) have a two-pronged duty: first, to conduct a "reasonably competent and diligent visual inspection of the property"; and second, to "disclose to … prospective buyer[s] all facts materially affecting the value or desirability of the property that an investigation would reveal." [Civ.C. § 2079(a) (emphasis added); Health & Saf.C. § 18046(d); Ryan v. Real Estate of the Pacific, Inc. (2019) 32 CA5th 637, 645, 244 CR3d 129, 135; Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage Co., Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Salazar) (2004) 117 CA4th 158, 165, 11 CR3d 564, 569; see also Peake v. Underwood (2014) 227 CA4th 428, 442, 173 CR3d 624, 636—duty extends only to what reasonably competent and diligent visual inspection of property would reveal (¶ 2:179.1); Furla v. Jon Douglas Co. (1998) 65 CA4th 1069, 1077-1078, 76 CR2d 911, 915-916—duty encompasses reasonably accurate statement of square footage]

1) [2:177.1] Legal consequences of apparent defects not within disclosure duty: The legal ramifications of various factual conditions of the property are not themselves "facts" within the Civ.C. § 2079 disclosure duty. Seller's agents are not required to disclose conclusions as to value resulting from the factual nature of realty. [Sweat v. Hollister (1995) 37 CA4th 603, 608-609, 43 CR2d 399, 402 (disapproved on other grounds by Santisas v. Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 609, 71 CR2d 830, 836, fn. 5, and Brannon v. Sup.Ct. (Crippen) (2004) 114 CA4th 1203, 1205, 1211, 8 CR3d 491, 492, 496)—broker discharged § 2079 duty by disclosing residence was located in flood plain and was not bound to further disclose that city ordinance precluded remodeling or expansion of flood plain property; Pagano v. Krohn (1997) 60 CA4th 1, 12, 70 CR2d 1, 7; see more detailed discussion at ¶ 2:170.2 ff.]

2) [2:177.2] Broker's "good faith" reliance on seller's representations protected: A seller's agent has no duty under Civ.C. § 2079 to independently verify or disclaim the accuracy of the seller's representations. The post-Easton statutory scheme simply requires the seller's agent to act in good faith and not to pass the seller's representations on to the buyer without a reasonable basis for believing them to be true. [Robinson v. Grossman (1997) 57 CA4th 634, 643-644, 67 CR2d 380, 385—seller's broker had no duty to verify seller's representations that stucco cracks were only cosmetic and that leaks causing interior water stains and paint peeling had been repaired]

Once the sellers and their agent make the § 2079 disclosures, "it is incumbent upon the potential purchasers to investigate and make an informed decision based thereon." [Robinson v. Grossman, supra, 57 CA4th at 644, 67 CR2d at 385 (emphasis added); Assilzadeh v. California Fed'l Bank, FSB (2000) 82 CA4th 399, 413, 98 CR2d 176, 184-185]

3) [2:177.3] Compare—buyer's broker's broader fiduciary duty: The duty contemplated by Civ.C. § 2079 does not rise to the level of fiduciary obligations owed by brokers to their clients. In some contexts, a buyer's agent's fiduciary duty of inspection/disclosure may be far more expansive than the "cursory type of visual inspection" Civ.C. § 2079 requires of sellers' brokers to benefit nonclient buyers (¶ 2:179 ff.). [Field v. Century 21 Klowden-Forness Realty (1998) 63 CA4th 18, 27, 73 CR2d 784, 790; see also William L. Lyon & Assocs., Inc. v.Sup.Ct. (Henley) (2012) 204 CA4th 1294, 1311, 139 CR3d 670, 683—dual listing agent's failure to disclose material defects supported buyer's action for breach of fiduciary duty, fraud, negligence and negligent misrepresentation (¶ 2:157.3); Michel v. Moore & Assocs., Inc. (2007) 156 CA4th 756, 762, 67 CR3d 797, 802—fiduciary's failure to disclose material information to principal constitutes negligent misrepresentation and constructive fraud (¶ 2:157.4 & 11:365 ff.)]

For example, in transmitting information from the seller (or others) to the buyer, the buyer's broker must either verify the information or disclose to the buyer that it has not been verified (see ¶ 2:157.7). As stated, this is not within the seller's agent's statutory obligation to the buyer (see ¶ 2:177.2).

(f) [2:178] Standard of care: In carrying out the Civ.C. § 2079 duty of inspection and disclosure, brokers must exercise the degree of care that would be exercised by "a reasonably prudent real estate licensee." That standard of care is measured by the "degree of knowledge through education, experience, and examination" required to obtain a real estate broker's/salesperson's license (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10000 et seq., ¶ 2:70 ff.). [Civ.C. § 2079.2; Michel v. Moore & Assocs., Inc. (2007) 156 CA4th 756, 763, 67 CR3d 797, 802-803—§ 2079 codifies negligence standard of care for "one particular task" imposed on brokers—i.e., seller's agent's obligation to visually inspect property and disclose results to buyer; see also Health & Saf.C. § 18046.1—licensed dealers of used manufactured homes and mobilehomes subject to comparable standard of care vis-á-vis "reasonably prudent [licensed] dealer"]

Also, a broker's or salesperson's obligations pursuant to § 2079 include a duty to comply with DRE regulations "imposing standards of professional conduct. . ." [See Civ.C. § 2079(b)]

[2:178.1 - 2:178.4] Reserved.

(g) [2:178.5] Form of disclosures: The inspection disclosures required by Civ.C. § 2079 are to be made on the agent's portion of the Civ.C. § 1102.6 real estate transfer disclosure statement (or, with regard to manufactured home/ mobilehome resales, the Civ.C. § 1102.6d transfer disclosure statement) when the property transfer is subject to the § 1102 et seq. disclosure requirements (see ¶ 2:185, 4:354 ff.). If the transfer is not subject to Civ.C. § 1102 et seq. (e.g., sales or transfers between spouses or co-owners, sales or transfers of any portion of property not constituting single-family residential property, and the sale, creation or transfer of leases of any duration except leases with options to purchase or ground leases coupled with improvements; see Civ.C. § 1102.2), a broker's § 2079 inspection disclosures may be made in a separate writing. [Civ.C. § 1102.1(a), (b) & (c)]

(h) [2:179] Matters outside duty of inspection: Only a visual inspection is required. [Civ.C. § 2079(a); Field v. Century 21 Klowden-Forness Realty (1998) 63 CA4th 18, 24, 73 CR2d 784, 788; see Wilson v. Century 21 Great Western Realty (1993) 15 CA4th 298, 308, 18 CR2d 779, 784—absence of steel reinforcement and "J" bolts in foundation not discernible by visual inspection and thus outside scope of Civ.C. § 2079 inspection duty; see also Salahutdin v. Valley of Calif., Inc. (1994) 24 CA4th 555, 562, 29 CR2d 463, 466, fn. 3—absent "red flags" visible from reasonably diligent visual inspection indicating property was not size represented, § 2079 would not encompass duty to survey property or make sure it was size represented (dictum)]

Further, the requisite visual inspection does not include the following:

1) [2:179.1] Inaccessible areas: The broker/salesperson has no obligation to inspect "reasonably and normally inaccessible" areas. [Civ.C. § 2079.3; Assilzadeh v. California Fed'l Bank, FSB (2000) 82 CA4th 399, 413, 98 CR2d 176, 184; Wilson v. Century 21 Great Western Realty (1993) 15 CA4th 298, 308, 18 CR2d 779, 784-785; see Peake v. Underwood (2014) 227 CA4th 428, 443, 173 CR3d 624, 637—no breach of duty where defective subfloors were neither visible nor apparent during reasonable property inspection]

2) [2:179.2] Off-site areas and public records: The requisite visual inspection does not include an affirmative inspection of areas off the site of the subject property or public records or permits concerning title or use of the property. [Civ.C. § 2079.3; Assilzadeh v. California Fed'l Bank, FSB (2000) 82 CA4th 399, 413, 98 CR2d 176, 184; see Padgett v. Phariss (1997) 54 CA4th 1270, 1282, 63 CR2d 373, 379—Civ.C. § 2079 does not require real estate agents to study court files to see whether property is in litigation; see also Sweat v. Hollister (1995) 37 CA4th 603, 609, 43 CR2d 399, 402 (disapproved on other grounds by Santisas v. Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 609, 71 CR2d 830, 836, fn. 5, and Brannon v. Sup.Ct. (Crippen) (2004) 114 CA4th 1203, 1205, 1211, 8 CR3d 491, 492, 496)—"It is not the obligation of the seller to research local land use ordinances and advise a buyer as to their effect on the realty"]

3) [2:179.3] Planned development, etc. units: If the property comprises a unit in a planned development (Bus. & Prof.C. § 11003), condominium (Civ.C. § 783) or stock cooperative (Bus. & Prof.C. § 11003.2), the broker/salesperson is not required to inspect more than the unit offered for sale, provided the seller or broker complies with Civ.C. § 4525 et seq. (i.e., the transfer disclosure requirements applicable to noncommercial/nonindustrial common interest developments, including providing prospective purchasers with governing documents and notice of any restrictions, assessments or violations, etc.). [See Civ.C. § 2079.3; Assilzadeh v. California Fed'l Bank, FSB (2000) 82 CA4th 399, 413, 98 CR2d 176, 184; Pagano v. Krohn (1997) 60 CA4th 1, 9, 70 CR2d 1, 5]

a) [2:179.4] No duty to inquire of homeowners' association: Thus, at least absent facts putting the broker on notice that there might be defects in the common areas, a broker has no duty under Civ.C. § 2079 to inquire of a planned unit development's homeowners' association regarding common area defects or pending construction defect litigation. [Padgett v. Phariss (1997) 54 CA4th 1270, 1282, 63 CR2d 373, 379—pursuant to Civ.C. § 2079.3, "this type of extended inspection is not required"]

b) Application

• [2:179.5] Seller of a condominium unit represented that she knew of no flooding, drainage or grading problems in the development. Seller's Agent represented she knew of nothing to contradict that statement; and further represented that, while other units had experienced moisture intrusion, according to Seller, there were no such problems in Seller's unit.

Having disclosed the "essential facts" about water intrusion in the development, Seller's Agent had no obligation to inspect other units and provide more specific information regarding the water intrusion problems the other units had suffered. [Pagano v. Krohn (1997) 60 CA4th 1, 9, 70 CR2d 1, 5—seller's broker "not obligated to disclose the details of water intrusion affecting other specific units in the development absent some reason to believe [buyer's] unit would likely suffer the same fate"]

(i) [2:179.10] Ordinarily, no disclosure obligations after termination of agency: A broker's inspection and disclosure obligations are an incident of the agency. Real estate agents' duties (even to their own clients) ordinarily terminate "when the subject matter of agency is sold or otherwise disposed of"—i.e., at the close of escrow. [Robinson v. Grossman (1997) 57 CA4th 634, 646, 67 CR2d 380, 387 (internal quotes omitted)]

But this is not an inflexible, automatic rule: Although not common in a straightforward residential purchase and sale transaction, an agent may remain under a duty of disclosure after technical termination of the agency "when it is foreseeable to the agent that the principal will continue to rely on the agent for information and the agent does not inform the principal that no further information will be provided." [See Blickman Turkus, LP v. MF Downtown Sunnyvale, LLC (2008) 162 CA4th 858, 887-888, 76 CR3d 325, 348 (quoting Rest.3d Agency § 8.11, comm. "c") (involving complex commercial lease transaction where lessor charged lessee's agent with duty to disclose lessee's deteriorating financial condition after lease had been executed)]

(j) [2:180] Two-year statute of limitations: An action against a seller's (or cooperating) broker/salesperson for breach of the Civ.C. § 2079 obligations must be brought within two years of the "date of possession." [Civ.C. § 2079.4 (emphasis added); William L. Lyon & Assocs., Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Henley) (2012) 204 CA4th 1294, 1305, 139 CR3d 670, 678]

The "date of possession" triggering commencement of the limitations period is the date of recordation, the date escrow closes, or the date of the buyer's occupancy, whichever occurs first. [Civ.C. § 2079.4; compare William L. Lyons & Assocs., Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Henley), supra, 204 CA4th at 1307-1314, 139 CR3d at 679-685 (contrasting more flexible limitations period for action involving dual listing agent, triggered by dates buyers discovered or should have discovered breach of agent's contractual/fiduciary duties); Field v. Century 21 Klowden-Forness Realty (1998) 63 CA4th 18, 25, 73 CR2d 784, 788 (contrasting more flexible limitations period for action involving broker who exclusively represented buyers, triggered by date buyers discovered or should have discovered broker's fiduciary negligence)]

1) [2:180.1] Applicable to any action against nonfiduciary brokers arising out of § 2079 duty to inspect/disclose: The Civ.C. § 2079.4 two-year statute applies to a "legal action for breach of duty imposed by [Civ.C. § 2079 et seq.]." [Civ.C. § 2079.4]

Thus, the statutory two-year bar applies to any cause of action (regardless of the label used) against a nonfiduciary broker (i.e., by a nonclient buyer against a seller's or cooperating broker) that arises out of the broker's statutory duty to inspect and disclose. [Field v. Century 21 Klowden-Forness Realty (1998) 63 CA4th 18, 27, 73 CR2d 784, 790, fn. 12; Loken v. Century 21-Award Properties (1995) 36 CA4th 263, 272, 42 CR2d 683, 689]

a) [2:180.2] Actions "sounding in negligence": Clearly, the two-year statute applies to negligence actions against a seller's broker premised on the broker's negligent inspection and consequent failure to disclose what a diligent inspection would have revealed. [See generally, Williams v. Wells & Bennett Realtors (1997) 52 CA4th 857, 865, 61 CR2d 34, 39 (distinguishing between negligence and fraud claims)]

1/ [2:180.3] Including negligent misrepresentation: Even a negligent misrepresentation cause of action (which has its roots in fraud) is subject to the two-year statute if the underlying wrongful conduct stems from the seller's (or cooperating) broker's Civ.C. § 2079 duty to inspect and disclose. [Loken v. Century 21-Award Properties (1995) 36 CA4th 263, 273, 42 CR2d 683, 689]

For example, in Loken, supra, Seller's Broker represented there were no problems with the house, that it appeared to be in a very structurally sound condition, and the only defect discovered after a "competent and diligent visual inspection" was a cracked driveway. However, evidence at trial showed a cracked slab and significant other cracks and structural problems which Broker failed to discover and disclose, indicating Broker's inspection was at least negligent and that there was a failure to disclose what a diligent inspection would have revealed. The essence of Buyer's negligent misrepresentation cause of action was Broker's negligent actions in breach of the § 2079 duty to inspect and disclose; thus, "there can be no question that it falls within the two-year limitation period of section 2079.4." [Loken v. Century 21-Award Properties, supra, 36 CA4th at 268, 273, 42 CR2d at 686, 689]

2/ [2:180.4] Actions alleging per se violation of Civ.C. § 1102: Likewise, a cause of action against a seller's broker alleging a "per se violation" of Civ.C. § 1102 et seq. (requiring a seller's "real estate transfer disclosure statement," a section of which requires the seller's agent to disclose defects found after a visual inspection, ¶ 2:185) is subject to the Civ.C. § 2079.4 two-year statute because it "sounds in negligence" and stems from the Civ.C. § 2079 inspection disclosure duty. [Loken v. Century 21-Award Properties (1995) 36 CA4th 263, 274, 42 CR2d 683, 690]

2) [2:180.10] Inapplicable to intentional fraud actions: By contrast, the Civ.C. § 2079.4 limitations period does not apply to an intentional fraud cause of action against a broker premised on the broker's deliberate concealment of material facts known to the broker. [Williams v. Wells & Bennett Realtors (1997) 52 CA4th 857, 865, 61 CR2d 34, 39]

Reason: In enacting Civ.C. § 2079 et seq., the Legislature made clear it was not changing pre-Easton law relating to duties owed by real estate agents (Civ.C. § 2079.12, ¶ 2:173.1). Thus, unaffected by the statutory scheme —including Civ.C. § 2079.4—is preexisting law requiring brokers to disclose defects known to the broker but unknown to the prospective buyer, and subjecting brokers to fraudulent concealment liability for a failure to disclose such known facts. [Williams v. Wells & Bennett Realtors, supra, 52 CA4th at 862-863, 865, 61 CR2d at 37, 39 (distinguishing Loken as premised on broker's negligent acts); see also Peake v. Underwood (2014) 227 CA4th 428, 444-446, 173 CR3d 624, 638-639—listing agent who knew of prior problems in residence's subflooring and disclosed same to buyer during escrow had no duty "as a matter of law" to disclose additional defects neither visible nor apparent during reasonable property inspection]

3) [2:180.11] Inapplicable to actions by *client against broker: The Civ.C. § 2079 duties run between the seller's agent (or cooperating agent) and a nonclient buyer (¶ 2:176.5 ff.). Thus, since the Civ.C. § 2079.4 two-year statute is limited to actions arising out of Civ.C. § 2079, it does not apply in suits brought by clients against their brokers. [Field v. Century 21 Klowden-Forness Realty (1998) 63 CA4th 18, 20-21, 73 CR2d 784, 786; see also William L. Lyon & Assocs., Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Henley) (2012) 204 CA4th 1294, 1305, 139 CR3d 670, 678—two-year limitations period did not apply to buyers' action against seller's broker acting as dual agent]

a) [2:180.12] Seller's implied contractual indemnity action against broker: The Civ.C. § 2079.4 statute of limitations is inapplicable to a seller's action for implied contractual indemnity against the seller's broker based upon a breach of duty owed to the seller to properly perform the broker-client agreement. [William L. Lyon & Assocs., Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Henley) (2012) 204 CA4th 1294, 1315, 139 CR3d 670, 685—sellers' indemnity action did not accrue until they suffered actual loss through payment; West v. Sup.Ct. (Willis M. Allen Co.) (1994) 27 CA4th 1625, 1633-1635, 34 CR2d 409, 413-414—purchasers sued both sellers and brokers but suit against brokers dismissed because barred by § 2079.4]

b) [2:180.13] Buyer's breach of fiduciary duty action against broker: Similarly, Civ.C. § 2079.4 does not apply to suits for breach of fiduciary duty against brokers by purchasers whom they exclusively represent. [Field v. Century 21 Klowden-Forness Realty (1998) 63 CA4th 18, 20-21, 73 CR2d 784, 786—§ 2079.4 did not bar buyers' suit against their brokers based on brokers' failure to determine extent of easement was substantially more burdensome than represented and acreage was not accurate]

As earlier explained, the fiduciary duty of a broker to investigate for a buyer whom the broker exclusively represents does not derive from Civ.C. § 2079 but, rather, is independent of, and more expansive than, the seller's broker's separate nonfiduciary § 2079 duty (¶ 2:157.2 ff., 2:176.6). [Field v. Century 21 Klowden-Forness Realty, supra, 63 CA4th at 25, 73 CR2d at 789]

Moreover, since suits involving fiduciaries are governed by a more flexible statute of limitations (accrual is measured by the date plaintiff discovers, or should have discovered, the wrongful act, rather than by the fixed two-years-from-possession rule of § 2079.4), "to apply section 2079.4 to fiduciary duties of a buyer's broker would, contrary to the Legislature's express statement of intent [see ¶ 2:173.1], restrict the ability of buyers to obtain redress for duties owed by their own real estate licensees which existed before section 2079.4 was enacted." [Field v. Century 21 Klowden-Forness Realty, supra, 63 CA4th at 25, 73 CR2d at 789]

(k) [2:181] Buyer's duty of care not affected: Civ.C. § 2079 et seq. does not relieve buyers of the duty to exercise reasonable care to protect themselves. In particular, regardless of the broker's disclosures, buyers cannot turn a blind eye to known facts or facts within their "diligent attention and observation." [Civ.C. § 2079.5; Furla v. Jon Douglas Co. (1998) 65 CA4th 1069, 1079, 76 CR2d 911, 916; see Assilzadeh v. California Fed'l Bank, FSB (2000) 82 CA4th 399, 413, 417, 98 CR2d 176, 184, 187—having been told of condo project's construction defect litigation and that her unit was being purchased "as is," buyer had duty to investigate whether defects involved in lawsuit would affect her remodeling plans; Pagano v. Krohn (1997) 60 CA4th 1, 10, 70 CR2d 1, 5—buyers knew about water intrusion at condo complex and "additional details they fault [seller's broker] for not disclosing … were within their own diligent attention"]

Actionable nondisclosure relates to facts not discoverable by the purchasers. By contrast, there is no actionable breach of § 2079 duties with regard to information as readily available to prospective buyers as it is to the seller's brokers. [Sweat v. Hollister (1995) 37 CA4th 603, 608-609, 43 CR2d 399, 402 (disapproved on other grounds by Santisas v. Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 609, 71 CR2d 830, 836, fn. 5, and Brannon v. Sup.Ct. (Crippen) (2004) 114 CA4th 1203, 1205, 1211, 8 CR3d 491, 492, 496)—no duty to disclose existence and effect of city ordinances regulating rebuilding or improvement of house in disclosed flood plain ("That disabilities may exist should be obvious to any buyer")]

1) [2:182] Question of fact: Whether the buyer unreasonably failed to protect themself or unjustifiably failed to discover true conditions presents a factual issue for resolution by the trier of fact. [See Furla v. Jon Douglas Co. (1998) 65 CA4th 1069, 1079, 76 CR2d 911, 917—issue of fact (not determinable by summary judgment) whether true square footage was "obvious and patent" to buyer, thereby making his reliance on seller's broker's representation unjustified]

b. [2:185] Additional seller's transfer disclosure statement re physical condition of residential property: To further protect residential real estate buyers, a statutory-form "transfer disclosure statement" must be delivered by the seller to the buyer before a purchase and sale contract is executed. The statutory disclosure form contains a checklist for giving notice of existing or potential problems concerning the physical condition of the property and cautions the buyer that, in connection therewith, they may wish to obtain professional advice and/or inspections of the property. [Civ.C. § 1102 et seq.; see Civ.C. §§ 1102.3, 1102.6; Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage Co., Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Salazar) (2004) 117 CA4th 158, 164-165, 11 CR3d 564, 569; and ¶ 4:358 ff. re exact time for delivery of statement]

(1) [2:185.1] Which property transactions: The statutory disclosure statement requirements apply to any transfer by sale, exchange, real property sales contract (as defined by Civ.C. § 2985, ¶ 4:112 ff.), lease with option to purchase, other option to purchase, or ground lease coupled with improvements of "single-family residential property." [Civ.C. § 1102(a); see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 10018.08 (defining "single-family residential property" as (i) real property improved with one to four dwelling units, including any leasehold exceeding one year's duration of such, (ii) a unit in a residential stock cooperative, condominium or planned unit development, and (iii) mobile/manufactured homes as statutorily specified (below)); Richman v. Hartley (2014) 224 CA4th 1182, 1184, 169 CR3d 475, 477 (decided under former law)—transfer disclosure requirements apply even to "mixed-use" properties if they contain up to four dwelling units]

The statutory disclosure requirements also apply to resales of manufactured homes (as defined in Health & Saf.C. § 18007) and mobilehomes (as defined in Health & Saf.C. § 18008) when offered for sale or sold through a real estate broker pursuant to Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131.6. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10018.08; see also Health & Saf.C. §§ 18025(c) & 18046(c)—sales of used manufactured homes/mobilehomes by licensed real estate brokers and salespersons subject to Civ.C. § 2079; Civ.C. § 798.74.4 (requirements include use of Civ.C. § 1102.6d Manufactured Home and Mobilehome Transfer Disclosure Statement; ¶ 2:185.3)]

(2) [2:185.2] Purpose: The transfer disclosure statement is intended to enable prospective buyers to rely on the information furnished in deciding whether and on what terms to purchase the property. [See Civ.C. § 1102.6 (Real Estate Transfer Disclosure Statement, Seller's Information); Calemine v. Samuelson (2009) 171 CA4th 153, 162, 89 CR3d 495, 502—Civ.C. § 1102 et seq. was enacted to make required disclosures "specific and clear"]

The statutory scheme itself (Civ.C. § 1102 et seq.) is "intended to provide real estate agents the means to elicit material information from the seller about the property …, and to deliver that information to the buyer." [Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage Co., Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Salazar) (2004) 117 CA4th 158, 164, 11 CR3d 564, 569 (emphasis added; original emphasis omitted) (citing Stats. 1985, Ch. 1574, § 2); see also Richman v. Hartley (2014) 224 CA4th 1182, 1187, 169 CR3d 475, 479—Legislature intended Transfer Disclosure Law to reduce litigation and disputes pertaining to certain real property sales transactions]

(3) [2:185.3] Form of transfer disclosure statement: The basic real estate transfer disclosure statement (for one-to-four-unit residential property) is prescribed by Civ.C. § 1102.6; and the required disclosures are itemized in the "Seller's Information" section of the form. The form also contains an "Agent's Inspection Disclosure," to be used by the seller's agent (or the agent who obtained the purchase offer) in making the inspection disclosures required by Civ.C. § 2079. It is the agent's responsibility to deliver the § 1102.6 statement to the buyer. [Civ.C. §§ 1102.1(a), 1102.6, 1102.12; see Robinson v. Grossman (1997) 57 CA4th 634, 641-642, 67 CR2d 380, 384]

A separate, but parallel, transfer disclosure form is prescribed by Civ.C. § 1102.6d for manufactured home/mobilehome resales. Like the Civ.C. § 1102.6 form (above), it contains a "Seller's Information" section for the requisite disclosures; and an "Agent's Inspection Disclosure" section for the seller's agent (or agent who obtained the purchase offer) to use in making the Civ.C. § 2079 inspection disclosures. [See Civ.C. §§ 1102.1(b) & (c), 1102.6d]

(The California Association of Realtors (C.A.R.) provides preprinted form transfer disclosure statements made in accordance with Civ.C. § 1102 et seq. The forms may be purchased online through C.A.R.'s subsidiary, the REBS Online Store, at www.car.org, or by contacting REBS Customer Service at (213) 739-8227.)

(a) [2:185.4] Agent Visual Inspection Disclosure (AVID) form: Although not required, brokers and salespersons (for both sellers and/or buyers) sometimes provide buyers of residential property with an AVID form. Its purpose is to formally notify a buyer of specific defects in the property known to the broker or salesperson. The AVID form also provides brokers and salespersons with a written record of the disclosures made. It normally is delivered prior to the close of escrow and may be attached to the Real Estate Transfer Disclosure Statement (¶ 2:185.3).

(Preprinted AVID forms may be purchased through C.A.R.; see ¶ 2:185.3.)

[2:185.5 - 2:185.9] Reserved.

(4) [2:185.10] Nonwaivable; effect of noncompliance: The Civ.C. § 1102 et seq. transfer disclosure requirements are nonwaivable—even in an "as is" sale. [Civ.C. §§ 102(c), 1102.1(a) & (b); see also Richman v. Hartley (2014) 224 CA4th 1182, 1192, 169 CR3d 475, 483 (noting any attempted waiver is void as against public policy)—"as-is" provision in parties' sale agreement could not, "as a matter of law, operate as a waiver of the Transfer Disclosure Law"]

A property transfer will not be invalidated solely for failure to deliver the requisite disclosure statement. But "any person" (meaning seller or agent) who "willfully or negligently" fails to comply with § 1102 et seq. "shall be liable" for the buyer's actual damages. [Civ.C. § 1102.13; but see Loken v. Century 21-Award Properties (1995) 36 CA4th 263, 274, 42 CR2d 683, 690—Civ.C. § 2079.4 2-year statute of limitations applies to § 1102.13 damages suit against broker (¶ 2:180.4)]

(5) [2:186] No effect on other disclosure obligations: Although the Legislature intended the Civ.C. §§ 1102.6/1102.6d transfer disclosure statements to be used by both sellers (in making Civ.C. § 1102 et seq. disclosures) and agents (in making Civ.C. § 2079 disclosures), nothing in Civ.C. § 1102 et seq. affects or changes a broker's/salesperson's inspection disclosure obligations pursuant to Civ.C. § 2079. [Civ.C. § 1102.1(a) & (b)]

Nor does Civ.C. § 1102 et seq. affect the parties' and agents' obligations under the law to disclose any facts materially affecting the value and desirability of the property, including, but not limited to, the physical conditions of the property and previously received reports of physical inspections noted on the Civ.C. § 1102.6 (or Civ.C. § 1102.6a) disclosure form. [Civ.C. § 1102.1(a) & (b); see Calemine v. Samuelson (2009) 171 CA4th 153, 161-162, 89 CR3d 495, 502—Legislature did not intend to alter seller's common law disclosure duty by enacting Civ.C. § 1102 et seq.]

Thus, a seller's agent is not shielded from liability for material nondisclosures affecting the value or desirability of the property simply by delivering the seller's Civ.C. § 1102.6 (or Civ.C. § 1102.6d) transfer disclosure statement to the buyer. The agent's obligations under Civ.C. § 2079 et seq. and consequential liability pursuant thereto, exist independently of Civ.C. § 1102 et seq. [Civ.C. § 1102.1(a) & (b); see also Civ.C. § 1102.8—specification of items for disclosure in Civ.C. § 1102 et seq. “does not limit or abridge any obligation for disclosure created by any other provision of law or which may exist in order to avoid fraud, misrepresentation, or deceit in the transfer transaction”]

(a) [2:186.1] Broker's Civ.C. § 2079 inspection disclosures required despite § 1102.2 exemption: Certain types of transfers are exempt from the Civ.C. § 1102 et seq. real estate transfer disclosure statement requirement (e.g., sales or transfers between spouses or co-owners, sales or transfers of any portion of property not constituting single-family residential property, and the sale, creation or transfer of leases of any duration except leases with options to purchase or ground leases coupled with improvements; see Civ.C. § 1102.2 (“sale” and “transfer” as used herein have their commonly understood meanings); and ¶ 4:362). However, these exemption provisions relate exclusively to the seller's § 1102 et seq. disclosure obligations and do not relieve brokers of their independent Civ.C. § 2079 inspection disclosure duties. (In a transaction not requiring a Civ.C. § 1102.6 or § 1102.6d transfer disclosure statement, brokers should make Civ.C. § 2079 inspection disclosures in a separate writing; ¶ 2:178.5.) [See Civ.C. §§ 1102.1(a) & (b), 1102.2]

c. [2:187] Natural hazard disclosures: In addition to the Civ.C. § 1102.6 (or Civ.C. § 1102.6d) seller's transfer disclosure statement (re physical condition of the property, ¶ 2:185, 4:354 ff.), sellers or their agents may have to make certain natural hazard disclosures (¶ 2:187.1 ff.) to prospective buyers. [Civ.C. § 1103 et seq.; Gov.C. §§ 8589.3, 8589.4, 51183.5; Pub.Res.C. §§ 2621.9, 2694, 4136]

(1) General rules

(a) [2:187.1] Which property: The Civ.C. § 1103.2 natural hazard disclosure rules apply to sales, exchanges, real property sales contracts as defined in Civ.C. § 2985, leases with options to purchase, any other options to purchase, and ground leases coupled with improvements, of any “single-family residential real property” located in a natural hazard zone (¶ 2:187.2). They also apply to resales of mobilehomes and manufactured homes (used for residential purposes) located in a natural hazard zone. [See Civ.C. § 1103(b); Bus. & Prof.C. § 10018.08 (defining “single-family residential real property” as (i) real property improved with one to four dwelling units, including any leasehold exceeding one year’s duration of such, (ii) units in residential stock cooperatives, condominiums or planned unit developments, and (iii) mobile/manufactured homes when offered for sale or sold through real estate brokers per Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131.6)]

Similar disclosure rules under the Government Code and the Public Resources Code apply to other types of property (commercial property included) in a natural hazard zone. [Gov.C. §§ 8589.3, 8589.4, 51183.5; Pub.Res.C. §§ 2621.9, 2694, 4136]

(b) [2:187.2] Which hazards: This separate disclosure duty applies when the property is located within a:

- special flood hazard area or area of potential flooding (shown on an inundation map prepared per Water Code § 6161) (¶ 2:187.25 ff.);

- earthquake fault zone or seismic hazard zone (¶ 2:187.30 ff.); or

- high or very high fire hazard severity zone or wildland fire area (¶ 2:187.35 ff.). [See Civ.C. §§ 1103(c), 1103.2(a) (amended Stats. 2023, Ch. 99; eff. 1/1/24); Gov.C. §§ 8589.3, 8589.4, 51183.5; Pub.Res.C. §§ 2621.9, 2694, 4136]

(c) [2:187.3] Nonwaivable; effect of noncompliance: Any waiver of the Civ.C. § 1103 et seq. disclosure requirements is void as against public policy. [Civ.C. § 1103(d)]

No transfer subject to the natural hazard disclosure requirements will be invalidated solely because of a failure to make the disclosures. However, any person who "willfully or negligently" violates or fails to perform a duty prescribed by Civ.C. § 1103 et seq. "shall be liable" for the transferee's actual damages resulting therefrom. [Civ.C. § 1103.13; Gov.C. §§ 8589.3(e), 8589.4(e), 51183.5(e); Pub.Res.C. §§ 2621.9(f), 2694(f), 4136(f)]

(d) Who bears disclosure burden

1) [2:187.4] Earthquake and flood hazards: With regard to earthquake and flood hazards, the disclosure burden rests principally with the seller's agent; but the seller has the disclosure obligation if they are acting without an agent. [See Civ.C. § 1103(c)(1), (2), (4), (5); Gov.C. §§ 8589.3(a), 8589.4(a); Pub.Res.C. §§ 2621.9(a), 2694(a)]

(Interestingly, however, Civ.C. § 1103.3 places the duty to deliver the disclosure statement on the seller in all cases. See ¶ 2:187.6.)

2) [2:187.5] Fire hazards: The statutes charge the seller or the seller's agent with the burden of disclosing fire hazards. [Civ.C. § 1103(c)(3), (6); Gov.C. § 51183.5(a); Pub.Res.C. § 4136(a)]

3) [2:187.6] Escrow agents not included: An escrow agent (unless holding a real estate license under the Real Estate Law) is not an agent of the seller (or buyer) for purposes of the natural hazard disclosure requirements unless the escrow agent is empowered to so act by express written agreement (in which event, the extent of that agency is governed by the written agreement). [Civ.C. § 1103.11; Gov.C. §§ 8589.3(d)(1), 8589.4(d)(1); Pub.Res.C. §§ 2621.9(e)(1), 2694(e)(1)]

4) [2:187.7] Multiple agents: When more than one licensed real estate broker is acting as agent in a transaction subject to Civ.C. § 1103 et seq., the broker who obtained the offer (except as otherwise provided in § 1103 et seq.) has the duty of delivering the disclosure statement to the transferee … unless the transferor has given other written delivery instructions. [Civ.C. § 1103.12(a)]

5) [2:187.8] Agents unable to obtain statement: If a licensed broker responsible for delivering disclosures under Civ.C. § 1103 et seq. cannot obtain the requisite disclosure document and does not have the transferee's written assurance that the disclosure has been received, the broker must give the transferee written notice of the transferee's rights to the disclosure. [Civ.C. § 1103.12(b) (also requiring broker to keep record of action to effect compliance in accordance with Bus. & Prof.C. § 10148 (¶ 2:116))]

[2:187.9] Reserved.

(e) [2:187.10] Form and timing of disclosures: The natural hazard disclosures ordinarily must be made through the "Natural Hazard Disclosure Statement" prescribed by Civ.C. § 1103.2. (In transactions subject to Civ.C. § 1103, an alternative Civ.C. § 1102.6a "Local Option Real Estate Disclosure Statement" may be used if it includes substantially the same information and warnings required by Civ.C. § 1103.2.) [Civ.C. § 1103.2(a), (e); Gov.C. §§ 8589.3(c), 8589.4(c), 51183.5(c); Pub.Res.C. §§ 2621.9(c), 2694(c), 4136(d)]

The seller of property subject to Civ.C. § 1103 et seq. (¶ 2:187.1) must deliver the requisite statement to the buyer (by personal delivery or mail, see Civ.C. § 1103.10) as follows:

- In sale transactions, "as soon as practicable" before the transfer of title. [Civ.C. § 1103.3(a)(1)]

- If the property is being sold by a real property sales contract (as defined in Civ.C. § 2985, ¶ 4:112 ff.), a lease with option to purchase, or a ground lease coupled with improvements, "as soon as practicable before the prospective buyer's execution of the contract." [See Civ.C. § 1103.3(a)(2) (defining "execution" to mean "the making or acceptance of an offer"); and further discussion at ¶ 4:365 ff.]

The statutes governing natural hazard disclosures for property not subject to Civ.C. § 1103 et seq. do not set a deadline for delivery of the statement; but, by requiring disclosure to a prospective buyer, those statutes make clear the delivery must occur before title is transferred. [See Gov.C. §§ 8589.3(a), 8589.4(a), 51183.5(a); Pub.Res.C. §§ 2621.9(a), 2694(a), 4136(a)]

(f) [2:187.11] Amendments: The required disclosures may be amended in writing by the seller or their agent. Any amendment, however, is subject to Civ.C. § 1103.3; i.e., if delivered after execution of the offer to purchase, the buyer has a limited period of time to terminate their offer. [See Civ.C. §§ 1103.3(c), 1103.9]

(g) [2:187.12] Good faith limitation: Each disclosure required by Civ.C. § 1103 et seq. and every act performed in making the disclosures "shall be made in good faith"—i.e., "honesty in fact in the conduct of the transaction." [Civ.C. § 1103.7]

(h) [2:187.13] Exempt transactions: Several types of sales or transfers are exempt from the Civ.C. § 1103 et seq. natural hazard disclosure requirements (including sales or transfers pursuant to court order, foreclosure sales, sales or transfers between co-owners or spouses, sales or transfers in probate, transfers to or from a governmental entity, and the sale, creation or transfer of any lease of any duration except leases with options to purchase or ground leases coupled with improvements). [See Civ.C. § 1103.1(a)(1)-(10)]

However, transfers not subject to Civ.C. § 1103 et seq. may nonetheless be subject to other natural hazard disclosure requirements (including those under Gov.C. §§ 8589.3, 8589.4 and 51183.5; and Pub.Res.C. §§ 2621.9, 2694 and 4136). [Civ.C. § 1103.1(b) & (c) ("sale" and "transfer" as used herein have their commonly understood meanings)]

(i) [2:187.14] Not preemptive of other disclosure obligations: The statutory itemization of natural hazards for disclosure "does not limit or abridge any obligation for disclosure created by any other provision of law or that may exist in order to avoid fraud, misrepresentation, or deceit in the transfer transaction." [Civ.C. § 1103.8(a); Gov.C. §§ 8589.3(f), 8589.4(f), 51183.5(f); Pub.Res.C. §§ 2621.9(g), 2694(g), 4136(g); see also Civ.C. § 1103.2(a)—"representations made in this Natural Hazard Disclosure Statement do not constitute all of the seller's or agent's disclosure obligations in this transaction"]

Nor do the Civ.C. § 1103 natural hazard disclosure requirements change a real estate broker's or salesperson's duties pursuant to Civ.C. § 2079. [Civ.C. § 1103.8(b)]

"The Legislature does not intend to affect the existing obligations of the parties to a real estate contract, or their agents, to disclose any fact materially affecting the value and desirability of the property, including, but not limited to, the physical condition of the property and previously received reports of physical inspection noted on the disclosure form provided pursuant to Section 1102.6 or 1102.6a." [Civ.C. § 1103.8(a); Calemine v. Samuelson (2009) 171 CA4th 153, 162, 89 CR3d 495, 502]

[2:187.15] Reserved.

(j) [2:187.16] Effective only between seller/agent and buyer: The Civ.C. § 1103 natural hazard disclosures operate only between the seller, seller's agent and prospective buyer, and "shall not be used by any other party" (insurance companies, lenders, governmental agencies, etc.) for any purpose. [Civ.C. § 1103.2(g)]

(k) [2:187.17] Liability for errors, inaccuracies or omissions: Neither the seller nor any seller's agent or buyer's agent incurs liability for any error, inaccuracy or omission of information delivered pursuant to Civ.C. § 1103 et seq. provided (i) the error, inaccuracy or omission was not within the seller's, seller's agent's or buyer's agent's personal knowledge, (ii) the error, inaccuracy or omission was based on information timely provided by public agencies or others providing information as specified in Civ.C. § 1103.4(c) (¶ 2:187.19), and (iii) ordinary care was exercised in obtaining and transmitting the information. [Civ.C. § 1103.4(a)]

1) [2:187.18] Substitute compliance by public agency: The delivery of information required to be disclosed under Civ.C. § 1103 et seq. by a public agency or other person providing such information "shall be deemed to comply" with Civ.C. § 1103 et seq. and "shall relieve the seller, seller's agent, and buyer's agent of any further duty" under Civ.C. § 1103 et seq. with respect to that item of information. [Civ.C. § 1103.4(b) (emphasis added)]

2) [2:187.19] Reliance on expert information: The delivery of a report or opinion prepared by a licensed engineer, land surveyor, geologist, or expert in natural hazard discovery dealing with matters within the scope of their license or expertise "shall be sufficient compliance" for purposes of relieving the seller, seller's agent and buyer's agent from liability under Civ.C. § 1103.4(a) (¶ 2:187.17) if the information is provided to the prospective buyer pursuant to request, whether written or oral. [Civ.C. § 1103.4(c) (emphasis added); see also Civ.C. § 1103.2(a) (seller's/agent's representation on Natural Hazard Disclosure Statement re good faith selection of, and reliance on, expert's report as "substituted disclosure" pursuant to Civ.C. § 1103.4)]

In responding to such a request, the expert may indicate, in writing, an understanding that the information provided will be used in satisfying the Civ.C. § 1103.2 disclosure requirements and, if so, "shall indicate the required disclosures" (or parts thereof) to which the information being furnished applies. In addition, the expert must determine, among other things, whether the property is in an airport influence area or located within one mile of a mine operation and, if so, provide a statutorily-prescribed notice. [See Civ.C. § 1103.4(c)]

A report delivered pursuant to Civ.C. § 1103.4(c) must be accompanied by a completed and signed Natural Hazard Disclosure Statement (¶ 2:187.10), but the Disclosure Statement does not change the legal effect of the report. [Civ.C. § 1103.2(f)(1), (2)]

3) [2:187.20] Relief from further § 1103 disclosure duties: After sellers or their agents comply with Civ.C. § 1103.2, they "shall be relieved of further duty" under § 1103 et seq. with respect to those items of information. Neither the seller nor the seller's agent is required to provide notice to the prospective buyer if the information given thereafter becomes inaccurate as a result of governmental action, map revision, changed information, or other act or occurrence, unless the seller or agent has actual knowledge that the information has become inaccurate. [Civ.C. § 1103.5(a) (emphasis added)]

If information disclosed pursuant to § 1103 et seq. thereafter is rendered inaccurate because of governmental action, map revision, changed information, or other act or occurrence postdating delivery of the required disclosure, that inaccuracy "does not constitute a violation" of § 1103 et seq. [Civ.C. § 1103.5(b)]

[2:187.21 - 2:187.24] Reserved.

(2) [2:187.25] Flood hazard area disclosures: If the property is located within a special flood hazard area designated by the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA), or in an area of potential flooding shown on an inundation map prepared pursuant to Water Code § 6161, the seller's agent, or seller if acting without an agent, must disclose that fact to prospective transferees. [Civ.C. § 1103(c)(1) & (2); Gov.C. §§ 8589.3(a), 8589.4(a)]

(a) [2:187.26] Notice limitation: The flooding/inundation disclosure duty is triggered only if the seller or seller's agent (i) has actual knowledge that the property is within a special flood hazard or inundation area; or (ii) the local jurisdiction has compiled a list, by parcel, of properties within the special flood hazard or inundation area and a notice has been posted at the county recorder, county assessor and county planning agency offices identifying the location of the parcel list (i.e., constructive notice). [Civ.C. § 1103(c)(1)(A), (B) & (c)(2); Gov.C. §§ 8589.3(b), 8589.4(b)]

(b) [2:187.27] Disclosures pursuant to FEMA Letter of Map Revision: If the Federal Emergency Management Agency (FEMA) has issued a Letter of Map Revision confirming that the property is no longer in a special flood hazard area, the seller or seller's agent may mark "No" on the Natural Hazard Disclosure Statement—even if the map has not yet been updated. A copy of the FEMA letter must be attached to the disclosure statement by the seller or seller's agent. [Civ.C. § 1103.2(c)]

Conversely, if FEMA has issued a Letter of Map Revision confirming that the property is in a special flood hazard area and the location of the letter has been posted pursuant to Gov.C. § 8589.3(g), the seller or seller's agent must mark "Yes" on the Natural Hazard Disclosure Statement—even if the map has not yet been updated. A copy of the FEMA letter must be attached to the disclosure statement by the seller or seller's agent. [Civ.C. § 1103.2(d)]

[2:187.28 - 2:187.29] Reserved.

(3) [2:187.30] Earthquake hazard area disclosures: If the property is located within an earthquake fault zone designated pursuant to Pub.Res.C. § 2622, or within a seismic hazard zone designated pursuant to Pub.Res.C. § 2696, the seller's agent, or seller if acting without an agent, must disclose that fact to potential transferees. [Civ.C. § 1103(c)(4) & (5); Pub.Res.C. §§ 2621.9(a), 2694(a)]

(a) [2:187.31] Notice limitation: The earthquake fault/seismic hazard zone disclosure duty is triggered only if (i) the seller or seller's agent has actual knowledge that the property is within a delineated earthquake fault zone or seismic hazard zone; or (ii) a map that includes the property has been provided to the city or county pursuant to Pub.Res.C. §§ 2622 or 2696 and a notice has been posted at the county recorder, county assessor and county planning agency offices identifying the location of the map and any information regarding changes to the map received by the county (i.e., constructive notice). [Civ.C. § 1103(c)(4), (5); Pub.Res.C. §§ 2621.9(b), 2694(b)]

(b) [2:187.32] Ambiguous maps—affirmative disclosure generally required: If an earthquake fault zone or seismic hazard zone map (or accompanying information) is not of sufficient accuracy or scale for a reasonable person to determine whether the property is in a natural hazard area, the seller or seller's agent must mark "Yes" on the Natural Hazard Disclosure Statement. [Civ.C. § 1103.2(b); Pub.Res.C. §§ 2621.9(d), 2694(d)]

A "No" may be marked by the seller's agent in such circumstances only if the seller attaches a report prepared pursuant to Civ.C. § 1103.4(c) (¶ 2:187.19) verifying that the property is not in the hazard zone. [Civ.C. § 1103.2(b); Pub.Res.C. §§ 2621.9(d), 2694(d)]

In any event, notwithstanding the ambiguous map, the seller and seller's agent must exercise reasonable care in deciding whether the property in fact is within an earthquake fault/seismic hazard zone. [Civ.C. § 1103.2(b); Pub.Res.C. §§ 2621.9(d), 2694(d)]

[2:187.33 - 2:187.34] Reserved.

(4) Fire hazard property

(a) Required disclosures

1) [2:187.35] Property in "high" or "very high" fire hazard severity zone: If the property is located within a "high" or "very high" fire hazard severity zone designated pursuant to Gov.C. § 51178, the seller or the seller's agent must disclose to prospective buyers the fact that the property is located within a high or very high fire hazard severity zone and is subject to the Gov.C. § 51182 maintenance requirements (regarding, with respect to occupied dwellings or structures, the property owner's/occupier's duty to clear away surrounding brush, etc., and maintain a specified firebreak ("defensible space of 100 feet") around and adjacent to the structure). [See Civ.C. §§ 1103(c)(3), 1103.2(a) (amended Stats. 2023, Ch. 99; eff. 1/1/24); Gov.C. § 51183.5(a)]

2) Property in "high or very high fire hazard severity zone"

a) [2:187.35a] Disclosure of fire hardening improvements for pre-2010 homes: On or after January 1, 2021, if property is located within a "high or very high fire hazard severity zone" (designated under Gov.C. § 51178) and was constructed before January 1, 2010, sellers must provide specific, statutorily prescribed disclosure notices to buyers that include information on "fire hardening" improvements. [Civ.C. § 1102.6f(a)]

b) [2:187.35b] Disclosure of vegetation management compliance: On or after January 1, 2021, if property is located within a "high or very high fire hazard severity zone" (designated under Gov.C. § 51178), sellers must provide documentation stating the property complies with state or local vegetation management requirements. [Civ.C. § 1102.19]

3) [2:187.36] Property in wildland fire area: Similarly, a seller of property located within a state responsibility area determined by the board, pursuant to Pub.Res.C. § 4125 (forests and timber/brush, etc.), or the seller's agent, must disclose to prospective buyers the fact that the property is located within a wildland area that may contain substantial forest fire risks and hazards and is subject to the Pub.Res.C. § 4291 maintenance requirements (duties re providing defensible spaces around structures, removing dead/dying wood from trees, shrubs and other plants adjacent to or overhanging buildings, etc.). [Civ.C. § 1103(c)(6); Pub.Res.C. § 4136(a)]

Unless the property is located in a county that has assumed responsibility for prevention and suppression of all fires pursuant to Pub.Res.C. § 4129, the seller must also disclose to prospective buyers that it is not the state's responsibility to provide fire protection services to any building or structure located within the wildlands except where a local agency has so agreed with the Department of Forestry and Fire Protection pursuant to Pub.Res.C. § 4142. [Pub.Res.C. § 4136(b)]

(b) [2:187.37] Notice limitation: The very high fire hazard severity and wildland fire area disclosure obligations are triggered only if (i) the seller or seller's agent has actual knowledge that the property is within a very high fire hazard severity zone or wildland fire zone; or (ii) a map that includes the property has been provided to the local agency, city or county pursuant to Gov.C. § 51178 or Pub.Res.C. § 4125 and a notice has been posted at the county recorder, county assessor and county planning agency offices that identifies the location of the map and any information regarding changes to the map received by the local agency or county (i.e., constructive notice). [Civ.C. § 1103(c)(3), (6); Gov.C. § 51183.5(b); Pub.Res.C. § 4136(c)]

(c) [2:187.38] Ambiguous maps—affirmative disclosure generally required: If a high/very high fire hazard severity zone or wildland fire area map (or accompanying information) is not of sufficient accuracy or scale for a reasonable person to determine whether the property is in a natural hazard area, the seller or seller's agent must mark "Yes" on the Natural Hazard Disclosure Statement. [Civ.C. § 1103.2(b) (amended Stats. 2023, Ch. 99; eff. 1/1/24); Gov.C. § 51183.5(d); Pub.Res.C. § 4136(e)]

A "No" may be marked by the seller's agent in such circumstances only if the seller attaches a report prepared pursuant to Civ.C. § 1103.4(c) (¶ 2:187.19) verifying that the property is not in the hazard zone. [Civ.C. § 1103.2(b); Gov.C. § 51183.5(d); Pub.Res.C. § 4136(e)]

Notwithstanding the ambiguous map, however, the seller and seller's agent are bound to exercise reasonable care in deciding whether the property in fact is within a high or very high fire hazard severity zone or wildland fire area. [Civ.C. § 1103.2(b); Gov.C. § 51183.5(d); Pub.Res.C. § 4136(e)]

d. Disclosures pertaining to listing agreement

(1) [2:188] Specification of fixed term for exclusive listing agreements: Any "exclusive agreement authorizing a licensee" to perform licensed brokerage activities for compensation must "contain a definite, specified date of final and complete termination." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10176(f); see ¶ 2:114 (noncompliance is ground for license suspension or revocation) and ¶ 2:379]

(2) [2:188.1] Specification of no fixed compensation rate: Any printed or form listing agreement must contain a statement in at least 10 point boldface type, immediately preceding broker compensation provisions, that real estate broker commissions are not fixed by law; and that commissions are set by each broker and may be negotiable between seller and broker. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10147.5; see further discussion at ¶ 2:391 ff.]

Real estate agents are also precluded from stating or implying that they cannot charge less than the commission quoted to the owner by the agent. [10 CCR § 2785(a)(3)]

e. [2:189] Other disclosures concerning the property: Several additional statutory disclosures must be made by sellers and brokers; the more prominent requirements are noted at ¶ 2:191 ff.

• [2:190] Comment: Some of these statutes place the disclosure burden on the seller (rather than the seller's broker). Even so—at least in regard to residential real estate transactions—they also impact a seller's broker's disclosure burdens under the general authority of Easton (¶ 2:170 ff.) and Civ.C. § 2079 et seq. (¶ 2:173 ff.).

(1) [2:191] Structural pest control report: "As soon as practical" before transfer of title or execution of the sales contract, the seller or seller's agent must deliver to the buyer a copy of a structural pest control inspection report (Bus. & Prof.C. § 8516) upon which a certification in accordance with Bus. & Prof.C. § 8519 may be made, "provided that certification or preparation of a report is a condition of" the purchase contract or a condition of financing the transfer. [See Civ.C. § 1099(a); see ¶ 4:378 ff.]

(2) [2:192] Hazardous materials: Several statutes require disclosures regarding the presence of hazardous substance (toxic) materials on property to be sold. Briefly:

(a) [2:193] Hazardous substance release on nonresidential property: Nonresidential property owners who know, or have "reasonable cause to believe," a release of hazardous substance is located on or beneath the property must—before the sale—give the buyer written notice of the condition. [Health & Saf.C. § 78700 (added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257; eff. 1/1/24)]

Noncompliance subjects the owner to "actual damages and any other remedies provided by law." Further, if the owner has actual knowledge of the release of a "material amount" of a hazardous substance and "knowingly and willfully" fails to give the buyer written notice thereof, the owner is liable for a maximum $5,000 civil penalty for each separate violation. [Health & Saf.C. § 78700 (added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257; eff. 1/1/24)]

(b) [2:194] Asbestos-containing materials on nonresidential property: Owners of any nonresidential public or commercial building (see Health & Saf.C. § 25919.2) constructed before 1979 who know the building contains asbestos-containing construction materials, must provide all employees working within the building detailed written notifications pursuant to Health & Saf.C. § 25915; or, alternatively, the owner may prepare and distribute notice of an asbestos management plan pursuant to Health & Saf.C. § 25915.1. [See Health & Saf.C. §§ 25915, 25915.1, 25915.2]

[2:195] Reserved.

(c) [2:195.1] Lead-based paint in residential structures: "Any person" (seller or broker) who knowingly violates these requirements is subject to civil or criminal fines of up to $10,000 per violation and/or imprisonment for up to one year; and may be enjoined. The violator also faces treble damages liability to the purchaser in a private civil suit (three times the amount of the purchaser's actual damages caused by the failure to disclose), along with the purchaser's costs, attorney fees and expert witness fees incurred in the civil action. [See 42 USC §§ 3545, 4852d(b); and discussion at ¶ 4:366.2 ff.]

[2:195.2 - 2:195.9] Reserved.

(d) [2:195.10] Toxic mold on nonresidential property: A seller of commercial or industrial property must provide written disclosure to prospective buyers "as soon as practicable" before the transfer of title when the seller knows of the presence of mold, whether visible or invisible or hidden, affecting the property, and the mold either exceeds permissible exposure limits (set by Health & Saf.C. § 26103(a), (b) and (c)) or poses a health threat according to Department of Health Services (DHS) guidelines. [Health & Saf.C. § 26140(a); but see also Health & Saf.C. § 26140(d)—disclosure requirements inapplicable until first January 1 or July 1 at least 6 months after DHS adopts requisite standards and guidelines]

Exception: A seller is exempt from the above disclosure requirement if the presence of mold was remediated according to DHS guidelines. [Health & Saf.C. § 26140(b)]

Cross-refer: Environmental considerations in the purchase and sale of real property (including liability risks for contamination) are separately discussed in Ch. 5.

(3) [2:196] Former federal or state ordnance (military training/munitions) locations: Sellers of residential real property who have actual knowledge of any "former federal or state ordnance locations" within one mile of the property must give written notice thereof "as soon as practicable" before title is transferred. [Civ.C. § 1102.15]

(A "former federal or state ordnance location" is an area identified by a federal or state agency as an area once used for military training purposes which may contain potentially explosive munitions. See Civ.C. § 1102.15.)

(4) [2:197] Continuing lien securing special tax levy, assessment installments: When residential property being sold is subject to a continuing lien securing a special tax levy pursuant to the Mello-Roos Community Facilities Act (Gov.C. § 53311 et seq.), or a fixed lien assessment collected in installments to secure bonds issued under the Improvement Bond Act of 1915 (Streets & Highways C. § 8500 et seq.), the seller must make a "good faith effort" to obtain a disclosure notice concerning the taxes (pursuant to Gov.C. § 53340.2) from each local agency levying the tax; and must deliver the notice(s) to the prospective buyer "as long as the notices are made available by the local agency." [See Civ.C. § 1102.6b(a) & (b)]

(a) [2:197.1] Form of disclosure notice: The Civ.C. § 1102.6b disclosure requirements may be satisfied by delivering a disclosure notice obtained from a nongovernmental source so long as it includes certain statutorily-required information. [Civ.C. § 1102.6b(d)]

(b) [2:197.2] Effect of providing proper disclosure notice: Delivery of a proper disclosure notice to the buyer is "deemed to satisfy" the seller's and their agent's responsibility to inform the buyer about special tax or assessment installments on the property. Moreover, nothing in Civ.C. § 1102.6b imposes a duty to discover special tax or assessment installments, or the existence of any levying district, not actually known to the agents. [Civ.C. § 1102.6b(e)]

(5) [2:198] Supplemental property tax bills: A seller of residential real property, or the seller's agent, must also deliver to the prospective buyer a disclosure notice advising that because property tax reassessment is triggered under California law by a change in ownership, the buyer may receive one or two supplemental tax bills depending on when the buyer's loan closes; and that the buyer is responsible for paying the supplemental bills. [Civ.C. § 1102.6c(a)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

These disclosure requirements may be satisfied by delivering a disclosure notice pursuant to Civ.C. § 1102.6b (¶ 2:197 ff.) that satisfies the § 1102.6c(a) requirements. [Civ.C. § 1102.6c(b)]

(6) Earthquake safety disclosure

(a) [2:199] Commercial structures: "As soon as practicable before the sale" of any precast concrete or reinforced masonry building having wood frame floors or roofs, built before January 1, 1975 and which is located within any county or city, the seller or seller's "agent" must deliver to the purchaser a copy of the "Commercial Property Owner's Guide to Earthquake Safety" (described in Bus. & Prof.C. § 10147). [Gov.C. § 8893.2 (emphasis added)]

(b) [2:199.1] Residential structures: Similarly, "as soon as practicable before the transfer" of any residential dwelling built prior to January 1, 1960 and which has "one to four living units of conventional light-frame construction," the seller must deliver to the buyer a copy of the "Homeowner's Guide to Earthquake Safety" (published pursuant to Bus. & Prof.C. § 10149) "and complete the earthquake hazards disclosure regarding the property" as required by Gov.C. § 8897.2 (specified deficiencies "which may increase a dwelling's vulnerability to earthquake damage"). [Gov.C. § 8897.1(a); see Gov.C. § 8897.1 et seq.]

The seller bears the burden of making the requisite disclosures. The seller's agent's duty under Gov.C. § 8897.1 et seq. is limited to providing the seller with a copy of the "Homeowner's Guide to Earthquake Safety" for delivery to the prospective buyer (although this does not alter the broker's obligation to disclose known hazards on or affecting the property). [Gov.C. § 8897.5; see also Civ.C. § 2079.8]

[2:199.2 - 2:199.3] Reserved.

(7) [2:199.4] Knowledge of certain industrial use zoning: The seller of single-family residential real property subject to Civ.C. § 1102 et seq. (one to four dwelling units) who has actual knowledge that the property is adjacent to or zoned to allow an industrial use described in Civ.C. § 731a (certain manufacturing, commercial or airport uses), or affected by a nuisance created by such a use, must give written notice of that knowledge "as soon as practicable" before title is transferred. [Civ.C. § 1102.17; see also Civ.C. §§ 1102.6a(d) & 1103.4(c)(1) (city/county-required disclosures re effects of property being within "airport influence area")]

(8) [2:199.5] Water heater safety certification: See discussion at ¶ 4:366.16.

(9) [2:200] Occupant death; HIV/AIDS information: A broker's duty to disclose material facts affecting the condition, value or desirability of the property (¶ 2:170 ff.) may include a duty to disclose the fact of an occupant's death or disease (cf. Civ.C. § 1710.2(c)).

However, no cause of action arises against a property owner, or the seller's or buyer's real estate agent, for the failure to disclose to the buyer (a) an occupant's death upon the property or the manner of death where the death occurred more than three years before the purchase offer; or (b) that an occupant of the property was living with human immunodeficiency virus (HIV) or died from AIDS-related complications. [Civ.C. § 1710.2(a)] But this provision does not protect the owner or agent from liability for making an intentional misrepresentation in response to a buyer's or prospective buyer's direct inquiry concerning deaths on the property. [Civ.C. § 1710.2(d)]

(10) [2:200.5] Information re proximity of registered sex offenders: Contracts for the purchase and sale of residential property (one to four dwelling units) must contain a statutorily-prescribed notice advising (i) that law enforcement maintains for public access a data base of locations of registered sex offenders (applicable to contracts entered into on or after 7/1/99 and before 9/1/05); or (ii) that the Department of Justice maintains for public access an "Internet Web site at www.meganslaw.ca.gov" containing the addresses where registered sex offenders reside or the "community of residence and ZIP Code" in which the offenders reside (applicable to contracts entered into on or after 4/1/06). A contract entered into on or after 9/1/05 and before 4/1/06, must contain one or the other of these notices. [See Civ.C. § 2079.10a(a), ¶ 4:366.17 (also applicable to residential leases)]

Upon delivering the Civ.C. § 2079.10a notice to the buyer (or lessor) (by way of the purchase and sale agreement or lease), neither the broker nor seller (or lessor) are required to provide additional information regarding the presence of registered sex offenders in the neighborhood. [Civ.C. § 2079.10a(b) (also stating registered sex offenders have no cause of action against disclosing parties based on information in § 2079.10a notice)]

(a) [2:200.6] Other common law and statutory duties not affected: Providing the § 2079.10a notice does not, however, alter or relieve brokers and sellers of other common law and statutory duties (including, but not limited to, duties otherwise prescribed by Civ.C. § 1102 et seq. and Civ.C. § 2079 et seq.). [Civ.C. § 2079.10a(c)]

(11) [2:201] Defects/malfunctions in converted condominiums/common interest developments: "As soon as practicable" before title is transferred for the first sale of a unit in a residential condominium, community apartment project or stock cooperative that was converted from an existing dwelling, the owner, subdivider, or agent of either must deliver to prospective buyers either (a) a written statement listing all "substantial defects or malfunctions" in the unit's and common area's "major systems," or (b) a written statement disclaiming knowledge of same (but a disclaimer may be delivered only after the owner/subdivider has inspected the unit and common areas and discovered no substantial defects or malfunctions which a reasonable inspection would have disclosed). [Civ.C. § 1134(a)]

(a) [2:202] Buyer's right to rescind (disclosures postdating execution of purchase contract): If the disclosure is delivered after execution of a purchase agreement, the buyer has three days (running from the date of personal delivery) (or where the disclosure is mailed, five days running from deposit in the mail) to terminate the agreement by delivering written notice of termination to the owner/subdivider or agent. [Civ.C. § 1134(b)—disclosures delivered after execution of purchase agreement must contain statement describing buyer's right, method and time to so rescind]

(b) [2:203] Consequences of noncompliance: The transfer of title is not invalidated solely because of a failure to comply with Civ.C. § 1134 (Civ.C. § 1134(f)); but willful noncompliance subjects the offending owner/subdivider or agent to liability for the buyer's "actual damages" caused thereby (Civ.C. § 1134(d)). And, in any event, sellers and agents remain subject to general disclosure duties regarding the condition of the property (¶ 2:170 ff.). [See Civ.C. § 1134(g)]

(12) [2:207] Smoke detectors: Sellers of real property containing a single-family dwelling must deliver to the transferee a written statement indicating the property contains an operable smoke detector pursuant to Health & Saf.C. § 13113.8(a) (see also Health & Saf.C. § 13113.7). [Health & Saf.C. § 13113.8(b); but see Health & Saf.C. § 13113.8(d) re exemptions]

The disclosure statement must be included in the receipt for deposit, an addendum attached thereto, or a separate document; and must be delivered "as soon as practicable" before the transfer of title. [Health & Saf.C. § 13113.8(b) & (c)]

(a) [2:208] No broker duty to monitor compliance: Except to the extent provided in Health & Saf.C. § 13113.8, real estate agents have no duty (express or implied) to "monitor or ensure compliance" with the statute. [Health & Saf.C. § 13113.8(f)]

(b) [2:209] Erroneous disclosures; agent's liability: Generally, an "agent" incurs no liability for the seller's erroneous or inaccurate Health & Saf.C. § 13113.8 disclosures. But that immunity does not apply to licensed brokers/salespersons who participate in making the disclosure with "actual knowledge" of its falsity. [Health & Saf.C. § 13113.8(e)]

(c) [2:210] Noncompliance—exclusive damages remedy: Noncompliance with Health & Saf.C. § 13113.8 does not invalidate the transfer of title; the sole remedy for failure to comply is a maximum $100 actual damages award, exclusive of court costs and attorney fees. [Health & Saf.C. § 13113.8(g)]

(d) [2:210.1] Residential transfer disclosure statement certification: The "seller's information" section of the Civ.C. § 1102.6 residential property transfer disclosure statement includes a seller's certification that the property, at the close of escrow, will be in compliance with Health & Saf.C. § 13113.8 (i.e., it will have operable smoke detectors(s) approved, listed and installed in accordance with the State Fire Marshal's regulations and applicable local standards). [Civ.C. § 1102.6]

(13) [2:211] Compliance with automatic garage door safety standards: The "seller's information" section of the Civ.C. § 1102.6 transfer disclosure statement required in residential property transactions (¶ 2:185) must indicate (among other things) whether the property contains an automatic garage door opener. If applicable, the seller must indicate that the garage door opener may not be in compliance with safety standards relating to automatic reversing devices as set forth in Health & Saf.C. § 19890 et seq. [See Civ.C. § 1102.6]

has a swimming pool and window security bars. If applicable, the seller must disclose that a child resistant pool barrier may not be in compliance with safety standards relating to automatic reversing devices set forth in Health & Saf.C. § 19890 et seq. or with pool safety standards contained in Health & Saf.C. § 115920 et seq.; and that window security bars may not have quick-release mechanisms in compliance with the 1995 Edition of the California Building Standards Code. [See Civ.C. §§ 1102.6, 1102.16]

(15) [2:211.2] Carbon monoxide devices: The "seller's information" section of the Civ.C. § 1102.6 residential property transfer disclosure statement also requires the seller to indicate whether the property has a carbon monoxide device. If applicable, the seller must disclose that the carbon monoxide device may not be in compliance with the applicable Health & Saf.C. § 13260 et seq. safety standards. [See Civ.C. § 1102.6]

(16) [2:212] Lawsuits or claims that threaten or affect property: The seller's information section of the Civ.C. § 1102.6 transfer disclosure statement requires the seller to indicate whether they are aware of any lawsuits by or against the seller, or any Civ.C. §§ 910, 914 claims for damages by the seller, that threaten or affect the property, including any lawsuits or Civ.C. §§ 910, 914 claims alleging a defect or deficiency in the real property or "common areas" (e.g., pools, tennis courts, walkways, etc.). [Civ.C. § 1102.6; see also Calemine v. Samuelson (2009) 171 CA4th 153, 162-166, 89 CR3d 495, 502-506—seller's common law disclosure duty extends to previous as well as pending lawsuits]

The seller's information section also requires that the seller indicate whether they are aware of any Civ.C. § 900 breach of warranty claims or Civ.C. § 903 breach of enhancement protection agreement claims that threaten or affect the property. [Civ.C. § 1102.6(a)]

(17) [2:213] Water-conserving plumbing fixtures: The "seller's information" section of the Civ.C. § 1102.6 transfer disclosure statement requires the seller to indicate whether the property is equipped with water-conserving plumbing fixtures. [Civ.C. § 1102.6]

(18) [2:214] Room additions, structural modifications, alterations or repairs made by contractors: On or after July 1, 2024, a seller who accepts an offer for the sale of a single-family residential property within 18 months from the date title to the property was transferred to the seller must disclose to the buyer:

• Any room additions, structural modifications, other alterations, or repairs made to the property by a contractor with whom the seller entered into a contract since the above transfer of title; and

• Each such contractor's name and any contact information they provided to the seller. [See Civ.C. § 1102.6h (added Stats. 2023, Ch. 95; eff. 1/1/24)—obligation to provide contractor's name only applies where aggregate price for labor, material and other related items exceeds Bus. & Prof.C. § 7027.2's dollar amount (currently $500)]

The seller's obligation to disclose the room additions, structural modifications, etc., also may be satisfied by providing the buyer with a list of all such changes. [Civ.C. § 1102.6h(b)]

(a) [2:214.1] Permits: If the seller obtained permits for any of the room additions, structural modifications, other alterations or repairs, the seller must provide a copy of the permits to the buyer. [Civ.C. § 1102.6h(c)(1)]

If, however, the seller contracted with a third party for the room additions, structural modifications, etc., and was not provided with a copy of the permits, the seller may satisfy the seller's obligation to provide the buyer with copies by (i) informing the buyer that all such information may be obtained from the third party and (ii) providing the buyer with the third party's contact information. [Civ.C. § 1102.6h(c)(2)]

f. [2:214.2] Disclosures concerning appraisals: After July 1, 2022, every contract for the sale of single-family residential real property must contain a statutorily prescribed notice specifying that any appraisal of the property is required to be unbiased, objective, and not influenced by improper or illegal considerations (e.g., race, color, religion, gender, sexual orientation, marital status, medical condition, military/veteran status, national origin, etc.). [Civ.C. § 1102.6g]

g. [2:215] Disclosures concerning loans: Brokers who, on behalf of their clients, negotiate loans secured by real property (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131(d), see ¶ 2:26) must make several statutory disclosures to the borrower (buyer). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10240 et seq.; see also 10 CCR § 2840]

(1) [2:215.1] General requirements: Broadly, within three business days after receipt of a completed loan application or before the borrower becomes obligated on the note, whichever is earlier, the broker must deliver to the borrower a written statement (in form approved by the Real Estate Commissioner) containing all information required by Bus. & Prof.C. § 10241 (estimated maximum costs and expenses of making the loan, as specified, etc.). [Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10240(a), 10241]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

The disclosure statement must be personally signed by the borrower and the broker negotiating the loan (or by a licensed salesperson acting for the broker in negotiating the loan); and an "exact copy" must be delivered to the borrower at the time of its execution. The broker must retain on file for three years a "true and correct" copy of the statement as signed by the borrower. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10240(a); see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 10241.4 re notice concerning balloon payments]

(2) [2:215.2] Agent's role in arranging financing: When a real estate agent undertakes to arrange financing for a real property sale, lease or exchange, or when a person or entity arranging financing for such activities undertakes to act as a real estate agent for the property, the agent, person or entity must, within 24 hours, make a written disclosure to all parties of those roles and of any related loan transaction. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177.6]

(3) [2:215.3] Federally-regulated residential mortgage transactions: When the loan is made in a federally-regulated mortgage transaction in which the principal loan amount exceeds principal loan levels specified in Bus. & Prof.C. § 10245, a real estate broker satisfies the Bus. & Prof.C. § 10240 disclosure requirements if the borrower receives:

• a "good faith estimate" pursuant to the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (12 USC § 2601 et seq., see ¶ 4:639 ff.) that sets forth the broker's real estate license number and a "clear and conspicuous statement on the face of the document" that the "good faith estimate" does not constitute a loan commitment;

• all applicable disclosures required by the Truth in Lending Act (15 USC § 1601 et seq.); and

• if the loan calls for a balloon payment, appropriate balloon disclosures. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10249(c)]

In addition, prior to becoming obligated on the loan, the borrower must acknowledge in writing receipt of the "good faith estimate" and all applicable Truth in Lending disclosures. The broker is required to retain for three years a copy of the signed acknowledgment as well as the "good faith estimate" and disclosures acknowledged by the borrower. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10240(c)]

Cross-refer: The Bus. & Prof.C. § 10240 disclosure obligation and the form of disclosure statement (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10241) are discussed further at ¶ 6:168 ff.

h. [2:216] Disclosures concerning broker's relationship to other party or interest in property: The fiduciary relationship between broker and principal requires the broker to disclose all "material facts" that would affect the principal's decision to buy or sell (¶ 2:157.1 ff.); and precludes the broker from obtaining any "secret" advantage over the principal in any transaction arising out of the agency (¶ 2:123, 2:162 ff.). Consequently, any information regarding the broker's relationship to the other party or the broker's interest in the property must be disclosed at the outset; significantly:

(1) [2:217] Seller's agent as intended purchaser: A seller's broker has a fiduciary duty to advise its principal (the seller) of the broker's intent to become the purchaser (¶ 2:159) or of any relationship the broker has with the purchaser under which it will directly or indirectly benefit from the purchase (¶ 2:158). [Batson v. Strehlow (1968) 68 C2d 662, 675-676, 68 CR 589, 598; Smith v. Zak (1971) 20 CA3d 785, 794, 98 CR 242, 247; see also ¶ 2:157.11 ff.]

In effect, a seller's broker may purchase its principal's property only with the seller's full knowledge and consent. This rule curbs both direct sales to the broker, as well as indirect or "collusive" sales (where purported third-party purchase is really on behalf of the broker); and extends to sales to the broker's spouse, or an indirect or collusive sale to some other relative of the broker, or the broker's friend, partner, employee or corporation when, because of that relationship, the broker will be directly or indirectly acquiring the property themself. [Batson v. Strehlow, supra, 68 C2d at 675-676, 68 CR at 598-599—broker who fails to disclose interest in corporate purchaser cannot retain sales commission; Smith v. Zak, supra, 20 CA3d at 794-795, 98 CR at 247-248—seller's broker breached fiduciary duty by purporting to produce "arm's length purchaser" when in fact buyer was broker's close personal friend and broker was actual purchaser]

Additionally, a broker who wishes to purchase the listed property for themself has the burden of proving the fundamental fairness of the transaction and that they acted "with the utmost good faith toward [their] principal." [Smith v. Zak, supra, 20 CA3d at 793, 98 CR at 247]

(2) [2:218] Buyer's broker's interest in property: Similarly, a broker representing the buyer must disclose to the buyer the nature and extent of the broker's "direct or indirect" ownership interest in the subject property. "The direct or indirect ownership interest in the property by a person related to the [broker] by blood or marriage, by an entity in which the [broker] has an ownership interest, or by any other person with whom the [broker] has a special relationship shall be disclosed to the buyer." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10177(o) (emphasis added), ¶ 2:115—license suspension, revocation, etc., for nondisclosure]

i. [2:224] Compare—no duty of disclosure between buyer's broker and seller: Aside from the broad obligation to act fairly and honestly with all parties to a real estate transaction (e.g., no misrepresentations, false promises, etc., see ¶ 2:226), neither case law (the "Easton" line of authority, ¶ 2:170) nor statutory law (Civ.C. § 2079, ¶ 2:173) place the burden on a buyer's broker to disclose information to the seller … unless, of course, the buyer's broker is actually a dual agent for both buyer and seller (in which event, the dual agency must be disclosed along with delivery of a statutory form disclosure statement, see ¶ 2:139 ff.).

This result makes sense since again, absent a dual agency, there is no agency/fiduciary relationship between a seller and a buyer's broker. Moreover, sellers cannot reasonably expect a buyer's broker to disclose information that could increase the property's value. [See Greif v. Sanin (2022) 74 CA5th 412, 430, 435-436, 284 CR3d 484, 497, 502—where there were "arm's length" negotiations, buyer's broker did not have duty to tell seller purchase price was below fair market value (concluding neither Legislature nor courts recognize such duty)]

(1) [2:224.1] Comment: In Greif, the buyer's broker did not have a common law duty to inform the seller that a $330,000 purchase price for 10 acres of vacant land in 2012 was well below the land's fair market value. This was so even though the seller was 87 years old, physically infirm, and had cognitive impairments. Instead, the court determined there was no policy justification for placing the burden on buyer's broker to so inform the seller. Indeed, the seller had access to information relevant to its value, he could have researched its fair market value and/or retained a real estate agent to advise and assist him in determining the sales price, yet he chose not to do so. "[I]f the seller chooses not to retain a real estate agent or advisor, the seller is responsible for investigating the value of the Property and determining the sales price." [Greif v. Sanin (2022) 74 CA5th 412, 430, 435-436, 284 CR3d 484, 497, 502]

Moreover, in 2012, when the above transaction took place, Civ.C. § 2079.16 (which imposes a statutory duty on the buyer's broker to disclose to both the buyer and seller all facts known to the agent that materially affect the value of property) did not apply to vacant land. Even so, it is unlikely the buyer's broker would have been liable had the transaction taken place on or after 1/1/2015 (when § 2079.16 was amended to apply to all real property transactions, including transactions involving vacant land). This is because the statutory duty applies only when a property's value is "not known to, or within the diligent attention and observation of, the parties" (Civ.C. § 2079.16, "Buyer's Agent" duties to "the Buyer and the Seller," paragraph (c)). And as Greif makes clear, the seller had at his disposal other appropriate means by which to determine his property's fair market value. [Greif v. Sanin, supra, 74 CA5th at 427, 435-346, 289 CR3d at 495, 502]

6. Broker's Obligations and Liabilities to Third Parties

a. [2:225] Responsibility "as a principal" under general agency law: Pursuant to general agency law, real estate brokers/salespersons are personally responsible to third persons, as though they were principals, for acts done in the course of the agency in the following situations (Civ.C. § 2343):

- When, with the broker's consent, credit is given to the broker personally in the transaction (Civ.C. § 2343 subd. 1);
- When the broker enters into a written contract in the name of the broker's principal without a good faith belief they have authority to do so (i.e., in such event, the broker is personally liable on the contract as if the broker were acting on the broker's own behalf rather than for the principal) (Civ.C. § 2343 subd. 2);
- When the broker's acts are "wrongful in their nature" (e.g., tortious act perpetrated against third party, see ¶ 2:226 ff.) (Civ.C. § 2343 subd. 3).

(1) [2:225.1] Measure of damages caused by breach of agent's warranty of authority: In their capacity as agents, real estate brokers/salespersons warrant to all who deal with them that they have the authority to act on behalf of their principals (see Civ.C. § 2342). The detriment caused by a breach of that warranty is deemed to be what could be "recovered and collected" from the broker's/salesperson's purported principal. [Civ.C. § 3318; see also Kurtin v. Elieff (2013) 215 CA4th

455, 483-484, 155 CR3d 573, 595-596 (acknowledging § 3318 's general application regardless whether breach is in good faith (Civ.C. § 2342) or bad faith (Civ.C. § 2343))—§ 3318 sets forth precise amount of liability]

b. [2:226] Duty of honesty and fair dealing: Though not in an agency relationship with third parties, brokers/salespersons owe a broad obligation to act honestly and fairly in dealings with all parties to the transaction (e.g., no misrepresentations or false promises to influence, persuade or induce third-party conduct; see generally, Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10176(a), (b), (i), 10177(j), ¶ 2:114 ff.). [Ward v. Taggart (1959) 51 C2d 736, 741-742, 336 P2d 534, 537; Nguyen v. Scott (1988) 206 CA3d 725, 735-736, 253 CR 800, 806; see also Greif v. Sanin (2022) 74 CA5th 412, 427, 430, 289 CR3d 484, 495, 497 (acknowledging real estate agents, regardless whether they represent buyer or seller, owe duty of care to third parties, but not with respect to property's fair market value where parties' engaged in "arm's-length" negotiations), discussed further at ¶ 2:224 ff.)]

(1) [2:227] "Secret" profits through deceptive practices: Thus, a broker is liable to disgorge "secret profits" gained through deception practiced upon a third-party buyer. Even though the broker is not the buyer's agent and therefore breaches no fiduciary duties to the buyer, they violate a real estate agent's statutory obligation to be honest and truthful in their dealings when the broker makes a "secret profit" at the buyer's expense. Such broker holds the profits so obtained as constructive trustee for the buyer and is liable to the buyer on an unjust enrichment/quasi-contract theory. [Ward v. Taggart (1959) 51 C2d 736, 741-743, 336 P2d 534, 537-539—broker fraudulently represented to buyer he had been given exclusive listing and never presented buyer's first offer to seller but, instead, made "secret profit" by purchasing property at $4,000/acre and then selling to buyer for buyer's second offer of $5,000 (broker liable for $1,000 "secret profit" plus punitive damages)]

Similarly, a seller's broker breaches the duty of honesty and fair dealing by failing to transmit a potential buyer's offer to the seller, secretly competing with the buyer for the property, and ultimately purchasing the property for themself. Though the broker does not resell the property to the aggrieved prospective buyer and thus earns no "secret" monetary profit through the deception (as in Ward, supra), the law does not permit one "to take advantage of [their] own wrong" (Civ.C. § 3517). Consequently, the broker will be deemed to hold the property in constructive trust for the prospective buyer, who can compel a conveyance by tendering the consideration the broker paid for the property and assuming any obligation still owing to the original seller. [Nguyen v. Scott (1988) 206 CA3d 725, 737-741, 253 CR 800, 807-809 (also indicating original seller may have rescission remedy)]

(2) [2:228] Concealing pending sale to detriment of interested third party: A seller's broker who knows a third party holds an unrecorded security interest in the subject property cannot conceal that fact from the prospective buyer, or conceal the impending sale from the holder of the security interest, out of a desire to ensure the deal goes through. The concealment breaches the broker's duty of fairness and renders the broker liable to the third party whose security interest in the property is extinguished by the sale. [Norman I. Krug Real Estate Investments, Inc. v. Praszker (1990) 220 CA3d 35, 43-45, 269 CR 228, 231-232 (but damage award should have been reduced to extent holder of security interest was contributorily negligent in failing to record deed of trust)]

"Both the policy of preventing future harm and considerations of moral blame compel the imposition of a duty on the part of a realtor never to allow a desire to consummate a deal or collect a commission to take precedence over [their] fundamental obligation of honesty, fairness and full disclosure toward all parties." [Norman I. Krug Real Estate Investments, Inc. v. Praszker, supra, 220 CA3d at 43, 269 CR at 231]

c. [2:231] Statutory duties of disclosure to buyers: As earlier discussed, sellers' brokers are statutorily bound to make a reasonable investigation of the property and provide prospective buyers with prescribed disclosure statements regarding the physical condition of the property (e.g., Civ.C. §§ 1102 et seq., 1103 et seq., 2079 et seq.). See ¶ 2:170 ff.

d. [2:232] Theories of liability: Depending on the facts, various theories of recovery are available to third parties aggrieved by a broker's dishonest dealings or other breach of duty:

(1) [2:233] Constructive trust/quasi-contract/restitution: Brokers can become "involuntary trustees" of the profits they make through fraudulent misrepresentations. [See Ward v. Taggart (1959) 51 C2d 736, 741-742, 336 P2d 534, 537; Nguyen v. Scott (1988) 206 CA3d 725, 735, 253 CR 800, 806; ¶ 2:227]

(2) [2:234] Negligence: Brokers are liable to all parties to the transaction for injuries resulting from their negligence. [See Merrill v. Buck (1962) 58 C2d 552, 562-563, 25 CR 456, 462-463—realtors who undertook to show landlord's house to prospective tenant for commission were under duty to warn prospective tenant of concealed danger of which they were aware; Hall v. Aurora Loan Services LLC (2013) 215 CA4th 1134, 1143, 155 CR3d 739, 745—summary judgment improperly granted where evidence presented triable issue whether listing agents (as well as owners) knew or should have known stairway ladder constituted concealed danger and therefore had duty to warn third parties; see also Norman I. Krug Real Estate Investments, Inc. v. Praszker (1990) 220 CA3d 35, 43, 269 CR 228, 231-232, ¶ 2:228 (negligence liability to third-party holder of unrecorded security interest extinguished by sale)]

(a) [2:234a] Negligence liability arising from listing in multiple listing service: Brokers and salespersons are subject to statutory negligence liability for inaccuracies in listings placed in a multiple listing service (MLS):

An agent who places a listing or other information in an MLS "shall be responsible for the truth of all representations and statements" made by the agent of which the agent "had knowledge or reasonably should have had knowledge to anyone injured by their falseness or inaccuracy." [Civ.C. § 1088(b) (emphasis added); Furla v. Jon Douglas Co. (1998) 65 CA4th 1069, 1077, 76 CR2d 911, 916; see also Saffie v. Schmeling (2014) 224 CA4th 563, 569-570, 168 CR3d 766, 770—broker's 2006 MLS statement indicating property located in earthquake study zone was declared buildable by licensed geologist following Fault Hazard Investigation and that related report was available to "serious buyers" deemed sufficiently accurate notwithstanding omission of report's 1982 publication date]

1) [2:234b] MLS' duty to retain agent's information: An MLS must retain and make accessible on its computer system all listing and other information placed by an agent for at least three years from the date the listing was placed in the MLS. [Civ.C. § 1088(c)]

(b) [2:234.1] No duty of care to disinterested third parties: But brokers owe no duty of care to third parties who are complete strangers to the real estate sale transaction—i.e., those who are not a seller, buyer or prospective purchaser of the property, have no contractual relationship with the broker, and are not intended beneficiaries of information and advice provided by the broker. Consequently, such third parties cannot state a negligence cause of action against the broker. [Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage Co., Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Salazar) (2004) 117 CA4th 158, 165, 11 CR3d 564, 570; FSR Brokerage, Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Blanco) (1995) 35 CA4th 69, 73-74, 41 CR2d 404, 408; see also ¶ 2:170.10 ff.]

(c) [2:234.2] Negligence liability arising from failure to obtain seller's permission to disclose confidential information reflecting substantial risk of escrow not closing: Brokers are not obligated to reveal confidential information unrelated to their Civ.C. § 2079.16 affirmative duties (i.e., their affirmative duties of care, honesty, good faith, fair dealing and disclosure, etc.). But a seller's broker's broad obligation to act fairly toward all parties (¶ 2:226) requires them to obtain the seller's permission to disclose confidential information reflecting a substantial risk that escrow will not close:

"The solution to the conflict between the duty to disclose and the duty to maintain client confidentiality is clear. When the duty of fairness to all parties requires the disclosure to the buyer of confidential information reflecting a substantial risk that the escrow will not close, then the seller's real estate agent or broker must obtain the seller's permission to disclose such confidential information to the buyer before the buyer enters into a contract to purchase the property … If the seller is unwilling to consent to the disclosure of confidential information, and the real estate agent or broker nonetheless chooses to undertake representation of the seller, [the real estate agent or broker] does so at the peril of liability in the event the transaction goes awry due to the undisclosed risks involved." [See Holmes v. Summer (2010) 188 CA4th 1510, 1526, 116 CR3d 419, 430—broker who failed to obtain seller's permission to disclose substantial risk that overencumbered residential property could not be freely transferred was potentially liable to buyer on negligence theory; ¶ 2:170.1]

(3) [2:235] Fraud: Any party to the transaction injured by a broker's affirmative misrepresentations, concealment of material facts or other deceptive conduct can proceed against the broker on a fraud cause of action. [See Manderville v. PCG & S Group, Inc. (2007) 146 CA4th 1486, 1497-1498, 55 CR3d 59, 68—brokers misrepresented that property could be subdivided; Furla v. Jon Douglas Co. (1998) 65 CA4th 1069, 1077-1078, 76 CR2d 911, 916—broker overstated square footage; Cory v. Villa Properties (1986) 180 CA3d 592, 597-598, 225 CR 628, 631—broker misrepresented amount of acreage]

7. [2:240] Principal's Liability for Broker's Conduct: Being in an agency relationship with their brokers, sellers or buyers (as the case may be) are subject to liability for the broker's conduct within the scope of a real estate transaction under general principles of agency law:

a. [2:241] Principal bound by acts within scope of agency authority: All liabilities that would accrue to the broker, had the broker been acting on the broker's personal account, accrue to the principal to the extent they arise out of transactions within the broker's actual or ostensible authority. [Civ.C. § 2330]

(1) [2:242] Acts within "ostensible authority": Even though a broker has not been expressly empowered to act on the principal's (seller's or buyer's) behalf, an "ostensible agency" relationship is created when the principal "intentionally, or by want of ordinary care, causes a third person to believe" the broker is their agent in the matter. [Civ.C. § 2300 (emphasis added); see also Civ.C. §§ 2315 (agent has such authority as principal, "actually or ostensibly, confers upon [agent]") & 2317 (ostensible authority "is such as a principal, intentionally or by want of ordinary care, causes or allows a third person to believe the agent to possess")]

An ostensible agency relationship subjects the principal to third-party liability as if an "actual agency" had been created (Civ.C. § 2330, ¶ 2:241) unless the third person knows the agent has not actually been employed to act on behalf of the principal in the matter. Thus, the principal is bound by the conduct of a broker acting under "ostensible authority" to those third persons who "incurred a liability or parted with value" in the good faith belief the broker was the principal's agent in the matter. [Civ.C. § 2334; see Kaplan v. Coldwell Banker Residential Affiliates, Inc. (1997) 59 CA4th 741, 747-748, 69 CR2d 640, 642-643—triable issue of fact whether real estate company franchisor could be liable on ostensible agency theory for independent broker/franchisee's acts and omissions]

(2) [2:243] Acts beyond agency authority: On the other hand, a principal is not bound by a broker's acts beyond the scope of the broker's actual or ostensible authority. [See Civ.C. § 2333—if agent exceeds authority, principal bound by authorized acts "so far only as they can be plainly separated from those which are unauthorized"; but see ¶ 2:244 ff. re tortious misconduct in scope of agency relationship]

b. [2:244] Agent's tortious acts or omissions: Pursuant to general agency law, principals are also exposed to liability for their brokers' negligent acts or omissions:

"[A] principal is responsible to third persons for the negligence of [their] agent" in transactions concerning the agency business, "including wrongful acts committed by such agent in and as a part of the transaction of such business," and for the agent's "willful omission to fulfill the obligations of the principal." [Civ.C. § 2338 (emphasis added); but see also Civ.C. § 2339—"principal is responsible for no other wrongs committed by [principal's] agent than those mentioned in [Civ.C. § 2338], unless [principal] has authorized or ratified them, even though they are committed while the agent is engaged in [principal's] service"]

(1) [2:245] Example—broker misrepresentations: Thus, principals are liable to third parties for their brokers' misrepresentations in a real estate transaction … whether or not the principal was aware the misrepresentation was made and even if the misrepresentation was simply negligent. [Miller v. Wood (1961) 188 CA2d 711, 714, 10 CR 770, 772—seller vicariously liable for broker's several misrepresentations inducing purchasers to buy; see Burkett v. J.A. Thompson & Son (1957) 150 CA2d 523, 527, 310 P2d 56, 58—seller's broker misrepresented house was not built on "filled land" (seller knew otherwise); Richard v. Baker (1956) 141 CA2d 857, 863, 297 P2d 674, 678—seller's broker misrepresented lot's boundary lines; see also ¶ 4:353]

The same result obtains even if the wrongdoing broker acted as dual agent for both the seller and aggrieved buyer. "[T]he fact that the broker … in a real estate transaction is the agent for both parties is no defense to an action by one of the parties to hold the other party responsible for misrepresentations with regard to such other party's property made to [the party who brought the action] by the broker …" [Miller v. Wood, supra, 188 CA2d at 714, 10 CR at 772—seller's broker's misrepresentations to buyers not chargeable to buyers even assuming broker was also buyers' agent]

8. [2:250] DRE "Consumer Recovery Account": As discussed, brokers who breach their fiduciary duties or otherwise violate the real estate licensing law are subject to disciplinary action (license suspension/revocation) and to civil liability to parties aggrieved by the misconduct. Additionally, aggrieved persons may have a remedy against the DRE "Consumer Recovery Account" (see Bus. & Prof.C. § 10471 et seq.; 10 CCR § 3100 et seq.), which is funded (in part) from license fees paid by brokers and salespersons.

a. [2:251] General framework and purpose: The Real Estate Consumer Recovery Program provides recourse to an "aggrieved person" who is unable to obtain complete satisfaction of a judgment against wrongdoing real estate licensees. The broad purpose is to protect the public against losses resulting from misrepresentations and related breaches of fiduciary duty by brokers/salespersons unable to respond to damages awards. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10471; see Worthington v. Davi (2012) 208 CA4th 263, 278, 145 CR3d 389, 400; Yergan v. Department of Real Estate (2000) 77 CA4th 959, 966, 92 CR2d 189, 194; Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Park (9th Cir. 2001) 250 F3d 1249, 1252 (applying Calif. law)]

Upon compliance with statutory conditions (¶ 2:255 ff.), the program permits payment from the Consumer Recovery Account of the amount of the aggrieved person's unpaid judgment up to a statutory maximum dollar limit.

(1) [2:252] Liability limits: Notwithstanding the number of aggrieved persons or parcels of real estate involved in a transaction, or the number of judgments against a licensee, the Consumer Recovery Account liability limit for payment applications filed on or after January 1, 1980 through December 31, 2008, is $20,000 for any one transaction and $100,000 for any single licensee; for applications filed on or after January 1, 2009, the liability limit is $50,000 for any one transaction and $250,000 for any single license. [Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10474(a), (b), 10474.5—pro rata distribution of maximum liability limits in satisfaction of multiple claims against single licensee; Zinnemann v. Bagnol (2002) 104 CA4th 656, 659, 128 CR2d 342, 343]

When multiple real estate licensees are involved in a transaction and the individual conduct of two or more of them results in a final judgment, the aggrieved person may seek payment from the Consumer Recovery Account based on the judgment against any of the wrongdoing licensees (subject to the Account's liability limits, above, and provided the claimant has diligently pursued collection efforts against others liable in the transaction, ¶ 2:260). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10474(c)]

[2:252.1 - 2:252.4] Reserved.

(2) [2:252.5] Direct right of recovery limited to "aggrieved persons": Only an "aggrieved person" has a direct right of recovery against the Consumer Recovery Account. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10471(a)—"aggrieved person" who obtains final judgment against defendant licensee may file application for payment from Consumer Recovery Account]

An "aggrieved person" within the meaning of the statute must be a client of the wrongdoing licensee or a member of the general public whom the recovery statutes were designed to protect. [Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Park (9th Cir. 2001) 250 F3d 1249, 1253 (applying Calif. law); Middelsteadt v. Karpe (1975) 52 CA3d 297, 302, 124 CR 840, 844]

By contrast, the Consumer Recovery Account was not established to protect licensees and others who are in a better position than the general public to guard against, and absorb the consequences of, deceitful conduct of real estate licensees. [Middelsteadt v. Karpe, supra, 52 CA3d at 302, 124 CR at 844; Wallace v. Onate (1991) 2 CA4th 549, 553, 3 CR2d 3, 5-6; see Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Park (9th Cir. 2001) 250 F3d 1249, 1253]

(a) [2:252.6] Not nonclients or nonconsumers: Thus, the statutory scheme does not provide recourse for licensees with claims against other licensees. [Middelsteadt v. Karpe (1975) 52 CA3d 297, 302, 124 CR 840, 844; Wallace v. Onate (1991) 2 CA4th 549, 554, 3 CR2d 3, 6—broker not entitled to recovery from Account for amounts paid to customers for losses sustained as result of fellow licensee's dishonest conduct (see ¶ 2:263.8)]

Nor is a direct right of compensation from the Consumer Recovery Account available to an insurer or like entity "who is not a vulnerable member of the public unable to protect itself from the deceitful conduct of real estate licensees." [Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Park (9th Cir. 2001) 250 F3d 1249, 1253—title insurer not "aggrieved person" eligible for recovery from Account fund (see ¶ 2:263.7)]

(b) [2:252.7] Broker standing in capacity as principal: Although denied "aggrieved person" standing in the capacity as real estate licensee, a real estate agent who acts as principal with respect to the agent's own property in a transaction and whose conduct does not require a real estate license is not precluded from recovering from the fund simply by virtue of the agent's status as licensee. [Wallace v. Onate (1991) 2 CA4th 549, 554, 3 CR2d 3, 6; see Buccella v. Mayo (1980) 102 CA3d 315, 327, 162 CR 369, 375-376]

(c) [2:252.8] Compare—subrogation claims: Under some circumstances, those having no direct right of recovery as an "aggrieved person" may be entitled to payment out of the fund as assignee or subrogee of other aggrieved persons. See discussion at ¶ 2:263.5 ff.

(3) [2:253] Automatic license suspension: Payment from the Consumer Recovery Account in settlement of a judgment against a broker, salesperson or person holding a prepaid rental listing service license (¶ 2:34.5) results in automatic suspension of their license. No further hearing is required; indeed, the Commissioner has a mandatory duty to suspend the license (although the judgment debtor licensee may seek judicial review by timely petition for writ of mandate; Bus. & Prof.C. § 10471.5(c)). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10475; Rodriguez v. Department of Real Estate (1996) 51 CA4th 1289, 1300, 59 CR2d 652, 659]

The suspended license will not be reinstated until the judgment debtor licensee has reimbursed the Consumer Recovery Account for the full amount of the payment, plus interest. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10475; but see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 10481—repayment to Consumer Recovery Account does not prejudice Commissioner's general authority to take disciplinary action against licensee for violation of Real Estate Law]

(a) [2:253.1] No infringement of licensee's due process rights: The Bus. & Prof.C. § 10475 automatic license suspension provision has survived due process challenge … because the statutory scheme builds in three levels of due process protection before a license will be lost (Rodriguez v. Department of Real Estate (1996) 51 CA4th 1289, 1299-1300, 59 CR2d 652, 658 (broker licensee)):

- First, since only a judgment creditor with a final judgment is eligible for payment from the Consumer Recovery Account (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10471(a), ¶ 2:256), the judgment debtor licensee has had the benefit of full procedural safeguards in a court of law;

- The judgment debtor licensee also has the statutory right to notice and an opportunity to submit written argument before the Commissioner rules on a claim for payment from the Consumer Recovery Account (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10471.1(a), (c); 10 CCR § 3106(a); ¶ 2:263); and

- The judgment debtor licensee has the right to challenge an adverse decision by traditional mandate (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10471.5(c); 10 CCR § 3109). [Rodriguez v. Department of Real Estate, supra, 51 CA4th at 1298, 59 CR2d at 657]

(4) [2:254] DRE subrogated to judgment creditor's rights: Upon payment from the Consumer Recovery Account, the Real Estate Commissioner "shall be" subrogated to all of the judgment creditor's rights against the judgment debtor; and the judgment creditor "shall assign all of [their] right, title, and interest in the judgment to the commissioner …" [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10479—amounts recovered by Commissioner on judgment must be deposited back into Consumer Recovery Account]

b. [2:255] Conditions and procedure: The Real Estate Law and DRE regulations prescribe detailed conditions and procedures for obtaining payment from the Consumer Recovery Fund (see Bus. & Prof.C. § 10471 et seq.; and 10 CCR § 3100 et seq.). Following is a brief overview:

(1) [2:256] Final judgment: The aggrieved person must proceed by application to the Department of Real Estate. An application cannot be filed unless and until the claimant obtains against the licensee (a) a final judgment (including, but not limited to, a criminal restitution order issued pursuant to Pen.C. § 1202.4(f) or 18 USC § 3663), or (b) an arbitration award that includes findings of fact and conclusions of law and has been reduced to a judgment pursuant to CCP § 1287.4. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10471(a); see Doyle v. Department of Real Estate (1994) 30 CA4th 893, 897-898, 36 CR2d 193, 195-196—judgment resulting from settlement agreement and stipulation for entry of judgment satisfies Bus. & Prof.C. § 10471(a) so long as judgment based on fraud; Yergan v. Department of Real Estate (2000) 77 CA4th 959, 967-968, 92 CR2d 189, 195-196 (¶ 2:257a); Worthington v. Davi (2012) 208 CA4th 263, 280, 145 CR3d 389, 401-402—where arbitrator's factual findings evidenced licensee's clear intent to defraud, award and resulting judgment satisfied § 10471(a) (¶ 2:257a)]

A "final judgment" for this purpose includes a federal court judgment but does not include judgments rendered by the courts of another state. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10471(a)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(a) [2:257] Judgment based on fraud/conversion of trust funds in performance of licensed activity: The Consumer Recovery Account is not a payment recourse for liabilities against judgment debtors who simply happen to hold a real estate license or prepaid rental listing service license. The final judgment must be based upon the licensee's "fraud, misrepresentation, or deceit, made with intent to defraud, or conversion of trust funds" arising directly out of any transaction for which a real estate license or prepaid rental listing service license (¶ 2:34.5) is required (and not in violation of Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10137 or 10138, making it unlawful to employ or pay compensation to unlicensed personnel to engage in licensed activities or to perform any licensed activity without a valid real estate license). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10471(a); see Froid v. Fox (1982) 132 CA3d 832, 841, 183 CR 461, 466—Recovery Account not liable for claim based on broker fraud not arising out of licensed activity; Stout v. Edmonds (1986) 180 CA3d 66, 70, 225 CR 345, 347 (same); Buccella v. Mayo (1980) 102 CA3d 315, 323-326, 162 CR 369, 373-375 (same)]

1) [2:257a] Evidence of fraud not enough: Thus, the Consumer Recovery Account is not liable to pay when the final judgment is predicated merely on claims for professional negligence and breach of duty. This is so notwithstanding evidence the parties were defrauded by a licensee in a real property transaction. "The statute does not ask for proof that the applicant had valid claims for fraud; the applicant must demonstrate that it has a valid judgment for fraud." [See Yergan v. Department of Real Estate (2000) 77 CA4th 959, 968-970, 92 CR2d 189, 196-197 (emphasis in original) —no Consumer Recovery Account liability where judgment was based on settlement agreement expressly limiting recovery to claims for professional negligence and breach of duty; compare Worthington v. Davi (2012) 208 CA4th 263, 280, 283, 145 CR3d 389, 401-402, 404—although arbitrator based award and resulting judgment on licensee's breach of fiduciary duty, his factual findings evidencing licensee's clear intent to defraud rendered Consumer Recovery Account liable for resulting damages]

2) [2:257.1] Within scope of licensee's license: Further, the statute requires that the final judgment rest on the licensee's performance of acts for which that license was required. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10471(a)]

This language has been narrowly interpreted to mean that the licensee's liability must arise out of activities within the scope of the licensee's particular license; and, therefore, the Consumer Recovery Account is not liable when the judgment is based on the performance of acts outside the scope of the defendant's license. [Davis v. Harris (1998) 61 CA4th 507, 511, 71 CR2d 591, 593-594—Recovery Account not required to compensate victims of salesperson's fraud because his liability rested on conduct for which broker's license was required and thus was beyond scope of his license (as salesperson)]

Or, if the claimant is proceeding against the Consumer Recovery Account on the basis of a criminal restitution order (¶ 2:256), the application must state that (i) the claimant has "not intentionally and without good cause" failed to pursue a potentially liable person other than a defendant who is the subject of a criminal restitution order; (ii) the claimant has "not intentionally and without good cause" failed to pursue in a civil damages action all potentially liable persons who otherwise reasonably appeared capable of responding in damages other than a defendant who is the subject of a criminal restitution order; and (iii) the claimant "employed no other procedural means contrary to the diligent prosecution of the complaint in order to seek to qualify for the Consumer Recovery Account." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10471(c)(5)(B)]

(2) [2:259] Judgment unsatisfied: The claimant's judgment against the licensee must be unsatisfied (in whole or in part). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10471(a)—claim against Consumer Recovery Account for "amount unpaid on the judgment that represents an actual and direct loss to the claimant in the transaction"]

(a) [2:260] Diligent efforts to obtain recovery from judgment debtors: The Consumer Recovery Account serves as a fund of last resort. It is not an alternative to personal satisfaction from the licensee and others liable in the transaction. Consequently, aggrieved persons have no right of recovery against the fund until they have exhausted all other avenues for relief from all of the wrongdoing parties. [Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Park (9th Cir. 2001) 250 F3d 1249, 1252 (applying Calif. law)]

Thus, the claimant must:

• Conduct searches and inquiries with respect to the judgment debtor's assets available to satisfy the judgment (and the application to the DRE must indicate the results of actions taken to have those assets applied to satisfy the judgment) (see Bus. & Prof.C. § 10471(c)(7)(D)); and

• Diligently pursue collection efforts against all other judgment debtors and persons liable in the transaction that is the basis for the underlying judgment (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10471(c)(7)(E)).

(b) [2:261] No bankruptcy discharge: Further, recourse against the Consumer Recovery Account is not available if the unsatisfied debt has been discharged in bankruptcy. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10471(c)(7)(F)—if licensee debtor in pending bankruptcy, claimant may proceed against Consumer Recovery Account only if debt declared nondischargeable by bankruptcy court; see also Armenta v. Edmonds (1988) 201 CA3d 464, 466, 247 CR 204, 205—bankruptcy discharge precluded recovery]

Thus, if the licensee files a bankruptcy petition, the burden is on the claimant (judgment creditor) to obtain a nondischargeable fraud adjudication from the bankruptcy court (see 11 USC § 523(a)(2), (4) & (c)(1)). The claimant's right to recovery from the Account cannot be perfected after a bankruptcy discharge by going back to state court for a “replacement judgment” against the Account. [Zinnemann v. Bagnol (2002) 104 CA4th 656, 664, 128 CR2d 342, 347-348—no recovery where default judgment against licensee discharged in bankruptcy was replaced later by judgment obtained solely for recovery against Account]

(3) [2:262] One-year limitations period: The claimant's application for payment from the Consumer Recovery Account must be delivered in person, by certified mail, or electronically in a manner prescribed by the DRE, to a DRE office no later than one year after the underlying judgment has become final. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10471(b), (c)(7)(G) (amended Stats. 2023, Ch. 510; eff. 1/1/24)]

The one-year period commences upon entry of the final judgment without regard to the finality of postjudgment procedures to enforce the judgment. [Mason v. Department of Real Estate (2002) 102 CA4th 1349, 1354-1355, 126 CR2d 278, 282—immaterial to running of one-year statute that payment of final judgment against deceased licensee's estate was awaiting probate court approval]

(On the application process and form of application, see Bus. & Prof.C. § 10471(c)-(e).)

(4) [2:263] Notice to judgment debtor: The claimant must serve a copy of the application, along with a statutorily-prescribed notice, upon the judgment debtor licensee in the manner prescribed by Bus. & Prof.C. § 10471.1(a), (b) (personal service, certified mail or publication, as specified). The notice advises the licensee of the risk of automatic license suspension (¶ 2:253) and of the procedure for contesting payment from the Consumer Recovery Account (failure to contest by written response filed within 30 days after service of the notice waives the licensee's right to object and to receive further notice of DRE action taken on the judgment creditor's claim). [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10471.1(e)]

c. [2:263.5] Assignee and subrogee claims: Persons having no direct right of recovery against the Consumer Recovery Account (because they are not “aggrieved persons,” ¶ 2:252.5) may be entitled to collect from the fund as assignee or subrogee of an aggrieved person. [Lorenz v. Sauer (9th Cir. 1987) 807 F2d 1509, 1513 (applying Calif. law)]

(1) [2:263.6] Subject to conditions on aggrieved person's right of recovery: But as assignee or subrogee, the claimant “steps into the shoes” of the aggrieved person (assignor/subrogor) and can have no greater right to recover from the fund than the aggrieved person. I.e., if the aggrieved person (assignor/subrogor) is not eligible for relief under the statutory scheme, neither is the assignee/subrogee. [Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Park (9th Cir. 2001) 250 F3d 1249, 1254-1255]

• [2:263.7] Title Insurer insured lenders who loaned money to property owners refinancing existing loans through Mortgage Broker, who also acted as the escrow holder. Broker received funds to pay off the existing liens, but embezzled the funds. When the senior liens were not paid off, the lenders made claims on their policies and Title Insurer paid them off.

Under the terms of the policies, Title Insurer became subrogated to the insured lenders' rights. As subrogee, Title Insurer filed suit and obtained a judgment against Broker, which Broker failed to fully satisfy. Title Insurer's application for payment from the Consumer Recovery Fund for the unsatisfied judgment was properly denied:

As "aggrieved persons," the lenders (subrogors) were eligible for relief from the fund only after exhausting all other avenues of relief (¶ 2:260) … which they did by obtaining full compensation under their policies. Since the lenders were made whole, they had no viable claim against the Consumer Recovery Account and, hence, there was no claim to which Title Insurer could be subrogated. [Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Park (9th Cir. 2001) 250 F3d 1249, 1254-1255]

• [2:263.8] Broker negligently delivered her clients' checks to another Agent, who in turn fraudulently converted the checks for his own use. Fearful of being sued, Broker paid her clients in full for their losses, obtained assignments from them, sued Agent, and then sought payment of the unsatisfied default judgment from the Consumer Recovery Account (relying on a subrogation theory). Broker's claim was properly denied because the clients (assignors/subrogors), having been made whole by Broker's payments to them, were not themselves eligible for relief from the fund. (As direct claimants against the fund, they would have been required to pursue collection efforts from all wrongdoers, including Broker (¶ 2:260); since they were fully compensated by Broker, their potential claims against the Consumer Recovery Account were extinguished.) [Wallace v. Onate (1991) 2 CA4th 549, 554-555, 3 CR2d 3, 6]

(2) [2:263.10] Assignee/subrogee claimant must be innocent of wrongdoing: Recognizing that the purpose of the Consumer Recovery Account is to aid victimized clients (consumer protection, ¶ 2:251), case law adds another limitation on the rights of assignees and subrogees against the fund:

Even if otherwise eligible for relief, such claimants will be denied recovery if they in any way participated in or were responsible for the underlying wrongdoing. It is "not in keeping with the purpose of the fund to allow a negligent actor to gain from the fund, even though the wrongdoer had compensated the injured party and had been assigned their rights." [Stewart Title Guar. Co. v. Park (9th Cir. 2001) 250 F3d 1249, 1254; see Lorenz v. Sauer (9th Cir. 1987) 807 F2d 1509, 1513 (applying Calif. law)—claim rejected because recovery would benefit wrongdoer's bankruptcy estate; Wallace v. Onate (1991) 2 CA4th 549, 554, 3 CR2d 3, 6—claim of subrogee broker rejected because she was herself negligent]

d. [2:264] DRE decision: The Real Estate Commissioner must render a final written decision on the claim within 90 days after receipt of the claimant's application (absent claimant's agreement to extend the 90-day period); if no decision is made within that period, the claim "shall be deemed to have been denied." [See Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10471.3 & 10471.5 (notice of decision to claimant and judgment debtor)]

(1) [2:264.1] Court action on DRE denial of application: A claimant may contest the Commissioner's denial of a claim by filing a verified application in superior court (below), within six months, for an "Order Directing Payment Out of the Consumer Recovery Account." [See Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10472, 10472.1, 10473 & 10473.1; Yergan v. Department of Real Estate (2000) 77 CA4th 959, 965, 92 CR2d 189, 194 (DRE denial of claim affirmed because underlying judgment not based on fraud, etc. as required by Bus. & Prof.C. § 10471(a))]

If the underlying judgment is from a California state court, the application must be filed in the same court. If the judgment is from a federal court, the application must be filed in the superior court of any county that would have been the proper venue if the underlying suit had been filed in a California state court, or in the Superior Court of the County of Sacramento. [Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10471.5(b), 10472(a)]

1. Nature of Compensation Arrangement—In General

a. [2:270] Negotiable; commission the norm: A real estate agent's compensation is strictly a matter of negotiation between broker and principal; the parties are free to agree to any amount or manner of compensation and may condition the broker's entitlement to compensation on any lawful basis. [Horning v. Shilberg (2005) 130 CA4th 197, 204, 29 CR3d 717, 723; R.J. Kuhl Corp. v. Sullivan (1993) 13 CA4th 1589, 1599, 17 CR2d 425, 431; RC Royal Develop. & Realty Corp. v. Standard Pac. Corp. (2009) 177 CA4th 1410, 1418, 100 CR3d 115, 121—broker's right to compensation may depend upon any lawful condition inserted into agreement]

b. [2:271] Agreement arising out of agency/employment relationship required: The right to compensation as a “broker” is based on an agency or employment relationship with a third party. [Horning v. Shilberg (2005) 130 CA4th 197, 204, 29 CR3d 717, 723; see also ¶ 2:120]

Additionally, within the context of the agency or employment relationship, the broker's right to compensation arises only from an agreement between the principal (buyer/seller) and agent (broker). The agreement is strictly enforced according to its terms. [Colbaugh v. Hartline (1994) 29 CA4th 1516, 1524, 35 CR2d 213, 217; Enea v. Coldwell Banker/Del Monte Realty (ND CA 1998) 225 BR 715, 717 (applying Calif. law); and see ¶ 2:281 ff. re statute of frauds]

If the agreement does not specifically state the amount of compensation, the broker will be deemed entitled to a “reasonable” commission. [Beazell v. Schrader (1963) 59 C2d 577, 580, 30 CR 534, 536]

(1) [2:271a] Compare—broker acting as principal: Where a broker agrees to purchase property on the broker's own behalf, there is no agency or employment relationship with a third party and thus no entitlement to a commission or other compensation for “brokerage” activities. (As explained at the outset, one cannot be a “broker” in the performance of activities on the broker's own behalf; see ¶ 2:21.1.) Any agreement to pay a purported “commission” or other “broker” compensation in that event is essentially an agreement to a reduction in the purchase price; it is not a “brokerage contract.” [Horning v. Shilberg (2005) 130 CA4th 197, 204-205, 29 CR3d 717, 723-724—because broker acted as principal in real estate purchase transaction, he was not entitled to broker commission based on broker activities in his suit against seller for breach of purchase agreement]

(2) [2:271.1] “Listing agreement” not essential: Typically, the compensation arrangement is set forth in a “listing agreement” (agreement employing the broker, ¶ 2:350 ff.). But that is not essential. In the absence of a listing agreement, “the right to the commission then depends on the document which does set forth the commission agreement, sometimes the real estate sale contract itself, sometimes the escrow instructions.” [Torelli v. J.P. Enterprises, Inc. (1997) 52 CA4th 1250, 1254, 61 CR2d 76, 78 (emphasis in original)]

Under certain circumstances, an enforceable right to a commission may even be traced to a seller's signed counteroffer which, because it was not timely accepted, never gave rise to a binding contract as between the seller and buyer. [Torelli v. J.P. Enterprises, Inc., supra, 52 CA4th at 1257, 61 CR2d at 80—having signed counteroffer, seller became bound by implied promise not to deprive broker of benefits of bargain to pay commission; see ¶ 2:321, 2:338.1]

(3) [2:271.2] Buyer's broker/cooperating broker claims to share of seller's/listing broker's commission: Even when they are the “procuring cause” of a purchase and sale, neither the buyer's broker nor cooperating brokers have an enforceable right to a share of the commission earned by the seller's broker (under a listing arrangement with the seller) when there is no written agreement providing for such an arrangement. [Enea v. Coldwell Banker/Del Monte Realty (ND CA 1998) 225 BR 715, 718 (applying Calif. law)—broker who produced actual buyer pursuant to right of first refusal not entitled to share of seller's broker's commission because no agreement therefor; see also Colbaugh v. Hartline (1994) 29 CA4th 1516, 1523, 35 CR2d 213, 216—cooperating broker's right to share of listing broker's commission depends on terms of cooperation agreement]

c. [2:272] Commission amount—variables: The commission percentage varies depending on the kind of property and transaction involved (e.g., residential vs. commercial; improved vs. unimproved; lease vs. sale of fee, etc.). Generally, however, brokers within the same community charge approximately the same commission rate for the same kind of property.

The selling price might also impact the commission structure, which may vary as the price increases. For example, a residential real estate brokerage commission is typically six percent. However, on extremely expensive (multi-million dollar) homes, the commission may be reduced by a few percentage points.

(1) [2:273] "Net listings": Alternatively, the parties might agree to a "net listing" arrangement, pursuant to which the broker is entitled to keep as compensation any amount by which the purchase price exceeds a fixed, agreed-upon amount (see ¶ 2:366).

(2) [2:274] "Sliding-scale" commission structure: Another creative compensation arrangement fixes the broker's commission percentage on a specified portion of the purchase price (e.g., 6% of the first $2 million), and increases the commission percentage to the extent the purchase price exceeds the stated amount (e.g., 10% on that portion of purchase price exceeding $2 million). This approach may be attractive to sellers because it induces brokers to put forth extra effort to obtain optimum offers.

(3) [2:275] Leasing transactions: In most standard commercial lease transactions, the broker's commission is a percentage of the rent, which fluctuates over the term of the lease. Usually, the percentage commission declines during the later years of the lease. However, the commission amount will also depend on whether the transaction involves a "gross" or "net" lease. (See ¶ 7:33 ff. for distinction between "gross" and "net" leases.)

(a) [2:275.1] Caveat—additional commission triggered by "renewal provision": "Renewal provisions" in listing agreements for leases may trigger an additional commission based on additional rent paid if the lease is renewed or extended or the rented premises are expanded. [See John B. Kilroy Co. v. Douglas Furn. of Calif., Inc. (1993) 21 CA4th 26, 34-35, 25 CR2d 752, 756-757—broker entitled to commission for any modifications or extensions of lease for up to 30 years where commission schedule stated that if lease contains option rights to renew lease and/or expand premises, commission "shall be calculated as though it was part of the initial lease transaction"]

Counsel representing landlords should watch out for such provisions (they are often buried in the text of the listing agreement and landlords frequently neglect to focus on their effect).

d. [2:276] Payment: Commissions are typically paid in full at the closing of the transaction. (See ¶ 2:394 and 4:578.) However, with respect to leasehold transactions, a portion of the commission (usually half) is ordinarily payable upon execution of the lease, with the balance due either at the time the tenant takes occupancy or when the tenant is first required to pay rent.

2. [2:277] Conditions to Payment of Compensation: Three general conditions must be satisfied before real estate brokers are entitled to compensation from their principals:

• The broker must have a valid real estate license (¶ 2:64 ff., 2:278);

• There must be a written agreement between broker and principal sufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds (¶ 2:281); and

• The specific conditions of the broker's contract with the principal must have been satisfied (¶ 2:305).

a. [2:278] Valid real estate license: Any agreement employing an unlicensed party to perform brokerage services is void and unenforceable. Therefore, an unlicensed real estate agent cannot recover compensation for brokerage services. [Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10130 (unlawful to engage in brokerage activities without license), 10136; Salazar v. Interland, Inc. (2007) 152 CA4th 1031, 1033-1034, 62 CR3d 24, 25-26—unlicensed broker not entitled to commissions from company he assisted in purchasing 105,000 AT&T Internet service customers (transaction deemed sale of "business opportunity" requiring broker's license); but see also Nein v. HostPro, Inc. (2009) 174 CA4th 833, 847-849, 95 CR3d 34, 46-48 (disagreeing with Salazar court's analysis whether brokerage services requiring license were actually performed so as to bar unlicensed plaintiff's compensation claim as matter of law)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Compare—severable nonbrokerage services compensable: See discussion at ¶ 2:280.10 ff.

(1) [2:279] Time of licensing: Section 10136 requires brokers suing for brokerage activity compensation to allege and prove they were licensed "at the time the alleged cause of action [for compensation] arose"—i.e., at the time the brokerage services were performed. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10136; see Fellow v. Adams (1969) 274 CA2d 855, 862, 79 CR 633, 637-638; Cline v. Yamaga (1979) 97 CA3d 239, 244-245, 158 CR 598, 601—broker's action arises when commission becomes due and payable]

• [2:279.1] For example, a broker was entitled to compensation where, though his license had lapsed at the time a buyer for estate real property had been procured and the sale was confirmed, his license was renewed before the sale was consummated. [Estate of Lopez (1992) 8 CA4th 317, 324, 10 CR2d 67, 70-71]

• [2:279.2] But compensation was barred where a broker had no license at the time all brokerage services were performed and the sale was consummated. [Davis v. Chipman (1930) 210 C 609, 621-623, 293 P 40, 45-46]

(2) [2:280] "Substantial compliance": Case law also suggests that technical noncompliance with the licensing law will not bar the recovery of compensation. [See Schantz v. Ellsworth (1971) 19 CA3d 289, 293, 96 CR 783, 785—broker held valid license but failed to obtain branch office license (Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10162 & 10163) or license for use of fictitious business name (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10159.5); Estate of Baldwin (1973) 34 CA3d 596, 605, 110 CR 189, 195—fact seller agreed to pay commission to unlicensed corporation under whose name licensed broker conducted brokerage services did not preclude broker from recovering commission where services performed individually and broker was merely doing business under fictitious name]

The licensing law should not be so literally construed as to require exact compliance "if it would transform the statute into an unwarranted shield for the avoidance of a just obligation … Literally, all that section 10136 requires is that the plaintiff prove that he was a duly licensed real estate broker." [Schantz v. Ellsworth, supra, 19 CA3d at 292, 96 CR at 785 (internal quotes omitted); see also Estate of Baldwin, supra, 34 CA3d at 605, 110 CR at 195]

(3) [2:280.1] Licensed salesperson must have acted through licensed broker: A salesperson's license at the time the brokerage services are performed does not itself satisfy the "valid license" prerequisite to compensation. A salesperson may only act under the authority of a licensed broker (¶ 2:35, 2:47 ff.); and the broker under whose authority the salesperson is acting must itself be a party to the real estate contract. [Venturi & Co. LLC v. Pacific Malibu Develop. Corp. (2009) 172 CA4th 1417, 1423-1424, 92 CR3d 123, 128-129, fns. 7 & 8]

• [2:280.2] Finance company that entered into a resort development contract was not entitled to compensation for all services because its manager had only a sales license and, without a broker's license, the company was not entitled to compensation for any broker's services it performed. Although the manager was later employed by a licensed broker, that broker was not a party to the subject real estate contract. [Venturi & Co. LLC v. Pacific Malibu Develop. Corp. (2009) 172 CA4th 1417, 1423-1424, 92 CR3d 123, 128-129]

(a) [2:280.3] Commission-sharing agreements between salespersons: So long as commissions from the sale of real property are initially paid through a licensed broker, salespersons working under the broker may share the commissions pursuant to a commission-sharing agreement. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10137—shared commission must be paid through responsible broker]

By the same token, the broker is not required to be a party to the agreement. Indeed, by enacting Bus. & Prof.C. § 10137, which restricts the manner in which commissions may be paid (¶ 2:115.20), "the Legislature did not limit the payee to a licensed broker; instead it required that any such payment be made 'through the broker' thus permitting payments to be made to licensed real estate professionals, whether agents or brokers." [See Sanowicz v. Bacal (2015) 234 CA4th 1027, 1030, 1040-1041, 184 CR3d 517, 519-520, 528 (deciding in case of first impression that real estate salespersons may sue fellow salespersons for reneging on their commission-sharing deals)]

(4) [2:280.4] Compare—sharing commission with unlicensed persons: It is permissible under the Real Estate Law for a licensed broker to share a commission with unlicensed persons so long as they do not perform any act for which a license is required. [88 Ops.Cal.Atty.Gen. 203 (2005)]

Thus, e.g., an attorney holding a broker's license may represent a seller in a real property transaction in which the seller agrees to pay the attorney's law firm a real estate broker commission in lieu of a fee for legal services rendered in the sales transaction provided no one in the law firm who does not hold a real estate license performs any acts requiring a real estate license. [88 Ops.Cal.Atty.Gen. 203 (2005); see also ¶ 1:148 ff.]

(5) [2:280.5] Compare—"finder's fee" compensation: The absence of a real estate license is no bar to the recovery of agreed-upon compensation for services performed as a finder … so long as the purported "finder" provided no brokerage services in the transaction (played no part in negotiating the details of the transaction, etc., ¶ 2:38). [Tyrone v. Kelley (1973) 9 C3d 1, 11-12, 106 CR 761, 768; GreenLake Capital, LLC v. Bingo Investments, LLC (2010) 185 CA4th 731, 736, 111 CR3d 82, 85—one who simply finds and introduces prospective parties to real estate transaction is protected by "finder's exception"]

(a) [2:280.6] Evaluated on per-transaction basis: This "finder's exception" is applied on a transaction-by-transaction basis. Thus, one who acts as an unlicensed broker in some transactions for a principal may nonetheless recover an agreed-upon finder's fee on transactions where they did not cross the line from finder to broker. [Lindenstadt v. Staff Builders, Inc. (1997) 55 CA4th 882, 894-895, 64 CR2d 484, 491; see also Venturi & Co. LLC v. Pacific Malibu Develop. Corp. (2009) 172 CA4th 1417, 1421, 92 CR3d 123, 127—unlicensed finance company entitled to compensation for portion of contractually agreed-upon activities unrelated to real estate broker services (i.e., finding potential financing sources and providing financial/marketing advice, etc.)]

"[T]he purpose of the broker's licensing statute—the promotion of competency and trust—is not served by denying [unlicensed individual] a finder's fee on transactions where he merely introduced the principals … to one another …" [Lindenstadt v. Staff Builders, Inc., supra, 55 CA4th at 894, 64 CR2d at 491]

[2:280.7 - 2:280.9] Reserved.

(6) [2:280.10] Compare—compensation for unlicensed person's services *severable from and unrelated to brokerage activities: The doctrine of severability (Civ.C. § 1599) generally preserves and enforces any lawful portion of an unlawful contract to the extent the lawful portion feasibly may be severed; and nothing in the real estate licensing statutes bars the recovery of compensation for services not requiring a real estate license or purports to repudiate the generally applicable doctrine of severability. Accordingly, an unlicensed person can seek compensation for nonbrokerage services to the extent the agreement's provisions for those services are severable from and unrelated to the provisions for brokerage activities. [See MKB Mgmt., Inc. v. Melikian (2010) 184 CA4th 796, 802-803, 108 CR3d 899, 904-905; GreenLake Capital, LLC v. Bingo Investments, LLC (2010) 185 CA4th 731, 739-740, 111 CR3d 82, 88]

Even if the contract is capable of severance, however, the decision whether to sever and enforce the lawful portions providing compensation for nonbrokerage services is a discretionary determination for the trial court. [MKB Mgmt., Inc. v. Melikian, supra, 184 CA4th at 803, 108 CR3d at 905]

• [2:280.11] An unlicensed management company was entitled to seek compensation from the owner of several apartment buildings for contractually-agreed upon repairs, decorating and general maintenance even though other services provided by the company (offering for lease and leasing units and collecting rents) were noncompensable in the absence of a real estate license. [MKB Mgmt., Inc. v. Melikian (2010) 184 CA4th 796, 802-805, 108 CR3d 899, 904-907]

• [2:280.12] An unlicensed company retained to assist a "bridge" lender in identifying and raising financing was entitled to seek compensation for that portion of its services deemed severable from and unrelated to brokerage activities. The company helped the "bridge" lender draft initial documentation to support a revolving credit facility and subsequent credit and security agreement, neither of which provided the "bridge" lender with a direct equity position in the underlying real property; "collateral so remote" from an actual lien on real property is not subject to the strictures of the Real Estate Law." [GreenLake Capital, LLC v. Bingo Investments, LLC (2010) 185 CA4th 731, 741-742, 111 CR3d 82, 90-91]

[2:280.13 - 2:280.14] Reserved.

(7) [2:280.15] Compare—broker assignment of rights to *earned commissions to third-party nonbroker: A broker who is licensed when a cause of action for recovery of commissions accrues may assign its rights to earned commissions to a third-party nonbroker. The assignment does not violate public policy requiring broker supervision of nonbroker activities (¶ 2:48), nor is it void for requiring a defaulting principal to pay a nonbroker for regulated services (¶ 2:64). This is so because neither the broker nor the assignee has any further duties to the principal, at least with respect to the transactions that gave rise to the earned commissions. [Schaffter v. Creative Capital Leasing Group, LLC (2008) 166 CA4th 745,

756-759, 83 CR3d 19, 26-29—broker assigned rights based on good faith belief principal/buyer would default on purchase and dishonor agreement's commission clause, not to shirk broker responsibilities]

(a) [2:280.16] Comment: Real estate brokers have countless reasons why they would prefer to assign commission claims to third parties rather than file suit on their own behalf. For example, a broker may determine the amount to be gained from successful litigation does not merit the time and effort that would necessarily be expended; or, the broker many not want to get a reputation for suing past or current clients. A broker may make a business judgment that the likelihood of success is outweighed by the possibility of failure. And a broker simply may not want to run the risk of a counterclaim being filed against them. [See Schaffter v. Creative Capital Leasing Group, LLC (2008) 166 CA4th 745, 757, 83 CR3d 19, 27, fn. 6]

b. [2:281] Statute of frauds: Agreements employing a broker to act in a real estate transaction are subject to the statute of frauds:

> "An agreement authorizing or employing an agent, broker, or any other person to purchase or sell real estate, or to lease real estate for a longer period than one year, or to procure, introduce, or find a purchaser or seller of real estate or a lessee or lessor of real estate where the lease is for a longer period than one year, for compensation or a commission" is invalid unless it, or some note or memorandum thereof, is in writing, subscribed by the party to be charged (or by such party's agent). [Civ.C. § 1624(a)(4); Phillippe v. Shapell Industries, Inc. (1987) 43 C3d 1247, 1255, 241 CR 22, 24-25]

The primary purpose of the writing requirement is to protect property owners against compensation claims from persons never authorized to act as the owner's intermediary in a real estate transaction. [Rader Co. v. Stone (1986) 178 CA3d 10, 21, 223 CR 806, 810] Secondarily, however, the writing requirement also protects brokers who, having been properly employed, perform brokerage services for their principals in good faith. [Seck v. Foulks (1972) 25 CA3d 556, 575, 102 CR 170, 181]

Cross-refer: An agreement for the purchase and sale of such property is likewise subject to the statute of frauds (Civ.C. § 1624(a)(3); Smyth v. Berman (2019) 31 CA5th 183, 197, 242 CR3d 336, 348). Many of the same principles apply as well to broker compensation agreements. For a detailed discussion, see ¶ 4:263 ff.

(The sections at ¶ 2:282 ff. address statute of frauds issues arising solely under broker compensation agreements pursuant to Civ.C. § 1624(a)(4).)

(1) [2:282] Sufficiency of writing—essential terms: The written agreement (or written memorandum thereof) need not contain all the terms of the employment contract. But, at a minimum, it must set forth the following essential terms:

• the fact of employment of the broker to act in the real estate transaction;

• the broker's identity; and

• a sufficiently certain description of the property. [See generally, Woodbridge Realty v. Plymouth Develop. Corp. (1955) 130 CA2d 270, 274, 278 P2d 713, 715-716; Rosenbaum v. Rosenbaum (1967) 257 CA2d 193, 64 CR 632, 636; Barcelon v. Cortese (1968) 263 CA2d 517, 525-526, 69 CR 657, 663-664; see also Rader Co. v. Stone (1986) 178 CA3d 10, 21-25, 223 CR 806, 810-813; Phillippe v. Shapell Industries, Inc. (1987) 43 C3d 1247, 1259, 241 CR 22, 27—where agreement relates solely to specifically described property, principal not liable to pay broker commission on purchase of different property]

(a) [2:283] Compare—compensation arrangement: So long as the requirements set forth at ¶ 2:282 are met, the other terms—including the amount of the broker's compensation, and even the agreement to pay broker compensation—need not be specifically stated in writing. Compensation arrangements and other terms may be shown by extrinsic evidence; and, if there is no evidence as to the amount of compensation, an agreement to pay a "reasonable" commission will be inferred. [Beazell v. Schrader (1963) 59 C2d 577, 580, 30 CR 534, 536; Rader Co. v. Stone (1986) 178 CA3d 10, 21, 223 CR 806, 810]

(2) [2:284] Sufficiency of subscription: The written agreement must be signed by or on behalf of the principal (or the principal's authorized agent) against whom broker compensation is sought. [Marks v. Walter G. McCarty Corp. (1949) 33

C2d 814, 820, 205 P2d 1025, 1029-1030; Rader Co. v. Stone (1986) 178 CA3d 10, 21, 223 CR 806, 810; see also Jacobs v. Locatelli (2017) 8 CA5th 317, 323, 213 CR3d 514, 518-519 (demurrer to real estate broker's contract-based compensation claim improperly sustained)—written commission agreement signed by alleged agent/owner on behalf of other owners deemed sufficient to satisfy statute of frauds]

(a) [2:285] Form and placement: The subscription need not be at the end of the instrument; nor need it be handwritten. The principal's printed name satisfies the statute so long as intended as a signature (i.e., as an authentication), but not if the name appears simply for identification or some other purpose. [Rader Co. v. Stone (1986) 178 CA3d 10, 23, 223 CR 806, 812; see also Marks v. Walter G. McCarty Corp. (1949) 33 C2d 814, 820, 205 P2d 1025, 1029—letterhead not sufficient subscription where not adopted as principal's signature]

Moreover, the statute is satisfied even if the signature appears solely on one of a series of papers … so long as, taken together, all the papers relate to the same transaction. "[T]his is enough, as all the papers are to be considered together as forming one contract or memorandum." [Thompson v. Walsh (1946) 76 CA2d 188, 194, 172 P2d 745, 749; see Rader Co. v. Stone, supra, 178 CA3d at 23, 223 CR at 812]

(b) [2:286] Timing: It is not absolutely essential that the writing be executed before brokerage services are performed. The statute is satisfied even if the principal executed the agreement after the services were performed or the transaction consummated. [Hillman v. Koch (1949) 92 CA2d 163, 166, 206 P2d 434, 436]

(c) [2:286.1] Validation by ratification: Although the requisite subscription is absent from a separate written brokerage agreement, the statute of frauds may be satisfied by the principal's subsequent ratification thereof—as where the principal consummates a written purchase agreement stating that a broker commission will be paid. [See Friddle v. Epstein (1993) 16 CA4th 1649, 1655-1656, 21 CR2d 85, 88-89—by consummating written purchase agreement, which included allegedly separate provision for broker commission, purchasers ratified entire transaction, including broker's fee provision]

(3) [2:287] Agreements covered: Civ.C. § 1624(a)(4) is strictly construed to apply to virtually every agreement employing a licensed broker for compensation. Indeed, "[o]nce the statute of frauds applies, its bar against relief is absolute and applies no matter how the unhappy broker styles [their] claim to recover compensation or a commission." [Westside Estate Agency, Inc. v. Randall (2016) 6 CA5th 317, 324, 211 CR3d 119, 125]

(a) [2:288] Licensed broker's "finder's fee" agreements: An agreement to pay a licensed broker compensation for simply bringing the parties together (i.e., employing broker as a mere "finder," ¶ 2:37 ff.) is subject to Civ.C. § 1624(a)(4) even though the broker is not employed to negotiate the terms of the transaction. [Tenzer v. Superscope, Inc. (1985) 39 C3d 18, 25-28, 216 CR 130, 133-135]

(Distinguish—equitable estoppel theory of recovery by unlicensed "finder"; see ¶ 2:303.)

(b) [2:289] "Hybrid" real estate transactions: Even though the principal is not contemplating an actual "purchase" or "sale" (or more-than-one-year lease), Civ.C. § 1624(a)(4) also applies to the employment of brokers to handle real estate transactions that effectively accomplish a result similar to a purchase or sale (or more-than-one year lease). For example:

1) [2:290] Exchanges: A property owner's agreement authorizing an agent, for compensation, to negotiate the exchange of the owner's property for some other parcel must be in writing pursuant to Civ.C. § 1624(a)(4) even though the property is not technically "sold" or "purchased" in the exchange. [Zimmerman v. Bank of America Nat'l Trust & Savings Ass'n (1961) 191 CA2d 55, 57, 12 CR 319, 320]

2) [2:291] Options: So too, a contract employing a broker for compensation to obtain an option to purchase real property must be in writing. Even though the option is not an actual "sale" or "purchase" (it simply grants the optionee the right to buy the property within the option term), it relates to a contract for the sale or purchase of real estate. [Pacific Southwest Develop. Corp. v. Western Pac. R.R. Co. (1956) 47 C2d 62, 68, 301 P2d 825, 829; Barcelon v. Cortese (1968) 263 CA2d 517, 528, 69 CR 657, 665]

Cross-refer: Options to purchase and preemptive purchase rights are discussed in detail in Ch. 8.

(c) [2:292] Modifications: Generally, contracts subject to the statute of frauds may only be modified by a written agreement which itself satisfies the statute of frauds. [Civ.C. § 1698(c)] But an oral modification of a brokerage contract is not necessarily voidable:

A fully executed oral agreement may modify a written contract (Civ.C. § 1698(b)); and a written listing agreement may be modified pursuant to the law of rescission or novation (Civ.C. § 1698(d)). [See Realty Corp. of America v.

Burton (1958) 162 CA2d 44, 56-57, 327 P2d 948, 956—modification of broker commission agreement by written collateral agreement or by supplemental novated oral agreement fully executed]

(d) [2:293] Compare—commission-sharing agreements: Civ.C. § 1624 applies to agreements between broker and principal. It does not apply to inter-broker commission-sharing agreements. [Westside Estate Agency, Inc. v. Randall (2016) 6 CA5th 317, 325, 211 CR3d 119, 125; Grant v. Marinell (1980) 112 CA3d 617, 621, 169 CR 414, 416]

(4) [2:294] "Absolute" statute of frauds defense as against brokers (no "equitable estoppel" exception): Under general contract law, a party may be able to overcome a statute of frauds defense on the basis of "equitable estoppel" (detrimental reliance on oral agreement and resulting "unconscionable injury" or "unjust enrichment"). [Monarco v. Lo Greco (1950) 35 C2d 621, 623-624, 220 P2d 737, 739-740—estoppel is proper to avoid unconscionable injury or unjust enrichment that would result from refusal to enforce oral promise]

However, "equitable estoppel" theories of recovery and other equitable remedies (e.g., quantum meruit) generally are not available to licensed real estate brokers in actions to recover a commission under an oral employment agreement. [Phillippe v. Shapell Industries, Inc. (1987) 43 C3d 1247, 1260-1270, 241 CR 22, 28-35; see also Westside Estate Agency, Inc. v. Randall (2016) 6 CA5th 317, 325-326, 211 CR3d 119, 127 (discussing narrow exceptions, including "actual fraud" (¶ 2:301) and ratification (¶ 2:286.1)); American Int'l Enterprises, Inc. v. FDIC (9th Cir. 1993) 3 F3d 1263, 1269-1270—statute of frauds barred recovery by broker on oral commission agreement with FDIC]

(a) [2:295] Rationale: The real estate licensing requirements compel strict adherence to the statute of frauds in connection with broker compensation agreements. [See Phillippe v. Shapell Industries, Inc. (1987) 43 C3d 1247, 1260-1269, 241 CR 22, 28-35]

1) [2:296] Presumed knowledge of law: Real estate brokers are licensed as such only after they have demonstrated a knowledge of the real estate law. Thus, licensed brokers are presumed to know that contracted-for commissions are invalid and unenforceable unless the employment agreement is reduced to a writing satisfying the statute of frauds. [Phillippe v. Shapell Industries, Inc. (1987) 43 C3d 1247, 1260-1262, 241 CR 22, 28-29—licensed brokers "are conclusively presumed to know the requirements of section 1624"; American Int'l Enterprises, Inc. v. FDIC (9th Cir. 1993) 3 F3d 1263, 1270; Pacific Southwest Develop. Corp. v. Western Pac. R.R. Co. (1956) 47 C2d 62, 70, 301 P2d 825, 831]

2) [2:297] Rendition of brokerage services not "unconscionable injury": Moreover, the mere rendition of brokerage services under an oral agreement does not constitute a detrimental change of position producing "unconscionable injury" for purposes of an equitable estoppel theory of recovery. To give rise to equitable estoppel, the promisee's (broker's) reliance on an oral agreement must be reasonable: "[T]he broker's reliance on the oral contract [is] not reasonable in light of the broker's presumed knowledge of the requirements of the statute of frauds." [Phillippe v. Shapell Industries, Inc. (1987) 43 C3d 1247, 1262, 241 CR 22, 29-30 (emphasis added)—broker's reliance on oral contract not reasonable, "and he therefore suffered no unconscionable injury"; American Int'l Enterprises, Inc. v. FDIC (9th Cir. 1993) 3 F3d 1263, 1270; see also Pacific Southwest Develop. Corp. v. Western Pac. R.R. Co. (1956) 47 C2d 62, 70, 301 P2d 825, 830-831]

3) [2:298] Principal's release from compensation obligation not "unjust enrichment" (no quantum meruit recovery): Similarly, the fact a broker's principal does not pay for the broker's services under an unenforceable oral contract cannot constitute "unjust enrichment" sufficient to support an equitable estoppel. To hold otherwise would conflict with consistent holdings that licensed brokers, who cannot recover under oral agreements invalid under the statute of frauds, are also prohibited from recovery in quantum meruit for the reasonable value of their services. Upholding a quantum meruit theory of recovery in such cases would frustrate the purpose of and, indeed, eviscerate if not entirely abrogate Civ.C. § 1624(a)(4). [Phillippe v. Shapell Industries, Inc. (1987) 43 C3d 1247, 1263-1264, 241 CR 22, 30-31; see American Int'l Enterprises, Inc. v. FDIC (9th Cir. 1993) 3 F3d 1263, 1270; Beazell v. Schrader (1963) 59 C2d 577, 582, 30 CR 534, 537]

4) [2:299] Public policy concerns—consumer protection: Sound public policy also militates against recognition of a licensed real estate broker's equitable estoppel exception to the statute of frauds. Civ.C. § 1624(a)(4) "can … be characterized as a consumer protection statute … [It] manifests a valid legislative intent to protect real estate buyers and sellers from unfounded claims for brokers' commissions … [and] also serves a cautionary purpose. By requiring a writing, the statute serves to emphasize to contracting parties the significance of their agreement. The importance of real estate transactions makes this aspect of the statute especially salutary." [Phillippe v. Shapell Industries, Inc. (1987) 43 C3d 1247, 1265-1267, 241 CR 22, 31-33; see Buckaloo v. Johnson (1975) 14 C3d 815, 827, 122 CR 745, 751 (disapproved on other grounds by Della Penna v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., Inc. (1995) 11 C4th 376, 392-393, 45 CR2d 436, 447, fn. 5)—"[w]e have neither the authority nor the inclination to circumvent that declared policy …"]

(b) [2:300] No exception for commercial real estate transactions—relative bargaining power irrelevant: It has been suggested that, at least in the commercial real estate arena, brokers may not be in sufficiently strong bargaining positions to obtain written employment contracts from their principals and, therefore, Civ.C. § 1624(a)(4) should not bar recovery on an oral agreement in such situations because the statute is contrary to industry custom and practice. But § 1624(a)(4) contains no exception based on the parties' relative bargaining strengths. "If the Legislature believes that [the statute] is not workable in the real estate marketplace, the Legislature can act accordingly." [Phillippe v. Shapell Industries, Inc. (1987) 43 C3d 1247, 1267-1268, 241 CR 22, 33]

Moreover, any judicially-recognized "disparity of bargaining power" exception would unduly complicate resolution of broker compensation disputes. "Even defining bargaining power would be troublesome … [T]o determine whether there was a disparity, a court would likely have to conduct a detailed examination of the parties' respective financial conditions thus creating a need for considerable pretrial discovery and protracted litigation." Further, if bargaining power were relevant, the parties (who ordinarily desire certainty in their financial dealings) would not know at the time of entering into an oral agreement whether it would be an enforceable contract. Each party would have to speculate whether they possessed some quality that created an imbalance in bargaining power. "To hold that the validity of a commission agreement depends on relative bargaining power would lead to great uncertainty … [and] unnecessary complexities." [Phillippe v. Shapell Industries, Inc., supra, 43 C3d at 1268, 241 CR at 34]

In any event, the statute provides no exception for commercial transactions. "An unequivocal statute must take precedence over mere custom. Indeed, the widespread custom of not using written contracts in real estate transactions was apparently a reason why section 1624[(a)(4)] was enacted in the first instance." [Phillippe v. Shapell Industries, Inc., supra, 43 C3d at 1269, 241 CR at 35]

(c) [2:301] "Actual fraud" exception: Notwithstanding the "absolute" statute of frauds defense as against brokers (¶ 2:294 ff.), the statute of frauds does not bar a licensed broker's action against the principal for "actual fraud." But the "actual fraud" theory permits the recovery of broker compensation under an invalid oral agreement only where the broker can demonstrate they reasonably relied on the principal's misrepresentations. [Phillippe v. Shapell Industries, Inc. (1987) 43 C3d 1247, 1269-1270, 241 CR 22, 35]

1) [2:302] "Reasonable reliance" requirement narrowly construed: Ordinarily, a broker will be hard-pressed to show justifiable ("reasonable") reliance: Given the broker's presumed knowledge of the real estate law and the statute of frauds (¶ 2:296), a broker's reliance on an oral promise to pay a commission or to execute the requisite writing at a later date "cannot be sufficiently reasonable to support an action for fraud." [Phillippe v. Shapell Industries, Inc. (1987) 43 C3d 1247, 1270, 241 CR 22, 35; American Int'l Enterprises, Inc. v. FDIC (9th Cir. 1993) 3 F3d 1263, 1270; see also Westside Estate Agency, Inc. v. Randall (2016) 6 CA5th 317, 327, 211 CR3d 119, 128—absent principal's "actual fraud" (¶ 2:301), fact broker is licensed forecloses possibility it reasonably relied on unwritten contract]

This is not to say there are no types of oral promises on which brokers can reasonably rely (e.g., broker might reasonably rely on principal's representation that the necessary contract has in fact been executed). [See Owens v. Foundation for Ocean Research (1980) 107 CA3d 179, 183-184, 165 CR 571, 573 (disapproved on other grounds by Tenzer v. Superscope, Inc. (1985) 39 C3d 18, 29-31, 216 CR 130, 136-137, and by Applied Equipment Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd (1994) 7 C4th 503, 521, 28 CR2d 475, 485, fn. 10)—principal represented his authorization was in writing when in fact it was not]

Although no definitive list of such promises has been identified, it clearly is narrowly-defined: "We believe … that a licensed broker's reliance can be reasonable only in rather limited circumstances." (d) [2:303] Compare—unlicensed real estate "finders": Because they are not presumed to have knowledge of the real estate licensing law (and, hence, the statute of frauds), unlicensed real estate finders (i.e., unlicensed persons who simply act as intermediaries in bringing buyer and seller together but who do not negotiate the terms of the transaction,

c. [2:305] Satisfaction of contract terms (conditions precedent): The parties are free to make the duty to pay broker compensation dependent on the satisfaction of any lawful conditions. [Blank v. Borden (1974) 11 C3d 963, 969, 115 CR 31, 34; John B. Kilroy Co. v. Douglas Furn. of Calif., Inc. (1993) 21 CA4th 26, 35, 25 CR2d 752, 757; see also RealPro, Inc. v. Smith Residual Co., LLC (2012) 203 CA4th 1215, 1220, 138 CR3d 255, 259—offer to purchase property at full listing price did not trigger broker's right to commission where other conditions precedent to payment not met (¶ 2:315 & 2:334)]

Most listing agreements, however, condition the payment of compensation on (1) the broker's procurement of a "ready, willing and able" buyer; and/or (2) actual consummation of the purchase and sale transaction. [See Won Shil Park v. First American Title Co. (2011) 201 CA4th 1418, 1423-1424, 136 CR3d 684, 689-690—nonbinding preliminary communications between broker and potential buyer and initial price memorandums between seller and buyer not sufficient]

While brokerage contracts are typically executed between the seller and broker, the same rules apply when the buyer employs a broker to find particular property and negotiate a purchase on specified terms (see ¶ 2:327); i.e., the contract may make the buyer's duty to pay a commission contingent on the satisfaction of any lawful conditions—ordinarily, (1) the buyer's entry into a binding contract for purchase, and/or (2) actual consummation of the purchase. [RC Royal Develop. & Realty Corp. v. Standard Pac. Corp. (2009) 177 CA4th 1410, 1418, 100 CR3d 115, 121 (citing text); see also R.J. Kuhl Corp. v. Sullivan (1993) 13 CA4th 1589, 1600-1601, 17 CR2d 425, 432]

➪ [2:306] PRACTICE POINTER: Counsel who draft or review brokerage agreements for their clients (prospective sellers or buyers, as the case may be) should be sure the agreement carefully enumerates express, lucid and detailed conditions precedent to the client's obligation to pay a commission. The conditions should be as extensive as possible so as to protect the client from liability to pay a commission if no closing occurs (see ¶ 2:307 ff.).

(1) "Procurement" of "ready, willing and able" buyer as condition precedent

(a) [2:307] Procuring cause: A condition precedent requiring the broker to "procure" a "ready, willing and able" buyer is satisfied only if the broker is the "procuring cause." That is a question of fact in each case. [Colwell Co. v. Hubert (1967) 248 CA2d 567, 577, 56 CR 753, 760-761]

The broker does not necessarily have to consummate the transaction (the word "procure" does not itself imply formal consummation). Broadly, the broker is a "procuring cause" if they originate a series of events which, without any break in continuity, result in the intended transaction. [Colwell Co. v. Hubert, supra, 248 CA2d at 577, 56 CR at 760-761; Rose v. Hunter (1957) 155 CA2d 319, 323, 317 P2d 1027] Stated another way, the broker must put in motion a chain of events which, without a break in continuity, are the proximate cause of the transaction. [Nelson v. Mayer (1954) 122 CA2d 438, 445, 265 P2d 52, 56]

The broker may even be the "procuring cause" when a sale is not completed (Estate of Lopez (1992) 8 CA4th 317, 320-321, 10 CR2d 67, 68). See ¶ 2:316 ff.

1) [2:308] Distinguish—exclusive listing agreements: "Procuring cause" issues only arise under listing agreements which actually require the broker to "procure" or "produce" a buyer. In contrast, under a true "exclusive right to sell" listing agreement, the broker is entitled to a commission regardless of who procures the buyer (see ¶ 2:355).

(b) [2:309] Ready, willing and able buyer—conclusive presumption: Listing agreements often require the broker to procure a "ready, willing and able" buyer. Such conditions may complicate broker compensation agreements because the phrase defies precise definition.

Some cases hold it is conclusively presumed as between seller and broker that the buyer is in fact "ready, willing and able" simply upon execution of an "unconditional" contract to sell. [Beazell v. Kane (1954) 127 CA2d 593, 595, 274 P2d 224, 225; Deeble v. Stearns (1947) 82 CA2d 296, 299, 186 P2d 173, 175—"execution of a contract of sale by the owner of real property is conclusive proof that he was satisfied as to the qualifications of the purchaser and of his ability to perform the contract, thus rendering the owner liable for the payment of the broker's commission"]

1) [2:310] Risk for sellers: Such a conclusive presumption can make it extremely risky for sellers to condition the duty to pay broker compensation strictly on the broker's procuring a "ready, willing and able" buyer. The following scenarios are illustrative:

• [2:311] At least under the Beazell and Deeble line of authority, a seller would arguably be obligated to pay the broker's commission when a buyer executes an unconditional contract to purchase but fails to consummate the transaction (i.e., neither "ready" nor "able" to close). [See Twogood v. Monnette (1923) 191 C 103, 107, 215 P 542, 543—absent specific agreement to the contrary, broker "has earned his commission" by producing a person "ready, willing, and able to purchase the property on terms satisfactory to the seller" regardless of whether sale is ever consummated]

• [2:312] Likewise, the seller might be bound to pay a broker's commission when a buyer who executes a conditional purchase contract subsequently waives or satisfies all contingencies but then fails to close the deal (i.e., unable or unwilling to consummate the purchase).

• [2:313] Similarly, under such an agreement, the broker might earn the right to a commission upon the seller's accepting an unconditional offer (or a conditional offer that subsequently becomes unconditional) even though the occurrence of later events makes the closing impossible (e.g., condemnation of all or part of the property). [See Jauman v. McCusick (1913) 166 C 517, 521-522, 137 P 254, 255-256—purchase agreement secured by broker was subsequently abandoned without broker's fault; Caine v. Briscoe (1926) 78 CA 660, 670, 248 P 774, 778—seller's acceptance of buyer estopped seller from denying buyer's ability or willingness to complete contract of sale; Deeble v. Stearns (1947) 82 CA2d 296, 299, 186 P2d 173, 175—buyers repudiated contract of sale after seller approved contract and accepted deposit; Turner v. Waldron Realty (1962) 209 CA2d 376, 382-383, 25 CR 771, 775-776—broker procured buyer on terms acceptable to seller but deal never consummated; Green v. Linn (1962) 210 CA2d 762, 766-767, 26 CR 889, 892—owner prevented consummation of deal]

➪ [2:314] PRACTICE POINTER: Avoid these risks. The better practice for sellers is to include as an additional condition to broker compensation the actual consummation of the purchase and sale transaction (see ¶ 2:315).

(2) [2:315] Closing as condition precedent: Optimally, from the seller's perspective, the listing agreement should condition payment of a broker's commission on actual consummation of the transaction (as evidenced by a conveyance of title and the buyer's payment of the purchase price). Such an arrangement protects against the risks discussed at ¶ 2:310 ff. because the seller's obligation to pay the broker is triggered only by a "done deal." [Estate of Lopez (1992) 8 CA4th 317, 321, 10 CR2d 67, 68-69; see RealPro, Inc. v. Smith Residual Co., LLC (2012) 203 CA4th 1215, 1220, 138 CR3d 255, 259 (listing agreement authorized commission at "close of escrow")—no commission due where seller rejected full listing price offer, was entitled to and did counter-offer and sale never occurred (¶ 2:334); Cochran v. Ellsworth (1954) 126 CA2d 429, 440-441, 272 P2d 904, 910-911 (contract provided for commission "in the event of consummation of the sale")—no commission due where payment of purchase price and conveyance of title never occurred]

"Generally …, a real estate broker has earned [their] commission when [the broker] has brought to the vendor a purchaser who is ready, willing and able to buy the property … It is not necessary for the sale to be completed …" However, this rule does not apply "where the broker's contract specifies additional conditions on the payment of commission." Where the listing contract "provides for a commission only upon completion of the sale, the broker's cause of action does not arise … until the sale is completed." [Estate of Lopez, supra, 8 CA4th at 320-321, 10 CR2d at 68-69; see also R.J. Kuhl Corp. v. Sullivan (1993) 13 CA4th 1589, 1600-1601, 17 CR2d 425, 432—same rule with respect to brokerage contracts between buyer and broker]

(3) [2:316] Compare—commission obligation despite seller's conduct precluding sale: Ordinarily, the seller cannot escape liability to pay broker compensation by purposefully frustrating a sale or making a sale impossible. [See generally, Howard v. Gitlen & Assocs., Inc. v. Ameri (1989) 208 CA3d 90, 96-97, 256 CR 36, 39 (collecting cases); Sullivan v. Dorsa (2005) 128 CA4th 947, 960, 27 CR3d 547, 556—"there is no doubt about the soundness of the general principle [that] a seller may be liable for preventing a broker from performing under an exclusive listing agreement"] Such conduct is likely to breach the seller's covenants in the listing agreement (see ¶ 2:317 ff.).

Exception: But this principle cannot override a categorical statutory bar to broker compensation liability. For example, by statute, there is no liability to pay broker commissions associated with an action to partition real property by sale if the sale is not consummated, for whatever reason [CCP § 873.745 (incorporating limitations on broker compensation payable for private real property sales in decedents' estates, Prob.C. § 10160); Sullivan v. Dorsa, supra, 128 CA4th at 956-960, 27 CR3d at 553-556; see ¶ 2:346, 2:433 ff.]

(a) [2:317] Seller's breach of express covenant: Many listing agreements expressly bar the seller from withdrawing the property from the market or rendering the property unmarketable during the term of the agreement. A seller who breaches such provisions may be liable to pay the commission even though a sale consequently cannot be completed. [Blank v. Borden (1974) 11 C3d 963, 970-972, 115 CR 31, 34-36—"withdrawal-from-sale" provision gave broker right to 6% commission on stipulated sale price (not a void "penalty" provision); Baumgartner v. Meek (1954) 126 CA2d 505, 511-513, 272 P2d 552, 556; compare Howard v. Gitlen & Assocs., Inc. v. Ameri (1989) 208 CA3d 90, 97, 256 CR 36, 39—seller's settlement of litigation not an act withdrawing property from market so as to render seller liable for commission; see also ¶ 2:399]

(b) [2:318] Seller's breach of implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing: Even in the absence of such an express covenant, the seller's interference with the broker's ability to complete its undertaking (procuring a satisfactory buyer and/or consummating the sale) may breach the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing (obligating both parties generally not do anything that would preclude the other party from realizing the benefits of its bargain; see ¶ 4:275.5). An owner who breaches the implied covenant may nonetheless be liable for the broker's commission. [Stromer v. Browning (1966) 65 C2d 421, 424-425, 55 CR 18, 20; see Colwell Co. v. Hubert (1967) 248 CA2d 567, 575-576, 56 CR 753, 759-760—owner's affirmative conduct in preventing broker from performing agency contract breached implied covenant for which broker had damages remedy]

"A prospective seller … owes a duty to the broker not to act arbitrarily or in bad faith to prevent consummation of the transaction where the broker has found a prospective buyer who is ready, able, and willing to purchase the property, and the prospective buyer and the prospective seller have agreed upon the terms and conditions of the sale … [¶] Under such circumstances, if a sale is not consummated because the seller, acting arbitrarily or in bad faith, prevented consummation, the broker is entitled to [the broker's] commission even though [their] contract provides that payment shall be made out of the proceeds of the sale … or upon successful completion of the escrow …" [Stromer v. Browning, supra, 65 C2d at 424-425, 55 CR at 20; see also Coulter v. Howard (1927) 203 C 17, 23, 262 P 751, 753-754—"consummation of sale" condition is subject to constraint that "law requires of the vendor good faith and the doing of no intentional act to discourage, embarrass, or prevent the completion of the purchase"] a) [2:319] Repudiation of agreement: The broker is entitled to a commission where the seller, without cause, repudiates the listing agreement (Daum v. Sup.Ct. (Yuba Plaza, Inc.) (1964) 228 CA2d 283, 287-288, 39 CR 443, 446) or repudiates the sale agreement with a buyer procured by the broker (Coulter v. Howard (1927) 203 C 17, 25, 262 P 751, 754).

1) Application

b) [2:320] Refusal to accept satisfactory offer: Similarly, the broker is entitled to a commission where the seller refuses to accept an offer on terms consistent with those set forth in the listing agreement. [Collins v. Vickter Manor, Inc. (1957) 45 C2d 875, 881, 306 P2d 783, 787]

[2:320.1] Comment: An offer that varies in only immaterial respects from the terms stated in the listing agreement may satisfy the broker's duty to procure a buyer as a condition to compensation; and likewise, if the seller executes a purchase agreement on terms that vary from those stated in the listing agreement, the seller will be deemed to have accepted the changed terms, thus entitling the broker to a commission. [Lathrop v. Gauger (1954) 127 CA2d 754, 767-768, 274 P2d 730, 738-739] (Indeed, this is a typical scenario … because sellers commonly accept an offer for less than the price designated in the listing agreement.)

c) [2:321] Sale behind broker's back after rejected seller's counteroffer: So too, a broker may be entitled to an agreed-upon commission when buyer and seller are brought together by the broker and, after expiration of a seller's counteroffer containing the agreement to pay a commission, enter into direct negotiations and consummate a sale on substantially the same terms as set out in the expired counteroffer.

Having agreed to pay a commission that was memorialized in the counteroffer, the seller cannot thereafter, consistent with the implied covenant of good faith, escape paying the commission by making a deal with the buyer (procured by the broker) on substantially the same terms as contemplated in the counteroffer. The omission of a provision for the broker's commission in the final agreement negotiated directly between buyer and seller is the "functional equivalent of a with-fault repudiation of the entire sale" (as in Coulter v. Howard (1927) 203 C 17, 25, 262 P 751, 754; ¶ 2:319). [Torelli v. J.P. Enterprises, Inc. (1997) 52 CA4th 1250, 1256-1257, 61 CR2d 76, 79-80]

"While no writing may have expressly prohibited [Seller] from entering into direct negotiations with [Buyer], the implied covenant of good faith meant that [Seller] still had no right to use those negotiations to deprive [Broker] of [Broker's] commission for having found [Buyer] in the first place." [Torelli v. J.P. Enterprises, Inc., supra, 52 CA4th at 1257, 61 CR2d at 80—"it is hard to imagine a more blatant example of an attempt to cheat a broker out of a commission than the case before us"]

2) [2:322] Implied covenant also runs between *buyer and broker: The same result may obtain where the principal is a buyer: Consummation of the purchase as a condition to the buyer's duty to pay a commission will be excused when the buyer breaches the implied duty of good faith and fair dealing by purposefully failing to complete the purchase contract. [R.J. Kuhl Corp. v. Sullivan (1993) 13 CA4th 1589, 1601, 17 CR2d 425, 432; see ¶ 2:329]

(4) [2:323] Buyer/seller "satisfaction" as condition precedent: The broker might fully perform by "procuring" a ready, willing and able buyer and yet face a potential barrier to compensation because of a "satisfaction" clause in the purchase and sale agreement. Nonetheless, as between the parties to the transaction, and insofar as a "satisfaction" clause impacts the broker's right to compensation, an implied "reasonableness" standard will be read in:

A condition that hinges the commission obligation on either party's "satisfaction" with the purchase/sale contract or other terms surrounding the sale does not make that party's obligation illusory or permit that party to withdraw from the transaction at their pleasure. "A contractual provision for performance to the satisfaction of one of the parties ordinarily calls for such performance as would be satisfactory to a reasonable person"; and the party to whom performance is tendered cannot claim "arbitrarily, unreasonably or capriciously" that they are not satisfied in order to evade liability. [Collins v. Vickter Manor, Inc. (1957) 45 C2d 875, 881-883, 306 P2d 783, 788; see also R.J. Kuhl Corp. v. Sullivan (1993) 13 CA4th 1589, 1600, 17 CR2d 425, 431-432]

[2:324] Reserved.

3. Compensation to Buyer's Broker

a. [2:325] Seller's obligation: Sellers are rarely obligated to pay a commission to the buyer's broker. Indeed, such a scenario could only arise in two situations:

- When there is a written agreement between seller and buyer's broker that satisfies the statute of frauds and specifically obligates the seller to pay a broker's commission; or

- When the seller has opened the door to a subagency relationship through a listing agreement with the seller's own broker (see ¶ 2:131 ff.).

(1) [2:326] No third-party beneficiary obligation: There is no apparent California authority that would permit a buyer's broker to claim a commission as against the seller on a theory the buyer's broker is a third-party beneficiary of the listing agreement between seller and seller's broker. Even under a multiple listing agreement, the buyer's broker is more likely to be deemed a mere "cooperating broker" with no standing to sue the seller for a commission (Civ.C. § 1087). [See Colbaugh v. Hartline (1994) 29 CA4th 1516, 1523-1525, 35 CR2d 213, 216-217; and ¶ 2:132]

b. Buyer's obligation

(1) [2:327] Express buyer-broker agreement: Buyers are of course liable for a broker's commission to the extent they expressly agree to same. Typically, this occurs (if at all) pursuant to a contract under which the buyer employs the broker to locate specified property and negotiate for its purchase on the buyer's terms. [See R.J. Kuhl Corp. v. Sullivan (1993) 13 CA4th 1589, 1600, 17 CR2d 425, 432]

(a) [2:328] Conditions to payment, generally: Like sellers and brokers, buyers and brokers may structure the compensation arrangement on any lawful basis. Generally, however, unless the contract provides otherwise, the buyer's broker earns its commission upon the buyer's entry into a binding contract for a purchase meeting the terms specified in the brokerage contract regardless whether the sale is consummated. [R.J. Kuhl Corp. v. Sullivan (1993) 13 CA4th 1589, 1600, 17 CR2d 425, 432; see also RC Royal Develop. & Realty Corp. v. Standard Pac. Corp. (2009) 177 CA4th 1410, 1419-1422, 100 CR3d 115, 122-124—buyer's obligation to pay broker's commission became fixed at time buyer entered purchase agreement with seller, not when escrow closed (once entered into, agreement by its terms vested buyer with equitable title and beneficial interest, triggering obligation to pay commission); Schaffter v. Creative Capital Leasing Group, LLC (2008) 166 CA4th 745, 751-753, 83 CR3d 19, 22-24—broker earned its commissions when investment company "buyer" entered preconstruction condominium purchase agreements (agreements clearly provided commissions were payable on close of escrow or buyer's default, and buyer defaulted when it refused to close escrow solely due to properties' insufficient appreciation)]

(b) [2:329] Consummation of purchase condition subject to implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing: So too, like sellers and brokers, buyers and brokers can agree to condition the commission obligation upon actual consummation of the purchase contract. But in that event, the buyer is likewise subject to the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing: i.e., the buyer, as principal, "cannot in these circumstances refuse to perform under the purchase contract and thereby obtain an economic advantage unfairly derived from the broker's services. To do so violates the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing and excuses the non-occurrence of the condition," in turn obligating the buyer to pay a commission based on the price that would have obtained had the buyer not backed out. [R.J. Kuhl Corp. v. Sullivan (1993) 13 CA4th 1589, 1593, 17 CR2d 425, 427 (emphasis in original)—buyer's broker fully performed by finding suitable property and negotiating sale contract but buyer thereafter thwarted completion of purchase transaction by effectively "selling" his contract right to purchase entire parcel and retaining option to purchase one-half]

(2) [2:330] Implied promise and third-party beneficiary theories of recovery: Buyers generally have no obligation to pay a broker's commission absent a specific written agreement on the subject between buyer and buyer's broker. However, there is a significant exception:

Where the buyer retains the broker to locate property that meets the buyer's specifications and the owner agrees to the offered price, the buyer becomes liable to complete the transaction. Notwithstanding the absence of a written agreement between buyer and broker, if the buyer subsequently defaults or otherwise breaches the purchase agreement, they are liable for the broker's commission on the alternative theories that:

- The buyer's broker is a third-party beneficiary of the purchase agreement between buyer and seller; and/or

- The law implies a promise by the buyer to consummate the transaction upon execution of the purchase agreement, and a breach of the purchase agreement therefore breaches the buyer's implied promise to the broker. [Chan v. Tsang (1991) 1 CA4th 1578, 1583, 3 CR2d 14, 17; Donnellan v. Rocks (1972) 22 CA3d 925, 931, 99 CR 692, 696]

(a) [2:331] Application: In Chan, supra, Buyer and Broker had an oral arrangement whereby Broker was to procure property for Buyer to purchase. Buyer ultimately executed a written purchase agreement with Seller which, under Seller's acceptance portion, required Seller to pay a broker's commission. Though the property met Buyer's specifications, Buyer ultimately breached the agreement without cause.

The court held that, under these facts, Buyer impliedly promised to complete the transaction and Buyer's Broker was a "third party beneficiary of the purchase agreement between Buyer and Seller," rendering Buyer liable to Broker for the commission Broker would have received from Seller had Buyer performed. [Chan v. Tsang (1991) 1 CA4th 1578, 1587, 3 CR2d 14, 19 (relying on Donnellan v. Rocks, supra)]

(b) [2:332] Comment: Both Chan and Donnellan relied on out-of-state authority (see Chan v. Tsang (1991) 1 CA4th 1578, 1585-1587, 3 CR2d 14, 18-19); and both have since come under serious criticism:

• Significantly, the Chan court did not address the statute of frauds; nor did the court explain why a buyer's broker can claim a commission on an implied promise theory (where there is no written employment agreement) while a seller's broker cannot.

• Additionally, Chan did not expound on the third-party beneficiary theory of recovery; nor distinguish other authority rejecting third-party beneficiary standing by a buyer's broker against the seller.

Nonetheless, Chan and Donnellan have not been overruled and, thus, present potentially serious problems for prospective buyers (¶ 2:333).

➪ [2:333] PRACTICE POINTER: Historically at least, many buyers were not hesitant to breach a purchase agreement because they had little concern with the consequences. Their thinking was that the seller was not likely to sue for the breach or, in the event of suit, not likely to prevail. This conclusion rested on the theories that (i) many sellers are simply reluctant to incur the time and expense of suing, (ii) in any event, if the property is worth more than the contract price, the seller will not have suffered any cognizable damages, and/or (iii) if the buyer bargained for a liquidated damages provision (¶ 4:310 ff.), the buyer could breach the contract and only suffer the forfeiture of a minimal deposit. (See ¶ 11:101 ff. re seller's damages for buyer's breach of purchase agreement.)

Buyer's counsel should be mindful of Chan when advising their clients on a contemplated breach. Chan suggests buyers could conceivably be liable to their brokers even though the buyer is not required to pay damages to the seller (or even if the purchase contract contains a valid liquidated damages clause). Thus, a buyer's decision to renege on a purchase contract could risk far more in liability than seemingly inconsequential exposure on the seller's claim.

c. [2:334] Seller's broker's obligation (commission-splitting): A seller's broker has no obligation to share its commission with the buyer's broker in the absence of an agreement providing for such an arrangement (¶ 2:271.2). The fact the listing agreement gives the seller's broker the authority to "cooperate with" other brokers and divide its commission accordingly does not give the buyer's broker any enforceable right to a share of the commission; such language simply leaves the seller's broker free, if it so chooses, to split its commission with other brokers. [Enea v. Coldwell Banker/Del Monte Realty (ND CA 1998) 225 BR 715, 718 (applying Calif. law)—listing broker not required to split commission with broker for buyer exercising right of first refusal; see also RealPro, Inc. v. Smith Residual Co., LLC (2012) 203 CA4th 1215, 1220, 138 CR3d 255, 259—listing broker not required to split commission with buyer's broker despite agreement to do so where all conditions precedent to payment not met]

4. [2:335] Right to Compensation Where Sale Consummated After Expiration of Listing Agreement: Most listing agreements contain (or should contain) a specific expiration date. Indeed, certain "exclusive listing agreements" must state a definitive term (see ¶ 2:379). However, expiration of the listing agreement before the actual closing does not necessarily bar the broker's entitlement to a commission:

a. [2:336] Offer accepted during term, but closing occurs after expiration of term: The broker is clearly entitled to compensation under a listing agreement that expressly provides for a commission so long as the offer is accepted (or an acceptable offer is procured) before the end of the listing term. [Walter v. Libby (1945) 72 CA2d 138, 142-143, 164 P2d 21, 23; Wilson v. Roppolo (1962) 207 CA2d 276, 280-281, 24 CR 437, 439]

(Even in the absence of such a provision, courts are unlikely to excuse sellers from their broker compensation obligation so long as the offer is procured within the term of the listing agreement. See ¶ 2:307 re satisfaction of condition that broker procure a "ready, willing and able" buyer.)

(1) [2:337] Commission earned when property "sold": Most listing agreements state the broker has earned their commission once the property is "sold." However, "sold" does not necessarily mean the transaction must be consummated (as evidenced by a conveyance of title and payment of the purchase price). "Sold" ordinarily means a "transaction for the transfer of real property from a seller to a buyer" and includes a real property sales contract within the meaning of Civ.C. § 2985 (i.e., an agreement in which one party agrees to convey real property title to another upon satisfaction of specified conditions set forth in the contract and that does not require conveyance of title within one year from date of contract's formation). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10018.10; see also Civ.C. § 2079.13(l); Leonard v. Fallas (1959) 51 C2d 649, 652-653, 335 P2d 665, 668; and ¶ 2:382]

b. Seller's improper conduct

(1) [2:338] Intentional delay (breach of implied covenant): As discussed, sellers impliedly promise under a listing agreement not to do anything that will prevent their brokers from realizing the benefit of the broker's bargain (implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, ¶ 2:318). Therefore, a seller cannot avoid the obligation to pay a commission by intentionally, arbitrarily or in bad faith thwarting or delaying execution of a purchase agreement until expiration of the listing agreement term. [Herz v. Clarks Market (1960) 179 CA2d 471, 474-475, 3 CR 844, 846; see also California Auto Court Ass'n v. Cohn (1950) 98 CA2d 145, 149, 219 P2d 511, 514]

(2) [2:338.1] Direct negotiations with buyer procured by broker on same terms (breach of implied covenant): Nor can a broker's right to a commission be defeated by the fact the seller dealt directly with a buyer procured by the broker, and on substantially the same terms, after expiration of both the listing agreement and the seller's subsequent counteroffer that had again memorialized the commission arrangement. [Torelli v. J.P. Enterprises, Inc. (1997) 52 CA4th 1250, 1252, 61 CR2d 76, 77]

“The [seller's] promise to pay the broker a commission did not die with the expiration of the counteroffer to the buyer. When the seller signed the counteroffer, it became bound by an implied promise not to deprive the broker of the benefits of the bargain to pay the commission. The law does not allow a broker to be cheated out of [their] commission by the simple artifice of entering into direct negotiations and making substantially the same bargain, albeit without the commission.” [Torelli v. J.P. Enterprises, Inc., supra, 52 CA4th at 1252, 61 CR2d at 77 (emphasis in original)]

(3) [2:339] Waiver of time limit: Sellers who repeatedly encourage their broker to continue marketing the property after expiration of the listing term and does not object to the broker's continuing brokerage efforts may be held to have waived the listing agreement time limit, or be deemed to have granted an extension of time, thus remaining bound by the obligation to pay a commission up until the time of sale. [Kraemer v. Smith (1960) 179 CA2d 52, 57, 3 CR 471, 474]

c. [2:340] “Safety clause”: Most listing agreements contain a “safety clause,” which essentially provides a grace period for entitlement to a commission.

Typically, the safety clause gives the broker the right to a commission if the owner sells the property (1) within a certain period of time after expiration of the listing term (2) to a party whom the broker has “negotiated with” or “introduced to the property” or “shown the property to.” (In practice, the second condition respecting the particular buyer varies among listing agreements.)

(1) [2:341] “Procuring cause”: Courts may read in a requirement that the broker be the “procuring cause” of the sale (¶ 2:307) even if the safety clause does not explicitly so require. [See Wright & Kimbrough v. Dewees (1921) 52 CA 42, 45-46, 197 P 957, 958]

On the other hand, if the safety clause only requires “negotiation” or “introduction” by the broker, the broker need not prove they were the procuring cause. [Leonard v. Fallas (1959) 51 C2d 649, 652-653, 335 P2d 665, 668; Delbon v. Brazil (1955) 134 CA2d 461, 464, 285 P2d 710, 712]

➪ PRACTICE POINTERS

• [2:342] Safety clauses usually require that the broker deliver to the seller a list of prospective buyers whose offers could trigger the clause. The broker is typically required to provide this list to the seller within a certain number of days following expiration of the listing term (although anyone who has already submitted a written offer to the seller is usually deemed included within the safety clause even if not identified on the broker's list). In turn, any prospective buyer who is not on the list is deemed outside the scope of the safety clause.

Provisions like these which explain the mechanics and define the parameters of the safety clause are of course beneficial for both seller and broker, as they minimize the potential for dispute over sales postdating expiration of the listing agreement that will trigger the broker's entitlement to a commission. Clearly, the shorter the time period for the broker to provide the requisite list, the better for the seller.

• [2:343] In addition, be sure to strive for clarity when drafting a safety clause. Triggering language such as “negotiate with,” “introduced the property to a prospective buyer” or “shown the property to a prospective buyer” is unfortunately ambiguous and difficult to define. (For example, has a broker “shown” the property if the buyer simply participated in a crowded open house and never spoke with the broker? Has the broker "negotiated with" a prospective buyer who merely inquires if there is any flexibility in the listed purchase price? Has the broker "introduced" such buyers to the property?)

From the seller's perspective, it makes better sense to define the "safety clause" obligation by a readily ascertainable standard. At a minimum, the broker should be required to be the "procuring cause" and, optimally, the safety clause should be triggered only if the buyer submitted a written offer during the listing term. Remember, safety clause terms, like all provisions in a listing agreement, are negotiable. Seller's counsel should negotiate for provisions that will ensure maximum protection for their clients.

(2) [2:344] Impact on subsequent listing agreement: Any continuing "safety clause" obligation under an expired listing agreement will impact the seller's commission exposure under a new (second or subsequent) listing agreement. In other words, a safety clause could theoretically expose unwary sellers to double commission liability.

➪ [2:345] PRACTICE POINTER: Appropriate language in the subsequent listing agreement can avoid this trap. Sellers contracting with a new broker should be sure to include a provision excluding commission liability on account of a sale to any buyer who might be subject to the safety clause under a prior listing agreement.

5. [2:346] Preemptive Statutory Rules in Probate Sales/Partition Proceedings: Real property sales in probate administrations are subject to special statutory rules that also govern the amount and allocation of broker commissions (Prob.C. § 10160 et seq.). The same broker commission statutes also apply to sales in partition proceedings (CCP § 873.745). In these transactions, the broker's right to a commission and the amount thereof are founded on statute, not contract. [Melikian v. Aquila, Ltd. (1998) 63 CA4th 1364, 1369, 1371, 74 CR2d 739, 742, 743; Sullivan v. Dorsa (2005) 128 CA4th 947, 956, 27 CR3d 547, 553]

This subject is separately addressed at ¶ 2:430 ff.

6. [2:347] Prior Court Approval Required in Bankruptcy Cases: A broker is not entitled to compensation for the sale of real property in a bankruptcy estate unless the bankruptcy trustee or debtor in possession obtained prior court approval to employ the broker. [11 USC § 327(a); In re Haley (9th Cir. 1991) 950 F2d 588, 590; Enea v. Coldwell Banker/Del Monte Realty (ND CA 1998) 225 BR 715, 719]

[2:350] The employment contract between seller and broker is commonly (and statutorily) known as a "listing agreement." (Again, however, a separate "listing agreement" is not essential to a broker's right to recover compensation, so long as the arrangement is memorialized in a written document that satisfies the statute of frauds; ¶ 2:271.1.)

The California Association of Realtors (C.A.R.), as well as most larger brokerage companies, provides a variety of preprinted form listing agreements that can be purchased online through C.A.R.'s subsidiary, the REBS Online Store, at www.car.org, or by contacting REBS Customer Service at (213) 739-8227. The parties, however, are free to enter into any kind of listing agreement they desire. [Blank v. Borden (1974) 11 C3d 963, 972, 115 CR 31, 36, fn. 8; Leonard v. Fallas (1959) 51 C2d 649, 652, 335 P2d 665, 668]

Agreements between prospective buyers and brokers are rare. Occasionally, however, buyers enter into formal agreements with brokers to locate particular property meeting the buyer's specifications (¶ 2:327); this is commonly known as an "exclusive authorization to locate property."

1. Types of Listing Agreements

a. [2:351] In general: A "listing agreement" is statutorily defined as "a written contract between a seller of real property or a business opportunity and a real estate broker by which the broker has been authorized to sell the real property or find or obtain a buyer, including rendering other services for which a real estate license is required to the seller pursuant to the terms of the agreement." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10018.14; Civ.C. § 1086(f); McAvoy v. Hilbert (2009) 172 CA4th 707, 712, 91 CR3d 437, 441; see also Hall v. Aurora Loan Services LLC (2013) 215 CA4th 1134, 1140, 155 CR3d 739, 743—property owner's legal relationship with agent is created and defined by listing agreement]

(1) [2:352] Statutory classifications: Bus. & Prof.C. § 10018.14 recognizes three types of listing agreements, each distinguished from the other by the conditions that must be satisfied for the broker to earn a commission. A "listing agreement" may be either:

• An "exclusive right to sell listing agreement" (¶ 2:355);

• A "seller reserved listing agreement" (¶ 2:358); or

• An "open listing agreement" (¶ 2:360).

(2) [2:353] Nonstatutory types: However, the statutory listing agreements are not exclusive. The parties may negotiate any other type of listing they desire (see ¶ 2:364 ff.). [Metzenbaum v. R.O.S. Associates (1986) 188 CA3d 202, 210, 232 CR 741, 745, fn. 1]

(3) [2:354] Construction of agreement—title not dispositive: Indeed, neither the Bus. & Prof.C. § 10018.14 definitions nor the title used in the agreement are dispositive of the parties' true rights and obligations. [Metzenbaum v. R.O.S. Associates (1986) 188 CA3d 202, 210, 232 CR 741, 745, fn. 1 (decided under former law)]

For example, a so-called "exclusive right to sell" does not grant the broker the right to sell the property or the right to execute contracts on the seller's behalf. Rather, it simply grants the broker a right to compensation upon the happening of certain events. Thus, the contents of a listing agreement, not the label used, prevail in interpreting contracts for broker compensation; and courts will construe the parties' rights and obligations by looking to the "four corners of the document" (see generally, Civ.C. § 1639). [Howard Gitlen & Associates, Inc. v. Ameri (1989) 208 CA3d 90, 95, 256 CR 36, 38 (decided under former law); Metzenbaum v. R.O.S. Associates, supra, 188 CA3d at 210, 232 CR at 745, fn. 1 (decided under former law); see also Colbaugh v. Hartline (1994) 29 CA4th 1516, 1524, 35 CR2d 213, 217 (decided under former law)—cooperating broker has no right to proceed against seller for commission absent provision in listing agreement conferring such right]

b. [2:355] Exclusive right to sell listing agreement: An "exclusive right to sell listing agreement" grants the seller's agent, for a specified period of time, the exclusive right to sell, find or obtain a buyer for the real property. The seller's agent is entitled to the agreed compensation if, during the specified period of time, the property is sold, "no matter who effected the sale," or when the seller's agent receives and presents to the owner any enforceable offer "from a ready, able and willing buyer on terms that are authorized by the listing agreement or accepted by the owner." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10018.15—agreement may provide for compensation to seller's agent if property sold within specified period after agreement's termination; Century 21 Butler Realty, Inc. v. Vasquez (1995) 41 CA4th 888, 891, 49 CR2d 1, 2 (decided under former law)]

An exclusive listing agreement must contain a specific term (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10176(f), ¶ 2:379).

(1) [2:356] Commission liability for *any sale during exclusive term: Again, an "exclusive" listing agreement does not actually empower the broker to "sell" the property or execute a sale contract for the owner. But even if the sellers have the right to terminate the agency relationship before the agreement's stated expiration date, that does not terminate the broker's right to compensation. Under an "exclusive right to sell listing agreement," the broker earns the right to the specified commission if a sale occurs during the listing term regardless of who sold the property or procured the buyer. [Century 21 Butler Realty, Inc. v. Vasquez (1995) 41 CA4th 888, 892, 49 CR2d 1, 3 (decided under former law); Howard Gitlen & Associates, Inc. v. Ameri (1989) 208 CA3d 90, 94-95, 256 CR 36, 38 (decided under former law)—broker under "exclusive right to sell" listing entitled to commission even if property sold by owner during listing term]

➪ [2:357] PRACTICE POINTER: This feature, of course, puts sellers at an obvious disadvantage: They will be liable for the broker's commission even if the broker has nothing to do with procuring the buyer or consummating the transaction.

c. [2:358] Seller reserved listing agreement: A "seller reserved listing agreement" is identical to an "exclusive right to sell listing agreement" (¶ 2:355) except "[c]ompensation is not owed to the seller's agent if the owner sells the property directly and not through any other broker." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10018.16—agreement may provide for compensation to seller's agent if property sold, other than directly by seller, within specified period after agreement's termination; see E.A. Strout Western Realty Agency, Inc. v. Gregoire (1950) 101 CA2d 512, 515-516, 225 P2d 585, 587 (decided under former law)]

Seller reserved listing agreements must also contain a specified term (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10176(f), ¶ 2:379).

➪ [2:359] PRACTICE POINTER: A seller reserved listing agreement may be more desirable for sellers than an exclusive right to sell listing agreement because the sellers are released from any commission obligation if they sell the property without broker involvement. However, to ensure optimum protection, the listing agreement should precisely define what constitutes a "direct sale by the owner."

For example, absent clear provision to the contrary, an owner will be liable for the broker's commission under a reserved listing agreement when the owner sells the property directly to a person whose name was furnished to the seller by the broker even though the broker was not the "procuring cause." [Leonard v. Fallas (1959) 51 C2d 649, 652, 335 P2d 665, 668 (decided under former law)]

d. [2:360] Open listing agreement: An "open listing agreement" grants "no exclusive rights or priorities" to the seller's agent; and a commission is payable to the seller's agent only if that agent "obtains and presents to the owner an enforceable offer from a ready, able, and willing buyer on the terms authorized by the listing agreement, which is accepted by the owner, before the property is otherwise sold either through another licensee or by the owner directly and before the listing agreement expires by its terms or is revoked by the seller's agent or the owner." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10018.17; McAvoy v. Hilbert (2009) 172 CA4th 707, 712, 91 CR3d 437, 442 (decided under former law)]

(1) [2:361] Revocable at seller's will: Unlike "exclusive right to sell" and "seller reserved" listing agreements, an "open listing agreement" need not specify a definite date for termination. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10176(f); Summers v. Freeman (1954) 128 CA2d 828, 830-831, 276 P2d 131, 133] Indeed, the owner may effectively revoke an open listing agreement any time before the broker has obtained a buyer. . . and this is so regardless of the effort and expense the broker may have incurred before the termination. [Tetrick v. Sloan (1959) 170 CA2d 540, 545-546, 339 P2d 613, 616-617 (decided under former law)]

(2) [2:362] Opportunity for optimum marketing exposure without enhanced commission liability: An open listing agreement also gives the seller the opportunity to enter into as many open listings as they desire and thus optimize marketing exposure without risking "double commission" liability. An open listing seller's agent is entitled to a commission only if that particular agent is the first to obtain a ready, willing and able buyer. [Marks v. Rowley (1951) 102 C2d 619, 621, 228 P2d 29, 31 (decided under former law); People v. National Ass'n of Realtors (1981) 120 CA3d 459, 477-478, 174 CR 728, 737 (decided under former law)]

➪ [2:363] PRACTICE POINTER: Nonetheless, in practice, open listing seller's agents might not be as committed to marketing the property as they would if granted an "exclusive." Knowing someone else could step in and claim the commission by producing a satisfactory buyer during the listing term, an open listing seller's agent may be tempted not to exert time and energy that could, theoretically at least, go uncompensated. Sellers eager to close a deal as expeditiously as possible should keep this in mind when weighing the pros and cons of "exclusive" vs. "open" listing agreements.

e. [2:364] "Hybrid" listings agreements: Again, the parties are not limited to the foregoing types of listings agreements. They can modify any of the standard listing arrangements to suit their particular idiosyncrasies.

(1) [2:365] Example—"exclusive" with exceptions: For example, sellers often grant an exclusive right to sell, but exclude from the listing agreement specific persons or entities (or their employees or family members), reserving the right to sell to such persons/entities without liability to pay a commission. This might occur where the seller does not insist on an exclusive agency listing agreement but nonetheless knows of certain identifiable prospective buyers.

The seller may also want to exclude from the listing agreement any buyers obtained from a specified marketing source or publication.

f. [2:366] Net listings agreements: A net listing agreement is not a traditional form of listing agreement but, rather, is a method of measuring the broker's compensation. Under a net listing agreement, the broker's commission is based on an amount by which the purchase price exceeds a designated price (e.g., broker entitled to commission on that portion of purchase price that exceeds $1 million). [Haigler v. Donnelly (1941) 18 C2d 674, 678, 117 P2d 331, 334; Smith v. Zak (1971) 20 CA3d 785, 795, 98 CR 242, 248]

A net listing agreement can be incorporated into any kind of listing agreement.

➪ [2:367] PRACTICE POINTER: In negotiating a net listing agreement, bear in mind the seller's broker's inherent conflict of interest: i.e., the seller often relies heavily (if not exclusively) on the seller's broker in determining the best listing ("asking") price, as well as an acceptable selling price; and a seller's broker whose commission depends on bringing in the highest possible offer might be motivated to inflate a realistic asking price. This could stymie an expeditious sale.

g. [2:368] "Pocket listings"; "one-party listings," etc.: Although lacking any statutory definition, there are several atypical listing arrangements which the industry describes by common labels such as "pocket listing" or "one-party listing":

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(1) [2:369] Pocket listing: Historically, a "pocket listing" has not actually been a written listing agreement (and, hence, has been voidable as violating the statute of frauds, ¶ 2:281 ff.). Rather, the term has simply been broker nomenclature for situations where a seller orally advises a broker that it might be willing to enter into a listing agreement if the broker can procure a buyer for a particular price. [See PLS.Com, LLC v. Nat'l Ass'n of Realtors (9th Cir. 2022) 32 F4th 824, 830 (acknowledging "pocket listings" historically were marketed through face-to-face communications, telephone calls or email]

Because pocket listings have not been legally binding on brokerage contracts, their obvious danger from a broker's perspective has been that the seller will simply refuse to sign a compensation agreement once the broker has found a buyer.

Notwithstanding the foregoing, in 2017 demand for pocket listings "skyrocketed" and, as a result, a group of real estate agents created PLS. PLS was a nationwide "pocket listing" database outside the National Association of Realtors (NAR) and its affiliated regional MLS system. PLS allowed sellers to choose how much information to share and included listings anywhere in the United States. It was open to any agent who wished to join, and agents who did join were charged less than they were by traditional MLSs. By 2019, PLS had 20,000 members who were "cooperating to sell billions of dollars of residential real estate listings nationwide." PLS's "competitive" edge caused significant concern among several regional MLSs and the NAR, resulting in the NAR adopting a policy meant to maintain the market dominance of its affiliated MLS system and, specifically, to exclude PLS. As a result, PLS listings declined and PLS ultimately exited the market and initiated antitrust litigation. [See PLS.com, LLC v. Nat'l Ass'n of Realtors, supra, F4th at 830-831, 843 (holding PLS adequately alleged antitrust injury)—district court's dismissal of PLS's complaint reversed and remanded for further proceedings consistent with 9th Circuit's opinion]

(2) [2:370] One-party listing: A "one-party listing" (or "one-party showing") in broker parlance refers to situations where a broker has one specific party (or any other finite number of parties) interested in the seller's property. The seller might not be inclined to go through the effort of marketing its property (or may want to quietly market the property to a select group of prospective buyers). In this scenario, the broker is given a listing agreement limited to a specified number of specifically-identified prospective buyers.

h. [2:371] Multiple listing service: A "multiple listing service" (MLS) is not itself a listing agreement. Rather, the listing agreement may permit the broker to utilize an MLS—i.e., a "facility of cooperation" of real estate agents (and appraisers) operating through an intermediary by which the agents establish express or implied contracts for compensation between agents that are MLS participants in accordance with its MLS rules regarding listed properties in a listing agreement; a multiple listing service does not itself act as broker/salesperson in the transaction. [Civ.C. § 1087]

(1) [2:372] Seller authorization required: A listing may not be placed in a multiple listing service without the seller's express authorization. [Civ.C. § 1088(a)]

(2) Effect on compensation

(a) [2:373] Open listings agreements: If an open listing is placed in a multiple listing service, the total compensation the owner is obligated to pay goes to the seller's agent only if that agent obtains and presents to the owner an enforceable offer from a ready, able, and willing buyer on the terms authorized by the listing agreement, which is accepted by the owner before the property is otherwise sold either through another licensee or by the owner directly and before the listing agreement expires by its terms or is revoked by the seller's agent or the owner. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10018.17; see ¶ 2:360]

1) [2:373.1] Disputes between cooperating brokers: Disputes over which cooperating broker "procured" the sale are generally submitted to a committee of the local Board of Realtors for resolution by arbitration proceedings. [See Colbaugh v. Hartline (1994) 29 CA4th 1516, 1523, 35 CR2d 213, 216, fn. 1 (decided under former law)]

(b) [2:373.2] Exclusive listings: Where an exclusive listing utilizes a multiple listing service, the seller is only obligated to pay a commission to the seller's broker (see ¶ 2:355 ff.). The cooperating brokers' right to compensation turns on agreement, if any, with the listing broker. [See Colbaugh v. Hartline (1994) 29 CA4th 1516, 1525, 35 CR2d 213, 217 (decided under former law)]

Absent an express agreement between the seller's broker and cooperating brokers, the cooperating brokers have no right to a share of the seller's broker's commission. [Colbaugh v. Hartline, supra, 29 CA4th at 1525, 35 CR2d at 217

[2:374] Reserved.

2. [2:375] Strict Construction Against Brokers: Ordinarily, a listing agreement is presented by the broker to the seller for signature; and, typically, brokers utilize a preprinted form (which, nonetheless, is negotiable and can be modified; see ¶ 2:377 ff.). Consequently, courts strictly construe ambiguities in a listing agreement against the broker. [See generally, Civ.C. § 1654—uncertainties interpreted "most strongly against the party who caused the uncertainty to exist"; E.A. Strout Western Realty Agency, Inc. v. Gregoire (1950) 101 CA2d 512, 517, 225 P2d 585, 588—where listing agreement is drafted by broker, "we must in construing it apply to it the rule … that its terms are to be taken most strongly against [the broker]"; Coleman v. Mora (1968) 263 CA2d 137, 144, 69 CR 166, 169 (broker inserted word "agency" between words "exclusive" and "listing" in listing agreement caption)—"A contract prepared by a broker that is claimed to give an exclusive right to sell has been construed narrowly as against the broker"; Century 21 Butler Realty, Inc. v. Vasquez (1995) 41 CA4th 888, 891, 49 CR2d 1, 2—where broker prepares listing agreement, uncertainty "relating to the commission should be construed in favor of the seller"]

3. [2:376] Preparation and Review of Listing Agreement: In many real estate transactions, seller's counsel's first involvement occurs after the listing agreement has been signed and an offer presented. Nonetheless, if given the opportunity, seller's counsel can provide an invaluable service for their clients in preparing, or at least reviewing, a proposed listing agreement.

➪ [2:377] PRACTICE POINTER—TACTICAL APPROACH*: Counsel who have occasion to prepare or review a listing agreement should approach the task with two general points in mind:

• Standard preprinted broker form listing agreements are just that—a broker's standardized form. They do not include much in the way of benefits or protections for the seller.

• By the same token, unlike institutional lenders' form loan documents and many other standardized industry forms, broker listing agreements are highly negotiable. While the commission percentages tend to remain stable on a community-wide basis, the intense marketing competition in the real estate industry gives sellers plenty of bargaining room on other issues. Sellers, of course, should strive to provide their brokers with maximum motivation and incentive; nonetheless, there is no reason why those incentives cannot be made compatible with seller protections.

The sections at ¶ 2:378 ff. analyze the most common provisions found in listing agreements, and suggest some additional provisions and negotiating tactics for a seller's protection.

a. [2:378] Type of listing: While the label given a listing agreement is not determinative of the parties' rights and obligations (¶ 2:354), affixing a title that correctly reflects the type of listing contemplated fosters clarity and precision.

(Of course, a precise title may not be possible where the arrangement is a hybrid that does not fall into any single traditional category; ¶ 2:364 ff.)

b. [2:379] Term of listing: Any "exclusive right to sell" or "seller reserved" listing agreement must "contain a definite, specified date of final and complete termination." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10176(f)—noncompliance is ground for license suspension or revocation; Dale v. Palmer (1951) 106 CA2d 663, 666-668, 235 P2d 650, 651-652 (decided under former law)—noncompliance renders listing agreement void; but see Nichols v. Boswell-Alliance Const. Corp. (1960) 181 CA2d 584, 589, 5 CR 546, 549 (decided under former law)—although noncomplying broker was not entitled to "anticipatory damages" after subdivider's repudiation, he was entitled to compensation for "executed" aspects of agreement; Schaffter v. Creative Capital Leasing Group, LLC (2008) 166 CA4th 745, 754, 83 CR3d 19, 24 (decided under former law)—courts have "uniformly rejected Dale v. Palmer's harsh rule" when brokers seek earned commissions]

Compare: A fixed termination date is not required for open listings or any other kind of nonexclusive listing arrangement. [Summers v. Freeman (1954) 128 CA2d 828, 830-831, 276 P2d 131, 133; see ¶ 2:361]

➪ [2:380] PRACTICE POINTER: Successful negotiation over an exclusive listing termination date requires a recognition of the seller's and broker's competing interests.

• The seller, of course, normally will prefer to keep the term shorter, facilitating a change in brokers if the property is not being marketed aggressively or properly.

• The broker, on the other hand, has an equally strong interest in maximizing the listing term because it will invest a fair amount of time, effort and advertising money in initially getting the property exposed to prospective buyers … for which the broker will expect to be compensated. (Brokers subjected to a relatively short exclusive listing, like brokers under an open listing, are likely not to put forth their best marketing efforts on the assumption those efforts might not pay off; see ¶ 2:363.)

(1) [2:381] Calendar date as measuring rod: The better practice is to specify a particular calendar date of expiration, rather than a term measured by days, weeks or months. (The latter approach invites dispute over such matters as whether the first day should be counted; whether the time period is measured from the date of the agreement or the date of its execution, etc. Conversely, a fixed calendar date leaves no room for confusion.)

(2) [2:382] Minimizing disputes over entitlement to commission following posttermination "sale" (definition of when property "sold"): Most listing agreements provide that the broker is entitled to a commission if the property is "sold" during the listing term. This language could generate dispute with regard to whether the requisite "sale" occurred before or after termination of the listing agreement.

Real estate lawyers typically think of "sold" as implying the conveyance of title and payment of the purchase price. But in connection with listing agreements, a "sale" includes, among other things, "a real property sales contract within the meaning of [Civ.C.] Section 2985…" (see Bus. & Prof.C. § 10018.10; Civ.C. § 2079.13(l), and ¶ 2:337). In other words, the broker may earn the right to a commission simply by obtaining a "ready, willing and able" buyer before expiration of the listing term … no matter when the deal is actually consummated (¶ 2:307, 2:335).

It follows that sellers contemplating an actual closing (or some scenario other than a "sale" as defined by Bus. & Prof.C. § 10018.10 and Civ.C. § 2079.13(l)) within the listing term as the event triggering the commission obligation must clearly so provide in the listing agreement.

[2:383] Reserved.

c. [2:384] Multiple listing/subagency provision: Particularly in residential property sale transactions, brokers urge their sellers to agree to list the property in a "multiple listing service" (Civ.C. § 1087). Generally, sellers should react favorably to such provisions, as a multiple listing service optimizes the market exposure by motivating other brokers to show the property (multiple listing cooperating brokers who produce a buyer will share in the seller's/listing broker's commission; see ¶ 2:371 ff.).

(1) [2:385] Subagency pitfalls: By the same token, sellers should try to avoid any language suggesting that a subagency relationship between seller and buyer's broker can be created; see ¶ 2:131.

(2) [2:386] Confidentiality concerns: Some multiple listing provisions permit the seller's/listing broker to report the ultimate sale price and terms to other local realty board members. Some sellers may want that information kept confidential, in which event the language should be modified accordingly. (Indeed, if confidentiality is important, a full-blown provision to that effect should be added to the listing agreement, as well as any purchase and sale agreement.)

d. [2:387] Owner representations: Listing agreements often include several affirmative seller representations concerning the physical condition of the property, condition of title and other matters pertaining to the seller's and seller's broker's disclosure obligations (¶ 2:170 ff.).

While brokers are justified in wanting assurances sellers will meet their disclosure obligations, sellers should be wary of making representations in a listing agreement unless they have made an independent investigation of the facts represented.

(1) [2:388] "Marketable title" representation: For example, form listing agreements commonly contain a seller's representation that the seller holds "marketable title." Unless the seller actually knows they hold marketable title, such a representation can be risky: If title is in fact unmarketable, the seller might have a claim under their title insurance policy (see ¶ 3:95 ff.) … but could also be liable to pay a broker's commission (if the broker procures a "ready, willing and able" buyer) on a sale that falls through because of the defect in title.

(2) [2:389] Representations re physical condition of property: The seller's statutory disclosure obligations regarding the physical condition of the property run in favor of the buyer—not the broker (see Civ.C. § 1102.3; ¶ 2:185, 4:354 ff.). Since the seller is not required by law to make such representations to the broker, they should be avoided in a listing agreement. Indeed, including such representations can only enhance the potential for a broker's claim against the seller.

e. [2:390] Commission rate and time for payment: Failure to specify a commission rate or other amount of compensation does not affect the validity of the listing agreement (¶ 2:283). But, to promote certainty and protection for the seller, prudence suggests the commission rate and time for payment be clearly stated (otherwise, the broker will be entitled to a "reasonable commission"—an amount unknown to the seller at the outset of the transaction; ¶ 2:283).

(1) [2:391] Compensation amount: While standardized commission rates are generally the norm in particular communities, there is no statutory or regulatory commission structure; the amount of broker compensation is entirely negotiable between the parties.

(a) [2:392] Mandatory notice in residential property listing agreements: Indeed, this point must be included in a listing agreement for the sale of residential real estate:

Any printed or form listing agreement for the sale of residential real property (containing no more than four residential units or for the sale of a mobilehome) must include the following statement in 10-point boldface type immediately preceding any provision relating to broker/salesperson compensation (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10147.5(a)):

> "Notice: The amount or rate of real estate commissions is not fixed by law. They are set by each broker individually and may be negotiable between the seller and broker." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10147.5(a)]

(b) [2:393] No preprinted amount in residential property listing agreements: Further, the amount or rate of broker compensation cannot be preprinted in a listing agreement for the sale of such residential property. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10147.5(b)]

(2) [2:394] Timing: As discussed earlier, unless the agreement expressly provides otherwise, the seller's broker may claim the right to a commission simply upon the broker's procurement of a "ready, willing and able" buyer before expiration of the listing term … no matter when the deal closes (see ¶ 2:307 ff.). Therefore, sellers will receive maximum protection on their broker compensation obligation if the agreement specifies the commission is not to be paid unless and until a closing occurs (see also ¶ 2:397 ff.).

(3) [2:395] Method of payment: Brokers prefer that the listing agreement state (a) the commission is to be paid out of the sale proceeds, directly from the escrow; and/or (b) the broker is "irrevocably assigned" an interest in the sale proceeds (up to the amount of the specified commission).

➪ [2:396] PRACTICE POINTER: From the seller's perspective, including these provisions in a listing agreement is risky:

- Such language might effectively create a third-party beneficiary right in the escrow instructions and, hence, to the sale proceeds.

- Additionally, a number of events could occur between the signing of the listing agreement and the closing which might conceivably justify the seller's refusal to pay all or part of the commission. But a provision granting the broker an irrevocable right to their commission from the sale proceeds will leave the seller with little leverage over the broker when it comes time to settle a commission dispute.

In any event, a separate escrow instruction is usually delivered by the seller to the escrow holder specifically directing the disbursement of the commission from the sale proceeds (see ¶ 4:578 ff.). Consequently, there seems no reason why the listing agreement should contain an assignment of the sale proceeds.

f. [2:397] Conditions to compensation: Provisions specifying the conditions under which the broker earns the right to a commission are among the most important in any listing agreement.

Depending on the type of listing (open, exclusive right to sell, exclusive agency, etc., ¶ 2:351 ff.), the conditions to payment will, of course, vary. However, it is always beneficial for the seller to require as many conditions as possible.

➪ [2:398] PRACTICE POINTER: Again, sellers obtain optimum protection by a condition requiring not only that the broker "procure" a "ready, willing and able" buyer, but also the actual consummation of the transaction (i.e., transfer of title and payment of purchase price). See ¶ 2:307 ff.

g. [2:399] Withdrawal from sale: Brokers are not likely to invest optimum marketing efforts if they perceive a risk the seller might subsequently take the property off the market (thus thwarting the broker's right to compensation for services performed). Consequently, most listing agreements provide that if the seller withdraws the property from sale or otherwise takes it off the market or renders the property unmarketable during the listing term, the broker will nonetheless be entitled to a commission (based on the price that otherwise could have been obtained).

Such "withdrawal-from-sale" provisions generally are enforceable even if the broker cannot prove they could have procured a "ready, willing and able" buyer (¶ 2:317). [See Blank v. Borden (1974) 11 C3d 963, 970-972, 115 CR 31, 34-36; Baumgartner v. Meek (1954) 126 CA2d 505, 511-512, 272 P2d 552, 556; but see also ¶ 2:316 re statutory bar exception]

(Even in the absence of such a provision, the broker might have a claim for compensation based on breach of the seller's implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. See ¶ 2:318.)

h. [2:400] Broker's obligations: Many preprinted form listing agreements do not impose any specific obligations on the broker. But there is no reason why such provisions cannot be added and, from the seller's perspective, that approach makes good sense.

Depending upon what the client expects from the broker, some or all of the following broker covenants should be considered:

(1) [2:401] Advertising: A provision requiring the broker to engage in specified advertising at broker expense. It may even be advisable to set forth a specific marketing plan and/or to itemize specific publications (newspapers, circulars, etc.) in which the property will be advertised, as well as the frequency of such advertisements.

(a) [2:402] Outdoor advertising regulations: On the right to utilize outdoor advertising for the sale, lease or exchange of real property, see Bus. & Prof.C. § 5272 and Civ.C. §§ 712 & 713.

Significantly, notwithstanding local ordinances on the subject, property owners or their agents are entitled to display on the owner's property, and on property owned by others with their consent, signs that are reasonably located, in plain view of the public, of reasonable dimension and design and which do not adversely affect traffic or public safety, for purposes of advertising:

• that the property is for sale, lease or exchange;

• directions to the property;

• the owner's or agent's name, address and telephone number. [Civ.C. § 713 (but subject to authority of local government and others to limit or regulate display or placement of advertising signs on private or public rights-of-way)]

(2) [2:403] Meetings and reports: A provision requiring the broker to attend periodic sales meetings (with client) and/or prepare periodic sales reports.

(3) [2:404] Escrow and title: A provision requiring the broker to supervise escrow and title procedures.

(4) [2:405] "Open house": A provision requiring the broker to conduct periodic "open houses" (usually for residential property sales only).

(5) [2:406] "Good faith efforts": A provision requiring the broker generally to take all "good faith" steps necessary to market the property in an expeditious manner.

(6) [2:407] Identifiable salesperson: A provision requiring that a specific salesperson (or salespersons) be the agent(s) to market the property.

➪ [2:408] PRACTICE POINTER: A listing agreement is between the seller and the party holding a broker's license; it is not an agreement between the seller and a specific salesperson (i.e., a real estate licensee acting under the authority of one who holds a broker's license, ¶ 2:35). Therefore, at least where the identity of the salesperson is important to the seller, it may be prudent also to provide that the listing agreement terminates if a designated salesperson is no longer employed by the broker or otherwise not utilized as marketing agent for the property.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

i. [2:409] Broker's interest in forfeited deposit: Preprinted form listing agreements often provide that if the buyer breaches its purchase agreement and the seller is thereby entitled to retain all or any portion of the buyer's deposit, the broker will be entitled to some interest in the deposit (usually half) as compensation from the aborted sale.

➪ [2:410] PRACTICE POINTER: From the seller's perspective, this is an extremely undesirable provision. There are at least two good reasons why the broker should not share in any portion of a buyer's forfeited deposit:

• First of all, the seller—not the broker—is the party who suffers the bulk (if not all) of the damages when a buyer breaches the purchase agreement. (The seller has held the property off the market; incurred additional carrying charges for mortgage payments, taxes, insurance and other operating expenses; and perhaps incurred title and escrow charges.)

On the other hand, the broker has not necessarily incurred any direct out-of-pocket loss. (To the extent the broker is out-of-pocket from an aborted sale—e.g., advertising expense—a provision requiring the seller simply to reimburse that (or some lesser) amount will usually be fairer than giving the broker a far heftier "windfall" through a share of the forfeited deposit.)

• More fundamentally, the broker simply has not done its job: The seller contracted with the broker for the procurement of a buyer who would close—not simply for a prospective buyer whose forfeited deposit might not be sufficient to compensate for the seller's loss.

With these points in mind, it makes sense to strike any provision giving the broker an interest in a buyer's forfeited deposit. Indeed, seller's counsel should consider adding a provision specifically stating the broker is not entitled to any portion of a forfeited deposit or other money damages the seller recovers from a breaching buyer.

j. [2:411] Broker indemnification: Brokers frequently want to include a provision requiring the seller to indemnify the broker for any breach of the seller's obligation to make statutorily-required disclosures to the buyer. Again, the seller's disclosure obligations run to the buyer—not the broker (¶ 2:185, 4:354 ff.); hence, it makes no sense for sellers to increase their liability exposure by expanding their disclosure obligations to include the broker.

➪ [2:412] PRACTICE POINTER: This can be a difficult subject to negotiate, since the broker is likely to contend it has an independent obligation of disclosure to the buyer (¶ 2:170 ff.) and its knowledge about the property will be based largely upon the accuracy of the seller's disclosures to the broker. Theoretically, this is a legitimate position. Nonetheless, to the extent the broker incurs liability to a buyer because of the seller's affirmative misrepresentations to the broker, the broker will have a common law remedy against the seller (fraud, deceit, etc.) irrespective of any indemnification provision.

Moreover, an indemnification provision opens up the seller to potential strict liability to the broker irrespective of fault; e.g., the broker conceivably could have knowledge about a defect in the property that is unknown to the seller. (Clearly, the seller should not become obligated to indemnify the broker for a liability as to which the seller bears no responsibility.) Therefore, under no circumstances should the seller ever indemnify the broker for the broker's failure to disclose a defect of which the seller was unaware.

k. [2:413] Lock box: Residential real estate brokers often use a "lock box" on the property—i.e., a device whereby cooperating agents who subscribe to a multiple listing service can obtain access to the property when the seller's/listing broker is unavailable. (A lock box containing a key to the property is left on site and all subscribing agents have a master key, or combination, to the box.)

Not all sellers are amenable to use of a lock box; and it may or may not be advisable in a given instance. (Relevant factors include the general security of the neighborhood, the presence of valuables in the residence, and the owner's general desire for privacy and unannounced visits versus the enhanced marketing exposure that a lock box procedure might present.) Seller's counsel should carefully point out the pros and cons and review the procedures with the client before the client agrees to such a provision.

➪ [2:414] PRACTICE POINTER: Also consider the liability risks. The seller's broker may insist upon a specific exemption from liability for damage caused by other brokers' access.

l. [2:415] Broker's powers and authority: Creating an agency relationship, a listing agreement generally confers on the broker (agent) the power to do "everything necessary or proper and usual, in the ordinary course of business" in order to effect the purpose of the agency. [Civ.C. § 2319 subd. 1; see ¶ 2:133 ff.] Therefore, those acts which the seller wants excluded from the broker's "ordinary" powers should be addressed by specific "exception" language in the agreement.

For example, seller's counsel might suggest a provision stating the broker has no authority to make representations to prospective buyers concerning any aspect of the property; and/or that the broker is precluded from executing documents on the seller's behalf or accepting deposits. (However, the latter exclusion is actually superfluous, since brokers are precluded by law from accepting monies or executing documents on a principal's behalf unless the listing agreement specifically permits same. See ¶ 2:134 ff.)

m. [2:416] Arbitration of disputes: As with contracts generally, it may be advisable to include a provision requiring that any dispute under the listing agreement be resolved by arbitration (in lieu of litigation). (See ¶ 4:485 ff. for detailed discussion of pros and cons of arbitration vs. litigation.)

(1) [2:417] Statutory formalities: "Whenever any contract or agreement between principals and agents in real property sales transactions, including listing agreements … contains a provision requiring binding arbitration of any dispute between the principals and agents in the transaction," the contract or agreement must comply with the following standards (CCP § 1298(b) (emphasis added)):

(a) [2:418] Conspicuous title: The provision calling for binding arbitration must be clearly titled "ARBITRATION OF DISPUTES." [CCP § 1298(b); McAvoy v. Hilbert (2009) 172 CA4th 707, 711-712, 91 CR3d 437, 441]

(b) [2:419] Conspicuous typeface: A binding arbitration provision in a printed listing agreement must be set out in at least 8-point bold or contrasting red type; and if included in a typed listing agreement, it must be set out in capital letters. [CCP § 1298(b); McAvoy v. Hilbert (2009) 172 CA4th 707, 711-712, 91 CR3d 437, 441]

(c) [2:420] Affirmative assent; notice of consequences: The parties must affirmatively assent to the arbitration clause (separately initialed). [CCP § 1298(c); McAvoy v. Hilbert (2009) 172 CA4th 707, 711, 713, 91 CR3d 437, 440, 441—arbitration provision in open listing agreement unenforceable because, among other things, not initialed by both parties; but see Grubb & Ellis Co. v. Bello (1993) 19 CA4th 231, 238-241, 23 CR2d 281, 283-285—arbitration provisions enforceable by broker who did not initial against seller (client) who did initial (mutuality of arbitration obligation not required)]

Further, a statutory notice of the effect of binding arbitration must be included immediately before the line or space provided for the parties to indicate their assent or nonassent and immediately following the arbitration provision. If the notice is included in a printed listing agreement, it must be set out in at least 10-point bold type or in contrasting red print in at least 8-point bold type; and if included in a typed listing agreement, it must be set out in capital letters. [See CCP § 1298(c); McAvoy v. Hilbert, supra, 172 CA4th at 713, 91 CR3d at 442—open listing agreement for sale of woodworking business, together with real property upon which business operated, constituted "real property sales transaction" subject to CCP § 1298 disclosure requirements]

Cross-refer: The statutory requirements concerning arbitration provisions in real estate purchase and sale contracts (including the effect of preemptive federal law) are discussed in greater detail at ¶ 4:490 ff.

➪ [2:421] PRACTICE POINTER—SCOPE OF ARBITRATION OBLIGATION*: If arbitration is selected as the acceptable method of dispute resolution, make certain that the listing agreement limits the scope to disputes between broker and principal. Be alert for language in some listing agreements purporting to require arbitration of disputes concerning "any resulting transaction." Such provision conceivably could be interpreted as requiring arbitration in disputes with a tenant, a buyer or any other third party.

On the other hand, bear in mind that if a dispute with the seller's/listing broker also involves the buyer and/or buyer's broker and the arbitration provision is limited as discussed above, the seller could find itself arbitrating with its broker and simultaneously litigating with the buyer and/or its broker.

In any event, this issue should be thoroughly discussed with the client.

n. [2:422] "Boilerplate" provisions: Most listing agreements include several "standardized" or "boilerplate" provisions found in contracts generally. These deserve the same careful consideration that should be given in connection with the preparation of a purchase and sale agreement. [See, e.g., Hasler v. Howard (2004) 120 CA4th 1023, 1027, 16 CR3d 217, 220—listing agreement's attorney fees clause (providing for prevailing party recovery of fees arising from any action between principal and broker "regarding the obligation to pay compensation" to broker) not broad enough to authorize fee recovery for broker who prevailed in principal's action against broker for fraud, breach of fiduciary duty and breach of duty to disclose dual agency; and ¶ 4:513 (further discussion of attorney fee clauses), 4:527 ("integration" clauses), 4:534 ("severability" clauses), 4:540 ("further acts" clauses), 4:544 ("choice of law" clauses)]

➪ [2:423] PRACTICE POINTER: Again, bear in mind that all provisions presented by the broker are negotiable and sellers should insist on striking or modifying any and all conditions, representations, etc. that appear unduly onerous or which otherwise might undermine optimum protection for the seller.

4. [2:424] Copy of Listing Agreement to Principal(s): Real estate licensees must deliver a copy of the listing agreement to their principal(s) as soon as reasonably practicable after the signature(s) is/are obtained. The copy may be provided electronically as statutorily defined if the parties have agreed to conduct the transaction by electronic means. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10142] But the licensee's failure to comply will not necessarily affect the validity of the agreement. [See Pivardiere v. Mercurio (1955) 137 CA2d 808, 810-811, 290 P2d 908, 910; Summers v. Freeman (1954) 128 CA2d 828, 832, 276 P2d 131, 133-134]

Chapter 2. Real Estate Brokers and Listing Agreements

F. Special Rules in Probate Sales

1. [2:431] Estate Representative's Authority to Enter Listing Agreement
   a. [2:432] Limitation on “exclusive” listings
2. [2:433] Broker Compensation Upon Sale Confirmation Governed by Statute
   a. [2:433.1] Same rules applicable in partition proceedings
   b. [2:434] “Reasonable compensation” fixed by court
   c. [2:435] Prerequisites to compensation liability
   d. [2:436] Limitation on commission to nonexclusive broker
   e. [2:437] Allocation of commissions where multiple brokers/bids involved

[2:430] Sales of real property in a decedent's estate (i.e., pending probate administration) are subject to exhaustive rules set forth in the Probate Code (Prob.C. § 10300 et seq.). Among other things, the personal representative for the estate must have the power to sell (Prob.C. § 10000); and, unless the personal representative is properly exercising powers granted under the Independent Administration of Estates Act (see Prob.C. § 10503), title may not pass until the sale is reported to and confirmed by the probate court (Prob.C. § 10308).

1. [2:431] Estate Representative's Authority to Enter Listing Agreement: The Code empowers the personal representative to contract with a licensed real estate broker to secure a purchaser for real property in the decedent's estate (who, in turn, may associate other licensed brokers for this purpose and utilize a multiple listing service) and, pursuant thereto, to agree to pay a commission out of the sale proceeds. [Prob.C. § 10150(a)(1) & (b)]

a. [2:432] Limitation on “exclusive” listings: The personal representative may agree to an “exclusive right to sell” listing (¶ 2:355) only with prior court permission; and, in any event, cannot contract for broker exclusives exceeding a 90-day term (but additional 90-day extensions may be granted with court permissions). [Prob.C. § 10150(c)]

2. [2:433] Broker Compensation Upon Sale Confirmation Governed by Statute: Broker compensation for sales in probate proceedings is governed exclusively by statute—not by contract. Entitlement to a commission and the amount therefore are fixed by the court pursuant to Prob.C. § 10160 et seq. [Estate of Lopez (1992) 8 CA4th 317, 321, 10 CR2d 67, 69]

The approval and allocation of broker commissions is often the most complicated aspect of a real property sale confirmation in probate proceedings. This is especially so when multiple brokers have been involved in the sale process and when the sale is confirmed to an “overbidder” (the “overbidding” process at a probate sale confirmation hearing permits persons other than the party whose offer is presented to the court for confirmation to step in as purchaser by “outbidding” the original offer; see Prob.C. § 10311).

A detailed discussion of the many statutory rules on the subject is beyond the scope of this Practice Guide. However, the significant points are overviewed at ¶ 2:433.1 ff.

a. [2:433.1] Same rules applicable in partition proceedings: The statutory rules governing broker compensation in probate also apply to broker commissions upon a sale in partition proceedings: The entitlement to and amount of broker commissions in an action to partition property by sale “shall be fixed by the court and divided or limited in the manner provided for private sales of real property in decedents' estates.” [CCP § 873.745; see Sullivan v. Dorsa (2005) 128 CA4th 947, 956, 27 CR3d 547, 553—pursuant to Prob.C. § 10160 (¶ 2:435), no broker commission may be awarded on unconsummated sale in partition action; Melikian v. Aquila, Ltd. (1998) 63 CA4th 1364, 1369, 74 CR2d 739, 742]

b. [2:434] “Reasonable compensation” fixed by court: Notwithstanding a listing agreement to pay a specified commission, broker compensation payable out of a decedent's estate (or upon a partition sale) is limited to such amount as the court, in its discretion, deems to be “reasonable compensation” for the broker's services to the estate. [See Prob.C. §§ 10150(b), 10161 & 10160.5; Estate of Lopez (1992) 8 CA4th 317, 321, 10 CR2d 67, 69 (probate sale); Melikian v. Aquila, Ltd. (1998) 63 CA4th 1364, 1369, 74 CR2d 739, 742 (partition sale)]

c. [2:435] Prerequisites to compensation liability: Moreover, no broker commission is payable by the estate unless (i) an actual sale is made, (ii) the sale is confirmed or approved by the court when required, and (iii) the sale is actually consummated (title transferred and purchase price paid to estate). [Prob.C. § 10160; Sullivan v. Dorsa (2005) 128 CA4th 947, 956-957, 27 CR3d 547, 554—§ 10160 “has the effect of creating a broad bar to contractual recovery by any broker based on an unconsummated sale”]

d. [2:436] Limitation on commission to nonexclusive broker: A broker not acting under an exclusive right to sell listing agreement is entitled to a commission (or other compensation) in probate (or partition) sales only where they:

• Produce the original bid returned to the court for confirmation; or

• Produce the successful overbidder to whom the sale is confirmed. [Prob.C. § 10161(b); Melikian v. Aquila, Ltd. (1998) 63 CA4th 1364, 1369, 74 CR2d 739, 742]

e. [2:437] Allocation of commissions where multiple brokers/bids involved: An agreement among cooperating brokers to divide court-awarded compensation among themselves will be given effect by the probate court according to its terms. [Prob.C. § 10168] But, in the absence of such agreement, the allocation of compensation among several brokers involved in the decedent's estate real property sale (or where more than one bid is involved) is governed by detailed statutory rules. [Prob.C. § 10162 et seq.]

The various scenarios requiring allocation of commissions and application of the governing rules are probably best understood by reference to examples contained in the California Law Revision Commission's official comments to Prob.C. § 10162 et seq. (explained in detail in Ross & Cohen, California Practice Guide: Probate (TRG), Ch. 13).

1. Overview

a. [3:1] Statutory definition: "Title insurance" is statutorily defined as "insuring, guaranteeing or indemnifying owners of real or personal property or the holders of liens or encumbrances thereon or others interested therein against loss or damage suffered by reason of: (a) [l]iens or encumbrances on, or defects in the title to said property; (b) [i]nvalidity or unenforceability of any liens or encumbrances thereon; or (c) [i]ncorrectness of searches relating to the title to real or personal property." [Ins.C.

§ 12340.1; Hovannisian v. First American Title Ins. Co. (2017) 14 CA5th 420, 429, 221 CR3d 883, 891; First American Title Ins. Co. v. XWarehouse Lending Corp. (2009) 177 CA4th 106, 113, 98 CR3d 801, 806-807; see also Dollinger DeAnza Assocs. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (2011) 199 CA4th 1132, 1145, 131 CR3d 596, 604—title insurance insures against losses resulting from differences between actual title and record title as of date title is insured]

(1) [3:1.1] Operates as indemnity agreement: Essentially then, a title insurance policy is a contract to indemnify persons with an interest in real property (the insureds) against losses incurred because of a defect in the status of title or liens or encumbrances that may affect the title as reported by the title company when the policy is issued (¶ 3:11). [See Dollinger DeAnza Assocs. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (2011) 199 CA4th 1132, 1145, 131 CR3d 596, 604-605—title insurer does not guarantee title but agrees only to pay losses resulting from, or to cause removal of, cloud on title within policy provisions; Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1996) 46 CA4th 1181, 1191, 54 CR2d 84, 89—title "policy expressly provides merely that the insurer will pay any loss or damage suffered by the insured from any omitted defect not excluded by the terms of the policy" (internal quotes omitted); Radian Guaranty, Inc. v. Garamendi (2005) 127 CA4th 1280, 1293, 26 CR3d 464, 472—"insuring … against risk of loss associated with an undisclosed senior lien falls squarely within the statutory definition of title insurance"; and ¶ 3:4.2]

b. Purpose and effect

(1) [3:2] Researching status of title: The only certain and correct way to determine the status of title (who holds record title to an interest in real property, and the existence of impediments to title) is to conduct a search of the land records by reviewing the grantor-grantee index in the office of the county recorder for every county where any part of the property is located. Conceivably, the search could be conducted by any party to a sales transaction or any party's counsel (attorneys in some states in fact provide this service).

(2) [3:2.1] Indemnifying losses from title defects and liens: In California, parties look to title insurance companies to determine the status of title. But a title insurance policy does not guarantee title; nor is it a legal determination or representation of how title is held (¶ 3:4). Indeed, title insurance only protects against the possibility that liens or other instruments not found in a title search or disclosed in a preliminary report may nonetheless exist: "The records pertaining to real property are complex and encumbrances may be missed by even the most thorough search. Title insurance is an acknowledgment that errors may have been made." [Radian Guaranty, Inc. v. Garamendi (2005) 127 CA4th 1280, 1289, 26 CR3d 464, 469-470; Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1996) 46 CA4th 1181, 1191, 54 CR2d 84, 89; see also Quelimane Co., Inc. v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co. (1998) 19 C4th 26, 41, 77 CR2d 709, 717 (noting title insurance indemnifies insured against losses resulting from defects in or encumbrances on title)—"A title insurer issues title insurance on the basis of … the quality of its own investigation into … public records concerning the status of the title. … The degree of risk is therefore largely within the control of the insurer"]

Preliminarily, note these distinctions in functions:

(a) [3:3] Preliminary title report: The title company's report on the status of title (called a "preliminary title report" or "preliminary report") is not itself an insurance policy and will not support a cause of action against the title company. It is simply an offer of insurance on the reported terms or, stated another way, an inducement for the prospective insured to purchase title insurance and a means by which the insurer may state in advance the precise risk it will assume. [Ins.C. § 12340.11; 2,022 Ranch, L.L.C. v. Sup.Ct. (Chicago Title Ins. Co.) (2003) 113 CA4th 1377, 1382, 7 CR3d 197, 201, fn. 2 (citing text) (disapproved on other grounds by Costco Wholesale Corp. v. Sup.Ct. (2009) 47 C4th 725, 739, 101 CR3d 758, 769); Rosen v. Nations Title Ins. Co. (1997) 56 CA4th 1489, 1499-1500, 66 CR2d 714, 720; see Form 3:A; and detailed discussion at ¶ 3:200 ff.]

➪ [3:3.1] PRACTICE POINTER: A preliminary title report will be amended by the title insurer if it discovers, prior to issuance of the title policy, that an exception to title was inadvertently omitted or a new exception arose after issuance of the report.

(b) [3:4] Report and policy not determinative of title: Neither a preliminary report nor a title insurance policy is a legal determination or representation of how title is held. "[N]o reliance should ever be placed on a preliminary report or a policy of title insurance to show the condition of title. … This is because any title search or examination is performed by the insurer solely for the purpose of seeking to evaluate its underwriting decision in issuing the policy, not for the benefit of the insured." [Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1996) 46 CA4th 1181, 1191-1192, 54 CR2d 84, 89 (internal quotes and citations omitted)]

1) [3:4.1] Condition of title to be insured: A preliminary report simply states the condition of title that a title company is willing to insure. A preliminary report is not a representation of the condition of title; indeed, the proffered insurable condition may or may not reflect the true condition of record title. [Southland Title Corp. v. Sup.Ct. (Nye) (1991) 231 CA3d 530, 537-538, 282 CR 425, 429; see also Soifer v. Chicago Title Co. (2010) 187 CA4th 365, 373, 114 CR3d 1, 7—title insurers prepare preliminary reports to limit their own risk by locating and excluding coverage items; Lee v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (2010) 188 CA4th 583, 596, 115 CR3d 748, 758 (same)]

The only representation made by the issuance of a preliminary report is that a policy of title insurance will subsequently be issued insuring title in the condition described in the preliminary report. [Southland Title Corp. v. Sup.Ct. (Nye), supra, 231 CA3d at 538, 282 CR at 430; Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1996) 46 CA4th 1181, 1192-1193, 54 CR2d 84, 90]

2) [3:4.2] Duty to indemnify: Likewise, a title insurance policy is simply a contract to indemnify against loss caused by defects in title or encumbrances on title not excluded by the terms of the policy; the insurer is obligated to indemnify the insured against losses due to the occurrence of specified contingencies and to provide payment of expenses for the defense against certain claims. [Golden Security Thrift & Loan Ass'n v. First American Title Ins. Co. (1997) 53 CA4th 250, 258-259, 61 CR2d 442, 446-447; Vournas v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1999) 73 CA4th 668, 675, 86 CR2d 490, 495; see also Hovannisian v. First American Title Ins. Co. (2017) 14 CA5th 420, 429, 221 CR3d 883, 890-891 (citing Golden Security Thrift with approval)—insurance company's obligation to indemnify insured depends upon nature of risks covered by policy]

3) [3:4.3] No negligence/negligent misrepresentation action against insurer: A title insurance policy is not a representation that title is in any particular condition or that the contingency insured against will not occur. Accordingly, when an insured contingency occurs, no action for negligence or negligent misrepresentation will lie against the insurer based solely on the title policy. [Golden Security Thrift & Loan Ass'n v. First American Title Ins. Co. (1997) 53 CA4th 250, 258, 61 CR2d 442, 447; Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1996) 46 CA4th 1181, 1191, 54 CR2d 84, 89; Southland Title Corp. v. Sup.Ct. (Nye) (1991) 231 CA3d 530, 537, 282 CR 425, 429]

Indeed, an insured has no separate claim against a title insurer based on negligence. [See Vournas v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1999) 73 CA4th 668, 676-677, 86 CR2d 490, 496, discussed at ¶ 3:411 ff.]

(3) [3:5] Other benefits: An important incidental benefit of title insurance is that, through the process of obtaining the policy, an insured is able to learn about (and work with a title officer to eliminate some) title issues regarding the property. For example, title defects which inadvertently still remain of record can be removed with the help and direction of a title company.

(4) [3:6] Practical considerations: Insurance coverage for a potential defect in title does not itself remove the defect or "guarantee" its removal; hence, title insurance may not be sufficient to adequately satisfy a client's needs.

Illustration: Assume, as buyer's counsel, you discover a potential title defect and a title insurer is willing to insure against loss that may result therefrom. At first glance, the availability of insurance might seem to remedy the client's concerns. However, if you believe the potential title defect could risk significant loss to your client, the client (buyer) may prefer not to purchase the property rather than purchase it with a title policy indemnifying against the potential loss. There are three basic reasons:

(a) [3:7] Costs exceeding policy limit: A title insurance policy has a policy limit (usually equal to the amount of the purchase price for the property). Buyers typically incur costs in addition to the purchase price (e.g., cost of title policy, closing costs, attorney fees, loan fees and interest, property taxes, and liability and casualty insurance premiums); those amounts in excess of the policy limit are not recoverable under the policy. Hence, even assuming a hefty policy limit, potential title defects which ripen into actual defects could leave the buyer out-of-pocket for substantial sums.

This issue is particularly important where the subject of the purchase and sale is raw (unimproved) land. In such transactions, the buyer often incurs substantial postclosing costs in obtaining subdivision, building and other development permits. These costs which exceed the purchase price—and thus exceed the policy limit—cannot be recouped under a title insurance policy.

(b) [3:8] Delay and cost of delay: Similarly, notwithstanding title insurance coverage, if a potential title defect ripens into an actual third party claim against the insured, the insured will suffer delays and perhaps consequential economic loss. While the title insurer is litigating or otherwise trying to resolve the title defect, the insured might not be able to use, occupy or develop the property. Because the insured usually incurs carrying costs for the property (taxes, mortgage payments, insurance, etc.), any delay will result in the insured bearing expenses in excess of the policy limit.

(c) [3:9] Aggravation and expense of policy claims: Finally, even when title insurance covers a title defect that has ripened into a third party claim, the insured invariably will suffer the aggravation and expense of making a claim under the policy. Effective pursuit of a title policy claim usually involves the retention of attorneys and perhaps other experts, running up additional fees.

➪ [3:10] PRACTICE POINTER: It follows that counsel should always make their own, independent evaluation of the likelihood that potential title defects will ripen into third party claims. Explain the repercussions to your clients and analyze whether, from the clients' perspective, it makes practical sense to proceed with the transaction notwithstanding the procurement of a title insurance policy.

c. [3:11] Postinsurance defects: Traditionally, a title policy has insured title only in the condition stated in the preliminary report—i.e., only as to defects, liens or encumbrances in existence as of the date the policy takes effect. Title insurance generally does not insure against future events: "It is not forward looking. It insures against losses resulting from differences between actual title and the record of title as of the date title is insured." [Quelimane Co., Inc. v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co. (1998) 19 C4th 26, 41, 77 CR2d 709, 717; Magna Enterprises, Inc. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (2002) 104 CA4th 122, 126, 127 CR2d 681, 684]

This distinction sets title insurance apart from other kinds of insurance. Whereas other types of policies generally protect against matters that arise during a specified period after issuance of the policy, title insurance typically indemnifies the insured only from matters affecting or burdening title at the time the policy is issued. With a conventional title policy, "[t]here is no implied agreement to go beyond the conditions existing at the time the policy is issued and to assume a general liability to indemnify against future encumbrances." [Rosen v. Nations Title Ins. Co. (1997) 56 CA4th 1489, 1499, 66 CR2d 714, 720 (emphasis in original; internal quotes and citation omitted); see Radian Guaranty, Inc. v. Garamendi (2005) 127 CA4th 1280, 1291, 26 CR3d 464, 471 (contrasting "backward-looking" risk insured by title insurance with "forward-looking" risk insured by mortgage guaranty insurance)]

d. [3:12] Standard practice in purchase and sale transactions: Despite its inherent limitations (¶ 3:11), title insurance can (and generally should) be obtained when anyone is acquiring an interest in real property.

With respect to purchase and sales transactions, it is standard—and always necessary—for a buyer to require the issuance of a policy of title insurance concurrent with (and as a condition of) the closing, insuring that title is held in the buyer's name (see ¶ 4:404 ff.). Additionally, it is standard—and always necessary—for a buyer's lender (including the seller in a seller-financed sale) to require a policy of title insurance insuring the priority of its lien interest in the property (see Ch. 6).

e. [3:13] Attorney's role: An attorney representing buyer or seller in a purchase and sale transaction has four general tasks in connection with title issues and title insurance:

(1) [3:14] Procure and review preliminary report: As a first step, make certain that a preliminary report is promptly ordered from the designated title company. Counsel will need to review both the preliminary report and the recorded documents set forth as exceptions to title.

(As later discussed, a preliminary report simply sets forth a brief description of the exceptions to title; it does not necessarily describe the legal effect, or even the salient terms, of the exception(s) being reported. See ¶ 3:210, 3:236 ff.)

(2) [3:15] Ascertain requisite policy and endorsements: Because different policies and endorsements are available, counsel must determine which type best satisfies the client's needs. See detailed discussion at ¶ 3:75 ff.

(3) [3:16] Address removal of title defects: To the extent feasible, it is always better practice to cure (remove) a potential title defect than simply purchase insurance coverage against the possibility of a claim. (As indicated, a title policy does not itself remove title defects and might not cover all of the insured's losses flowing from the defect; see ¶ 3:6 ff.) Thus, it is incumbent upon counsel to determine whether apparent defects can be cleared by recording additional documents or taking other appropriate steps.

(4) [3:17] Verify issuance of title policy: At the closing, counsel should verify that the appropriate policy is being issued in accordance with the parties' agreement and instructions to the title company.

If there are errors, immediately notify the insurer and return the policy along with instructions about the corrections that need to be made and the date by which the corrected policy should be redelivered.

2. [3:18] Insurable Interests: Title insurance may be obtained for the protection of many types of interests in property—including fee, leasehold, easement, and mineral and lienhold interests. Conceivably, any property interest within the chain of title is insurable.

[3:18.1 - 3:18.4] Reserved.

3. [3:18.5] Duration of Coverage (Policy Term): A title insurance policy is uniquely different from liability and health insurance policies in that it has a one-time premium and remains in effect for so long as the insured owns the insured property. The purchaser (insured) cannot cancel the policy and switch to another carrier without forfeiting the premium. [Wolschlager v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (2003) 111 CA4th 784, 789, 4 CR3d 179, 183; Kleveland v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (2006) 141 CA4th 761, 764, 46 CR3d 314, 316]

4. [3:19] Policy Interpretation: As a contract of insurance, a title policy is interpreted pursuant to the general rules governing the interpretation of contracts. [Rosen v. State Farm Gen. Ins. Co. (2003) 30 C4th 1070, 1074, 135 CR2d 361, 363; Dollinger DeAnza Assocs. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (2011) 199 CA4th 1132, 1145, 131 CR3d 596, 605; see also First American Title Ins. Co. v. XWarehouse Lending Corp. (2009) 177 CA4th 106, 114, 98 CR3d 801, 808—ordinary rules of contractual interpretation apply even though insurance contracts have special features]

First and foremost therefore, title policies are construed according to the parties' mutual intention at the time the contract was formed. And, to the extent possible, that intent is to be inferred solely from the policy's express provisions. [See Civ.C. § 1639; Rosen v. State Farm Gen. Ins. Co. (2003) 30 C4th 1070, 1074, 135 CR2d 361, 363; Havstad v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1997) 58 CA4th 654, 659-660, 68 CR2d 487, 490; see also Wolschlager v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (2003) 111 CA4th 784, 789, 4 CR3d 179, 183—by accepting policy without objection, insured is bound by policy provisions whether or not read or understood]

a. [3:19.1] Construction favoring insured: So as to protect the insured's reasonable expectations, coverage provisions are generally construed broadly in favor of the insured, while exceptions and exclusions are generally construed narrowly against the insurer. [Montrose Chem. Corp. of Calif. v. Admiral Ins. Co. (1995) 10 C4th 645, 667, 42 CR2d 324, 335; Rosen v. Nations Title Ins. Co. (1997) 56 CA4th 1489, 1497, 66 CR2d 714, 718; but see also Elysian Invest. Group, LLC v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co. (2002) 105 CA4th 315, 324-325, 129 CR2d 372, 379—policy exclusions cannot be interpreted to create coverage that does not otherwise exist]

Further, because there is little (if any) negotiation between insurer and insured (i.e., the contract of insurance is not a product of equal bargaining strengths), ambiguities are construed against the insurer and consistent with the insured's reasonable expectations. [Montrose Chem. Corp. of Calif. v. Admiral Ins. Co., supra, 10 C4th at 667, 42 CR2d at 335; White v. Western Title Ins. Co. (1985) 40 C3d 870, 881, 221 CR 509, 513; see also Lee v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (2010) 188 CA4th 583, 587, 115 CR3d 748, 751—title insurer could not avoid liability based on covered property's ambiguous legal description since risk of proper description was assumed by insurer]

b. [3:19.2] Compare—unambiguous provisions: However, courts will not "rewrite" an insurance contract to give a different meaning to clear and unambiguous terms ("plain meaning rule"). "If the policy language is clear and explicit, it governs." [See Rosen v. State Farm Gen. Ins. Co. (2003) 30 C4th 1070, 1074, 1078, 135 CR2d 361, 363, 366; Lee v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (2010) 188 CA4th 583, 597, 115 CR3d 748, 759—while insured's objectively reasonable expectations may be considered in resolving ambiguous policy provisions, they cannot be relied upon to create ambiguity where none exists]

Thus, provisions not reasonably susceptible of conflicting interpretations, that are clear and unambiguous, will not be construed otherwise against the insurer. [Montrose Chem. Corp. of Calif. v. Admiral Ins. Co. (1995) 10 C4th 645, 666-667, 42 CR2d 324, 334; First American Title Ins. Co. v. XWarehouse Lending Corp. (2009) 177 CA4th 106, 115, 98 CR3d 801, 808—when policy terms are "plain and explicit" courts do not indulge in "forced construction" that fastens liability on insurance company it did not assume; see also RNT Holdings, LLC v. United Gen. Title Ins. Co. (2014) 230 CA4th

1289, 1299-1301, 179 CR3d 175, 184-185—provisions expressly terminating insurer's liability following mortgage's reconveyance and excluding liens "created, suffered, assumed or agreed to" by insured precluded lender from recovering on its breach of contract claim; Golden Security Thrift & Loan Ass'n v. First American Title Ins. Co. (1997) 53 CA4th 250, 256-257, 61 CR2d 442, 445-446—coverage for parcel's "dimensions" could not be reasonably construed to include its "area" ("acreage")]

c. [3:19.3] Incorporation by reference: Like contracts in general, a title insurance policy may include provisions that are not physically a part of the policy so long as they are sufficiently incorporated by reference. A document is effectively incorporated by reference if the reference is "clear and unequivocal" and called to the attention of the other party who consented to it, and the terms of the incorporated document were known or easily available to the parties at the time the contract was made. [Kleveland v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (2006) 141 CA4th 761, 765, 46 CR3d 314, 316; see also ¶ 3:208.5 ff.]

1. [3:25] Types of Title Companies: Three distinct types of title companies perform title services: (a) title insurers; (b) underwritten title companies; and (c) abstract companies.

Some title services may be performed by all three types of companies; others may only be performed by a specific type of title company. (The term “title company” is used generally in this Practice Guide to refer to any of the three foregoing companies.)

a. [3:26] Title insurer: A “title insurer” is statutorily defined as “any company issuing title policies as insurer, guarantor or indemnitor.” [Ins.C. § 12340.4]

(1) [3:27] Services—exclusive authority to issue title policy: A title insurer is the only type of title company permitted to issue policies of title insurance. [See Ins.C. §§ 12340.3, 12340.4 & 12390 (mortgage insurance; ¶ 3:48)]

Title insurers may also perform title searches and prepare preliminary reports which form the basis of title policies. In that capacity, however, they must be licensed as an underwritten title company. [See Ins.C. § 12389.5; and ¶ 3:28]

b. [3:28] Underwritten title company: An “underwritten title company” is a corporation in the business of preparing title searches, title reports, certificates and abstracts of title that are the basis of title policies. It also may engage in the escrow business and act as an escrow agent by satisfying specific statutory requirements (¶ 4:567 ff.). [See Ins.C. §§ 12340.5, 12389]

Every person engaged in the business of preparing title searches, title examinations, title reports, and certificates of abstracts of title, upon which a title insurer writes title policies, must be licensed as an underwritten title company in compliance with the licensing requirements of Ins.C. § 12389 et seq. [Ins.C. § 12389.5]

Unless it is also a certified title insurer (¶ 3:62), an underwritten title company may not issue a title insurance policy. [See Ins.C. §§ 12340.4, 12340.5, 12389 & 12390]

(1) [3:29] “Underwriting agreement”: An underwritten title company performs a title examination and prepares a preliminary report (as opposed to a title insurer performing such functions) pursuant to an “underwriting agreement” with the title insurer that will issue the title policy. An underwriting agreement sets forth the duties and liabilities of each of the two entities with respect to the title report and policy.

c. [3:30] Abstract company: An “abstract company” prepares “abstracts of title”—i.e., a written representation, intended to be relied upon by the person contracting for it, listing all recorded documents that impart constructive notice with respect to the chain of title to a parcel of property. [Ins.C. § 12340.10; Alfaro v. Community Housing Improvement System & Planning Ass'n, Inc. (2009) 171 CA4th 1356, 1389, 124 CR3d 271, 301]

An abstract of title is not a title policy and an abstract company may not issue a policy of title insurance. [Ins.C. § 12340.10; see also Ins.C. §§ 12340.3, 12340.4 & 12390]

(1) [3:31] Preliminary report distinguished: Whereas a "preliminary report" sets forth the conditions under which a title company is willing to insure property (¶ 3:200 ff.), an abstract of title is an actual representation as to all of the documents which are recorded and impart constructive notice (Ins.C. § 12340.10); hence, an abstractor is exposed to far greater liability in connection with its title searches than is a title insurer or an underwritten title company (see ¶ 3:211 ff.). [See generally, Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1996) 46 CA4th 1181, 1190, 54 CR2d 84, 88]

(2) [3:32] Abstractor's duties and liabilities: An abstractor has a duty to report all matters affecting an insured's interest in property that are readily discoverable by making a diligent search of the public records. Its failure to report all such matters exposes the abstractor to liability in tort (negligence) for all damages proximately resulting therefrom. [Contini v. Western Title Ins. Co. (1974) 40 CA3d 536, 545-546, 115 CR 257, 263; Southland Title Corp. v. Sup.Ct. (Nye) (1991) 231 CA3d 530, 536, 282 CR 425, 429; see also Soifer v. Chicago Title Co. (2010) 187 CA4th 365, 372, 114 CR3d 1, 6—person who contracts and separately pays for "abstract of title" receives all rights associated therewith and may rely upon express representations contained therein]

In contrast, because neither a preliminary report nor a title policy constitutes a representation that title contingencies will not occur (¶ 3:4 ff.), no action for negligence or negligent misrepresentation lies against a title insurer based solely on its preliminary report or title insurance policy. [Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1996) 46 CA4th 1181, 1191, 54 CR2d 84, 89; Southland Title Corp. v. Sup.Ct. (Nye) (1991) 231 CA3d 530, 537-538, 282 CR 425, 429-430; see also Alfaro v. Community Housing Improvement System & Planning Ass'n, Inc. (2009) 171 CA4th 1356, 1389, 124 CR3d 271, 301—statutes governing abstracts of title and preliminary reports are intended to relieve title insurers from liability for negligent preparation of preliminary reports]

(3) [3:33] Comment: The work of early abstract companies (i.e., the search and compilation of records affecting property) was the genesis of the current title insurance business. Today, however, there are few abstract companies in California and their use is limited. (Abstract companies are more readily used outside California.)

In practice, title companies now perform functions similar to those of an abstractor when issuing a chain of title guarantee or other similar guarantee. (See ¶ 3:41.)

[3:34] Reserved.

2. Title Company Functions

a. [3:35] Title insurance: The primary function of title companies is to search the chain of title to property and issue title insurance or "title policies" (only a title insurer may issue a policy of title insurance; see ¶ 3:26 ff.). Again, the fundamental purpose of title insurance is to provide protection to an owner of an interest in property against loss due to certain title defects, liens and encumbrances affecting the property (¶ 3:1 ff.).

In purchase and sale transactions, two title policies are typically issued: one insuring the owner's (buyer's) interest; and the other insuring the lien priority of the new lender's deed of trust.

(1) [3:35.1] No agency relationship with insured: In its capacity as a title insurer, a title company is not the agent of its insured. Therefore, whatever duty a title insurer may have with respect to searching the chain of title is not imputed to the insured. [Marriage of Cloney (2001) 91 CA4th 429, 438-439, 110 CR2d 615, 622—title insurer's knowledge regarding seller's identity and state of his title to property irrelevant to whether insured had constructive notice of prior lien on property when purchased]

b. Other title services

(1) [3:36] Guarantees: Title insurers (but not underwritten title companies) may issue "guarantees." [Ins.C. §§ 12340.4, 12340.5] Guarantees provide information regarding title to property and insure the accuracy of that information.

There are many types of guarantees. These are some of the more commonly-used ones:

(a) [3:37] Trustee's sale guarantee: A "trustee's sale guarantee" insures trustees and beneficiaries under deeds of trust against loss due to an irregularity in a trustee's (foreclosure) sale. In particular, it insures (up to the amount of liability of the guarantee) against:

• loss occasioned by the vesting of title other than as shown;

• incorrect names and addresses of persons who recorded requests for copies of notices of default and notices of sale;

• incorrect names and addresses of other persons entitled to receive copies of notices of default and notices of sale;

• incorrect names and addresses of state taxing agencies entitled to receive copies of notices of default and notices of sale;

• the property being located in a judicial district other than as shown; and

• incorrect information regarding newspapers for publication of notices.

A trustee's sale guarantee also provides an insured with information as to certain rights and limitations under the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act (50 USC § 3901 et seq.) and the Federal Tax Lien Act of 1966 (26 USC § 545 et seq.).

(b) [3:38] Judgment and tax lien guarantee: This guarantee lists all judgment and tax liens in a particular person's name for a particular county and insures against loss due to the existence of any judgment or tax liens not listed on the guarantee.

(c) [3:39] Property search guarantee: A "property search guarantee" protects against loss arising from the existence of property held by a person in a particular jurisdiction other than the property reported in the guarantee. An insurer generally searches the county assessment rolls, and sometimes the county recorder's index, in preparing this type of guarantee.

(d) [3:40] Litigation guarantee: A "litigation guarantee" is used in connection with a lawsuit affecting property, such as a judicial foreclosure, partition or quiet title action. It insures against loss due to incorrectness of the vesting, description of property and names of necessary defendants.

(e) [3:41] Chain of title guarantee: A "chain of title guarantee" lists all documents in the public records affecting a particular piece of property since the original government grant or as of another particular date (selected by the insured) and insures against loss resulting from the existence of any other such documents. It includes the names of the parties and recording information with respect to the documents.

(f) [3:42] Mechanic's lien guarantee: This guarantee insures against loss due to the existence of any notices of completion, notices of cessation of labor, notices of nonresponsibility, mechanic's liens and lis pendens which are recorded after a certain date and not reported in the guarantee.

(g) [3:42.1] Conditions of title guarantee: This guarantee provides customers with a product that is similar to a Preliminary Report except it does not contemplate issuance of a title insurance policy.

(2) [3:43] Gratuitous title services: Customer service departments of most title companies provide attorneys with certain title services at no charge.

For example, most title companies will disclose by telephone the current vesting of a particular piece of property. A copy of the last-recorded deed will then be sent to the attorney for a nominal fee. Also, depending on counsel's or the client's relationship with the title company, the company may be willing to make specific title investigations without charge (e.g., determining whether there is a tax delinquency respecting a particular piece of property). (See also ¶ 3:69.)

➪ [3:44] PRACTICE POINTER: These gratuitous services (¶ 3:43) do not constitute insurance and create no liability on the part of the title company if the information turns out to be incomplete or inaccurate.

(3) [3:45] Title company as escrow agent: Title insurers and underwritten title companies may perform escrow services (see ¶ 4:567 ff.). But as an escrow agent, a title company derives its duties from the escrow instructions; it does not, under the cloak of performing escrow functions (e.g., disbursing funds and recording documents), thereby become a fiduciary for the purchaser (or any other party to the sale transaction) for purposes of searching the land records or transmitting information regarding title. [Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1996) 46 CA4th 1181, 1193-1194, 54 CR2d 84, 91; see also Vournas v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1999) 73 CA4th 668, 674-675, 86 CR2d 490, 484-495—in its capacity as escrow holder, title insurer owed no duty to beneficiaries of trust (seller) to discover or disclose need for beneficiary consent to convey]

(4) [3:46] Title company as trustee of deed of trust: Also, title insurers and underwritten title companies may—and regularly do—act as trustees of deeds of trust.

A title insurer's or underwritten title company's duties as trustee are specified in the deed of trust. Typically, the trustee's duties are limited to taking the steps necessary to foreclose the deed of trust (when a default occurs) and, upon satisfaction of the secured debt, reconveying the deed of trust. [See Vournas v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1999) 73 CA4th 668, 677, 86 CR2d 490, 496-497; and detailed discussion of deeds of trust at ¶ 6:336 ff.]

(5) [3:47] Title company as trust company: Title insurers are not authorized to engage in trust business. [See Stats. 1996, Ch. 1063, § 83 (repealing Ins.C. § 12392, which authorized title insurers to engage in trust business)]

However, trust companies may be controlled by or under common control with a title insurer. [See Fin.C. § 1285]

(6) [3:48] Other functions: Title companies are not authorized to engage in all types of business. Some of the other functions they may properly perform are identified in Ins.C. §§ 12390 (insuring (i) "identity, due execution, and validity of any note or bond secured by mortgage," (ii) "identity, due execution, validity and recording of any such mortgage," and (iii) "identity, due execution and validity of evidences of indebtedness") and 12391 (authorizing insurers to (i) act as registrar or transfer agent of California, of any California subdivision or district, or of any private or public corporation, (ii) transfer or countersign evidences of indebtedness, and (iii) transfer or countersign stock certificates).

(a) [3:49] No "multiline" insurance authority: Title insurers are authorized to write only a single line of insurance; i.e., they are "monoline" insurers, prohibited from "transacting" any class of insurance other than title insurance. [Ins.C. § 12360]

Conversely, mortgage guaranty insurers—themselves also "monoline" insurers—are prohibited from transacting title insurance or any class of insurance other than that for which their certificate of authority permits. [Ins.C. § 12640.10; see Radian Guaranty, Inc. v. Garamendi (2005) 127 CA4th 1280, 1285-1286, 26 CR3d 464, 467-468—mortgage guaranty insurer that did not hold certificate of authority to transact title insurance prohibited from selling insurance to lenders for losses due to undisclosed property liens]

3. [3:50] Choosing a Title Company: As with businesses generally, title companies vary in their level of competence, range of services and pricing. To assist consumers, the Insurance Commissioner publishes an educational brochure on title insurance (see Ins.C. § 12406.5), which can be accessed online at the Commissioner's website (www.insurance.ca.gov) (click on "Consumers," "Information Guides," "Residential Series").

a. Relevant factors

(1) [3:51] Skill of title officers and counsel: The quality of a title company's work is an essential issue in selecting a title company. The more knowledgeable the title officers and the company's in-house counsel, the better the title company is able to identify and understand the title risks and find a solution. In addition, the likelihood of problems, expense and delay as the transaction progresses is a direct product of the quality of the title company's work at the beginning of its title search.

(2) [3:52] Responsiveness: Purchase and sale transactions often must close within a limited period of time. It is thus important to use a title company (and title officer) able to perform its duties within the desired timeframe; the officer's availability at critical times in the transaction can be a significant factor.

(3) [3:53] Title company's underwriting philosophy: It may be necessary to "shop" for a title company willing to insure against a particular title defect or risk. Some may be less averse than others to insure over a particular lien or kind of lien; and some may be more willing than others to work with a customer to find a solution to an unusual or difficult title problem.

➪ [3:54] PRACTICE POINTER: It is important to identify title problems early in the transaction and determine whether the title company can resolve the matter to the parties' satisfaction. In this way, if the title company cannot resolve a title issue, the parties will have the leeway to move on to a new company.

(4) [3:55] Size and assets: Also consider the title company's size and financial stability. A title company must have enough resources to adequately perform its duties and sufficient assets to cover policy claims.

(5) [3:56] Rates: Price is naturally a relevant factor. Although rates are somewhat standardized within the industry, they may vary—especially for unusual endorsements and other special requests.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(One of the purposes of the statutorily-required Department of Insurance title insurance brochure (¶ 3:50) is to inform consumers about competing rates and services, and available discounts.)

(6) [3:57] Location: Original documents must be hand-delivered to the title company. Hence, the proximity of the company's branch office to the parties (and their attorneys) may be of importance.

(7) [3:58] Escrow services: As noted in Ch. 4, it is sometimes beneficial to use a title company that can also handle the escrow (see ¶ 4:568, 4:572).

(8) [3:59] Continuity of relationships: Many attorneys prefer to use one or a few select title companies for all of their clients' transactions. Establishing and maintaining an ongoing relationship with a title company and its officers, in-house counsel, customer service representatives and management can result in better and quicker services (and sometimes more favorable pricing).

Similarly, it may be advantageous to work with a particular title officer (regardless of the title company with which the officer is affiliated). Indeed, because the title officer is typically the person who keeps the title work moving along, the officer used is often as important (perhaps more important) than the title company itself.

[3:59.1 - 3:59.4] Reserved.

b. [3:59.5] Buyer's Choice Act (sale of foreclosed property): The Buyer's Choice Act (Civ.C. § 1103.20 et seq.) prohibits a lender under a deed of trust (or its agents, employees, etc.) from requiring, either directly or indirectly, as a condition to the sale of foreclosed residential real property, that the buyer purchase title insurance covering the property from a particular title insurer. [See Civ.C. § 1103.22(a), (b)]

The Act does not prohibit the buyer from agreeing to accept a particular title insurer recommended by the lender so long as the buyer is first provided written notice of the right to make an independent selection. [Civ.C. § 1103.22(a)]

(1) [3:59.6] Penalties for violation: A seller who violates the Act's provisions is liable to the buyer for an amount equal to three times all charges made for the title insurance. In addition, any person who violates the Act is deemed to have violated their license law and is subject to discipline by their licensing entity. [Civ.C. § 1103.22(c)]

4. Regulation of Title Industry

a. Applicable regulations

(1) [3:60] State regulation: The California Insurance Commissioner has general regulatory authority over the title insurance business. [See Ins.C. § 12340 et seq.; 10 CCR §§ 2555-2556.2] Title companies must file their policy forms and rates with the Commissioner and must establish classifications of coverage and services to be used as the basis for determining their rates. [Ins.C. §§ 12401.1, 12401.2]

(2) [3:61] Limited federal regulation: Pursuant to the McCarran-Ferguson Insurance Regulation Act (15 USC App. §§ 1011-1015), insurance companies are subject to federal regulation only to the extent they are not regulated by state law. (The Act supersedes earlier authority holding broadly that federal regulations could be applied to insurance companies conducting activities across state lines (United States v. South-Eastern Underwriters Ass'n (1944) 322 US 533, 64 S.Ct. 1162 (superseded by statute as stated in Barnett Bank of Marion County, N.A. v. Nelson (1996) 517 US 25, 40, 116 S.Ct. 1103, 1112).)) [See 15 USC § 1012; Commander Leasing Co. v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co. (10th Cir. 1973) 477 F2d 77, 83, 89—"title insurance" companies are in the "business of insurance" within meaning of Act and thus exempt from federal antitrust law when their business is regulated by law of state where alleged violations occurred]

Because the California Insurance Commissioner regulates the title insurance business (¶ 3:60), California title insurers are subject to very little federal regulation.

Cross-refer: For a more detailed discussion of federal regulation of the insurance industry, see Croskey, Heeseman, Ehrlich & Klee, Cal. Prac. Guide: Insurance Litigation (TRG), Ch. 14.

b. Certification/authority

(1) [3:62] Title insurer: A title insurer may not issue a policy of title insurance until it has received a certificate from the Insurance Commissioner authorizing it to transact the business of title insurance. To become certified, the company must comply with all of the Commissioner's regulations—including several financial requirements (many of which are ongoing). [Ins.C. §§ 12350 et seq. (capital and guarantee fund requirements), 12370 et seq. (finances and investments, including title insurance surplus fund), 12380 et seq. (unearned premium reserve and reserve for unpaid losses and loss expense)]

(2) [3:63] Underwritten title companies: An underwritten title company must obtain a license from the Insurance Commissioner to conduct title services. Among other things, licensing (or relicensing) requires the company to satisfy specified financial criteria. [See Ins.C. §§ 12389-12389.2]

(3) [3:63.1] Title marketing representatives: A "title marketing representative" is an individual employed by a title insurer, underwritten title company or controlled escrow company whose primary duty is to market, offer, solicit, negotiate or sell title insurance. A person may not be so employed in California unless the person holds a valid certificate of registration issued by the Insurance Commissioner (renewable every three years). To become certified, the person must comply with a statutorily-mandated application process. [See Ins.C. § 12418 et seq.]

c. Fees and charges

(1) [3:64] Policy rates: As indicated, title companies must file their schedules of rates with the Insurance Commissioner (¶ 3:60). Each schedule must set forth the entire charge for each type of policy and specify that portion of the charge based on work performed by an underwritten title company. In general, the effective date of a particular title company's rates cannot be earlier than the 30th day following the Commissioner's receipt of that company's rate schedule. [See Ins.C. § 12401.1]

Notwithstanding the above, the effective date of a title company's new rate may be earlier than the 30th day if: (a) the new rate is lower than the existing rate; (b) the earlier effective date is set forth in the company's filing of its rate schedule with the Commissioner (above); and (c) the new rate has been publicly displayed and made available to the public prior to its effective date. [Ins.C. § 12401.71; Villanueva v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Co. (2021) 11 C5th 104, 113, 276 CR3d 209, 215—"file and use" regulatory approach "allows entities to implement their filed rates without the need for formal prior approval"]

(a) [3:64.1] Unfiled rates: Consumers who are charged unfiled rates can sue their title insurers under the Unfair Competition Law (Bus. & Prof.C. § 17200 et seq.; see ¶ 3:400 ff.). Title insurers who charge unfiled rates do not have statutory immunity under the rate-filing statutes (see Ins.C. § 12414.26—immunity for acts done, actions taken, or agreements made pursuant to Ins.C. § 12401 et seq. or Ins.C. § 12402 et seq.). Moreover, the Insurance Commissioner does not have exclusive jurisdiction over unfiled-rate claims. [Villanueva v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Co. (2021) 11 C5th 104, 110-111, 116-117, 126, 133-134, 276 CR3d 209, 213, 217-218, 226, 232 (concluding administrative proceedings are not ratepayer's exclusive remedy for unfiled rate charges)]

(2) [3:65] Prohibited commissions and rebates: Title companies may not pay commissions and rebates to an owner, lessee or mortgagee of an interest in property, or to any such person's agent, representative, attorney or employee, for the referral of title insurance business. [See Ins.C. §§ 12404-12406; see also 12 USC § 2607(a) (same under Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act, ¶ 4:639)]

Nor may title companies pay commissions for the solicitation or negotiation of title services. [Ins.C. § 12408.5]

(Consumer information concerning unlawful commissions and rebates, and how to report suspected violations, is among the subjects addressed in the statutorily-required Department of Insurance title insurance brochure (¶ 3:50).)

(a) [3:65.1] Penalties: A title company's payment of proscribed commissions or rebates (¶ 3:65) is punishable by monetary penalties (ranging from $5,000 to five times the amount of the commission or unlawful rebate) and/or restriction or suspension of its certificate of authority or license (¶ 3:62 ff.). [Ins.C. § 12409]

(b) [3:65.2] "Commercial bribery" offense: An employee of a title insurer, underwritten title company or controlled escrow company who pays a commission, compensation "or other consideration" to a real estate licensee for the placement or referral of title insurance business is guilty of "commercial bribery." The offense is punishable by imprisonment (up to one year) and/or a $10,000 fine for each such transaction. [Pen.C. § 641.4(a) & (b)]

(c) [3:65.3] Compare—discounts related to value of services performed: Title company pricing arrangements offering discounts for title insurance services do not constitute "kickbacks" in violation of the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (12 USC § 2601 et seq., see ¶ 3:65), so long as the discounts are related reasonably to the value of services actually performed. [Lane v. Residential Funding Corp. (9th Cir. 2003) 323 F3d 739, 744-745]

WESTLAW © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(3) [3:66] Preliminary reports and other information: Title insurers and underwritten title companies must charge a reasonable fee for a preliminary report. Subject to the limited exception noted at ¶ 3:68, a preliminary report cannot be furnished free of charge. [Ins.C. § 12404.1]

(a) [3:67] Minimum charge for preliminary report: The fee must have a "reasonable relation" to the cost of producing the report. At a minimum, it must equal the fee for a standard owner's policy having the lowest amount of liability (as set forth in the company's rate schedule). However, the preliminary report fee may be used to offset the amount of the title policy premium (indeed, this is standard practice). [Ins.C. § 12404.1]

(b) [3:68] Limited waiver: The fee may be waived by a title company having a uniform practice of waiving fees for all customers under the same circumstances, provided either:

- The policy is sought in connection with a transaction which is not consummated; or
- The title insurer cannot issue the policy without including a certain exception (lien or encumbrance) and another title insurer subsequently issues a policy without the exception. [Ins.C. § 12404.1]

(c) [3:69] Other no-cost information: Notwithstanding the fees they charge for preliminary reports (¶ 3:66 ff.), title insurers and underwritten title companies may provide the following information to customers without charge:

- the name of the record owner of property;
- the legal description of property;
- the status of real property taxes;
- recording information for a deed of trust; and
- photocopies of recorded deeds, plats and maps. [Ins.C. § 12404.1]

d. [3:70] Right to refuse issuance of title policy: Like insurers generally, title insurers have no duty to do business with or issue a policy of title insurance to any applicant. Absent legislative mandate, an insurer generally has the right to select the risks it will insure. [Quelimane Co., Inc. v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co. (1998) 19 C4th 26, 43, 77 CR2d 709, 718]

(1) [3:71] Compare—conspiracy in restraint of trade: But title insurers who conspire to refuse coverage for particular risks may be violating state or federal antitrust laws; see ¶ 3:410.

6. [3:162] ALTA Residential Limited Coverage Mortgage Modification Policy

1. [3:75] Overview: Most title insurers use policies that have been standardized through efforts of the California Land Title Association (CLTA) and the American Land Title Association (ALTA).

The most common of the CLTA and ALTA policy forms are the CLTA Standard Coverage Owner's Policy, CLTA Standard Coverage Loan Policy, ALTA Owner's Policy and ALTA Loan Policy. These standard policies have the following four components:

— Title Page (which lists the Covered Risks);

— Exclusions From Coverage;

— Schedule A, which identifies the amount of insurance, the insured and the property covered by the policy; and — Schedule B, which lists Exceptions From Coverage and Conditions and defines the policy's terms and claims procedures.

a. Scope of common CLTA/ALTA coverage

(1) [3:76] CLTA Standard Coverage Policies: The CLTA Standard Coverage Owner's Policy (hereafter “CLTA Owner's Policy”) insures the purchaser of property. The CLTA Standard Coverage Loan Policy (hereafter “CLTA Loan Policy”) insures the lender facilitating the purchase of property. See ¶ 3:92 ff.

• FORM: CLTA Owner's Policy, see Form 3:B.1; CLTA Loan Policy, see Form 3:B.2.

(2) [3:77] ALTA Loan Policy: The ALTA Loan Policy is customarily used by lenders to insure title where no purchase is involved. This policy protects only the lender's property interests (¶ 3:130 ff.). [Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co (1996) 46 CA4th 1181, 1186, 54 CR2d 84, 85, fn. 2]

• FORM: ALTA Loan Policy, see Form 3:C.

(3) [3:78] ALTA Owner's Policy: Separate ALTA coverage is available for a property owner by way of the ALTA Owner's Policy (¶ 3:130 ff.).

• FORM: ALTA Owner's Policy, see Form 3:D.

(4) [3:79] CLTA/ALTA Homeowner's Policy: An expanded CLTA/ALTA title insurance policy is available for owner-occupied, one-to-four family residences or condominium units. The CLTA/ALTA Homeowner's Policy offers coverage for certain matters that have not been covered under standard title policies, including certain matters outside the public records and various postpolicy occurrences (¶ 3:150 ff.).

• FORM: CLTA/ALTA Homeowner's Policy, see Form 3:E.

(5) [3:80] ALTA Expanded Coverage Residential Loan Policy—Assessments Priority: An expanded ALTA lender's policy is available for loans secured by residential properties, insuring the lender for losses similar (though not identical) to those covered by the CLTA/ALTA Homeowner's Policy (¶ 3:160 ff.).

• FORM: ALTA Expanded Coverage Residential Loan Policy—Assessments Priority, see Form 3:F.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(6) [3:80.1] ALTA Residential Limited Coverage Mortgage Modification Policy: An ALTA mortgage modification policy is available for loans secured by residential properties, protecting the lender from loss or damage occasioned by modification of the mortgage (¶ 3:162).

• FORM: ALTA Residential Limited Coverage Mortgage Modification Policy, see Form 3:G.

b. [3:81] Basic differences between CLTA and ALTA coverage: The fundamental difference between CLTA and ALTA coverage is that CLTA coverage basically insures only the title as shown by the "public records." Most off-record matters affecting title are excluded from coverage since the insured ordinarily can inspect the premises to discover these defects. (However, a CLTA policy also covers a few matters not of record, such as forgery and lack of delivery.) [See Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1996) 46 CA4th 1181, 1186, 54 CR2d 84, 85, fn. 2; Elysian Invest. Group, LLC v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co. (2002) 105 CA4th 315, 317-318, 129 CR2d 372, 374, fn. 1]

The ALTA policies, on the other hand, are "extra coverage, extra premium" policies that insure against losses from many risks excluded by the CLTA policies. The insurer undertakes these extra risks by assuming the insured's responsibility to inspect the property and, in some cases, to review a survey. [See Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., supra, 46 CA4th at 1186, 54 CR2d at 85, fn. 2; Elysian Invest. Group, LLC v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co., supra, 105 CA4th at 317-318, 129 CR2d at 374, fn. 1—ALTA insures against off-record defects, including rights of parties not in possession, boundary line discrepancies/conflicts and area shortages]

(1) [3:82] Application: Thus, a CLTA policy reflects and primarily insures matters of record. If the title company erroneously missed a recorded lien or encumbrance (or if it has elected not to report a particular recorded lien or encumbrance), the policy insures against any loss by reason of that unreported lien or encumbrance of record.

In contrast, when issuing an ALTA policy, the title insurer goes beyond the public record and fundamentally insures that there are no "off-record" matters that would adversely affect the insured's interest. For example, ALTA coverage would insure against encroachments, unrecorded rights of way, prescriptive rights, and unrecorded leases; and would also insure the boundaries of the property based on a current survey. (However, an ALTA coverage policy will occasionally be issued with a "survey exception.")

(2) [3:83] Comment: With the distinctions described at ¶ 3:81 ff. in mind, CLTA coverage may be viewed as designed for owners who actually inspect the property (and thus are able to visually determine whether there are any off-record matters with which they need be concerned). ALTA coverage, on the other hand, may be viewed as designed for lenders (or owners) who elect not to inspect the property (and thus would necessarily need broader coverage).

c. [3:84] Purchasing ALTA Owner coverage: As noted, there are separate ALTA policies for lenders and owners (¶ 3:77 ff.). In many transactions involving the sale of fully-completed structures (and, particularly, single family residential properties), Californians elect not to purchase ALTA coverage (the ALTA Owner's Policy).

(1) [3:85] Factors militating against ALTA coverage: Essentially, there are two practical reasons why owners opt not to purchase ALTA coverage:

• Cost: ALTA coverage is more expensive (and usually requires a survey, which also increases the cost).

• Delay: The required survey may take several weeks, interfering with the parties' desired closing date.

[3:86 - 3:87] Reserved.

➪ [3:88] PRACTICE POINTER: In evaluating whether an owner should purchase ALTA coverage (instead of the CLTA Standard Coverage Owner's Policy), apply common sense. Make an inspection of the property, and then ask yourself whether it appears anyone may have an off-record claim to use, possess or enjoy the premises. If so, obtaining ALTA coverage may be the wisest course of action.

ALTA coverage also may be necessary if it looks like a driveway on the subject premises is being used by neighboring landowners, if structures appear to be encroaching upon the property to be purchased or, conversely, if structures on the subject property may be encroaching upon neighboring property. Moreover, when boundary lines appear to be unclear, a survey with ALTA coverage is advisable.

d. [3:89] Coverage for environmental remediation and protection of the land: The CLTA and ALTA policies provide limited coverage for environmental remediation or protection of the land (see ¶ 3:107, 3:115 & 3:133 re "Covered Risk" No. 5).

(1) [3:90] Coverage by ALTA endorsement: In addition to the coverage provided under the CLTA and ALTA policies (¶ 3:89), an Environmental Protection Lien Endorsement, insuring against recorded violations of environmental statutes, may be purchased (see ¶ 3:262).

Cross-refer: Environmental clean-up liability is discussed in detail in Ch. 5.

➪ [3:91] PRACTICE POINTER: In choosing a title insurance policy appropriate for your transaction, consider whether idiosyncrasies about the particular property may require additional or unique coverage beyond that available under the standard policies. Be sure to keep in mind that expanded coverage may be obtained by purchasing endorsements (¶ 3:245 ff.). And, whenever there is concern about the most suitable type of coverage, it is wise to consult with an "advisory title officer" or in-house attorney at the title company.

2. CLTA Policies

• FORMS: CLTA Owner's Policy and CLTA Loan Policy; see Forms 3:B.1 and 3:B.2.

a. [3:92] Owner's policy: Subject to specified Exclusions, Exceptions and Conditions, the CLTA Owner's Policy insures an owner against loss or damage arising from the following matters:

(1) [3:93] Incorrect vesting: An insured owner is protected against loss resulting from title to the property not being vested in the name of the person stated in the policy.

(2) [3:94] Defects, liens and encumbrances, subject to specified "exceptions": An insured is protected against loss occasioned by defects, liens or encumbrances affecting title; but that coverage is significantly modified by the "exceptions" listed in the policy.

The policy gives examples of defects, liens and encumbrances. "Encumbrances" also are defined by statute to include taxes, assessments and all liens on real property (Civ.C. § 1114). And a "lien" is defined by statute as "a charge imposed upon specific property, by which it is made security for the performance of an act" (CCP § 1180). [See Elysian Invest. Group, LLC v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co. (2002) 105 CA4th 315, 320-321, 129 CR2d 372, 376 (noting "encumbrance" also has been defined as "any right to, or interest in, land which may subsist in another to the diminution of its value, but consistent with the passing of the fee" (internal quotes omitted)); Stockton Mortg., Inc. v. Tope (2014) 233 CA4th 437, 449, 183 CR3d 186, 195 (citing Elysian with approval)—notice of abatement action referencing property's substandard condition did not affect title and therefore did not constitute defect, lien or encumbrance]

(3) [3:95] Unmarketable title: The CLTA Policy insures against loss due to "unmarketable title." Unmarketable title is defined in the policy as any "alleged or apparent matter that would permit a prospective purchaser or lessee of the Title or a lender on the Title to be released from the obligation to purchase, lease or lend if there is a contractual condition requiring the delivery of marketable title." (CLTA owner's Policy, Conditions, 1. Definition of Terms, item "p.")

(a) [3:96] Impact on market value distinguished: Unmarketability of title does not refer to physical conditions that only decrease the value of property. Marketability of title and the market value of the property itself are separate and distinct. [Mellinger v. Ticor Title Ins. Co. of Calif. (2001) 93 CA4th 691, 696, 113 CR2d 357, 361 (ALTA Residential Policy); see Elysian Invest. Group, LLC v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co. (2002) 105 CA4th 315, 324, 129 CR2d 372, 379 (CLTA policy)]

A loss occasioned by "unmarketability of title" is insured only if the defect affects legally recognized rights and incidents of ownership. "One can hold perfect title to land that is valueless; one can have marketable title to land while the land itself is unmarketable." [Hocking v. Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1951) 37 C2d 644, 651, 234 P2d 625, 629; Elysian Invest. Group, LLC v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co., supra, 105 CA4th at 324, 129 CR2d at 379; see also Dollinger DeAnza Assocs. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (2011) 199 CA4th 1132, 1149, 131 CR3d 596, 608—"good title" means owner has legal and equitable title to all land]

• [3:97] Title is not rendered "unmarketable" by an inability to use real property for contemplated building purposes due to a subdivider's local ordinance violations. [Hocking v. Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1951) 37 C2d 644, 651-652,

234 P2d 625, 629-630; Elysian Invest. Group, LLC v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co. (2002) 105 CA4th 315, 324, 129 CR2d 372, 379 (inability to use as second dwelling unit garage that had been converted without permits); see also Stockton Mortg., Inc. v. Tope (2014) 233 CA4th 437, 448, 183 CR3d 186, 195—notice of abatement action referencing property's substandard condition did not render title "unmarketable"]

• [3:98] Hazardous materials affecting market value are not a defect rendering title unmarketable. [Lick Mill Creek Apts. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (1991) 231 CA3d 1654, 1660-1662, 283 CR 231, 234-236—environmental clean-up costs not covered by CLTA policy]

• [3:99] An encroachment can represent both a physical condition (affecting only market value) and a possible adverse interest in the property (affecting marketable title). Whether an encroachment renders title unmarketable turns on "whether a reasonable purchaser, knowing that a third party might claim an interest in the property, would nevertheless proceed with the transaction." [Mellinger v. Ticor Title Ins. Co. of Calif. (2001) 93 CA4th 691, 695-696, 113 CR2d 357, 361—whether 20-foot street encroachment rendered title unmarketable was jury question (see ¶ 3:102)]

• [3:100] The existence of fraud in the chain of title is not a title defect rendering title unmarketable. [Mortgage Assocs., Inc. v. Fidelity & Dep. Co. of Maryland (2002) 105 CA4th 28, 37, 129 CR2d 365, 371—insured's losses incurred upon sale of overvalued properties resulted from fraudulent loan scheme rather than title defect]

• [3:101] Title is not rendered unmarketable simply because an insurer fails to include in its title report a notice of merger duly recorded by a city pursuant to the Subdivision Map Act against contiguous land parcels owned by the insured. Although the notice may restrict the insured's ability to sell a portion of the merged land absent compliance with applicable regulations, it does not cast doubt on ownership of the land. [Dollinger DeAnza Assocs. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (2011) 199 CA4th 1132, 1152, 131 CR3d 596, 610]

(b) [3:102] Question of fact vs. question of law: Marketability of title may properly be decided as a matter of law where the uncertainty is too trivial to put the insured's title in reasonable doubt or to expose the insured to any more than nominal damages (see Mertens v. Berendsen (1931) 213 C 111, 115-116, 1 P2d 440, 441-442—2-to-7/8-inch encroachment) or, conversely, where the uncertainty is so substantial (such as a competing claim to ownership of the entire parcel) that it is unnecessary to submit the question to the trier of fact. [See Mellinger v. Ticor Title Ins. Co. of Calif. (2001) 93 CA4th 691, 695-697, 113 CR2d 357, 360-362—20-foot street encroachment "arguably could have dissuaded someone from purchasing the property" and thus was question of fact for jury]

(4) [3:103] Lack of right of access: Also insured by the CLTA Policy are losses arising from the lack of a right of access to and from the property. This does not mean a lack of "physical or practical access" but, rather, the absence of a legal right to access the property in some way, no matter how impractical, difficult or expensive. [Magna Enterprises, Inc. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (2002) 104 CA4th 122, 125-127, 127 CR2d 681, 683-685]

"A right of access can be different from practical or physical access. If the insured property is landlocked, it has no right of access. If the insured property is contiguous to a public road but so steeply sloped as to make physical access impractical or extremely expensive, it still has a right of access." [Magna Enterprises, Inc. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., supra, 104 CA4th at 126-127, 127 CR2d at 684 (internal quotes omitted)]

• [3:104] Access coverage was not triggered where the location of a building and fence and differences in elevation between the insured's abutting parcels rendered physical access to one of the parcels difficult or impractical. The insured's ownership of the abutting parcel nonetheless gave it a right of access. [Magna Enterprises, Inc. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (2002) 104 CA4th 122, 127-128, 127 CR2d 681, 685]

• [3:105] Access coverage for two contiguous lots comprising a single buildable site was not triggered because the allegedly "landlocked" lot 2 had access by traversing lot 1. [Havstad v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1997) 58 CA4th 654, 661, 68 CR2d 487, 491 (dictum)]

• [3:106] Access thwarted by governmental permit process? It is unsettled whether access coverage would be triggered (whether the insured would lack a "right of access") if a governmental entity has lawfully prohibited or failed to grant the insured access to its property from other property it owns. [See Magna Enterprises, Inc. v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (2002) 104 CA4th 122, 128, 127 CR2d 681, 685, fn. 1 (noting but not deciding issue because no evidence that City could or would prohibit access from insured's abutting parcel if it were insured's only access)]

(5) [3:107] Violations or enforcement of laws, ordinances, permits or governmental regulations: The CLTA owner's policy also insures against violations or enforcement of laws, ordinances, permits, or governmental regulations (including those relating to building and zoning), but only to the extent the violation or enforcement described in an official Enforcement Notice identifies a restriction, regulation or prohibition relating to (i) the occupancy, use, or enjoyment of the land; (ii) the character, dimensions or location of an improvement on the land; (iii) the subdivision of the land; or (iv) environmental remediation or protection of the land.

(6) [3:107.1] Enforcement of governmental forfeiture, police, regulatory, or national security power: Similarly, the CLTA owner's policy insures against the enforcement of a governmental forfeiture, police, regulatory, or national security power, but only to the extent of the enforcement described in an official Enforcement Notice.

(7) [3:107.2] Exercise of eminent domain power: The CLTA owner's policy also insures against an exercise of the eminent domain power, but only to the extent the exercise is described in an Enforcement Notice or the taking occurred and is binding on a purchaser for value without knowledge (BFP).

(8) [3:107.3] Enforcement of PACA-PSA Trust: The enforcement of a PACA-PSA Trust is insured against, but only to the extent the enforcement is described in an Enforcement Notice.

(9) [3:107.4] Fraudulent conveyances and fraudulent, preferential or voidable transfers: The CLTA owner's policy also insures against title being vested other than as stated in the policy, or being defective, or because a court order has provided an alternative remedy, due to the avoidance of a prior transfer of title that constituted a fraudulent conveyance, fraudulent transfer, preferential transfer, or voidable transfer, as defined. Likewise, the policy insures against any such issue where the instrument vesting title constitutes a preferential transfer due to the failure to timely record same in the Public Records after its execution and delivery to the insured, or because recordation of the instrument in the Public Records failed to impart notice of its existence to a BFP.

(10) [3:107.5] Defects, liens or encumbrances included in "Covered Risks 1 through 9": Finally, the CLTA owner's policy insures against any defects, liens or encumbrances included in "Covered Risks 1 through 9" (¶ 3:93 ff.) that were created, attached, filed or recorded in the public records subsequent to the policy's date and prior to the recordation of the deed or other instrument vesting title in the public records.

[3:108 - 3:114] Reserved.

b. [3:115] Lender's Policy: Subject to specified Exclusions, Exceptions and Conditions, the CLTA Loan Policy insures a lender against loss or damage arising from the same matters insured in favor of an owner (i.e., matters 1 through 8, see ¶ 3:93 ff.) … plus the following:

(1) [3:116] Invalidity or unenforceability of insured's lien: The CLTA Loan Policy insures a lender against loss due to the invalidity or unenforceability of the lien of the insured's deed of trust upon title to the property. (However, this does not mean the policy insures enforceability of any particular provision in the deed of trust.)

Examples of the covered risks include, but are not limited to, insurance against loss caused by:

— forgery, undue influence, duress, incompetency, incapacity or impersonation;

— failure of a person or entity to have authorized a transfer or conveyance;

— insured's deed of trust not being properly authorized, created, executed, witnessed, sealed, acknowledged, notarized or delivered;

— failure to perform those acts necessary to create an insured's deed of trust by lawful electronic means;

— a document having been executed under a falsified, expired, or otherwise invalid power of attorney;

— insured's deed of trust not having been properly filed, recorded, or indexed in the public records, including by electronic means;

— a defective judicial or administrative proceeding; or

— the invalidity or unenforceability of the insured's deed of trust due to repudiation of an electronic signature by a person that executed the deed of trust because said signatured was invalid under applicable electronic transactions law.

(2) [3:116.1] Lack of priority: The CLTA Loan Policy insures a lender against loss due to the lien of the insured's deed of trust lacking priority as security for certain components of the indebtedness (e.g., principal amount disbursed, interest, reasonable foreclosure expenses, etc.) over any other lien or encumbrance on title.

In addition the policy insures the lender against loss due to the lien of the insured's deed of trust lacking priority as security for each advance of secured loan proceeds over (i) any statutory lien for service, labor, material, or equipment, as defined, and (ii) any assessment liens for street improvements under construction or completed at the policy's date.

(3) [3:117] Invalidity or unenforceability of assignment of lien: The CLTA Loan Policy also protects a lender against loss occasioned by the invalidity or unenforceability of any assignment of the insured's lien shown on the policy, or the failure of the assignment shown on the policy to vest title to the insured's lien in the named assignee free and clear of all liens.

(4) [3:118] Fraudulent conveyances and fraudulent, preferential or voidable transfers: The CLTA loan policy insures a lender against loss due to the invalidity, unenforceability, lack of priority, or avoidance of the lien of the insured's deed of trust, or the effect of a court order providing an alternative remedy, based on the avoidance of a prior transfer of title that constituted a fraudulent conveyance, fraudulent transfer, preferential transfer, or voidable transfer, as defined.

Likewise, the policy insures against any such issue where the lien of the insured's deed of trust constitutes a preferential transfer due to the failure to timely record same in the public records after its execution and delivery to the insured, or because recordation of the deed of trust in the public records failed to impart notice of its existence to a BFP.

(5) [3:119] Defects, liens or encumbrances included in covered risks: Finally, the CLTA loan policy insures against any defects, liens or encumbrances included in the above covered risks (¶ 3:115 ff.) that were created, attached, filed or recorded in the public records subsequent to the policy's date and prior to recordation of the insured's deed of trust in the public records.

[3:120 - 3:129] Reserved.

3. ALTA Policies (ALTA Loan Policy and ALTA Owner's Policy)

FORMS

- ALTA Loan Policy, see Form 3:C.
- ALTA Owner's Policy, see Form 3:D.

a. [3:130] Distinction between lender's and owner's coverage: Like the CLTA loan and owner's policies (¶ 3:76), the distinction between the ALTA Loan Policy and the ALTA Owner's Policy is that the former deals with the priority of the lender's trust deed, whereas the latter deals with the owner's title. The two coverages are similar, though not identical (e.g., the ALTA Loan Policy covers risks, exclusions and conditions specifically related to the lender's insured lien, and includes a section for listing matters affecting the property that the insurer covers subject to the terms and conditions of any subordination provision in the matters).

b. [3:131] Applicability of ALTA Loan Policy to purchase and sale transactions: Because almost every purchase and sale transaction involves some type of financing, the lender invariably requires title insurance protecting the priority of the lien of its deed of trust. The specific terms and conditions of a lender's policy are of little concern to the seller strictly in its capacity as seller; but the lender's policy becomes of great importance to sellers (and their counsel) in a seller-financed transaction.

An expanded ALTA loan policy insuring the lender for losses similar (though not identical) to those covered by the CLTA/ALTA Homeowner's Policy is also available. See ¶ 3:160.

c. [3:132] Scope of coverage: The general nature of ALTA policy coverage is specified in the title pages. As stated therein, the policies protect against loss due to several enumerated factors, subject to specified Exclusions, Exceptions and Conditions. And the insurer pays the costs, attorney fees and expenses incurred in defense of any matters insured against by the policies, but only to the extent provided in the Conditions.

d. [3:133] Matters insured: The ALTA Owner's Policy insures against the same risks as the CLTA Owner's Policy (see ¶ 3:93 ff., Risks 1 through 10).

The ALTA Loan Policy insures against the same risks as the CLTA Loan Policy (see ¶ 3:115 ff., Risks 1 through 14).

[3:134 - 3:149] Reserved.

4. [3:150] CLTA/ALTA Homeowner's Policy: The CLTA/ALTA Homeowner's Policy offers broader coverage for owner-occupied one-to-four family residences or condominium units. The policy is not available, however, for commercial properties or where the insured is not a “Natural Person” or “Estate Planning Entity.”

FORM: CLTA/ALTA Homeowner's Policy, see Form 3:E.

a. [3:151] Matters insured: Subject to deductibles and limitations, the CLTA/ALTA Homeowner's Policy insures against 33 “covered risks,” including loss or damage arising from several of the risks covered in the CLTA and ALTA Policies (e.g., incorrect vesting, defects, liens or encumbrances of title, lack of access rights, violations or enforcement of laws, ordinances, permits or governmental regulations, as specified, etc.; ¶ 3:93 ff.).

[3:152 - 3:159] Reserved.

5. [3:160] ALTA Expanded Coverage Residential Loan Policy—Assessments Priority: An expanded ALTA lender's policy is available for loans secured by residential properties. The “ALTA Expanded Coverage Residential Loan Policy—Assessments Priority” insures the lender for losses similar (though not identical) to those covered by the CLTA/ALTA Homeowner's Policy (¶ 3:151).

FORM: ALTA Expanded Coverage Residential Loan Policy—Assessments Priority, see Form 3:F.

a. [3:161] “Short form” also available: An ALTA “Short Form Expanded Coverage Residential Loan Policy—Assessments Priority” also is available. Except as otherwise provided in its Schedule “B” and any addendums attached thereto, the short form incorporates by reference all of the long form policy's terms, exclusions and conditions but, unlike the long form, describes the property only by a street address (rather than a legal description) and contains only a minimal identification of the parties, dates and amount of insurance and mortgage.

6. [3:162] ALTA Residential Limited Coverage Mortgage Modification Policy: An ALTA mortgage modification policy is available for loans secured by one-to-four family residences or condominiums. Subject to specified exclusions, the “ALTA Residential Limited Coverage Mortgage Modification Policy” protects the lender from loss or damage caused by the invalidity or unenforceability of the mortgage lien on title due to the mortgage's modification and by the mortgage lien's lack of priority over defects in or liens or encumbrances on title due to such modification.

• FORM: ALTA Residential Limited Coverage Mortgage Modification Policy, see Form 3:G.

1. In General

a. [3:200] Statutory definition: A "preliminary report" is statutorily defined as "reports furnished in connection with an application for title insurance" and an offer "to issue a title policy subject to the stated exceptions set forth in the reports and such other matters as may be incorporated by reference therein." [Ins.C. § 12340.11; Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1996) 46 CA4th 1181, 1190, 54 CR2d 84, 88]

• FORM: Preliminary Report, see Form 3:A.

(1) [3:201] Offer to issue title policy—no liability thereon: A preliminary report is neither an "abstract of title" nor a representation as to the condition of title to property. Rather, it is simply an offer to issue a title policy (upon stated terms and conditions), which the prospective insured may or may not accept; hence, a preliminary report does not subject the title company to any liability (¶ 3:32). [Ins.C. §§ 12340.10 & 12340.11; 2,022 Ranch, L.L.C. v. Sup.Ct. (Chicago Title Ins. Co.) (2003) 113 CA4th 1377, 1382, 7 CR3d 197, 201, fn. 2 (citing text) (disapproved on other grounds by Costco Wholesale Corp. v. Sup.Ct. (2009) 47 C4th 725, 739, 101 CR3d 758, 769); see also Stockton Mortg., Inc. v. Tope (2014) 233 CA4th 437, 452-453, 183 CR3d 186, 199-200—notice of abatement action referenced in preliminary report did not subject title company to liability; Alfaro v. Community Housing Improvement System & Planning Ass'n, Inc. (2009) 171 CA4th 1356, 1389, 124 CR3d 271, 301—reference to deed restrictions in preliminary reports did not constitute representation as to properties' condition; Marriage of Cloney (2001) 91 CA4th 429, 438-439, 110 CR2d 615, 622, fn. 8—title insurer is simply selling product]

(a) [3:201.1] Compare—conditions of title guarantee: A conditions of title guarantee provides customers with a product that is similar to a preliminary report except it does not contemplate issuance of a title insurance policy. Guarantees generally are discussed at ¶ 3:36 ff.

b. [3:202] Purpose: A preliminary report is used internally by a title company to evaluate the risks it is willing to assume under a title policy; and, as an "offer" to issue a title policy, it is also given to a prospective insured to facilitate issuance of the policy. The report shows the conditions under which an insurer is willing to insure title (Ins.C. § 12340.11). Accordingly, it lists the title company's standard exclusions, exceptions, and conditions and stipulations to coverage, as well as specific coverage exceptions for those items affecting title to the subject property. [Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1996) 46 CA4th 1181, 1192, 54 CR2d 84, 89; Rosen v. Nations Title Ins. Co. (1997) 56 CA4th 1489, 1499-1500, 66 CR2d 714, 720]

A preliminary report enables prospective buyers to assess the nature and extent of the risks presented in connection with owning an interest in a piece of property; by the same token, the report is not a "guarantee" against other risks not listed on the report. Therefore, the preliminary report provides an initial "laundry list" of title exceptions. In many instances, sellers, buyers and their counsel can work with the title company to clean up and eliminate certain matters which might otherwise be excluded from policy coverage.

c. [3:203] Not a substitute for title insurance: Counsel are often asked by their clients why title insurance should be purchased when a preliminary report offers them the benefit of the title company's work regarding the state of title. There is rarely a situation when any party should rely solely on a preliminary report (in lieu of a title insurance policy) in consummating a purchase and sale transaction; the reasons are threefold:

(1) [3:204] Not insurance coverage: Again, a preliminary report provides no insurance coverage (¶ 3:201).

(2) [3:205] Not conclusive of condition of title: The report is not conclusive on the legal state of title; nor does it embody the title company's representations regarding the condition of title. It simply contains the title company's conclusions as to the state of title. A title officer may easily have missed a recorded lien or encumbrance or other title defect. Thus, any given preliminary report could be erroneous; i.e., there may be objectionable title exceptions even though not indicated on a preliminary report. By statute (Ins.C. §§ 12340.10, 12340.11), insureds may not rely on a preliminary report to show the condition of title. [Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1996) 46 CA4th 1181, 1192-1193, 54 CR2d 84, 89-90; Southland Title Corp. v. Sup.Ct. (Nye) (1991) 231 CA3d 530, 537-538, 282 CR 425, 429; Alfaro v. Community Housing Improvement System & Planning Ass'n, Inc. (2009) 171 CA4th 1356, 1389, 124 CR3d 271, 301]

> "[A] party who fails to obtain title insurance and instead relies on a preliminary report … showing no encumbrances does so at his own peril and cannot thereafter maintain an action against the insurer when an undisclosed lien comes to light." [Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., supra, 46 CA4th at 1185, 54 CR2d at 85 (emphasis added); see also Lee v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (2010) 188 CA4th 583, 596, 115 CR3d 748, 758—insurers cannot be held liable for negligence in connection with preliminary reports since reports themselves are merely inducements to purchase title policies; Soifer v. Chicago Title Co. (2010) 187 CA4th 365, 367-368, 114 CR3d 1, 2—real estate investor could not recover for errors in title company's statement regarding condition of title absent title insurance policy or purchase of "abstract of title"]

(3) [3:206] Vesting issues: A preliminary report does not necessarily deal with the steps and documents required to properly and lawfully vest title in the buyer's name.

d. [3:207] Contents: A preliminary report contains the date of issuance of the report, the type of policy desired, the interest to be insured, the vesting of the property, the legal description of the property, the specific matters affecting the property which the insurer is not willing to insure, the standard preprinted exclusions and exceptions to coverage, and the title insurer's requirements for issuance of the policy. (See Form 3:A.)

e. [3:208] Supplements or amendments: Because a preliminary report is not binding on the insurer (¶ 3:201), it may be modified—by supplements and/or amendments—at any time prior to issuance of the policy. Often, modifications of proposed coverage are made in response to a customer's request to eliminate a matter excepted from coverage, or in response to the title company's discovery of a new matter affecting title prior to issuance of the policy. For its own protection, a title company usually updates its initial search immediately before issuing the policy and modifies its offer of title insurance accordingly.

[3:208.1 - 3:208.4] Reserved.

f. [3:208.5] Contract created upon insured's acceptance: The preliminary report stands only as an offer to issue a title policy on the specified terms and conditions up to the point it is accepted by the insured. Upon the insured's approval and acceptance of the terms and conditions set forth in the preliminary report, a binding contract is created between the insured and title insurer based on those stated terms and conditions and any materials incorporated in the preliminary report by reference (see ¶ 3:19.3). [Wolschlager v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (2003) 111 CA4th 784, 789-790, 4 CR3d 179, 183-184; Kleveland v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (2006) 141 CA4th 761, 764, 46 CR3d 314, 316]

➪ [3:208.6] PRACTICE POINTER: Materials "incorporated by reference" could be a trap for the unwary. Because a typical preliminary title report incorporates by reference the terms of the title policy to be issued based on the report, it is crucial that the policy be reviewed carefully before accepting the report. Otherwise, your clients may find that they have inadvertently given up certain rights against the title insurer. [See Wolschlager v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (2003) 111 CA4th 784, 790, 4 CR3d 179, 183-184]

g. [3:209] Counsel's role: Buyer's counsel is typically asked to review the preliminary report and determine whether the seller can convey title acceptable to the buyer. However, it behooves seller's counsel to review the report as well to determine what steps must be taken and what documents must be prepared to vest title in the buyer. For these reasons, it is advisable to order the preliminary report as early as possible in the transaction, allowing sufficient time within which to arrange for necessary documentation.

➪ [3:210] PRACTICE POINTERS: Counsel should review a preliminary report with the following points in mind:

WESTLAW © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

- Not conclusive of title exceptions: A preliminary report only briefly identifies and describes the title exceptions. The title exception descriptions in the report are written by a title officer and can be misleading, incomplete or incorrect. Thus, the only way to properly review exceptions to title is to examine the recorded documents described in the preliminary report.

- Plotting easements, etc.: A preliminary report (and the recorded documents) often provides only a "metes and bounds" description of easements and rights of way, which is difficult (and sometimes impossible) for counsel to locate on a map. Thus, it may be beneficial to have the title company "plot" any easements or rights of way on an attached drawing of the subject property; in this way, lawyer and client can quickly and easily determine whether easements might impact the buyer's intended use of the property.

- Utility liens: By statute, a public utility may create a lien for unpaid utility charges (on separately metered residential property) by recording a certificate of delinquency in the county where the subject property is located (see Pub.Util.C. §§ 10009.6, 10016, 12811.1). However, the lien does not arise until recordation of the certificate. [Pub.Util.C. § 12811.1]

2. Other Documents Compared

a. [3:211] Abstracts of title: An "abstract of title" is a written representation intended to be relied upon by the person contracting for it, listing all recorded documents that impart constructive notice with respect to title to a particular piece of property. [Ins.C. § 12340.10; Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1996) 46 CA4th 1181, 1190, 54 CR2d 84, 88; Alfaro v. Community Housing Improvement System & Planning Ass'n, Inc. (2009) 171 CA4th 1356, 1389, 124 CR3d 271, 301; see also Soifer v. Chicago Title Co. (2010) 187 CA4th 365, 372, 114 CR3d 1, 6—person who contracts and separately pays for "abstract of title" receives all rights associated therewith and may rely upon express representations contained therein]

A preliminary report, in contrast, is only a representation as to the conditions under which an insurer will issue a title policy (an offer to insure on specified terms); it is not a representation as to all recorded documents affecting the property, and does not create any of the duties or responsibilities associated with the preparation and issuance of an abstract of title. [Ins.C. §§ 12340.10, 12340.11; Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., supra, 46 CA4th at 1190, 1193, 54 CR2d at 88, 90; Southland Title Corp. v. Sup.Ct. (Nye) (1991) 231 CA3d 530, 537, 282 CR 425, 429; Alfaro v. Community Housing Improvement System & Planning Ass'n, Inc., supra, 171 CA4th at 1389, 124 CR3d at 301]

(As earlier noted, abstracts of title are rarely used in California; ¶ 3:33.)

(1) [3:212] Statutory distinction: Although preliminary reports were always intended to be distinguished from abstracts of title, preparers of preliminary reports were at one time subject to an abstractor's liability. [White v. Western Title Ins. Co. (1985) 40 C3d 870, 883-884, 221 CR 509, 515-516; and see Hawkins v. Oakland Title Ins. & Guaranty Co. (1958) 165 CA2d 116, 124-127, 331 P2d 742, 746-748—setting forth prerequisites to title report preparer's negligence liability]

Responding to this confusion, the California Legislature enacted Ins.C. §§ 12340.10 and 12340.11, providing distinct statutory definitions of the two documents. (In fact, the name "preliminary report" was changed from "preliminary title report" to further distinguish the two … although preliminary reports are still commonly referred to as "preliminary title reports.") [See Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1996) 46 CA4th 1181, 1191, 54 CR2d 84, 89; Southland Title Corp. v. Sup.Ct. (Nye) (1991) 231 CA3d 530, 535-536, 282 CR 425, 428, fn. 4; see also Soifer v. Chicago Title Co. (2010) 187 CA4th 365, 370-371, 114 CR3d 1, 4-5 (explaining relevant statutory provisions)]

(a) [3:213] Compare—abstractor duties pursuant to contract: Although they owe no statutory abstractor's duty, title insurers may contractually agree to be bound by an abstractor's duties and responsibilities (i.e., to undertake a thorough search of the records and disclose all impediments to title). In that case, the title insurer's written report is an abstract of title pursuant to contract, and the insurer is exposed to professional negligence liability if the report is negligently prepared (see ¶ 3:214). [Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1996) 46 CA4th 1181, 1194, 54 CR2d 84, 91]

However, no contract to provide abstractor services is created simply from a title insurer's agreement to prepare a preliminary report and furnish an ALTA or CLTA policy. Nor can such an agreement arise from mere custom and practice (to hold otherwise would render Ins.C. §§ 12340.10 and 12340.11 "meaningless" and "lead to the improper reliance on the insurer's preliminary report the legislature intended to foreclose"). [See Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., supra, 46 CA4th at 1195, 54 CR2d at 91-92]

(2) [3:214] Abstractor's liability: An abstractor has a duty to search the public records and report all defects, liens and encumbrances discoverable by the exercise of reasonable diligence. [White v. Western Title Ins. Co. (1985) 40 C3d 870, 883, 221 CR 509, 515]

An abstractor may be held liable in contract or tort for failing to diligently search the public records and list on the abstract all matters imparting constructive notice. In its capacity as an abstractor, a title company's tort liability may exceed the title policy limits. [Stagen v. Stewart-West Coast Title Co. (1983) 149 CA3d 114, 118, 196 CR 732, 734; see also Barthels v. Santa Barbara Title Co. (1994) 28 CA4th 674, 678, 33 CR2d 579, 581—Civ.C. § 3333 measure of damages applies to abstractor's negligence liability]

(a) [3:215] Third party exposure: Except to the limited extent noted at ¶ 3:215.1 ff., an abstractor's potential liability runs only to the person contracting for the abstract.

1) [3:215.1] Breach of contract liability on third party beneficiary theory: A third party might have a contract cause of action on third party beneficiary principles; but the third party claimant would have to demonstrate the abstract was expressly made for the claimant's benefit. Where the abstractor had no knowledge of the third party's interest in the property at the time the contract was performed, the third party is at best an "incidental beneficiary" and thus has no ground for recovery on the contract. [Stagen v. Stewart-West Coast Title Co. (1983) 149 CA3d 114, 119, 196 CR 732, 734-735]

2) [3:215.2] Tort liability as professional supplier of information "for guidance of others": Professional suppliers of information "for the guidance of others" in their business transactions are exposed to tort liability (misrepresentation) to those who are harmed by justifiable reliance upon the supplier's misinformation. Conceivably, a third party may state a tort cause of action against an abstractor on this theory. However, intent to influence the particular party is a threshold issue in such cases; in its absence, the abstractor incurs no tort liability even though the claimant may have relied on a misrepresentation to the claimant's detriment and notwithstanding that such reliance may have been reasonably foreseeable. [See Rest.1st Torts § 552; Stagen v. Stewart-West Coast Title Co. (1983) 149 CA3d 114, 121-122, 196 CR 732, 736-737]

(3) [3:216] Compare—title company's liability (post-1981 reports): By comparison, title companies are free to except any matter from coverage and incur no liability therefor, even if a matter is excluded because of the company's negligence. See ¶ 3:225.

b. [3:217] Property profile: A "property profile" is similar to a preliminary report in that both state the vesting of the property, the deeds of trust encumbering the property, the unpaid taxes and assessments, and the property's legal description. However, unlike a preliminary report, a property profile does not reflect all types of recorded documents and is usually provided at no (or minimal) cost. Also, a policy of title insurance will not be issued based on a property profile (i.e., it is not an "offer" to issue a policy on stated terms and conditions).

• [3:217.1] Comment: A property profile is not a substitute for a preliminary report as a step toward obtaining title insurance. However, property profiles are often used instead of a preliminary report by persons who are not interested in obtaining title insurance but merely want to know about vesting and monetary liens (e.g., as part of an asset search). Some title insurers have made their property profiles available online.

c. [3:218] Binders and commitments: "Binders" and "commitments" are similar to preliminary reports in that all three are furnished in connection with an application for a title insurance policy. Also, like a preliminary report (¶ 3:202), binders and commitments may not be construed as a representation of the condition of title to property; they are simply representations as to the terms under which a policy may be issued. [Ins.C. § 12340.11]

However, binders and commitments differ from preliminary reports in that they obligate an insurer to issue a policy of title insurance.

(1) [3:219] Binders: A binder is an agreement to provide insurance and provides temporary coverage until the policy is issued. Unless otherwise provided in the binder, the terms of the proposed policy are implied in the binder.

(a) [3:220] When used: Typically, binders are obtained by purchasers of property who intend to resell within the period of time stated in the binder. In such case, the title insurance policy will be issued to the person or entity to whom the property is to be resold. The cost of obtaining a binder to provide coverage for the initial purchaser and the person to whom the property will be resold is less than what it would cost to obtain two policies of title insurance.

(b) [3:221] Lapse of binder: If a policy is not issued to the subsequent (proposed) purchaser within the period stated in the binder, some title companies will issue the policy to the person who purchased the binder; others will simply allow the binder to lapse.

(2) [3:222] Commitment: A commitment is a title company's binding agreement to issue a policy of insurance. Unlike a binder, it does not provide an insured with temporary coverage; rather, it obligates an insurer to issue an individual (or entity) a specified policy in a specified amount upon satisfaction of the conditions described in the commitment.

Commitments are typically used to facilitate the close of a real estate transaction; i.e., the parties can review the commitment before the closing to make certain the policy will be precisely in the form they anticipate. (Even though there may be additional matters to be attended to prior to the closing, the parties will at least know that the specific terms of the title policy are agreed to and resolved.)

➪ [3:223] PRACTICE POINTER: The status of title matters may change between the date of the commitment and the date the title policy is issued; e.g., a tax payment may have become delinquent. The length of this "gap" period and perhaps other circumstances may sometimes warrant obtaining an updated commitment.

[3:224] Reserved.

3. [3:225] Title Company's Liability: As discussed at ¶ 3:211 ff., a preliminary report is not an abstract of title and, therefore, is not a representation as to matters affecting title (¶ 3:201, 3:211). A title company may determine in its sole discretion the conditions under which it is willing to insure title. [Sala v. Security Title Ins. & Guarantee Co. (1938) 27 CA2d 693, 702-703, 81 P2d 578, 581-582]

Accordingly, a title company may elect to except from coverage any matter affecting title and will not be subject to liability therefor—even if the matter is omitted because of the title company's negligence. [See Alfaro v. Community Housing Improvement System & Planning Ass'n, Inc. (2009) 171 CA4th 1356, 1389, 124 CR3d 271, 301; Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1996) 46 CA4th 1181, 1192-1193, 54 CR2d 84, 89-90—title insurer not liable for alleged negligent failure to disclose recorded judgment lien in preliminary report; Southland Title Corp. v. Sup.Ct. (Nye) (1991) 231 CA3d 530, 537-538, 282 CR 425, 429-430—title company not liable for alleged negligent failure to reflect recorded flood control easement in preliminary report]

4. Issuance of Preliminary Report

a. [3:226] Title company search: The first step in preparing a preliminary report is to search the public records for documents imparting "constructive notice" with respect to the subject property.

(1) [3:227] "Plant" and "starters": Generally, title officers do not have to comb public records in county recorders' offices every time they conduct a search. Title companies create and maintain their own current records of matters affecting property in "plants"—i.e., internal mechanisms for accumulating and organizing information they need to perform title searches. Some title companies have their own plants, while others share plants. [See Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1996) 46 CA4th 1181, 1188, 54 CR2d 84, 87, fn. 4]

A title company usually creates its plant files by engaging experienced personnel to review, report, post and index pertinent documents in the public records and transfer the information to its own records. [See Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., supra]

(a) [3:228] Plant components: Plants usually contain lot books, a general index, arb books, and tax records (all discussed at ¶ 3:230 ff.); most of these files are computerized.

(b) [3:229] Commencement of search: To begin a search, a title company first checks its plant to determine whether an earlier search was performed for the particular property. The company will use information obtained from an earlier search and conduct a new search only from the date of the earlier search to the date of the present request.

(2) [3:230] Lot books: Lot books are indexed by the legal descriptions of subdivided lots or divided parcels. They list all of the public records affecting the lots or parcels, as well as any other information maintained by the title company (such as prior reports). [See Bank of America Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n v. Giant Inland Empire R.V. Center, Inc. (2000) 78

CA4th 1267, 1274, 93 CR2d 626, 630—"lot book report represents a snapshot of raw data that appears in the files of the particular branch of the title company" (internal quotes omitted)]

(3) [3:231] General index: A general index contains public records affecting persons and the property they own. For example, pending litigation, name changes, marital settlements and general settlement agreements, bankruptcy orders, abstracts of judgments, powers of attorney, trust agreements, and corporate and partnership documents affecting property are maintained in a general index.

Because the property affected by these public records is not always identified by a particular description (other than by who owns it), a general index is an alphabetical index of persons' names. A general index is therefore reviewed in addition to lot books. [See Bank of America Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n v. Giant Inland Empire R.V. Center, Inc. (2000) 78 CA4th 1267, 1274, 93 CR2d 626, 630—lot book report "does not reveal anything having to do with the official index, the grantor/grantee index, or anything that tracks the names of any parties" (internal quotes omitted)]

(4) [3:232] Arb books: Title companies assign arbitrary (arb) numbers to large parcels described by metes and bounds, rather than by reference to a recorded subdivision map. The arb books contain lists of all parcels with arbitrary numbers and all documents affecting such parcels.

(5) [3:233] Tax records: Title companies maintain files on all taxes and assessments levied on properties. However, because property is often identified differently by tax assessors than by the county recorder's office, title companies have to keep separate records of taxes and assessments.

Assessment records, but not property tax records, are usually kept in title company plants (¶ 3:228). Therefore, a title company's search will also include a search of the tax assessor's records.

b. [3:234] Title examination: After completion of a search, a title officer reviews the documents and other information found during the search and compiles a preliminary report showing the condition under which the company is willing to insure title.

c. [3:235] Underwriting/risk analysis: A title officer analyzes the risks posed by the liens, encumbrances and defects found in the company's search and usually decides to exclude them from coverage (they are listed as exceptions to coverage). At that point, the buyer must decide whether to suspend going forward with the transaction until the impediment to title is removed (see ¶ 3:238 ff. and 4:327). [See Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1996) 46 CA4th 1181, 1188, 54 CR2d 84, 87]

Sometimes, if a defect is insignificant and the risk is low, the title company will elect not to except the item from coverage.

[3:235.1 - 3:235.4] Reserved.

d. [3:235.5] Underlying documents: Copies of public documents found during the search to prepare the preliminary report (¶ 3:226 ff.) are sometimes included with the preliminary report. Other times, however, the underlying documents are sent later because of delay in getting them copied at the county recorder's office. (If there is any urgency, counsel should arrange with the insurer for expedited transmission of the documents by messenger, overnight mail or fax (although some older documents have become so faded over time that fax transmission would not be advisable).)

(1) [3:235.6] Cover page re unlawful restrictive covenants to be added: Before giving a copy of a previously-recorded deed, declaration or governing document to any person (including persons holding ownership interests of record in property), title companies (as well as county recorders, realtors, etc.) must affix a prescribed cover page or stamp advising that any restrictive covenants in the document violating state/federal fair housing laws are void and may be removed by recording a "Restrictive Covenant Modification" form, together with a copy of the attached document with the unlawful provision redacted. The cover page or stamp must also advise that the "Restrictive Covenant Modification" form can be obtained from the county recorder's office and may be available on its internet website or from the party who provided the document. [See Gov.C. §§ 12956.1, 12956.2—title companies (as well as county recorders, realtors, etc.) also may record Restrictive Covenant Modification forms]

(a) [3:235.7] Additional responsibilities: Beginning July 1, 2022, if a title company (escrow company, real estate broker, etc.) has actual knowledge that a declaration, governing document, or deed being directly delivered to a person who holds or is acquiring an ownership interest in property includes a possible unlawfully restrictive covenant, the title company (escrow company, real estate broker, etc.) must notify the person of the covenant's existence and their ability to have it removed through the restrictive covenant modification process. Moreover, if requested before the close of escrow, the title (or escrow) company directly involved in the pending transaction must assist in preparing the Restrictive Covenant Modification. However, the title (or escrow) company has no liability associated with the recordation of a Restrictive Covenant Modification that contains modifications not authorized by Gov.C. § 12956.2 on behalf of the requester. [Gov.C. § 12956.2(a), (f) (setting forth sample Restrictive Covenant Modification form); see also Gov. C. § 12956.3 (requiring each county recorder to establish restrictive covenant program to assist in redacting "unlawfully restrictive covenants" as statutorily specified); Gov.C. § 27388.2 (authorizing county recorders to charge $2.00 fee for recording first page of specified real estate documents for purposes of implementing § 12956.2 restrictive covenants program)]

5. Insured's Review of Preliminary Report

a. [3:236] Scope of review: Upon receiving a preliminary report, prospective insureds should review:

- the vesting of the property (among other things, be sure to verify that the name of the proposed vested title holder exactly matches the buyer's name in the purchase and sale documents);
- The legal description of the property (among other things, verify that it is identical to the description shown on any survey that has been obtained);
- whether there are any third party claims to ownership;
- whether any defects, liens and/or encumbrances affect or prevent the desired use of the property; and
- whether there are any restrictions on ownership. [See Alfaro v. Community Housing Improvement System & Planning Ass'n, Inc. (2009) 171 CA4th 1356, 1389-1390, 124 CR3d 271, 301—purchaser who receives and reads (or should have read) preliminary report revealing existence of deed restriction has actual notice of its existence and is on inquiry notice of its nature]

Prospective insureds also should review all documents underlying the reported defects, liens and encumbrances, etc. (see ¶ 3:235.5 ff.). Likewise, even though the title company's preprinted exceptions cannot be altered, they should be reviewed to determine if there is reason to do something further—e.g., a personal inspection of the property in the case of a CLTA Policy. Additionally, prospective insureds should review the title company's requirements for issuance of the policy to determine what must be done to procure it. And finally, before accepting the company's offer, they should review the proposed policy itself (see ¶ 3:208.5 ff.).

b. [3:237] Exceptions for items affecting property: A preliminary report lists all recorded title defects, liens and encumbrances, etc., affecting the subject property that the title company will not insure. Recorded title exceptions, including the corresponding recorded documents, should always be reviewed and evaluated to determine whether they are acceptable to the insured.

Some of the exceptions rarely pose a substantial risk to insureds and thus, as a general rule, will be acceptable. They include, for example:

- general and special city and/or county taxes which are liens not yet payable;
- the lien of supplemental taxes (if any) assessed pursuant to Division 1, Chapter 3.5 of the Revenue & Taxation Code;
- utility easements (depending on their location and whether the insured intends to build over such easements); and
- covenants, conditions and restrictions (unless they affect or prevent the intended use of the property).

c. [3:238] Clearing title exceptions: Typically, a prospective insured and title officer will work together to eliminate unacceptable exceptions from coverage. Monetary items, such as taxes and liens, may be paid off prior to the closing and other items may be eliminated or subordinated to the insured's interest in the property. These matters need to be negotiated with the title company and, quite often, the other party to the transaction.

(1) [3:239] Bonding around or indemnifying against unacceptable exceptions: If neither party is willing to pay off a monetary lien or if the title company is unwilling to remove a particular item as an exception, the insured may be able to procure an endorsement from the title company covering the item by posting a bond to secure payment of the lien, or by providing either the buyer's or seller's indemnity to the title insurer for loss due to the matter. (See ¶ 3:290 ff.)

➪ [3:240] PRACTICE POINTER: The better approach to eliminating unacceptable title exceptions is to take care of the underlying defects (paying off liens, etc.) rather than seeking to have the insurer simply remove the exceptions from the report. Uncorrected defects may lead to future claims that, even if covered by the title policy, will require time and perhaps litigation to resolve.

Chapter 3. Title Insurance

E. Policy Endorsements

1. [3:245] Nature and Use of Endorsements
   a. [3:246] Part of policy
   b. [3:247] When issued
   c. [3:248] Types of endorsements
   d. [3:250] Endorsements compared to unreported items
2. [3:255] Covenants, Conditions, Restrictions and Encroachments
3. [3:256] Mechanic's Liens
4. [3:257] Easements
5. [3:258] Designation of Improvements, Address
   a. [3:259] Not “area” or acreage
6. [3:260] Modification of Deed of Trust; Additional Loan Advances
7. [3:261] Assignment of Deed of Trust
8. [3:262] Environmental Violations

1. [3:245] Nature and Use of Endorsements: Endorsements are additional policy provisions that alter title coverage. Most endorsements increase or expand coverage. They are available at varying prices, depending on the extent of the risk assumed by the title insurer in giving a particular endorsement. Endorsements often provide a cost-effective way to address issues that may otherwise impede a transaction.

a. [3:246] Part of policy: Endorsements are attached to and made a part of the title policy. If there is a conflict between the terms of an endorsement and the body of the title policy, the endorsement terms control. [Continental Cas. Co. v. Phoenix Const. Co. (1956) 46 C2d 423, 431, 296 P2d 801, 805]

b. [3:247] When issued: Endorsements may be issued simultaneously with issuance of a title insurance policy or after issuance of the policy. In any event, an insured ordinarily must take the initiative in requesting desired endorsements. A title company is not responsible for offering or otherwise recommending their use. [Cf. Pabitzky v. Frager (1985) 164 CA3d 401, 403, 210 CR 426, 427]

c. [3:248] Types of endorsements: Endorsements are often used to vitiate a title risk not otherwise protected by the policy. There are many standard CLTA or ALTA form endorsements procured for a variety of typical title risks. However, a title company will often create special endorsements to accommodate title risks unique to a particular parcel.

A few of the more commonly used endorsements are discussed briefly in the sections at ¶ 3:255 ff. (The endorsement forms are not replicated in this Practice Guide but may be obtained from California Land Title Association, P.O. Box 13968, Sacramento, CA 95853-3968; see also www.clta.org.)

➪ [3:249] PRACTICE POINTER: Don't be shy about requesting a special endorsement and using creativity to structure one that will cover peculiar title risks. Theoretically, there are as many endorsements available as there are title risks. Where necessary, it can be worth the time and effort to work with the title officer and title company's counsel to draft a “homespun” endorsement.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

d. [3:250] Endorsements compared to unreported items: A title insurer that is aware of, but willing to insure against, a potential title defect can accomplish fundamentally the same goal by two different methods: (1) The potential defect can be disclosed on the title policy, but an endorsement issued insuring against any loss arising therefrom; or (2) alternatively, the company may simply elect not to report the item on the policy.

[3:251 - 3:254] Reserved.

2. [3:255] Covenants, Conditions, Restrictions and Encroachments: The Form "100 series" of endorsements provides enhanced protection against loss or damage arising out of covenants, conditions, restrictions and encroachments.

3. [3:256] Mechanic's Liens: CLTA policies do not insure loss arising from prior unrecorded mechanic's liens. For that reason, the Form "101 series" endorsements are often used in conjunction with CLTA policies where there is partially completed, recently completed or planned construction.

4. [3:257] Easements: The Form "103 series" of endorsements includes endorsements that provide enhanced protection against loss or damage arising out of the use, maintenance or encroachment of easements, as well as against loss of use of an easement for ingress and egress.

5. [3:258] Designation of Improvements, Address: The CLTA Form 116-06 endorsement insures a lender under an ALTA policy against loss or damage due to inaccuracy of the title company's assurances as to the description of the type of improvement located on the property, the street address of the property, and the location and dimensions of the property.

a. [3:259] Not "area" or acreage: The endorsement insuring the correct dimensions of the property, however, does not provide coverage for a shortage of "area" (as where the policy accurately describes the length of the parcel's boundaries but erroneously states the total acreage). "Dimensions" and "area" are discrete concepts; the former refers to linear measures of the sides or base of a geometric object, whereas the latter encompasses the product of the dimensions. [Golden Security Thrift & Loan Ass'n v. First American Title Ins. Co. (1997) 53 CA4th 250, 257, 61 CR2d 442, 445-446]

Moreover, the endorsement assures only the accuracy of the policy's warranty of dimensions according to those records that impart constructive notice under the recording laws. A parcel's parameter dimensions are used in public records under the recording laws to impart constructive notice, but its area is not. [Golden Security Thrift & Loan Ass'n v. First American Title Ins. Co., supra, 53 CA4th at 257, 61 CR2d at 446, fn. 5—no coverage under endorsement for shortage in acreage encompassed within accurately stated boundaries (policy noted 2.06 acres but actual area was 1.36 acres)]

6. [3:260] Modification of Deed of Trust; Additional Loan Advances: Although title insurance for deed of trust modifications rarely involves a purchase and sale transaction, loan modifications may be of concern to a buyer who obtains a development or construction loan. For example, a lender whose loan is secured by an existing deed of trust may agree to advance additional funds to the borrower secured by the same lien and trust deed (often referred to as either an "equity advance" or "equity financed" loan). To protect against other liens or interests in the property that may intervene between the date of the original deed of trust and the advancement of funds, the Form "122 series" of endorsements may be used.

7. [3:261] Assignment of Deed of Trust: A CLTA Form 104-06 endorsement provides the assignee of a lender under an ALTA policy with protection against loss or damage resulting from invalidity of the assignment, subsisting tax and assessment liens, matters affecting the validity or priority of the lien of the deed of trust, and federal tax liens or bankruptcy proceedings. The endorsement also includes a creditors' rights exclusion with respect to claims arising out of the assignment transaction.

8. [3:262] Environmental Violations: The standard form CLTA and ALTA policies include limited coverage for environmental remediation or protection of the land (¶ 3:89). Also available for purchase are "Environmental Protection Lien Endorsements" (ALTA Endorsement Nos. 8.1, 8.1-06 and 8.2-06 respectively) that insure against recorded violations of environmental statutes.

1. [3:290] General Concerns: The practical implications of purchasing property with an appropriate title insurance endorsement must be considered. Like other parts of a title policy, an endorsement simply provides insurance against the potential risk created by the purported defect, lien or encumbrance; it does not eliminate title defects (see ¶ 3:6 ff.). Though your client may be willing to buy property insured for title defects, the next buyer or a future lender might back out or decline to make the loan (as the case may be) notwithstanding the availability of title insurance.

For example, assume a purchase and sale transaction is entirely seller-financed (no institutional lender). The seller is probably willing to accept insurance against any existing title defect because, in all likelihood, the seller already accepted title insurance for the same defect at the time of the original purchase. However, when the buyer attempts to refinance at a later date, an institutional lender may have more stringent requirements. Frequently, lenders refuse to make a loan even if title insurance is available to cover a particular defect … because lenders are interested in the certainty of clear title vested in the borrower's name; their concerns are not satisfactorily ameliorated by the comfort of a claim against the title insurer, which takes time and money to pursue.

Thus, endorsements to title insurance policies should be used when a particular title defect, lien or encumbrance cannot be removed or cured. It follows that the first (and best) recourse is to attempt to eliminate the problem—and hence the risk—by obtaining appropriate releases or recording appropriate documents. Some of the possible approaches are noted at ¶ 3:291 ff.

2. Possible Approaches

a. [3:291] Indemnification agreement: One method of resolving title matters (at least as between buyer and seller) is to have the seller (or another person or entity) indemnify the purchaser against loss arising from the matter which the title insurer will not insure. Alternatively, the seller can agree to indemnify the insurer against loss arising from a matter in exchange for elimination of the matter as an exception from coverage. (These indemnities can, of course, be secured or unsecured.)

b. [3:292] Surety bond: A title company will sometimes eliminate an exception to coverage if it is provided with a surety bond that serves as security for payment of any lien. For instance, if there is a mechanic's lien of record, the seller can procure a bond insuring the title company against loss due to the lien.

Cross-refer: For a detailed treatment of surety bonds, see Croskey, Heeseman, Ehrlich & Klee, Cal. Prac. Guide: Insurance Litigation (TRG), Ch. 6I.

c. [3:293] Security impound: Another approach is to impound a certain amount of money with the title company as security against loss. Under such an arrangement, the title company is permitted to use the impounded funds to pay off a monetary lien at its discretion.

d. [3:294] Subordination: Sometimes, an insured may be protected by subordinating a lien or encumbrance to the insured's interest in the property. Although subordination does not remove the lien of record, it makes the lien "junior" to the insured's interest and, therefore, the insured's interest is not impacted.

Cross-refer: For further discussion of subordination of liens, see ¶ 6:450 ff.

3. [3:295] Termination of Rights With Passage of Time: By statute, certain recorded interests in property terminate with the passage of time. Specifically, the Marketable Record Title Act (MRTA, Civ.C. § 880.020 et seq.) provides for the removal of liens of "ancient" (expired) deeds of trust, unexercised options, powers of termination, unperformed contracts and abandoned easements. Obviously, if a recorded interest has ceased to exist by reason of MRTA, it is not a cloud on title and need not be a concern in the procurement of title insurance. [See Schelb v. Stein (2010) 190 CA4th 1440, 1445, 119 CR3d 267, 270—MRTA was enacted to make real property more freely alienable and marketable; Manhattan Loft, LLC v. Mercury Liquors, Inc. (2009) 173 CA4th 1040, 1055, 93 CR3d 457, 467 (same)]

a. [3:296] Expired deeds of trust: The lien of a deed of trust expires, and is not enforceable by a power of sale (¶ 6:514 ff.), 10 years after the final maturity date or last date set for payment or other performance if that date is "ascertainable from the recorded evidence of indebtedness." [Civ.C. § 882.020(a)(1) (emphasis added); Schelb v. Stein (2010) 190 CA4th 1440, 1446, 119 CR3d 267, 271]

When the final maturity date or last date fixed for payment or other performance is not ascertainable from the recorded evidence of indebtedness, the lien of a deed of trust expires 60 years after recordation of the deed. [Civ.C. § 882.020(a)(2)]

Expiration of the lien of a deed of trust pursuant to Civ.C. § 880.020 et seq. is equivalent in legal effect to a reconveyance, release or other discharge of the security interest (¶ 6:406 ff.). [Civ.C. § 882.030; see Schelb v. Stein, supra—expiration of deed of trust renders it unenforceable by any means and is equivalent for all purposes to a certification of satisfaction, reconveyance, release, etc.]

(1) [3:297] "Ascertainable from the recorded evidence of indebtedness": The 10-year rule applies only when the final maturity date or last date fixed for payment (or other performance) is "ascertainable from the recorded evidence of indebtedness" (Civ.C. § 882.020(a) (emphasis added))—meaning the recorded deed of trust itself or the underlying recorded promissory note, but not some other later-recorded document that is not "evidence of the indebtedness." Thus, the 60-year rule will apply if the final maturity date or last date set for payment (or other performance) is ascertainable only by reference to an unrecorded document (such as an unrecorded promissory note). [See Calif. Bill Analysis, AB 2624, Sen. 6/27/06; Miller v. Provost (1994) 26 CA4th 1703, 1709, 33 CR2d 288, 290-291; Nicolopulos v. Sup.Ct. (Bourgeois) (2003) 106 CA4th 304, 310-311, 130 CR2d 626, 630-631; Schmidli v. Pearce (2009) 178 CA4th 305, 316, 100 CR3d 343, 351—"recorded evidence of indebtedness" is synonymous with deed of trust]

(a) [3:297.1] 10-year rule not triggered by notice of default recorded after recorded evidence of indebtedness: According to the legislative history, Civ.C. § 882.020(a) purposefully uses the phrase "ascertainable from the recorded evidence of indebtedness" in place of the former "ascertainable from the record" to provide certainty as to the expiration date of the lien, preventing subsequent items from becoming part of the "record" that would alter the expiration date of the lien under the MRTA. This effectively codifies prior case law holding that once the beneficiary of a deed of trust becomes entitled to claim the 60-year rule (because the maturity date is not stated in the recorded deed of trust or other recorded evidence of the underlying obligation), the beneficiary does not lose that entitlement simply by filing a notice of default that specifies the final maturity date of the underlying debt (Ung v. Koehler (2005) 135 CA4th 186, 203-204, 37 CR3d 311, 322-324). [See Calif. Bill Analysis, AB 2624, Sen. 6/27/06; Schmidli v. Pearce (2009) 178 CA4th 305, 316, 100 CR3d 343, 351—by replacing "record" with "recorded evidence of indebtedness," Legislature sought to ensure that filing default notice would not trigger 10-year statute]

(b) [3:297.2] Comment: It seems apparent that, as amended eff. 1/1/07 to substitute the phrase "ascertainable from the recorded evidence of indebtedness," the statute effectively trumps prior case law concluding that any recorded document containing the due date of the note secured by the deed of trust will suffice to trigger the 10-year rule (i.e., Slintak v. Buckeye Retirement Co., L.L.C., Ltd. (2006) 139 CA4th 575, 585, 43 CR3d 131, 138 (interpreting former statute)). [See Schmidli v. Pearce (2009) 178 CA4th 305, 311, 315-316, 100 CR3d 343, 347, 350-351 (applying and interpreting former Civ.C. § 882.020, determining retroactivity of amended statute and declining to follow Slintak)—amended § 882.020 confirms a default notice is not part of record from which loan's maturity date can be ascertained]

(c) [3:297.3] Actual knowledge or notice: Actual notice or knowledge is not sufficient to trigger Civ.C. § 882.020(a)'s 10-year period. [Trenk v. Soheili (2020) 58 CA5th 1033, 1043-1044, 273 CR3d 184, 191-192—although trust beneficiary had "clear and actual notice" of maturity date based on "direct privity" and "familial relationship" with original party to underlying promissory note, 60-year period applied because note was not recorded]

(2) [3:298] Extension by recordation of "notice of preservation of interest": A secured party may preserve its otherwise expired security interest (preventing termination under the 10-year/60-year rules, ¶ 3:296 ff.) by recording a "notice of intent to preserve the interest" (deed of trust) before expiration of the interest under Civ.C. § 882.020(a)(1) or (2). [Civ.C. § 880.310]

A timely recorded Civ.C. § 880.310 notice extends the secured party's interest in the deed of trust for 10 years, running from the date of recordation. [Civ.C. § 882.020(a)(3); Slintak v. Buckeye Retirement Co., L.L.C., Ltd. (2006) 139 CA4th 575, 586, 43 CR3d 131, 138-139—§ 882.020(a)(3) extension is "one-time only provision" (emphasis added)]

(3) [3:298.1] Extension by filing lis pendens: Similarly, the secured party's interest is extended if an "action" to enforce, establish or clear title is commenced and a lis pendens (¶ 11:600 ff.) recorded within the Civ.C. § 882.020(a) period. [Civ.C. § 880.260; Manhattan Loft, LLC v. Mercury Liquors, Inc. (2009) 173 CA4th 1040, 1055, 93 CR3d 457, 467 (citing text)]

Although Civ.C. § 880.260 is silent about how long the extension lasts, it has been "harmonized" by case law with the Civ.C. § 882.020(a)(3) extension provision (¶ 3:298): i.e., under Civ.C. § 880.260, the commencement of a title action and recording of a lis pendens extends the secured party's interest for 10 years. [Slintak v. Buckeye Retirement Co., L.L.C., Ltd. (2006) 139 CA4th 575, 586, 43 CR3d 131, 138-139; Manhattan Loft, LLC v. Mercury Liquors, Inc., supra, 173 CA4th at 1055, 93 CR3d at 467-468]

However, the "action" triggering a Civ.C. § 880.260 extension must be the commencement of suit in a court of law; an arbitration proceeding will not suffice because it will not support the recording of a lis pendens. [Manhattan Loft, LLC v. Mercury Liquors, Inc., supra, 173 CA4th at 1055-1056, 93 CR3d at 468—general CCP statutes governing lis pendens override § 880.260 to extent it states "action" includes arbitration proceeding]

(4) [3:298.5] Equitable defenses to application of 10-year/60-year rules: The MRTA expressly does not limit the application of waiver, estoppel, laches and other equitable principles; in an appropriate case, therefore, various equitable defenses may preclude reliance on the 10-year or 60-year rules. [Civ.C. § 880.030; Nicolopulos v. Sup.Ct. (Bourgeois) (2003) 106 CA4th 304, 311-312, 130 CR2d 626, 631-632—party urging trust deed lien had expired (even though applicable 60-year limit was still running) failed to prove basis for estoppel or laches defense to reliance on 60-year rule]

(5) [3:299] Compare—*extinguished lien of deed of trust: The lien of a deed of trust may be extinguished when the statute of limitations under which a judicial action may be brought to enforce the principal obligation secured by the deed has run. [Civ.C. § 2911; Robin v. Crowell (2020) 55 CA5th 727, 744, 270 CR3d 25, 36]

(a) [3:299.1] Impact on foreclosure rights: Extinguishment of the lien precludes enforcement of the lien, but does not necessarily bar enforcement of the entire instrument creating the lien. [Ung v. Koehler (2005) 135 CA4th 186, 196, 37 CR3d 311, 317]

Thus, while expiration of the applicable statute of limitations may extinguish the lien of a deed of trust and bar a judicial foreclosure action, Civ.C. § 2911 does not extinguish a power of sale conferred on the trustee by the deed of trust—i.e., a nonjudicial foreclosure under the power of sale may still proceed (¶ 6:415 ff.). [Nicolopulos v. Sup.Ct. (Bourgeois) (2003) 106 CA4th 304, 309, 130 CR2d 626, 630; see also Robin v. Crowell (2020) 55 CA5th 727, 750, 270 CR3d 25, 40-41—Civ.C. § 2911 does not limit trustee's time to exercise power of sale]

This fact distinguishes Civ.C. § 2911 extinguishment of the lien from Civ.C. § 882.020 expiration of the lien (the latter bars enforcement by power of sale, ¶ 3:296). [Nicolopulos v. Sup.Ct. (Bourgeois), supra, 106 CA4th at 309-310, 130 CR2d at 630]

Thus, until the trust deed lien expires under Civ.C. § 882.020 (¶ 3:296 ff.), the possibility of a nonjudicial foreclosure constitutes a cloud on title and will be a concern in obtaining title insurance.

(b) [3:299.2] Effect of completed judicial foreclosure action: The power of sale in a deed of trust does not survive a judicial foreclosure sale. After property is sold in connection with a judicial foreclosure action, the trustee no longer holds any title to convey to a subsequent buyer. Thus, a senior lienholder cannot rely on Civ.C. § 882.020 to conduct a subsequent trustee's sale to nonjudicially foreclose against a junior lienholder once Civ.C. § 2911's statute of limitations has expired. [See Robin v. Crowell (2020) 55 CA5th 727, 750-754, 270 CR3d 25, 41-44—senior lienholders who initiated judicial foreclosure under deed of trust and purchased property at resulting sale were time-barred from bringing subsequent quiet title action against junior lienholder who was omitted from prior foreclosure action]

[3:299.3 - 3:299.4] Reserved.

(6) [3:299.5] Compare—enforceability of Family Code judgment after expiration of security interest: Enforceability of a Family Code judgment secured by real property is not affected by expiration of the security interest under Civ.C. § 882.020(a): "MRTA expressly is confined to security interests in real property. Nothing in its language addresses the enforceability of the underlying obligation secured by the deed of trust or note on real property." [See Schelb v. Stein (2010) 190 CA4th 1440, 1447-1448, 119 CR3d 267, 272-273—Family Code judgments remain enforceable until paid in full or otherwise satisfied per Fam.C. § 291]

Quite the contrary, a Family Code judgment secured by real property remains fully enforceable even after the security interest has expired: "[W]e conclude that [Fam.C.] section 291 does not bar the expiration of an instrument securing a family law judgment. We also conclude that the underlying family law judgment [is] not rendered unenforceable by the terms of MRTA." [Schelb v. Stein, supra, 190 CA4th at 1449, 119 CR3d at 273—family law judgment awarding W equalizing payment in form of note/trust deed against H's real property remained enforceable under § 291 notwithstanding expiration of note/trust deed under MRTA]

Cross-refer: The enforcement of family law judgments and orders is discussed in detail in Hogoboom & King, Cal. Prac. Guide: Family Law (TRG), Ch. 18.

b. [3:300] Unexercised options: A recorded option to purchase real property expires of record six months after its expiration date, provided that date is ascertainable from the recorded instrument, or if no expiration date is set forth or ascertainable from the recorded instrument, then six months following the date the instrument was recorded, unless another instrument extending the option is recorded before such expiration. [Civ.C. § 884.010; see also Civ.C. § 884.020—recorded option ceases to operate as constructive notice once it expires of record]

Cross-refer: Options are treated in depth in Ch. 8.

[3:300.1 - 3:300.4] Reserved.

c. [3:300.5] Powers of termination: A condition subsequent to fee simple title in the form of a power of termination (right of reentry, possibility of reverter or any other reversionary interest held by the grantor, see Civ.C. §§ 885.010, 885.020, and ¶ 4:92.1) may expire by the passage of time or because it has become obsolete, as explained at ¶ 3:300.6 ff. [Civ.C. §§ 885.030, 885.040]

Expiration of a power of termination makes the power unenforceable and effectively quitclaims the power to the fee simple owner. It also terminates and renders unenforceable (by damages, injunctive relief or any other means) the restriction to which the fee simple estate was subject. [See Civ.C. § 885.060; Severns v. Union Pac. R.R. Co. (2002) 101 CA4th 1209, 1220-1221, 125 CR2d 100, 109 & fn. 7—grantor's successors in interest barred from reclaiming property under deed's reversionary clause that had expired pursuant to Civ.C. § 885.030 (¶ 3:300.6)]

(1) [3:300.6] Recorded powers: A power of termination of record expires at the later of (i) 30 years after recordation of the instrument evidencing the power of termination, or (ii) 30 years after recordation of the last notice of intent to preserve the power of termination, or (iii) 30 years after recordation of an instrument evidencing the power of termination or of a notice of intent to preserve the power, if the instrument or notice is recorded within 30 years after the date either was last recorded. [Civ.C. § 885.030; Severns v. Union Pac. R.R. Co. (2002) 101 CA4th 1209, 1220, 125 CR2d 100, 108-109—1901 recorded power of termination (condition subsequent to fee title providing for return of fee to grantors/assigns if grantee railroad ceased for 6 months to use property as right of way) expired by operation of law, vesting fee simple absolute in grantee/successors in interest, because notice of intent to preserve future interest never recorded]

(2) [3:300.7] Obsolete powers: A power of termination also expires if it has become "obsolete." It is obsolete if either (i) the restriction to which the fee simple is subject is of "no actual and substantial benefit" to the holder of the power, or (ii) enforcement of the power would not effectuate the purpose of the restriction to which the fee simple is subject, or (iii) enforcement of the power would be "otherwise inequitable" because of changed conditions or circumstances. [See Civ.C. § 885.040]

d. [3:301] Unperformed sale contracts: A recorded contract for the sale of real property terminates at the later of:

- Five years after the conveyance date specified in the contract or, if no specified conveyance date, five years after the last date specified in the contract for satisfaction of the conditions set forth therein; or

- If there is a recorded extension of the contract (within the periods noted above), five years after the date for conveyance provided in the extension or, if no specified conveyance date, five years after the last date provided in the extension for satisfaction of the conditions set forth in the contract. [Civ.C. § 886.030(a)]

These time periods may be waived or extended, but only by an instrument recorded before expiration of the prescribed times. [Civ.C. § 886.030(b)] e. [3:302] Abandoned easements: Record title is cleared of an "abandoned easement" by court order pursuant to Civ.C. § 887.010 et seq.

(1) [3:303] Prerequisites: All of the following conditions must be satisfied for a period of 20 years immediately preceding commencement of the action to establish such abandonment:

- The easement is not used at any time;

- No separate property tax assessment is made of the easement or, if made, no taxes have been paid on the easement; and

- No instrument creating, reserving, transferring or otherwise evidencing the easement is recorded. [See Civ.C. §§ 887.040, 887.050]

(2) [3:304] Exception—recordation of "notice of preservation of interest": An easement is not abandoned if the owner either:

- Records a notice of intent to preserve the easement within 20 years preceding commencement of the action to establish the abandonment; or

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

• After commencement of the action to establish the abandonment and before judgment in the action is entered, records a "late" notice of intent to preserve the easement upon payment into court of the property owner's litigation expenses attributable to the abandonment action; the late notice of intent effectively extinguishes the statutory abandonment cause of action. [Civ.C. §§ 887.060, 887.070]

1. Prerequisite Notifications to Insurer

a. [3:310] Two-stage notices: To trigger title policy liability for a covered loss or damage, the insured is obligated, by the terms of the policy, to give the insurer two separate notices:

(1) [3:311] "Prompt" notice of claim: First, the insured must "promptly" notify the insurer in writing upon learning of any litigation or other matter that may cause loss or damage covered by the policy or cause the insured's interest in the property to become unmarketable. [See CLTA Standard Coverage Policies (Forms 3:B.1 & 3:B.2); and ALTA Policies (Forms 3:C & 3:D)]

(2) [3:312] Proof of loss or damage: Additionally, the insurer may, at its option, require as a condition of payment that the insured submit to the insurer a signed proof of loss. The proof of loss must describe the defect, lien, encumbrance, adverse claim, or other matter insured against that constitutes the basis of the loss or damage; and, to the extent possible, must state the basis of calculating the amount of the loss or damage. [See CLTA Standard Coverage Policies (Forms 3:B.1 & 3:B.2); and ALTA Policies (Forms 3:C & 3:D)]

b. [3:313] Delay risks reducing insurer's liability: If the insurer is prejudiced by the failure of the insured to provide prompt notice (¶ 3:311), the insurer's liability to the insured under the policy is reduced to the extent of the prejudice. [See CLTA Standard Coverage Policies (Forms 3:B.1 & 3:B.2); and ALTA Policies (Forms 3:C & 3:D); and ¶ 3:364]

(1) [3:314] Only if delayed notice prejudicial: The policy liability continues notwithstanding delayed notice of claim unless the insurer was prejudiced by the delay. Prejudice is not presumed from the insured's breach of a notice provision; rather the insurer has the burden of proving actual prejudice resulted. [Moe v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co. (1971) 21 CA3d 289, 302, 98 CR 547, 555]

c. [3:315] Liberal construction in favor of insured: In most cases, an insured may not seek a policy recovery against the insurer for failure to perform its duties under the policy unless and until the insured has submitted its statement of proof of loss or otherwise complied with the notice requirements. [Paulfrey v. Blue Chip Stamps (1983) 150 CA3d 187, 199-200, 197 CR 501, 508—"In no event could an insured fail to keep his/her part of the bargain in the first instance [filing a claim and proof of loss], and thereafter seek recovery for breach of a duty to pay"]

However, title policies, like all insurance contracts, are construed, to the extent reasonable, to give insureds the benefit of their bargain (see ¶ 3:19 ff.). Accordingly, notice provisions are liberally interpreted in favor of the insured—i.e., strict adherence to a notice provision is not required unless the insurer is substantially prejudiced by the insured's noncompliance (and "substantial" prejudice is likely to be difficult to prove). [See Lagomarsino v. San Jose Abstract & Title Ins. Co. (1960) 178 CA2d 455, 458-461, 3 CR 80, 82-83]

d. [3:316] Exception—denial of coverage: The insured's contractual duty to notify the insurer ceases if and when the insurer denies coverage. In that event, noncompliance with a notice provision is no bar to recovery under the policy. [Samson v. Transamerica Ins. Co. (1981) 30 C3d 220, 238, 178 CR 343, 354]

2. [3:317] Insurer's Obligations and Rights: Generally, an insurer under a title insurance policy has a duty to indemnify and defend the insured and pay authorized attorney fees and costs incurred by the insured. In turn, it also has certain concomitant rights under the policy.

Cross-refer: The sections at ¶ 3:318 ff. summarize the title insurer's basic rights and duties under a policy of title insurance. For a comprehensive treatment of insurer contractual rights and obligations under any liability policy (title insurance included), see Croskey, Heeseman, Ehrlich & Klee, Cal. Prac. Guide: Insurance Litigation (TRG).

a. [3:318] Duty to indemnify: A title policy insurer is bound to indemnify the insured for the insured's actual loss (up to policy limits) suffered as a result of matters covered by the policy. This duty is exclusive of the insurer's obligation to defend the insured and pay authorized attorney fees and costs. [See CLTA Standard Coverage Policies (Forms 3:B.1 & 3:B.2); and

ALTA Policies (Forms 3:C & 3:D); First American Title Ins. Co. v. XWarehouse Lending Corp. (2009) 177 CA4th 106, 113, 98 CR3d 801, 807—in California, title insurance is indemnity contract under which insurer is obligated to indemnify insured against losses sustained from occurrence of specific contingency]

(1) [3:319] Loss or damage prerequisite: The occurrence of a contingency under the policy does not itself trigger the duty to indemnify. The insurer is liable to the insured only if the "contingency" results in a loss or damage. [See CLTA Standard Coverage Policies (Forms 3:B.1 & 3:B.2); ALTA Policies (Forms 3:C & 3:D); Lawrence v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (1987) 192 CA3d 70, 75, 237 CR 264, 266-267]

Example: Insured lender discovers the existence of a deed of trust which is prior to the lien of its deed of trust. That alone does not trigger title policy liability to Insured. There is no "loss" or "damage" to be indemnified under the policy if Insured is repaid the entire amount of its loan (including its costs). (See ¶ 3:373 ff.)

b. [3:320] Duty to defend: An insurer also has a duty to provide a defense, at the insurer's cost and without unreasonable delay, upon the insured's written request in connection with any lawsuit initiated by a third person asserting a claim covered under the policy. [See CLTA Standard Coverage Policies (Forms 3:B.1 & 3:B.2) and ALTA Policies (Forms 3:C & 3:D)]

(1) [3:321] Triggered by notice of claim: The duty to defend arises as soon as the insurer receives notice of a claim or interest insured under the policy. At that point, the insurer must decide whether to provide a defense (ascertain whether claim is covered or not covered) even though the indemnification obligation often is not determined until the claim is resolved. [CNA Cas. of Calif. v. Seaboard Sur. Co. (1986) 176 CA3d 598, 605-606, 222 CR 276, 279; see also Liberty Nat'l Enterprises, L.P. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (2013) 217 CA4th 62, 76, 157 CR3d 664, 675—insurer's duty to defend arises when it becomes aware of, or third party suit pleads, facts giving rise to potential coverage under insuring agreement (¶ 3:323)]

(a) [3:322] Notwithstanding both covered and noncovered claims: The scope of a title insurer's duty to defend turns on the policy language (i.e., the duty is limited to "only those stated causes of action alleging matters insured against by [the] policy"; see CLTA Standard Coverage Policies (Forms 3:B.1 & 3:B.2) and ALTA Policies (Forms 3:C & 3:D); Manneck v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. (1994) 28 CA4th 1294, 1301, 33 CR2d 771, 775-776).

Nonetheless, an insurer's duty to defend applies even to noncovered claims so long as any one of the claims against the insured is potentially covered by the policy (¶ 3:323). [Gray v. Zurich Ins. Co. (1966) 65 C2d 263, 275-276, 54 CR 104, 112; see also Liberty Nat'l Enterprises, L.P. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (2013) 217 CA4th 62, 76, 157 CR3d 664, 675; Rosen v. Nations Title Ins. Co. (1997) 56 CA4th 1489, 1497, 66 CR2d 714, 718]

(b) [3:322.1] Broader than duty to indemnify: An insurer's duty to defend is broader than its duty to indemnify … because the duty to defend grows out of the insured's reasonable expectations pursuant to the policy. The duty to defend must therefore be determined before resolution of the insurer's duty to indemnify. [Jarchow v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co. (1975) 48 CA3d 917, 943-944, 122 CR 470, 488-489 (overruled on other grounds by Soto v. Royal Globe Ins. Corp. (1986) 184 CA3d 420, 434, 229 CR 192, 200)]

Whether the claim is valid is irrelevant. The purpose of title insurance is to protect the insured's title against all undisclosed claims covered by the policy. [Jarchow v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co., supra]

(c) [3:323] Triggered by potential liability: The insurer's duty to defend arises when it becomes aware of facts giving rise to potential liability under the policy. Thus, the insured is entitled to a defense at insurer expense so long as the facts —either as expressed or implied in the third party complaint (lawsuit against the insured) or as learned from other sources —give rise to a potentially covered claim. [Waller v. Truck Ins. Exchange, Inc. (1995) 11 C4th 1, 19, 44 CR2d 370, 378; Rosen v. Nations Title Ins. Co. (1997) 56 CA4th 1489, 1496, 66 CR2d 714, 718; see also Liberty Nat'l Enterprises, L.P. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (2013) 217 CA4th 62, 76, 157 CR3d 664, 675—determination whether insurer has duty to defend "usually is made in first instance" by comparing complaint's allegations with policy terms]

1) [3:323.1] Compare—no potential coverage under policy terms: By the same token, the insurer's duty to defend is not absolute. It is measured by the nature and kinds of risks covered by the insurance policy (¶ 3:322). [Waller v. Truck Ins. Exchange, Inc. (1995) 11 C4th 1, 19, 44 CR2d 370, 379]

When the claim is unambiguously outside the scope of policy coverage (i.e., there is no potential coverage), the insurer has no duty to defend. [Liberty Nat'l Enterprises, L.P. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (2013) 217 CA4th 62, 80-81, 157 CR3d 664, 678-679]

• [3:323.2] There was no potential coverage, and thus no duty to defend an insured owner, where the insured's alleged tortious conduct in acquiring title did not involve title defects and therefore did not fall within the policy's insuring clause. [Liberty Nat'l Enterprises, L.P. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (2013) 217 CA4th 62, 80-81, 157 CR3d 664, 678-679]

• [3:323.3] There was no potential coverage, and thus no duty to defend an insured lender, in an action filed by foreclosure sale purchasers who did not learn about a preexisting title defect until after they bought the subject property without warranty. Moreover, their only potential claim against the lender was for misrepresentations for which there was no liability under the policy. [Hovannisian v. First American Title Ins. Co. (2017) 14 CA5th 420, 436, 221 CR3d 883, 897]

• [3:323.4] There was no potential coverage, and thus no duty to defend an insured lender, where the alleged title defect occurred after escrow closed and the policy only covered defects in existence as of the closing. [Rosen v. Nations Title Ins. Co. (1997) 56 CA4th 1489, 1497-1498, 66 CR2d 714, 718-719]

• [3:323.5] There was no potential coverage, and thus no duty to defend an insured owner, where the claim did not concern title to any land described in the policy or a denial of access to covered land. [Havstad v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1997) 58 CA4th 654, 661-662, 68 CR2d 487, 491]

(2) [3:324] Insurer's right to select defense counsel: The insurer has the right to select counsel of its choice to represent the insured on covered claims (subject to the insured's right to object for "reasonable cause"). [See CLTA Standard Coverage Policies (Forms 3:B,1 & 3:B.2); and ALTA Policies (Forms 3:C & 3:D)]

(a) [3:325] Same counsel for multiple insureds: The insurer may provide one attorney to represent two insureds (i.e., both an insured lender and insured owner under a policy) unless the insureds' interests conflict. In the latter case, separate counsel for each insured must be furnished. [Spindle v. Chubb/Pacific Indem. Group (1979) 89 CA3d 706, 713, 152 CR 776, 780]

(b) [3:326] Same counsel for insured and insurer: Likewise, the insurer may select the same counsel to represent both insurer and insured in a third party suit—unless insurer and insured have conflicting interests. In the event of conflicting interests (as where the insurer undertakes the defense with a reservation of rights; ¶ 3:327), the insurer generally must retain separate counsel to represent the insured. [See Civ.C. § 2860 (defining independent counsel requirement)]

Cross-refer: For a comprehensive discussion of the independent counsel requirement (commonly referred to as the "Cumis counsel" obligation), see Croskey, Heeseman, Ehrlich & Klee, Cal. Prac. Guide: Insurance Litigation (TRG), Ch. 7B.

(c) [3:326.1] Tripartite attorney-client relationship: When the insurer retains counsel to defend its insured, a tripartite attorney-client relationship arises among the insurer, insured and counsel. As a result, confidential communications between either the insurer or the insured and counsel are protected by the attorney-client privilege, and both the insurer and insured are holders of the privilege. In addition, counsel's work product does not lose its protection when it is transmitted to the insurer. [Bank of America, N.A. v. Sup.Ct. (Pacific City Bank) (2013) 212 CA4th 1076, 1083, 151 CR3d 526, 531]

(3) [3:327] Defense with reservation of rights: The insurer breaches its duty to the insured, and may incur extracontractual ("bad faith") liability, if it refuses to defend a covered third party claim. Thus, in doubtful cases (where coverage questions and hence the duty to defend are unclear), the insured may choose to defend the third party claim on a "reservation of rights" basis—in effect, furnishing a defense with the proviso that the insurer does not thereby concede policy liability or waive the right to assert coverage defenses (nonliability) against the insured at a later date.

A defense with a reservation of rights does not bind the insurer to a judgment against the insured and may entitle the insurer to recover the cost of the defense if it is ultimately determined the insurer did not have a duty to defend. [Val's Painting & Drywall, Inc. v. Allstate Ins. Co. (1975) 53 CA3d 576, 585-586, 126 CR 267, 272]

(a) [3:328] Compare—coverage defenses waivable by defense without reservation of rights: Coverage defenses known to the insurer are waived when it defends an action against its insured without a reservation of rights. [See Miller v. Elite Ins. Co. (1980) 100 CA3d 739, 755, 161 CR 322, 330; compare Dollinger DeAnza Assocs. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (2011) 199 CA4th 1132, 1153-1154, 131 CR3d 596, 611-612—waiver principle inapplicable to title insurer that initially accepted first-party claim without reservation of rights but then denied coverage (title insurer provided only first-party, not liability, coverage; waiver could not be invoked to create coverage where none existed and for which no exception applied)]

(b) [3:329] Procedure—nonwaiver agreement or unilateral notice to insured: An effective reservation of rights defense may be interposed pursuant to either a "nonwaiver agreement" with the insured (i.e., a reservation of rights expressly agreed to by insurer and insured) or a unilateral notice to the insured (i.e., reservation of rights by insurer's notice to insured without insured's consent). [Val's Painting & Drywall, Inc. v. Allstate Ins. Co. (1975) 53 CA3d 576, 586, 126 CR 267, 272-273]

1) [3:330] Unilateral reservation of rights over insured's objection: Arguably, an insurer's unilateral reservation of rights should be ineffective if the insured objects—i.e., the insurer must elect either to assume the defense unconditionally (thereby waiving coverage defenses) or refuse to defend (thereby risking breach of its duty to defend and potential "bad faith" liability). [Val's Painting & Drywall, Inc. v. Allstate Ins. Co. (1975) 53 CA3d 576, 586, 126 CR 267, 273]

However, there is authority to the contrary: Coverage defenses are not waived even when the insured objects to being defended on a reservation of rights basis, absent grounds of estoppel (insured's detrimental reliance on insurer's conduct reasonably leading insured to believe insurer was relinquishing its rights). [Val's Painting & Drywall, Inc. v. Allstate Ins. Co., supra, 53 CA3d at 587, 126 CR at 273; see also Walbrook Ins. Co. Ltd. v. Goshgarian & Goshgarian (CD CA 1989) 726 F.Supp. 777, 783]

2) [3:331] Compare—settlement without insured's consent: Notwithstanding the foregoing, if an insurer who defends a third party action under a reservation of rights settles the action without the insured's consent, the insurer will not be reimbursed for the amount of the settlement. [Val's Painting & Drywall, Inc. v. Allstate Ins. Co. (1975) 53 CA3d 576, 588, 126 CR 267, 274]

[3:331.1 - 3:331.4] Reserved.

(4) [3:331.5] Prosecution of actions distinguished: In addition to its duty to provide a defense upon request (¶ 3:320), an insurer has the right to institute and prosecute any action or proceeding necessary or desirable to establish title or the lien of the insured deed of trust, or otherwise to prevent or reduce loss or damage to an insured. [See CLTA Standard Coverage Policies (Forms 3:B.1 and 3:B.2); ALTA Loan Policies (Forms 3:C & 3:D); Bank of America, N.A. v. Sup.Ct. (Pacific City Bank) (2013) 212 CA4th 1076, 1093-1094, 151 CR3d 526, 539—title insurer may, among other things, undertake quiet title, declaratory relief or probate action to eliminate defects or perfect insured's title]

(a) [3:331.6] Tripartite attorney-client relationship: The same tripartite attorney-client relationship that arises when an insurer retains counsel to defend its insured (¶ 3:326.1) results when the insurer retains counsel to prosecute an action on behalf of the insured. Indeed, "[w]hether a title insurer is defending an action or prosecuting one, the object of protecting the integrity of the insured's title is the same." [Bank of America, N.A. v. Sup.Ct. (Pacific City Bank) (2013) 212 CA4th 1076, 1095-1096, 151 CR3d 526, 540-541 (noting standard title policies include insurer's "right" to initiate litigation to protect insured's title)]

c. [3:332] Duty of good faith and fair dealing: A covenant of good faith and fair dealing is implied in every contract, including insurance (and title insurance) policies. The implied covenant obligates the insurer (as well as the insured, ¶ 3:354) not to do anything that will interfere with the rights of the other party to the contract to receive the benefits of the agreement. [Gruenberg v. Aetna Ins. Co. (1973) 9 C3d 566, 574, 108 CR 480, 484]

Thus, incident to the implied covenant, all insurers are obligated to promptly investigate, prosecute, defend, settle and/or pay claims under the policy; failure to do so (without "proper cause") risks both breach of contract and extracontractual (tort) damages to the insured. [Archdale v. American Int'l Specialty Lines Ins. Co. (2007) 154 CA4th 449, 467, 64 CR3d 632, 657, fn. 19; see also Dollinger DeAnza Assocs. v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (2011) 199 CA4th 1132, 1155-1156, 131 CR3d 596, 613—claim for breach of implied covenant not maintainable unless benefits are in fact due under policy (insured's cause of action lacked merit as "matter of law" where title policy provided no coverage for claims based on city's notice of merger]

Cross-refer: For a detailed discussion of the insurer's "bad faith" liability, see Croskey, Heeseman, Ehrlich & Klee, Cal. Prac. Guide: Insurance Litigation (TRG), Chs. 12C & 13.

[3:333 - 3:334] Reserved.

d. [3:335] Right to correct defects, liens, encumbrances, etc., by lawsuit or otherwise: A title insurer may, at its own cost, initiate any action or proceeding, or "do any other act" to "establish" the insured's interest in the subject property or prevent loss or damage to the insured. In other words, instead of paying the insured under the policy, the insurer may seek to rectify or remove defects, liens, encumbrances, etc., affecting the insured's interest in the property. [See CLTA Standard Coverage Policies (Forms 3:B.1 & 3:B.2); and ALTA Policies (Forms 3:C & 3:D)]

Any action or proceeding commenced by the insurer under the policy may, at the insurer's option, be brought in the name of the insurer or insured. [See CLTA Standard Coverage Policies (Forms 3:B.1 & 3:B.2); and ALTA Policies (Forms 3:C & 3:D)]

(1) [3:336] Impact on duty to indemnify: If successful in its effort to cure the covered defect, lien or encumbrance, etc., the insurer generally will not be liable to indemnify its insured with respect to the matter. (This is a natural consequence of the policy terms, since there should no longer be any "loss" or "damage" suffered by the insured; see ¶ 3:319.)

However, the result may be otherwise if the insurer takes an unreasonable amount of time in attempting to correct the defect, lien or encumbrance, etc. In that event, the insurer may be liable to the insured for actual damages sustained by the insured during the period in which the insured litigated or pursued a settlement with respect to the particular matter. [Nebo, Inc. v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co. (1971) 21 CA3d 222, 228-229, 98 CR 237, 241; see also CLTA Standard Coverage Policies (Forms 3:B.1 & 3:B.2), and ALTA Policies (Forms 3:C & 3:D)—"If the Company exercises its rights under Condition 5.b., it must do so diligently" (emphasis added)]

(2) [3:337] Insurer rights reserved: By exercising its right to initiate an action or proceeding under the policy, the insurer does not thereby admit liability or waive any policy provision. [See CLTA Standard Coverage Policies (Forms 3:B.1 & 3:B.2); and ALTA Policies (Forms 3:C & 3:D)]

e. Right to pay or settle claim

(1) [3:338] Payment of claim: Instead of indemnifying and/or defending its insured on a covered claim, the insurer has the option of paying the claim as follows:

• Under an owner's policy, it may pay the insured owner the amount of the policy liability (plus authorized costs and attorney fees incurred by the insured); and

• Under a lender's policy, it also may "purchase the indebtedness" by paying the insured lender the outstanding loan amount (plus authorized costs and attorney fees incurred by the insured). [See CLTA Standard Coverage Policies (Forms 3:B.1 & 3:B.2); and ALTA Policies (Forms 3:C & 3:D)]

(a) [3:339] Terminates policy liability: The insurer's payment of the full amount of the policy limit terminates its obligations and liability under the policy—including any obligation to defend, prosecute or continue litigation in connection with the claim. [See CLTA Standard Coverage Policies (Forms 3:B.1 & 3:B.2); and ALTA Policies (Forms 3:C & 3:D)]

(2) [3:340] Settlement of claim: Alternatively, in the event of a claim under the policy, the insurer may elect to settle with the insured claimant or with third party claimants on the insured's behalf. [See CLTA Standard Coverage Policies (Form 3:B.1 & 3:B.2); and ALTA Policies (Forms 3:C & 3:D)]

(In certain circumstances, an insurer has an affirmative duty to settle third party claims. See detailed discussion in Croskey, Heeseman, Ehrlich & Klee, Cal. Prac. Guide: Insurance Litigation (TRG), Ch. 12B.)

(a) [3:341] Terminates policy liability: A settlement with the insured or a third party claimant terminates the insurer's liability under the policy with respect to the settled matter. [See CLTA Standard Coverage Policies (Forms 3:B.1 & 3:B.2); and ALTA Policies (Forms 3:C & 3:D)]

(3) [3:342] Subrogation rights: Upon paying and settling an insured's claim, the insurer is subrogated and entitled to the rights of the insured. [See CLTA Standard Coverage Policies (Forms 3:B.1 & 3:B.2); ALTA Policies (Forms 3:C & 3:D)]

[3:343 - 3:349] Reserved.

3. Insured's Obligations

a. [3:350] Reasonable assistance: An insured is bound by the policy to provide all reasonable assistance requested by its insurer (at insurer expense) in the prosecution or defense of proceedings and actions permitted or required under the policy. [See CLTA Standard Coverage Policies (Forms 3:B.1 & 3:B.2); and ALTA Policies (Forms 3:C & 3:D)]

(1) [3:351] Noncooperation risks termination of liability: To the extent the insurer is prejudiced by the insured's failure to cooperate, the insurer's liability under the policy terminates. [See CLTA Standard Coverage Policies (Forms 3:B.1 & 3:B.2); and ALTA Policies (Forms 3:C & 3:D)]

However, as with termination of liability on account of failure to give requisite notice or proof of loss (¶ 3:314), the insurer has the burden of proving it suffered actual prejudice by reason of the insured's noncooperation. [Clemmer v. Hartford Ins. Co. (1978) 22 C3d 865, 881-883, 151 CR 285, 293-295 (overruled on other grounds by Ryan v. Rosenfeld (2017) 3 C5th 124, 134-135, 218 CR3d 654, 662)]

(2) [3:352] Exception—denial of coverage: The insured's duty to assist and cooperate terminates upon the insurer's denial of coverage. [Samson v. Transamerica Ins. Co. (1981) 30 C3d 220, 238, 178 CR 343, 354]

b. [3:353] Examination under oath; production of records: An insured who makes a policy claim may be required to submit to an examination under oath by an authorized representative of the insurer and to produce all records, in whatever medium maintained, including books, ledgers, checks, memoranda, correspondence, reports, e-mails, disks, tapes and videos reasonably related to the claim. The insured also is bound, upon insurer request, to grant its insurer written permission to examine, inspect and copy all the foregoing documentation in a third party's custody or control that reasonably relates to the claim. Noncompliance with these obligations terminates the insurer's liability under the policy as to the particular claim. [CLTA Standard Coverage Policies (Forms 3:B.1 & 3:B.2); see also ALTA Policies (Forms 3:C & 3:D)]

c. [3:354] Duty of good faith and fair dealing: The insurance contract contains a mutual implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, binding the insured as well as the insurer (¶ 3:332). Pursuant thereto, the insured owes a duty to reasonably cooperate with the insurer (and vice-versa) in furnishing known information pertinent to a claim under the policy. [Samson v. Transamerica Ins. Co. (1981) 30 C3d 220, 240, 178 CR 343, 355-356]

Cross-refer: The insured's duty of good faith and fair dealing and consequences of its breaching the implied covenant are discussed in detail in Croskey, Heeseman, Ehrlich & Klee, Cal. Prac. Guide: Insurance Litigation (TRG), Ch. 12A.

[3:355 - 3:359] Reserved.

4. [3:360] Two-Year Statute of Limitations: An action against an insurer "founded upon" a title insurance policy must be commenced within two years following accrual of the cause of action. [CCP § 339(1)—referring to "action founded upon a contract, obligation or liability, evidenced by a certificate, or abstract or guaranty of title of real property, or by a policy of title insurance"; Smeaton v. Fidelity Nat'l Title (1999) 72 CA4th 1000, 1003, 85 CR2d 591, 592; 65 Butterfield v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (1999) 70 CA4th 1047, 1053, 83 CR2d 40, 43-44]

a. [3:361] "Accrual" of cause of action—"discovery" rule: The insured's cause of action under a title policy "shall not be deemed to have accrued until the discovery of the loss or damage …" [CCP § 339(1) (emphasis added)]

Thus, the insured must file suit within two years of discovering "the potential loss which may be incurred if the title is not as represented in the policy." [65 Butterfield v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (1999) 70 CA4th 1047, 1061, 83 CR2d 40, 49 (emphasis in original; internal quotes omitted); Tabachnick v. Ticor Title Ins. Co. (1994) 24 CA4th 70, 77, 29 CR2d 59, 63]

(1) [3:362] Limitation—issuance of policy as minimum prerequisite: Most "discoveries" of loss or damage under a title policy occur after issuance of the policy. In the unusual case where the insured becomes aware of the facts giving rise to the claim before the policy issues (e.g., because of the insurer's delay in typing or delivering the policy), the earlier date of discovery will not start the two-year statute running. At the very least, a policy of title insurance must have issued before a claim under the policy can accrue. [Smeaton v. Fidelity Nat'l Title (1999) 72 CA4th 1000, 1003-1004, 85 CR2d 591, 593—since CCP § 339(1) "itself requires an obligation evidenced by a title insurance policy, the policy is a prerequisite to an enforcement action"]

(2) [3:362.1] Actual vs. constructive discovery: Where accrual of a cause of action is dependent on "discovery," the statute of limitations normally begins to run when a plaintiff learns, o*r should have learned*, the facts essential to the plaintiff's claim (i.e., "constructive discovery"). [See 65 Butterfield v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (1999) 70 CA4th 1047, 1053, 83 CR2d 40, 44, fn. 1]

However, CCP § 339(1) has been construed to require actual discovery: The two-year statute of limitations commences on the date the insured actually discovers the potential loss, not "the date when discovery would have been possible." [Contini v. Western Title Ins. Co. (1974) 40 CA3d 536, 543, 115 CR 257, 261 (emphasis added; internal quotes omitted); Lee v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (2010) 188 CA4th 583, 600, 115 CR3d 748, 761 (same); but see also 65 Butterfield v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., supra, 70 CA4th at 1053, 83 CR2d at 44, fn. 1 (declining to resolve whether "actual discovery" rule may have been abrogated by later authority on statutes of limitations generally)]

(3) [3:362.2] Awareness that facts give rise to covered claim? Generally, discovery of the facts, not their legal significance, starts the clock running. Consequently, a cause of action accrues when the insured discovers the essential facts—even if the insured is not then aware those facts give rise to a claim covered by the policy. [Jolly v. Eli Lilly & Co. (1988) 44 C3d 1103, 1113, 245 CR 658, 663; Abari v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. (1988) 205 CA3d 530, 535, 252 CR 565, 567—belated discovery that insured's homeowner's policy might afford coverage "is without import"]

In the context of title insurance, however, the insured arguably needs to discover more than the underlying facts. Rather, in order to determine whether the title is "as represented," the insured may need to understand the extent of the policy's coverage, including its exceptions and exclusions. [65 Butterfield v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (1999) 70 CA4th 1047, 1055, 83 CR2d 40, 45 (noting no known authority holding title insurance claims to this "heightened discovery standard," which requires both discovery of facts and that those facts give rise to policy claim, but declining to resolve question since insured was aware of coverage under policy more than 2 years before tendering its claim); but see Smeaton v. Fidelity Nat'l Title (1999) 72 CA4th 1000, 1004, 85 CR2d 591, 593 (discussed at ¶ 3:362)—insured's cause of action upon title policy cannot accrue until insured reviews actual policy language to be certain of the viability of its claim]

(4) [3:362.3] Effect of provision conditioning liability on adverse determination: A provision in the title policy conditioning the insurer's liability on "a final determination by a court of competent jurisdiction … adverse to the title" does not specify when the insured's cause of action for loss or damage "accrues."

Rather, the provision assumes loss has occurred and "merely specifies the point at which the [title insurer] becomes obligated to indemnify." [65 Butterfield v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (1999) 70 CA4th 1047, 1060, 83 CR2d 40, 48]

(a) [3:362.4] Compare—provision making *coverage dependent on adverse determination: The result is different under a policy providing there can be no recoverable loss or damage (i.e., no coverage) absent an adverse court determination on the status of the property. In such cases, the insured's cause of action does not accrue, and the limitations period does not commence to run, until such an adverse determination is made. [65 Butterfield v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (1999) 70 CA4th 1047, 1061, 83 CR2d 40, 49; see Orange County Found. for Preservation of Pub. Property v. Irvine Co. (1983) 139 CA3d 195, 202, 188 CR 552, 556—policy made coverage dependent on final judgment declaring disputed properties were tidelands belonging to State]

b. [3:363] Equitable tolling during claim-processing period: Suit need not necessarily have been commenced within two years of the insured's discovery of the loss. The two-year statute is equitably tolled for the entire period the title insurer is processing the insured's claim; i.e., the limitations "clock" stops at the point the insured gives the insured notice of the claim and does not commence to run again until the insurer denies coverage. [Forman v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (1995) 32 CA4th 998, 1001-1006, 38 CR2d 790, 792-795 (relying on Prudential-LMI Commercial Ins. v. Sup.Ct. (Lundberg) (1990) 51 C3d 674, 693, 274 CR 387, 399)—2-year statute tolled by 16 months it took insurer to complete its claim evaluation]

(1) [3:363.1] Rationale: Having given timely notice of a policy claim, the insured should not be penalized by waiting for the insurance company's investigation to run its course. Moreover, the period during which the insured's right to bring suit is postponed is for the insurer's benefit; and the insurer is not disadvantaged because it will have been on notice and fully investigated the claim before deciding not to honor the claim. [See Forman v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (1995) 32 CA4th 998, 1002-1004, 38 CR2d 790, 793-794]

(2) [3:364] Compare—failure to give timely notice of claim: The equitable tolling principle (¶ 3:363 ff.) presupposes the insured gave the insurer timely notice of its claim pursuant to the policy provisions (¶ 3:310 ff.) and, in any event, within two years after discovery of the loss. When there has been no timely-filed policy claim in the first instance, it is too late to toll the running of the statute. [See Tabachnick v. Ticor Title Ins. Co. (1994) 24 CA4th 70, 77, 29 CR2d 59, 63—insured did not file claim with insurer until well after 2-year statute had expired; and 65 Butterfield v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (1999) 70 CA4th 1047, 1062-1063, 83 CR2d 40, 49-50—"[t]olling can only suspend the running of a statute that still has time to run; it cannot revive a statute which has already run out"]

Thus, the time it takes the insurer to investigate a claim has no effect on the statute of limitations where the two-year period already expired before the insured tendered its claim. [65 Butterfield v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., supra, 70 CA4th at 1062, 83 CR2d at 49]

(a) [3:364.1] No "prejudice" limitation: It is immaterial to the equitable tolling issue whether the insurer can show it was prejudiced by the insured's failure to give timely notice of the claim. Prejudice or lack thereof has nothing to do with the statute of limitations defense. [65 Butterfield v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (1999) 70 CA4th 1047, 1063, 83 CR2d 40, 50]

Compare: On the other hand, the insurer must show actual prejudice to prevail on a defense based on a policy provision requiring prompt notice of loss; see ¶ 3:313 ff.

[3:364.2 - 3:364.4] Reserved.

(3) [3:364.5] Compare—informal negotiations with adverse claimant: The insured's engaging in informal negotiations with the adverse claimant will not itself equitably toll the statute. Such informal negotiations do not put the insurer on notice of the claim (so as to make it aware of the need to begin investigating the matter). [65 Butterfield v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (1999) 70 CA4th 1047, 1063, 83 CR2d 40, 50]

c. [3:365] Distinguish—accrual of action based on refusal to defend: An insured's cause of action based on the insurer's denial of coverage and refusal to defend a third party suit accrues when the insurer refuses to defend (not at an earlier point when the insured first learned of the adverse claim). [Lambert v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. (1991) 53 C3d 1072, 1077, 282 CR 445, 447]

(1) [3:366] Equitable tolling until conclusion of underlying action: However, although the statutory period commences upon the insurer's refusal to defend, it is equitably tolled until the underlying third party action is terminated by final judgment—effectively extending the time to commence suit against the insurer until two years after entry of final judgment in the third party action. [Lambert v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. (1991) 53 C3d 1072, 1077, 282 CR 445, 447]

(a) [3:366.1] Rationale: The insurer's duty to defend commences upon the insured's tender of the defense and continues until the underlying suit is concluded. "Because the underlying litigation may take over two years … [t]he insured must be allowed the option of waiting until the duty to defend has expired before filing suit to vindicate that duty." [Lambert v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. (1991) 53 C3d 1072, 1077, 282 CR 445, 447-448; see also Oil Base, Inc. v. Continental Cas. Co. (1969) 271 CA2d 378, 389-390, 76 CR 594, 601-602]

"The protection provided pursuant to a policy of title insurance would ring resoundingly hollow were the holder compelled to simultaneously enforce rights under the policy and defend a costly and potentially devastating claim against the subject property. Thus, we recognize the justice and fairness of equitably tolling the insured's action to establish coverage until resolution of the underlying claim." [Lambert v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., supra, 53 C3d at 1081, 282 CR at 450]

[3:367 - 3:368] Reserved.

5. Nature and Scope of Insurer's Liability

a. [3:369] No "abstractor liability" exposure: As discussed earlier, title companies were at one time subject to liability as "abstractors" … on the theory that title policies and title reports were "abstracts of title"; as abstractors, title companies were thus exposed to both contract and extracontractual (tort) damages. [See White v. Western Title Ins. Co. (1985) 40 C3d 870, 883-884, 221 CR 509, 515-516; Soifer v. Chicago Title Co. (2010) 187 CA4th 365, 371, 114 CR3d 1, 5—prior to enactment of remedial legislation (below), title insurers could be liable in negligence for failing to list all recorded encumbrances in preliminary reports; ¶ 3:212 ff.]

However, the Insurance Code has since been amended (eff. 1/1/82) to make clear that title policies are not abstracts of title and a title policy, as a contract of indemnity, does not create any of the duties or responsibilities that attach to an abstractor in issuing an abstract of title (see Ins.C. §§ 12340.10 & 12340.11, discussed at ¶ 3:211 ff.). Accordingly, with regard to preliminary reports and title policies issued on or after January 1, 1982, unless they contract to provide abstractor services, title insurers are not subject to the liability of an abstractor for failure to report matters affecting title to the property. [Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1996) 46 CA4th 1181, 1190-1193, 54 CR2d 84, 88-90; Southland Title Corp. v. Sup.Ct. (Nye) (1991) 231 CA3d 530, 537-538, 282 CR 425, 429-430]

b. [3:370] Policy liability: An insured's maximum policy recovery for a covered loss or damage is the amount of insurance (policy limits) specified in the title policy. However, that amount is exclusive of defense costs and authorized expenses incurred by the insured (¶ 3:382). [See CLTA Standard Coverage Policies (Forms 3:B.1 & 3:B.2); and ALTA Policies (Forms 3:C & 3:D)]

(1) Measure of policy damages

(a) Insured owners

1) [3:371] Policy provision: The CLTA and ALTA policies limit liability to an insured owner on a particular claim to the lesser of:

• The amount of insurance specified in the policy; or

• The difference between the fair market value of the property as insured and the fair market value of the property subject to the matter insured against. [See CLTA Standard Coverage Policy (Form 3:B.2); and ALTA Policy (Form 3:D)]

2) [3:372] Measuring differential value damages: The difference between the value of the property as insured and the value of the property with the covered defect is measured by either of the following methods:

• The diminution in value of the property as of the date of discovery of the defect, lien, encumbrance, etc., based upon the insured's use of the property (Overholtzer v. Northern Counties Title Ins. Co. (1953) 116 CA2d 113, 130, 253 P2d 116, 125; see also Tait v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. (2024) 103 CA5th 271, 277, 284-286, 322 CR3d 877, 880, 886-888 (expanding upon Overholtzer's method by concluding loss should be based on diminution in property's value according to its "highest and best use" as of date defect is discovered); Nebo, Inc. v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co. (1971) 21 CA3d 222, 227, 98 CR 237, 240—damages measured by lost rents insured would have been able to collect absent title defect); or

• The cost of correcting (removing) the defect, lien or encumbrance (National Holding Co. v. Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1941) 45 CA2d 215, 224, 113 P2d 906, 911).

a) [3:372.1] Policy limits cap: The appropriate measure in a given case depends on the circumstances surrounding the loss. But, in any event, the maximum amount recoverable remains the specified policy limits (exclusive of defense costs and other authorized expenses; ¶ 3:370). [Overholtzer v. Northern Counties Title Ins. Co. (1953) 116 CA2d 113, 130, 253 P2d 116, 125]

(b) Insured lenders

1) [3:373] Policy provision: By the terms of the CLTA and ALTA policies, liability to insured lenders with respect to a particular claim is the lesser of:

• The amount of insurance specified in the policy;

• The indebtedness;

• The difference between the fair market value of the insured's interest in the property, as insured, and the fair market value of the insured's interest in the property subject to the matter insured against; or

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

• If a government mortgage agency or instrumentality is the insured claimant, the amount it paid in acquiring the title or the insured instrument or in satisfaction of its insurance contract or guaranty relating to the title or insured instrument. [See CLTA Standard Coverage Policy (Form 3:B.2); and ALTA Loan Policy (Form 3:C)]

2) [3:374] Measure of loss: Title insurance indemnifies a lender (as opposed to an owner) only against loss with respect to the secured debt. It follows that the mere existence of an insured defect, lien or encumbrance, etc., does not itself give rise to a compensable loss under a lender's policy because the undisclosed (insured) liens might not be valid and enforceable, and the insured might be able to resell the property for a price sufficient to discharge the covered liens plus its loan. [See Radian Guaranty, Inc. v. Garamendi (2005) 127 CA4th 1280, 1289, 26 CR3d 464, 470]

In other words, the insurer is liable under a lender's title policy only if and when the insured is unable to obtain repayment of its secured loan because of a senior lien not disclosed in the policy. [Karl v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. (1993) 20 CA4th 972, 983, 24 CR2d 912, 917; Cale v. Transamerica Title Ins. (1990) 225 CA3d 422, 427-428, 275 CR 107, 109-110; see also Hovannisian v. First American Title Ins. Co. (2017) 14 CA5th 420, 434-435, 221 CR3d 883, 895 (citing Karl with approval and noting policy only provided coverage for damage sustained by insured, not for damage incurred by third parties)—insurer not liable where plaintiffs purchased property without warranty from insured at foreclosure sale and subsequently discovered preexisting title defect (¶ 3:323.3)]

a) [3:374.1] Insured lien balance: The lender's compensable loss normally is measured by "the remaining balance of principal, interest and associated [foreclosure] expenses, or the amount required to remove the prior lien, whichever is less." [Lawrence v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (1987) 192 CA3d 70, 75, 237 CR 264, 267]

In addition, sums spent by the insured to protect its lien prior to foreclosure may be recoverable if the lien so provides (e.g., time and money expended on property repairs and maintenance). [Karl v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. (1993) 20 CA4th 972, 983, 24 CR2d 912, 919, fn. 8]

b) [3:374.2] Compare—no recovery simply for diminution in value of security: Title insurance does not indemnify lenders against diminution in the size of the "equity cushion" on which they may have been relying. [Karl v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. (1993) 20 CA4th 972, 983, 24 CR2d 912, 919; and see Karl v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. (1997) 60 CA4th 858, 871, 70 CR2d 374, 381-382]

Thus, the insured lender's loss is not measured by diminution in value of the secured property as a result of an undisclosed defect; indeed, diminution in value of the security does not necessarily mean the lender has suffered a compensable loss. Again, the actual recoverable loss can never exceed the amount of the unpaid debt. [Cale v. Transamerica Title Ins. (1990) 225 CA3d 422, 426, 275 CR 107, 109]

c) [3:374.3] Example: Lenders' title policy omitted a $95,000 lien that was senior to their $75,000 trust deed. Lenders paid off the senior lien after foreclosing under their trust deed. Insurer was liable for the amounts spent and costs incurred in paying off the undisclosed senior lien. [Lawrence v. Chicago Title Ins. Co. (1987) 192 CA3d 70, 75, 237 CR 264, 267]

On the other hand, the additional profit Lenders would have realized had there been no senior lien was not a compensable loss; nor could Lenders recover under the policy for damages allegedly suffered because Insurer's negligence led them to make a loan they otherwise would not have made. [Lawrence v. Chicago Title Ins. Co., supra, 192 CA3d at 74, 237 CR at 266, fn. 3]

3) [3:375] Date of measure of loss? Courts are split as to precisely when an insured lender's "loss" from undisclosed liens or encumbrances should be measured:

a) [3:376] Upon foreclosure of lien: One line of authority measures the loss on the date the insured completes foreclosure of its lien because "only then is there certainty the lender will not be paid in full." [Karl v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. (1993) 20 CA4th 972, 983-984, 24 CR2d 912, 919]

1/ [3:376.1] Fair market value as of foreclosure date if lender acquires property: When the insured lender acquires the secured property by credit bid at foreclosure sale, its loss is measured by the property's fair market value as of the date of foreclosure. [Karl v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. (1993) 20 CA4th 972, 985, 24 CR2d 912, 920; see Karl v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. (1997) 60 CA4th 858, 871, 70 CR2d 374, 381-382—"We reaffirm our holding in Karl I"]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

The amount bid by the lender is not controlling: The lender has obtained "payment"—although in property rather than cash—and is charged with what is actually received for its note. [Karl v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., supra, 20 CA4th at 985, 24 CR2d at 920]

Nor does the fair market value on date of foreclosure take into account the lender's potential costs of subsequent resale. "[F]or purposes of determining whether an acquiring secured lender in possession of the security has sustained a loss under a standard lender's title policy …, the relevant value of the acquired security is the fair market value as of the date of foreclosure, not the fair market value on that date less the reasonable potential cost of selling the security." [Karl v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., supra, 60 CA4th at 871, 70 CR2d at 381-382]

Further, the compensable loss is not affected by the fact the lender resells the property after foreclosure for a higher or lower price. It would be "unfair" to measure damages after a period of time in which inflation or deflation, or the insured lender's own efforts, may have altered the value of the property. [Karl v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co., supra, 20 CA4th at 986, 24 CR2d at 921]

2/ [3:376.2] Amount paid if third party acquires property: On the other hand, if the property is sold at foreclosure to a third party, the amount paid by the third party constitutes a realization of the note which can be used to measure the insured lender's loss. [Karl v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. (1993) 20 CA4th 972, 984, 24 CR2d 912, 919, fn. 11]

b) [3:377] After foreclosure of lien: Other authority takes the position that the lender's loss can be measured only after foreclosure if the lender were to sell the property on the open market or the undisclosed lienor were to foreclose. [Cale v. Transamerica Title Ins. (1990) 225 CA3d 422, 428, 275 CR 107, 110]

Fair market value at the time of foreclosure cannot be the measure of loss because the lender's "insured indebtedness continues to be secured against loss by the terms of the title insurance policy." [Cale v. Transamerica Title Ins., supra, 225 CA3d at 428, 275 CR at 110]

• [3:377.1] Example: Insured Lender purchased property securing its loan at a nonjudicial foreclosure sale. Insured was required to purchase the property subject to three undisclosed senior liens and sought recovery under its title insurance policy on account of those liens. But recovery under the policy was denied:

Insurer owed no duty to indemnify Lender until the senior liens resulted in actual loss or damage to Lender (e.g., if unable to resell the property at a price sufficient to discharge the three senior liens and its junior lien). A compensable loss under the policy could not be based on the mere diminution in value of Lender's security (¶ 3:374.2). [Cale v. Transamerica Title Ins. (1990) 225 CA3d 422, 427, 275 CR 107, 109]

4) [3:378] Compare—lender's "loss" without foreclosure: Under certain circumstances, an insured lender might sustain an indemnifiable loss without foreclosing its lien; for example:

• where an undisclosed senior lienholder forecloses and wipes out the insured lender's lien; or

• where the insured lender sells its lien at a loss because of the existence of an undisclosed senior lien. [See Karl v. Commonwealth Land Title Ins. Co. (1993) 20 CA4th 972, 984, 24 CR2d 912, 919, fn. 11]

(c) [3:379] Burden of proof: The insured—not the insurer—bears the burden of proving the actual amount of the loss or damage for which a policy recovery is sought. [Hawkins v. Oakland Title Ins. & Guaranty Co. (1958) 165 CA2d 116, 122, 331 P2d 742, 745—complaint failing to allege compensable loss subject to general demurrer]

(2) [3:380] Reasonably foreseeable consequential damages: In addition to recovery for a covered loss or damage (¶ 3:370 ff.), an insured may be entitled to consequential damages if reasonably foreseeable at the time the contract was entered into and resulting from the insured's detrimental reliance upon the policy. [Overholtzer v. Northern Counties Title Ins. Co. (1953) 116 CA2d 113, 121, 253 P2d 116, 123] Otherwise, insurers cannot be reached for consequential damages on a policy liability (contract) claim. [See, e.g., Sullivan v. Transamerica Title Ins. Co. (1975) 35 Colo.App. 312, 532 P2d 356]

• [3:381] Comment: As a practical matter, a title insurer is far more likely to be liable for consequential damages where the insured's claim is based on the insurer's obligations undertaken by agreement separate and distinct from the title policy. [See, e.g., Red Lobster Inns of America, Inc. v. Lawyers Title Ins. Corp. (8th Cir. 1981) 656 F2d 381, 384-386 (decided under Ark. law)—insurer liable for insured's lost profits arising from insurer's failure to discover use restriction pursuant to separate agreement to examine title and inform insured of use restrictions (lost profits awarded as tort damages based on insurer's misperformance of its agreement which involved foreseeable, reasonable risk of harm to insured's interest)]

(3) [3:382] Plus insured's defense costs: A title policy insurer is also liable to its insured for defense costs and other authorized expenses and attorney fees incurred by the insured in prosecuting or defending a claim under the policy. [See CLTA Standard Coverage Policies (Forms 3:B.1 & 3:B.2); and ALTA Policies (Forms 3:C & 3:D)]

The insurer's costs liability is rooted in its duty to defend (¶ 3:320 ff.); hence, there is no maximum limit on an insured's costs recovery.

(4) [3:383] Compare—insurer's right to correct or settle: As earlier discussed, instead of paying policy damages to its insured, the insurer may, where appropriate, elect to correct (remove) the defect, lien or encumbrance or settle with the insured for a lesser amount. Such action terminates the insurer's liability on the claim. See ¶ 3:335 ff., 3:340 ff.

[3:384 - 3:385] Reserved.

c. [3:386] Damages for wrongful denial of benefits: Title insurers are subject to the same liability for wrongful withholding of policy benefits as other insurers. Thus, in appropriate cases, a title insurer may be liable for contract and, in some cases, tort damages for its wrongful refusal to pay policy benefits.

Cross-refer: A detailed discussion of an insurer's contractual and extracontractual liability arising from the wrongful denial of policy benefits is beyond the scope of this Practice Guide. For a comprehensive treatment of the subject, see Croskey, Heeseman, Ehrlich & Klee, Cal. Prac. Guide: Insurance Litigation (TRG), Chs. 11-13.

[3:387 - 3:399] Reserved.

d. [3:400] "Unfair competition" claim: The "business of insurance" is expressly made subject to the State Unfair Competition Law (UCL, Bus. & Prof.C. § 17200 et seq.). [See Ins.C. § 1861.03; State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v. Sup.Ct. (Allegro) (1996) 45 CA4th 1093, 1107-1111, 53 CR2d 229, 237-239 (abrogated on other grounds by Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co. (1999) 20 C4th 163, 184-185, 83 CR2d 548, 564)]

Thus, "any unlawful, unfair or fraudulent business act or practice [or] unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading advertising …" by a title insurer may give rise to an unfair competition claim under Bus. & Prof.C. § 17200 et seq. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 17500 et seq.; Quelimane Co., Inc. v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co. (1998) 19 C4th 26, 51, 77 CR2d 709, 723]

(1) [3:401] Remedy limited to injunctive or restitutive relief: However, a Bus. & Prof.C. § 17200 claim is not remediable by a traditional damages remedy. In a private UCL suit, the insured is limited to injunctive or restitutive relief (see Bus. & Prof.C. § 17203). [State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v. Sup.Ct. (Allegro) (1996) 45 CA4th 1093, 1110, 53 CR2d 229, 238-239 (abrogated on other grounds by Cel-Tech Communications, Inc. v. Los Angeles Cellular Telephone Co. (1999) 20 C4th 163, 184-185, 83 CR2d 548, 564)—compensatory and punitive damages not recoverable in UCL action]

(2) [3:402] Misleading or unfair advertisements: A UCL cause of action can be stated against a title insurer for advertising that is "unfair, deceptive, untrue or misleading" within the meaning of Bus. & Prof.C. § 17200. [Quelimane Co., Inc. v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co. (1998) 19 C4th 26, 51-52, 77 CR2d 709, 723-724]

For example:

• [3:403] Title Insurer advertised that title insurance is necessary in land sale transactions and that such insurance would be issued on any property with "good title." Such advertising may be deemed both misleading and false, giving rise to a UCL cause of action, where Title Insurer fails to disclose it will not issue title insurance on tax-deeded property. "By representing that title insurance will be issued whenever there is 'good' title … members of the public might reasonably understand such an advertisement to encompass title acquired at a tax sale." [Quelimane Co., Inc. v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co. (1998) 19 C4th 26, 52-55, 77 CR2d 709, 726]

Cross-refer: For a comprehensive treatment of the State Unfair Competition Law (Bus. & Prof.C. § 17200 et seq.), see Stern, Bus. & Prof.C. § 17200 Practice (TRG).

[3:404 - 3:409] Reserved.

e. [3:410] Conspiracy in restraint of trade: Normally, a title insurer can pick and choose the risks it is willing to insure (see ¶ 3:70).

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

But where the only title insurers in a particular county (or other market area) agree to refuse all coverage for a particular risk, such refusal may violate the Cartwright Act (Bus. & Prof.C. § 16720), prohibiting "acts by two or more persons… to create … restrictions in trade or commerce." I.e., by agreeing not to insure title to particular property, the insurers together may effectively make the property unmarketable in the area, resulting in a "restraint of trade" in violation of the Act. [Quelimane Co., Inc. v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co. (1998) 19 C4th 26, 49, 77 CR2d 709, 722—actionable Cartwright Act violation stated against all title insurers in El Dorado County who allegedly combined to refuse to issue title insurance on tax-defaulted property until purchaser obtained quiet title decree, thereby making such property unmarketable]

f. [3:411] No general negligence liability arising from matters collateral to policy coverage: An insured's claim against the insured's title insurer is under the policy. Again, insureds have no separate claim against title insurers based on negligence. [See Stockton Mortg., Inc. v. Tope (2014) 233 CA4th 437, 455, 183 CR3d 186, 201; Vournas v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1999) 73 CA4th 668, 675-676, 86 CR2d 490, 495]

• [3:411.1] A title insurer had no inherent tort duty to obtain a full release of a Notice of Abatement Action referenced in a preliminary report but omitted from its policy. [Stockton Mortg., Inc. v. Tope (2014) 233 CA4th 437, 455-457, 183 CR3d 186, 201-202]

• [3:411.2] A title insurer had no inherent tort duty to investigate or ascertain a seller's authority to convey property. [Vournas v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1999) 73 CA4th 668, 676-677, 86 CR2d 490, 496—insurer that issued lender's policy to trustee/seller, insuring priority of purchase money deeds of trust given by buyers, had no duty to trust or trust beneficiaries to investigate trustee's authority to sell without beneficiaries' consent]

(1) [3:412] No liability based on failure to follow CLTA manual: A CLTA manual sets forth various procedures and guidelines for title insurers to follow in deciding whether to issue a title policy. This manual is designed solely to guide title company employees on steps to be taken before issuing a policy for the purpose of reducing the risk the insurer will be required to pay a claim on a policy it issues. "[T]he CLTA manual outlines duties intended to affect and benefit [the title insurer] rather than third parties"; and thus does not establish a standard of care upon which negligence liability to others may be based. [See Vournas v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1999) 73 CA4th 668, 676, 86 CR2d 490, 496, fn. 10 (emphasis added)]

(2) [3:413] Compare—liability as escrow holder: The rules set forth at ¶ 3:411 ff. limit a title insurer's liability in its capacity as title insurer. Title insurers often are also hired as escrow holders (¶ 3:28, 3:45, 4:567 ff.) and, functioning in that capacity, title insurers can incur negligence liability independent of any liability resulting from the provisions of the title policy. See discussion at ¶ 4:644 ff.

1. Preliminary Considerations

a. [4:1] Significance: Defining the kinds of property and property rights to be conveyed affects a host of other important issues in a real property purchase and sale transaction—including the form of conveyancing instrument, the method of financing the purchase, title insurance, and tax allocations. All of these issues should be confronted, negotiated and resolved before a purchase agreement is signed.

(1) [4:2] Conveyancing instruments: Different conveyancing instruments are used to transfer various kinds of property: i.e., deeds to convey real property (¶ 4:37); bills of sale to transfer personal property (¶ 4:38); and assignments to transfer contract rights or other choses in action (¶ 4:38).

(2) [4:3] Financing documents: If the sale will be seller-financed in whole or in part, the purchase agreement should identify the encumbered real and personal property, as well as the forms of security instruments and methods of perfection to be used. Normally, the loan is secured by a lien in the form of a recorded deed of trust encumbering the real property (see ¶ 6:336 ff.). Personal property liens, however, are created by an unrecorded security agreement, and the lien is perfected by filing a Financing Statement with the Secretary of State (see ¶ 4:36).

(3) [4:4] Tax allocations: Substantial tax benefits can be achieved (or lost) by allocating the purchase price of the various components of the property between real property, personal property, "goodwill" and the like. (See ¶ 4:305 ff.)

(4) [4:5] Apportionment of contract rights and obligations: If various contracts and contract rights relating to the property sold will be assigned to the buyer, the benefits and burdens of those contracts (including revenues and expenses) may require negotiation and allocation.

For example, it may be relatively easy to prorate a real property tax bill (as where seller agrees to pay its share up to the closing date based on estimated current taxes, ¶ 4:612 ff.); but it may not be as easy to allocate proceeds (or liability) arising from a lawsuit affecting the property or the owner's interest. (See ¶ 4:73.)

b. [4:6] Drafting tips: When drafting or reviewing a purchase agreement (and related documents) with a view to the kinds of property to be sold, the following principles should be kept in mind:

(1) [4:7] Define all items and rights to be transferred: In a rush to sign a purchase agreement, buyers and sellers may be tempted to defer the preparation of an inventory of all property to be sold. Avoid this temptation, as it is likely to result in a future dispute over precisely what was (and was not) to be conveyed.

With rare exception, all items and rights to be transferred can be identified at the outset and should be specified in the contract.

(2) [4:8] Use *complete and specific descriptions: Legal definitions of "real" and "personal" property, "intangible" property, "fixtures" or "trade fixtures," etc. will not necessarily reflect the parties' true intent. Indeed, legal scholars could debate these terms for years. (Many a lawsuit has arisen over such issues as whether specialized power panels, lighting or a "built-in" bookcase are so affixed to the structure as to fall within the legal definition of "real property.")

Avoid future litigation over what property the parties contemplated was to be sold by including complete and specific descriptions.

(3) [4:9] Dispel buyer's assumption that "more is better": Buyers are often inclined to negotiate "for the maximum." But buyer's counsel should carefully evaluate the burdens that accompany the apparent benefits. Certain rights and items of physical property may be undesirable because their ownership also carries actual or potential liability. (For example, that rusty trailer, crumbling wall, or stack of empty chemical drums on the property is of no benefit to the buyer and may be a liability trap.)

(4) [4:9.1] Remember that general rules of contract interpretation apply: Be as clear and concise as possible. If a dispute as to what was agreed to arises, courts will whenever possible interpret the parties' intentions from the writing itself ("four corners rule," Civ.C. § 1639)—i.e., extrinsic evidence is not admissible unless the contract is reasonably susceptible to different meanings. This is particularly true with respect to documents relating to real estate transactions that, "when recorded, are intended to provide public notice and promote public reliance on their facial meaning." [See Abers v. Rounsavell (2010) 189 CA4th 348, 356-357, 116 CR3d 860, 865-866]

c. [4:10] Sufficiency of real property description in conveyancing instruments: Deeds and other instruments purporting to convey an interest in real property are void and of no effect unless they sufficiently describe the property. [Edwards v. City of Santa Paula (1956) 138 CA2d 375, 380, 292 P2d 31, 34; Oatman v. Niemeyer (1929) 207 C 424, 427, 278 P 1043, 1044]

(1) [4:11] Property must be identified: Although a complete legal description may be the most precise, it is not essential. "It is only necessary that the description of premises in a … [conveyancing instrument] be sufficiently definite and certain to enable the land to be identified." [Anderson Cottonwood Irr. Dist. v. Zinzer (1942) 51 CA2d 587, 590-591, 125 P2d 82, 84 (emphasis added; internal quotes omitted); King v. Stanley (1948) 32 C2d 584, 589, 197 P2d 321, 324 (disapproved on other grounds by Patel v. Liebermensch (2008) 45 C4th 344, 351, 86 CR3d 366, 371, fn. 4); see also ¶ 4:270.7]

(2) [4:12] Reformation to correct erroneous descriptions: A deed that mistakenly omits a sufficient description or contains an erroneous, ambiguous or inconsistent description, may be amenable to reformation to reflect the parties' true intent as evidenced by the underlying contract (see ¶ 11:410 ff.). In that event, the deed, as reformed to include a sufficient description, operates as an effective conveyance. [Oatman v. Niemeyer (1929) 207 C 424, 427, 278 P 1043, 1044; Flores v. Flores (1921) 55 CA 595, 597-599, 204 P 54, 56]

[4:13 - 4:15] Reserved.

d. [4:16] Merger doctrine: In virtually every purchase and sale agreement, conveyance of title to the real property is only one of the seller's obligations. But, under the merger doctrine, seller obligations not specifically mentioned in the deed may be deemed merged into the deed and thus terminated upon the conveyance (i.e., unless the parties agree to a survival clause, the contractual obligations are "extinguished" by the deed and do not survive the closing). [See Western Filter Corp. v. Argan, Inc. (9th Cir. 2008) 540 F3d 947, 952 (applying Calif. law); but see also Ram's Gate Winery, LLC v. Roche (2015) 235 CA4th 1071, 1079-1081, 185 CR3d 935, 940-942 (limiting merger doctrine's applicability to cases where contractual terms are inconsistent with deed or when parties clearly intend all contractual obligations to be subsumed in recorded deed's recitals)]

Whether a seller's contractual obligations will survive execution and delivery of the deed depends on:

- The parties' intent (Ram's Gate Winery, LLC v. Roche, supra, 235 CA4th at 1083, 185 CR3d at 944—whether parties intended seller's disclosure warranty to continue after close of escrow could not be decided by summary adjudication; Szabo v. Sup.Ct. (Hodgkinson) (1978) 84 CA3d 839, 845, 148 CR 837, 840—whether parties intended deed to supersede zoning covenant in sale agreement could not be decided by summary adjudication); and

- Whether the obligation was "collateral to the deed" and therefore not likely to be referenced in the deed (Ram's Gate Winery, LLC v. Roche, supra, 235 CA4th at 1075, 185 CR3d at 938—collateral obligations exception prevented merger doctrine from extinguishing seller's duty to disclose property's active fault trace; Stiles v. Bodkin (1941) 43 CA2d 839, 843, 111 P2d 675, 678—merger doctrine inapplicable to obligations "one would not expect to see … in a deed" (here, covenant to construct improvements)).

The "merger" problem typically arises in connection with representations and warranties made by the seller in the purchase agreement. If the seller's breach is not discovered until after closing (recordation of deed), the seller will try to invoke the merger doctrine to avoid liability. See further discussion at ¶ 4:434 and 4:454.

2. [4:20] General Classifications of Property and Rights—"Real" and "Personal" Property: The Civil Code generally classifies property as either "real" or "personal": "Property is either: (1) real or immovable; or, (2) personal or movable." [Civ.C. § 657]

In practice, however, a variety of other terms (some archaic, redundant and/or confusing) are used and subsumed within these two basic categories:

a. [4:21] Real property: Real property consists of four components: "(1) Land; (2) [t]hat which is affixed to land; (3) [t]hat which is incidental or appurtenant to land; (4) [t]hat which is immovable by law …" [Civ.C. § 658]

(1) [4:22] Land: "Land" is the "material of the earth … includ[ing] free or occupied space of an indefinite distance upwards as well as downwards, subject to limitations upon the use of airspace …" [Civ.C. § 659]

(2) [4:23] Fixtures: "Fixtures" are a part of the real property (Civ.C. § 658), defined as things "affixed to land," "embedded in it," "permanently resting upon it" or "permanently attached to what is thus permanent." [Civ.C. § 660; see People v. Acosta (2014) 226 CA4th 108, 121, 171 CR3d 774, 784—§ 660 defines fixture in terms of its "overarching objective manifestation of the annexing party's intent—namely, 'permanence'"; Vieira Enterprises, Inc. v. City of East Palo Alto (2012) 208 CA4th 584, 598, 145 CR3d 722, 730; Southern Pac. Co. v. Riverside County (1939) 35 CA2d 380, 386, 95 P2d 688, 692; and ¶ 4:42 ff.]

(3) [4:24] Appurtenances: "Appurtenances" are also part of real property (Civ.C. § 658), defined as things "deemed to be incidental or appurtenant to land when it is by right used with the land for its benefit …" [Civ.C. § 662; see State of Calif. v. Sup.Ct. (Underwriters at Lloyd's of London) (2000) 78 CA4th 1019, 1025, 1027, 93 CR2d 276, 281, 283—riparian water rights, being "appurtenant to" land, are an interest in real property]

(4) [4:25] Hereditaments and tenements: "The words 'real property' are coextensive with lands, tenements, and hereditaments." [Civ.C. § 14(b)(2)]

b. [4:26] Hereditaments, corporeal and incorporeal, chattels, tenements and rents, issues and profits: These terms are frequently used in transactional documents, with often overlapping definitions:

(1) [4:27] Hereditaments: "Hereditaments" are "things capable of being inherited, be it corporeal or incorporeal, real, personal or mixed …" [Black's Law Dictionary]

(2) [4:28] "Corporeal" or corporeal property: These terms refer to physical objects—i.e., those possessing a body and which can be distinguished from things that exist only in contemplation. [Black's Law Dictionary]

(3) [4:29] "Incorporeal" or incorporeal property: Things that exist only by reason of legal rights, such as a chose in action (i.e., legal claims), are "incorporeal" or incorporeal property. [Black's Law Dictionary]

Thus, a house is corporeal property (¶ 4:28); but the entitlement to rental income from the house is incorporeal property.

(4) [4:30] Chattels: "Chattels" are articles of personal property. [Black's Law Dictionary]

(5) [4:31] Chose in action: A chose in action is a "personal right not reduced into possession, but recoverable by a suit at law" (i.e., a legal claim). [Black's Law Dictionary]

(6) [4:32] Rents, issues and profits: These terms refer collectively to income from land or an estate in land. [Black's Law Dictionary; Ballantine's Law Dictionary]

(7) [4:33] Tenements: A "tenement" is best described as incorporeal property (a legal right) that arises out of corporeal property (a tangible piece of property).

[4:34] Comment: As evidenced by the definitions at ¶ 4:26 ff., many terms are used to describe what is fundamentally the same thing. Occasionally, circumstances might require the description of a particularly unique right, claim or interest. But it is generally unnecessary (and/or redundant) to use such terms as "rents, issues and profits," "tenements," "hereditaments" and the like in a purchase and sale agreement or deed … because Civ.C. § 658 provides that everything incidental or appurtenant to land is within the definition of "real property" (¶ 4:21).

c. [4:35] Personal property: "Personal property" is "every kind of property that is not real …" [Civ.C. § 663]

The transfer of various kinds of personal property may or may not be contemplated in a sale of real property. Therefore, it is essential to enumerate the specific personal property items to be included in any purchase agreement.

➪ [4:36] PRACTICE POINTER—UCC SEARCH*: It may be advisable to conduct a search of the California Secretary of State's records to determine whether any Uniform Commercial Code (UCC) Financing Statements have been filed against personal property covered by the purchase agreement. The filing of any such Financing Statement creates a perfected security interest in favor of third party creditors, and any title conveyed to a buyer would be subject to the third party claim. A number of private services will conduct a UCC search for a fairly modest fee.

Of course, the advisability of spending the time and money to conduct such a search will depend on the size and complexity of the transaction. However, it is not unusual for vaults, solar heating devices, security systems, telephone systems, etc. to be subject to a personal property lease or owned by a third party. [See Comm'l C. §§ 9309 & 9501, regarding filing of Financing Statements]

In all events, buyers' counsel should alert their clients to the possibility of a third party security interest; and let the clients make the final decision whether to incur the costs of a search. (Although generally unnecessary in single family residence transactions, in many other cases it will be well worth the money.)

d. Conveyancing instruments

(1) [4:37] "Deed" for real property: The instrument used to convey title to real property is a "deed." A deed is an executed conveyance and operates as a present transfer of the real property. [Estate of Stephens (2002) 28 C4th 665, 671-672, 122 CR2d 358, 362; see Carne v. Worthington (2016) 246 CA4th 548, 558, 200 CR3d 920, 927, fn. 17—at a minimum, deed must be in writing, signed by grantor or grantor's agent, name grantor and grantee, and be delivered to and accepted by grantee; see also Lee v. Lee (2009) 175 CA4th 1553, 1558, 97 CR3d 516, 520—deed signed by grantor and delivered to grantee before being altered by third party constituted fully executed conveyance, enforceable in accordance with its original terms; compare Lin v. Coronado (2014) 232 CA4th 696, 703-704, 181 CR3d 674, 679-680—trustee's deed altered by grantee to omit co-grantee following its execution and delivery by trustee deemed fully enforceable according to its altered terms (co-grantee's omission immaterial as "a matter of law" because deed's original version showed she had no percentage interest in property)]

(a) [4:37a] Delivery transfers title: A deed transfers title when it is legally delivered. [Civ.C. § 1054; see Luna v. Brownell (2010) 185 CA4th 668, 673, 110 CR3d 573, 576-577—also noting acceptance by grantee makes delivery effective and deed operative]

The fact that the deed is not recorded is of no consequence to the effective transfer of title. [See Goodman v. Goodman (1931) 212 C 730, 733, 300 P 449, 450; Luna v. Brownell, supra, 185 CA4th at 674, 110 CR3d at 577 & fn. 8—unrecorded grant deeds physically delivered to and accepted by grantee effectively transferred title]

1) [4:37b] Grantor's intent controls: Valid delivery depends on whether the grantor intended the deed to be presently operative. Although physical delivery of a deed raises an inference that the grantor intended to immediately transfer title, that inference may be overcome by evidence showing a contrary intent. [See Luna v. Brownell (2010) 185 CA4th 668, 673, 110 CR3d 573, 577—in addition to physically delivering deeds to grantee, grantors' lack of confusion and voluntary execution evidenced their intention to immediately transfer title]

2) [4:37c] Transfer to "anticipated" trust: A deed drawn and executed in anticipation of a trust's creation is not void merely because the entity has yet to exist. Such deeds are valid between the grantor and grantee (the anticipated trust) on the date the entity is formed. [Luna v. Brownell (2010) 185 CA4th 668, 673-676, 110 CR3d 573, 576-578—quitclaim deed transferring property from individual to himself as trustee of contemplated trust was valid even though trust did not exist when deed was executed]

3) [4:37d] Conditional delivery: A deed cannot be delivered to the grantee under a condition not expressly stated in the deed. Thus, when a grantor executes and delivers a grant deed but imposes an oral condition on the transfer, the condition is disregarded and the grantee receives title free and clear of that condition. [See Civ.C. § 1056; McMillin v. Eare (2021) 70 CA5th 893, 914, 285 CR3d 737, 752 (holding, among other things, that § 1056 nullified mother's oral condition requiring son to obtain financing before grant deed was effective)—son received title free and clear notwithstanding mother's failed attempt to place oral condition on transfer]

Comment: Although a grantee receives title free and clear of any oral condition, McMillin was quick to point out that a grantor still may have a damages claim against the grantee. [See McMillin v. Eare, supra, 70 CA5th at 915, 285 CR3d at 752 (dictum)]

[4:37e - 4:37f] Reserved.

(b) [4:37g] Types of deeds: Under current California law, a deed may be either a "grant deed," a "quitclaim deed" or a "tax deed" (see generally, Civ.C. § 1091 et seq.).

1) [4:37.1] Grant deed: A grant deed contains the grantor's implied covenant that (i) the grantor has not conveyed the same estate, or any right, title or interest therein, to any person other than the grantee; and (ii) such estate is, at the time of execution of the conveyance, free from encumbrances "done, made, or suffered by the grantor" or any person claiming under the grantor. [Civ.C. § 1113; see also ¶ 4:341]

Nonetheless, the grantee takes title to the property subject to all existing encumbrances (such as a deed of trust) whether or not the deed so provides. [Nguyen v. Calhoun (2003) 105 CA4th 428, 438, 129 CR2d 436, 445]

FORM: Sample Grant Deed, see Form 4:A.

2) [4:37.2] Quitclaim deed: A quitclaim deed transfers or "releases" to the transferee whatever present right or interest the grantor has in the described property. Unlike a grant deed, a quitclaim deed carries with it no express or implied covenants. [City of Manhattan Beach v. Sup.Ct. (Farquhar) (1996) 13 C4th 232, 239, 52 CR2d 82, 86]

Thus, if the grantor holds no interest in the property, a quitclaim deed conveys nothing. [See Osswald v. Anderson (1996) 49 CA4th 812, 820, 57 CR2d 23, 27—quitclaim deed from transferors "as trustees" of subject property ineffective to transfer title where transferors did not hold title as trustees at time of attempted conveyance; see also People v. Denman (2013) 218 CA4th 800, 809, 159 CR3d 812, 819—recording quitclaim deed transfer with knowledge transferor has no title or interest in subject property constitutes felony (Pen.C. § 115)]

a) [4:37.3] Operative words: Use of the words "remise, release, and quitclaim" in a granting clause commonly indicates a quitclaim deed, and generally signifies a relinquishment of all ownership interest then held by the transferor. [City of Manhattan Beach v. Sup.Ct. (Farquhar) (1996) 13 C4th 232, 239, 52 CR2d 82, 86-87 & fn. 4]

[4:37.4] Reserved.

3) [4:37.5] Tax deed: Where property that has defaulted to the state for failure to pay assessed taxes is sold at a "tax sale," the purchaser receives a "tax deed" from the tax collector upon payment of the full purchase price. [See Rev. & Tax.C. § 3708; Quelimane Co., Inc. v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co. (1998) 19 C4th 26, 39, 77 CR2d 709, 716]

Tax-defaulted property usually is sold on an "as is" basis; see ¶ 4:351.1.

a) [4:37.6] Condition of title: A tax deed conveys title free of all encumbrances existing before the sale except:

— special assessment installments due after the sale or which were not included in the amount fixed for presale redemption of the property;

— liens for taxes levied by any agency that has not consented to the sale;

— servitudes (i.e., easements of any kind, including prescriptive), recorded restrictions and water rights for which title is separately held;

— unaccepted, recorded, irrevocable offers of dedication to a public entity;

— recorded options of a taxing agency to purchase;

— federal tax liens; and

— unpaid taxes or assessments under the Improvement Bond Act of 1915 or Mello-Roos Community Facilities Act of 1982. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 3712; Quelimane Co., Inc. v. Stewart Title Guaranty Co. (1998) 19 C4th 26, 40, 77 CR2d 709, 716 & fn. 5]

b) [4:37.7] Presumption that proceedings regularly performed: Except as against fraud and jurisdictional issues (e.g., the property must have been legally subject to taxation), a tax deed is "conclusive evidence" that all proceedings from the assessment to execution of the deed were regularly performed. [See Rev. & Tax.C. § 3711; L&B Real Estate v. Housing Auth. of County of Los Angeles (2007) 149 CA4th 950, 956-957, 57 CR3d 298,

302-303—because public property exempt from taxation, tax deed purporting to convey property originally owned by county housing authority was void]

There is, however, only a one-year statute of limitations on a tax sale challenge following the board of supervisor's rejection of a mandatory § 3731 petition for rescission of the tax deed sale. [See Rev. & Tax.C. § 3725 (applicable to sales completed on or after 1/1/12); see also Rev. & Tax.C. § 3726]

Cross-refer: Remedies for defects in tax sale proceedings are strictly statutory; see discussion at ¶ 11:470.1 ff.

4) [4:37.8] Revocable transfer on death deed (revocable TOD deed): A "revocable transfer on death deed" ("revocable TOD deed") may be used to pass ownership of certain residential real property at death without a probate proceeding, right of survivorship or use of a trust. When properly executed and recorded, the deed automatically transfers such property on the owner's death but does not affect ownership rights during the owner's lifetime. [See Prob.C. § 5600 et seq. (1/1/2032 "sunset" date); see also Prob.C. § 5605 (requiring Cal. Law Rev. Comm'n to study and make recommendations regarding revocable TOD deeds)]

(The revocable TOD deed is discussed in detail in Ross & Cohen, Cal. Prac. Guide: Probate (TRG), Ch. 2.)

5) [4:37.9] Compare—deed of trust: A deed of trust, though in form a grant, is really only a mortgage with a power of sale and does not convey the fee. Indeed, it carries none of the incidents of ownership other than the right to convey if the debtor defaults on the debtor's obligation. [Peterson v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2015) 236 CA4th 844, 854, 186 CR3d 842, 849]

Cross-refer: Deeds of trust are discussed in detail at ¶ 6:336 ff.

(2) [4:38] "Bill of sale" or "assignment" for personal property: Personal property is typically conveyed by a "bill of sale" or "assignment."

A bill of sale is used to convey tangible personal property, while an assignment is used to convey intangible personal property.

FORMS

- Bill of Sale, see Form 4:C.

- Assignment of Intangible (and Other) Property, see Form 4:D.

3. Intangible Property

a. [4:39] Definition: "Intangible property" is that which has no intrinsic or marketable value, but is merely representative evidence of value—e.g., goodwill, rights to use certain tradenames, contracts, stocks and bonds, promissory notes, choses in action, etc.

Intangible property is personal property, but constitutes rights not related to physical things. Those rights are tied to relationships between legal persons which the law recognizes as enforceable. [See Black's Law Dictionary; and Ballantine's Law Dictionary]

➪ [4:40] PRACTICE POINTER: Intangible property that pertains to real property is not necessarily implicitly transferred along with the real property. Thus, as with all personal property, it is essential that intangible property be carefully enumerated in both the purchase agreement and the appropriate conveyancing instrument. [See Heritage Pac. Fin'l, LLC v. Monroy (2013) 215 CA4th 972, 991-992, 156 CR3d 26, 40-41—following foreclosure on senior trust deed, assignee of debtor's second note acquired assignor's contractual rights, but not its tort claims, because assignment agreement failed to specify any rights other than those "incidental to the contract rights"; compare SMS Fin'l XXIII, LLC v. Cornerstone Title Co. (2018) 19 CA5th 1092, 1098-1100, 228 CR3d 562, 566-567 (distinguishing Heritage Pac. Fin'l)—by virtue of holding trust deed by assignment, purchaser of secured obligation had its own independent, potential Civ.C. § 2941 damages claim against title company for improperly releasing said secured obligation prior to trust deed's assignment and regardless of any claims assignor "may have been or may still be able to assert"]

b. [4:41] Conveyancing instrument: As noted at ¶ 4:38, intangible property is conveyed by an "assignment" (see Form 4:D).

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

4. [4:42] Fixtures: The statutory definition of a "fixture" (Civ.C. § 660, ¶ 4:23) is not always easy to apply. In practice, courts utilize three fundamental tests (physical annexation, adaptation and intention to annex) in ascertaining whether an item of personal property has become so affixed to the land as to become part of the real property (and, hence, a fixture) (San Diego Trust & Sav. Bank v. San Diego County (1940) 16 C2d 142, 149, 105 P2d 94, 97; Vieira Enterprises, Inc. v. City of East Palo Alto (2012) 208 CA4th 584, 597, 145 CR3d 722, 730-731; Bell v. Bank of Perris (1942) 52 CA2d 66, 73, 125 P2d 829, 833):

a. [4:43] Method of attachment: If an item is attached to real property in such a manner as to indicate that it is to be permanently affixed, it is likely to be considered a part of the real property. An item that can be readily removed may still be a fixture if the clear intention of its purpose is nevertheless to be part of the real property. [San Diego Trust & Sav. Bank v. San Diego County (1940) 16 C2d 142, 152, 105 P2d 94, 99—vault doors are fixtures]

b. [4:44] Adaptability to realty's use and purpose: An item is a fixture if it is essential to the ordinary and convenient use of the real property to which it is attached. [M.P. Moller, Inc. v. Wilson (1936) 8 C2d 31, 38, 63 P2d 818, 821—residential pipe organ (musical instrument) not a fixture]

c. [4:45] Annexing party's intent: An item of personal property is a fixture if the person attaching it intended it to be so. [San Diego Trust & Sav. Bank v. San Diego County (1940) 16 C2d 142, 149, 105 P2d 94, 97-98; see also People v. Acosta (2014) 226 CA4th 108, 121, 171 CR3d 774, 784 (defendants convicted under Pen.C. § 502.5 of removing fixtures from foreclosed home)—essential question for jury is whether all evidence of permanence persuades beyond reasonable doubt that attachment was "intended" to be permanent; Vieira Enterprises, Inc. v. City of East Palo Alto (2012) 208 CA4th 584, 597, 145 CR3d 722, 731 (finding seller/installer of manufactured homes intended same to be fixtures)—intention most significant of three tests, but manner of annexation and use to which property put relevant in determining intention]

➪ [4:46] PRACTICE POINTER: Buyers and sellers often justifiably disagree as to whether items such as partitions, specialized lighting systems, electrical power panels, shelving, children's swing sets and even chandeliers are considered part of the real property (and so transferred as part and parcel of the purchased realty). To avoid fixture disputes, carefully analyze what items might be removed by the seller without damaging the realty. And, in all events, make sure buyer and seller come to terms on the issue before the purchase agreement is executed.

[4:47 - 4:49] Reserved.

5. [4:50] Subterranean and Air Space Rights: A fee interest in land includes ownership of the "surface" and "everything permanently situated beneath or above it." [See Civ.C. § 829]

a. Mineral, oil and gas rights

(1) [4:51] Typically transferred with sale of fee: Customarily, the buyer is entitled to whatever interest the seller has in subterranean property. Thus, unless previously transferred to a third party or reserved (¶ 4:53.1), mineral, oil and gas rights are typically granted to the buyer; and likewise even if the seller only has a "lessee's" interest (¶ 4:52 ff.).

(a) [4:51.1] Dinosaur fossils: While there is no California decision that directly addresses the issue, the Montana Supreme Court, answering a certified question from the Ninth Circuit, has held that dinosaur fossils are not "minerals" for purpose of a mineral reservation under Montana law. [Murray v. BEJ Minerals, LLC (Mont. 2020) 464 P3d 80, 93] Accordingly, under Montana law, dinosaur fossils belong to the owners of the surface estate. [Murray v. BEJ Minerals, LLC (9th Cir. 2020) 962 F3d 485, 487]

1) [4:51.2] Compare—CA statutory designation: Although the Public Resources Code designates "fossils of all geological ages" as minerals (Pub.Res.C. § 6407), that statute is limited to mineral deposits reserved to the State and "has no bearing whatever on the interpretation of deeds between private parties." [Bambauer v. Menjoulet (1963) 214 CA2d 871, 875, 29 CR 874, 877]

(2) [4:52] Preexisting lease of rights: It is not uncommon to find an owner's fee interest is subject to a mineral, oil and gas "lease." The "lessor" may be the current owner or a predecessor owner. The amount to be paid may be a fixed periodic sum (typically annual) or a percentage (or royalties) of that which is mined from the property.

(a) [4:53] Lease creates "profit a prendre" interest: So-called mineral, oil and gas "leases" are actually "profits a prendre" (an interest in the fee owner's real property in the nature of an "incorporeal hereditament")—i.e., a right of entry together with the right to remove certain materials or profits from the land. [See Dabney-Johnston Oil Corp. v.

Walden (1935) 4 C2d 637, 649, 52 P2d 237, 243; Kennecott Corp. v. Union Oil Co. of Calif. (1987) 196 CA3d 1179, 1186, 242 CR 403, 407; and Friedman, Garcia & Hoy, Cal. Prac. Guide: Landlord-Tenant (TRG), Ch. 2A]

Mineral, oil and gas "leases" generally do not transfer any possessory right in favor of the "lessee." However, some oil and gas leases provide the lessee with a right of surface entry (if no such right is granted, the lessee must arrange for lateral subterranean access from an adjoining owner).

(3) [4:53.1] Reservation of mineral, oil and gas rights: Sometimes when landowners transfer their ownership interest in land, they reserve an interest in the mineral, oil and gas beneath the land's surface (i.e., the landowners create two separate fee simple estates in the land, each of which has the same status and rank). For example, in the 1950's and 1960's, landowners transferred 19 parcels of land to various individuals by grant deed, but reserved a partial interest in the "oil, gas, and other hydrocarbons and minerals" beneath the surface. Once severed, the surface and mineral estates changed hands over the years. The owners of the surface estate (mining companies) decided to extract sand and gravel through open-pit excavation. The mineral rights holders (descendants of the original grantors) each claimed a one-half interest in the mining proceeds (i.e., the sand and gravel). At issue was whether "minerals" in the original reservations included rights to mine sand and gravel. [Vulcan Lands, Inc. v. Currie (2023) 98 CA5th 113, 117, 123, 316 CR3d 494, 497, 502]

In deciding whether the term "minerals" encompassed sand and gravel, the court determined its "overarching goal" was to discern the original parties' mutual intent, first by resorting to the plain language in the grant deeds and by considering extrinsic evidence where the plain language was ambiguous. If evidence of the parties' specific intent did not resolve the issue, then the "general intent" of the reservation would control. Applying all those factors to the record, the court concluded the mineral rights holders had a one-half interest in the mining proceeds because sand and gravel have commercial value, can be mined, and had been mined in the area since the 1920's. [See Vulcan Lands, Inc. v. Currie, supra, 98 CA5th at 122-125, 133-134, 316 CR3d at 501-504, 510 & fn. 5 (also concluding reservations in any CA grant are interpreted in favor of the grantor per Civ.C. § 1069)]

b. [4:54] Air space; unobstructed views: Despite Civ.C. § 829 (fee owner's interest extends to "everything permanently situated … above" the land), ownership of air space is limited to so much space above the land as one can reasonably and beneficially use and enjoy—a question of fact in each case. [United States v. Causby (1946) 328 US 256, 264-265, 66 S.Ct. 1062, 1067-1068]

Moreover, landowners have no right to an unobstructed view over adjoining property. Indeed, "as a general rule, a landowner has no natural right to air, light or an unobstructed view and the law is reluctant to imply such a right." [Boxer v. City of Beverly Hills (2016) 246 CA4th 1212, 1219, 201 CR3d 371, 375-376 (noting such rights may be created by Legislature, private parties through easements or CC&Rs and by local governments through adoption of height limits)—residents could not maintain inverse condemnation claim against city for planting redwood trees in park that obstructed residents' views; see also Eisen v. Tavangarian (2019) 36 CA5th 626, 638-640, 646-647, 248 CR3d 744, 754-757, 761-762 (citing Boxer with approval)—although CC&R provisions that controlled homes' basic size and limited construction of "structures" did not preclude renovations to defendant/neighbor's second story, plaintiff/property owners fully entitled to enforce CC&R provision limiting neighbor's hedge height]

6. [4:55] Lateral and Subjacent Support: Real property owners are entitled to the "lateral and subjacent support" which their land receives from adjoining land, subject to the adjoining landowner's right "to make proper and usual excavations on the same for purposes of construction or improvement …" [See Civ.C. § 832; Sargent v. Jaegeling (1927) 83 CA 485, 487, 256 P 1116, 1117—owner's "natural" right]

7. [4:56] Water Rights: Groundwater in its natural condition is not "owned" by anyone in the sense of a proprietary ownership interest. [State of Calif. v. Sup.Ct. (Underwriters at Lloyd's of London) (2000) 78 CA4th 1019, 1031-1032, 93 CR2d 276, 286]

a. [4:56.1] Landowner's right of reasonable use: A landowner's right to water or the use or flow of water in or from any natural stream or watercourse is "limited to such water as shall be reasonably required for the beneficial use to be served"; that right "does not … extend to the waste or unreasonable use or unreasonable method of use or unreasonable method of diversion of water." [Water C. §§ 100 & 101; Cal.Const. Art. X, § 2; see also Montana v. Wyoming (2011) 563 US 368, 376, 131 S.Ct. 1765, 1772—"beneficial use" concept restricts landowners to amount of water necessary to irrigate land by making reasonable use of water (discussed further at ¶ 4:110.9a ff.); Dow v. Lassen Irrig. Co. (2022) 79 CA5th 308, 328, 294

CR3d 643, 658—water use must be reasonable in relation to reasonable requirements of all other owners of lands riparian to same water source]

Simply stated, landowners do not own water on or below the surface of the land, but merely have the right to use that water on a reasonable basis. What is a "reasonable" use or method of use is a question of fact to be determined according to the circumstances of each particular case. [See Light v. State Water Resources Control Bd. (2014) 226 CA4th 1463, 1479, 173 CR3d 200, 210 (noting courts have never defined what constitutes unreasonable use because reasonableness of particular use depends largely on circumstances); People ex rel. State Water Resources Control Bd. v. Forni (1976) 54 CA3d 743, 749-750, 126 CR 851, 854-855; see also Peabody v. City of Vallejo (1935) 2 C2d 351, 367, 40 P2d 486, 491; Tulare Irrig. Dist. v. Lindsay-Strathmore Irrig. Dist. (1935) 3 C2d 489, 567, 45 P2d 972, 1007]

b. [4:56.2] Nature of State's "ownership": Groundwater is the "property of the people of the State" (Water C. § 102), but that does not give the State "ownership" as the term is commonly understood. Despite Civ.C. § 669 (all property has an owner) and Civ.C. § 670 (State is the owner of all property of which there is no other owner), the State's "ownership" of groundwater does not include any power of possession and use to the exclusion of others or any proprietary element. The State's power under the Water Code, as distinct from "ownership," is simply the "power to control and regulate use." [State of Calif. v. Sup.Ct. (Underwriters at Lloyd's of London) (2000) 78 CA4th 1019, 1027-1032, 93 CR2d 276, 283-287; see also State of Mississippi v. Tennessee (2021) _ US _, _, 142 S.Ct. 31, 40-41—although states have full jurisdiction over waters within their borders, they do not have exclusive ownership/control over interstate waters flowing within their boundaries; Light v. State Water Resources Control Bd. (2014) 226 CA4th 1463, 1473, 1484-1485, 173 CR3d 200, 205, 215—Board may administer state's water resources by enacting regulations and pursuing judicial and quasi-judicial proceedings]

8. [4:57] Leases: Leases are personal property, although they represent "interests" in real property. A "lease" conveys a possessory interest in real property, and a "leasehold" is "an estate in real property." [Callahan v. Martin (1935) 3 C2d 110, 118, 43 P2d 788, 792; Parker v. Sup.Ct. (Dwight) (1970) 9 CA3d 397, 400, 88 CR 352, 354; see also Friedman, Garcia & Hoy, Cal. Prac. Guide: Landlord-Tenant (TRG), Ch. 2A]

a. [4:58] Leases for term exceeding one year subject to statute of frauds: An agreement to lease real property for a term exceeding one year must be in writing and signed by the obligated parties. [Civ.C. § 1624(a)(3); see also Smyth v. Berman (2019) 31 CA5th 183, 197, 242 CR3d 336, 348 (applying § 1624(a)(3) to right of first refusal to purchase property in lease for term exceeding one year)—right of first refusal expired when leasehold ended; Bed, Bath & Beyond of La Jolla, Inc. v. La Jolla Village Square Venture Partners (1997) 52 CA4th 867, 877, 60 CR2d 830, 836—lease for term exceeding one year subject to § 1624(a)(3) notwithstanding provision for cancellation or termination within one year of execution of lease and before commencement of lease term]

Cross-refer: The statute of frauds in connection with the purchase and sale of real property is discussed at ¶ 4:263 ff.

b. [4:59] Conveyancing instrument: Leases are transferred by assignment. Generally, it is not necessary to record an assignment of the seller lessor's interest in a lease, even if the subject lease is recorded (but see Ch. 7 regarding ground leases and, in particular, ¶ 7:199 ff., 7:252 ff.).

• FORM: (Landlord's) Assignment of Leases, see Form 4:E.

9. [4:60] Property Ownership, Operation and Maintenance Contracts: Contracts pertaining to the use, ownership and operation of real property to be sold may be significant in number and substance. Such contracts do not necessarily encumber the realty or a new owner's interest (i.e., they are not "covenants running with the land"; see ¶ 4:63 ff.); even so, they may be desirable for the buyer to assume.

For example, property management agreements, landscaping contracts, air conditioning service contracts, contracts for laundry facilities, janitorial service contracts, and a host of other service contracts might properly be the subject of the "property" to be transferred.

➪ [4:61] PRACTICE POINTER: Any such contracts that the buyer wishes to assume should be included on a schedule in the purchase agreement and assigned at the closing. The buyer should also take an assignment from the seller of all construction warranties given by third parties to the seller.

a. [4:62] Conveyancing instrument: The kinds of contracts noted at ¶ 4:60 are conveyed by an assignment (see Form 4:D). As with leases (¶ 4:59), it ordinarily is not necessary to record the assignment even if the subject contract is of record.

10. [4:63] Covenants Running With the Land: "Certain covenants, contained in grants of … real property, are appurtenant to such estates, and pass with them, so as to bind [subsequent owners] … Such covenants are said to run with the land." [Civ.C. § 1460; see also Civ.C. §§ 1461-1470; Citizens for Covenant Compliance v. Anderson (1995) 12 C4th 345, 353, 47 CR2d 898, 903—"covenant is said to run with the land if it binds not only the person who entered into it, but also later owners and assigns who did not personally enter into it"; Monterey/Santa Cruz County Bldg. & Construction Trades Council v. Cypress Marina Heights LP (2011) 191 CA4th 1500, 1517-1520, 120 CR3d 830, 843-846—deed covenants requiring payment of prevailing wage to workers on all land development, entered into between city's redevelopment agency and governmental entity created to transition military base to civilian use, ran with land in perpetuity, thereby binding all successor developers]

a. [4:64] No separate conveyancing instrument required: In effect, covenants running with the land are part of the bundle of rights (and obligations) included within the real property conveyed. Both the liability for performance of the covenants and the corresponding benefits are transferred by the deed and, therefore, no separate conveyancing instrument is necessary. [Civ.C. § 1460—successor owners bound by covenants running with the land "in the same manner as if they had personally entered into them"; but see also Civ.C. § 1465—"covenant running with the land binds those only who acquire the whole estate of the covenantor in some part of the property"; Committee to Save Beverly Highlands Homes Ass'n v. Beverly Highlands Homes Ass'n (2001) 92 CA4th 1247, 1269, 112 CR2d 732, 748—"covenant running with the land is created by language in a deed or other document showing an agreement to do or refrain from doing something with respect to use of the land"]

(1) [4:64.1] Compare—conveyance required to bring enforceable covenants running with the land into existence: Of course, no enforceable covenants running with the land spring into existence until an actual conveyance subject to the covenants is made. "The issue of whether [a] covenant runs with the land arises when the covenantor or the covenantee, or both, convey their estates in the property and the dispute is between successors of either [of them] or both." [Del Taco, Inc. v. University Real Estate Partnership V (2003) 111 CA4th 16, 23, 3 CR3d 311, 316 (quoting from 8 Miller & Starr, California Real Estate (3d ed. 1997) § 24.1) (emphasis added; internal quotes omitted)]

So long as both the benefited and burdened parcels are under common ownership, the purported covenants (even if recorded) are not effective and can be modified or rescinded. [Citizens for Covenant Compliance v. Anderson (1995) 12 C4th 345, 365, 47 CR2d 898, 911; see also Monterey/Santa Cruz County Bldg. & Construction Trades Council v. Cypress Marina Heights LP (2011) 191 CA4th 1500, 1519, 120 CR3d 830, 845—merely recording restrictions does not create mutual servitudes—i.e., they "spring into existence" only upon actual conveyance]

b. [4:65] Which covenants: In California, only covenants specified by statute (Civ.C. § 1457 et seq.) run with the land "and those which are incidental thereto." [Civ.C. § 1461; Citizens for Covenant Compliance v. Anderson (1995) 12 C4th 345, 353, 47 CR2d 898, 903; see also Monterey/Santa Cruz County Bldg. & Construction Trades Council v. Cypress Marina Heights LP (2011) 191 CA4th 1500, 1517, 120 CR3d 830, 843—covenants can run with the land under either Civ.C. § 1462 or Civ.C. § 1468 (see below)]

Covenants benefiting a property run with the land if they are "contained in a grant … made for the direct benefit of the property …" [Civ.C. § 1462; Citizens for Covenant Compliance v. Anderson, supra, 12 C4th at 353, 47 CR2d at 903; see also Self v. Sharafi (2013) 220 CA4th 483, 489-490, 163 CR3d 71, 76-77 (noting § 1462 applies to covenants directly benefitting conveyed (not retained) property)—building restriction that naturally enhanced value of property conveyed 40 years earlier deemed fully enforceable under § 1462 even though it burdened adjoining parcel retained by grantor; Monterey/Santa Cruz County Bldg. & Construction Trades Council v. Cypress Marina Heights LP, supra, 191 CA4th at 1517, 120 CR3d at 843—§ 1462 inapplicable to covenants that "burden" property]

Covenants burdening a property (i.e., landowner covenantor's obligations) run with the land to bind successor owners of the covenantor's property if the requirements specified in Civ.C. § 1468 (¶ 4:66 ff.) are satisfied. [Citizens for Covenant Compliance v. Anderson, supra, 12 C4th at 353-354, 47 CR2d at 903-904 & fn. 3 (residential use only deed restriction); Monterey/Santa Cruz County Bldg. & Construction Trades Council v. Cypress Marina Heights LP, supra, 191 CA4th at 1518, 120 CR3d at 844 (prevailing wage deed restriction); Alfaro v. Community Housing Improvement System & Planning Ass'n, Inc. (2009) 171 CA4th 1356, 1376, 124 CR3d 271, 290 (affordable housing deed restriction); but see ¶ 4:66.5 (special rule for environmental restrictions)]

(1) [4:66] General requirements (obligations running with the land): Ordinarily, a covenant "runs with the land" so as to create a right or restriction affecting all current and future owners of the land only if all of the following requirements are satisfied (Civ.C. § 1468; Monterey/Santa Cruz County Bldg. & Construction Trades Council v. Cypress Marina Heights LP (2011) 191 CA4th 1500, 1517-1518, 120 CR3d 830, 844):

- Description of benefited and burdened parcels: The covenantor's land (burdened parcel) and the covenantee's land (benefited parcel) must be "particularly described" in the document containing the covenants (Civ.C. § 1468(a); see ¶ 4:66.1);

- Intent to bind successors: The document containing the covenants must expressly state the intent to bind successive owners of the burdened land for the benefit of the covenantee's land (Civ.C. § 1468(b));

- Purpose of covenants: The covenants must relate to the use, repair, maintenance or improvement of, or payment of taxes and assessments on, the land (Civ.C. § 1468(c));

- Recordation: The document containing the covenants must be recorded in the office of the recorder for each county where the property (or any part of it) is located (Civ.C. § 1468(d)).

(a) [4:66.1] Description of property by reference suffices: Although Civ.C. § 1468(a) states that the instrument containing the covenants must "particularly describe" both the burdened and benefited land (¶ 4:66), the statute is satisfied by reference to proper legal descriptions in another instrument. [Kapner v. Meadowlark Ranch Ass'n (2004) 116 CA4th 1182, 1187, 11 CR3d 138, 143—amended covenant document's reference to prior recorded covenant document containing proper legal description satisfied § 1468(a)]

Likewise, § 1468(a) is satisfied where an instrument containing covenants includes a proper legal description for an entire property (e.g., ranch, subdivision, etc.). [See Alfaro v. Community Housing Improvement System & Planning Ass'n, Inc. (2009) 171 CA4th 1356, 1372-1374, 124 CR3d 271, 287-289—recorded affordable housing deed restriction that particularly described entire subdivision applied with equal force to individual lots]

(b) [4:66.2] Recordation of planned community CC&Rs with subdivision map suffices: Covenants, conditions and restrictions (CC&Rs) in a planned community subdivision need not necessarily be recited or referenced in a deed or other document each time an individual parcel in the subdivision is sold. The CC&Rs bind all future owners in the subdivision so long as they are recorded with the subdivision map before any parcel in the subdivision is originally sold, and the recorded document describes the property to be governed by the CC&Rs and states it is to bind all purchasers and their successors. [Citizens for Covenant Compliance v. Anderson (1995) 12 C4th 345, 349, 47 CR2d 898, 901; see Committee to Save Beverly Highlands Homes Ass'n v. Beverly Highlands Homes Ass'n (2001) 92 CA4th 1247, 1270, 112 CR2d 732, 748]

Such recordation gives all subsequent purchasers in the subdivision constructive notice of the CC&Rs (Civ.C. § 1215). Consequently, all subsequent purchasers are deemed to acquire their parcels with knowledge that the parcels are subject to the recorded covenants and restrictions; they thereby impliedly intend and agree to accept the burdens and benefits even if there is no additional documentation referring to the CC&Rs at the time of the conveyance. [Citizens for Covenant Compliance v. Anderson (1995) 12 C4th 345, 365-366, 47 CR2d 898, 911; see also Colyear v. Rolling Hills Community Ass'n of Rancho Palos Verdes (2024) 100 CA5th 110, 125-127, 318 CR3d 805, 817-818 (certified for partial publication)—tree-cutting covenant contained in original recorded declaration that established subdivision's general plan did not bind purchaser of property not described therein (also concluding purchaser did not impliedly agree to be bound by original declaration's tree-cutting covenant because subsequently recorded declaration that governed his property did not contain said covenant and neither his deeds nor title reports referenced original declaration); Alfaro v. Community Housing Improvement System & Planning Ass'n, Inc. (2009) 171 CA4th 1356, 1372-1374, 124 CR3d 271, 287-289—recording affordable housing deed restriction "well before" original sale of subdivision's parcels gave constructive notice of its contents notwithstanding absence of any reference to restriction in subsequent grant deeds]

1) [4:66.2a] Arbitration provisions contained in CC&Rs: A homeowners association is bound by arbitration provisions contained in CC&Rs that are executed and recorded prior to the time the association comes into existence. This is so even though the arbitration provisions were never contractually agreed to by the association: "[I]t is settled under the statutory and decisional law pertaining to common interest developments that the covenants and terms in the recorded declaration reflect written promises and agreements that are subject to enforcement against the association … Even when strict privity of contract is lacking, the Davis-Stirling Act ensures that the covenants, conditions, and restrictions of a recorded declaration—which manifest the intent and expectations of the developer and those who take title to property in a community interest development—will be honored and enforced unless proven unreasonable.” [See Pinnacle Museum Tower Ass'n v. Pinnacle Market Develop. (US), LLC (2012) 55 C4th 223, 232, 247-252, 145 CR3d 514, 519, 533-535 (also finding subject arbitration provisions neither procedurally nor substantively unconscionable)]

2) [4:66.2b] Compare—unrecorded guidelines, etc.: Various unrecorded guidelines, regulations and rules adopted by the homeowners association also may bind future owners in a planned community (¶ 4:67.7 ff.).

(c) [4:66.3] Compare—notice of noncompliance with CC&Rs not recordable: A notice of noncompliance with CC&Rs (indicating a homeowner's violation of recorded restrictions on the homeowner's property) is not a legally recordable instrument because it does not affect the title to or possession of real property (see Gov.C. §§ 27279(a), 27280(a)). Therefore, its recordation cannot encumber title and is subject to expungement. [Ward v. Sup.Ct. (Beverlywood Homes Ass'n) (1997) 55 CA4th 60, 65-67, 63 CR2d 731, 733-734]

(2) [4:66.5] Special rule for environmental restrictions: Environmental restrictions are enforceable covenants running with the land that bind all successive owners of the restricted parcel even though there is no identified benefited parcel (as ordinarily required pursuant to Civ.C. § 1468(a), ¶ 4:66), provided all of the following requirements are satisfied (Civ.C. § 1471):

- Description of covenantor's land (burdened parcel): The document containing the covenants must “particularly describe” the land of the covenantor that is affected (burdened) by the covenants (Civ.C. § 1471(a));

- Intent to bind successors: The document containing the covenants must expressly state the intent to bind successive owners of the burdened land for the benefit of the covenantee (Civ.C. § 1471(b));

- Purpose of covenants: The covenants must relate to the use of the burdened land and the restrictions imposed by the covenants must be reasonably necessary to protect present or future human health or safety or the environment as a result of the presence on the land of hazardous materials (as defined in Health & Saf.C. § 25260) (Civ.C. § 1471(c));

- Recordation and “environmental restriction” title: The document containing the covenants must be recorded in the office of the recorder for each county where the land (or any part of it) is located, and the recorded document must include in its title the words “Environmental Restriction” (Civ.C. § 1471(d)).

(a) [4:66.6] Purpose: By eliminating the Civ.C. § 1468(a) requirement that there be an identified benefited parcel, Civ.C. § 1471 facilitates the use and implementation of “risk assessment/management plans” for contaminated properties as an effective alternative to full-blown, potentially “cost prohibitive” remediation.

For example, appropriate governmental agencies (California Department of Toxic Substances, etc.) might agree not to require complete remediation of a contaminated industrial property so long as the owner agrees to an environmental restriction that the property not be developed or operated for residential or other incompatible purposes (such as a school, park, hospital, day care facility, etc.). Under federal and state “Superfund” laws, the owner runs the risk of clean-up liability for a release of hazardous materials on the property caused by its buyer or future successors (see ¶ 5:60 ff., 5:205 ff.); but by recording the environmental restriction as a covenant running with the land when it sells the property, the owner/seller can maintain control over the property to restrict the actions of future owners or operators and thus minimize its exposure to future potential clean-up liability.

Were it not for Civ.C. § 1471, such an environmental restriction would not be effective to bind the buyer (covenantor) and its successors unless the seller (covenantee) owned adjacent land that benefited by the restriction (Civ.C. § 1468(a), ¶ 4:66). Of course, this is not the case where the seller is transferring all of its interest in the contaminated property and owns no other property nearby.

Cross-refer: The use of environmental restrictions in a purchase and sale transaction is treated further in Ch. 5 in connection with environmental hazards liability.

(3) [4:67] Distinguish—"personal" covenants: Unless all of the Civ.C. § 1468 or Civ.C. § 1471 conditions are satisfied, a recorded covenant is "personal" and does not "run with the land"—i.e., buyers and all successive owners are bound only if they expressly assume the obligations (otherwise, the seller remains bound even after the conveyance). [See Glenbrook Homeowners Ass'n v. Tahoe Regional Planning Agency (9th Cir. 2005) 425 F3d 611, 619—right to use community pier reserved in deed conveying parcel was "purely contractual" personal covenant that did not run with land]

In contrast, covenants running with the land attach to ownership of the property and are not, by their definition, "personal" in nature. Thus, once the estate and property are transferred, the seller is no longer personally obligated. [See Civ.C. § 1466—landowners not liable for breach of covenant running with the land after they have "parted with" the land; see also Del Taco, Inc. v. University Real Estate Partnership V (2003) 111 CA4th 16, 23, 3 CR3d 311, 316—"While a personal covenant only obligates the original parties, a covenant that runs with the land is binding on successive owners"]

c. [4:67.5] Enforcement of recorded covenants: Homeowners may enforce a recorded covenant running with the land by either seeking an injunction to prevent further violations of the restriction or suing for damages. [See Cutujian v. Benedict Hills Estates Ass'n (1996) 41 CA4th 1379, 1385, 49 CR2d 166, 171 (money damages); Ezer v. Fuchsloch (1979) 99 CA3d 849, 853-854, 160 CR 486, 487 (injunctive relief)]

A recorded covenant generally will be enforced unless it:

— violates public policy;

— bears no rational relationship to the protection, preservation, operation or purpose of the affected land; or

— imposes a disproportionate burden on the affected land that greatly outweighs any beneficial effects. [Nahrstedt v. Lakeside Village Condominium Ass'n (1994) 8 C4th 361, 386, 33 CR2d 63, 78; Harvey v. Landing Homeowners Ass'n (2008) 162 CA4th 809, 819, 76 CR3d 41, 49; see Alfaro v. Community Housing Improvement System & Planning Ass'n, Inc. (2009) 171 CA4th 1356, 1373-1374, 124 CR3d 271, 288-289 (rejecting argument that affordable housing deed restriction depressed market values and thus violated public policy)]

(1) [4:67.6] Compare—enforcement as equitable servitude: Restrictions on the use of property that do not meet the requirements of covenants running with the land may be enforceable as equitable servitudes provided the person to be bound had notice of their existence at the time of purchase. [Nahrstedt v. Lakeside Village Condominium Ass'n (1994) 8 C4th 361, 375, 33 CR2d 63, 71; see Southern Calif. School of Theology v. Claremont Graduate Univ. (2021) 60 CA5th 1, 4-5, 8, 274 CR3d 180, 183, 185-186—grant deed conditions limiting property's use to education and giving grantor "first offer" rights are enforceable as equitable servitudes (see discussion at ¶ 8:209.2); Cebular v. Cooper Arms Homeowners Ass'n (2006) 142 CA4th 106, 122, 47 CR3d 666, 677—idea underlying equitable servitude is that landowner's promise to refrain from particular conduct pertaining to land creates equitable interest in land in favor of beneficiary of promise; Committee to Save Beverly Highlands Homes Ass'n v. Beverly Highlands Homes Ass'n (2001) 92 CA4th 1247, 1269, 112 CR2d 732, 748—equitable servitude may be created when covenant does not run with land but equity requires it to be enforced]

(2) [4:67.7] Compare—enforcement of unrecorded guidelines, regulations and rules: A planned community's homeowners association may adopt reasonable guidelines, regulations and/or rules for land use and property improvement projects (e.g., site and design standards, aesthetic criteria, etc.). However, unlike recorded covenants running with the land (¶ 4:67.5), and equitable servitudes for which the person to be bound also had notice (¶ 4:67.6), no presumption of reasonableness attaches to these unrecorded restrictions. Rather, they are viewed under a "straight reasonableness test," which may affect their enforceability. [See Dolan-King v. Rancho Santa Fe Ass'n (2000) 81 CA4th 965, 975-978, 97 CR2d 280, 287-289 (discussing recorded and unrecorded restrictions in planned residential development); Pacific Hills Homeowners Ass'n v. Prun (2008) 160 CA4th 1557, 1563-1564, 73 CR3d 653, 657-658 (noting statutory definition of restriction encompasses unrecorded guidelines, rules and regulations)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

A restriction's "reasonableness" is evaluated by its effect on the common interest development as a whole—not from an individual homeowner's perspective. [Pacific Hills Homeowners Ass'n v. Prun, supra, 160 CA4th at 1566-1567, 73 CR3d at 660; Dolan-King v. Rancho Santa Fe Ass'n, supra, 81 CA4th at 975, 97 CR2d at 287]

[4:67.8 - 4:67.14] Reserved.

(3) [4:67.15] Five-year statute of limitations; recorded and unrecorded restrictions: An action for violation of a covenant or other restriction on the use of real property (see Civ.C. § 784, defining "restriction" to include covenants, conditions, equitable servitudes and any other form of restriction) must be brought within five years of actual or constructive discovery of the violation. [CCP § 336(b); Pacific Hills Homeowners Ass'n v. Prun (2008) 160 CA4th 1557, 1563, 73 CR3d 653, 658—limitations period applies to both recorded and unrecorded restrictions]

(a) [4:67.16] Covenant not abrogated by failure to commence timely suit: Failure to commence an action for violation of a restrictive covenant within the five-year period (¶ 4:67.15) does not waive the right to sue for any other violation. Nor does a failure to enforce a violation within the statutory period itself imply a waiver or abandonment of the covenant. [CCP § 336(b)]

However, failure to commence timely suit as to one violation may, when combined with other circumstances, be grounds for waiver or estoppel, or evidence of abandonment or obsolescence of the covenant. [See CCP § 336, Law Rev. Comm'n Comment]

(4) [4:67.17] Laches defense: Even a timely-filed action for violation of a covenant or other restriction (¶ 4:67.15) may be barred under the doctrine of laches. This is so if plaintiff has unreasonably delayed enforcement and either (a) acquiesced in the act complained about, or (b) caused prejudice to the defendant as a result of the delay. [Johnson v. City of Loma Linda (2000) 24 C4th 61, 68, 99 CR2d 316, 321; see Pacific Hills Homeowners Ass'n v. Prun (2008) 160 CA4th 1557, 1564-1565, 73 CR3d 653, 658-659 (criticizing plaintiff's 4-year delay in filing suit, but declining to find laches in absence of prejudice to defendants)]

(5) [4:67.18] Waiver defense: So too, a common interest development may waive its right to enforce a covenant or other restriction by not applying it fairly, reasonably or uniformly. "When a homeowners' association seeks to enforce the provisions of its CCRs to compel an act by one of its member owners, it is incumbent upon it to show that it has followed its own standards and procedures prior to pursuing such a remedy, that those procedures were fair and reasonable and that its substantive decision was made in good faith, and is reasonable, not arbitrary or capricious …" [Pacific Hills Homeowners Ass'n v. Prun (2008) 160 CA4th 1557, 1565-1566, 73 CR3d 653, 659 (internal quotes omitted)]

Likewise, the right to enforce a restrictive covenant in a planned development generally may be deemed waived when "substantially all of the landowners have acquiesced in a violation so as to indicate an abandonment." [Alfaro v. Community Housing Improvement System & Planning Ass'n, Inc. (2009) 171 CA4th 1356, 1380, 124 CR3d 271, 293 (internal quotes omitted) (waiver rejected under the facts)]

11. [4:68] Permits, Approvals and Applications: At the time of execution of a purchase agreement or at the closing, the seller may own (or have previously submitted various applications for) land use, building or development permits. The buyer may want to acquire those rights, permits or applications by assignment.

a. [4:69] Public permits: Public permits are issued by governmental or quasi-governmental entities—e.g., subdivision tract maps (tentative or final), permits issued by public architectural review boards, California Coastal Commission permits (Pub.Res.C. § 30000 et seq.), zoning variances, demolition permits, condominium conversion permits, building permits, etc.

(1) [4:69.1] Vacation home rentals: Cities can regulate short-term, vacation home rentals. For example, one city's ordinance allows residents to rent out their homes in the city's residential zones for periods of less than 30 days provided the owners and managers of the properties obtain permits that expire after one year. These permits are subject to renewal on an annual basis so long as the city's director makes required findings. Any vested rights the owners and managers may have, however, are limited by the permits' terms and conditions. Indeed, the rights that may "vest" through reliance on a government permit are "no greater than those specifically granted by the permit itself." [South Lake Tahoe Property Owners Group v. South Lake Tahoe (2023) 92 CA5th 735, 742-743, 748, 310 CR3d 9, 17, 21—ministerial nature of association's one-year rental permits did not entitle it to renew or grant it vested renewal rights; see also Hobbs v. City of Pacific Grove

(2022) 85 CA5th 311, 325, 301 CR3d 274, 285 (concluding plaintiffs did not have vested right to renewal given limitations on number of licenses city could issue)]

Comment: The ordinance at issue in South Lake Tahoe (above) prohibited short-term or vacation rental housing except for rentals of permanent residents' dwellings. A "permanent resident" is defined as a person who lives in their home for the majority of the year and claims a homeowner's property tax exemption. The lower court's judgment in South Lake Tahoe was reversed to the extent it found this exception did not violate the dormant Commerce Clause. [See South Lake Tahoe Property Owners Group v. South Lake Tahoe, supra, 92 CA5th at 770-771, 764, 310 CR3d at 34, 39 (concluding ordinance prohibits out-of-state owners from doing what it authorizes residents to do, i.e., rent out their homes in City's residential zones for periods of less than 30 days)]

(a) [4:69.2] Short-term rentals (STRs) in coastal zone: A substantial number of STRs are properties within California's coastal zone. Any person wishing to undertake a development in the coastal zone generally must obtain a coastal development permit in addition to any other permit required by law (Pub.Res.C. § 30600(a)). STRs, however, are not "per se" developments subject to the Coastal Act's permit requirements. Indeed, "[w]hether using a residence as an STR is a change in the density or intensity of the use of land and thus a development under the Coastal Act depends on the permissible scope of the residence's existing use." [See Coastal Protection Alliance, Inc. v. AIRBNB, INC. (2023) 95 CA5th 207, 212, 215-219, 313 CR3d 262, 265, 267-271 (internal quotes omitted) (emphasis added)—online marketplace that connected residential STR owners with renters was neither directly nor vicariously liable for allowing STR owners to list and rent unpermitted STRs on its website (acknowledging different analysis "might apply" if city's zoning does not allow STRs or distinguishes STRs from other residential uses)]

b. [4:70] Private permits: These are issued by private associations, such as private homeowners associations (e.g., approval of proposed improvements by a homeowner association's architectural review board; or a homeowner's agreement with a neighbor concerning a common wall or some other common boundary issue).

c. [4:70.1] Scope of permit: The holder of a specific use permit for real property is not the "owner" of that property where the fee title owner retains power to control the permittee's use. Instead, the permittee holds only a possessory interest in the land, comparable to the interest of a licensee (¶ 4:103) or easement holder (¶ 4:102 ff.). [See City of Los Angeles v. San Pedro Boat Works (9th Cir. 2011) 635 F3d 440, 449—holder of revocable permits to operate harbor berth not "owner" for purposes of imposing CERCLA liability (discussed further at ¶ 5:62)]

➪ [4:71] PRACTICE POINTER—UNDESIRABLE PERMITS AND APPLICATIONS*: The buyer may not wish to acquire certain kinds of permits and applications—typically, those which commit the owner to a definitive obligation (that would pass to the buyer) … such as obligations to make certain improvements, dedicate land to a public or quasi-public entity, or pay certain fees.

Since unrecorded agreements (including applications to governmental entities) generally do not constitute "covenants running with the land" which bind the property and successor owners (¶ 4:66), buyers seldom become bound to a seller's permit application simply by transfer of the deed. Review of a current title report usually will apprise counsel of all land use agreements and restrictions that will affect the buyer upon closing (see Ch. 3).

Nevertheless, if the seller is in the process of developing the property, it is prudent to investigate the status of any permit application.

d. [4:72] Conveyancing instrument: Permits and applications for permits are transferred by assignment (see Form 4:D). Recordation of the assignment is usually unnecessary.

e. [4:72.1] Preexisting unpermitted structures; effect on subsequent purchasers: A subsequent purchaser is subject to the same permit requirements as the prior property owner. [Ojavan Investors, Inc. v. Calif. Coastal Comm'n (1994) 26 CA4th 516, 526, 32 CR2d 103, 109—"It is well settled that the burdens of permits run with the land once the benefits have been accepted"; see also City of Berkeley v. 1080 Del., LLC (2015) 234 CA4th 1144, 1151, 184 CR3d 177, 182—permit conditions "remain enforceable against a subsequent owner of the property"; Serra Canyon Co. v. Calif. Coastal Comm'n (2004) 120 CA4th 663, 668, 16 CR3d 110, 113—although subsequent property owner "was not a party to the original permits, it was bound by the inaction of its predecessor in interest"]

Accordingly, if a subsequent purchaser acquires property with preexisting unpermitted structures, the subsequent purchaser can be held responsible for the permit violation. [See Lent v. Calif. Coastal Comm'n (2021) 62 CA5th 812, 824-825, 831-834, 860, 277 CR3d 106, 116-117, 122-124, 147 (denying petition to set aside cease and desist order imposing

$4,185,000 penalty against property owners who acquired property with preexisting unpermitted deck, staircase and gate that blocked public beach access easement and who refused to remove said barriers)]

12. [4:73] Claims and Causes of Action: The seller may have a legal claim, or may have commenced litigation, arising from ownership of the property—e.g., an unlawful detainer or damages action against a tenant. Typically, those legal rights should be assigned to the buyer.

It may also be desirable (or essential) for the buyer to acquire a host of other potential claims against third parties for damage to the property or nuisance. This is true whether the claim is the subject of a lawsuit, arbitration or administrative or other proceeding.

a. [4:74] Conveyancing instrument: The sale of real property does not automatically transfer related causes of action or divest the seller of legal claims pertaining to the property. [See, e.g., Vaughn v. Dame Const. Co. (1990) 223 CA3d 144, 148-149, 272 CR 261, 263-264—closing did not divest seller of standing to sue third party for construction defects] Rather, the seller's legal rights pass to the buyer only if expressly conveyed; the conveyancing instrument is an assignment (see Form 4:D).

b. [4:74.1] Other procedural steps: If the conveyance transfers the seller's rights in pending litigation, other specific procedures and documentation will be required to perfect the buyer's standing—including, a substitution of the buyer as plaintiff in the action. (See generally, Weil & Brown et al., Cal. Prac. Guide: Civ. Pro. Before Trial (TRG), Ch. 2.)

13. [4:75] Common Interest Developments: "Common interest developments" may be either residential or commercial and industrial in nature. The Davis-Stirling Common Interest Development Act (Civ.C. § 4000 et seq.) defines and governs residential common interest developments, even if they were created before the Act's 1986 effective Date. [Bear Creek Master Ass'n v. Edwards (2005) 130 CA4th 1470, 1480-1481, 31 CR3d 337, 346; see also ¶ 4:76.4]

The Commercial and Industrial Common Interest Development Act (Civ.C. § 6500 et seq.) defines and governs commercial and industrial common interest developments. While quite similar to the David-Stirling Act, the Commercial and Industrial Act differs in some respects.

The discussion that follows focuses broadly on residential common interest developments. Significant variances with commercial and industrial common interest developments are noted.

a. [4:76] Characteristics: There are a variety of forms of "common interest developments" (condominium project, planned development, stock cooperative and, in the case of residential developments, also the community apartment project; see Civ.C. §§ 4100, 6534 (commercial/industrial)). All, however, share two common characteristics:

- Individual ownership of separate lots, parcels, areas or spaces; and

- Mutual, common or reciprocal interests in or restrictions upon all of such separately-owned lots, parcels, areas or spaces.

A common interest development is created whenever a separate interest coupled with an interest in the common area or membership in the association is, or has been, conveyed, provided a declaration, condominium plan (if any) and final map or parcel map (if required pursuant to Gov.C. § 66410 et seq.) are recorded. [Civ.C. §§ 4200, 6580 (commercial/industrial); Villa De Las Palmas Homeowners Ass'n v. Terifaj (2004) 33 C4th 73, 81, 14 CR3d 67, 70; see also 85 Ops.Cal.Atty.Gen. 162]

(1) [4:76.1] "Common area": The "common area" is "the entire common interest development except the separate interests therein." The estate in the common area may be a fee simple, life estate, estate for years, or any combination thereof. [Civ.C. §§ 4095, 6532 (commercial/industrial); Committee to Save Beverly Highlands Homes Ass'n v. Beverly Highlands Homes Ass'n (2001) 92 CA4th 1247, 1268-1269, 112 CR2d 732, 747; 85 Ops.Cal.Atty.Gen. 162]

The common area estate is typically owned as tenants in common, in equal shares, one for each unit or lot in the development. However, the development's recorded declaration (¶ 4:76.3) may provide for unequal ownership among the tenants in common. [Cebular v. Cooper Arms Homeowners Ass'n (2006) 142 CA4th 106, 120, 47 CR3d 666, 675]

(2) [4:76.2] "Association": The "association" is a nonprofit corporation or unincorporated association created for the purpose of managing the common interest development. [Civ.C. §§ 4080, 6528 (commercial/industrial); Villa De Las Palmas Homeowners Ass'n v. Terifaj (2004) 33 C4th 73, 81, 14 CR3d 67, 70-71; 85 Ops.Cal.Atty.Gen. 162; see also

Berryman v. Merit Property Mgmt., Inc. (2007) 152 CA4th 1544, 1550, 62 CR3d 177, 183—homeowners generally must join association]

(a) [4:76.2a] Managing agents (residential developments): Associations may hire managing agents to conduct day-to-day operations (see generally, Civ.C. §§ 4158 & 5375 et seq.). For example, managing agents may facilitate ownership transfers on behalf of the association when residences in the development are sold by providing sellers with the extensive documentation the sellers are required to give prospective buyers (¶ 4:79) and causing title records to be transferred. [Berryman v. Merit Property Mgmt., Inc. (2007) 152 CA4th 1544, 1550-1551, 62 CR3d 177, 183]

Prior to processing a written request for this documentation, the association's managing agent also may furnish the seller's authorized recipient with a copy of a statutorily-required written or electronic estimate of the fees to be assessed against the seller for providing the documentation, prepared on the form described in Civ.C. § 4528. [See Civ.C. § 4530(a)(1), (b)(2), (4)—cost of providing such documentation must be separately stated and billed from other charges relating to transfer or sales transaction]

The association itself is statutorily prohibited from charging the seller a fee greater than the association's actual costs to transfer title records, may only charge a "reasonable fee" based on its actual cost of procuring, preparing, reproducing and delivering the requested documents, and may not charge additional fees for electronic delivery of those documents in lieu of hard copy delivery (Civ.C. §§ 4530(b)(1) & 4575). Managing agents, on the other hand, are not so constrained. [See Berryman v. Merit Property Mgmt., Inc., supra, 152 CA4th at 1551-1552, 62 CR3d at 183-184 (decided under former law)—association "costs" include fees and profit managing agent charges for its services]

(3) [4:76.3] CC&Rs in recorded declaration enforceable as equitable servitudes: Covenants and restrictions in a common interest development's recorded declaration are enforceable as equitable servitudes unless "unreasonable," and they inure to the benefit of and bind all of the development's separate interest owners. [Civ.C. §§ 5975, 6856 (commercial/industrial); see Villa De Las Palmas Homeowners Ass'n v. Terifaj (2004) 33 C4th 73, 86, 14 CR3d 67, 75; Almanor Lakeside Villas Owners Ass'n v. Carson (2016) 246 CA4th 761, 773, 201 CR3d 268, 277; and Pinnacle Museum Tower Ass'n v. Pinnacle Market Develop. (US), LLC (2012) 55 C4th 223, 231, 237, 145 CR3d 514, 519, 524—once first buyer manifests acceptance of CC&Rs by purchasing unit, common interest development is created and all reasonable recorded terms become enforceable servitudes that bind all separate interest owners]

The recorded covenants and restrictions are presumptively reasonable unless found to be arbitrary or in violation of a fundamental public policy. [See Villa De Las Palmas Homeowners Ass'n v. Terifaj, supra, 33 C4th at 88, 14 CR3d at 76; Pinnacle Museum Tower Ass'n v. Pinnacle Market Develop. (US), LLC (2012) 55 C4th 223, 239, 145 CR3d 514, 525—reasonableness presumption requires recorded CC&Rs be enforced unless wholly arbitrary or violative of public policy, or they impose burden on land that far outweighs any benefit; Aldea Dos Vientos v. CalAtlantic Group, Inc. (2020) 44 CA5th 1073, 1077-1079, 258 CR3d 285, 288-289—CC&R provision giving developer veto power over association's claims despite members' vote to proceed with arbitration violated public policy]

(a) [4:76.4] Including restrictions added by postpurchase amended declaration: Under traditional property law, deed restrictions must be agreed to at the time of purchase or be properly recorded prepurchase so that the buyer minimally can be charged with constructive notice (¶ 4:66.2, 4:67.6). But the statutes governing both residential and commercial/industrial common interest developments (Civ.C. §§ 4000 et seq. & 6500 et seq.) contain no such limitation (Civ.C. §§ 5975(a) & 6856(a) do not distinguish between preexisting declarations and subsequently amended ones) and in fact contain several provisions authorizing amended declarations. As such, pursuant to §§ 5975(a) & 6856(a), restrictions in duly adopted amended declarations are enforceable against the development's existing unit owners—i.e., even though not recorded at the time those units were purchased. [Villa De Las Palmas Homeowners Ass'n v. Terifaj (2004) 33 C4th 73, 87, 14 CR3d 67, 75]

(b) [4:76.5] Arbitration provisions contained in CC&Rs: See ¶ 4:66.2a.

b. [4:77] Condominiums: The condominium is perhaps the most recognizable "common interest development." A condominium "consists of an undivided interest in common in a portion of real property coupled with a separate interest in space called a unit, the boundaries of which are described on a recorded final map, parcel map, or condominium plan in sufficient detail to locate all boundaries thereof." [Civ.C. §§ 4125(b), 6542(b) (commercial/industrial); Bear Creek Master Ass'n v. Edwards (2005) 130 CA4th 1470, 1479, 31 CR3d 337, 345; 85 Ops.Cal.Atty.Gen. 162; see also Civ.C. § 783 (describing duration of condominium estate)]

Thus, condominium owners own the air space of their respective units (the existence of a structure or building is not required; Bear Creek Master Ass'n v. Edwards, supra, 130 CA4th at 1479-1480, 31 CR3d at 345-346), and often have exclusive use of a designated balcony, patio, storage area and parking space. Swimming pool grounds, recreation halls and other common areas of the project are typically owned by the various condominium owners as tenants in common (see Civ.C. §§ 4500, 6650 (commercial/industrial); Abers v. Rounsavell (2010) 189 CA4th 348, 360, 116 CR3d 860, 868); and the sale of an owner's unit also transfers the owner's undivided interest in the common areas (Civ.C. §§ 4630, 6662 (commercial/industrial)). [See 85 Ops.Cal.Atty.Gen. 162] (Occasionally, the developer may retain ownership of the common areas and lease it to the owners or homeowners association.)

Some unique considerations apply in the purchase or sale of a condominium:

(1) [4:78] CC&Rs: Condominium owners are usually bound by various covenants, conditions and restrictions (CC&Rs) contained in the homeowners association bylaws, articles of incorporation, rules and regulations, and/or agreements. Prospective buyers should be careful to review the CC&Rs for such important points as restrictions on leasing, pet policies and owner rights to make improvements to their individual units. Likewise, the bylaws should be reviewed to determine how the governing board is elected.

(2) [4:79] Documents to be provided prospective buyer (residential developments): As soon as practicable before the transfer of title, a condominium (or other common interest development) seller must deliver to the prospective buyer the following documents (Civ.C. § 4525(a)):

• A copy of the “governing documents” (bylaws, association's operating rules, and articles of incorporation, or if the association is not incorporated, a written statement from an authorized association representative so stating; see Civ.C. § 4150; see also Gov.C. § 12956.1—before providing copy of governing documents to others, homeowners association must affix prescribed statement regarding any discriminatory restrictive covenants);

• A copy of the most recent financial documents distributed by the homeowners association to its members pursuant to Civ.C. §§ 5300-5320 (annual pro forma budget, notice of anticipated special assessment levies, statement of procedures used to establish and calculate reserves, etc.; see Civ.C. §§ 5300-5320);

• A “true statement” in writing obtained from an authorized representative of the homeowners association regarding the amount of the current regular and special assessments and fees, as well as any unpaid assessments levied upon the seller's interest in the development (including information on monetary fines and penalties, late charges, interest, and costs of collection that, as of the date of the statement, are or may be made a lien on the seller's interest pursuant to Civ.C. §§ 5650-5740);

• A copy or summary of any notice of a meeting of the board of directors previously sent to the seller pursuant to Civ.C. § 5855 (concerning the possible imposition of discipline against the seller), setting forth any alleged violation of the governing documents that remains unresolved (such notice does not waive the association's right to enforce the governing documents against the seller or prospective buyer with respect to any violation);

• A copy of the initial list of design/construction defects provided to each member of the association pursuant to Civ.C. § 6000 (unless the association and builder subsequently enter into a settlement agreement or otherwise resolve the matter and the association complies with Civ.C. § 6100 regarding disclosure to association members of the resolution of the defect claim against the builder); the initial list of defects must include a statement that a final determination concerning accuracy and completeness of the list has not been made;

• A copy of the latest information provided for in Civ.C. § 6100 (concerning disclosure to association members of any settlement agreement or other resolution of the defect claim against the builder);

• Any change in the association's current regular and special assessments and fees approved by the board of directors but that have not become due and payable as of the date the Civ.C. § 4525 disclosure is made to the prospective buyer;

WESTLAW © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

- If there is a provision in the governing documents that prohibits renting or leasing any of the separate interests, a statement describing the prohibition and its applicability (separate interests acquired prior to the governing documents' effective date(s) are exempt from this prohibition; Civ.C. § 4740(a); see also Brown v. Montage at Mission Hills, Inc. (2021) 68 CA5th 124, 127, 283 CR3d 215, 217—Civ.C. § 4740(a) exempted condominium owner from restriction prohibiting short-term rentals not in place when owner purchased unit);

Compare: Notwithstanding Civ.C. § 4740 (above), an owner of a separate interest is not subject to a governing document provision (or amendment thereto) that prohibits the renting or leasing of a portion of the owner-occupied separate interest for more than 30 days. This is so regardless of whether the restriction existed at the time the homeowner acquired title to their interest. However, the owner (or a resident renting or leasing a portion of the owner-occupied separate interest) is not permitted to violate any provision in the governing documents that regulates conduct in the separate interest or common areas, or that governs membership rights or privileges, including parking restrictions and guest access to common facilities. [Civ.C. § 4739]

- If requested, a copy of the approved minutes of the board of directors' meetings (excluding executive session meetings) conducted over the previous 12 months; and

- If there is an age-based restriction in the governing documents limiting occupancy, residency or use, a statement that the restriction is only enforceable to the extent permitted by Civ.C. § 51.3, and a statement specifying the applicable provisions of § 51.3. [Civ.C. § 4525(a)(2); see also Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 11004.5, 11018.1 & 11018.6]

Cross-refer: Civ.C. § 51.3 defines the boundaries of permissible "age-based" discrimination in the sale and rental of housing under the Unruh Act ("senior citizen housing") and is explained in detail in Friedman, Garcia & Hoy, Cal. Prac. Guide: Landlord-Tenant (TRG), Ch. 2C.

c. [4:80] Stock cooperatives: Stock cooperatives, although extremely rare in California, are broadly similar to condominiums. The distinguishing feature is that the owners hold an interest in a corporation rather than in the fee; the corporation owns the fee interest in the property. Each owner/shareholder has the exclusive right to use a particular unit (typically evidenced by a lease, often denominated as a "proprietary lease") and ancillary rights to the use and benefit of common areas. [Civ.C. §§ 4190, 6566 (commercial/industrial); see also Civ.C. § 783.1—interest in stock cooperative generally considered real property; Civ.C. §§ 4640 & 6666—sale transfers owner's interest in corporation and membership interest in association]

The principal and very significant difficulty with stock cooperatives is that many California lenders are reluctant to finance them … typically, because:

- Lenders lack the experience, documentation or infrastructure to make such loans; and

- Lenders encounter unique foreclosure difficulties, since foreclosure is upon both the stock and the proprietary lease (not upon a fee interest).

d. [4:81] Other forms of common interest developments: "Planned developments" and "community apartment projects" are other forms of common interest developments. [Civ.C. § 4100] A "time share" also is considered a form of common interest ownership.

(1) [4:82] Community apartment project (residential developments): A "community apartment project" is a common interest development in which each owner owns an undivided interest in land together with a right of exclusive occupancy of a particular unit. [Civ.C. § 4105] The undivided interest in land cannot be transferred separately from the interest in the right to exclusive occupancy. [Civ.C. § 4625]

(2) [4:83] Planned development: A "planned development" is a development (other than a community apartment project, condominium project or stock cooperative) that has either or both of the following features (Civ.C. §§ 4175 & 6562 (commercial/industrial)):

- A common area owned by either an association or in common by the owners of the separate interests who possess appurtenant rights to the beneficial use and enjoyment of the common areas (Civ.C. §§ 4175(a), 6562(a));

• A common area and an association that maintains the common area with the power to levy assessments that may become a lien upon separate interests pursuant to Civ.C. §§ 5650 & 6808 et seq. (Civ.C. §§ 4175(b), 6562(b)); see also Civ.C. §§ 4095(b) & 6532(b)—"common area" (¶ 4:76.1) specified in §§ 4175(b) & 6562(b) may consist of mutual reciprocal easement rights appurtenant to separate interests. [See 85 Ops.Cal.Atty.Gen. 162 (decided under predecessor statutes)]

(a) [4:83.1] CC&Rs: Like condominium projects, planned developments generally are governed by CC&Rs, enforceable as covenants running with the land or equitable servitudes. [Committee to Save Beverly Highlands Homes Ass'n v. Beverly Highlands Homes Ass'n (2001) 92 CA4th 1247, 1270, 112 CR2d 732, 748; see ¶ 4:67.5 ff.]

(b) [4:83.2] Interests transferred by conveyance: The conveyance of an owner's separate interest in a planned development also transfers the owner's undivided interest (if any) in the common areas and the owner's membership interest in the association. [Civ.C. §§ 4635 & 6664 (commercial/industrial)]

(c) [4:83.3] Condominium project compared: A planned development may resemble a condominium project, but there are technical legal distinctions: In a planned development, the separate interest owner owns a lot and the structural improvements situated on that lot. In contrast, the condominium owner receives title primarily to a "cube of airspace" without receiving undivided ownership of any underlying land or structural improvements; the land and structures are "common area" (¶ 4:76.1). [See 85 Ops.Cal.Atty.Gen. 162—development recorded under map of "condominium project" and granted special use permit for "Planned Residential Development that is condominium" was in fact planned development]

Also, a planned development's common area is often owned by the development's community association, although it may be held in undivided interests; but in a condominium project, at least some portion of the common area must be owned in undivided interests (¶ 4:77). [See 85 Ops.Cal.Atty.Gen. 162]

(3) [4:84] Time shares: Time shares are governed by the Vacation Ownership and Time-Share Act (Bus. & Prof.C. § 11210 et seq.).

(a) [4:84.1] Time-share plan: A "time-share plan" is an arrangement (other than an "exchange program," see Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 11212(l), 11216) under which a purchaser receives ownership rights in, or the right to use, an "accommodation" (apartment, condominium, cooperative unit, cabin, lodge, hotel or motel room, commercial passenger ship berth, etc.; see Bus & Prof.C. § 11212(a)) for a period of less than a full year during any given year, on a recurring basis for more than one year but not necessarily for consecutive years. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 11212(z)]

A time-share plan may be a "single site" plan or a "multisite" plan. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 11212(z)(1) & (2)]

(b) [4:84.2] Time-share property: A "time-share property" is one or more accommodations subject to the same "time-share instrument" creating or governing the operation of a time-share plan. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 11212(w), (aa)]

(c) [4:84.3] Time-share interest: A "time-share interest" can be either a "time-share estate" or "time-share use." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 11212(x)]

A "time-share estate" is a right of occupancy in a time-share property that is coupled with a freehold estate or estate for years with a future interest in the property. For title purposes, each time-share estate constitutes a separate estate or interest in real property, including ownership in real property for tax purposes. [Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 11212(x)(1), 11213] If the right of occupancy is not coupled with an estate in the property, it is a "time-share use." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 11212(x)]

14. [4:85] Mobilehome Parks: The rental and occupancy of space in a mobilehome park is governed by the Mobilehome Residency Law (Civ.C. § 798 et seq.). A "mobilehome park" is an area of land where two or more mobilehome sites are rented, or held out for rent, to accommodate mobilehomes used for human habitation. [Civ.C. § 798.4]

a. [4:86] Sale of mobilehome park—notice of intent to sell required: When selling or listing for sale a mobilehome park, subject to certain conditions and exceptions, the seller must give the resident homeowners association prior notice of intent to sell. [Civ.C. § 798.80]

b. [4:87] Transfer or sale of *individual home in mobilehome park subject to disclosure requirements: The transfer or sale of a manufactured home or mobilehome in a mobilehome park is subject to the Civ.C. § 1102 et seq. transfer disclosure requirements (¶ 2:185.1). [Civ.C. § 798.74.4—transfer disclosure requirements include use of Civ.C. § 1102.6d Manufactured Home and Mobilehome Transfer Disclosure Statement]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Cross-refer: Other provisions of the Mobilehome Residency Law regulating ownership and operation of mobilehome parks and residencies therein also should be reviewed. For a comprehensive treatment of the subject, see Friedman, Garcia & Hoy, Cal. Prac. Guide: Landlord-Tenant (TRG), Ch. 11.

15. [4:87.1] Laws Facilitating Higher Density Housing: Given the gravity and persistence of California's affordable housing crisis, legislation supporting alternatives to the traditional housing supply has been and continues to be enacted. While a full treatment of all current housing laws is beyond the scope of this Practice Guide, some examples follow (¶ 4:88 ff.).

a. [4:88] Accessory dwelling units: An "accessory dwelling unit" (ADU) is an attached or detached residential dwelling unit that provides complete independent living facilities for one or more persons and is located on a lot with a proposed or existing primary residence. [Gov.C. § 66313(a) (added Stats. 2023, Ch.7; eff. 3/25/24)]

An ADU must include permanent provisions for living, sleeping, eating, cooking, and sanitation on the same parcel as the single-family or multifamily dwelling is or will be situated. [Gov.C. § 66313(a)]

(1) [4:88.1] Junior ADUs: A "junior accessory dwelling unit" (JADU) is a unit contained entirely within a single-family residence and is no more than 500 square feet. It may include separate sanitation facilities or share sanitation facilities with the existing structure. [Gov.C. § 66313(d) (added Stats. 2023, Ch. 7; eff. 3/25/24)]

(2) [4:88.2] Limited local government regulation: The California Legislature has declared ADUs to be "an essential component" of California's housing supply, especially in view of the state's "severe housing crisis." [Gov.C. § 66310(e) & (h) (added Stats. 2024, Ch. 7; eff. 3/25/24)]

Thus, the Government Code limits a local government's authority to impose or enforce certain building restrictions on ADUs, including minimum lot size requirements and minimum and maximum square footage requirements. [See Gov.C. §§ 66314(b)(1), 66321 (added Stats. 2024, Ch.7; eff. 3/25/24); Riddick v. City of Malibu (2024) 99 CA5th 956, 969-970, 317 CR3d 895, 904-905—no error in directing City to process proposed ADU as exempt from coastal development permit (CDP) requirements (concluding ADUs subject to city ordinance were in class of improvements to existing single-family residences exempt from CDP requirements)]

The Government Code also restricts local agencies' authority to deny building permits for ADUs and JADUs. [See, e.g., Gov.C. §§ 66316, 66317 & 66323 (added Stats. 2024, Ch. 7; eff. 3/25/24)]

(3) [4:88.3] ADUs constructed *before 1/1/2018: Local agencies may not deny permits for unpermitted ADUs that were constructed before January 1, 2018, if the ADUs (i) are in violation of Health & Saf.C. § 17960 et seq. building standards, (ii) do not comply with Gov.C. § 66314 et seq. (¶ 4:88.2), or (iii) do not comply with any local ordinance that regulates ADUs. This is so unless the local agencies find that correcting the violations is necessary to protect the health and safety of the public or a structure's occupants. [Gov.C. § 66332 (added Stats. 2024, Ch. 7; eff. 3/25/24)]

(4) [4:88.4] ADUs may be sold separately in limited circumstances: Local agencies must allow ADUs to be sold or conveyed separately from the primary residence to qualified buyers provided the ADU or primary dwelling was built or developed by a qualified nonprofit corporation and other requirements are met. [See Gov.C. § 66341 (added Stats. 2024, Ch. 7; eff. 3/25/24)]

(5) [4:88.5] Common interest developments cannot prohibit ADUs or JADUs: Any provision in an instrument affecting the sale or transfer of property in a planned development that effectively prohibits or unreasonably restricts the construction or use of statutorily compliant ADUs or JADUs on a lot within a single-family residential zone is void and unenforceable. [Civ.C. § 4751(a)]

b. [4:89] Urban residential zoning and development: The California Housing Opportunity and More Efficiency (HOME) Act (Gov.C. §§ 65852.21, 66411.7 & 66452.6) requires local agencies to ministerially approve, under certain conditions, the splitting of residential lots and construction of multiple housing units on each lot. The Act is in response to statewide concerns about access to affordable housing and applies to all cities, including charter cities. [See Stats. 2021, Ch. 162, § 4]

Covered projects are exempt from review under the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA) (Pub.Res.C. § 21000 et seq.). Although they remain subject to the California Coastal Act (Pub.Res.C. § 30000 et seq.), a local agency is not required to hold public hearings for applicable coastal development permit applications. [Gov.C. §§ 65852.21, 66411.7(n), (o)]

(1) [4:89.1] Two dwelling units on single parcel: A local jurisdiction must ministerially approve (without discretionary review or hearings) a proposed housing development containing no more than two residential units on a single parcel, if located in an "urbanized area" or "urban cluster" (as defined). This is so provided certain statutory requirements are met. [See Gov.C. § 65852.21(a)]

(2) [4:89.2] Urban lot splits: A local jurisdiction must ministerially approve a parcel map to split a lot in an "urbanized area" or "urban cluster" (as defined), provided statutory requirements are met. Among other things, each new parcel may not be smaller than 40 percent of the original parcel size, and each parcel must be at least 1,200 square feet (unless a smaller size is permitted by local ordinance). A local agency is not required to permit more than two units on each resulting parcel. The applicant must submit an affidavit of intent to occupy one of the units for at least three years, and neither unit may be used for short-term rentals. Additionally, only one lot split is permitted. [See Gov.C. § 66411.7(a)(1)-(2), (g), (h), (j)]

(3) [4:89.3] Exceptions: There are multiple exceptions to the ministerial approval requirements. For example, they do not apply to areas that are prime farmland or farmland of statewide importance, wetlands, very high fire hazard severity zones, hazardous waste sites, delineated earthquake fault zones, special flood hazard areas or regulatory floodways, certain conservation areas, areas designated as habitats for protected species, historic districts, proposed developments that would require the demolition of certain types of affordable housing, rent-controlled housing, or properties that have been tenant-occupied for the past three years. [See Gov.C. §§ 65852.21(a)(2)-(6), 66411.7(a)(3)(C)-(E)]

c. [4:89.4] "Up-zoning" residential property: Prior to 1/1/29, a local government may voluntarily pass an ordinance to "up-zone" any parcel for up to 10 residential units per parcel, if the parcel is located in a "transit-rich area" or "urban infill site," as defined. Adoption of such an ordinance is exempt from review under the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA) (Pub.Res.C. § 21000 et seq.). [Gov.C. § 65913.5(a), (e)]

d. Residential development in commercial zones

(1) [4:89.5] Affordable Housing and High Road Jobs Act of 2022 (1/1/2033 "sunset" date): The Affordable Housing and High Road Jobs Act of 2022 (Gov.C. § 65912.100 et seq.) makes available a "streamlined, ministerial review process" for residential development projects in areas where office, retail or parking are the "principally permitted use." This is so provided the projects meet specified objective development standards, affordability criteria, site criteria, and wage and labor requirements. The Act also exempts qualified multi-family housing development projects from review under the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA). [Gov.C. §§ 65912.111-65212.114, 65912.121-65912.123, 65912.124(h), 65912.130]

With respect to labor, housing project contracts that have been approved must indicate certain wage and labor standards will be met, and that all construction workers will be paid at least the general prevailing rate of wages. Moreover, a project's proponent must certify that those standards will be met in project construction, and that a government approved development of 50 or more housing units will, among other things, either require construction contractors to participate in apprenticeship programs or request the dispatch of apprentices from state-approved apprenticeship programs. [See Gov.C. §§ 65912.130, 65912.131(b)]

(2) [4:89.6] Middle Class Housing Act of 2022 (1/1/2033 "sunset" date): The Middle Class Housing Act of 2022 (Gov.C. § 65852.24) also promotes residential development projects in zones where office, retail or parking are a "principally permitted use" (Gov.C. § 65852.24(b)). The Act responds to the "continued need for housing development at all income levels, including missing middle class housing that will provide a variety of housing options and configurations to allow every Californian to live near where they work." [See Gov.C. § 65852.24(a)(2)(C), (l) (declaring Act applicable to "all cities, including charter cities")]

"Middle class" housing projects may be all residential or mixed use. If both, at least 50% of the square footage must be for residential use. And none of the square footage may be designated for hotels, motels, bed and breakfast inns, or other transient lodgings (except for residential hotels). [See Gov.C. § 65852.24(k)]

Unlike the Affordable Housing and High Road Jobs Act of 2022 (¶ 4:89.5), the Middle Class Housing Act of 2022 permits multifamily projects in commercial zones without requiring a zone change. This is so provided specific conditions are met (e.g. conditions related to density, public notice, site location, size, etc.). However, compliance with all housing, environmental, and labor laws applicable to housing developments authorized by the Act is mandatory (e.g., the California Coastal Act of 1976 (Pub.Res.C. § 30000 et seq.), California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA) (Pub.Res.C. § 21000, et seq.), Housing Accountability Act (Gov.C. § 65589.5), and Density Bonus Law (Gov.C. § 65915), etc.). [Gov.C. § 65852.24(b), (f)]

e. [4:89.7] Residential development on land owned by higher education or religious institutions: The Affordable Housing on Faith and Higher Education Lands Act of 2023 provides a streamlined, ministerial process for approving housing development projects that meet specified criteria with respect to land owned on or before January 1, 2024 by independent higher education or religious institutions. For example, projects that qualify may not be adjoined to any site where more than 1/3 of the square footage on the site is dedicated to "light industrial use." And at least 75% of the units, exclusive of manager units, must be offered to "lower income households" at "affordable housing cost" or "affordable rent." Housing development projects that meet all the Act's specific criteria are deemed a "use by right" on the land. [See Gov.C. § 65913.16 (added Stats. 2023, Ch. 771; eff. 1/1/24) (1/1/2036 "sunset" date)]

[4:90] Real property interests come in a variety of forms; several do not fit within the traditional common law definition of "interests in real property" but are nevertheless the subject of modern real property transactions.

It is important for counsel representing parties to a real property sale to initially identify not only the particular real and personal property (tangible and intangible) that is to be transferred, but also the form or type of interest to be conveyed.

The interest to be conveyed will determine such issues as contract documentation, conveyancing instruments, title insurance, taxation and financing.

1. [4:91] Traditional Estates: An "estate" is the degree of ownership and possessory right that a person has in real property. The four traditional categories of estates—fee, life estate, estate for years, and estate at will—differ principally by reason of their duration (see Civ.C. § 761). Typically, buyers and sellers are dealing with the sale of either a fee interest, a vendee's interest in a land sale contract or an interest in a long-term ground lease.

a. [4:92] Fee simple: A "fee simple" (or a "fee" or "estate in fee") is the highest and broadest form of ownership; it is the "fullest and most absolute estate in lands known to the law." [Callahan v. Martin (1935) 3 C2d 110, 120, 43 P2d 788, 793; Apartment Ass'n of Los Angeles County, Inc. v. City of Los Angeles (2001) 24 C4th 830, 840, 102 CR2d 719, 726, fn. 3—"ownership of real property in fee simple absolute is the greatest possible estate"; and see Civ.C. § 761(1)—"perpetual estate"]

Fee simple title generally is presumed to pass by the grant of real property unless it appears from the grant that a lesser estate was intended. [Civ.C. § 1105; City of Manhattan Beach v. Sup.Ct. (Farquhar) (1996) 13 C4th 232, 242, 52 CR2d 82, 89; see also Civ.C. § 1072—"words of inheritance or succession" not required to transfer fee; Severns v. Union Pac. R.R. Co. (2002) 101 CA4th 1209, 1212, 125 CR2d 100, 102—"To convey a fee, all that is required is the word 'grant'"]

However, the general presumption of fee title conveyance is subject to more specific statutory presumptions applicable to certain types of real property acquisitions. [See 88 Ops.Cal.Atty.Gen. 136—under Civ.C. §§ 831, 1112, easement (rather than fee title) presumed to pass by grant of property to government for use as public highway]

(1) [4:92.1] Fee simple "subject to" conditions: Fee simples are not necessarily "absolute"; they may be subject to a condition subsequent with a power of termination (i.e., an executory interest ordinarily reserved by the grantor) (Civ.C. §§ 762, 885.010 et seq.). [City of Palm Springs v. Living Desert Reserve (1999) 70 CA4th 613, 621, 82 CR2d 859, 866, fn. 4; see Severns v. Union Pac. R.R. Co. (2002) 101 CA4th 1209, 1216, 125 CR2d 100, 105-106]

(a) [4:92.2] Effect of conveyance: When property is conveyed subject to a condition subsequent, the transferee receives both legal and equitable title. Unless and until the condition is breached, the transferee is in the same position as an owner in fee simple absolute. [City of Palm Springs v. Living Desert Reserve (1999) 70 CA4th 613, 621, 82 CR2d 859, 866]

But if the transferee (or a successor in interest) breaches the condition, the transferor (or other third party contingent transferee) may exercise its power of termination, causing a forfeiture of the transferee's interest. [City of Palm Springs v. Living Desert Reserve, supra, 70 CA4th at 622, 82 CR2d at 867; see Severns v. Union Pac. R.R. Co. (2002) 101 CA4th 1209, 1216, 125 CR2d 100, 105]

Cross-refer: A power of termination may expire, however, with the passage of time or because it has become obsolete; see discussion at¶ 3:300.5 ff.

(b) [4:92.3] Determining type of interest conveyed: The fact the deed uses the word "condition" or "subject to" does not necessarily indicate a conveyance of fee simple title subject to a condition subsequent. The deed may have conveyed fee simple title with a reservation of rights in the grantor (e.g., an easement or other right not amounting to a power of termination) or, perhaps, a charitable trust (¶ 4:92.10).

1) [4:92.4] Forfeiture intent must be clear; admissibility of extrinsic evidence: Because the law disfavors forfeitures, a conveyance will not be construed as fee simple subject to condition subsequent unless the transferor clearly manifested an intention to create such an interest. [See Civ.C. § 1442—condition involving forfeiture strictly interpreted against party for whose benefit it is created; City of Palm Springs v. Living Desert Reserve (1999) 70 CA4th 613, 622, 82 CR2d 859, 867]

By the same token, when a deed unambiguously manifests the grantor's intention to create a fee simple subject to condition subsequent, extrinsic evidence is not admissible to determine that some other type of interest was conveyed. [Severns v. Union Pac. R.R. Co. (2002) 101 CA4th 1209, 1216, 125 CR2d 100, 105-106—trial court improperly considered extrinsic evidence to decide deed unambiguously granting fee subject to condition subsequent instead conveyed only an easement]

• [4:92.5] Deed granting City 30 acres of land on condition it be used solely and perpetually as a desert wildlife preserve and equestrian center conveyed a fee simple subject to condition subsequent where it expressly stated Grantor's intent that Grantee shall forfeit its interest in favor of Third Party in event of a breach of the condition.

[City of Palm Springs v. Living Desert Reserve (1999) 70 CA4th 613, 621-622, 82 CR2d 859, 866-867—city breached condition and forfeited fee simple interest when it built a golf course on property]

• [4:92.6] Deed granting a 60-foot strip of land to be used as a right of way for an electric railroad, but that also provided the property would revert to Grantor if Grantee failed to use it as a railroad, unambiguously conveyed a fee simple subject to a condition subsequent. [Concord & Bay Point Land Co. v. City of Concord (1991) 229 CA3d 289, 294-295, 280 CR 623, 625-626; see also Severns v. Union Pac. R.R. Co. (2002) 101 CA4th 1209, 1214, 125 CR2d 100, 104 (same)]

• [4:92.7] Compare: A probate order granting a widow the right to live in property rent free "for her lifetime," with the property passing to her stepsons upon her death, also permitted the widow to sell the property during her life (and required her to sell it upon remarriage) with the proceeds to be divided equally between the widow and her stepsons. This option (or requirement) to sell the property, however, did not convert the widow's life estate into a fee interest subject to conditions subsequent. Rather, the order established in the widow a life estate interest and in her stepsons a fee interest as remaindermen. [See Peterson v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2015) 236 CA4th 844, 853, 186 CR3d 842, 848-849 (rejecting contrary argument raised by lender attempting to foreclose on trust deed wrongfully executed by widow to secure loan)]

(c) Other interests compared

1) [4:92.10] Charitable trust: A conveyance of property in trust for a charitable purpose may resemble a conveyance subject to condition subsequent. But the two are distinct in legal effect:

A charitable trust is created where property is transferred to a trustee who has an enforceable obligation to use the property for charitable purposes (by contrast, the transferee of a fee subject to condition subsequent does not have enforceable duties but, as stated, risks forfeiture). Where a charitable trust is created, the trustee holds legal title, but the trust beneficiaries hold an equitable estate (whereas a fee simple transferee holds both legal and equitable title). [City of Palm Springs v. Living Desert Reserve (1999) 70 CA4th 613, 621, 82 CR2d 859, 866]

Whether a trust or condition subsequent is created depends upon the transferor's manifested intent (¶ 4:92.4). For this purpose, courts look to the manner in which the conveyancing instrument treats a breach:

• If the conveyance is expressly made subject to forfeiture upon a breach of the condition, the transferor intended to create a condition subsequent;

• However, if the transferor simply intended to impose an enforceable obligation on a trustee (i.e., subjecting the trustee to a damages action or suit to enforce the condition), the transfer created a charitable trust. [See City of Palm Springs v. Living Desert Reserve, supra, 70 CA4th at 621, 82 CR2d at 866—property transferred "upon condition" that it be applied to specified charitable purposes "is especially likely to be construed as having been given in a charitable trust"]

2) [4:92.11] Easement: Language in a deed stating it is "subject to" specified covenants commonly connotes a reservation of rights in the grantor (e.g., an easement) rather than a limitation on the estate conveyed. [See City & County of San Francisco v. Union Pac. R.R. Co. (1996) 50 CA4th 987, 995-997, 58 CR2d 1, 6-7—grant of 80-foot-wide strip of land to City, reserving specified rights to grantor railroad to use surface property, conveyed fee simple title]

3) [4:92.12] Unconditional grant for specified use: Where land is granted for a specified use, an otherwise unconditional grant will likely be construed to convey a fee simple interest; the language defining the use is merely descriptive—i.e., a declaration of purpose, not a limitation of the grant. [Machado v. Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1991) 233 CA3d 347, 358-359, 284 CR 560, 567—grant of land "for right of way for a standard gauge railroad" conveyed a fee, not an easement]

4) [4:92.13] Property acquired by public entity through private dedication: A "private dedication" is the transfer of an interest in real property to a public entity for the public's use. There are two types of private dedication: those made in compliance with statute and those made under controlling principles of common law. Nonetheless, the two

do not always operate independently of each other (¶ 4:92.14). [Biagini v. Beckham (2008) 163 CA4th 1000, 1009, 1014, 78 CR3d 171, 178, 182]

a) [4:92.14] Statutory dedications: A "statutory dedication" is effected when, in compliance with the Subdivision Map Act then in force, an offer to transfer a real property interest is formally accepted by the appropriate public agency. [See Biagini v. Beckham (2008) 163 CA4th 1000, 1009, 1014, 78 CR3d 171, 178; McKinney v. Ruderman (1962) 203 CA2d 109, 115-116, 21 CR 263, 266—filing of subdivision map delineating street thereon was offer to dedicate for street purposes land identified by such delineation]

A statutory offer of dedication that has not been formally accepted, however, does not rule out the possibility of a common law dedication, which may arise when the offer is impliedly accepted from the public's use of the subject property over a reasonable period of time (¶ 4:92.15). [Biagini v. Beckham, supra, 163 CA4th at 1009, 1014, 78 CR3d at 178, 182; see also Prout v. Department of Transportation (2018) 31 CA5th 200, 212, 242 CR3d 483, 493 (citing Biagini with approval)—incomplete statutory dedications operate as common law dedications when accepted by public]

b) [4:92.15] Common law dedications: Under the common law, a dedication may be made either expressly or by implication. Whether express or implied, however, a common law dedication requires both an offer of dedication and an acceptance of that offer by the public (¶ 4:92.51a). [Scher v. Burke (2017) 3 C5th 136, 141, 218 CR3d 643, 647; see also Ruiz v. County of San Diego (2020) 47 CA5th 504, 515, 260 CR3d 740, 748—"Until an offer of dedication has been accepted, there is no public property interest"; Friends of the Hastain Trail v. Coldwater Development LLC (2016) 1 CA5th 1013, 1027, 205 CR3d 270, 282—express dedication arises when owner's intent manifests through overt acts (e.g., execution of a deed), and implied dedication arises when evidence supports intent to dedicate without overt acts (e.g., adverse public use that exceeds prescription period)]

1/ [4:92.15a] Offer and acceptance: A property owner may manifest their intent to dedicate an interest in land to the public through words or conduct, and the public may accept the "offer" to dedicate in various ways. No writing or statutory formality is required. "All that is necessary is sufficient evidence that the property owner either expressly or impliedly manifested an unequivocal intention to offer the property for a public purpose, and that there was an acceptance of the offer by the public." [Cherokee Valley Farms, Inc. v. Summerville Elementary School Dist. (1973) 30 CA3d 579, 584-585, 106 CR 467, 470; see also Prout v. Department of Transportation (2018) 31 CA5th 200, 214-215, 242 CR3d 483, 495 (finding 20-year delay in completing dedication "reasonable" where, among other things, property owner never attempted to revoke offer until after its acceptance)—public agency (Caltrans) impliedly accepted property owner's offer to dedicate strip of land for highway improvement purposes by physically occupying property for 20 years, at which time road improvements were made that completed said dedication]

Moreover, a "common law dedication" is based on public convenience and rests largely on grounds of estoppel: "[W]here the public at large relies on an offer to dedicate land to public use to such an extent that it would be unfair under principles of estoppel to deny the public continued use of the land for that purpose, implied acceptance of the offer of dedication will be found." [Biagini v. Beckham (2008) 163 CA4th 1000, 1012, 78 CR3d 171, 180-181—no implied acceptance of offer of dedication by public use where actual use was consistent with private easement]

Public use of property alone, however, is insufficient to constitute implied acceptance of a dedication. [Ruiz v. County of San Diego (2020) 47 CA5th 504, 515-518, 260 CR3d 740, 749-751—absent evidence of its "control" or "maintenance," county did not impliedly accept dedication of privately owned storm drain pipe under homeowners' property by using pipe as part of public drainage system and, therefore, was not liable to homeowners for inverse condemnation after pipe failed]

c) [4:92.16] Post-3/3/72 public use of private property: Civil Code § 1009 limits the doctrine of implied dedication for public use of private property. The statute, however, operates prospectively only and does not affect a public use that ripened into an offer of dedication prior to March 4, 1972. [Friends of the Trails v. Blasius (2000) 78 CA4th 810, 823, 93 CR2d 193, 201; see also Friends of the Hastain Trail v. Coldwater Development LLC (2016) 1 CA5th 1013, 1029-1030, 205 CR3d 270, 284—hikers' public use of wilderness fire road between 1967 and 1972 insufficient to put property owners' predecessors on actual or constructive notice their property was in danger of public dedication (fire road was conditional, temporary public easement located on predecessors' property that could not be materially changed without notice, making it impossible to anticipate road's use might result in permanent hiking trail)]

1/ [4:92.17] Public use of private *noncoastal property: Strong public policy favors public use of noncoastal private property for both recreational and nonrecreational purposes. To encourage property owners to make their property available for such use without risking loss of ownership rights, the Legislature determined that the public's mere use of such property effective 3/4/72 does not establish an implied dedication of the property (except for coastal property; ¶ 4:92.18). [Civ.C. § 1009(a), (b); Scher v. Burke (2017) 3 C5th 136, 139, 145-150, 218 CR3d 643, 646, 650-654 & fn. 5 (disapproving prior authority holding public's nonrecreational use of private noncoastal property may give rise to implied offer of dedication)—statutory rule against implied dedication applied to roadways; see also Mikkelsen v. Hansen (2019) 31 CA5th 170, 175-178, 181, 242 CR3d 304, 307-310, 312—§ 1009(b) not only prohibits post-3/3/72 implied-in-law dedications (i.e., where public use is adverse and exceeds 5-year prescription period), but also post-3/3/72 implied in-fact dedications (i.e., where public use is less than 5-year prescription period and owner's acts/omissions imply actual consent or acquiescence to dedication); compare Ditzian v. Unger (2019) 31 CA5th 738, 743-746, 243 CR3d 322, 326-328 (finding property owners and their guests had interest in path over neighbor's land that was distinguishable from general public's interest)—Civ.C. § 1009 did not preclude property owners from establishing private prescriptive easement over neighbor's property to gain access to public recreational area (prescriptive easements are discussed in detail at ¶ 4:102.10 ff.)]

2/ [4:92.18] Public use of private *coastal property: There also is a strong public policy to preserve and provide public access to beaches and other property adjacent to navigable waters. Thus, effective 3/4/72, owners of private coastal property, as defined, must post signs, publish notices or enter into agreements for public use with public agencies in order to prevent private coastal property from ripening into a dedication based on public use. [Civ.C. § 1009(e), (f); see also Scher v. Burke (2017) 3 C5th 136, 148, 218 CR3d 643, 653—by enacting Civ.C. § 1009, Legislature made it easier to find implied dedication in coastal region than elsewhere in California]

d) [4:92.19] "Public trust" doctrine: Land may be donated to a public entity through a grant deed containing specific restrictions (e.g., property donated solely for a county fair ground, public park or other recreational area). Under these circumstances, the public entity cannot legally divert the property's use to purposes inconsistent with the grant deed's terms. [Spinks v. City of Los Angeles (1934) 220 C 366, 368, 31 P2d 193, 194; see also County of Solano v. Handlery (2007) 155 CA4th 566, 575, 66 CR3d 201, 207-208—properties donated for public use held upon "public trust"; Big Sur Properties v. Mott (1976) 62 CA3d 99, 103-104, 132 CR 835, 838—grant deeds dedicating properties for public use are "strictly construed"]

It is immaterial that the interest conveyed amounts to a fee simple absolute (¶ 4:92). "The [public entity] has neither the right nor the power to apply any such property to other than public uses and those included within the objects of the grant … Whatever estate or interest it holds … is in trust for the public use." [County of Solano v. Handlery, supra, 155 CA4th at 580, 66 CR3d at 212 (brackets in original; internal quotes and citations omitted)]

(2) [4:92.20] Compare—modification of grant in fee: An interest conveyed by grant deed can be modified by a separate agreement. Thus, by separate contract and with full knowledge of its rights, a party granted fee title can waive its fee interest in favor of a lesser estate. [See City & County of San Francisco v. Union Pac. R.R. Co. (1996) 50 CA4th 987, 998-999, 58 CR2d 1, 8—although deed indicated City would acquire fee simple interest, City was "forever estopped" to claim fee interest by its contractual waiver of ownership rights]

b. [4:93] Life estate: A "life estate" (Civ.C. § 761(2)) is an interest in real property measured by the life of a person or persons. The measuring life may be the person owning the life estate or someone else. Life estates are followed by some form of future interest after the life of the measuring person. [See Zanelli v. McGrath (2008) 166 CA4th 615, 631, 82 CR3d 835, 848—life estate terminates upon holder's death by operation of law; see also Peterson v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2015) 236 CA4th 844, 853, 186 CR3d 842, 849 (affirming stepsons' fee interest as remaindermen following widow's life estate); discussed further at¶ 4:92.7]

Although recognized by statute (Civ.C. §§ 761, 765 & 766), life estates are seldom used. They were traditionally created as an estate planning tool so that, after the estate holder's death, the surviving spouse and/or children would have the use and benefit of real property. However, trusts and other more sophisticated estate planning devices have supplanted their use; and thus, arms'-length purchase transactions in California rarely, if ever, involve a life estate.

c. [4:94] Estate for years: An "estate for years" (Civ.C. § 761(3)) is limited in time, having a specific definitive term—i.e., a leasehold. (See generally, Friedman, Garcia & Hoy, Cal. Prac. Guide: Landlord-Tenant (TRG), Ch. 2A.) It is regarded as "inferior to an estate for life or an inheritance." [Apartment Ass'n of Los Angeles County, Inc. v. City of Los Angeles (2001) 24 C4th 830, 840-841, 102 CR2d 719, 725-726 & fn. 3; see also Auerbach v. Assessment Appeals Bd. No. 1 for County of Los Angeles (2006) 39 C4th 153, 162-163, 45 CR3d 774, 780—estate for years not real property but a form of personalty, even though substance of estate is real property]

(The term "leasehold" rather than "estate for years" is most commonly used in modern real property transactions.)

d. [4:95] Estate at will: An "estate at will" (Civ.C. § 761(4)) is also a leasehold, but without any definitive fixed term. Theoretically, it may be terminated at the lessor's or lessee's election; but the lessor's "at will" termination must be preceded by minimum 30 days' written notice (Civ.C. § 789). (See generally, Friedman, Garcia & Hoy, Cal. Prac. Guide: Landlord-Tenant (TRG), Chs. 2A & 7.)

e. [4:96] Future interests: Issues pertaining to future interests (both vested and contingent), reversions and remainders (see Civ.C. §§ 767-780) are primarily relevant in the estate planning context; they rarely (if ever) arise in connection with real property purchase agreements (and thus are not separately discussed in this text).

2. [4:97] Ground Leaseholds: Once improvements have been constructed, a so-called "ground leasehold" is simply a euphemism for a long-term lease. At the commencement of most ground leases, vacant land is rented and the lessee (or sometimes the lessor) builds the improvements. Although there is no fixed or minimum term for a ground leasehold, a surprising number of residential and commercial improvements have been developed on ground leases.

It is critical that counsel for both buyer and seller determine at the inception of negotiations whether the transaction is to be a sale of a fee interest or the transfer of a lessee's ground leasehold interest. While the lessee's interest in a ground leasehold may, as a practical matter, carry with it all of the benefits and burdens of a fee interest, substantial issues are presented when it is the subject of a purchase and sale transaction.

a. [4:97.1] Defining "leased land": In determining what constitutes "leased land" for purposes of assessing the ground lessee's rental/financial obligations, general rules of contract interpretation apply. Thus, whenever possible, the parties' mutual intent as expressed in the agreement alone controls (Civ.C. § 1636). [See Abers v. Rounsavell (2010) 189 CA4th 348, 356, 116 CR3d 860, 865]

b. [4:98] Financing: Lender requirements for financing the purchase of a ground leasehold differ from those applicable to the purchase of a fee interest.

c. [4:99] Valuation: A leasehold (unlike a fee) has a definitive term and the value of the estate diminishes over time.

d. [4:100] Development and use: Certain kinds of improvements should not be made on leased land.

Cross-refer: Ground leases are discussed in detail in Ch. 7.

3. [4:101] Long-Term Easements and Licenses: A fee interest, easement, license and lease each have distinct legal characteristics. However, easements, long-term leases and licenses are sometimes drafted so that their subject, scope and duration are so extensive as to transfer the equivalent of a fee simple estate. Indeed, although the conveyancing instrument makes reference to an "easement," "right of way" or similar lesser interest, other language in the instrument may indicate the parties actually intended to transfer a fee simple estate. [See City of Manhattan Beach v. Sup.Ct. (Farquhar) (1996) 13 C4th 232, 246-250, 52 CR2d 82, 91-94; see also Hirschfield v. Schwartz (2001) 91 CA4th 749, 768, 110 CR2d 861, 874; 88 Ops.Cal.Atty.Gen. 136; and¶ 4:102.1b]

a. [4:102] Easement: An "easement" is the right to use the land of another owner (or the right to prevent other property owners from using their land) for a special purpose. It is not an ownership interest in land but, rather, a nonpossessory interest in the land of another. [Kazi v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. (2001) 24 C4th 871, 880-881, 103 CR2d 1, 7; see also Zissler v. Saville (2018) 29 CA5th 630, 638, 240 CR3d 590, 597—easement is restricted right to "specific, limited, definable use or activity upon another's property" that is less than right of ownership (internal quotes omitted); Main Street Plaza v. Cartwright & Main, LLC (2011) 194 CA4th 1044, 1053, 124 CR3d 170, 177—easement creates nonpossessory right to enter and use land in another's possession and obligates the one in possession of the land not to interfere with uses authorized by easement]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Easements are created by (1) express grant; (2) express reservation; (3) implied grant; (4) implied reservation; (5) necessity; (6) prescription; (7) a recorded covenant; (8) dedication; (9) condemnation; (10) estoppel; or (11) a court decision. [Main Street Plaza v. Cartwright & Main, LLC, supra, 194 CA4th at 1053-1054, 124 CR3d at 178; see also Thorstrom v. Thorstrom (2011) 196 CA4th 1406, 1415, 127 CR3d 526, 533—an easement, however created, fundamentally conveys rights in or over another's land]

An easement owner has no right to use the land beyond the limited use granted by the easement. [See Cody F. v. Falletti (2001) 92 CA4th 1232, 1242-1243, 112 CR2d 593, 601; Blackmore v. Powell (2007) 150 CA4th 1593, 1598, 59 CR3d 527, 531—easement represents limited privilege to use another's property]

(1) [4:102a] Compare—easements on own land: Generally, an easement cannot be held by one who owns the underlying land (the "servient tenement") because all the uses of an easement are already included in the owner's fee simple ownership. [See Civ.C. § 805; Beyer v. Tahoe Sands Resort (2005) 129 CA4th 1458, 1473, 29 CR3d 561, 571-572; Zanelli v. McGrath (2008) 166 CA4th 615, 623, 82 CR3d 835, 841—rationale underlying Civ.C. § 805 is to avoid nonsensical easements (i.e., those that are unnecessary because owner owns estate); see also¶ 4:102.30 ff. (termination of easement under merger doctrine)]

The above principle presupposes, however, that the landowner has full fee title—both legal and equitable. Property owners who own less than full title may create easements in their favor on the land. [Beyer v. Tahoe Sands Resort, supra, 129 CA4th at 1473, 29 CR3d at 572]

(2) [4:102b] "Appurtenant" vs. "in gross": Easements may be "appurtenant" to the land (¶ 4:102c ff.) or "in gross" (¶ 4:102g ff.). [Civ.C. §§ 801, 802]

Where the instrument creating the easement is ambiguous and the grantor's intent is unclear, the law favors interpreting the easement as appurtenant. [Elliott v. McCombs (1941) 17 C2d 23, 29, 109 P2d 329, 333; City of Anaheim v. Metropolitan Water Dist. of Southern Calif. (1978) 82 CA3d 763, 768, 147 CR 336, 339—where easement grant ambiguous and grantor's intent unascertainable, appurtenant easement presumed]

(a) [4:102c] Easement appurtenant: An easement "appurtenant" is attached to and runs with (passes with) the easement holder's land. The land to which it is attached is the "dominant tenement" (estate) and the land burdened by the easement is the "servient tenement" (estate). [See Civ.C. §§ 801, 803; Thorstrom v. Thorstrom (2011) 196 CA4th 1406, 1415, 127 CR3d 526, 533]

Generally, an easement appurtenant may be used only for the benefit of the dominant tenement specified in the grant of the easement except to the extent its terms provide otherwise. [Wright v. Best (1942) 19 C2d 368, 384, 121 P2d 702, 711; see further discussion at¶ 4:102.1 ff.]

1) [4:102d] Effect on servient owner's fee interest: The burden imposed on the servient tenement likewise is determined by the terms of the deed. "Where the easement is founded upon a grant … only those interests expressed in the grant and those necessarily incident thereto pass from the owner of the fee." The servient owner retains every incident of ownership not inconsistent with the easement and its enjoyment. [Blackmore v. Powell (2007) 150 CA4th 1593, 1599, 59 CR3d 527, 531 (internal quotes omitted); see also Thorstrom v. Thorstrom (2011) 196 CA4th 1406, 1421, 127 CR3d 526, 538—"well established is the rule that the extent of a servitude is determined by the terms of the grant" (internal quotes omitted); Main Street Plaza v. Cartwright & Main, LLC (2011) 194 CA4th 1044, 1053-1054, 124 CR3d 170, 178—general rule is that servient owner may make any use of land that does not interfere unreasonably with easement]

Servient owners, therefore, may not use their land in a way that unreasonably interferes with the easement rights of the dominant owner. [Blackmore v. Powell, supra, 150 CA4th at 1599, 59 CR3d at 531—servient owner could not prevent dominant owner from building parking garage, for its exclusive use, on 11% of easement granted for "parking and garage purposes" (nonexclusive use would interfere unreasonably with dominant owner's easement rights)]

2) [4:102e] Statutory categories not exclusive:Civ.C. § 801 enumerates 18 categories of appurtenant easements (right of way, rights of pasture, fishing, party wall, burial, etc.). However, the statutory list is not exhaustive. [Laux v. Freed (1960) 53 C2d 512, 521, 2 CR 265, 269; see Blackmore v. Powell (2007) 150 CA4th 1593, 1602, 59 CR3d 527, 534 (collecting cases)—although not listed in § 801, private easement may encompass right to maintain or use a permanent structure on servient tenement]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

3) [4:102f] Valuation: Appurtenant easements have no value or use apart from serving the dominant tenement for which they were created. Thus, there generally is no market for these easements because they may not be severed and transferred separately from the dominant estate. They may, however, be released to the servient estate's owner (e.g., as a bargaining chip in exchange for something of particular value to the dominant estate's owner), at which point the easement is extinguished. [See SCI Calif. Funeral Services, Inc. v. Five Bridges Found. (2012) 203 CA4th 549, 567-568, 137 CR3d 693, 709 (finding appurtenant easement had value based on its ability to be sold or traded to servient estate's owner in exchange for water rights, acreage, etc.)]

(b) [4:102g] Easement in gross: An easement "in gross" is not attached to any particular land. It is a personal right to use the land of another and thus does not pass with the easement holder's land but can be conveyed independent of the land. [See Civ.C. § 802; Moylan v. Dykes (1986) 181 CA3d 561, 568, 226 CR 673, 676]

1) [4:102h] Statutory categories: As it does with appurtenant easements (¶ 4:102c ff.), the Civil Code lists certain categories of easements in gross (Civ.C. § 802—right of way, rights of pasture, fishing, burial, etc.). Presumably, the § 802 list (like the Civ.C. § 801 list) is not exclusive (see¶ 4:102e).

(3) [4:102.1] Scope of easement: The scope of an express easement is determined by the language of the instrument conveying it. [See Rye v. Tahoe Truckee Sierra Disposal Co., Inc. (2013) 222 CA4th 84, 92, 170 CR3d 275, 281—where easement is founded upon a grant, only those interests expressed in grant and those necessarily incident thereto pass from fee owner; Van Klompenburg v. Berghold (2005) 126 CA4th 345, 349-350, 23 CR3d 799, 801-802—language in conveyancing instrument stating private roadway easement was to be "kept open" and "wholly unobstructed" precluded servient tenement owners from maintaining gates across easement, regardless of whether gates unreasonably interfered with easement owner's use; compare Zissler v. Saville (2018) 29 CA5th 630, 634, 641-643, 240 CR3d 590, 594, 599-601 (distinguishing Rye and finding bona fide purchaser for value without notice entitled to rely on easement's language rather than be bound by purported "historic use" limitation re easement's scope)—express easement constituted "broad grant of right-of-way" limited only by requirement that it be "reasonably necessary" to provide vehicles/pedestrians with access, ingress and egress]

On the other hand, an easement also must be interpreted according to statutory and decisional law in effect at the time it was established. [Anderson v. Time Warner Telecom of Calif., Inc. (2005) 129 CA4th 411, 418-419, 28 CR3d 289, 294-295—public highway "right of way" easements incorporated telephone corporation's statutory right to use highway to install telephone lines, including fiber optic cables; see also¶ 4:104 ff.]

(a) Ambiguous grant of easement

1) [4:102.1a] Grant by private party—mutual intent controls: General rules of contract interpretation normally apply to resolve any ambiguity in the grant of an express easement (see Civ.C. § 1066): Ordinarily, the grant is interpreted to give effect to the mutual intent of the parties (Civ.C. § 1636). In this regard, courts look to the surrounding circumstances and relationship of the parties and properties involved. [See Christian v. Flora (2008) 164 CA4th 539, 550, 78 CR3d 892, 899—plaintiffs prevailed in action to quiet title to easements incorrectly referenced in their grant deeds (ambiguity in deeds arose from fact subdivider mistakenly granted easements it had no right to convey, and subdivision map referenced in deeds no longer reflected reality of subdivision's amended map) (discussed further at ¶ 4:102.4a ff.)]

2) [4:102.1b] Government grants and reservations in grants are construed in grantor's favor: Normal rules favoring the grantee in the interpretation of grants do not apply when (i) the grant is made by a public entity or officer to a private party, or (ii) the grant contains a reservation. In those situations, when there is an ambiguity in the scope of the grant, the rules of interpretation favor the grantor. [Civ.C. § 1069; see Pear v. City & County of San Francisco (2021) 67 CA5th 61, 72-73, 281 CR3d 841, 850-851—easement reservations in deeds from private grantor to public entity grantee interpreted in private grantor's favor; Red Mountain, LLC v. Fallbrook Pub. Util. Dist. (2006) 143 CA4th 333, 344-347, 48 CR3d 875, 885-887 (ambiguity in scope of grant of access easement)]

(b) [4:102.1c] "Exclusive" easements; fee ownership distinguished: An "exclusive easement" in effect amounts almost to the conveyance of a fee and, for that reason, will not be imputed to the owner of the servient tenement absent a clear indication in the grant of that intention. [City of Pasadena v. California-Michigan Land & Water Co. (1941) 17 C2d 576, 578-579, 110 P2d 983, 984-985 (dictum); see also Romero v. Shih (2024) 15 C5th 680, 687, 694-695, 701-704,

317 CR3d 478, 481, 487-488, 493-495—implied exclusive easements that preclude servient owners from making most practical use of easements' surface areas deemed permissible, discussed further at ¶ 4:102.2, 4:102.4j; Alaska Railroad Corporation v. Flying Crown Subdivision Addition No. 1 & Addition No. 2 Property Owners Ass'n (9th Cir. 2023) 82 F4th 762, 766, 772-773 (concluding federal government reserved "no less" than exclusive-use easement in its right-of-way over homeowner association's property and subsequently transferred said interest to state of Alaska); Rye v. Tahoe Truckee Sierra Disposal Co., Inc. (2013) 222 CA4th 84, 93, 170 CR3d 275, 282 (noting exclusive easement cannot be inferred from general language)—where grant contained no clear indication of intention to extend parking and storage area to all of easement, garbage disposal business could not establish exclusive easement and therefore was limited to its historic use of easement's paved area; Gray v. McCormick (2008) 167 CA4th 1019, 1025-1026, 84 CR3d 777, 782—express provision in subdivision CC&Rs granting dominant tenement owner exclusive easement precluded servient tenement owner from making any use of easement area surface]

Whether the grant of an easement incorporating a right of exclusive use actually conveys ownership in fee, rather than an easement, depends upon the circumstances of the case—and, most particularly, whether the terms of the grant are restricted in scope. [See Blackmore v. Powell (2007) 150 CA4th 1593, 1600, 59 CR3d 527, 532—deed conveying "easement for parking and garage purposes," construed to give right of exclusive use, did not rise to fee ownership because it also circumscribed dominant tenement owner's rights and award of exclusive control over garage to be built (which would occupy only 11% of easement) was intended only to protect those restricted rights]

[4:102.1d - 4:102.1g] Reserved.

(c) [4:102.1h] Future uses: An easement owner may not materially increase the burden of the easement on the servient estate or impose a new burden beyond that identified in the conveyancing instrument. "Normal future uses" of the easement are within the parties' reasonable contemplation and therefore permissible, while "uncontemplated abnormal uses," which greatly increase the burden, are not. [Red Mountain, LLC v. Fallbrook Pub. Util. Dist. (2006) 143 CA4th 333, 350, 48 CR3d 875, 889]

(d) [4:102.1i] Changing location: The location of an easement may be changed with the parties' consent, which may be implied from "use and acquiescence" (see also ¶ 4:102.2). The parties' rights in the relocated easement are not affected but simply "attach" to the new location. [Red Mountain, LLC v. Fallbrook Pub. Util. Dist. (2006) 143 CA4th 333, 352, 48 CR3d 875, 891]

1) [4:102.1j] "Floating easements": An easement's location may or may not be delineated in the instrument creating the easement. Express easements that lack a specifically defined location are known as "floating easements" and are fully valid and enforceable. The floating easement's location becomes "fixed" based on the holder's use of the property and conduct. [Southern Calif. Edison Co. v. Severns (2019) 39 CA5th 815, 823-826, 252 CR3d 667, 673-675—utility had floating easement along dirt roads across defendant's property based on instruments granting utility "free access" to electrical facilities and "uncontested history" of utility using roads]

(e) [4:102.1k] Subject to conflicting laws and ordinances: Even when the scope of an easement is unambiguously expressed in the grant, its use is subject to applicable law. The grant of an easement cannot circumvent zoning ordinances and other applicable law, and to the extent that it does, the easement is unenforceable. [See Baccouche v. Blankenship (2007) 154 CA4th 1551, 1557-1559, 65 CR3d 659, 664-665—valid equine use easement over vacant servient tenement unenforceable where zoning ordinance prohibited keeping horses on undeveloped lots]

➪ [4:102.1*l*] PRACTICE POINTER: When faced with a local ordinance limiting the use of an otherwise valid easement, the holder may seek a zoning variance to allow the proscribed use. [Baccouche v. Blankenship (2007) 154 CA4th 1551, 1557, 65 CR3d 659, 664]

(4) [4:102.2] Implied easements: Even without a writing, state law recognizes the grant or reservation of an easement by implication in appropriate cases. Indeed, "[t]he doctrine of implied easements is applied by courts to carry into effect the intention of the parties as manifested by the facts and circumstances of the transaction." [Romero v. Shih (2024) 15 C5th 680, 692-693, 317 CR3d 478, 485 (internal quotes omitted)]

An easement will be implied if the following conditions exist at the time of the conveyance:

• the property owner conveys a portion of the property to another;

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

• the owner's prior existing use was of such a nature that the parties must have intended or believed the use would continue (i.e., the existing use was either known to the grantor and grantee or "so obviously and apparently permanent that the parties should have known of the use"); and

• the easement is reasonably necessary to the use and benefit of the quasi-dominant tenement. [Civ.C. § 1104; Thorstrom v. Thorstrom (2011) 196 CA4th 1406, 1419-1420, 127 CR3d 526, 536-537—purpose of implied easement doctrine is to give effect to actual intent of parties as shown by all facts and circumstances; see also Larsson v. Grabach (2004) 121 CA4th 1147, 1151-1152, 18 CR3d 136, 139-140—implied easements are not based on grantor's actual subjective intent, but on parties' presumed objective intent as determined from circumstances that existed at time of conveyance; Tusher v. Gabrielsen (1998) 68 CA4th 131, 141, 144-145, 80 CR2d 126, 131, 133—preponderance of evidence standard applies]

(a) [4:102.3] Not violative of statute of frauds: An implied easement arises from the grant of an estate in land. Since the grant of the associated estate must be in writing (CCP § 1971; Civ.C. § 1091; see¶ 4:263), implying the easement does not violate the statute of frauds. "If, in order to be valid and enforceable, an easement had to be in writing, there would be no such thing as an easement … by implication." [Dubin v. Robert Newhall Chesebrough Trust (2002) 96 CA4th 465, 475, 116 CR2d 872, 879—plaintiff stated valid claim to appurtenant easement arising by implication from lease]

(b) [4:102.4] May arise when property transferred by court decree: The doctrine of implied easements is not limited to cases of direct conveyance by deed from the common owner; if all the elements are present (¶ 4:102.2), an implied easement may arise when an interest in property is transferred by court decree, as in partition proceedings, or even when property is divided and distributed by testate or intestate succession after the common owner's death. [Larsson v. Grabach (2004) 121 CA4th 1147, 1149-1150, 18 CR3d 136, 138, 141-142]

(c) [4:102.4a] May arise by estoppel: An implied easement may arise by estoppel where the owner of the dominant parcel relies on the conduct or representations of the servient owner such that equity establishes an easement in order to prevent an injustice. [Christian v. Flora (2008) 164 CA4th 539, 549, 78 CR3d 892, 899]

• [4:102.4b] Plaintiff-owners of three parcels in a subdivision brought an action to quiet title in an easement across the defendants' parcels based on the incorporation in plaintiffs' deeds by the subdivider (defendants' predecessor in interest) of a recorded 1977 parcel map. The 1977 map was amended in 1979 to resubdivide the defendants' parcels and to create a new road easement that connected to the original easement granted plaintiffs by the incorporation in their deeds of the 1977 map. However, at the same time the 1979 map was recorded, quitclaim deeds mistakenly recorded by the subdivider extinguished the portion of the easement shown on the 1977 map. In short, the subdivider lacked all authority to deed an easement over defendants' parcels by the time plaintiffs' parcels were acquired.

Nonetheless, because the owners of the three parcels were misled into believing they had an easement across defendants' parcels, the defendants were estopped from claiming the 1979 parcel map did not constitute an amendment of the 1977 parcel map. [Christian v. Flora (2008) 164 CA4th 539, 542, 78 CR3d 892, 894]

[4:102.4c - 4:102.4g] Reserved.

(d) [4:102.4h] Scope of implied easement: The scope of an implied easement is measured by the extent to which the property was obviously and permanently used at the time the transfer was completed. [Civ.C. § 1104; see also Thorstrom v. Thorstrom (2011) 196 CA4th 1406, 1422, 127 CR3d 526, 539—intent is fundamental criterion for determining degree to which implied easement may impose burden on servient tenement]

1) [4:102.4i] May not impose unreasonable/unintended burden on servient tenement; "normal" future uses permitted: Use of an implied easement may not be altered to impose an unreasonable or unintended burden on the servient tenement. Nonetheless, the easement's scope is not fixed and determined strictly by its original manner of use. So-called "normal" future uses are considered within the reasonable contemplation of the parties and therefore permissible. [See Thorstrom v. Thorstrom (2011) 196 CA4th 1406, 1424-1425, 127 CR3d 526, 540-541—dominant tenement owner's addition of storage tank with automatic refill feature that functioned to deprive servient tenement owner of beneficial use and enjoyment of well water was not within parties' reasonable contemplation when implied easement was created (both parties were entitled to reasonable use consistent with volume of water available)]

2) [4:102.4j] Exclusive implied easement: Although not favored, an exclusive implied easement that precludes a servient owner from making the most practical use of an easement's surface area is permissible. In a case of "first impression," a trial court found the parties to a 1986 division and sale of two adjacent residential properties intended to create an implied easement over an eight-foot-wide strip of land that belonged to one parcel, but that had been used as the driveway to the home on the neighboring parcel. The appellate court reversed the trial court's ruling, finding the implied easement excluded a subsequent servient owner from any practical use of the disputed area and therefore was impermissible. The California Supreme Court, however, determined if there is "clear evidence" that the parties to the 1986 sale intended for the neighboring parcel's preexisting use of the area to continue after the title's separation, the "law obligates courts to give effect to that intent." [See Romero v. Shih (2024) 15 C5th 680, 687-688, 317 CR3d 478, 481 (reversed and remanded for appellate court to consider whether substantial evidence supported trial court's finding that exclusive implied easement existed)]

(5) [4:102.5] "Easements by necessity": An "easement by necessity" (essentially a species of implied easement, ¶ 4:102.2 ff.) is created when (a) there is a strict necessity for the "right of way" provided by the easement—i.e., the dominant tenement is completely landlocked; and (b) the dominant and servient tenements were under the same ownership at the time of the conveyance giving rise to the necessity. [Murphy v. Burch (2009) 46 C4th 157, 162-163, 92 CR3d 381, 386—easement arises from implied grant or implied reservation when property owner conveys one of two or more adjoining parcels; Daywalt v. Walker (1963) 217 CA2d 669, 672, 31 CR 899, 901—easement by necessity is supported by sound public policy that land not be rendered unfit for occupancy or successful cultivation]

Thus, when there is no express provision for access and the parcel conveyed is entirely landlocked, the grantee may claim an implied grant of a right-of-way by necessity over the land retained by the grantor. Conversely, when the grantor conveys adjoining property without an express agreement for access to a retained parcel left landlocked, the grantor may seek an implied reservation of a right-of-way of necessity over the conveyed property for the retained parcel's benefit. [Murphy v. Burch, supra—party who conveys property presumably also grants whatever is necessary for its beneficial use and retains whatever is necessary for beneficial use of land still in party's possession]

[4:102.5a - 4:102.5b] Reserved.

(a) Application

• [4:102.5c] An easement by necessity was created when the common owner of two contiguous parcels sold one under the mistaken belief a reserved easement in the deed provided him with a right of access over a historic trail. In fact, he had no such right and his parcel was landlocked (¶ 4:102.20b). [Hinrichs v. Melton (2017) 11 CA5th 516, 529, 218 CR3d 13, 23]

• [4:102.5d] Compare: But no actionable claim for easement by necessity was stated where a commercial tenant sued his landlord for installing crash posts on a road located on an adjoining property owned by the landlord that obstructed the tenant's use of the road as a driveway. Reason: The tenant failed to allege a lack of any other means of access. [Dubin v. Robert Newhall Chesebrough Trust (2002) 96 CA4th 465, 477, 116 CR2d 872, 881-882]

(b) [4:102.6] Easement passes with each transfer: Being appurtenant to the dominant estate (the landlocked parcel), an easement by necessity passes with each transfer of title to that property, and may be exercised at any time by the then-holder of the title for so long as the necessity exists and regardless of whether it was exercised by prior grantees in the chain of title. [Murphy v. Burch (2009) 46 C4th 157, 163, 92 CR3d 381, 386; Lichty v. Sickels (1983) 149 CA3d 696, 700-704, 197 CR 137, 140-142—5-year statute of limitations for real property actions inapplicable to suit for easement by necessity]

(c) [4:102.7] Easement does not survive into perpetuity: On the other hand, an easement by necessity, once created, does not survive into perpetuity. It ceases to exist when its necessity no longer exists—i.e., when the dominant estate is no longer landlocked because the owner has acquired a new means of access to the property. [Lichty v. Sickels (1983) 149 CA3d 696, 699, 197 CR 137, 139; Daywalt v. Walker (1963) 217 CA2d 669, 676-677, 31 CR 899, 903-904; see also Murphy v. Burch (2009) 46 C4th 157, 164, 92 CR3d 381, 387—easement terminates once alternative access becomes available because easement no longer serves to promote underlying public policy considerations]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(d) [4:102.8] Limitation where government entity is common grantor: It is possible for an easement by necessity to be created where the common owner of the conveyed parcels is a governmental entity … at least insofar as the access right involved is over the retained parcel(s). [Murphy v. Burch (2009) 46 C4th 157, 165, 92 CR3d 381, 388, fn. 2; see also Kellogg v. Garcia (2002) 102 CA4th 796, 799, 125 CR2d 817, 820—federal government impliedly granted access right over land it retained when it conveyed completely landlocked parcel to private party]

However, conveyances involving a common owner governmental entity typically do not give rise to implied easement reservations in the conveyed land. This is because exercise of the government's power of eminent domain removes the strict necessity required for the creation of these easements—i.e., the "sovereign can exercise the power of eminent domain to obtain any and all reasonable rights-of-way" should it so choose. Thus, "extreme caution" is exercised in determining whether the circumstances surrounding a government land grant are sufficient to overcome the inference prompted by the omission of an express reference to a reserved right of access. [See Murphy v. Burch, supra, 46 C4th at 165-167, 92 CR3d at 388-390 (declining to impose "categorical bar" to easement-by-necessity claims tracing common ownership to federal government, while imposing burden of proof on easement claimant re government's intent to reserve and its lack of power to condemn)]

• [4:102.8a] Over the course of some 50 years, the federal government deeded two parcels of property, by patent, to various private parties without expressly reserving an easement for the benefit of the adjacent four landlocked parcels it retained. Thereafter, the government conveyed the remaining four landlocked parcels, by patent, to Plaintiff's predecessors in interest. Because the government still owned the four landlocked parcels when it conveyed the first two parcels, it had the power at that time to condemn an easement over the two parcels to provide access to the four retained parcels. However, the government chose otherwise. Under the circumstances, Plaintiff could not overcome the inference prompted by the government's omission of an expressly reserved right of access and her claim for an easement by necessity failed. [Murphy v. Burch (2009) 46 C4th 157, 167-168, 92 CR3d 381, 389-391]

[4:102.9] Reserved.

(6) [4:102.10] Prescriptive easements: A "prescriptive easement" arises in much the same way that one may acquire title to real property by adverse possession: A party claiming a "prescriptive easement" must prove use of the land of another, which use has been (a) "open and notorious," (b) "hostile to the true owner," (c) under claim of right, and (d) continuous and uninterrupted for five years. [Harrison v. Welch (2004) 116 CA4th 1084, 1090, 11 CR3d 92, 97; see Windsor Pac. LLC v. Samwood Co., Inc. (2013) 213 CA4th 263, 270-271, 152 CR3d 518, 525 (disapproved on other grounds by Mountain Air Enterprises, LLC v. Sundowner Towers, LLC (2017) 3 C5th 744, 756, 220 CR3d 650, 660, fn. 3) (noting "hostile" and "under claim of right" are terms essentially synonymous with "adverse")—claimant's use is "adverse" if wrongful, in defiance of owner's property rights and supportive of action by owner against claimant; Nielsen v. Gibson (2009) 178 CA4th 318, 326, 100 CR3d 335, 341—"open and notorious" element, combined with others, ensures owner of encroached property has notice of adverse use (actual or constructive) and sufficient time to prevent that use from ripening into prescriptive easement; see also Grant v. Ratliff (2008) 164 CA4th 1304, 1308-1310, 79 CR3d 902, 904-906—son's use of road to and from former family home not adverse, but rather "a matter of family accommodation"]

However, unlike adverse possession, the successful claimant of a prescriptive easement "gains not title, but the right to make a specific use of someone else's property …" [Blackmore v. Powell (2007) 150 CA4th 1593, 1601, 59 CR3d 527, 533 (internal quotes and citations omitted)]

And, unlike adverse possession (see CCP § 325), a prescriptive easement does not require the payment of property taxes. Again, this is because a prescriptive easement is not an ownership right. In fact, someone claiming a prescriptive easement must show payment of taxes only "in the rare instance the easement has been separately assessed." [Main Street Plaza v. Cartwright & Main, LLC (2011) 194 CA4th 1044, 1054, 124 CR3d 170, 178—retail center claiming prescriptive easement for access to and parking in alleyway did not have to show it paid taxes assessed separately against adjacent railway easement (payment of said taxes was not an element of center's prescriptive claim because the easements were not "coextensive in use"); see also McLear-Gary v. Scott (2018) 25 CA5th 145, 152-153, 235 CR3d 443, 449-450 (¶ 4:102.33); Kapner v. Meadowlark Ranch Ass'n (2004) 116 CA4th 1182, 1186, 11 CR3d 138, 142 (noting courts have uniformly rejected prescriptive easement claims by those who exercise possessory rights over parts of adjoining parcels to escape the adverse possession tax requirement)]

(a) [4:102.11] "Claim of right": Use of the property under a "claim of right" does not require a belief that the use is legally justified. It simply means that the claimant's use for the requisite period occurred without the landowner's permission. [Felgenhauer v. Soni (2004) 121 CA4th 445, 447-450, 17 CR3d 135, 136-138; Aaron v. Dunham (2006) 137 CA4th 1244, 1252, 41 CR3d 32, 38; see also Windsor Pac. LLC v. Samwood Co., Inc. (2013) 213 CA4th 263, 270, 152 CR3d 518, 525 (disapproved on other grounds by Mountain Air Enterprises, LLC v. Sundowner Towers, LLC (2017) 3 C5th 744, 756, 220 CR3d 650, 660, fn. 3)—"claim of right" is adverse when use of property is made without any express or implied recognition of owner's property rights; compare Ranch at the Falls LLC v. O'Neal (2019) 38 CA5th 155, 181-182, 250 CR3d 585, 604-605—no prescriptive easement where plaintiff allowed to use private streets as property owner and resident of gated community]

The "claim of right" need not be expressly communicated to the property owner; the requisite continuous use of the property over a long period of time itself constitutes communication of the claim of right. [Aaron v. Dunham, supra, 137 CA4th at 1253, 41 CR3d at 38-39]

(b) [4:102.11a] Owner need not be in continuous possession: California law does not require that the actual owners of adversely used land be in continuous possession for five years. Indeed, "[i]f at any point during the adverse use an owner or landlord has been in possession, including constructively at the expiration of a renewable lease, he or she could and should have taken action to interrupt such use." [King v. Wu (2013) 218 CA4th 1211, 1214, 160 CR3d 819, 821-822—prescriptive easement not defeated by actual owner's lack of continuous possession where property was rented to series of tenants, owners were in actual possession during some brief vacancies and they had constructive possession at end of each lease]

(c) [4:102.11b] Continuing use after common ownership ends: In some cases, the underlying use of the servient estate began while the dominant and servient estates were under common ownership. The use of the servient estate during this time does not count toward the requisite five-year prescriptive period because a person cannot have an easement over their own property. [See Husain v. Calif. Pac. Bank (2021) 61 CA5th 717, 728-729, 276 CR3d 34, 43; and ¶ 4:102a]

If common ownership of the dominant and servient estates ends, the dominant estate owner may acquire a prescriptive easement to continue the preexisting use. The dominant owner must use the servient estate without the servient owner's permission and the use must be open, notorious, continuous, and hostile for more than the five-year prescriptive period. [Husain v. Calif. Pac. Bank, supra, 61 CA5th at 720, 728-733, 276 CR3d at 36, 42-46—property owner had prescriptive easement to use adjacent property for access, parking, garbage removal and recreational purposes where such uses began during common ownership and continued for 5 years after properties sold to separate parties]

[4:102.11c] Reserved.

(d) [4:102.11d] Presumption that open, notorious and continuous use is adverse? Two California Supreme Court decisions have given mixed indications whether the open, notorious and continuous use of land of another gives rise to a presumption that such use is adverse. [See O'Banion v. Borba (1948) 32 C2d 145, 149-150—no such presumption arises; compare Warsaw v. Chicago Metallic Ceilings, Inc. (1984) 35 C3d 564, 570—presumption arises where continuous use of easement occurs over long period of time without landowner's interference, shifting burden to servient owner to establish use was permissive]

1) [4:102.11e] Comment: Although Warsaw was decided after O'Banion, it most likely did not overrule O'Banion. In fact, Warsaw has been criticized for entirely ignoring O'Banion's substantial discussion of the presumption and reason for rejecting it. [See Grant v. Ratliff (2008) 164 CA4th 1304, 1309, 79 CR3d 902, 905; compare Ditzian v. Unger (2019) 31 CA5th 738, 743, 748, 243 CR3d 322, 326, 330 & fn. 9 (acknowledging pre-Warsaw split of authority but citing Warsaw with approval)]

"Warsaw's analysis was based on substantial evidence, not a presumption. Warsaw stands for nothing more than that the open, notorious and continuous use of another's land is sufficient evidence to support a finding that the use was adverse. Not to be presumptive, we think the discussion of presumption was at best dictum." [Grant v. Ratliff, supra]

(e) [4:102.12] Postcreation use with landowner's permission irrelevant: Once a prescriptive easement is created, the claimant's use "continues as a matter of legal right" and it is irrelevant whether the owner of the servient estate purports to grant permission. [Felgenhauer v. Soni (2004) 121 CA4th 445, 450-451, 17 CR3d 135, 138-139—once easement created, claimant need not "keep the flag of hostility flying"]

(f) [4:102.13] Exclusive prescriptive easements: Prescriptive easements may be exclusive or nonexclusive. An exclusive prescriptive easement completely prohibits the owner of the burdened parcel from using it. [See Harrison v. Welch (2004) 116 CA4th 1084, 1092, 11 CR3d 92, 99—no exclusive prescriptive easement for claimant's use of adjacent property to maintain woodshed and landscaping scheme (including trees, planter boxes, and irrigation system), which essentially "co-opted" area for claimant's exclusive use]

1) [4:102.14] Compare—equitable encroachment rights: An exclusive prescriptive easement will not be found in a case involving a "garden-variety" residential boundary encroachment, such as when a structure and/or landscaping merely encroaches on adjacent property. Instead, an "equitable encroachment right" may be fashioned to create an interest in the owner's property that will protect the encroacher's use of the property. [Harrison v. Welch (2004) 116 CA4th 1084, 1093, 11 CR3d 92, 99 & fn. 5 (emphasis added; internal quotes omitted)]

(g) [4:102.15] Posting signs to prevent prescriptive easement: A landowner can protect against the acquisition of a prescriptive easement by posting signs at each entrance to the property, or at maximum 200 foot intervals along the boundary, stating substantially "Right to pass by permission, and subject to control, of owner: Section 1008, Civil Code" (Civ.C. § 1008). In effect, the signs give notice to the world that it has permission to pass upon the land, thus defeating any hostile use under claim of right. [Aaron v. Dunham (2006) 137 CA4th 1244, 1250, 41 CR3d 32, 36; Grant v. Ratliff (2008) 164 CA4th 1304, 1307, 79 CR3d 902, 904]

But pursuant to § 1008, the signs must be posted by the property owner, or at least by someone acting at the owner's direction. [Aaron v. Dunham, supra, 137 CA4th at 1251, 41 CR3d at 37-38—signs posted by property lessee did not prevent ripening of prescriptive easement]

(h) [4:102.16] No "potential" prescriptive rights; judicial determination required: A prescriptive easement cannot arise unless the land belonging to another is actually used in the prescribed manner for at least five years (¶ 4:102.10). Speculation as to the potential existence of such an easement is insufficient to establish prescriptive rights … even when the "speculator" is a governmental agency (e.g., the California Coastal Commission). Indeed, governmental entities are not vested with authority to declare the existence of prescriptive easements—a judicial determination is required. [See LT-WR, LLC v. California Coastal Comm'n (2007) 152 CA4th 770, 805, 60 CR3d 417, 443]

• [4:102.17] In the absence of a judicial determination that prescriptive rights existed for public use of privately owned property, the California Coastal Commission erred in denying an application to erect gates and no trespass signs on the property:

"Inherent in one's ownership of real property is the right to exclude uninvited visitors … The Commission's decision would deny [plaintiff] that right … [T]he Commission is not vested with authority to adjudicate the existence of prescriptive rights for public use of privately owned property … [and its] denial of a permit for the gates and signs, premised on the existence of 'potential' prescriptive rights, was speculative …" [LT-WR, LLC v. California Coastal Comm'n (2007) 152 CA4th 770, 806, 60 CR3d 417, 444; compare Cave Landing, LLC v. California Coastal Comm'n (2023) 94 CA5th 654, 656-657, 659, 312 CR3d 447, 448, 450 (noting Commission's staff report determined public "very likely" acquired prescriptive right to use existing trail)—Commission did not err in denying permit granted by local county agency that would have allowed property owners to move easement for public hiking trail from owners' parcel to contiguous parcel]

(i) [4:102.18] Action to determine prescriptive easement's existence; laches inapplicable: Once the conditions for establishing a prescriptive easement are met (¶ 4:102.10), the easement holder is not required to take any further steps to perfect the easement holder's interest. Should a dispute concerning the easement's existence arise at any time subsequent thereto, and the easement holder is required to file an action to confirm the easement holder's interest (i.e., action to quiet title or for declaratory relief), the doctrine of laches may not be raised as an equitable defense: "[I]t is well-established, both in California and generally, that laches applies to equitable actions, not actions at law … And it is also clear that an action to determine the existence of an easement by prescription, whether via a claim for quiet title or a request for declaratory relief, is an action at law and not equity." [Connolly v. Trabue (2012) 204 CA4th 1154, 1164, 139 CR3d 537, 545]

(7) [4:102.20] Equitable easements: Through the doctrine of "balancing conveniences" or "relative hardship," courts may create equitable easements by refusing to enjoin what otherwise would be deemed an encroachment or nuisance. [Linthicum v. Butterfield (2009) 175 CA4th 259, 265, 95 CR3d 538, 544; see also Christensen v. Tucker (1952) 114 CA2d 554, 562-563, 250 P2d 660, 665—doubtful cases should be decided in favor of granting injunction]

Factors trial courts should consider in exercising their discretion not to enjoin the encroachment, thereby granting an equitable easement, include whether (a) the "encroacher" is innocent of willful and possibly negligent conduct; (b) the party seeking the injunction will suffer irreparable injury by the encroachment; and (c) the hardship created by enjoining the encroachment is greatly disproportionate to the hardship caused by its continuance. [See Tashakori v. Lakis (2011) 196 CA4th 1003, 1009, 126 CR3d 838, 842-843—factors apply to both physical encroachments and disputed rights of access over neighbors' properties (equitable easement proper where land accessible only through neighbor's driveway)]

• [4:102.20a] An equitable easement was found where the roadway over plaintiff's parcel provided the only means of access to defendant's property. [Linthicum v. Butterfield (2009) 175 CA4th 259, 266-267, 95 CR3d 538, 544-546]

• [4:102.20b] After "balancing the hardships" and finding plaintiff would suffer "irreparable harm" if he was denied access to his landlocked property, an equitable easement was found over a neighbor's parcel. This was so even though there had been no preexisting use of the area by plaintiff and he had previously sold a parcel to another neighbor that left his property landlocked. Plaintiff's decision to sell the parcel was considered "innocent" of willful or negligent conduct because he mistakenly believed long after the sale that he had a right of way over a historical trail (¶ 4:102.5c). [See Hinrichs v. Melton (2017) 11 CA5th 516, 523-524, 218 CR3d 13, 18-19]

• [4:102.20c] Compare: It was error to impose an equitable easement where the hardship to a neighbor in having to spend $300 to remove patio furniture from the landowner's property was not "greatly disproportionate" to the hardship on the landowner in losing the use of the property. [Shoen v. Zacarias (2015) 237 CA4th 16, 21, 187 CR3d 560, 564-565 (finding deprivation of substantial benefit falls short of imposing substantial hardship)]

• [4:102.20d] It was error to impose an equitable easement "as a matter of law" where landowners negligently encroached on their neighbor's property by planting pistachio trees and installing an irrigation system. Even though there was evidence the encroachment was not intentional, the landowners were "negligent" because they knew of an unspecified "lot line issue" with their neighbor at the time they planted the trees and installed the irrigation system. [Hansen v. Sandridge Partners, L.P. (2018) 22 CA5th 1020, 1028-1029, 232 CR3d 247, 252-253 (noting landowner's encroachment failed to satisfy first and most important element of equitable easement)]

(a) [4:102.21] Scope of easement; damages: The scope of an equitable easement should not be greater than is reasonably necessary to protect the interests of the purported dominant owner. [Christensen v. Tucker (1952) 114 CA2d 554, 563, 250 P2d 660, 665; Linthicum v. Butterfield (2009) 175 CA4th 259, 267-269, 95 CR3d 538, 546—abundance of caution is warranted when imposing easement on unwilling landowner]

Moreover, when an equitable easement is created by the denial of an injunction, the burdened landowner ordinarily is entitled to damages upon proof. [Linthicum v. Butterfield, supra, 175 CA4th at 267-269, 95 CR3d at 546; see also Tashakori v. Lakis (2011) 196 CA4th 1003, 1014, 126 CR3d 838, 847—no error in declining to award damages where burdened landowners failed to demonstrate their property would suffer diminished value or that they were damaged in any other way by grant of equitable easement]

(b) [4:102.22] Procedural posture: In most cases where an equitable easement is sought, the requested relief is raised by an encroacher as a defense to the plaintiff's claim seeking removal of the encroachment. However, a plaintiff's equitable easement claim is not defective simply because it does not rest on any alleged wrongdoing by the plaintiff. Properly construed, an affirmative claim for an equitable easement is one for declaratory relief, even if not literally designated as such. In short, the encroacher seeks a judicial determination that the encroacher is equitably entitled to continue accessing the property notwithstanding the burdened landowner's property rights. [See Tashakori v. Lakis (2011) 196 CA4th 1003, 1010-1013, 126 CR3d 838, 844-846—complaint seeking equitable easement adequately raised justiciable issue]

[4:102.23 - 4:102.24] Reserved.

(8) [4:102.25] Conservation easements: Finding that "the preservation of land in its natural, scenic, agricultural, historical, forested, or open-space condition is among the most important environmental assets of California," the Legislature enacted Civ.C. § 815 et seq. for the purpose of encouraging the "voluntary conveyance of conservation easements to qualified nonprofit organizations." [Civ.C. § 815; Canyon Vineyard Estates I, LLC v. DeJoria (2022) 78 CA5th 995, 1004, 294 CR3d 198, 207; Building Industry Ass'n of Central Calif. v. County of Stanislaus (2010) 190 CA4th 582, 593-594, 118 CR3d 467, 477; see also Wooster v. Department of Fish & Game (2012) 211 CA4th 1020, 1026, 151 CR3d 340, 345—state agency may acquire voluntarily conveyed conservation easement if otherwise authorized to acquire and hold title to real property]

(a) [4:102.25a] Defined: The term "conservation easement" means any written limitation in the form of an easement, restriction, covenant or condition, executed by or on behalf of a landowner, that is binding on successive owners. It is a voluntarily created interest in real property that is freely transferable in whole or in part and perpetual in duration. [Civ.C. §§ 815.1 & 815.2(a), (b); see also Canyon Vineyard Estates I, LLC v. DeJoria (2022) 78 CA5th 995, 1004, 294 CR3d 198, 207; Wooster v. Department of Fish & Game (2012) 211 CA4th 1020, 1026, 151 CR3d 340, 345—conservation easements are "negative" easements that impose specific restrictions on property's use]

Conservation easements are not personal in nature. Rather, they constitute interests in real property, the particular characteristics of which are those granted or specified in the instrument creating or transferring the easement. [Civ.C. § 815.2(c), (d); Wooster v. Department of Fish & Game, supra, 211 CA4th at 1026, 151 CR3d at 345]

(b) [4:102.25b] Involuntary conveyances prohibited: While it is California's public policy to encourage creation of conservation easements (¶ 4:102.25), no local governmental entity may condition land use approval on the granting of a conservation easement. [See Civ.C. § 815.3(b); compare Building Industry Ass'n of Central Calif. v. County of Stanislaus (2010) 190 CA4th 582, 599-601, 118 CR3d 467, 481-483—county's policy of conditioning land use approval on developer arranging for third party to "voluntarily" dedicate permanent easements did not run afoul of Civ.C. § 815.3's involuntary conveyance prohibition (statute specifically limits conservation easement prohibition to "applicant"—i.e., the developer)]

(c) [4:102.25c] Statutory relief for violations: If a person violates a conservation easement, a court may award injunctive relief and monetary damages, including restoration costs and compensation for the loss of scenic, aesthetic and environmental value. [Civ.C. § 815.7(b), (c); Sonoma Land Trust v. Thompson (2021) 63 CA5th 978, 982, 278 CR3d 324, 327]

In an action to enforce a conservation easement, the prevailing party is entitled to the costs of litigation, including reasonable attorney fees. [Civ.C. § 815.7(d); Sonoma Land Trust v. Thompson, supra, 63 CA5th at 982-983, 989, 278 CR3d at 327-328, 332 (affirming $2,961,264.29 attorney fees and costs award against property owners who intentionally violated conservation easement)]

(9) [4:102.26] Secondary easements: Every easement includes "secondary easements," i.e., the right to do such things as are necessary for the full enjoyment of the easement itself. A secondary easement can be the right to make repairs, renewals and replacements on the servient property and to do such things as are necessary to the exercise of that right. The dominant and servient owners' rights and duties are correlative in this regard. Indeed, each owner is required to respect the rights of the other, and neither party may conduct activities or place obstructions on the property that unreasonably interfere (¶ 4:102.27) with the other party's use. [See Dolnikov v. Ekizian (2013) 222 CA4th 419, 428-429, 165 CR3d 658, 665 (noting secondary easements are limited by "rule of reason"); Inzana v. Turlock Irrigation Dist. Bd. of Directors (2019) 35 CA5th 429, 450, 247 CR3d 427, 447, fn. 15]

(a) [4:102.27] Interference with easement: Interference with an easement is actionable when the grantor "unreasonably impedes" the grantee's rights through "[a]ctions that make it more difficult to use an easement, that interfere with the ability to maintain and repair improvements built for its enjoyment, or that increase the risks attendant on exercise of rights created by the easement are prohibited ... unless justified by needs of the servient estate." [Dolnikov v. Ekizian (2013) 222 CA4th 419, 429-430, 165 CR3d 658, 666 (emphasis in original; internal quotes omitted)—servient tenement owners' refusal to sign two documents required by city before it would issue dominant tenement owner permits necessary to make easement roadway useable for its intended purpose constituted unreasonable interference with dominant tenement owner's use and enjoyment of easement; see also Inzana v. Turlock Irrigation Dist. Bd. of Directors (2019) 35 CA5th 429, 433, 447, 451-452, 247 CR3d 427, 433, 444, 447-449—pistachio trees planted by servient tenement owner within irrigation district's pipeline easement "unreasonably interfered" with district's easement rights, justifying district's tree removal order and subsequent cessation of water deliveries (a remedy provided for under district's irrigation rules)]

(b) [4:102.28] Subsequent agreements: Grantees do not automatically lose their easement rights by entering into agreements that allow grantors to improve or otherwise alter the encumbered property. A subsequent agreement's effect on existing easement rights depends on the contractual language, and courts will attempt to harmonize the contracts "'so as to give effect to every part.'" [3500 Sepulveda, LLC v. Macy's West Stores, Inc. (9th Cir. 2020) 980 F3d 1317, 1323-1324 (quoting Civ.C. § 1641)—owners of commercial property within shopping center did not give up express easement rights over common areas, including parking areas, driveways and sidewalks, by (i) agreeing to allow another property owner to expand retail space and construct new parking structures and (ii) giving that owner "discretion" to revise site plans]

[4:102.29] Reserved.

(10) Extinguishment of easement

(a) [4:102.30] By merger of estates: An easement is extinguished under the doctrine of merger when the right to the easement and right to the servient tenement vest in the same person (or group of persons). In other words, when the burdens and benefits are united through common ownership in a single person (or group of persons), the servitude ceases to have any function and therefore terminates. [See Civ.C. § 811; Rest.3d Property Servitudes, § 7.5, comm. a; and Zanelli v. McGrath (2008) 166 CA4th 615, 625-630, 82 CR3d 835, 842-847—view easement extinguished by merger when cotenants acquired all interests equally in dominant and servient tenements; compare Hamilton Court, LLC v. East Olympic, L.P. (2013) 215 CA4th 501, 505-506, 154 CR3d 924, 927-928 (finding merger doctrine applicable only when it prevents injustice and serves interests of person holding two estates)—error to apply merger doctrine and extinguish commercial property easement where interested parties stipulated easement constituted "first priority security interest" and any transfer of related property would not affect that priority; Tariwala v. Mack (2022) 84 CA5th 807, 809-811, 300 CR3d 51, 52-53—merger doctrine did not automatically apply to driveway easement even though servient tenement owner obtained sole title to both servient and dominant tenements prior to foreclosure sale of dominant tenement]

Comment: In Tariwala (above), the servient owner never actually held both properties in "unity of title," as required under the merger doctrine. Instead, he encumbered the dominant tenement immediately after acquiring sole ownership, did not dispute the dominant tenement was legally and physically landlocked, and presented no evidence the lender would have funded his loan absent the easement in the pledged trust deed. Moreover, the dominant tenants would have suffered "profound prejudice" if the merger doctrine had been applied and they were left with no means to lawfully access their house. [Tariwala v. Mack, supra, 84 CA5th at 811-812, 300 CR3d at 54-55 (citing Hamilton Court with approval)]

1) [4:102.31] Revival of extinguished easement: An easement once extinguished by merger of estates does not spring back into existence merely by severance of the united estates. "It must … be newly created by an express stipulation in the conveyance by which the severance is made or from the implication of the circumstances of the severance." [Zanelli v. McGrath (2008) 166 CA4th 615, 634, 82 CR3d 835, 851 (internal quotes omitted)—view easement previously extinguished by merger was not revived when common owners of dominant and servient tenements sold dominant tenement to third party]

(b) [4:102.32] By prescription: An easement may be extinguished by the user of the servient tenement in a manner adverse to the exercise of the easement, for the period of time required to give title to land by adverse possession. Thus, "the nonpermissive erection and maintenance for the statutory period of time of permanent structures, such as buildings, which obstruct and prevent the use of the easement will operate to extinguish the easement." [Glatts v. Henson (1948) 31 C2d 368, 371, 188 P2d 745, 746-747—owner of fee interest in property on which easement was located constructed buildings on easement without easement claimants' consent and maintained same for more than five years; Main Street Plaza v. Cartwright & Main, LLC (2011) 194 CA4th 1044, 1054, 124 CR3d 170, 178 (citing Glatts with approval); see also Cottonwood Duplexes, LLC v. Barlow (2012) 210 CA4th 1501, 1509, 149 CR3d 235, 241—"three elements, nonuser, intention to abandon, and damage to the owner of the servient estate, must concur in order to extinguish the easement" (internal quotes omitted)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

1) [4:102.33] "Timely" payment of property taxes: Provided the easement is not separately assessed (¶ 4:102.10), the servient estate owner also must "timely" pay all state, county or municipal taxes levied and assessed on the servient tenement to extinguish the easement by adverse possession. [See CCP § 325(b); McLear-Gary v. Scott (2018) 25 CA5th 145, 156, 235 CR3d 443, 453—servient estate owner's lump sum payment of several years' worth of delinquent property taxes did not qualify as "timely" payment for purposes of extinguishing dominant estate owner's prescriptive easement]

(c) [4:102.34] By abandonment: Abandoning an easement created by grant requires proof of (i) cessation of use by the dominant tenement owner and (ii) unequivocal and decisive acts on the dominant tenant's part that clearly show an intention to abandon. [See Visitacion Investment, LLC v. 424 Jessie Historic Properties, LLC (2023) 92 CA5th 1081, 1089, 310 CR3d 263, 270 (summary judgment reversed due to disputed issues of fact re easement's alleged abandonment); Concord & Bay Point Land Co. v. City of Concord (1991) 229 CA3d 289, 295, 280 CR 623, 626—easements found to be abandoned do not "revert" to grantor; they are "simply extinguished," discussed further in conjunction with rights of way at ¶ 4:92.6]

(d) [4:102.35] Compare—no extinguishment against owner's will: Neither public policy nor any rule of law authorizes the extinguishment of a granted easement, in whole or in part, against the will of the easement owner. It makes no difference if the easement's owner does not reasonably need the entirety of the easement. [See Cottonwood Duplexes, LLC v. Barlow (2012) 210 CA4th 1501, 1509-1510, 149 CR3d 235, 241-242—error to shorten and narrow road/utility easement simply because court believed owner did not appear to need it "either now or in the future"]

b. [4:103] License: A "license" is the grant of permission to come upon the land of another to perform an act or series of acts. A license is a personal right; the license holder does not possess any estate or interest in the property to which the license is subject. [Gamerberg v. 3000 E. 11th St., LLC (2020) 44 CA5th 424, 429, 257 CR3d 652, 657; San Jose Parking, Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (City of San Jose Redevelop. Agency) (2003) 110 CA4th 1321, 1329, 2 CR3d 505, 511; see also Friedman, Garcia & Hoy, Cal. Prac. Guide: Landlord-Tenant (TRG), Ch. 2A]

(1) [4:103.1] Irrevocable license: Although licenses generally may be revoked at any time, courts can declare them "irrevocable" if the licensee has expended money or labor while reasonably relying on the license's existence. This is so, however, only where the expenditures are "substantial," "considerable" or "great." [See Shoen v. Zacarias (2019) 33 CA5th 1112, 1119-1121, 245 CR3d 683, 687-690—neighbor's expenditure evidence ($15,000 to $25,000 estimate based on "handful of receipts" for improving/maintaining flat area, a portion of which belonged to licensor) did not constitute "substantial evidence" of "substantial expenditures" and therefore did not support irrevocable license finding]

For all practical purposes, an irrevocable license is essentially an easement (see¶ 4:102 ff.). [Shoen v. Zacarias, supra, 33 CA5th at 1120, 245 CR3d at 689; Barnes v. Hussa (2006) 136 CA4th 1358, 1370, 39 CR3d 659, 667]

(2) [4:103.2] Assignability of license by licensee; transfer of property benefitting from license: Any attempt by a licensee to assign a routine license "ordinarily destroys and terminates it." [Gamerberg v. 3000 E. 11th St., LLC (2020) 44 CA5th 424, 429, 257 CR3d 652, 657 (internal quotes omitted)]

As the equivalent of an easement, however, an irrevocable license may continue after the property benefitting from the license is transferred. This is so provided the requisite intent is established and notice of the license is given. Otherwise, the license is lost. [See Gamerberg v. 3000 E. 11th St., LLC, supra, 44 CA5th at 434-436, 257 CR3d at 661-662—purchaser of lot "A" lost alleged "irrevocable license" to use neighbor's lot "B" for parking purposes because affidavit memorializing said usage, entered into by properties' prior owners, was not recorded and lot "A's" purchaser lacked actual notice]

(3) [4:103.3] Assignability of license by licensor; transfer of property encumbered by license: In general, a license does not run with the land to bind subsequent purchasers and a transfer of property encumbered by a license will revoke the license. [Riverside County Transp. Comm'n v. Southern Calif. Gas Co. (2020) 54 CA5th 823, 841, 268 CR3d 196, 210 (collecting authorities)]

However, a license can be made assignable by contract. If it is, a transfer of property encumbered by the license may be sufficient to convey the license to the subsequent purchaser, even if the license was not separately or expressly assigned. Under Civ.C. § 1084, a license will be conveyed along with the property it encumbers if the license is (i) assignable and (ii) reasonably essential to the beneficial use and enjoyment of the property. [Riverside County Transp. Comm'n v. Southern Calif. Gas Co., supra, 54 CA5th at 841-842, 268 CR3d at 210-211—transportation commission's property acquisition included licenses requiring gas company to remove pipelines; see also Civ.C. § 1084—"[t]he transfer of a thing transfers also all its incidents, unless expressly excepted"]

c. [4:104] Rights of way: A "right of way" consists of a right of passage over and upon a piece or parcel of land. Generally, it may constitute either an easement or a license (¶ 4:103). [See Civ.C. §§ 801(4) (easement appurtenant), 802(5) (easement "in gross"); Vieira Enterprises, Inc. v. McCoy (2017) 8 CA5th 1057, 1075, 214 CR3d 193, 206—right of way is among easements that may be created by grant; compare City of Manhattan Beach v. Sup.Ct. (Farquhar) (1996) 13 C4th 232, 238-248, 52 CR2d 82, 86-93—despite its multiple references to "right of way," deed that "release[d], remise[d], and quit-claim[ed]" property to railroad construed to convey fee simple title; Severns v. Union Pac. R.R. Co. (2002) 101 CA4th 1209, 1215-1216, 125 CR2d 100, 105-106—deed using "right of way" to describe purpose to which land was to be put construed to convey fee simple subject to condition subsequent; and see Barahona v. Union Pac. R.R. Co. (9th Cir. 2018) 881 F3d 1122, 1131-1135 (finding pre-1871 Congressional Acts conveyed fee simple defeasible interest to railroad companies via rights of way through public lands while 1875 Act conveyed only an easement in the right-of-way, albeit a broad easement, "for railroad purposes")]

(1) [4:104a] Grants across federal lands: A federal agency may grant rights of way across federal lands. In determining which agency has the requisite authority, however, the key issue is whether the agency granting the right of way has "jurisdiction to exercise the incidents of ownership." [United States Forest Service v. Cowpasture River Preservation Ass'n (2020) _ US _, _, 140 S.Ct. 1837, 1845-1850—Forest Service, not National Park Service, had authority to grant right of way for pipeline under Appalachian Trail because Forest Service had jurisdiction over land itself, while National Park Service "administers the Trail as an easement—an easement that is separate from the underlying land"]

(2) [4:104.1] Public rights of way: Unlike a private easement, the right to use a public "right of way" is "vested equally in each and every member of the public." [Bello v. ABA Energy Corp. (2004) 121 CA4th 301, 308, 16 CR3d 818, 823; see also Schmidt v. Bank of America, N.A. (2014) 223 CA4th 1489, 1501, 1502, 168 CR3d 240, 251-252 (noting mere inclusion of phrase "for public road purposes" does not transform otherwise private easement into public right of way)—public rights of way usually are termed "highways" or "public roads"]

"Specific language has never been required in California to establish the scope of a public right-of-way." The public may obtain a right of way through a private landowner's affirmative grant (a "dedication") or through "persistent public use of private land, whether or not permissive." [Bello v. ABA Energy Corp., supra, 121 CA4th at 317, 16 CR3d at 831] When private property abuts an "established" public street, a "right of way" is presumed. [Bello v. ABA Energy Corp., supra, 121 CA4th at 317, 16 CR3d at 831]

(3) [4:104.2] Extinguishment by adverse possession: While a right of way (or easement) created by grant cannot be lost by mere nonuse, it may be extinguished if the use by the servient tenement (property burdened by the right of way) amounts to adverse possession. [See Vieira Enterprises, Inc. v. McCoy (2017) 8 CA5th 1057, 1075-1082, 214 CR3d 193, 206-212 (summarizing law governing rights of way and easements)—use of neighbor's recorded right of way in private road by, among other things, planting palm trees and maintaining waste bins deemed insufficiently hostile to establish adverse possession]

d. [4:105] Using leases, easements or licenses to avoid subdivision restrictions: The division of real property into legal lots is governed by the Subdivision Map Act (Gov.C. § 66410 et seq.), the Subdivided Lands Act (Bus. & Prof.C. § 11000 et seq.) and regulations promulgated by the California Department of Real Estate. These statutes and regulations make it unlawful to sell a piece of property consisting of less than a legal lot.

Lawyers sometimes attempt to avoid the "legal lot" impediment by creating long-term ground leases, long-term easements or long-term licenses to effectuate the transfer of what would otherwise be a fee interest in a lot. It is difficult to precisely determine when the length or scope of an easement, license or lease has become so extensive as to constitute an unlawful subdivision. Nevertheless, counsel should take care not to run afoul of the statutory schemes by trying to effectuate through a lease, license or easement what the seller and buyer cannot lawfully accomplish by means of a grant deed.

(1) [4:106] Example: This problem frequently arises when an owner of a legal lot wants to acquire a portion of an adjoining owner's land to use, e.g., as a parking area. The two adjoining owners might then enter into a perpetual easement, license or lease, giving one the exclusive right to use a portion of the adjoining owner's lot. This could violate the California Subdivision Map Act, as well as other statutes. [But see Blackmore v. Powell (2007) 150 CA4th 1593, 1602-1605, 59 CR3d 527, 534-537—private exclusive use easement appurtenant for parking and garage purposes deemed too restrictive in scope to contravene Map Act (discussed further at¶ 4:102d, 4:102.1c)]

➪ [4:107] PRACTICE POINTER: Counsel representing buyers who propose to purchase the seller's long-term lease, easement or license in such cases should make certain that the arrangement has not violated subdivision laws.

(2) [4:108] Financing issues: Leases can be financed (see¶ 7:390 ff. regarding ground leases). However, most institutional lenders are unwilling to provide financing if their security will consist merely (or substantially) of an easement or license.

➪ [4:109] PRACTICE POINTER: Even though the arrangement passes muster under the subdivision laws, buyer's counsel should ascertain in advance whether the client's lender will accept the arrangement.

(3) [4:110] Other legal requirements: Aside from concerns with the subdivision laws, a long-term (or "perpetual") easement, license or right of way must also satisfy certain other legal requirements.

For example, certain usages of property are not legally permissible (and building permits will not be issued) unless ingress, egress and parking requirements are met. Thus, a local governmental entity might not issue a building permit or allow a particular usage of property if the ingress, egress and/or parking areas are not supported by an underlying fee interest.

And, of course, any long-term easement, license or right of way also must comply with municipal zoning restrictions; see¶ 4:102.1j.

[4:110.1 - 4:110.4] Reserved.

4. [4:110.5] Riparian, Littoral and Appropriative Water Rights: Under California law, landowners may have "riparian," "littoral" or "appropriative" rights to use the watercourse abutting their properties. These so-called "usufructuary" water rights, however, do not confer a right of private ownership in the abutting watercourse itself. [People v. Shirokow (1980) 26 C3d 301, 307, 162 CR 30, 34; People v. Murrison (2002) 101 CA4th 349, 358, 124 CR2d 68, 74; see also State of Calif. v. Sup.Ct. (Underwriters at Lloyd's of London) (2000) 78 CA4th 1019, 1031-1032, 93 CR2d 276, 286—groundwater not "owned" by anyone; and¶ 4:56 ff.]

a. [4:110.6] Riparian and littoral rights: The "riparian" doctrine confers upon a landowner the right to the reasonable and beneficial use of the water. Riparian water rights are not unlimited—riparian usage must be curtailed during water shortage periods. [People v. Shirokow (1980) 26 C3d 301, 307, 162 CR 30, 34; People v. Murrison (2002) 101 CA4th 349, 358-359, 124 CR2d 68, 74-75; see also Light v. State Water Resources Control Bd. (2014) 226 CA4th 1463, 1489, 173 CR3d 200, 218 (upholding State Board's power to prevent unreasonable water use by riparians in order to protect wildlife habitat)—riparian users must curtail their beneficial use proportionately when water supplies run sufficiently short]

A similar "littoral right" attaches to land abutting a natural lake or pond. However, such rights generally do not attach to land abutting an artificial lake or pond. [Tusher v. Gabrielsen (1998) 68 CA4th 131, 146-147, 80 CR2d 126, 134-135—no littoral rights attached to land abutting pond serviced by drain pipe]

(For a discussion of the method for determining littoral boundaries between adjoining owners of land bordering on tide waters, see Kendall v. Walker (2009) 181 CA4th 584, 593-595, 104 CR3d 262, 268-271.)

(1) [4:110.6a] Transfer of rights: Riparian rights vest in land that is contiguous to a watercourse ("riparian land") and continue after the land is transferred, even if the instrument that transfers the riparian land is silent about riparian rights. [Modesto Irrigation Dist. v. Tanaka (2020) 48 CA5th 898, 900, 262 CR3d 408, 410; Murphy Slough Ass'n v. Avila (1972) 27 CA3d 649, 655-656, 104 CR 136, 142]

If riparian land is subdivided, resulting in parcels that no longer are contiguous to a watercourse, riparian rights may continue to attach to the noncontiguous parcel if the grantor and grantee so intended. While a deed expressly conveying riparian rights to a noncontiguous parcel is the "clearest expression of intent," extrinsic evidence is admissible to demonstrate intent where the deed is ambiguous, including the time and place of sale, and the respective interests of the grantor and grantee. [Modesto Irrigation Dist. v. Tanaka, supra, 48 CA5th at 900-901, 910, 913, 262 CR3d at 410, 417-420—broad language in grant deed demonstrated intent to convey riparian rights to defendant's great-grandfather, a farmer who purchased noncontiguous parcel of reclaimed land from mortgage holders]

b. [4:110.7] Appropriative rights: At common law, rights to appropriate water were acquired by its actual diversion and use. In fact, the "appropriation doctrine" contemplates the diversion of water and applies to "any taking of water for other than riparian or overlying uses." [People v. Shirokow (1980) 26 C3d 301, 307, 162 CR 30, 34 (internal quotes omitted); People v. Murrison (2002) 101 CA4th 349, 358, 124 CR2d 68, 74]

In 1913, the Water Commission Act superseded common law and by amendment became the exclusive means of acquiring appropriative rights against the State of California (¶ 4:110.8). [People v. Shirokow, supra, 26 C3d at 308, 162 CR at 35 & fn. 15; see also Dow v. Lassen Irrig. Co. (2022) 79 CA5th 308, 327-328, 294 CR3d 643, 657-658—post-1914 appropriators may possess water rights only through state permit/license, while pre-1914 appropriative rights are not subject to state's statutory scheme; Millview County Water Dist. v. State Water Resources Control Bd. (2014) 229 CA4th 879, 889, 177 CR3d 735, 743—pre-1914 appropriators' water rights are determined by historical use]

(1) [4:110.8] Against the State: Appropriative rights against the State of California are acquired exclusively through a statutory procedure administered by the State Water Resources Control Board. [See Water C. § 1200 et seq.; Millview County Water Dist. v. State Water Resources Control Bd. (2014) 229 CA4th 879, 889, 177 CR3d 735, 743—post-1914 appropriators possess water rights only through Board-issued permits or licenses; People v. Shirokow (1980) 26 C3d 301, 308-312, 162 CR 30, 35-38 & fn. 15—nonriparian user's prescriptive rights claim cannot lie against the State]

(a) [4:110.9] Compare—prescriptive surplus water rights as between private parties: At least one case has concluded California law recognizes the perfection of prescriptive surplus water rights as between private parties—i.e., the Water Code is not the exclusive means of obtaining such rights. [See Brewer v. Murphy (2008) 161 CA4th 928, 936-937, 74 CR3d 436, 442-443 (declining to extend Shirokow to private party prescriptive rights); see also Saxon v. DuBois (1962) 209 CA2d 713, 719, 26 CR 196, 200-201—prescriptive water right established when use exceeds 5 years and is open, notorious, continuous, peaceable and uninterrupted under claim of right]

(2) [4:110.9a] Scope of appropriative rights: The scope of appropriative rights is limited by the concept of "beneficial use"—i.e., "a farmer is restricted to the amount of water that is necessary to irrigate his land by making a reasonable use of the water." [Montana v. Wyoming (2011) 563 US 368, 376, 131 S.Ct. 1765, 1772; see also United States v. United States Bd. of Water Commrs. (9th Cir. 2018) 893 F3d 578, 598—appropriative rights are untethered from land ownership, acquired and maintained by active, beneficial water diversion, provide for fixed water flow and are tiered as senior and junior rights based on chronological claim priority (¶ 4:110.10 ff.)]

(3) [4:110.10] Priority-in-time rules: Appropriative rights are subject to priority-in-time rules—i.e., they are subordinate to the rights of preexisting holders (riparians and senior appropriators). [Montana v. Wyoming (2011) 563 US 368, 375-376, 131 S.Ct. 1765, 1772—irrigation water rights are perfected and enforced in order of seniority, starting with first person to divert water from natural stream and apply it to beneficial use; see also Light v. State Water Resources Control Bd. (2014) 226 CA4th 1463, 1478, 173 CR3d 200, 210—although riparian users must curtail their use proportionately among themselves in times of shortage (¶ 4:110.6), they are entitled to satisfy their reasonable needs before appropriators can even begin to divert water]

(a) [4:110.10a] Junior appropriators: Notwithstanding the foregoing, junior appropriators are not completely without rights. As they come online, all appropriators acquire rights to the stream basically as it exists when they find it. Thus, "subject to the fulfillment of all senior users' existing rights, under the no-injury rule junior users can prevent senior users from enlarging their rights to the junior users' detriment." [Montana v. Wyoming (2011) 563 US 368, 376-377, 131 S.Ct. 1765, 1772; see¶ 4:110.11]

(4) [4:110.11] Changing purpose/place of use; transference, forfeiture and abandonment: The owner of an appropriative right may change the purpose and place of use of the water so long as the change does not injure others with rights in the watercourse ("no-injury rule"). [Montana v. Wyoming (2011) 563 US 368, 378, 131 S.Ct. 1765, 1773; North Kern Water Storage Dist. v. Kern Delta Water Dist. (2007) 147 CA4th 555, 559, 54 CR3d 578, 581; see also Orange Cove Irrigation Dist. v. Los Molinos Mutual Water Co. (2018) 30 CA5th 1, 21-23, 241 CR3d 283, 299-300—pre-1914 appropriative water rights owner entitled to change water's use, location or diversion point until said change enjoined upon showing of injury; United States v. United States Bd. of Water Commrs. (9th Cir. 2018) 893 F3d 578, 600—when rights holders change purpose and place of water right use they must consider how change will affect fellow appropriators; Nicoll v. Rudnick (2008) 160 CA4th 550, 560, 72 CR3d 879, 887—appropriation, use and nonuse test owner's rights, not place or character of use]

The right is transferable, subject to the "no-injury rule" and the "reasonable and beneficial use" requirement applicable to all water rights (¶ 4:56.1). [North Kern Water Storage Dist. v. Kern Delta Water Dist., supra]

Appropriative rights also may be abandoned or forfeited through nonuse. [North Kern Water Storage Dist. v. Kern Delta Water Dist., supra, 147 CA4th at 559-560, 54 CR3d at 581; see Millview County Water Dist. v. State Water Resources

Control Bd. (2014) 229 CA4th 879, 889, 177 CR3d 735, 743—appropriators who fail to "beneficially" use all or portion of their water for five years risk forfeiting unused amount, in which case maximum amount available to them is reduced by volume found to be forfeited]

(5) [4:110.11a] Improving irrigation systems: Senior water users may improve their irrigation systems without violating the "no-injury rule" (¶ 4:110.11), provided there is no change in the amount of water diverted and the conserved water is used on the same acreage for the same agricultural purpose. [Montana v. Wyoming (2011) 563 US 368, 376-379, 131 S.Ct. 1765, 1773-1774—improvements to irrigation systems "seem to be" the sort of changes that fall outside "no-injury rule"; see also United States v. United States Bd. of Water Commrs. (9th Cir. 2018) 893 F3d 578, 603-604 (distinguishing between river's natural flow which counted towards appropriators' current river water allocation and water stored by irrigation districts in reservoirs to which appropriators had no right)—farmers failed to demonstrate they had any right to stored water that would be injured by irrigation district's proposed change regarding water's release]

(a) [4:110.11b] Effect of recapture doctrine: The doctrine of recapture also supports treating improvements in irrigation efficiency as within the original appropriative right. Under this doctrine, appropriators who have diverted water for irrigation purposes have the right to recapture and reuse their own runoff and seepage water before it escapes their control or property. Indeed, "if the senior appropriator, through scientific and technical advances, can utilize his water so that none is wasted, no other appropriator can complain." [See Montana v. Wyoming (2011) 563 US 368, 379-385, 131 S.Ct. 1765, 1774-1777—at least in Montana and Wyoming, doctrines of appropriation and recapture, along with apparent scope of "no-injury rule," allow appropriators to improve their irrigation systems "even to the detriment of downstream appropriators"]

(6) [4:110.12] Appropriative rights included in foreclosure sales: Appropriative water rights are included in foreclosure sales under the general rule that rights and appurtenances that ordinarily pass with a land conveyance, pass to a purchaser on foreclosure. Moreover, water rights are considered appurtenant to land and therefore presumed transferred with land absent an express reservation. [See Nicoll v. Rudnick (2008) 160 CA4th 550, 559-560, 72 CR3d 879, 886; Stanislaus Water Co. v. Bachman (1908) 152 C 716, 724, 93 P 858, 862—water right becomes easement appurtenant upon foreclosure sale in same manner as any other appurtenance passes with title and possession of land]

5. [4:111] Options and Rights of First Refusal: An "option" or "right of first refusal" contemplates an eventual purchase and sale; it does not create in the option holder an estate in the property that is the subject of the option. [San Jose Parking, Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (City of San Jose Redevelop. Agency) (2003) 110 CA4th 1321, 1326-1327, 2 CR3d 505, 509; see also Cyr v. McGovran (2012) 206 CA4th 645, 650-651, 142 CR3d 34, 38—option constitutes mere offer to sell and does not give option holder any "interest" in subject property]

Nonetheless, because it contemplates an eventual purchase and sale, an option or right of first refusal should be negotiated and documented to include all terms and conditions of the ultimate transaction, and these should be included in the purchase and sale agreement.

Cross-refer: Options and rights of first refusal are discussed in detail in Ch. 8.

6. [4:112] Land Sale Contracts: The term "land sale contract" is used interchangeably with such terms as "real property sales contract" (Civ.C. § 2985 et seq.), "installment land contract" and "land contract secured by deed of trust." It is statutorily defined as "an agreement in which one party agrees to convey title to real property to another party upon the satisfaction of specified conditions set forth in the contract and that does not require conveyance of title within one year from the date of formation of the contract." [Civ.C. § 2985(a); but see also Civ.C. § 2985(b) (excluding contract for purchase of attached residential condo unit entered into pursuant to conditional public report issued by DRE under Bus. & Prof.C. § 11018.12)]

Essentially, under a land sale contract, the seller retains fee title until the buyer pays the balance of the purchase price. Pending full payment, the buyer simply holds a "vendee's interest," in the nature of an equitable interest. The seller holds the "vendor's interest" in the land sale contract (i.e., seller retains fee interest during the term of the land sale contract).

a. [4:113] Statutes: The principal features of a land sale contract are overviewed at ¶ 4:114 ff. Applicable statutory rules are set forth in Civ.C. §§ 2985-2985.6 and should be consulted when using this form of purchase and sale agreement.

b. [4:114] Financing element: The entire purchase price is neither paid when the contract is executed nor at the closing (although a portion—the downpayment—is usually paid at closing). Thus, land sale contracts have a seller-financing element.

At one time, the financing mechanism, as well as the vendor's foreclosure remedies, were contained within the "four corners" of the land sale contract. However, that mechanism created complexities and consequential enforcement difficulties since judges and lawyers often had little experience with this form of instrument.

Presently, the typical land sale contract takes the form of a "Land Contract Secured by Deed of Trust." This document essentially consists of two instruments, each separately executed, but comprising one document. By this method, the vendor uses a separate deed of trust to foreclose on the vendee's interest in the event of the vendee's breach. (After foreclosure against the vendee's interest, the vendor's interest in the land contract automatically merges with the vendor's fee interest, thereby eliminating the entire land contract.)

Conceptually, a land sale contract may thus be viewed as a seller-financed conveyance whereby the seller takes back a deed of trust from the buyer encumbering the property sold. Sellers under a land sale contract are essentially treated the same as a purchase money seller/lender under a conventional sale. [See CCP § 580b; and Petersen v. Hartell (1985) 40 C3d 102, 106, 219 CR 170, 172 (defaulting vendee's right of redemption)] However, the seller may elect either judicial or nonjudicial foreclosure (see¶ 6:512 ff. on foreclosures generally).

c. [4:115] Conventional purchase agreements compared: Land sale contracts differ fundamentally from conventional purchase agreements in that they do not convey fee title to the buyer at the closing (whereas the typical purchase and sale agreement culminates with the conveyance of fee title at closing).

d. Purpose and advantage of land sale contracts

(1) [4:116] Alternative financing: Historically, residential developers used land sale contracts as a method for financing the sale of their projects to buyers who could only afford a minimum downpayment. While institutional lenders required a substantial downpayment, a developer/seller would be willing to accept a smaller sum up front.

Where the developer/seller had existing financing encumbering the property, it would continue to make payments on the senior existing lien from payments due under the land sale contract. When the seller's equity in the property was paid off, a deed would be recorded and the vendee (who then became the owner) would make payments directly to the senior lienholder.

(2) [4:117] Attempted avoidance of due-on-sale clause: Some believe that use of a land sale contract will avoid triggering a due-on-sale clause in an existing deed of trust encumbering the property. This was at one time true (see Tucker v. Lassen Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1974) 12 C3d 629, 638-639, 116 CR 633, 639); however, the Garn-St. Germain Depository Institutions Act of 1983 (12 USC § 1701j-3) has preempted this issue and all such due-on-sale clauses are now valid irrespective of state law.

Even so, some may prefer a land sale contract under the notion that a lienholder will never learn about the transfer since the loan payments will continue to be made by the seller. But this thinking is wrong. Institutional lenders do not notice or care whose name is on the installment payment check (the check is usually cashed without investigation or notation as to the account from which it is drawn). Indeed, institutional lenders typically discover a change in ownership by the change in owner's name reflected on the insurance certificate (a copy of which is typically provided to the lender). Thus, a land sale contract will not camouflage a sale.

Cross-refer: Due-on-sale clauses are discussed in detail at ¶ 6:388 ff.

e. [4:118] Disadvantages of land sale contract: There are certain disadvantages to a land sale contract which should be considered at the outset:

(1) [4:119] Unnecessarily complex: The principal disadvantage is that it is complicated and unnecessary. Since a land sale contract is fundamentally no more than a financing device, the better practice is to structure the transaction in a form consistent with its practical effect: i.e., the seller should simply take back a deed of trust to secure payment of the unpaid portion of the purchase price. This is less complicated, consistent with what the parties desire, and simplifies the seller's enforcement rights.

(2) [4:120] Potential delay in passing clear title: After the closing, the seller's obligation to deliver the deed still remains outstanding. Thus, after making all payments, the buyer still needs to obtain clear title. The seller may then be deceased, unavailable or unwilling to issue the deed. Delays can therefore result.

(3) [4:121] Difficulties in financing buyer's equity: As time goes by, the vendee builds up equity in the property. However, financing that equity may be difficult, if not impossible, because lenders are uncomfortable with financing a contract right that is not a fee (but only an “equitable interest” in a fee). Simply stated, lenders are unfamiliar with financing a vendee's interest in a land sale contract.

f. [4:122] Execution, recordation and description of property: Like any other conveyance of an interest in real property, a land sale contract must be in writing and recorded. The property must also be described as in any deed (see¶ 4:10).

g. [4:123] Mechanics and closing: Because it potentially, and ultimately, transfers a fee interest, an agreement for transfer by way of a land sale contract should cover the same issues as the transfer of a fee interest. Accordingly, the sections in this Chapter explaining terms, mechanics and closing apply equally to land sale contracts and conventional fee transfers.

However, since the conveyancing instrument is a land sale contract and not a deed, the form of the contract should be agreed to and attached to the purchase and sale agreement. (Title insurance companies and the California Association of Realtors (¶ 4:278) publish standard forms of land sale contracts.)

h. [4:124] Title insurance: Title insurance on a land sale contract is similar to that on a fee interest. The principal difference is that the interest insured is that of a vendee's interest in a land sale contract.

Cross-refer: For a comprehensive discussion of title insurance, see Ch. 3.

1. Preliminary Considerations

a. [4:130] Identifying "necessary" parties: All parties necessary to consummate the transfer of all property to be sold should execute both the purchase agreement and the appropriate conveyancing instrument (deed, assignment, etc.).

The question of who should be parties to the purchase agreement is of mutual importance to buyers and sellers. Buyers have the obvious interest in making certain they are dealing with those parties who have the lawful right to convey the property. (Buyers cannot prevail in a specific performance action against anyone who is not contractually bound.) So too, to ensure a binding deal, those signing for the sellers must have the authority to sign and/or all co-owners (or other necessary parties) must execute the purchase contract.

Ideally, to the extent practicable, all necessary parties to the transaction should be identified before the purchase agreement is signed. [See generally, Civ.C. § 1558—"It is essential to the validity of a contract, not only that the parties should exist, but that it should be possible to identify them"]

➪ [4:130.1] PRACTICE POINTER: When dealing with individuals, counsel should determine whether the seller is married, or has co-owners or partners. Secondarily (as discussed in greater detail at ¶ 4:185 ff.), if the seller is a partnership, corporation, trust or some other entity, both buyer and seller should determine at the outset whether those signing the contract have the authority to bind the selling entity.

b. [4:131] Party capacity and other essential contract elements: As a contract, purchase and sale agreements must satisfy four general statutory prerequisites: (1) the parties must be capable of contracting; (2) the parties must consent; (3) the contract must have a "lawful object"; and (4) the contract must be supported by "sufficient cause or consideration." [Civ.C. § 1550]

Any person has "capacity" to enter into a contract … except "minors, persons of unsound mind, and persons deprived of civil rights." [Civ.C. §§ 1556, 1557; but see also Fam.C. § 7050(e)(2) & (3)—"emancipated" minors have capacity to enter into binding contracts and to buy, sell, lease, encumber, exchange or transfer interest in property]

2. [4:132] Forms of Ownership: Property may be held by one person or two or more persons. Co-owner sellers must each join in the instrument of transfer. And, when more than one buyer is involved, the parties must address the secondary issue of the appropriate form of title.

a. [4:133] Sole ownership: When property is owned solely by one person, that person may alone enjoy the benefits and be responsible for the burdens of the property. Also, the sole owner may dispose of the property as they desire; and only that person's signature is required to effect a valid transfer. [See generally, Civ.C. § 679 ("absolute" ownership)]

(Ownership by a single person is referred to as "sole" or "several" ownership. See Civ.C. § 681.)

(1) [4:134] Community property concerns: However, certain complexities may arise where a person holding sole record title is married or a member of a registered domestic partnership. Here, community property law may require both spouses'/domestic partners' signatures. See ¶ 4:166 ff.

b. [4:135] Co-ownership (two or more owners): Ownership shared between one or more persons is a form of "qualified" ownership (commonly referred to as "co-ownership," "cotenancy" or "concurrent ownership"). [Civ.C. § 680(2); see State of Calif. v. Sup.Ct. (Underwriters at Lloyd's of London) (2000) 78 CA4th 1019, 1027-1028, 93 CR2d 276, 283]

Cross-refer: Agreements between co-owners of residential property are separately discussed in Ch. 12.

(1) [4:136] General rules: As discussed in detail at ¶ 4:140 ff., there are four types of co-ownership: (a) tenancy in common; (b) joint tenancy; (c) partnership; and (d) community property. [Civ.C. § 682]

(a) [4:137] Equal possessory interests: Regardless of the type of co-ownership, unless the coowners have agreed to the contrary, each has an "equal" right to the possession, use and benefit of the entire property. [See Zaslow v. Kroenert (1946) 29 C2d 541, 548, 176 P2d 1, 5; Dabney v. Dabney (2002) 104 CA4th 379, 382, 127 CR2d 917, 918]

(b) [4:137.1] Power to unilaterally encumber undivided interest: Joint tenants and tenants in common may encumber their separate undivided interests without the consent, and without affecting the interests, of the other cotenants. [Dieden v. Schmidt (2002) 104 CA4th 645, 650-651, 128 CR2d 365, 369]

(c) [4:138] Presumptive tenancy in common: A conveyance of co-ownership interests creates a tenancy in common among the co-owners unless the conveyancing instrument specifies that the property is acquired in joint tenancy, in partnership, or as community property. [Civ.C. § 686; In re Horn's Estate (1951) 102 CA2d 635, 640, 228 P2d 99, 102; but see Fam.C. § 760 (¶ 4:168)—presumptive community property if acquired during marriage (or registered domestic partnership; see Fam.C. § 297.5)]

Thus, e.g., a tenancy in common is deemed created when the instrument refers only to owners as "co-owners," regardless of whether the drafter may have intended to create a joint tenancy.

➪ [4:139] PRACTICE POINTER: The lesson is obvious: To avoid the creation of tenancy in common interests, it is important to designate in the conveyancing instrument the exact form of co-ownership desired. Indeed, even if the intent is to create a tenancy in common, it is advisable to explicitly so state in the conveyancing instrument, thereby eliminating potential ambiguities.

(d) [4:139.1] Termination of relationship; sale of property: Unless co-owners previously agreed upon an "exit strategy" should divergent opinions about selling the property arise and/or their relationship not work out, a partition suit (i.e., a court-ordered sale of the property per CCP § 872.010 et seq.) may be inevitable. [See Summers v. Sup.Ct. (Tan) (2018) 24 CA5th 138, 144, 234 CR3d 63, 67 (finding court must resolve each party's respective interest in property before ordering its sale); ¶ 12:37 ff.]

(2) [4:140] Tenancy in common: A tenancy in common is created whenever an instrument conveying property to two or more persons specifies that the owners are "tenants in common" or, as stated at ¶ 4:138, whenever the conveyancing instrument fails to specify another form of co-ownership. [Civ.C. § 686; see also Civ.C. § 685—interest in common is one owned by several persons, not in joint ownership or partnership]

(a) [4:141] Nature of undivided interests: Any number of persons may own property as tenants in common; and their interests may be equal or unequal.

The tenants in common may hold separate legal titles to their undivided interests. Unlike joint tenants (¶ 4:147), they may therefore acquire their interests at different times and from different sources, and may sell or mortgage their undivided interests as they please. [Meyer v. Sup.Ct. (1927) 200 C 776, 792, 254 P 1108, 1114]

1) [4:142] No right of survivorship: The principal distinguishing feature from a joint tenancy (¶ 4:151) is that tenancy in common ownership carries no right of survivorship. Thus, the interest of a deceased tenant in common passes by testate or intestate succession to the decedent's devisees or heirs rather than by operation of law to the surviving cotenants. [Dieden v. Schmidt (2002) 104 CA4th 645, 650, 128 CR2d 365, 369]

(b) [4:143] Equal possessory rights: Unless they have agreed otherwise, all tenants in common have equal rights to possession of the property. [Meyer v. Sup.Ct. (1927) 200 C 776, 792, 254 P 1108, 1114; Kapner v. Meadowlark Ranch Ass'n (2004) 116 CA4th 1182, 1189, 11 CR3d 138, 144; see also Hacienda Ranch Homes, Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Elissagaray) (2011) 198 CA4th 1122, 1128, 131 CR3d 498, 503—each tenant in common may assume another in exclusive possession is possessing for all and not adversely to others (discussed further at ¶ 4:143.5)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

1) [4:143.1] No right to exclude cotenant: Because they have equal possessory rights, no single tenant in common has the right to exclude the others from any part of the property. [Zaslow v. Kroenert (1946) 29 C2d 541, 548, 176 P2d 1, 5; Preciado v. Wilde (2006) 139 CA4th 321, 325, 42 CR3d 792, 795; see Kapner v. Meadowlark Ranch Ass'n (2004) 116 CA4th 1182, 1189, 11 CR3d 138, 144—cotenant's cause of action for wrongful ouster "is properly characterized as an action for possession"]

2) [4:143.2] No right to recover rental value from cotenant: Nor, absent "ouster" or wrongful dispossession, may one tenant in common recover the rental value of the property from a cotenant in possession. [Estate of Hughes (1992) 5 CA4th 1607, 1611-1612, 7 CR2d 742, 745]

3) [4:143.3] No trespass claims among cotenants: Because no single tenant in common has the exclusive right of possession, a tenant in common cannot "trespass" on the commonly-owned property. [Kapner v. Meadowlark Ranch Ass'n (2004) 116 CA4th 1182, 1189, 11 CR3d 138, 144]

4) [4:143.4] No right to force cotenant to change boundaries: And, because they share an equal right to possession of the whole property, one tenant in common has no right to force another cotenant to change the boundaries of the possessory interest other than through an action for partition. [Dabney v. Dabney (2002) 104 CA4th 379, 382-383, 127 CR2d 917, 918-919—probate court erred in ordering one tenant in common to execute documents for lot line adjustment between tenants in common where no partition action]

5) [4:143.5] Sole ownership title not acquired by mere exclusive possession: A tenant in common cannot by mere exclusive possession of the property acquire the title of their "out-of-possession" cotenants. The occupant cotenant in such circumstances can prevail as against the ownership rights of the other co-tenants only by establishing the normal elements of adverse possession (including providing notice to the other cotenants, by "open, notorious and unequivocal" acts of ownership, that the occupant cotenant intends to oust the others of their interest in the property). [Preciado v. Wilde (2006) 139 CA4th 321, 325, 42 CR3d 792, 795]

In fact, "[b]efore title may be acquired by adverse possession as between cotenants, the occupying tenant must bring home or impart notice to the tenant out of possession, by acts of ownership of the most open, notorious and unequivocal character, that he intends to oust the latter of his interest in the common property. Such evidence must be stronger than that which would be required to establish a title by adverse possession in a stranger … In short, one tenant in common cannot by mere exclusive possession acquire the title of his cotenant." [Hacienda Ranch Homes, Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Elissagaray) (2011) 198 CA4th 1122, 1128, 131 CR3d 498, 503 (emphasis added)]

(c) [4:144] Pro rata sharing of rents and expenses: Rent received from a third party for use of the property belongs to all the cotenants in common in accordance with their proportionate undivided interests. [Dabney-Johnston Oil Corp. v. Walden (1935) 4 C2d 637, 655, 52 P2d 237, 246]

Conversely, the cotenants share responsibility for expenses on the property in accordance with their proportionate undivided interests (a tenant in common who pays more than their share of expenses can recover a pro rata share from the other tenant(s) in common). [Willmon v. Koyer (1914) 168 C 369, 374, 143 P 694, 696]

1) [4:145] Compare—losses and improvements: However, a tenant in common is not obligated to protect against the loss of another tenant in common's interest in the property. [Russell v. Williams (1962) 58 C2d 487, 491, 24 CR 859, 862 (same rule applies to other types of cotenancy)—one cotenant cannot recover proceeds of fire insurance policy issued to another cotenant]

And a tenant in common cannot require reimbursement from the others for improvements (as opposed to expenses) to the property, unless consented to by the others. [Higgins v. Eva (1928) 204 C 231, 237-238, 267 P 1081, 1083-1084]

(3) [4:146] Joint tenancy: Broadly, a joint tenancy is co-ownership title among two or more persons created by a single transfer that expressly declares the form of co-ownership to be a joint tenancy.

More specifically, a joint tenancy is statutorily defined as:

> "[O]ne owned by two or more persons in equal shares, by a title created by a single will or transfer, when expressly declared in the will or transfer to be a joint tenancy, or by transfer from a sole owner to himself or herself and others, or from tenants in common or joint tenants to themselves or some of them, or to themselves or any of them and others, or from spouses, when holding title as community property or otherwise to themselves or to themselves and others or to one of them and to another or others, when expressly declared in the transfer to be a joint tenancy, or when granted or devised to executors or trustees as joint tenants." [Civ.C. § 683]

(a) [4:146.1] Subject to statute of frauds: The creation of a joint tenancy is subject to the statute of frauds and, therefore, generally must be evidenced by a writing expressly declaring the joint tenancy. [Civ.C. § 683; see Estate of MacDonald (1990) 51 C3d 262, 271-272, 272 CR 153, 159-160; and ¶ 4:263]

1) [4:146.2] Equitable estoppel defense: However, an oral joint tenancy may be enforceable under an applicable defense to the statute of frauds—including equitable estoppel to assert the statute (generally, where one party has detrimentally changed their position in reliance on the other party's representations that the agreement would be reduced to a writing or that the contract would be performed, ¶ 4:272.2). [See Byrne v. Laura (1997) 52 CA4th 1054, 1069-1070, 60 CR2d 908, 918 (disagreeing with contrary conclusion in Estate of Seibert (1990) 226 CA3d 338, 342-343, 276 CR 508, 511); see also ¶ 4:271 re "part performance" defense to statute of frauds]

(b) [4:147] Four unities of interest: To create a joint tenancy, a conveyance must transfer "to two or more persons at the same time the same title to the same interest with the same right of possession." In other words, the creation of a joint tenancy requires the four unities of time, title, possession and interest. [Estate of Propst (1990) 50 C3d 448, 455, 268 CR 114, 117 (emphasis added); see Re v. Re (1995) 39 CA4th 91, 95-96, 46 CR2d 62, 64-65]

Similarly, a joint tenancy lasts only so long as the four essential unities continue to exist: i.e., as at common law, destruction of one of the unities (e.g., by a cotenant's unilateral conveyance of the cotenant's undivided shares) severs the joint tenancy. [Estate of Propst, supra; Tenhet v. Boswell (1976) 18 C3d 150, 155-156, 133 CR 10, 14; Re v. Re, supra, 39 CA4th at 96, 46 CR2d at 65; see also Estate of Blair (1988) 199 CA3d 161, 169, 244 CR 627, 631—agreement between joint tenants that is inconsistent with one or more of essential unities (e.g., agreement to eliminate right of survivorship) severs joint tenancy; Walters v. Boosinger (2016) 2 CA5th 421, 438, 205 CR3d 895, 908, fn. 20 (declining to decide whether party's judicial admission that real property is not held in joint tenancy constitutes agreement that property is not held in joint tenancy)]

1) [4:148] Exception to "unity of title" requirement: Were the "unity of title" requirement strictly applied, no sole owner of property could directly create a joint tenancy among themselves and another (since the sole owner already owned the property, the joint tenants' ownership would not result from the same conveyance). This was in fact the rule at common law (to accomplish the same result, the sole owner had to convey the property to a third person, who would then reconvey back to the sole owner and another as joint tenants).

Civ.C. § 683 resolves this dilemma by expressly creating an exception to the "unity of title" requirement: As noted at ¶ 4:146, a joint tenancy may be created by a "transfer from a sole owner to himself or herself and others …" [See Civ.C. § 683]

(c) [4:149] Equal undivided interests and rights of possession: Because of the four unities of interest, each joint tenant "simultaneously possesses" an equal undivided interest in the property and (absent agreement to the contrary) equal rights of possession to the whole. [Estate of Propst (1990) 50 C3d 448, 455, 268 CR 114, 117; Tenhet v. Boswell (1976) 18 C3d 150, 155, 133 CR 10, 14; see Swartzbaugh v. Sampson (1936) 11 CA2d 451, 454, 54 P2d 73, 75—"Possession by one is possession by all"]

Likewise, one joint tenant cannot eject a cotenant in possession; and a joint tenant out of possession cannot recover exclusive possession of the property from a cotenant. Further, absent "ouster," one joint tenant cannot recover rent from a cotenant for the latter's occupancy. [Swartzbaugh v. Sampson, supra, 11 CA2d at 454-455, 54 P2d at 75]

(d) [4:150] Right of conveyance; severance: An "indisputable right" of each joint tenant is the power to convey their interest in the property with or without the knowledge and consent of the cotenants. [Estate of Propst (1990) 50 C3d 448, 455-456, 268 CR 114, 117-118; Zanelli v. McGrath (2008) 166 CA4th 615, 631, 82 CR3d 835, 848; see also Civ.C. § 683.2 (severance of real property joint tenancy without cotenants' "joinder or consent" by conveyance to third person, etc.)]

However, because such a conveyance is inconsistent with continuance of the essential unities, it severs the joint tenancy with respect to the conveying joint tenant's interest (thereafter, the remaining joint tenants retain their fractional shares as tenants in common with the transferee). [Estate of Propst, supra; Zanelli v. McGrath, supra—survivorship right is "mere expectancy," arising only upon success of "ultimate gamble—survival"; and see Re v. Re

(1995) 39 CA4th 91, 96-99, 46 CR2d 62, 65-67—posthumously-recorded deed between 2 of 3 joint tenants severs joint tenancy among the 3 joint tenants]

1) [4:150a] Statutory limitations on severance by unilateral conveyance: A joint tenant's conveyance to a third person, without the cotenants' joinder or consent, is effective to terminate the cotenants' right of survivorship as to the severing joint tenant's interest only if (Civ.C. § 683.2(c)):

- Before the severing joint tenant's death, the deed (or other conveyancing instrument) is recorded in the county where the property is located; or

- The deed (or other instrument of conveyance) is executed and acknowledged before a notary public by the severing joint tenant no earlier than three days before the severing joint tenant's death and recorded in the county where the property is located no later than seven days after the severing joint tenant's death. [Civ.C. § 683.2(c); see Dorn v. Solomon (1997) 57 CA4th 650, 653, 67 CR2d 311, 313—attempted severance of joint tenancy interest in family home by quitclaim to irrevocable trust ineffective because deed not recorded until one month after severing joint tenant's death]

a) [4:150b] Domestic relations proceedings: In dissolution, legal separation and nullity actions, the parties are subject to four automatic temporary restraining orders that, among other things, generally prohibit each party from transferring real property or creating/modifying nonprobate property transfers without the other party's written consent or a court order (Fam.C. § 2040(a)(2)(A), (4)). The restraining orders do not, however, restrain either party from eliminating a right of survivorship to property provided "notice of the change is filed and served on the other party before the change takes effect." [Fam.C. § 2040(b)(3)]

In addition to § 2043(b)(3)'s notice requirement (above), case law holds a party must satisfy Civ.C. § 683.2(c)'s recordation requirement before severance of a joint tenancy effectively eliminates the survivorship right. The notice and recordation requirements, however, may be satisfied in any order. [Raney v. Cerkueira (2019) 36 CA5th 311, 316-317, 330, 248 CR3d 426, 428-429, 440 (¶ 12:5.2a)]

[4:150.1] Reserved.

2) [4:150.2] Compare—severance with concurrence of all joint tenants: A joint tenancy may also be severed of course by the concurrence of all joint tenants. Where all joint tenants join in executing a written instrument of severance, it is effective to terminate the survivorship feature whether or not recorded. [Civ.C. § 683.2(d); Estate of Powell (2000) 83 CA4th 1434, 1442-1443, 100 CR2d 501, 506—joint tenancy character of family residence terminated when spouses included it in trust executed by both of them]

3) [4:150.3] Compare—severance of joint tenancies between spouses/registered domestic partners by judgment of dissolution: A judgment of dissolution or nullity automatically severs (by operation of law) a joint tenancy between spouses or registered domestic partners (whether the joint tenancy was created before or during the parties' marriage or domestic partnership) upon a spouse's/domestic partner's death. [Prob.C. § 5042(a), (d) (same re property held as community property with right of survivorship); see also Fam.C. §§ 297.5, 299(d)—registered domestic partners and former registered domestic partners have almost all rights, benefits and obligations of spouses and former spouses under Calif. law]

Exceptions: The automatic severance rule (above) does not apply where (i) the joint tenancy is not subject to severance at the time of decedent's death (as where the judgment of dissolution orders that the joint tenancy be maintained), or (ii) there is "clear and convincing evidence" the decedent intended to preserve the joint tenancy in favor of the former spouse/partner. [Prob.C. § 5042(b)]

(e) [4:151] Right of survivorship: The principal distinguishing characteristic of a joint tenancy is the right of survivorship. This means that upon the death of a joint tenant, title to the deceased's undivided interest vests in the surviving joint tenant(s) by operation of law—the interest passes to the surviving cotenants automatically, without the necessity of a probate or any other proceeding. (However, title companies will require a copy of the death certificate and/or recordation of an appropriate instrument confirming the joint tenant's death.) [Swan v. Walden (1909) 156 C 195, 196, 103 P 931, 932; Dieden v. Schmidt (2002) 104 CA4th 645, 650, 128 CR2d 365, 368-369; Walters v. Boosinger (2016) 2 CA5th 421, 434, 205 CR3d 895, 905—joint tenancy is estate designed to allow two or more persons who jointly own property to avoid probate upon death of one joint tenant; and see detailed discussion in Ross & Cohen, Cal. Prac. Guide: Probate (TRG), Ch. 2]

The right of survivorship in joint tenancy property continues to exist only for so long as the four essential unities continue. A fortiori, a joint tenant's conveyance of their undivided interest extinguishes the right of survivorship as to that interest (but subject to the limitations of Civ.C. § 683.2; see ¶ 4:150a). [Estate of Propst (1990) 50 C3d 448, 455, 268 CR 114, 117; Tenhet v. Boswell (1976) 18 C3d 150, 155-156, 133 CR 10, 14]

(f) Pros and cons

1) [4:152] Advantages of joint tenancy: For property owners concerned about disposition at death, the right of survivorship generally is viewed as representing the greatest advantage of joint tenancy title over tenancies in common: As stated, a deceased joint tenant's interest vests immediately in the surviving joint tenant(s) without legal action. In addition, the surviving joint tenant(s) take title to the deceased's interest free and clear of all involuntary liens and claims against the deceased joint tenant. [Clark v. Carter (1968) 265 CA2d 291, 294, 70 CR 923, 926 (superseded by statute on other grounds as stated in Estate of Mitchell (1999) 76 CA4th 1378, 1390, 91 CR 192, 200)]

Cross-refer: Spouses and registered domestic partners, however, can realize the same “survivorship” benefit by taking title as “community property with right of survivorship”; see ¶ 4:177.

2) [4:153] Disadvantages of joint tenancy: Offsetting the right of survivorship are these points to consider:

a) [4:154] Interest not subject to testamentary disposition: Though a joint tenant's interest may be the subject of a lifetime conveyance (¶ 4:150), it cannot be bequeathed by will (the right of survivorship prevails … unless, of course, the decedent is the last remaining joint tenant). [Santoro v. Carbone (1972) 22 CA3d 721, 729, 99 CR 488, 493 (disapproved on other grounds by Tenzer v. Superscope, Inc. (1985) 39 C3d 18, 30, 216 CR 130, 137); see also Estate of Blair (1988) 199 CA3d 161, 166, 244 CR 627, 630 (distinguishing community property)]

b) [4:155] Severable: No matter how desirable the survivorship feature, it is simply “an expectancy that is not irrevocably fixed upon the creation of the [joint tenancy] estate.” [Tenhet v. Boswell (1976) 18 C3d 150, 155-156, 133 CR 10, 14 (emphasis added); see Re v. Re (1995) 39 CA4th 91, 96, 46 CR2d 62, 65]

Again, subject to certain statutory conditions (see Civ.C. § 683.2, ¶ 4:150a), joint tenancies may easily be severed by the conveyance of one joint tenant's interest (thus extinguishing the right of survivorship), whether the transfer is voluntary or involuntary (e.g., execution). [Estate of Propst (1990) 50 C3d 448, 455-456, 268 CR 114, 117-118; see also ¶ 4:150 ff.]

(g) [4:156] Combined joint tenancy and tenancy in common relationships: Two or more individuals may hold a tenancy in common interest among themselves as joint tenants—i.e., there may be a joint tenancy of undivided interests in an overall tenancy in common. Here, a deceased joint tenant's share passes by right of survivorship to the remaining joint tenant(s); but the death does not impact the overall tenancy in common relationship. [See Re v. Re (1995) 39 CA4th 91, 98-99, 46 CR2d 62, 67—deeds between 2 of 3 joint tenants granting each other joint tenancy as to their 2/3 interest severed overall joint tenancy to create tenancy in common with third former joint tenant]

[4:157 - 4:159] Reserved.

(4) Partnerships

(a) [4:160] Nature of “partnership”: A “partnership interest” is “one owned by several persons, in partnership, for partnership purposes.” [Civ.C. § 684]

A “partnership” is “an association of two or more persons to carry on as coowners a business for profit … and includes … a registered limited liability partnership …” [Corps.C. § 16101(a)(9) (1/1/26 “sunset” date); see Corps.C. § 16951 et seq. re registration of limited liability partnerships; see also Enea v. Sup.Ct. (3-D) (2005) 132 CA4th 1559, 1564, 34 CR3d 513, 516 (defining characteristic of partnership is combination of two or more persons to jointly conduct business)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

But coownership of property (as joint tenants, tenants in common or any form of part ownership) does not itself establish a partnership, whether or not the coowners share profits realized from use of the property. [See Corps.C. § 16202(c)(1)]

(b) [4:161] Property ownership: A partnership is an entity distinct from its individual partners. [Corps.C. § 16201] Real property acquired by the partnership is property of the partnership and not of the partners individually; and, therefore, may only be conveyed in the partnership name. [Corps.C. §§ 16203, 16302]

1) [4:161.1] Acquisition: Property is partnership property if acquired in the name of either (i) the partnership or (ii) one or more partners with an indication in the instrument of transfer of the person's capacity as a partner or of the existence of a partnership but without an indication of the name of the partnership. [Corps.C. § 16204(a)]

Property is acquired in the partnership name by transfer to either (i) the partnership in its name or (ii) one or more partners in their capacity as partners if the name of the partnership is indicated in the instrument of transfer. [Corps.C. § 16204(b)]

2) [4:161.2] Presumptions: Property is presumed to be partnership property if purchased with partnership assets, even if not acquired in the partnership name or the name of one or more partners with an indication in the instrument of transfer of the person's capacity as partner or of the existence of the partnership. [Corps.C. § 16204(c)]

Conversely, even if used for partnership purposes, property is presumed to be a partner's separate property if acquired in the partner's name without an indication in the instrument of transfer of the person's capacity as a partner or of the existence of a partnership and without use of partnership assets. [Corps.C. § 16204(d)]

(c) [4:162] Partners' interest in partnership property: Individual partners are not "coowners" of partnership property and have no interest in partnership property that can be transferred (whether voluntarily or involuntarily). The only interest transferrable by a partner is their share of partnership profits and losses and the right to receive distributions (a personal property interest). [See Corps.C. §§ 16501, 16502]

Partners may use or possess partnership property only on behalf of the partnership. [Corps.C. § 16401(g)]

[4:163 - 4:165] Reserved.

(5) [4:166] Community property: Community property is all property, no matter where situated, acquired by a married person or registered domestic partner during the marriage/domestic partnership while domiciled in California, unless otherwise provided by statute. [Fam.C. § 760; see also Fam.C. § 297.5(a), (b), (c) (registered domestic partners have rights and obligations of spouses under Calif. law)] However, the parties may hold property as joint tenants or tenants in common instead of community property. [Fam.C. § 750]

(By contrast, a spouse's or registered domestic partner's separate property consists generally of premarital/prepartnership acquisitions; acquisitions during the marriage/domestic partnership by gift, devise or descent; the rents, issues and profits on all of such property; and the spouse's/domestic partner's postseparation earnings and accumulations not traceable to a community property interest. See Fam.C. §§ 770, 771(a), 772.)

Cross-refer: The sections at ¶ 4:167 ff. overview the pertinent provisions of California community property law. For a detailed discussion of the subject, see Hogoboom & King, Cal. Prac. Guide: Family Law (TRG), Ch. 8.

(a) [4:167] Presumptive community property: The Fam.C. § 760 definition of community property is effectively applied as a general presumption that all marital/domestic partnership acquisitions are community property. [Fam.C. § 760; but see also Fam.C. § 802—general community property presumption inapplicable to property held at death if marriage/domestic partnership dissolved more than 4 years before death]

1) [4:168] Special community property presumption for purposes of dissolution or legal separation: Another community property presumption attaches to property acquired by spouses or registered domestic partners during the marriage/domestic partnership in "joint form" (including joint tenancy and tenancy in common property). However, unlike the general Fam.C. § 760 presumption (¶ 4:167), this presumption applies only for purposes of a property division upon marriage/domestic partnership dissolution or legal separation. [Fam.C. § 2581; see also Fam.C. § 299(d) (upon dissolution/legal separation, registered domestic partners have rights of spouses under Calif. law); Dorn v. Solomon (1997) 57 CA4th 650, 652, 67 CR2d 311, 312—joint tenancy between spouses presumptively passes by right of survivorship upon joint tenant spouse's death, not as CP pursuant to § 2581 presumption]

WESTLAW © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(b) [4:169] Nature of community property interests: During a marriage or registered domestic partnership, each spouse/domestic partner has "present, existing and equal" interests in the parties' community property. [Fam.C. § 751; see State Board of Equalization v. Woo (2000) 82 CA4th 481, 483, 98 CR2d 206, 208]

The parties' "equal" interests are 50-50 interests in the whole of the community property—not "exclusive" interests in only half of the community property. [In re McIntyre (9th Cir. 2000) 222 F3d 655, 658 (applying Calif. law)]

(c) [4:170] Equal rights of management and control: Spouses and registered domestic partners share equal rights of management and control in community real and personal property (except that a spouse/domestic partner managing or operating a community personal property business has "primary" management and control of the business). [Fam.C. §§ 1100, 1102]

1) [4:171] Subject to fiduciary obligations: In the management and control of their community estate, spouses/ registered domestic partners stand in a fiduciary relationship and owe each other a duty of the "highest good faith and fair dealing." [See Fam.C. §§ 721(b), 1100(e)]

[4:172 - 4:175] Reserved.

(d) [4:176] Devolution of interests upon spouse's/domestic partner's death: Upon the death of a spouse or registered domestic partner, one-half of the community property passes to the surviving spouse/domestic partner and the other half to decedent's devisees (or, if none, to the surviving spouse/domestic partner). [Prob.C. §§ 37(b), 100, 6401; Fam.C. § 297.5(c)]

Assuming there are devisees, the surviving spouse/domestic partner thereafter holds title to the property as tenant in common with the devisees; if no devisees, the property passes to the surviving spouse/domestic partner as their sole and separate property. [Prob.C. §§ 37(b), 6401(a); Fam.C. § 297.5(c)] (See also Ross & Cohen, Cal. Prac. Guide: Probate (TRG), Ch. 4.)

1) [4:176.1] Compare—community property with right of survivorship: The result is otherwise if the property is held as "community property with right of survivorship"; see ¶ 4:177 ff.

(6) [4:177] Community property with right of survivorship: Spouses and registered domestic partners also can hold title as "community property with right of survivorship." [Civ.C. § 682.1; Fam.C. §§ 297.5(a), 750]

This is a "hybrid" form of community property that shares the survivorship feature of joint tenancy property: i.e., upon the first spouse's/domestic partner's death, property so held passes to the survivor as if it were joint tenancy property —i.e., by right of survivorship without probate administration. In all other respects, however, the property is treated as community property. [Civ.C. § 682.1(a)(1)]

(a) [4:177.1] How created: The right of survivorship in community property must expressly be designated on the transfer instrument or title document; and both parties must affirmatively indicate, by their signatures or initials on the face of that instrument or document, their intention to take title as community property with right of survivorship. [Civ.C. § 682.1(a)(1); see also Comm. Report for 1999 AB No. 2913, 1999–00 Reg. Sess.]

(b) [4:177.2] Severance of survivorship feature: As with joint tenancy property (¶ 4:155), the survivorship feature in community property with right of survivorship is only an expectancy. Before either party's death, the right of survivorship may be terminated in the same manner that a joint tenancy may be severed (see ¶ 4:150 ff.). [Civ.C. § 682.1(a)(1)]

c. [4:180] Co-ownership agreements: Even though coowners generally share identical rights and obligations (¶ 4:135 ff.), they may agree to allocate the benefits and burdens of the property, along with its use and possession, among themselves.

➪ [4:181] PRACTICE POINTER: Joint buyers (other than spouses or registered domestic partners) should never rely exclusively on the legal definitions of tenancy in common, joint tenancy, partnership and community property to completely define their co-ownership rights and obligations. Outside the marriage/domestic partnership context, a co-ownership agreement is always prudent; it should cover such important issues as how and when the property is to be used, operated, maintained and financially supported; and how and when it will be sold.

While it may not be practical to go to the effort and expense of preparing a co-ownership agreement before the purchase contract is signed, some form of co-ownership agreement should be executed prior to the closing (many clients are reluctant to pay for the cost of such an agreement until they are certain the transaction will close).

Cross-refer: Residential co-ownership agreements are discussed separately in Ch. 12. (For a sample co-ownership agreement, see Form 12:A.)

d. [4:182] Common interest developments: The relationship among various condominium owners in a condominium project or shareholders in a stock cooperative is, as to the common areas, a tenancy in common. No specific language need be used in the purchase agreement or conveyancing instrument to describe that relationship.

[4:183 - 4:184] Reserved.

3. [4:185] Status of Seller (Who Must Execute Conveyance): To ensure that there will be an enforceable contract, the named seller must have the lawful right to convey title. Thus, issues pertaining to the status of the seller should be of equal concern to both parties.

a. [4:186] Verifying vesting of title: The initial concern is with verifying the manner in which the seller holds legal title to the property (occasionally, this may reveal that the purported seller is not the lawful title holder of record).

There are several approaches to ascertaining how title is vested:

(1) [4:187] Telephone title insurance company: Counsel may request a "vesting" by telephoning the customer service department of any reputable title insurance company. As a free courtesy to lawyers, title insurance companies typically will provide telephonic same-day confirmation of vesting. They will then send counsel a copy of the last recorded deed for the property, either at no cost or for a nominal charge.

➪ [4:188] PRACTICE POINTER: This approach offers a time and cost-savings advantage. However, the oral report and follow-up deed are not always reliable; and the information provided creates no liability for the title company.

(2) [4:189] Order preliminary report: Although a preliminary report (or "preliminary title report") is more expensive than simply telephoning a title company, it is more reliable. This is because vesting is carefully prepared in writing by a title officer and a description of the state of title is provided. In any event, since a preliminary report will have to be ordered at some point in the transaction, it makes sense to obtain it early to verify the vesting of title.

Cross-refer: Preliminary title reports are discussed in detail in Ch. 3 in connection with title insurance.

(3) [4:190] Examine title insurance policy: Check the seller's existing title insurance policy.

➪ [4:191] PRACTICE POINTER: Don't rely entirely on the title insurance policy. The seller may have transferred the property, or a portion thereof, after the policy was issued.

[4:192 - 4:200] Reserved.

b. [4:201] Community property title: Although they have "equal" rights of management and control over community property (¶ 4:170), both spouses/domestic partners "are required to" join (either personally or through a duly authorized agent) in executing an instrument transferring community real property (or an interest therein) by lease for more than one year, sale, conveyance or encumbrance. Thus, both spouses/domestic partners must execute an agreement for the sale and purchase of community real property. [Fam.C. § 1102(a); see also Fam.C. § 1100—both parties' written consent required for gift of community personal property or sale, conveyance or encumbrance of community personal property used as family dwelling, furnishings and clothing]

(1) [4:201.1] Transaction voidable by nonconsenting spouse/domestic partner: A conveyance (or encumbrance) of community property in violation of Fam.C. § 1102 (i.e., lacking both parties' consent) is subject to avoidance (affirmative set-aside or defense) by the nonconsenting spouse/domestic partner as follows (Droeger v. Friedman, Sloan & Ross (1991) 54 C3d 26, 36-39, 283 CR 584, 590-592):

(a) [4:201.2] 100% avoidance during marriage/domestic partnership: For so long as the community remains in existence (i.e., during the parties' marriage/domestic partnership and prior to the transferor's death), the nonconsenting spouse/domestic partner is entitled to invalidate the transaction in its entirety. [Droeger v. Friedman, Sloan & Ross (1991) 54 C3d 26, 46-47, 283 CR 584, 597; see Andrade Develop. Co. v. Martin (1982) 138 CA3d 330, 334, 187 CR 863, 866—complete defense to transferee's suit for damages or specific performance]

(b) [4:201.3] 50% avoidance after dissolution or transferor's death: On the other hand, after the community has been dissolved by judgment of dissolution or the transferor spouse's/domestic partner's death, the unilateral property disposition is voidable only as to the nonconsenting party's 50% community property interest. [Droeger v. Friedman,

Sloan & Ross (1991) 54 C3d 26, 33-34, 283 CR 584, 587-589; see Trimble v. Trimble (1933) 219 C 340, 345-347, 26 P2d 477, 480]

Thus, if the unauthorized transfer or encumbrance involved only the transferor spouse's/domestic partner's community interest, the nonconsenting party has no set-aside (or other) remedy after the marriage/domestic partnership has been terminated. [See Hyatt v. Mabie (1994) 24 CA4th 541, 546, 29 CR2d 447, 450]

➪ [4:201.4] PRACTICE POINTER FOR BUYERS: Buyers purchasing property from a married person or registered domestic partner should determine as soon as possible the state of record title to verify whether it is held as community property or, instead, as the prospective seller's sole and separate property. Moreover, never assume the property is truly "separate property" even if the deed by which the seller took title states the property is separately owned: A title insurance company will typically require a quitclaim deed (or other form of written, recorded relinquishment of any interest from the other party) before it will insure title.

If community property title is verified, the buyer should decline to go forward with the deal unless and until both spouses/domestic partners state in writing their willingness to join in the transfer.

➪ [4:201.5] PRACTICE POINTER FOR SELLERS: Since one spouse/domestic partner desiring to sell community property has nothing to gain by signing without the other, it would probably be prudent simply to forego execution of the purchase agreement unless and until both spouses/domestic partners are willing to sign.

At a minimum, if the other spouse/domestic partner is not available to sign, it behooves sellers to specifically provide in the purchase agreement that the signing party's obligations are subject to and contingent upon the nonsigning spouse's/domestic partner's written consent to the transaction, and that the nonsigning party may give or withhold such consent in their sole and absolute discretion.

c. [4:202] Joint tenancy or tenancy in common title: If the property is held in joint tenancy or tenancy in common (¶ 4:140 ff., 4:146 ff.), all co-owners should sign the purchase agreement and conveyancing instrument. This is so even if the co-owners have a separate co-ownership agreement permitting fewer than all of them to execute contracts or conveyances. Title insurance companies will nonetheless usually require a deed from all co-owners. (The only exception is when the co-ownership agreement is recorded and essentially contains a power of attorney from one co-owner to another; see ¶ 4:225 ff.)

d. Partnerships and joint ventures

(1) [4:203] General partnerships: Partnership property held in the partnership name may be transferred by any single partner executing the instrument of transfer in the partnership name. [Corps.C. § 16302(a)(1)]

Partnership property held in the name of one or more partners with an indication in the instrument transferring the property to them of their capacity as partners or of the existence of the partnership, but without an indication of the partnership name, may be transferred by an instrument executed by the persons in whose name the property is held. [Corps.C. § 16302(a)(2)]

Partnership property held in the name of one or more partners without an indication in the instrument transferring the property to them of their capacity as partners or of the existence of the partnership, may be transferred by an instrument executed by the person in whose name the property is held. [Corps.C. § 16302(a)(3)]

(a) [4:203.1] Agency limitation: Agency principles apply. Thus, the partnership generally is not bound by a partner's attempted conveyance of partnership property outside the ordinary course of partnership business unless the other partners expressly authorized the conveyance. [See Corps.C. §§ 16301, 16302(b) & (c) (partnership's right to recover unauthorized conveyance)]

1) [4:203.2] BFP exception: However, a conveyance that would not normally bind the partnership (because outside the normal course of partnership business or because made by a partner otherwise lacking authority) may be effective as to a bona fide purchaser for value. [Corps.C. § 16302(b)]

(b) [4:204] Impact of statement of partnership/partnership authority: To determine who is required to sign on behalf of a general partnership, counsel should review the entity's recorded "statement of partnership authority" (Corps.C. § 16303). Any bona fide purchaser for value has the absolute right to rely on the information set forth in the statement (i.e., the statement establishes a conclusive presumption of authority). [See Corps.C. § 16303]

A grant of authority to transfer partnership real property contained in a certified copy of a statement of partnership authority filed with the Secretary of State and recorded in the recorder's office for the county where the property is located is conclusive in favor of a person who gives value without knowledge to the contrary … except to the extent a certified copy of the filed and recorded statement limits that authority (see Corps.C. § 16302(a)—making partners' authority to transfer partnership property subject to statement of partnership authority under Corps.C. §§ 16303, 16105, 16303(a)(2)). [Corps.C. § 16303(d)(2) & (e)]

However, the conclusive presumption of authority that derives from a recorded statement of partnership authority operates only in favor of bona fide purchasers for value; it does not operate against BFPs. [Federal Dep. Ins. Corp. v. Sup.Ct. (BMB Properties) (1997) 54 CA4th 337, 346-350, 62 CR2d 713, 718-720 (decided under former UPA)—statutory conclusive presumption not applied against lender that accepted deed of trust encumbering property signed by two partners, who had withdrawn from partnership as reflected in amended recorded partnership statement, and was considered BFP]

1) [4:204.1] Contents: A statement of partnership authority must be executed by at least two partners. [Corps.C. § 16105(c)]

The statement must set forth the partnership name; the street address of the entity's principal office and of one principal office in California (if any); the names and mailing addresses of all partners (or of an agent appointed and maintained by the partnership for the purpose of keeping a list of all partners' names and mailing addresses and making it available to any person on request for good cause shown); and the names of the partners authorized to execute an instrument transferring partnership real property. It may also specify the authority, or limitations on authority, of some or all of the partners to enter into other transactions on behalf of the partnership “and any other matter.” [Corps.C § 16303(a)]

➪ [4:205] PRACTICE POINTERS: When representing a buyer that is a newly-formed (or to-be-formed) general partnership, joint venture or limited partnership, any title insurance company from whom your client may seek to obtain title insurance will require that a statement of partnership (¶ 4:204 ff.) or certificate of limited partnership (¶ 4:209 ff.) (as applicable) be filed and recorded. See ¶ 4:242 ff.

If no statement of partnership authority has been recorded, review the partnership agreement. It is also prudent to require a representation and warranty from the party signing on behalf of the selling partnership as to the signatory's authority to bind the partnership (see ¶ 4:436).

Cross-refer: For a comprehensive treatment of partnership (general partnerships, limited partnerships and limited liability partnerships), see Soza & Jann, Cal. Prac. Guide: Pass-Through Entities (TRG).

(2) [4:206] Joint ventures: The Corporations Code does not clearly define a “joint venture” or provide for a joint venture to hold title to real property; thus, it may be advisable to denominate the entity as a general partnership (¶ 4:205).

However, title insurance companies regularly insure title in the name of a joint venture; and case law holds that “the law of partnership” applies to joint ventures. [Weiner v. Fleischman (1991) 54 C3d 476, 482, 286 CR 40, 43; Orlopp v. Willardson Co. (1965) 232 CA2d 750, 754, 43 CR 125, 128]

➪ [4:207] PRACTICE POINTER: As when partnership property is purchased (¶ 4:205), any title insurance company from whom the purchaser of joint venture property attempts to obtain title insurance will require some verification from the joint venturers regarding who has authority to sign for the entity. It is also good practice for the buyer to obtain a warranty from the signing party as to the signing party's authority to bind each of the joint venturers (¶ 4:436).

(3) [4:208] Limited partnerships: A limited partnership is comprised of at least one general partner and one or more limited partners. The general partners manage the partnership and are personally liable for its debts. On the other hand, limited partners, although they contribute capital to the entity, do not run the partnership business and do not have any personal liability for its obligations (other than their capital contributions). Thus, like shareholders of a corporation, limited partners have limited liability. [Corps.C. §§ 15901.02(q), 15903.03(a), 15903.05(a), 15904.02(a) & 15904.04(a); Evans v. Galardi (1976) 16 C3d 300, 305, 128 CR 25, 29]

Since they run the business and are personally liable for partnership debts, the general partners, or any one or more of them with authority to bind the entity, should sign the purchase agreement and conveyancing instrument. [See Corps.C. §§ 15904.02(a) & 15904.06(a)—as agents of limited partnership, general partners have authority to bind partnership in matters concerning partnership business] Limited partners, on the other hand, are not required to sign (nor should they sign) the purchase and sale documents.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(a) [4:209] Impact of certificate of limited partnership: The counterpart to a statement of partnership/statement of partnership authority (¶ 4:204 ff.) for a limited partnership is a "certificate of limited partnership" (or so-called "LP-1"). To form a limited partnership, a certificate of limited partnership must be filed with the California Secretary of State. [Corps.C. § 15902.01(a), (b), (c)]

A title insurance company will require the filing and recordation of a certificate of limited partnership before it will issue title insurance based on the partnership's execution of a deed, deed of trust or any other instrument that conveys an interest in real property.

1) [4:209.1] Contents: The certificate must contain the name of the limited partnership; the street address of the partnership's principal office; the names and addresses of the general partners; the name and street address of the agent for service of process; the mailing address of the limited partnership if different from the partnership's principal office, and "[a]ny other matters" the person filing the certificate determines to include, provided those matters do not "vary or otherwise affect" in an inconsistent manner Civ.C. § 15901.10(b)'s specified provisions (e.g., vary the limited partnership's power to sue, be sued and defend in its own name, vary the law applicable to limited partnerships, etc.). [See Corps.C. § 15902.01(a), (b)]

2) [4:209.2] Conclusive presumption from recordation: A certified copy of the certificate may be recorded in the office of the county recorder of any county in California (recordation is not essential to formation of the limited partnership but will be required by title insurance companies, ¶ 4:209). [Corps.C. § 15902.01(e)]

The recording creates a conclusive presumption in favor of bona fide purchasers or encumbrancers for value of partnership real property located in the county where the certificate was recorded, that the persons named as general partners therein constitute all of the general partners. [Corps.C. § 15902.01(e)]

➪ [4:210] PRACTICE POINTER: Even if all of the general partners executing the purchase agreement constitute all of the general partners identified in the certificate of limited partnership, it may be advisable to review the limited partnership agreement to ensure that authority to sell the property is vested in the general partners without prior approval by the limited partners.

Alternatively (or perhaps, in addition), the purchase agreement should provide a warranty of authority by the general partner(s) executing the agreement. (See ¶ 4:436.)

Cross-refer: For a comprehensive treatment of partnership (general partnerships, limited partnerships and limited liability partnerships), see Soza & Jann, Cal. Prac. Guide: Pass-Through Entities (TRG).

e. Corporations

(1) Authority to convey

(a) [4:211] Agency authority generally: Any corporate contract or conveyance binds the corporation if made in the name of the corporation and either authorized (or ratified) by the board of directors or within the signing officer's actual or apparent scope of authority (or agency power). [Corps.C. § 208(b)]

(b) [4:211.1] Signatures barring defense of lack of authority: Absent the other party's (buyer's) actual knowledge that a signing officer lacked authority, the corporation is bound by, and cannot assert lack of authority to avoid liability under, a contract or conveyance signed by (i) the board chairman, president or any vice president, and (ii) the secretary, any assistant secretary, chief financial officer or assistant treasurer. [Corps.C. § 313]

1) [4:211.2] Purpose and effect: If its requirements are met, Corps.C. § 313 precludes invalidation of a corporate instrument on the basis of lack of authority despite evidence the signing officers had no authority to execute the instrument on the corporation's behalf. The statute thus operates as a conclusive presumption of authority; it effectively creates a "safe harbor," the purpose of which is to afford third parties protection from subsequent efforts by the corporation to disavow its agents' authority in order to avoid its contractual obligations. [Snukal v. Flightways Mfg., Inc. (2000) 23 C4th 754, 782-784, 98 CR2d 1, 24-26]

a) [4:211.3] Compare—other bases for disaffirmance: Corps.C. § 313 conclusively presumes only the signing officers' authority to bind the corporation to the contract. The corporation is not thereby prevented from challenging the validity of the agreement on a theory other than lack of authority—such as fraud, mistake or failure of consideration. [Snukal v. Flightways Mfg., Inc. (2000) 23 C4th 754, 783, 98 CR2d 1, 25, fn. 10]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

2) [4:211.4] "Two-hat" officers—discrete signatures not required: The statute does not require that the signing officers be separate individuals or that they specify the office or offices they hold. Thus, although Corps.C. § 313 applies only where officers in each of the two designated categories (¶ 4:211.1) execute the instrument, the statute is satisfied when one individual who in fact holds offices in each of the two described categories signs … even if both corporate offices are not recorded on the face of the instrument. [Snukal v. Flightways Mfg., Inc. (2000) 23 C4th 754, 785-787, 98 CR2d 1, 27-28 (corporate president who signed lease on corporation's behalf was also its secretary and chief financial officer)]

3) [4:211.5] Compare—enforceability of contract where § 313 criteria not met: Corps.C. § 313 provides only one basis for validating the authority of corporate signatories; it is not the exclusive means of establishing whether a corporate signatory binds the corporation. Thus, even when lacking the signature(s) of the specified categories of officers, a corporate contract may be validated under traditional common law theories by proving the actual, apparent or ostensible authority of the signatory. [Snukal v. Flightways Mfg., Inc. (2000) 23 C4th 754, 783-784, 98 CR2d 1, 25-26]

4) [4:211.6] Basis for notice of ultra vires act: Third parties may be imputed with notice that a conveyance is not authorized if the recorded conveyance instrument does not comply with Corps.C. § 313. [See In re AME Zion Western Episcopal Dist. (BC ED CA 2021) 629 BR 69, 80—recorded deed signed by only 1 corporate officer "imputes notice to the [lenders] that the transfer may not have been authorized"]

(2) [4:212] Corporate resolution advisable: Despite the Corps. Code provisions (¶ 4:211.1 ff.), it behooves buyers to insist upon a corporate resolution by the seller's board of directors authorizing the sale. This will ensure that the officers' action in signing the purchase agreement is pursuant to specific corporate authority. Also, some title insurance companies require such a corporate resolution (although there is not uniform consistency on this point within the industry).

(3) [4:212.1] Enforceability of preincorporation contracts: Preincorporation contracts made for the benefit of a corporation to be formed are fully enforceable by the corporation after it is organized and has adopted or ratified the contracts. [El Rio Oils v. Pacific Coast Asphalt Co. (1949) 95 CA2d 186, 192-193, 213 P2d 1, 5—preincorporation contract for sale of oil to asphalt corporation fully enforceable once asphalt corporation came into existence and ratified same; see also 02 Develop. LLC v. 607 South Park, LLC (2008) 159 CA4th 609, 612, 71 CR3d 608, 610 (enforceability of preorganization assignments of real estate purchase agreements; see ¶ 4:214.5)]

f. [4:213] Unincorporated associations: An "unincorporated association" is "an unincorporated group of two or more persons joined by mutual consent for a common lawful purpose, whether organized for profit or not." Joint tenancy (¶ 4:146 ff.), tenancy in common (¶ 4:140 ff.), community property (¶ 4:166 ff.), or other form of property ownership does not itself establish an unincorporated association "even if coowners share ownership of the property for a common purpose." Likewise, an unincorporated association is not established simply by a marriage or creation of a registered domestic partnership. [Corps.C. § 18035]

(1) [4:213.1] Authority to convey: An unincorporated association may acquire, hold, manage, encumber or transfer real property. [Corps.C. § 18105] A conveyance of real property by an unincorporated association must be executed by its "president and secretary or other comparable officers," or by a person specifically designated by the association's duly-adopted resolution, "or by a committee or other body or person authorized to act" by the association's governing principles. [Corps.C. § 18115]

(2) [4:213.2] Statement of authority; BFP rights: An unincorporated association may record a verified and acknowledged "statement of authority" in any county in which it owns or has an interest in real property, setting forth the name of the association, the names and titles or capacity of its officers and other persons authorized on its behalf to transfer, acquire or encumber real property. Any bona fide purchaser, transferor or encumbrancer for value of the association's real property located in the county where the statement of authority has been recorded has the benefit of a conclusive presumption that a person designated in the statement is authorized to transfer, acquire or encumber the property. [Corps.C. § 18120(a), (c)]

(3) [4:213.3] Recordation to evidence surviving entity's property ownership after association's merger: An unincorporated association may merge into a domestic or foreign corporation, general or limited partnership, or limited liability company, so long as each constituent entity is duly authorized to effect the merger. [Corps.C. § 18360]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

If the surviving entity succeeds to ownership of California real property as a result of the merger, its record ownership may be evidenced by recording in the county where the property is located a copy of the merger agreement duly signed by the appropriate officers of the constituent entities. [Corps.C. § 18390]

g. Limited liability companies (LLCs)

(1) [4:214] Nature of LLC—in general: California law recognizes a hybrid form of business entity known as a "limited liability company" (LLC, Corps.C. § 17701.01 et seq.). If structured properly, LLCs combine a corporation's limited liability protection with the pass-through taxation of partnerships, but without the restrictions imposed on limited partners and Subchapter S corporations. Thus, owners of an LLC interest ("members"), like shareholders of a corporation, generally are not personally liable for the entity's debts (Corps.C. § 17703.04(a)(2)); and an LLC's income or loss, like that of a partnership, is passed through to its members (see IRC §§ 701, 702(a)).

An LLC may have one or more members (who can be almost any person or form of legal entity). [Corps.C. § 17702.01(a)] It springs into existence upon filing of executed articles of organization with the Secretary of State (see Corps.C. §§ 17702.01, 17704.07); either before or after filing the articles, the members also must enter into an "operating agreement" (which need not be a formal written document). [See Corps.C. §§ 17701.02(s), 17701.10, 17701.11(c)]

Cross-refer: For a comprehensive treatment of LLCs, see Soza & Jann, Cal. Prac. Guide: Pass-Through Entities (TRG).

(2) [4:214.1] Authority to convey: Management of an LLC's business is vested in all LLC members unless the articles of organization and the operating agreement provide otherwise. [Corps.C. § 17704.07 et seq.]

(a) [4:214.2] No centralized management ("member-managed"): Where the articles and operating agreement do not provide for managers, LLC members' management and control rights are more akin to those of the general partners of a general partnership than to limited partners or corporate shareholders. Each member is deemed an agent of the LLC in dealings with third persons and can bind the LLC in the same way a general partner can bind a partnership. [Corps.C. § 17703.01(a)]

(b) [4:214.3] Centralized management ("manager-managed"): If the articles of organization provide that the entity's business and affairs are to be managed by or under the authority of one or more designated managers ("centralized management"), only the designated managers (who need not necessarily be LLC members) can bind the LLC. [See Corps.C. § 17704.07(a)(1), (c)(1), (6)]

➪ [4:214.4] PRACTICE POINTER: The principles set forth at ¶ 4:214.1 ff. make clear the prudence of verifying who among LLC owners and/or managers has the authority to bind the LLC before executing a contract to purchase real property owned by an LLC. Buyer's counsel should review the LLC's articles of organization to determine whether the entity has provided for centralized management (and, if so, to identify the authorized managers) … in which event, an LLC member will not have authority to bind the entity to the purchase agreement strictly in their capacity as member.

Similarly, even if the articles do not provide for centralized management, prudent buyers will verify that the member purporting to act on the entity's behalf in executing a purchase and sale agreement is in fact an LLC member in good standing.

(3) [4:214.5] Enforceability of preorganization agreements: An LLC may enforce any preorganization contract made on its behalf (e.g., preorganization assignment of real estate purchase agreement) once the LLC formally "comes into existence" and either adopts or ratifies the contract. It is immaterial whether the LLC existed at the time the assignment was executed. [See 02 Develop. LLC v. 607 South Park, LLC (2008) 159 CA4th 609, 612, 71 CR3d 608, 610]

h. [4:215] Minors: Minors (any person under age 18, Fam.C. § 6500) may acquire title to property. [In re Scott K. (1979) 24 C3d 395, 405, 155 CR 671, 676-677] However, unless emancipated (e.g., person has entered into valid marriage/domestic partnership or is on active military service; see Fam.C. § 7002), minors may transfer or encumber real property, or make a contract to do so, only if the conveyancing instrument is executed by a duly appointed guardian. [Fam.C. § 6701; Prob.C. § 1500 et seq.] Any real property contract or deed executed solely by an unemancipated minor is void from its inception. [Hakes Inv. Co. v. Lyons (1913) 166 C 557, 561, 137 P 911, 913; Sparks v. Sparks (1950) 101 CA2d 129, 136, 225 P2d 238, 243]

i. [4:216] Trust: A trust is not itself a legal entity (unlike a corporation). Legal title to property owned by a trust is held by the trustee; thus, the trustee should execute both the sale contract and instrument of conveyance. [Stoltenberg v. Newman (2009) 179 CA4th 287, 293, 101 CR3d 606, 611; see also Portico Mgmt. Group, LLC v. Harrison (2011) 202 CA4th 464, 473, 136

CR3d 151, 157—trust is simply collection of assets and liabilities to which trustee holds legal title; Presta v. Tepper (2009) 179 CA4th 909, 914, 102 CR3d 12, 16—ordinary express trusts are not entities separate from their trustees]

(1) [4:216.1] Capacity in which contract signed: So long as the trustee has the power to convey property owned by the trust, a sale contract, as well as a deed, is enforceable against the trust even if executed by the trustee in the trustee's individual, rather than representative, capacity. [Galdjie v. Darwish (2003) 113 CA4th 1331, 1347-1350, 7 CR3d 178, 190-193—individual signatures of revocable inter vivos trusts' sole trustees and beneficiaries sufficient to convey title; see also Carne v. Worthington (2016) 246 CA4th 548, 551, 200 CR3d 920, 922—because decedent as sole trustee of 1985 revocable inter vivos trust had power during his lifetime to convey title to real property held therein, his signature as grantor on 2009 irrevocable inter vivos trust deemed sufficient to convey title to property from 1985 trust to 2009 trust (¶ 4:2172); Zanelli v. McGrath (2008) 166 CA4th 615, 632-634, 82 CR3d 835, 849-850 & fn. 13—settlor and trustee being one and the same, trustee had "equivalent of full ownership" for purposes of transferring title to property held in revocable inter vivos trust; compare Portico Mgmt. Group, LLC v. Harrison (2011) 202 CA4th 464, 477, 136 CR3d 151, 160 (distinguishing Galdjie)—arbitration judgment erroneously awarded against irrevocable trust for benefit of trustees' children in action against trustees for breach of real property sales contract deemed unenforceable]

➪ [4:216.2] PRACTICE POINTER: When selling trust property, prudence suggests that trustees always specify in the contract (and the deed) that they are signing in their representative capacity on behalf of the trust. [See Prob.C. §§ 18000, 18004]

(2) [4:216.3] Authority to convey: To ensure they will have recourse against the trust estate, prospective buyers should examine the trust instrument or a certification of trust (Prob.C. § 18100.5) for verification of the trustee's authority to sell; and should also insist on a warranty of authority in the purchase and sale agreement (¶ 4:436). [See generally, Prob.C. §§ 16200, 16226; Church v. Church (1940) 40 CA2d 696, 700, 105 P2d 640, 642—unless forbidden by trust terms, trustee has power to sell trust property as necessary or appropriate for trust purposes; see also Prob.C. §§ 18105-18108 (concerning right to record, and legal effect of recording, affidavit of change of trustee when title to interest in real property is affected by change of trustee)]

Further, if there are multiple trustees, prospective buyers should examine the trust instrument or a certification of trust (Prob.C. § 18100.5) to verify whether all are required to sign in order to properly exercise the power to sell.

(3) [4:217] Validity of trust—statute of frauds: Those proposing to purchase real property from a trust also must ensure they are dealing with a trust that was validly created. Significantly, a trust "in relation to real property" is subject to a statute of frauds: i.e., such a trust is valid only if evidenced by (a) a written instrument signed by the trustee or the trustee's duly authorized agent; (b) a written instrument conveying the trust property signed by the settlor or the settlor's duly authorized agent; or (c) "operation of law." [Prob.C. § 15206; Carne v. Worthington (2016) 246 CA4th 548, 559, 200 CR3d 920, 928, fn. 19]

• [4:217.1] A written declaration of trust by the owner of real property, naming themself as trustee, satisfied the statute of frauds and thus was sufficient to create a trust in real property without the owner having to prepare a separate deed. [Estate of Heggstad (1993) 16 CA4th 943, 950, 20 CR2d 433, 436]

• [4:217.2] The statute of frauds also was satisfied absent a separate deed where a settlor, by signing his irrevocable inter vivos trust, conveyed title to specified real property that was held in his earlier revocable inter vivos trust of which he was the sole trustee (¶ 4:216.1). [Carne v. Worthington (2016) 246 CA4th 548, 559, 564, 200 CR3d 920, 928, 932-933, fn. 20]

• [4:217.3] The statute of frauds was satisfied where a settlor stated in their trust instrument that they were conveying all their real property wherever situated to themself as trustee, making it possible to determine with certainty which real property was part of the trust's assets by reference to publicly available records. [Ukkestad v. RBS Asset Finance, Inc. (2015) 235 CA4th 156, 163-164, 185 CR3d 145, 150-151]

• [4:217.4] A constructive trust imposed as an equitable remedy against a fiduciary who wrongfully acquires real property arises by "operation of law" and thus is not barred by the statute of frauds. [Mazzera v. Wolf (1947) 30 C2d 531, 535, 183 P2d 649, 651]

• [4:217.5] Compare: The statute of frauds was not satisfied where a trust instrument purported to identify the trustors' real property by referring to an attached schedule A. No schedule was attached and the trust instrument itself was devoid of any real property description. Thus, unlike Ukkestad (¶ 4:217.3), there was no writing identifying the trustors' real property that could be made more certain by extrinsic evidence. [See Osswald v. Anderson (1996) 49 CA4th 812, 818, 57 CR2d 23, 26 & fn. 1]

(4) [4:218] BFP rights: A person acting in good faith and for value, and without actual knowledge that the trustee is exceeding or improperly exercising their powers (i.e., a BFP), may assume without inquiry that the trustee is acting within the proper exercise of the trustee's powers; and such person is "fully protected" in dealings with the trustee as if the trustee has and is properly exercising the power the trustee purports to exercise. [Prob.C. § 18100]

[4:219] Reserved.

j. [4:220] Conservators: A conservator may be appointed by the court (voluntarily or involuntarily) for any adult or married minor (or minor whose marriage has been dissolved) who is unable to manage their affairs. [Prob.C. § 1800 et seq.] (A guardian, rather than a conservator, may be appointed for a minor who has not been married; Prob.C. § 1500 et seq.)

(1) [4:221] Contractual capacity: If the seller is under a conservatorship, and absent court order to the contrary, only the conservator (not the conservatee) may convey or encumber title. [Prob.C. § 1872; Civ.C. § 40; see also O'Brien v. Dudenhoeffer (1993) 16 CA4th 327, 330-332, 19 CR2d 826, 827-829—same rule applicable where transferor under temporary conservatorship]

Before issuing a title insurance policy, a title insurance company will require a certified copy of the court order appointing the conservator.

(2) [4:222] BFP rights: Notwithstanding the general principle set forth at ¶ 4:221, a sale or encumbrance by the conservatee in favor of a person acting in good faith and for value, and without knowledge of establishment of the conservatorship (i.e., a BFP), is valid … unless, before consummation of the transaction, a notice of establishment of the conservatorship was recorded in the county where the real property is located. [Prob.C. § 1875]

(The purpose of § 1875 is to protect innocent third parties who have no notice of the conservatorship and conservatee's resulting incapacity. See Prob.C. § 1875, Law Revision Comm'n Comment.)

(a) [4:223] Compare—lack of capacity regardless of conservatorship: However, Prob.C. § 1875 does not operate to validate transactions entered into by a conservatee if the conservatee would lack legal capacity absent the establishment of a conservatorship (i.e., under Civ.C. § 38—person "entirely without understanding" has no contractual capacity). Nor does § 1875 prevent rescission of a conservatee's transaction under Civ.C. § 39 (see Civ.C. § 39(a)—conveyance or contract by person "of unsound mind" made before their incapacity has been judicially determined). [See Prob.C. § 1875, Law Revision Comm'n Comment]

k. [4:224] Equity participation lenders: Lenders who participate in the owner's equity in the property often have the right to approve or disapprove any proposed sale. It is therefore essential that the seller obtain the equity participation lender's written approval before signing a purchase and sale agreement; or, alternatively, the equity participation lender's approval can be a seller's contingency (see ¶ 4:394).

Cross-refer: For further discussion of equity participation loans, see ¶ 6:60 ff.

l. [4:225] Powers of attorney: Purchase agreements and conveyancing instruments may be executed by a person with a valid power of attorney acting on behalf of the owner.

(1) [4:226] Definitions: A "power of attorney" is a written instrument giving authority to a person (the "attorney-in-fact") to perform certain acts for the person executing the power (the "principal"). [See Prob.C. §§ 4014, 4022, 4026; Rosenberg v. C.W. Clarke Co. (1962) 200 CA2d 178, 186, 19 CR 191, 197]

An attorney-in-fact is an agent for the person empowering the attorney-in-fact to act; therefore, powers of attorney are governed generally by agency law (Civ.C. § 2295 et seq.) except to the extent a more specific rule applies under the Power of Attorney Law (Prob.C. § 4000 et seq.). [Prob.C. § 4051]

(2) [4:226.1] Must be in writing: Since an agreement for the sale of real property must be in writing (see ¶ 4:263 ff. re statute of frauds), so too must a power of attorney authorizing a third person to make such a contract. [Civ.C. §§ 1624(a)(3), 2309; see also Prob.C. §§ 4121 & 4122 re execution formalities under Power of Attorney Law]

The same rule applies to the conveyancing instrument (the deed): Being an executed contract, a deed is subject to the rules applicable to contracts. Therefore, an agent's authority to execute a deed on behalf of the principal must be conferred in writing. [Civ.C. § 1091; Estate of Stephens (2002) 28 C4th 665, 672, 122 CR2d 358, 362—conveyance by agent not authorized when no written authority to execute deed as principal's agent]

(3) [4:227] Interpretation: Powers of attorney are strictly interpreted according to the language creating the power. [Rosenberg v. C.W. Clarke Co. (1962) 200 CA2d 178, 186, 19 CR 191, 197; see Civ.C. § 2321]

An agent's conveyance beyond the scope of the power conferred is void. [See Estate of Stephens (2002) 28 C4th 665, 672, 122 CR2d 358, 362-363—power of attorney authorizing agent to "sell, convey, and transfer" real property for principal's benefit did not authorize conveyance as gift or without substantial consideration (thus, agent's conveyance of property to herself as gift void)]

(a) [4:227.1] "Necessary" incidental powers implied: On the other hand, notwithstanding the rule of strict construction, an attorney-in-fact is deemed empowered to do all acts necessary and proper within the scope of authority expressly granted. [See Prob.C. §§ 4261, 4262, 4450; Civ.C. § 2319; County of Los Angeles v. Stuyvesant Ins. Co. (1964) 227 CA2d 428, 431, 38 CR 713, 715]

(4) [4:228] "General" and "limited" powers: Powers of attorney can be "general" or "limited" (or "special"). A general power authorizes the attorney-in-fact to transact all kinds of business for the principal. [Prob.C. § 4261; see also Prob.C. § 4401 (statutory form power of attorney); Moore v. Gould (1907) 151 C 723, 727-728, 91 P 616, 618] A limited (or special) power restricts the attorney-in-fact's authority to those acts specified in the power of attorney (plus incidental acts necessary to carry out the expressly-granted authority). [Prob.C. § 4262; see also Prob.C. § 4450 (construction of powers granted in statutory form power of attorney)]

If the power of attorney contains language that both limits the acts of the attorney-in-fact and suggests that a general power of attorney exists, the attorney-in-fact will be limited by the particular terms and designations. [Washburn v. Alden (1855) 5 C 463, 464; see also Civ.C. § 2321]

(5) [4:229] Types of powers of attorney: Powers of attorney, whether general or limited, may be executed in a variety of fashions—e.g., durable powers, springing powers, joint powers, and powers coupled with an interest.

(a) [4:230] Durable power: A durable power of attorney is created pursuant to Prob.C. § 4124. Its distinguishing characteristic from nondurable powers is that it may be exercised notwithstanding the principal's subsequent incapacity; or may be designated to take effect only upon the principal's subsequent incapacity. [See Prob.C. §§ 4018, 4124, 4155]

Upon the principal's incapacity, the attorney-in-fact is accountable to any court-appointed conservator or other fiduciary for the principal; and the power may be revoked by the principal's conservator upon court order. [See Prob.C. § 4206]

(A special form of durable power, separately regulated by Prob.C. § 4600 et seq. (the Health Care Decisions Law), empowers an attorney-in-fact to make health care decisions for the principal upon the principal's incapacity. See discussion in Ross & Cohen, Cal. Prac. Guide: Probate (TRG), Ch. 1.)

1) [4:230.1] Mandatory warning statements in preprinted form: A preprinted form durable power of attorney, promulgated for use by persons who do not have the advice of legal counsel, must contain two statutorily-prescribed warning statements: one to the person executing the document, and another to the person accepting the appointment as attorney-in-fact. [See Prob.C. § 4128(a); and detailed discussion in Ross & Cohen, Cal. Prac. Guide: Probate (TRG), Ch. 1]

(b) [4:231] Springing power: A springing power of attorney takes effect only at a specified future time or on the occurrence of a specified event or contingency; it may be a durable or nondurable power. [Prob.C. § 4030]

In a springing power of attorney, the principal may designate one or more persons who have the authority to conclusively determine, by written declaration under penalty of perjury, that the specified event or contingency has occurred … at which point, the power of attorney becomes effective. [See Prob.C. § 4129]

(c) [4:232] Joint power: A joint power of attorney confers authority on the attorney-in-fact to act with respect to two or more principals' joint and separate property. [Cousino v. Western Shore Lumber Co. (1918) 179 C 1, 4-5, 175 P 406, 407]

1) [4:232.1] Compare—multiple powers: A principal may designate multiple attorneys-in-fact in more than one power of attorney, in which case their authority is generally exercisable only by their unanimous action. [Prob.C. § 4202]

If the powers of attorney grant inconsistent authority to more than one attorney-in-fact, the authority granted last in time controls to the extent of the inconsistency. [See Prob.C. § 4130]

(d) [4:233] Power coupled with interest: A power of attorney is "coupled with an interest" if the attorney-in-fact acquires an interest in the subject of the power of attorney. [Jay v. Dollarhide (1970) 3 CA3d 1001, 1023, 84 CR 538,

551-552 (disapproved on other grounds by Morris v. Thogmartin (1973) 29 CA3d 922, 930, 105 CR 919, 924 which, in turn, was disapproved on other grounds by McAdams v. McElroy (1976) 62 CA3d 985, 994, 133 CR 637, 643); see also Bonfigli v. Strachan (2011) 192 CA4th 1302, 1309, 122 CR3d 447, 452-453—power and interest are united in same person for purpose of protecting their interest in agency's subject and its value]

The Power of Attorney Law (Prob.C. § 4000 et seq.) does not apply to a power of attorney to the extent it is coupled with an interest. [Prob.C. § 4050(b)(1); see also Bonfigli v. Strachan, supra, 192 CA4th at 1309, 122 CR3d at 453—"this kind of power of attorney is not an 'agency' as that term is commonly understood," i.e., holder is not subject to creator's control and does not owe creator fiduciary duties]

1) [4:233.1] Prerequisites: For an agency or power to be "coupled with an interest," it must (i) be held for the benefit of the agent, not the principal; (ii) be created to secure the performance of a duty to the agent or to protect a title in the agent; and (iii) be created at the same time that the duty or title is created. [Becket v. Welton Becket & Associates (1974) 39 CA3d 815, 820, 114 CR 531, 533]

2) [4:233.2] Not revocable: A power of attorney usually is revocable at any time by the principal because it is created for the benefit of the principal (Prob.C. § 4150 et seq.). However, when the agency is for the benefit of the agent, it is not freely revocable by the principal. [Becket v. Welton Becket & Associates (1974) 39 CA3d 815, 820, 114 CR 531, 533]

Indeed, "[g]iven the unusual nature of a power coupled with an interest—in that it is not a true agency because the power is not controlled by the principal nor is it required to be exercised in the interest of the principal—the power is not merely revocable upon extinction of the interest but is itself extinguished at the time the interest in the subject matter terminates." [See Bonfigli v. Strachan (2011) 192 CA4th 1302, 1311-1313, 122 CR3d 447, 454-456 (emphasis added)—developer's power over two land parcels was extinguished after developer assigned (terminated) its underlying interest in option to purchase]

(6) [4:234] Statutory form power of attorney: California has adopted the Uniform Statutory Form Power of Attorney Act (Prob.C. § 4400 et seq.), under which a durable power of attorney (or a nondurable power if so indicated by the principal) may be created using a standard statutory form (Prob.C. § 4401).

The standard statutory form gives the principal the option of granting a broad range of powers (see Prob.C. §§ 4401, 4450 et seq.) or any one or more of them as specifically designated, including the power to engage in "real property transactions." However, the form does not include all powers available under the Probate Code, any of which may be added by specifically listing it under the form's special instructions section.

➪ [4:234.1] PRACTICE POINTER: For those unsophisticated in business dealings, using the statutory form power can be risky. The particular powers listed on the form are described by general label only and thus can be misleading. Indeed, unless modified by the principal, a statutory form power of attorney grants the attorney-in-fact expansive authority with regard to each of the listed subjects. For instance, the power to engage in "real property transactions" includes far more than authority to sell, lease or encumber (see Prob.C. §§ 4450, 4451).

(7) [4:235] Recordation: There is no general legal requirement that a power of attorney be recorded (but see Civ.C. § 2933—power of attorney to execute mortgage or deed of trust must be recorded). Nonetheless, if the seller's attorney-in-fact will be signing the deed (or other conveyancing instrument to be recorded), the title insurance company will require that the power of attorney be of record (recorded in the county where the property is located). (Likewise, no revocation of a recorded power of attorney is effective unless the revocation is itself recorded. Civ.C. § 1216.)

On the other hand, title insurance companies are not concerned about an attorney-in-fact's authority to execute the purchase agreement. Thus, the power of attorney need not be recorded if used only for the purpose of authorizing the attorney-in-fact to sign the real property purchase contract (or any other document that will not be recorded).

(8) [4:236] Revocation of power of attorney: A power of attorney may be revoked by the principal (even if it states it is irrevocable), unless it is coupled with an interest (¶ 4:233.2). [See Prob.C. §§ 4151, 4153]

Also, unless it is coupled with an interest or a durable power (¶ 4:230), a power of attorney is revoked by operation of law upon the death or incapacity of the principal or attorney-in-fact. [See Prob.C. §§ 4152(a)(7) & (9), 4155; Jay v. Dollarhide (1970) 3 CA3d 1001, 1023, 84 CR 538, 552 (disapproved on other grounds by Morris v. Thogmartin (1973) 29 CA3d 922, 930, 105 CR 919, 924 which, in turn, was disapproved on other grounds by McAdams v. McElroy (1976) 62 CA3d 985, 994, 133 CR 637, 643); see also Civ.C. § 1216—revocation of recorded power of attorney must be recorded]

(a) [4:236.1] Limitation as to "innocent" third persons/attorney-in-fact: However, a revocation is not effective as against a third person who, without actual knowledge of the revocation, enters into a transaction with the attorney-in-fact. And, as to acts undertaken in good faith reliance thereon, the attorney-in-fact's affidavit stating that, at the time of exercise of the power, the attorney-in-fact did not have actual knowledge of a revocation of the power, is conclusive proof of nonrevocation of the power at that time. [See Prob.C. §§ 4151(b), 4152(b), 4153(b), 4304, 4305]

(9) [4:237] Practical considerations in drafting powers of attorney: When a power of attorney is used in a real property sale transaction, it must satisfy the other party and the escrow holder, title insurance company and sometimes a lender. Thus, the power should clearly specify the entire scope of the attorney-in-fact's authority—including the authority (as applicable) to execute the purchase agreement, escrow instructions (and any amendments thereto), the conveyancing instrument, and all other documents essential to close the deal, as well as the power to take all other actions which may be necessary or beneficial to consummate the transactions contemplated by the contract.

FORM: Power of Attorney (Limited) for Real Property Purchase and Sale Transaction, see Form 4:F.

Cross-refer: For a detailed treatment of the use of powers of attorney in general, see Ross & Cohen, Cal. Prac. Guide: Probate (TRG), Ch. 1.

[4:238 - 4:239] Reserved.

4. [4:240] Status of Buyer (How Buyer Takes Title): Much of the discussion concerning the status of sellers (¶ 4:185 ff.), applies as well to the status of buyers. However, certain considerations are uniquely relevant to buyers:

a. [4:241] Tenancies in common and other co-ownership arrangements: Buyers taking title as co-owners should have an agreement in place prior to, or effective upon, closing of the sale, as to their ownership rights and obligations.

Cross-refer: Co-ownership agreements are discussed in detail in Ch. 12.

b. Partnerships and joint ventures

(1) [4:242] Need for partnership agreement, statement of partnership or certification: Some (but not all) title insurance companies refuse to issue a title insurance policy to partnership buyers until furnished with a copy of an executed partnership agreement (whether a general or limited partnership). And all title companies require the filing and recordation of a statement of partnership authority (in the case of a general partnership, ¶ 4:204 ff.) or a certificate of limited partnership (in the case of a limited partnership, ¶ 4:209 ff.) before issuing title insurance to a partnership buyer.

➪ [4:243] PRACTICE POINTER: Even in those rare instances where title insurance is not being obtained (see Ch. 3), a partnership buyer should record its statement of partnership authority or certificate of limited partnership (as the case may be) before recordation of the conveyancing instrument. This will put the partnership's existence in the chain of title.

(2) [4:244] Impact on closing: As a practical matter, it is imprudent for a partnership buyer to close without an executed partnership agreement. Even so, the closing usually can still occur (and title insurance issued) even if the buyer's partnership agreement is not yet finalized and executed, so long as the appropriate statement of partnership authority or certificate of limited partnership exists. But the converse is not true: Notwithstanding a comprehensive partnership agreement, no title insurance company will issue a policy without a recorded statement of partnership authority or certificate of limited partnership.

c. [4:245] Corporations: Title insurance companies rarely require a corporate buyer's corporate resolutions. But the seller may want to see such resolutions (or, alternatively, may insist on the signing officer's warranty of authority) to circumvent a later claim that the purchase agreement is "ultra vires" (transaction prohibited by articles of incorporation).

➪ [4:245.1] PRACTICE POINTER: In practical effect, the "ultra vires" doctrine should be no obstacle to the validity of the transaction (see Corps.C. § 208(b), ¶ 4:211). Indeed, a seller's concern about the authority of individuals executing the purchase agreement on behalf of a corporate buyer can be minimized by adhering to the Corps.C. § 313 "safe harbor" (which will bar the corporation from claiming lack of authority; see ¶ 4:211.1 ff.). The seller should, however, verify that those who sign the agreement are in fact duly-appointed officers of the corporation.

d. [4:246] Unincorporated associations: The acquisition of an interest in real property by an unincorporated association (¶ 4:213) must be executed by its "president and secretary or other comparable officers," or by a person specifically designated by the association's duly-adopted resolution, "or by a committee or other body or person authorized to act" by the association's governing principles. [Corps.C. § 18115; see also ¶ 4:213.2 re recorded "statement of authority"]

e. [4:247] Trusts: Trustees buying real property on behalf of a trust must record a Memorandum of Trust before a title company will issue its policy of insurance. (See ¶ 4:216.)

f. [4:248] Entities not yet formed: Occasionally, buyers intend to form an entity to take title to the property; such buyers should execute the purchase agreement in their individual names and provide for a right of assignment.

➪ [4:249] PRACTICE POINTER: Do not execute any contract in the name of an entity not yet in existence.

Doing so may leave the contract vulnerable to avoidance by the seller for lack of contractual capacity (Civ.C. § 1550(1)); and the signing entity will have no standing to enforce the contract because it has not come into existence. (Compare ¶ 4:37c re validity of deed transferring property to yet-to-be-formed trust.)

(Of course, this is more of a problem for corporations, limited partnerships and limited liability companies, which require certain statutory prerequisites to formation. It is generally no impediment for general partnerships, which may exist pursuant to an oral or informal written agreement. Even so, it is not wise for any contemplated entity, not yet formed, to enter into business transactions without a clear understanding among the principals regarding their rights and obligations.)

g. [4:250] Spouses and registered domestic partners—community property vs. joint tenancy vs. other co-ownership forms: Spouses and registered domestic partners often want advice regarding whether they should take title to the property as community property; there is no simple answer. (That the parties will be buying the property with community funds does not necessarily mean they must take title as community property. They can agree to another form of ownership, and may effectively "transmute" the community property character to either party's separate property; see Fam.C. §§ 850-853, and detailed discussion in Hogoboom & King, Cal. Prac. Guide: Family Law (TRG), Ch. 8.)

Typically, the decision is made from an estate planning perspective: i.e., whether the parties want a right of survivorship (joint tenancy title, ¶ 4:146 ff., or community property with right of survivorship, ¶ 4:177 ff.) so as to avoid a formal probate of the property upon the first spouse's/domestic partner's death. Accordingly, the buyer's estate plans should be discussed before the closing.

Also the form of title decision should reflect consideration of consequential tax ramifications. On this point, remember that if the buyer wants to transfer title after the closing (to conform with the buyer's estate plan), the transfer may constitute a "change in ownership" triggering property tax reassessment and/or an additional documentary transfer tax (Rev. & Tax.C. § 11911). [See Rev. & Tax.C. § 61; and ¶ 13:65 ff.]

[4:251 - 4:254] Reserved.

5. Other Parties to the Purchase Agreement

a. [4:255] Real estate brokers: Third persons (anyone other than buyer and seller) are rarely made parties to the purchase agreement. Those few third party situations typically involve the seller's and/or buyer's real estate broker (either as a party to the contract or as a third party beneficiary).

(Compare: More often, third parties acquire rights under the agreement by way of an assignment. But they are not "parties" to the contract when it is executed.)

➪ [4:256] PRACTICE POINTER: Usually, the broker's only interest in being a party to the purchase agreement is to ensure the payment of commissions. But this invariably complicates the transaction and/or can lead to liability (e.g., a broker who is a party to the contract might thereby have a contractual right to sue the buyer and/or seller for commissions; see ¶ 4:578). Indeed, the broker's right to commissions can be easily protected without making the broker a party to the purchase contract:

• Ordinarily, the seller is already bound to pay a broker's commission by reason of a listing agreement (Ch. 2). A second contract for payment of the commission would only be superfluous.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

- If an escrow is used, the seller can instruct the escrow holder to pay the broker's commission out of the seller's proceeds (see ¶ 4:578 ff.). In this manner, the broker has the specific right to receive proceeds from the sale even though not a party to the underlying purchase agreement.

  Cross-refer: Real estate brokers and listing agreements are discussed in detail in Ch. 2.

b. [4:257] Other third persons: Occasionally, it may be beneficial to have third parties who hold some interest of record execute the purchase contract or some other instrument to evidence their agreement to relinquish their interest at the closing. For example, if a party is the holder of an option to purchase, a right of first refusal to purchase, or some other preemptive purchase right of record but which has expired (or will be relinquished at or before the closing), it is advisable to have the party "sign off" at the inception of the transaction.

c. [4:257a] Third party beneficiaries: See ¶ 4:525.

(2) [4:279.26] Damages liability to seller
(a) [4:279.27] Damages caused by purchaser's "representative"
(3) [4:279.28] Other rights, remedies and penalties

1. [4:260] General Concerns: Except to the extent the agreement must be in writing (¶ 4:263 ff.) and subject to statutes governing certain types of purchase and sale agreements (e.g., home equity sales contracts, ¶ 4:279.5), no particular form of real property purchase agreement is required by law. In practice, the form and structure of the contract (both as to substance and timing) are dictated by the parties' goals.

a. [4:261] Competing concerns: The chief difficulty typically encountered by counsel is balancing two basic competing interests: the parties' (and their brokers') desire, on the one hand, to commit to the transaction legally and emotionally by "signing a deal," against counsel's desire, on the other hand, to ensure that any document evidencing the transaction is lucid, complete and legally enforceable. While the parties are usually intensely motivated to have "something" in writing, counsel are more concerned about the legal issues; significantly:

• Whether the writing satisfies the statute of frauds (¶ 4:263 ff.);

• Whether the writing creates a binding, enforceable agreement (or whether it is intended to be nonbinding, ¶ 4:275 ff.);

• Whether the contract includes the mechanics for closing the transaction (typically, creation of an escrow, ¶ 4:560 ff.);

• Whether various statutory requirements relating to such matters as liquidated damages (¶ 4:310 ff.) and disclosure statements (¶ 4:354 ff.) have been satisfied.

b. [4:262] Threshold issue: Regardless of the label given the document, there are only two legally recognized kinds of written agreements pertaining to the sale of real property: (1) a binding, complete, enforceable agreement; or (2) a nonbinding memorandum for purposes of further negotiations and/or documentation. Thus, the initial critical issue is whether the parties want a preliminary memorandum of understanding for purposes of further discussion (i.e., a preliminary agreement leading up to the negotiation and memorialization of a more complete document) or whether they want to proceed directly from oral discussions to a binding and complete written agreement.

2. [4:263] Statute of Frauds: A binding, enforceable agreement for the sale of real property must be stated in a signed writing sufficient to satisfy the statute of frauds (Civ.C. §§ 1624(a)(3), 1698(c), 1091; CCP § 1971):

> Civ.C. § 1624(a): "The following contracts are invalid, unless they, or some note or memorandum thereof, are in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged or by the party's agent: …
> "(3) An agreement for the leasing for a longer period than one year, or for the sale of real property, or of an interest therein; such an agreement, if made by an agent of the party sought to be charged, is invalid, unless the authority of the agent is in writing, subscribed by the party sought to be charged." [Civ.C. § 1624(a)(3) (emphasis added)]
>
> Civ.C. § 1698(c): "… The statute of frauds (Section 1624) is required to be satisfied if the contract as modified is within its provisions." [Civ.C. § 1698(c) (emphasis added); and see Secrest v. Security Nat'l Mortg. Loan Trust 2002-2 (2008) 167 CA4th 544, 553, 84 CR3d 275, 282—agreement to modify contract that is subject to statute of frauds also is subject to statute of frauds]
>
> Civ.C. § 1091: "An estate in real property, other than an estate at will or for a term not exceeding one year, can be transferred only by operation of law, or by an instrument in writing, subscribed by the party disposing of the same, or by his agent thereunto authorized by writing." [Civ.C. § 1091 (emphasis added); see also CCP § 1971, containing similar language]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

The primary purpose of the statute of frauds is to "require reliable evidence of the existence and terms of the contract and to prevent enforcement through fraud or perjury of contracts never in fact made." [Sterling v. Taylor (2007) 40 C4th 757, 766, 55 CR3d 116, 123 (emphasis added); Lee v. Lee (2009) 175 CA4th 1553, 1556, 97 CR3d 516, 519]

Cross-refer: The statute of frauds also applies to options to purchase (Civ.C. § 1624(a)(3), ¶ 8:75 ff.); to the purchaser's assumption of an indebtedness secured by mortgage or deed of trust on the purchased property (Civ.C. § 1624(a)(6), ¶ 6:323); and to real estate broker commission agreements (Civ.C. § 1624(a)(4), ¶ 2:281 ff.).

a. [4:263.1] Any agreement for sale or interest in real property: The statute of frauds (Civ.C. § 1624(a)(3), ¶ 4:263) applies to any agreement for the sale of real property or an interest in real property, including agreements to modify such contracts. [See Reeder v. Specialized Loan Servicing LLC (2020) 52 CA5th 795, 801-802, 266 CR3d 578, 583-584—alleged oral agreement subject to statute of frauds even if it preceded loan and trust deed because it changed and eliminated written agreement's terms; Smyth v. Berman (2019) 31 CA5th 183, 197, 242 CR3d 336, 348—statute of frauds applicable to commercial tenant's alleged agreed-upon right of first refusal to purchase leased building (¶ 4:272.6); Rossberg v. Bank of America, N.A. (2013) 219 CA4th 1481, 1503, 162 CR3d 525, 543—statute of frauds applicable to loan modification agreements]

(1) [4:263.1a] Sale between partners/joint venturers included: There is a line of authority recognizing that oral agreements among partners or joint venturers relating to real property are not within the statute of frauds. However, most of these cases involve agreements that only tangentially affect an interest in or disposition of real property (e.g., agreement to share profits from a real estate transaction). The statute of frauds is fully applicable to an agreement by one partner or joint venturer to transfer an interest in real property to another member of the partnership or joint venture. [See Kaljian v. Menezes (1995) 36 CA4th 573, 583-586, 42 CR2d 510, 516-518, and cases cited therein]

(2) [4:263.2] Limited exception—sale of real property negotiated at judicially-supervised settlement conference: An oral settlement for the sale of real property, if agreed to by the parties "before the court" (i.e., at a judicially-supervised proceeding), is enforceable pursuant to CCP § 664.6 notwithstanding that it was never reduced to a signed writing. In effect, the court's participation in and supervision of the settlement process serves the same function as the statute of frauds in preventing fraud and perjury. [Kohn v. Jaymar-Ruby, Inc. (1994) 23 CA4th 1530, 1534-1535, 28 CR2d 780, 782-783 (involving Civ.C. § 1624(a)(1) statute of frauds re agreements not capable of performance within one year)—"statute of frauds was never intended to bar enforcement of judicially supervised settlements"; see also BTHHM Berkeley, LLC v. Johnston (2024) 100 CA5th 1220, 1222, 1225-1226, 319 CR3d 852, 853, 855-856 (certified for partial publication)—settlement term sheet entered into between commercial landlord and cannabis dispensary tenant following mediation deemed fully enforceable under CCP § 664.6 while unauthorized prejudgment interest award that differed "materially" from parties' agreement was reversed (concluding § 664.6 authorizes entering judgments that reflect parties' settlement agreement terms—i.e., "nothing more and nothing less")]

b. [4:264] Compare—formation of contract: Compliance with the statute of frauds should not be confused with basic contract law concerning offer, acceptance and formation of a contract. Thus, although there may be a written document that ostensibly satisfies the execution requirement of the statute of frauds (¶ 4:266), there must still be an offer to sell on specified terms and an "absolute" acceptance—i.e., an essential "meeting of the minds." [Ajax Holding Co. v. Heinsbergen (1944) 64 CA2d 665, 669-670, 149 P2d 189, 192—buyer's written escrow instructions, modified by sellers before signing, did not form binding purchase contract because buyer never accepted sellers' modifications]

(1) [4:264.1] Unqualified acceptance required: An acceptance forms a binding contract only if it is absolute and unqualified. The offeror's proposed terms must be met "exactly, precisely and unequivocally." [Civ.C. § 1585; Marcus & Millichap Real Estate Invest. Brokerage Co. v. Hock Invest. Co. (1998) 68 CA4th 83, 89, 80 CR2d 147, 150; Roth v. Malson (1998) 67 CA4th 552, 557, 79 CR2d 226, 229]

(2) [4:264.2] Qualified acceptance as counteroffer: A qualified acceptance that fails to give assent to an essential term of the offer, or a purported acceptance on new or different terms, is simply a counteroffer. And an acceptance with material changes effectively rejects the original offer; the original offer can no longer be accepted to form a contract unless and until renewed by the offeror. [Niles v. Hancock (1903) 140 C 157, 161, 73 P 840, 841-842; see Panagotacos v. Bank of America

(1998) 60 CA4th 851, 855-856, 70 CR2d 595, 597—buyers' purported acceptance never gave rise to binding purchase agreement because it proposed payment occur elsewhere than specified by offeror (an essential condition of the offer)]

(3) [4:264.3] Mistakenly-labeled counteroffers: The parties' objective intent as evidenced by the words of the instrument controls its interpretation and, indeed, whether it amounts to a binding contract. [Harris v. Rudin, Richman & Appel (1999) 74 CA4th 299, 307, 87 CR2d 822, 828]

Thus, a purported acceptance on terms written in the section of a form contract labeled “counteroffer” or “changes/ amendments” most likely will be treated as a counteroffer—even if the proposed terms in substance match the original offer. Since the parties' objective manifestation of intent controls the interpretation, courts generally are reluctant to compare and contrast terms to determine whether there is a material variance when a response to an offer is facially presented as a counteroffer. [Roth v. Malson (1998) 67 CA4th 552, 559, 79 CR2d 226, 230—no binding contract arose when buyer's purported acceptance of seller's counteroffer was put in section of form contract labeled “counter to counteroffer” and buyer also wrote purchase terms in section labeled “changes/amendments” (immaterial that buyer's terms did not vary from terms of seller's counteroffer); see also Krasley v. Sup.Ct. (Brennan) (1980) 101 CA3d 425, 430, 161 CR 629, 632]

➪ [4:264.4] PRACTICE POINTER: It is not unusual for several counteroffers to pass between the parties. Be sure that an intended acceptance at any stage of this exchange is clearly labeled as such, and that it does not introduce additional terms; this is especially important when the “counteroffers” are presented on preprinted form contracts (as demonstrated in the Roth case, ¶ 4:264.3).

When a contract eventually is formed following an exchange of multiple counteroffers, prudence suggests that both parties execute a single document incorporating all of the agreed-upon terms.

(4) [4:264.5] Effect of reserving essential term for *future agreement: Generally, where an essential element of a contract is reserved for the parties' future agreement, no legal obligation arises until the future agreement is made. Whether a term is “essential” depends on its relative importance to the parties and whether its absence would make enforcing the remainder of the agreement unfair to either party. [Copeland v. Baskin Robbins U.S.A. (2002) 96 CA4th 1251, 1256, 117 CR2d 875, 879 & fn. 3; see Bustamante v. Intuit, Inc. (2006) 141 CA4th 199, 213, 45 CR3d 692, 703—because essential terms only sketched out, with final form to be agreed upon in future and subject to third-party approval, parties had at best “agreement to agree”; and ¶ 4:270 ff.]

➪ [4:264.5a] PRACTICE POINTER: It is never advisable to include terms in an agreement that are neither specific nor understandable. For example, avoid language that requires the parties to “act in good faith” or that suggests a term is subject to future agreement of the parties.

(5) [4:264.6] Effect of no signature: When it is clear from a provision in a proposed written contract and any other relevant evidence that the parties contemplated that acceptance of the proposed contract's terms would be signified by signing the contract, no binding contract comes into existence until it is signed. [Basura v. U.S. Home Corp. (2002) 98 CA4th 1205, 1215, 120 CR2d 328, 335]

(Of course, even if legally formed without signatures, a contract may nonetheless be unenforceable because the statute of frauds signature requirement operates independently of formation issues; see ¶ 4:266 ff.)

c. [4:265] Writing requirement: The statute of frauds simply requires that evidence of the contract be in writing. The writing need not be in a single document; it may be pieced together from various writings or documents and no particular formality is required. [Brewer v. Horst-Lachmund Co. (1900) 127 C 643, 646, 60 P 418, 419; see Goodman v. Community Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1966) 246 CA2d 13, 22, 54 CR 456, 462; Alameda Belt Line v. City of Alameda (2003) 113 CA4th 15, 21, 5 CR3d 879, 883—municipal ordinance may be deemed sufficient written evidence of purchase agreement where one party to agreement is a municipality; compare Smyth v. Berman (2019) 31 CA5th 183, 197, 242 CR3d 336, 348 (finding landlord's “equivocal and non-confirmatory” email responses did not evidence contract or set forth “essential contract terms with reasonable certainty”) —email exchange between commercial tenant's attorney and landlord referencing tenant's alleged right of first refusal to purchase leased property did not satisfy statute of frauds; see also ¶ 4:268]

Compare: The writing requirement serves only to prevent the contract from being unenforceable under the statute of frauds; it does not necessarily establish the contract terms (see ¶ 4:270 ff.). [Sterling v. Taylor (2007) 40 C4th 757, 766, 55 CR3d 116, 123]

(1) [4:265.1] Electronic messages: Electronic messages of an "ephemeral" nature that are not designed to be retained or to create a permanent record (e.g., text messages and instant message format communications) are insufficient to constitute a contract to convey real property unless confirmed in writing as statutorily described. [See Civ.C. § 1624(d)]

d. [4:266] "Subscribed by the party to be charged": The statute of frauds is satisfied so long as the "party to be charged" (i.e., the person charged with performance of the obligation) signs the writing—all parties to the contract are not technically required to sign. [Civ.C. § 1624(a)(3) (emphasis added); Harper v. Goldschmidt (1909) 156 C 245, 248, 104 P 451, 452-453—"party to be charged" does not mean buyer or seller, but person charged in court with performance of the obligation; see also Ulloa v. McMillin Real Estate & Mortg., Inc. (2007) 149 CA4th 333, 338-339, 57 CR3d 1, 4-5—"party to be charged" is defendant in action brought to enforce contract; Secrest v. Security Nat'l Mortg. Loan Trust 2002-2 (2008) 167 CA4th 544, 552, 84 CR3d 275, 281-282 (same)]

➪ [4:266.1] PRACTICE POINTER: Frequently, the drafting party will send an unexecuted copy of the purchase agreement to the other party, requesting that it be signed and returned. A statute of frauds problem arises when the other party executes and returns the contract, but the drafting party then refuses to sign it. Absent an equitable estoppel defense (¶ 4:272.2) or sufficient "part performance" (¶ 4:271) to satisfy the statute of frauds, the contract is unenforceable against an ostensibly obligated party who failed to sign. [See Bed, Bath & Beyond of La Jolla, Inc. v. La Jolla Village Square Venture Partners (1997) 52 CA4th 867, 877, 60 CR2d 830, 836 (involving comparable lease situation)—alleged lease agreement executed by lessee but not lessor unenforceable against lessor]

(1) [4:267] Manner of execution: No particular manner of execution is required; parties need not sign their full names, nor need the signature be handwritten (e.g., signature may be typed, lithographed, rubber-stamped or printed). It is sufficient that the "party to be charged" intended there to be an execution, regardless of the form or location of the signature. [See Marks v. Walter G. McCarty Corp. (1949) 33 C2d 814, 820, 205 P2d 1025, 1028; Rader Co. v. Stone (1986) 178 CA3d 10, 23, 223 CR 806, 812; J.B.B. Investment Partners, Ltd. v. Fair (2014) 232 CA4th 974, 992, 182 CR3d 154, 168 (citing Marks with approval)—printed name relied upon as signature does not satisfy statute of frauds absent proof it was placed on document or adopted by party to be charged (¶ 4:267.1)]

(a) [4:267.1] Electronic signatures: A record, signature or contract may not be denied legal effect or enforceability solely because it is in electronic form or an electronic record was used in its formation. [Civ.C. § 1633.7(a), (b); see also 15 USC § 7001 et seq. ("Electronic Signatures in Global & National Commerce Act")—applicable to interstate or foreign transactions; compare J.B.B. Investment Partners, Ltd. v. Fair (2014) 232 CA4th 974, 986-989, 182 CR3d 154, 163-165, 167-168 (noting electronic signature must, among other things, be adopted by person with intent to sign electronic record)—defendant's printed name at end of email responding to proposed settlement terms did not evidence his intent to execute settlement agreement by electronic means, nor did it constitute a signature under contract law]

(2) [4:268] Piecemeal writings: Where the "writing" for statute of frauds purposes is made up of several documents, it suffices that one of them is signed by the "party to be charged" … so long as, under the circumstances, the writings indicate that they relate to the same transaction. [See Rest.2d Contracts § 132—sufficient memorandum to satisfy statute of frauds; and, e.g., Karl v. JeBien (1965) 231 CA2d 769, 772, 42 CR 461, 462]

(3) Execution by agent

(a) [4:269] "Equal dignities" rule: An agent may sign in the place of the "party sought to be charged." But in that event, the statute of frauds is satisfied only if the agent's authority is evidenced by a writing signed by the principal ("equal dignities rule"). [Civ.C. §§ 1624(a)(3), 2309; Ulloa v. McMillin Real Estate & Mortg., Inc. (2007) 149 CA4th 333, 339, 57 CR3d 1, 5; see Estate of Stephens (2002) 28 C4th 665, 672, 122 CR2d 358, 362—where agent did not have written authority to execute deed as principal's agent, conveyance not authorized under § 2309]

1) [4:269.1] Applicable to ratification of agent's invalid act: The principal's ratification may validate an agent's unauthorized act. But the "equal dignities" rule also applies to a ratification: A principal's ratification of an agent's act "can be made only in the manner that would have been necessary to confer an original authority for the act ratified." [Civ.C. § 2310]

Thus, just as an agent's authority to execute a deed (or purchase/sale agreement) must be in writing, so too must a principal's ratification of an invalid execution by the agent. [Estate of Stephens (2002) 28 C4th 665, 673, 122

CR2d 358, 363—principal's oral ratification of agent's execution of deed ineffective; Behniwal v. Mix (2005) 133 CA4th 1027, 1039, 35 CR3d 320, 329]

Documents of "high levels of specificity, such as escrow instructions, have been held to easily ratify an agent's acts in entering into a deal." [Behniwal v. Mix, supra, 133 CA4th at 1039, 35 CR3d at 329; compare Tribeca Cos., LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co. (2015) 239 CA4th 1088, 1113, 192 CR3d 354, 374-375—investment firm had no authority to act as joint venture's agent in executing escrow instructions absent written authorization]

a) [4:269.2] Ratification need not restate terms of underlying contract: A principal's written ratification of an agent's invalid execution of an agreement need not itself set forth the terms of the agreement. This is because the terms have been identified already, and the only outstanding issue is whether the principal's acceptance of them can be ascertained from the ratification document. [Behniwal v. Mix (2005) 133 CA4th 1027, 1040, 35 CR3d 320, 329-330]

Thus, e.g., the principal's signature on disclosure documents executed in connection with a real property purchase and sale transaction (e.g., a natural hazard disclosure statement, or a notice of the availability of a statewide database showing the proximity of registered sex offenders; see generally, ¶ 4:354 ff.) effectively ratifies the underlying purchase and sale agreement and, consequently, the transaction. [Behniwal v. Mix, supra, 133 CA4th at 1040-1042, 35 CR3d at 329-331]

[4:269.3 - 4:269.4] Reserved.

(b) [4:269.5] Compare—agent signing in "ministerial" capacity ("amanuensis rule"): The agent's authority need not be in writing if the agent was not given authority to enter into a contract, but rather acted as an "amanuensis" by merely signing the principal's name in a "ministerial" or "clerical" capacity at the principal's request. [Ellis v. Mihelis (1963) 60 C2d 206, 214, 32 CR 415, 419; Estate of Stephens (2002) 28 C4th 665, 674, 122 CR2d 358, 364—"the amanuensis rule has successfully been invoked as an exception to [CC] section 2309"; see also Kadota Fig Ass'n of Producers v. Case-Swayne Co. (1946) 73 CA2d 815, 821, 167 P2d 523, 526—"an oral request to perform the mere mechanical act of signing another person's name to an instrument is valid and binding even though the instrument is required to be in writing"]

1) [4:269.6] Agent's signature in principal's presence *not required: Application of the "amanuensis rule" is not restricted to situations where an agent signs a contract in the principal's immediate presence. The rule may also apply when an agent, acting with only "mechanical and no discretionary authority," signs the principal's name outside the principal's presence. The dispositive issue is whether the agent's signing was a "mechanical act." [Estate of Stephens (2002) 28 C4th 665, 676, 122 CR2d 358, 365—"we again reject the formalistic notion that an amanuensis must sign the document in the presence of the principal"]

2) [4:269.7] "Interested amanuensis" limitation: When the amanuensis will directly benefit from the transfer of title effected by the deed they executed for the principal in a ministerial capacity, "the validity of the transfer must be examined under a heightened level of judicial scrutiny" to eliminate concerns of fraud, duress or undue influence. [Estate of Stephens (2002) 28 C4th 665, 677, 122 CR2d 358, 366 (emphasis added)]

"Because unscrupulous parties could attempt to use the amanuensis rule to sidestep the protections provided by [the equal dignities rule, etc.], … the signing of a grantor's name by an interested amanuensis is presumed invalid." In such cases, the interested amanuensis bears the burden of showing "his or her signing of the grantor's name was a ministerial act in that the grantor intended to sign the document using the instrumentality of the amanuensis." [Estate of Stephens, supra, 28 C4th at 677-678, 122 CR2d at 367 (emphasis added)—overwhelming evidence showed that daughter who signed father's name to deed transferring property to her and father as joint tenants, albeit not in his immediate presence, acted as mere amanuensis, thereby validating father's oral instruction to daughter to sign his name to deed]

[4:269.8 - 4:269.9] Reserved.

(c) [4:269.10] Identification of undisclosed principal: See discussion at ¶ 4:270.5.

e. [4:270] Essential terms: Although not expressly specified in the California statute of frauds (¶ 4:263), it is well-established that the writing is enforceable under the statute of frauds (and general contract law, ¶ 4:264.5) only if it sets forth all the essential terms of the contract with "reasonable certainty." [Sterling v. Taylor (2007) 40 C4th 757, 766, 55 CR3d 116, 123; see also Smyth v. Berman (2019) 31 CA5th 183, 197, 242 CR3d 336, 348 (¶ 4:265); Marriage of Benson (2005) 36 C4th 1096, 1108, 32 CR3d 471, 479—since statute of frauds primarily serves to prove contract exists (¶ 4:263), writing need only mention certain "essential" or "meaningful" terms]

This principle is also codified in Civ.C. § 3390, which bars a specific performance remedy unless the terms of the agreement are sufficiently clear. [See Civ.C. § 3390(e)—agreement cannot be specifically enforced if its terms "are not sufficiently certain to make the precise act which is to be done clearly ascertainable"; and further discussion at ¶ 11:227 ff.]

(1) [4:270.1] Restatement requirements: Under the Restatement of Contracts, a writing is enforceable only if it "reasonably" identifies the contract's subject matter, indicates that a contract has been made between the parties or offered by the signer to the other party, and states "with reasonable certainty the essential terms of the unperformed promises in the contract." [Rest.2d Contracts § 131]

(2) [4:270.2] Identifying essential terms: The "essential" terms of an agreement depends on its context and the subsequent conduct of the parties. [Sterling v. Taylor (2007) 40 C4th 757, 766, 55 CR3d 116, 123]

At a minimum, however, as applied to purchase and sale agreements, the writing must identify the buyer, the seller, the price, and the property. [Sterling v. Taylor, supra, 40 C4th at 772, 55 CR3d at 128]

(a) [4:270.3] Time and manner of payment not "essential": The traditional formulation of "essential terms" also included the time and manner of payment—i.e., a time for performance of the contract. However, because real property purchase and sale contracts are enforceable although lacking specification of a time for performance, the time and manner of payment are not truly "essential terms" for purposes of compliance with the statute of frauds. [Sterling v. Taylor (2007) 40 C4th 757, 772, 55 CR3d 116, 128, fn. 14; see also ¶ 4:282.1, 11:56 ff.]

Indeed, real property purchase and sale contracts do not have to be drawn with "technical exactness" to be binding. "It is settled that if a contract for the sale of real property specifies no time of payment, a reasonable time is allowed. The manner of payment is also a term that may be supplied by implication." [Patel v. Liebermensch (2008) 45 C4th 344, 346, 86 CR3d 366, 367 & fn. 2—manner and time of payment may be determined by reference to "custom and reason" when contract is silent]

(b) [4:270.4] Use of parol evidence, generally: When a writing includes the essential terms of the agreement but the meaning of the terms is unclear or ambiguous, it nonetheless satisfies the statute of frauds if parol evidence clarifies the terms with reasonable certainty, and the evidence "as a whole" demonstrates that the parties intended to be bound by the agreement. [Sterling v. Taylor (2007) 40 C4th 757, 771, 55 CR3d 116, 127; see Tiffany Builders, LLC v. Delrahim (2023) 97 CA5th 536, 545-546, 315 CR3d 582, 588-589—hand-written deal to purchase multiple gas stations deemed sufficiently definite for judicial enforcement even though it failed, among other things, to indicate whether transaction included only parties or also their business entities (concluding record showed both parties were sole owners of their respective companies), discussed further at ¶ 4:270.6 & 4:270.7; compare Hot Rods, LLC v. Northrop Grumman Systems Corp. (2015) 242 CA4th 1166, 1175-1177, 196 CR3d 53, 59-61—integration clause stating "no extrinsic evidence whatsoever may be introduced" to interpret contract fully enforceable as express indication of "sophisticated" parties' intent to bypass general rule; see also ¶ 4:270.6 (parol evidence to clarify purchase price) & ¶ 4:270.7 (parol evidence to clarify property description)]

However, parol evidence may not be used to contradict the terms of the writing. [Sterling v. Taylor, supra, 40 C4th at 771, 55 CR3d at 127; see also Riverisland Cold Storage, Inc. v. Fresno-Madera Production Credit Ass'n (2013) 55 C4th 1169, 1174, 151 CR3d 93, 96—rule's purpose is to ensure parties' final understanding, deliberately expressed in writing, is not subject to change; Abers v. Rounsavell (2010) 189 CA4th 348, 356, 116 CR3d 860, 865—written agreements whose language appears clear in the context of the parties' dispute are not open to claims of "latent" ambiguity]

Cross-refer: For a comprehensive treatment of the parol evidence rule, see Wegner, Fairbank, Wegner, Wegner & Chernow, Cal. Prac. Guide: Civil Trials & Evidence (TRG), Ch. 8E.

(c) [4:270.5] Contracts signed by agent—identity of undisclosed principal: When an agent executes the contract on behalf of the "party to be charged" (¶ 4:269 ff.), the principal need not necessarily be disclosed in the written agreement. The contract is enforceable against the undisclosed principal, and parol evidence is admissible to identify the principal. [Sterling v. Taylor (2007) 40 C4th 757, 773, 55 CR3d 116, 128; Curran v. Holland (1903) 141 C 437, 439-440, 75 P

46, 47—extrinsic evidence admissible to identify principal because it does not contradict writing, but merely explains transaction]

(d) [4:270.6] Purchase price: Parol evidence is also admissible to clarify an ambiguous purchase price in a real property purchase agreement. So long as the price may be objectively determined from the written agreement (e.g., derived from a negotiated formula), a contract in which the price is not expressed may nonetheless satisfy the statute of frauds. [See Sterling v. Taylor (2007) 40 C4th 757, 773-776, 55 CR3d 116, 129-130—where agreement described price by "approximate" multiplier of "gross income" and mistakenly omitted zero, plaintiffs' extrinsic evidence of price term insufficient to show with "reasonable certainty" (¶ 4:270.4) that parties understood and agreed to term; compare Tiffany Builders, LLC v. Delrahim (2023) 97 CA5th 536, 545-547, 315 CR3d 582, 588-590—hand-written deal to purchase multiple gas stations deemed sufficiently definite for judicial enforcement even though it used "X" to denote price-related term (finding plaintiff's declaration explained "X" was just a placeholder and deal provided formula for ultimately ascertaining "X"s presently unknown value), discussed further at ¶ 4:270.4 & 4:270.7; Carver v. Teitsworth (1991) 1 CA4th 845, 852-853, 2 CR2d 446, 450—buyer's written statement that he would pay $1,000 more than any other bid for property sufficiently certain to satisfy statute of frauds]

(e) [4:270.7] Sufficiency of property description: A liberal rule of construction is applied to the sufficiency of the property description in a purchase and sale contract. Generally, less certainty is required in a contract to convey than in a deed (¶ 4:10). [Wright v. L.W. Wilson Co., Inc. (1931) 212 C 569, 572, 299 P 521, 523; see Alameda Belt Line v. City of Alameda (2003) 113 CA4th 15, 21, 5 CR3d 879, 883—"courts have been most liberal in construing executory contracts for the sale of real estate" (internal brackets and quotes omitted)]

Parol evidence "may be consulted" to identify property described in imprecise terms, even though a more complete description is preferable. [Sterling v. Taylor (2007) 40 C4th 757, 773, 55 CR3d 116, 129; see Tiffany Builders, LLC v. Delrahim (2023) 97 CA5th 536, 545, 315 CR3d 582, 588-589—hand-written deal to purchase multiple gas stations deemed sufficiently definite for judicial enforcement even though it failed to identify stations' locations (finding record showed locations were known to or easily discoverable by parties), discussed further at ¶ 4:270.4 & 4:270.6; Wright v. L.W. Wilson Co., Inc., supra, 212 C at 574, 299 P at 523—contract deemed to adequately describe property if it refers to something as certain or provides means of ascertaining and identifying subject property; Beverage v. Canton Placer Mining Co. (1955) 43 C2d 769, 774, 278 P2d 694, 698—"description fulfills the test of reasonable certainty (¶ 4:270.4) if it furnishes the 'means or key' by which the description may be made certain and identified with its location on the ground" (emphasis added); Quan Shew Yung v. Woods (1963) 218 CA2d 506, 510, 32 CR 453, 455—technical legal description not required where property location well known to parties]

On the other hand, the writing does not satisfy the statute of frauds if the property can be identified only by reference to parol evidence. [Gordon v. Perkins (1930) 108 CA 336, 339, 291 P 644, 645; see also Alameda Belt Line v. City of Alameda (2003) 113 CA4th 15, 21, 5 CR3d 879, 883—parol evidence not admissible to supply description that parties entirely omitted from writing]

1) [4:270.8] Evidence coming into existence after contract's execution: So long as the written agreement provides the "means or key" by which parol evidence may be used to identify the property, the evidence is admissible for that purpose even though it did not come into existence until after the agreement was executed. [See Alameda Belt Line v. City of Alameda (2003) 113 CA4th 15, 21, 5 CR3d 879, 883—annual reports filed with city after agreement executed could be considered to identify subject property (discussed further at ¶ 8:79); Hansen Pac. Corp. v. Buck Mountain Logging Co. (1961) 191 CA2d 826, 832-833, 13 CR 82, 86—admittedly vague property description sufficient to satisfy statute of frauds when coupled with evidence of title reports given to buyer after execution of contract]

[4:270.9 - 4:270.24] Reserved.

(3) [4:270.25] Reformation to cure mistake or fraud: If, because of fraud or mistake, the written contract "does not truly express the written intent of the parties," it may be reformed (revised) on one party's application … so long as this can be done without prejudice to rights acquired by third party BFPs. [See Civ.C. § 3399; Demetris v. Demetris (1954) 125 CA2d 440, 443, 270 P2d 891, 893; Nunes v. De Faria (1951) 107 CA2d 794, 797, 238 P2d 106, 108]

f. [4:271] Part performance exception to statute of frauds: One party's "partial" (or full) performance of, and resulting detrimental change of position in reliance on, an oral real property sale contract takes the contract out of the statute of frauds. (The theory is that such performance would not have been undertaken absent a binding contract and hence is sufficient to evidence the contract.) [See CCP § 1972(a); Marriage of Benson (2005) 36 C4th 1096, 1108-1109, 32 CR3d 471, 480; Alfaro v. Community Housing Improvement System & Planning Ass'n, Inc. (2009) 171 CA4th 1356, 1396, 124 CR3d 271, 306; Secrest v. Security Nat'l Mortg. Loan Trust 2002-2 (2008) 167 CA4th 544, 555, 84 CR3d 275, 283]

(1) [4:271.1] Payment of money not enough: But the "part performance" must consist of acts that "unequivocally refer" to the contract or "clearly relate to" its terms (acts that would not have been performed but for the contract). [See generally, Marriage of Benson (2005) 36 C4th 1096, 1109, 32 CR3d 471, 480 (internal quotes omitted); and, e.g., Calanchini v. Branstetter (1890) 84 C 249, 252, 24 P 149, 150—buyer's taking possession is sufficient part performance because, but for the contract, buyer might be treated as trespasser; Peixouto v. Peixouto (1919) 40 CA 782, 789, 181 P 830, 834—buyer's constructing improvements is sufficient part performance]

The mere payment of money (purchase price), without more, is not sufficient "part performance" … because the money might have been paid anyway. [Davis v. Judson (1910) 159 C 121, 131, 113 P 147, 152; Harrison v. Warner (1993) 12 CA4th 415, 422, 15 CR2d 632, 636-637; see also Smyth v. Berman (2019) 31 CA5th 183, 198-199, 242 CR3d 336, 349 (finding time and money spent by commercial tenant "working up" offer to purchase leased building (as well as making said offer) did not constitute sufficient "part performance" to take alleged oral agreement with landlord out of statute of frauds, discussed further at ¶ 4:272.6); Secrest v. Security Nat'l Mortg. Loan Trust 2002-2 (2008) 167 CA4th 544, 555, 84 CR3d 275, 283—downpayment on unsigned forbearance agreement modifying note and deed of trust not sufficient part performance to bar lender from asserting statute of frauds in borrower's action to enjoin foreclosure]

[4:271.2 - 4:271.4] Reserved.

g. [4:271.5] Effect of contract provision requiring approval of separate agreement subject to statute of frauds: A real estate purchase contract may contain a provision requiring the parties to approve the terms of, or execute, a separate agreement that itself is subject to the statute of frauds. Regardless of whether the separate agreement has been reduced to a writing that satisfies the statute of frauds, the purchase contract is enforceable so long as it satisfies the statute of frauds. [Gaggero v. Yura (2003) 108 CA4th 884, 894-895, 134 CR2d 313, 321-322—although CC&Rs are subject to statute of frauds, purchase contract requiring parties to agree to CC&Rs as condition to close of escrow was enforceable despite no writing memorializing agreement re CC&Rs]

h. [4:272] Consequences of noncompliance—contract voidable (not void): An oral agreement within the statute of frauds is not "void"; rather, it is simply voidable at the election of a party. [O'Brien v. O'Brien (1925) 187 C 577, 586, 241 P 861, 864; Goldstein v. McNeil (1954) 122 CA2d 608, 611, 265 P2d 113, 115]

(1) [4:272.1] Subject to waiver: Thus, noncompliance with the statute of frauds is a defense to an action to enforce the contract and, as such, is waived if not timely raised in litigation. [Coleman v. Satterfield (1950) 100 CA2d 81, 83, 223 P2d 61, 63; Turell v. Anderson (1936) 16 CA2d 445, 449, 60 P2d 906, 908]

(2) [4:272.2] Estoppel exception: Even though it is timely raised as an affirmative defense, a party may be estopped to assert the statute of frauds where "unconscionable injury would result from denying enforcement of the oral contract after one party has been induced by the other seriously to change his position in reliance on the contract or where there would be unjust enrichment …" [Isaac v. A & B Loan Co., Inc. (1988) 201 CA3d 307, 313, 247 CR 104, 108 (emphasis added); see also Byrne v. Laura (1997) 52 CA4th 1054, 1069-1070, 60 CR2d 908, 918—oral joint tenancy enforceable on basis of estoppel]

• [4:272.3] For example, a lender was equitably estopped from asserting the statute of frauds defense where the borrower complied fully with a HAMP loan modification agreement and the Trial Period Plan. [Chavez v. Indymac Mortg. Services (2013) 219 CA4th 1052, 1061, 162 CR3d 382, 388; see further discussion at ¶ 6:511.26]

• [4:272.4] Compare: A lender's alleged oral statement that no foreclosure sale was scheduled because the borrowers were "under active review for a modification" was unenforceable absent the lender's signed writing. Among other things, the oral statement was not a promise that the lender would refrain from completing a trustee's sale in the future. Moreover, evidence showed the borrowers did not have enough money to reinstate the loan even if they had known of the sale date.

[Granadino v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2015) 236 CA4th 411, 416-419, 186 CR3d 408, 413-415 (also noting borrowers failed to establish damages since they had no equity in property)]

• [4:272.5] Similarly, a lender's refusal to honor an alleged oral promise to postpone a foreclosure sale did not result in an unconscionable injury sufficient to avoid application of the statute of frauds. Indeed, the sale was conducted only 10 days earlier than promised and evidence showed the borrowers' statutory right to cure would have expired before they planned to contact the lender to request another postponement. [Jones v. Wachovia Bank (2014) 230 CA4th 935, 944, 949, 179 CR3d 21, 28, 32]

• [4:272.6] A landlord was not estopped from asserting the statute of frauds defense to her commercial tenant's claim that an alleged oral agreement between the parties granted the tenant a right of first refusal to purchase the leased premises. This was so despite the tenant's contention that he (i) "seriously changed [his] position" by expending time and money working up an offer (and making an offer) to buy the property, and (ii) relied on the alleged agreement by paying rent, making physical changes to the property and purchasing another property located next door. In so holding, the court first confirmed that time and money spent working up an offer (as well as making the offer) do not count because "the payment of money is not sufficient part performance to take an oral agreement out of the statute of frauds." Moreover, the court found the tenant's payment of rent, physical changes to the property and purchase of the property next door "all happened before the [landlord's alleged oral agreement] and thus could not have been made" in reliance thereon. [Smyth v. Berman (2019) 31 CA5th 183, 198-199, 242 CR3d 336, 349 (emphasis in original)]

[4:273 - 4:274] Reserved.

3. [4:275] Letters of Intent, Memoranda and Other "Informal" Instruments: A "letter of intent" is often used in real estate transactions but the term has no inherent legal significance. In practice, "letter of intent" generally refers to a writing documenting the parties' preliminary understanding of desire to enter into a future contract. The purpose is not to bind the parties to their ultimate contractual obligations but simply to provide the framework (the basic "deal points") from which they will negotiate toward a binding contract; or to provide a guideline to assist the attorneys in preparing a binding agreement. [See Rennick v. O.P.T.I.O.N. Care, Inc. (9th Cir. 1996) 77 F3d 309, 315]

Nonetheless, letters of intent, memoranda and other "informal" writings are sometimes intended by the parties to be binding and enforceable and are used instead of comprehensive purchase and sale agreements or escrow instructions.

• FORM: (Nonbinding) Letter of Intent, see Form 4:G.

a. Pros and cons

(1) [4:275.1] Framework for drafting; "tying up" property: If properly prepared, letters of intent and memoranda can serve the useful purposes of (a) focusing the parties on the material terms; (b) psychologically committing the parties to the transaction; and (c) providing a working outline from which a complete and binding contract can be prepared. In essence, these types of informal preliminary documents serve as the backdrop against which the parties may later determine whether they have reached an agreement on the major "deal points" (price, contingencies, closing date, etc.).

Occasionally, letters of intent are also used to preclude the seller from negotiating with other potential buyers during a specified period of time (¶ 4:276).

(2) [4:275.1a] Unintended enforceable obligations: The major disadvantage, however, is that unless carefully drafted, such instruments may create binding, enforceable obligations or (at the very least) result in litigation over the issue (see ¶ 4:275.2 ff.).

b. [4:275.2] Binding vs. nonbinding; parties' intent determines enforceability: Under general principles of contract law, the interpretation of a letter of intent, memoranda or similar instrument—i.e., whether it is intended to be a binding, enforceable agreement—is governed by the parties' objective intent as evidenced, first and foremost, by the words used. [See Beck v. American Health Group Int'l, Inc. (1989) 211 CA3d 1555, 1562, 260 CR 237, 241 (overruled by statute on other grounds as stated in Epic Medical Mgmt., LLC v. Paquette (2015) 244 CA4th 504, 516, 198 CR3d 28, 38); see also ¶ 4:264.3]

➪ [4:275.2a] PRACTICE POINTER: Don't be misled by the title of the document. Many so-called "letters of intent" read just like a contract, contain all the material terms and, indeed, often state they are intended to be "binding and enforceable."

(1) [4:275.2b] Binding agreements: Where a writing shows no more than an intent to further reduce it to a more formal one, "the failure to follow it with a more formal writing does not negate the existence of the prior contract." [Harris v. Rudin, Richman & Appel (1999) 74 CA4th 299, 307, 87 CR2d 822, 828 (internal quotes omitted); see also Rennick v. O.P.T.I.O.N. Care, Inc. (9th Cir. 1996) 77 F3d 309, 316—"Where a letter says that it is subject to the terms of a contemplated mutual agreement to be written and signed in the future, but other evidence indicates that the parties decided to be bound by the terms of the letter, the letter may amount to a contract"; City of Santa Cruz v. MacGregor (1960) 178 CA2d 45, 52, 2 CR 727, 731—parties' conduct may convert letter of intent into binding agreement]

(a) [4:275.2c] May include preliminary *oral agreement: Consistent with the principles set forth at ¶ 4:275.2 ff., when parties orally agree upon all material terms and conditions to a proposed written contract with the mutual intent that the oral agreement should thereupon become binding, the absence of a signed written agreement does not alter the binding validity of the oral agreement. [Khajavi v. Feather River Anesthesia Med. Group (2000) 84 CA4th 32, 61, 100 CR2d 627, 648]

1) [4:275.2d] Statute of frauds defense: Of course, notwithstanding the parties' intent that a binding contract become operative with their oral agreement, an oral agreement within the statute of frauds (including a real property purchase and sale agreement, ¶ 4:263 ff.) is voidable at the option of the party against whom enforcement is sought (¶ 4:272 ff.).

(2) [4:275.3] Nonbinding agreements: On the other hand, where an informal writing shows it is not intended to be binding until a formal written contract is executed, there is no contract. [Harris v. Rudin, Richman & Appel (1999) 74 CA4th 299, 307, 87 CR2d 822, 828; Rennick v. O.P.T.I.O.N. Care, Inc. (9th Cir. 1996) 77 F3d 309, 316—no binding contract arose from letter of intent indicating parties did not intend to be bound unless and until subsequent agreement was made and approved by respective boards of directors]

The same principle applies where it is clear from the evidence that the parties reaching an oral agreement intended it to become operative only when reduced to a signed writing; no binding contract comes into existence until the parties sign the writing. [Khajavi v. Feather River Anesthesia Med. Group (2000) 84 CA4th 32, 61-62, 100 CR2d 627, 648]

➪ [4:275.4] PRACTICE POINTERS: Avoid litigation over these issues. It is critical that any letter of intent, memorandum or other preliminary writing clearly state whether it is intended to be a binding, enforceable agreement.

If not intended to be binding, the parties should use words to the effect that the document is solely for purposes of discussion, to provide an initial framework from which they might negotiate a final agreement, that no binding obligations are created thereby and that no party has an obligation to negotiate further.

On the other hand, if the parties intend the document to be a binding agreement, it should both (a) clearly so specify, and (b) contain all of the material and nonmaterial terms. In other words, the document should be a complete agreement that satisfies the statute of frauds.

Moreover, because the parties' conduct may be evidence of their intent regarding the effect of preliminary writings, counsel should advise their clients to conduct themselves accordingly.

c. [4:275.5] Impact of covenant of good faith and fair dealing: If a "letter of intent" is construed to be a binding contract, like all contracts it will be deemed to include an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing that cannot be disclaimed. [Seaman's Direct Buying Service, Inc. v. Standard Oil Co. of Calif. (1984) 36 C3d 752, 768, 206 CR 354, 362 (overruled on other grounds by Freeman & Mills, Inc. v. Belcher Oil Co. (1995) 11 C4th 85, 88, 44 CR2d 420, 421; and disapproved on other grounds by Della Penna v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., Inc. (1995) 11 C4th 376, 393, 45 CR2d 436, 447, fn. 5); Bleecher v. Conte (1981) 29 C3d 345, 350, 213 CR 852, 854; Riess v. Murchison (9th Cir. 1974) 503 F2d 999, 1012]

(Conversely, if there is no contract between the parties, there can be no implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing between them. See Guz v. Bechtel Nat'l, Inc. (2000) 24 C4th 317, 349, 100 CR2d 352, 375—implied covenant cannot be "endowed with existence independent of its contractual underpinnings"; Rennick v. O.P.T.I.O.N. Care, Inc. (9th Cir. 1996) 77 F3d 309, 317; and ¶ 4:275.7.)

(1) [4:275.6] Application—in general: The covenant of good faith and fair dealing requires, among other things, that neither party do anything that will deprive the other party of the benefit of their bargain. [Guz v. Bechtel Nat'l, Inc. (2000) 24 C4th 317, 349, 100 CR2d 352, 375; and see Steiner v. Thexton (2010) 48 C4th 411, 419, 106 CR3d 252, 259—all contracts impose duty of good faith and fair dealing, especially when one party is invested with discretionary power affecting another's rights]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Thus, e.g., even though the parties may have contemplated the satisfaction of a condition before the contract becomes effective, the covenant of good faith and fair dealing may require that they take such action as is necessary to satisfy the condition. [Moreland Develop. Co. v. Gladstone Holmes, Inc. (1982) 135 CA3d 973, 977-978, 186 CR 6, 8-9—provision stating contract subject to approval by board of directors interpreted as requiring agreement to be submitted to board and that board consider agreement "in good faith"]

(2) [4:275.7] Limitation—generally no precontractual implied covenant to *negotiate in good faith: The covenant of good faith and fair dealing arises out of an express contract and is implied only to supplement express contractual terms. The covenant cannot be stretched to impose terms and conditions or create obligations not contemplated by the parties' contract. [Guz v. Bechtel Nat'l, Inc. (2000) 24 C4th 317, 349, 100 CR2d 352, 375; see also Steiner v. Thexton (2010) 48 C4th 411, 419, 106 CR3d 252, 259—implied covenant may not trump agreement's express language; Barroso v. Ocwen Loan Servicing, LLC (2012) 208 CA4th 1001, 1015, 146 CR3d 90, 101—implied covenant rests upon existence of some specific contractual obligation; Ninety Nine Investments, Ltd. v. Overseas Courier Service (Singapore) Private, Ltd. (2003) 113 CA4th 1118, 1131-1132, 6 CR3d 891, 901—implied covenant cannot prohibit party from doing what is expressly permitted by agreement]

Thus, the fact parties have commenced negotiations in anticipation of executing (or amending) a contract does not itself impose any duty on either to negotiate the contract (or modification) in good faith; i.e., in such a scenario, there is no implied obligation not to be "unreasonable" in the contract negotiations or not to break off negotiations (for any reason or no reason at all). [See Racine & Laramie, Ltd., Inc. v. California Dept. of Parks & Recreation (1992) 11 CA4th 1026, 1034, 14 CR2d 335, 340; Copeland v. Baskin Robbins U.S.A. (2002) 96 CA4th 1251, 1260, 117 CR2d 875, 883]

(a) [4:275.8] Compare—independent contract to negotiate: Occasionally, however, parties to a contemplated transaction form a separate contract to negotiate. Such a contract does not obligate the parties to reach an ultimate agreement; but it obligates them to bargain in good faith. If, despite their good faith efforts, they fail to reach an ultimate agreement on the terms in issue, the contract to negotiate is deemed performed. "Failure to agree is not, itself, a breach of the contract to negotiate. A party will be liable only if a failure to reach ultimate agreement resulted from a breach of that party's obligation to negotiate or to negotiate in good faith." [Copeland v. Baskin Robbins U.S.A. (2002) 96 CA4th 1251, 1257, 117 CR2d 875, 880-881 (distinguishing binding contract to negotiate from unenforceable "agreement to agree")]

(b) [4:275.9] Compare—independent duty imposed during negotiating process: Even in the absence of a separate contract to negotiate, once negotiations commence, circumstances may occur that impose a duty of continued bargaining in good faith. [Racine & Laramie, Ltd., Inc. v. California Dept. of Parks & Recreation (1992) 11 CA4th 1026, 1034-1035, 14 CR2d 335, 340-341]

For example, during the course of negotiations, one party might "so mislead" the other by promises or representations, upon which the latter detrimentally relies, as to trigger a promissory estoppel. But absent such special circumstances, "there is no obligation in California to bargain for a new or amended contract in good faith." [Racine & Laramie, Ltd., Inc. v. California Dept. of Parks & Recreation, supra, 11 CA4th at 1035, 14 CR2d at 341]

d. [4:276] Exclusive negotiation agreements: Preliminary agreements, in the form of a "letter of intent" or other informal writing, are sometimes used by prospective buyers who want a seller to commit to negotiate solely with them for a certain period of time. This gives the buyer peace of mind that the seller will not be marketing the property for a higher price or better terms while extensive contract negotiations continue.

At least one case expressly recognizes that a contract to negotiate can be formed and breached like any other contract. [Copeland v. Baskin Robbins U.S.A. (2002) 96 CA4th 1251, 1257, 117 CR2d 875, 880-881; see ¶ 4:275.8]

[4:276.1] Reserved.

(1) [4:276.2] Practical concerns for buyers and sellers: "Exclusive negotiation" agreements have downsides for both buyers and sellers:

From the buyer's perspective, such agreements provide no assurance that the seller will ever accept the buyer's offer to purchase the property.

Conversely, from the seller's perspective, exclusive negotiation agreements may impose a heightened duty on the seller to negotiate "in good faith." [See Edmond's of Fresno v. MacDonald Group, Ltd. (1985) 171 CA3d 598, 607, 217 CR

375, 381—"violation of the covenant of good faith and fair dealing can occur … as long as one party to an agreement merely attempts to deprive another party of the benefits of the agreement"; see also ¶ 4:275.8 ff.]

4. [4:277] Comprehensive Purchase and Sale Agreements: A comprehensive purchase and sale agreement drafted by an attorney (or use of a preprinted form agreement, filled out and amended by counsel, ¶ 4:278) is the preferred method of documenting the purchase contract. If an escrow will be used, the purchase agreement should include escrow instructions, thus eliminating the need to prepare subsequent escrow instructions (¶ 4:583 ff.).

• FORM: (Attorney-Drafted) Purchase and Sale Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions, see Form 4:H.

5. [4:278] Preprinted Form Agreements: The California Association of Realtors (C.A.R.), American Industrial Real Estate Association, and many private real estate brokerage firms have promulgated standard form purchase and sale agreements. These forms, when properly executed, ordinarily constitute binding and enforceable contracts for the sale and purchase of property. [Allen v. Smith (2002) 94 CA4th 1270, 1280, 114 CR2d 898, 904; see also Manderville v. PCG & S Group, Inc. (2007) 146 CA4th 1486, 1492, 55 CR3d 59, 63 (discussing C.A.R. form vacant land purchase agreement (¶ 4:112 ff.) and escrow instructions)]

(C.A.R.'s preprinted purchase and sale agreement is, according to C.A.R., the most frequently used form in California for the sale of residential property. It, and other C.A.R. forms, may be purchased online through C.A.R.'s subsidiary, the REBS Online Store, at www.car.org, or by contacting REBS Customer Service at (213) 739-8227.)

a. [4:278.1] Pros and cons: Generally speaking, C.A.R.'s forms are complete and evenly balanced. This is so because there is typically a broker representing each side in any transaction and the forms need to fit both party's needs. In addition, and at least for purposes of relatively simple residential (housing) sales, C.A.R.'s forms may be advantageous because:

• They generally include most issues buyers and sellers should consider.

• They sometimes are the most practical tool, since brokers (and often home buyers and sellers) are familiar (or seem to feel comfortable) with such forms. Extensive attorney-drafted purchase agreements may intimidate parties in what would otherwise be a fairly straightforward transaction.

• They save time and money—the parties need only fill in the blanks for the material terms (property description, price, etc.) and need not incur the time or expense of hiring lawyers to draft the contract language. [See Behniwal v. Mix (2005) 133 CA4th 1027, 1038, 35 CR3d 320, 328, fn. 12]

However, every preprinted form should be scrutinized to make certain it is appropriate for a particular transaction. Moreover, preprinted forms do not always include the specific mechanics and instructions for closing an escrow. Consequently, the parties will need to execute separate escrow instructions (¶ 4:583 ff.). Also, as one case notes, "When things go wrong …, the nature of the forms can have the effect … of turning things into … a 'morass.' Instead of a clean exchange of forms the way attorneys would structure most deals (if they have the time), the forms and the labels tend to confuse the substance of what is going on." [Behniwal v. Mix, supra, 133 CA4th at 1038, 35 CR3d at 328, fn. 12]

➪ PRACTICE POINTERS

• [4:278.2] Single-family residence purchase agreement: The C.A.R. form residential purchase agreement ("Residential Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions") usually includes an attachment entitled "Buyer's Inspection Advisory," that simply advises the buyer of issues to consider when inspecting the property (see ¶ 4:348 ff.).

• [4:278.3] Vacant land purchase agreement: C.A.R. also publishes a form purchase agreement for vacant land ("Vacant Land Purchase Contract and Receipt for Deposit").

• [4:278.4] Specialized forms for probate sales: Two C.A.R. forms—Probate Purchase Agreement (and Receipt for Deposit) and Probate Advisory—are helpful to use for probate, conservatorship or guardianship sales. Even when a prospective buyer presents the offer on a standard purchase agreement form, to avoid unnecessary difficulties, seller's counsel could insist on the buyer converting the offer to a Probate Purchase Agreement.

• [4:278.5] Modifying printed form agreements: Standard "form" purchase agreements rarely are completely suitable for every transaction (e.g., the parties may find certain covenants too narrow or too broad or otherwise objectionable, or may want to add others). Like any "form" transactional document, these form purchase and sale agreements should be carefully reviewed and modified to fit the nuances of a particular transaction by interlineating modifications, striking objectionable language, and/or attaching addendums. Except to the extent modified by the parties, a standard form purchase and sale agreement "means what it says" and will be enforced accordingly. [See Frei v. Davey (2004) 124 CA4th 1506, 1520, 22 CR3d 429, 440-441 (prevailing party attorney fee provision in C.A.R. residential purchase agreement made prelitigation mediation a condition precedent to entitlement to attorney fees recovery)]

• [4:278.6] Review of attached broker forms: Some brokers may attach to preprinted form purchase agreements their own "self-serving" documents, such as releases and indemnifications (¶ 4:461 ff.) of the brokers by the parties. At this stage of the transaction, there generally is no reason for the parties to release or agree to indemnify the brokers. In any event, counsel should thoroughly review any of these documents.

6. [4:279] Compare—Recording Memorandum of Agreement: Upon execution of a formal purchase and sale agreement, some buyers may find it beneficial to record a "memorandum" of the agreement. This puts the "world" on notice of the buyer's right to purchase the property, thus precluding intervening BFP (bona fide purchaser/encumbrancer) rights (see generally, Civ.C. §§ 1213 ff.). [Cf. 87 Ops.Cal.Atty.Gen. 87—"memorandum of lease" that sets forth basic elements of a lease (minimally, the parties' identity, subject property and lease term), refers to a separate unrecorded document that contains complete lease terms, is signed and includes a certificate of acknowledgment by the parties, is recordable]

Recording the "memorandum" avoids the expense of recording the entire agreement and the disclosure of confidential and proprietary information, while at the same time providing constructive notice of the buyer's interest as if the entire agreement had been recorded. [87 Ops.Cal.Atty.Gen. 87; see also Abers v. Rounsavell (2010) 189 CA4th 348, 358, 116 CR3d 860, 867—there is a reason for recording critical documents concerning real property—i.e., interpreting a recorded real property document by its four corners "provides public notice that successors in interest and innocent third parties may need to rely on for centuries"]

On the other hand, such recordation clouds the seller's title and, if the transaction does not close, will usually require the seller to provide a title insurance company with a quitclaim or other recordable form release by the buyer. (As a practical matter, unless the transaction involves a particularly long-term escrow, it is not customary to record a memorandum of agreement.)

[4:279.1 - 4:279.4] Reserved.

7. [4:279.5] Special Rules Governing Home Equity Sales Contracts—Residential Property Purchases Pending Foreclosure: The Home Equity Sales Contract Act (the "Act," Civ.C. §§ 1695-1695.17) governs purchases of residential property during the pendency of a foreclosure proceeding (i.e., at any time after a notice of default has been recorded against a residential real property consisting of one-to-four family dwelling units, one of which is owner-occupied as a principal residence). [See Civ.C. § 1695.1(b); People v. Shetty (2009) 174 CA4th 1488, 1491-1492, 95 CR3d 355, 357]

Purchase agreements subject to the Act must comply with special statutory provisions (¶ 4:279.10 ff.). Significant features of the Act are summarized at ¶ 4:279.6 ff.; for an expanded discussion, see Segura v. McBride (1992) 5 CA4th 1028, 7 CR2d 436.

a. [4:279.6] Purpose of Act: The Legislature enacted this statutory scheme in response to "fraud, deception, and unfair dealing" by purchasers of "home equity" interests from homeowners in foreclosure. "During the time period between the commencement of foreclosure proceedings and the scheduled foreclosure sale date, homeowners in financial distress … are vulnerable to the importunities of equity purchasers who induce homeowners to sell their homes for a small fraction of their fair market values through the use of schemes which often involve oral and written misrepresentations, deceit, intimidation, and other unreasonable commercial practices." [Civ.C. § 1695(a); Spencer v. Marshall (2008) 168 CA4th 783, 793, 85 CR3d 752, 758; see also Capon v. Monopoly Game LLC (2011) 193 CA4th 344, 354, 122 CR3d 536, 544 (recognizing California's express policy of preserving and guarding the "precious asset of home equity, and the social as well as the economic value of homeownership")]

The basic purpose of the Act is to provide homeowners with information necessary to make an "informed and intelligent decision" regarding the sale of their homes to equity purchasers and to prohibit misleading representations and unfair contract terms. [Civ.C. § 1695(d)(1); Hoffman v. Lloyd (9th Cir. 2009) 572 F3d 999, 1001 (applying Calif. law); see also

Schweitzer v. Westminster Investments (2007) 157 CA4th 1195, 1200, 69 CR3d 472, 475—Act helps protect homeowners facing foreclosure from "victimization"]

b. [4:279.7] Nonwaivable: The provisions of the Home Equity Sales Contract Act are nonwaivable; any purported waiver is void and unenforceable. [Civ.C. § 1695.10; see Hoffman v. Lloyd (9th Cir. 2009) 572 F3d 999, 1001-1003—general release of "known and unknown claims" that homeowner signed in unlawful detainer brought by foreclosure purchaser was ineffective as relinquishment of homeowner's right to cancel home equity sales contract under the Act because purchaser failed to give homeowner notice of right to rescind (¶ 4:279.12) in violation of the Act]

c. [4:279.8] "Equity purchasers": An "equity purchaser" within the meaning of the Act is any person who acquires title to a residence in foreclosure, except as noted at ¶ 4:279.9 ff. [Civ.C. § 1695.1; see Spencer v. Marshall (2008) 168 CA4th 783, 794, 85 CR3d 752, 759—Act regulates not only "archetypal predators" (business persons preying on distressed homeowners), but all equity purchasers as defined; Segura v. McBride (1992) 5 CA4th 1028, 1031, 7 CR2d 436, 437—except for persons exempted by statute, "the Act applies to all persons who purchase a residence subject to an outstanding notice of default, regardless of whether the purchaser routinely engages in such transactions, and regardless of whether the distressed buyer initiates the negotiations" (emphasis in original)]

(1) [4:279.9] Exceptions: A purchaser of a residence in foreclosure is not an "equity purchaser" subject to the Act if the purchaser acquires title:

- For the purpose of using the property as a personal residence;
- By deed in lieu of foreclosure of any voluntary lien or encumbrance of record;
- By deed from a trustee acting under a regularly conducted foreclosure sale;
- At any sale of property authorized by statute;
- By court order or judgment; or
- From a spouse (or registered domestic partner; see Fam.C. § 297.5(a)), blood relative or blood relative of a spouse/domestic partner. [Civ.C. § 1695.1(a); see also Capon v. Monopoly Game LLC (2011) 193 CA4th 344, 355, 122 CR3d 536, 544-545—person who acquires title must be same person who intends to use property as residence (corporate alter ego of person who intended to reside in property not only failed to qualify for exception but was, ironically, the "archetypal purchaser targeted by the Act")]

(a) [4:279.9a] Rationale for exceptions: The exceptions appear to reflect a legislative judgment that each presents a lesser concern regarding the "fraud, deception, and unfair dealings" that motivated enactment of the Act. [Capon v. Monopoly Game LLC (2011) 193 CA4th 344, 355, 122 CR3d 536, 544; see also Spencer v. Marshall (2008) 168 CA4th 783, 798, 85 CR3d 752, 762—Act's exceptions are "narrowly construed"]

(2) [4:279.9b] "Representative" acting as equity purchaser's agent/employee: The Act requires an equity purchaser's "representative," deemed to be the purchaser's agent and/or employee, to provide the equity seller with written proof and a written statement under penalty of perjury that the representative (a) has a valid, current California Real Estate Sales License; and (b) is bonded by an admitted surety insurer in an amount equal to twice the fair market value of the real property in foreclosure (but see ¶ 4:279.9c). [See Civ.C. §§ 1695.17 & 1695.15(b) (defining "representative" to include any person who, on behalf of purchaser, solicits, induces or causes property owner to transfer title to residence in foreclosure, or solicits any member of owner's family/household to induce or cause owner to transfer title)]

The written statement also must confirm that the seller has been provided with written proof of the representative's license and bond, and a copy of the statement must be given to all parties prior to transfer of any interest in the property. [Civ.C. § 1695.17]

(a) [4:279.9c] Constitutional limitation—bond requirement: The Act's bond requirement (¶ 4:279.9b) has been declared void for vagueness under the Due Process Clause and unenforceable. [See Schweitzer v. Westminster Investments (2007) 157 CA4th 1195, 1211, 69 CR3d 472, 484-485—Civ.C. § 1695.17 bond requirement provides no guidance as to amount, obligee, beneficiaries, terms and conditions, delivery and acceptance or enforcement mechanisms (i.e., persons of "ordinary intelligence" must guess at what statute requires)]

However, according to Schweitzer, supra, the "remainder of the statutory scheme remains valid" because the bond provisions are severable from the balance of the Act. [Schweitzer v. Westminster Investments, supra, 157 CA4th at 1212, 69 CR3d at 485]

(3) [4:279.9d] Applicable to purchases in Chapter 13 bankruptcy: The Act applies to the purchase of a residence in foreclosure when the debtor (seller) is in Chapter 13 bankruptcy. This is so even though the Bankruptcy Code permits debtors in bankruptcy to convey their property with the trustee's approval. [See Spencer v. Marshall (2008) 168 CA4th 783, 798-799, 85 CR3d 752, 762-763—licensed broker who purchased Chapter 13 seller's residence with trustee's approval still subject to Act]

d. [4:279.10] Form of contract: Every home equity sales contract must be in writing, in letters of a size equal to 10-point bold type, in the same language principally used by the purchaser and seller to negotiate the sale, and must be completed, signed and dated by the seller and buyer prior to execution of any conveyancing instrument. [Civ.C. § 1695.2]

It is the purchaser's responsibility to provide and complete the contract pursuant to the statutory requirements. [Civ.C. § 1695.6(a); Capon v. Monopoly Game LLC (2011) 193 CA4th 344, 352, 122 CR3d 536, 542; People v. Shetty (2009) 174 CA4th 1488, 1491, 95 CR3d 355, 357—statute imposes disclosure and other requirements on home equity sales contracts]

e. [4:279.11] Terms of contract: The contract must contain the parties' entire agreement and, at a minimum, include the following terms (Civ.C. § 1695.3; see Capon v. Monopoly Game LLC (2011) 193 CA4th 344, 352, 122 CR3d 536, 542):

• Purchaser's name, business address and telephone number (Civ.C. § 1695.3(a));

• Address of the subject property (Civ.C. § 1695.3(b));

• The total consideration to be given by the purchaser (Civ.C. § 1695.3(c));

• A complete description of the terms of payment (or other consideration), including any services the purchaser represents will be performed for the seller (before or after the sale) (Civ.C. § 1695.3(d));

• The time at which possession is to be transferred to the purchaser (Civ.C. § 1695.3(e));

• The terms of any rental agreement (Civ.C. § 1695.3(f));

• A notice of the seller's right to cancel (Civ.C. § 1695.5(a), ¶ 4:279.13);

• A notice of cancellation pursuant to Civ.C. § 1695.5(b) (¶ 4:279.14) (Civ.C. § 1695.3(g)); and

• A notice in at least 14-point bold type (printed contracts) or capital letters (typed contracts) and completed with the purchaser's name, immediately above the Civ.C. § 1695.5 notice of right to cancel (¶ 4:279.13), as follows (Civ.C. § 1695.3(h)):

"NOTICE REQUIRED BY CALIFORNIA LAW

Until your right to cancel this contract has ended, … (purchaser) or anyone working for … (purchaser) CANNOT ask you to sign or have you sign any deed or any other document."

(1) [4:279.11a] Limitation on mandatory arbitration: Any provision in a home equity sales contract that attempts or purports to require arbitration of any dispute arising under the Act is void at the seller's option upon grounds that exist for the revocation of contracts generally. [Civ.C. § 1695.16(a)]

f. [4:279.12] Seller's right to cancel ("cooling off period"): In addition to any other right of rescission, the equity seller has the right to cancel the home equity sales contract until the earlier of midnight of the fifth business day following the day on which the seller signs a contract that complies with the Act or 8 a.m. on the day scheduled for the foreclosure sale. [Civ.C. § 1695.4(a)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Further, until the equity purchaser complies with Civ.C. § 1695.5 (requiring a prescribed notice of cancellation rights to be included in the contract, along with a cancellation form, ¶ 4:279.13), the seller retains a right to cancel the contract at any time. [Civ.C. § 1695.5(d); Hoffman v. Lloyd (9th Cir. 2009) 572 F3d 999, 1001 (applying Calif. law)]

(1) [4:279.13] Notice of cancellation rights in sales contract: The sales contract must contain "in immediate proximity" to the space reserved for the seller's signature a "conspicuous statement" in minimum 12-point bold type (printed contracts) or capital letters (typed contracts) a notice of the seller's right to cancel as follows:

> "You may cancel this contract for the sale of your house without any penalty or obligation at any time before … (date and time). See the attached notice of cancellation form for an explanation of this right." [Civ.C. § 1695.5(a)—purchaser "shall accurately enter the date and time of day on which the rescission right ends"]

However, notwithstanding an equity buyer's failure to comply with the § 1695.5(a) notice of cancellation requirements (above), the Act does not provide grounds for rescinding a transaction after the deed is recorded. [Schweitzer v. Westminster Investments (2007) 157 CA4th 1195, 1213, 69 CR3d 472, 486]

(2) [4:279.14] Notice of cancellation form to be attached to contract: Also, the contract must be accompanied by a "Notice of Cancellation" form as prescribed by Civ.C. § 1695.5(b). [See Civ.C. § 1695.5(b)]

As stated, the seller retains a right to cancel until the purchaser complies with Civ.C. § 1695.5. [Civ.C. § 1695.5(d)]

(3) [4:279.15] How cancellation effected: Cancellation of the contract occurs when the seller personally delivers written notice of cancellation to the address specified in the contract or sends a telegram indicating cancellation to that address. [Civ.C. § 1695.4(b)]

The notice of cancellation need not be in the form provided with the contract (Civ.C. § 1695.5(b), ¶ 14:279.14); it is effective so long as it indicates the seller's intention not to be bound by the contract. [Civ.C. § 1695.4(c)]

Within 10 days after receipt of the notice of cancellation, the purchaser must return (without condition) the original contract and any other documents signed by the seller. [Civ.C. § 1695.6(c)]

g. Prohibited acts by purchaser

(1) [4:279.16] During "cooling off period": Until expiration of the time allowed for cancellation of the contract (¶ 4:279.11), the purchaser cannot do any of the following (Civ.C. § 1695.6(b)):

• Accept from the seller (or induce the seller to execute) any instrument conveying an interest in the residence;

• Record with the county recorder any document signed by the equity seller;

• Transfer or encumber (or purport to transfer or encumber) any interest in the residence to any third party (except a transfer to a bona fide purchaser or encumbrancer for value who is without notice of a violation of the Act and was without knowledge that the property was otherwise subject to the Act); or

• Pay the seller any consideration. [Civ.C. § 1695.6(b)]

(2) [4:279.17] Untrue/misleading statements: In addition, the purchaser is prohibited from making any untrue or misleading statements regarding:

• the value of the residence in foreclosure;

• the amount of proceeds the seller will receive after foreclosure;

• any contract term;

• the seller's rights or obligations arising out of the sale transaction;

• the nature of any document the purchaser induces the seller to sign; or

• "any other untrue or misleading statement concerning the sale …" [Civ.C. § 1695.6(d)]

(3) [4:279.18] Encumbering residence where seller has option to repurchase: If the purchaser purports to hold title through an instrument that appears to be an absolute conveyance and the seller reserves or is given by the purchaser an option to repurchase the residence, the purchaser cannot encumber or grant any interest in the property to any other person without the seller's written consent. [See Civ.C. § 1695.6(e)]

(But this provision does not preclude the application of Civ.C. § 1695.6(b)(3), which protects the rights of a bona fide purchaser or encumbrancer for value. See Civ.C. § 1695.6(e); and ¶ 4:279.16.)

[4:279.19 - 4:279.24] Reserved.

h. Consequences of purchaser's violation

(1) [4:279.25] Criminal penalties (fines/imprisonment): A purchaser convicted for violating Civ.C. § 1695.6 (regarding prohibited acts, ¶ 4:279.16 ff.), or for engaging in any practice that operates as a fraud or deceit upon the seller, shall be fined up to $25,000 and/or imprisoned in county jail for up to one year or in state prison for each violation. [Civ.C. § 1695.8; see also People v. Shetty (2009) 174 CA4th 1488, 1491-1492, 95 CR3d 355, 357—§ 1695.8, being an alternative felony misdemeanor statute, is subject to same statute of limitations applicable to felony violations (4 years for felony charges involving fraud)]

(2) [4:279.26] Damages liability to seller: Additionally, for a violation of Civ.C. § 1695.6 (regarding prohibited acts) or Civ.C. § 1695.13 (prohibition on taking "unconscionable advantage" of the property owner in foreclosure), the seller may bring a civil action against the purchaser for damages or equitable relief. The purchaser is liable for the seller's actual damages, plus reasonable attorney fees and costs; and is also exposed to exemplary (punitive) damages. [See Civ.C. § 1695.7—4-year statute of limitations; Capon v. Monopoly Game LLC (2011) 193 CA4th 344, 358, 122 CR3d 536, 547—seller entitled to restoration of home equity value at or near sale date (actual damages), plus reasonable attorney fees and costs]

(a) [4:279.27] Damages caused by purchaser's "representative": The purchaser also is liable for all damages caused by the purchaser's "representative" (¶ 4:279.9b). [Civ.C. § 1695.15(a)]

Any provision in the sales contract that limits a purchaser's liability under Civ.C. § 1695.15 is void, renders the entire contract void at the seller's option, and exposes the purchaser to liability for all damages proximately caused thereby. [See Civ.C. § 1695.16(a)]

(3) [4:279.28] Other rights, remedies and penalties: The Act's criminal penalties and civil remedies are in addition to any other rights, remedies and penalties provided by law. [Civ.C. § 1695.9]

[4:280] This section discusses the various essential and nonessential (optional) terms to be included in a purchase and sale agreement. Most of the provisions discussed at ¶ 4:281 ff. are included in the Purchase and Sale Agreement reproduced at the close of this Chapter as Form 4:H.

Cross-refer—home equity sales contracts: Certain statutory terms and conditions must be included in contracts to purchase a residential property pending foreclosure ("home equity sales contracts" governed by Civ.C. § 1695 et seq.). These requirements are separately discussed at ¶ 4:279.5 ff.

1. Dates

a. [4:281] Date of contract: The contract should bear a specific date, even if designated only "for reference (or identification) purposes" and even though the parties may actually sign it on a different date (or dates). (It is important to have a contract date both for purposes of identifying the document and as evidence of the date the contract was entered into.)

b. [4:282] Performance deadlines: To avoid confusion or dispute, deadlines for the performance of various acts under the agreement should be stated in terms of specific dates. Thus, whenever possible, a fixed calendar deadline should be used instead of a specified number of days. For example, instead of providing that "escrow shall close 45 days after all parties have deposited signed escrow instructions with the escrow holder," indicate a specific date certain for closing ("escrow shall close by … , …").

(1) [4:282.1] Compare—reasonable where agreement silent: If the agreement is silent concerning the time for performance, a "reasonable time" will be implied. [Civ.C. § 1657; Patel v. Liebermensch (2008) 45 C4th 344, 346, 351, 886 CR3d 366, 368, 371—Civ.C. § 1657 applies insofar as escrow period effectively determines time of payment (i.e., purchase price is deemed payable upon delivery of deed); see also Conservatorship & Estate of Buchenau (2011) 196 CA4th 1031,

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

1039, 127 CR3d 109, 115—where no "time of essence" clause (¶ 4:535), "reasonable time" may be allowed for performing escrow conditions even after scheduled closing date has passed (¶ 4:628.4); see further discussion at ¶ 11:56 ff.]

A reasonable time will not be implied, however, simply because the deadline stated in the agreement is indefinite. [Resolution Trust Corp. v. First American Bank (9th Cir. 1998) 155 F3d 1126, 1128 (applying Calif. law)—agreement stating act should be done "as soon as possible" was not silent as to time for performance and thus did not trigger Civ.C. § 1657 implied "reasonable time"]

(2) [4:282.2] Cross-refer—"time of essence" clause: If a deadline for performance is intended to be a material term of the contract (the breach of which might excuse the other party's performance), express "time is of the essence" language should be included. See discussion at ¶ 4:535 ff.

c. [4:283] Holidays and weekends: When any act of performance of a "secular nature" falls on a weekend or holiday, it may be performed on the next business day. [Civ.C. § 11]

• [4:283.1] Comment: This statutory provision becomes important should the parties (or their attorneys) erroneously pick a closing date (and/or other deadlines for performance of certain contract obligations) that lands on a weekend or legal holiday. Of course, the most prudent approach is always to check your calendar to make certain the selected closing date is one on which banks, title insurance companies and the county recorder's offices are open.

2. [4:284] Recitals: Opening recitals, typically found in various contracts, are not essential. But they are often helpful (a) as an introduction or summary of the transaction, making the document more readable and understandable; (b) as a vehicle for a definitional section, giving the reader a preliminary dictionary of various terms used in the agreement (see ¶ 4:552); and (c) to highlight and emphasize important or critical terms. However, to the extent recitals contain important terms, they should expressly be incorporated as part of the agreement (see ¶ 4:554). (See also Ev.C. § 622—"facts recited in a written instrument are conclusively deemed to be true as between the parties thereto.")

3. [4:285] Covenant to Buy and Sell: The heart of the agreement is, of course, the companion obligations to sell and buy real property. The contract should therefore contain a specific covenant by the seller to sell the property and a corresponding covenant by the buyer to purchase the property.

4. [4:286] Property Description: The agreement should identify all property to be conveyed (the subject realty, fixtures and tangible and intangible personal property, as the case may be; ¶ 4:20 ff.). To ensure an enforceable contract, however, the realty must be adequately described.

A legal description is advisable, as it is the most precise. But legal descriptions frequently are not readily available at the time a purchase agreement is executed; and the agreement is valid even though lacking a legal description (see ¶ 4:270.7).

➪ [4:286.1] PRACTICE POINTER: When a legal description is not yet available, the written agreement should describe the property as explicitly as possible—whether by street address, approximate acreage or reference to immediately adjacent property—so as not to run afoul of the statute of frauds (omitted essential term cannot be supplied by parol evidence, ¶ 4:270 ff.). When a correct legal description is obtained, the parties should approve and confirm it in writing. Although not essential, the contract may include a clause that the parties will execute an exhibit (or amendment) upon obtaining the complete legal description.

5. [4:287] Purchase Price: The purchase price is, of course, an essential term. The agreement must indicate both the amount and the method of payment, with or without financing.

a. Amount

(1) [4:287.1] Fixed price: A purchase and sale for a fixed price need simply be stated by a sum certain and the date on which payment is due.

(2) [4:287.2] Flexible price: Sometimes the price is subject to computation, is unknown, or is made subject to conditions; i.e., the purchase price can be tied to the amount of acreage, the number of subdivided lots, the date of closing, or any other variable. The contract is enforceable so long as the price is certain or reasonably capable of being made certain by reference to the terms of the contract (see ¶ 4:270.6).

(a) Application

• [4:287.3] It is appropriate to agree upon a price per acre or per square foot of the property, so long as there is an objective, independent method for determining the precise size before the closing. Similarly, the total purchase price may be left for future calculation after deducting certain improvement costs to be agreed upon, so long as the contract provides an objective basis for determining those costs. [See Larwin-Southern Calif., Inc. v. JGB Invest. Co., Inc. (1979) 101 CA3d 626, 642-644, 162 CR 52, 61-62]

• [4:287.4] If the property is to become the subject of a new subdivision before the closing, the buyer may only be willing to pay a fixed amount per subdivided lot (or condominium) that is actually approved by the necessary governmental entities as of the closing date (see Larwin-Southern Calif., Inc. v. JGB Invest. Co., Inc. (1979) 101 CA3d 626, 642, 162 CR 52, 61). In such case, the seller may still want to provide for a minimum (and the buyer a maximum) purchase price, regardless of the actual number of units or lots approved.

• [4:287.5] Or, if the buyer is given the option of closing earlier (or later) than the scheduled closing date, the parties may want to include a provision adjusting the price accordingly (typically upward if the closing date is extended and downward if the closing occurs sooner).

➪ [4:287.6] PRACTICE POINTER: When a "flexible" purchase price is used, make certain that the exact price can be ascertained by an objective standard stated in the contract; otherwise, an essential term may be missing, rendering the contract vulnerable to a statute of frauds defense (¶ 4:270 ff.) or otherwise not specifically enforceable because fatally vague and uncertain.

b. Payment of purchase price

(1) [4:288] All cash or cash plus note: Unless the seller is providing financing, the agreement should state that the purchase price is to be paid "all in cash." In a seller-financed transaction, the purchase price should be reflected as an aggregate, with two components: the amount of the cash payment and the amount of the promissory note.

• [4:288.1] Comment: Many purchase agreements provide that the price will be paid partly in cash and partly "by a loan" (from a third party). This is actually incorrect since it does not matter to the seller that the buyer is procuring funds from a lender—the payment is still all cash to the seller.

(2) [4:289] Deposits: The buyer customarily makes a cash deposit upon execution of the contract (commonly referred to as a "good faith deposit"), which is usually held in escrow until the closing. However, most purchase agreements provide for a contingency period during which the buyer conducts inspections, investigations and various so-called "due diligence"; therefore, the deposit made upon signing is often minimal, and seller's counsel should consider requiring an increase in the deposit upon expiration of the contingency period.

(In residential transactions, the total deposit is usually limited to 3% of the purchase price, since that is generally the maximum permissible amount of liquidated damages; see ¶ 4:321.)

(a) [4:290] "Downpayment" distinguished: A "downpayment" is popularly used to describe that portion of the purchase price that is not procured from a loan. The buyer's cash deposit is not itself the "downpayment," although it becomes part of the downpayment and applies toward the purchase price.

➪ [4:291] PRACTICE POINTER: To protect the buyer's interests, the agreement should clearly state that the deposit is fully refundable during the "due diligence" period.

It should also designate whether the deposit is to be placed in an interest-bearing account and, if so, to whom the interest is to be credited (see ¶ 4:599 ff. regarding escrow holder's obligations).

(b) [4:291.1] Transfer of title: In the absence of escrow instructions to the contrary, title to a deposit vests in the seller when the seller accepts the underlying contract. [See Rutherford Holdings, LLC v. Plaza Del Rey (2014) 223 CA4th 221, 233-234, 166 CR3d 864, 874—deposit tendered directly to mobile home park vendor rather than placed in escrow resulted in transfer of title to vendor after sale did not close]

(3) [4:292] Payments outside escrow: There are two schools of thought as to whether any payments toward the purchase price should be made directly to the seller outside of escrow before the closing. Sellers contend that their property is being tied up during the term of the contract and (at least after the contingency period expires) the seller should therefore be entitled to an advance on the purchase price. Buyers, on the other hand, typically argue there is no reason to pay anything directly to the seller since the seller has not performed (i.e., seller has not yet conveyed title or delivered possession).

Conventional wisdom probably favors the buyer's position. In any event, however, monies released to the seller prior to closing should be deemed an "advance"; and the seller's obligation to repay (or credit the amount against the purchase price) should be secured by a deed of trust on the property in favor of the buyer. (The buyer should also obtain a lender's policy of title insurance.) In this manner, the buyer will (a) have secured the buyer's advance to the seller, and (b) have the threat of foreclosure hanging over the seller if the seller refuses to close. Such a deed of trust also inhibits the seller from further encumbering the property prior to closing.

(4) [4:293] Existing financing: The parties may wish to have the buyer take over existing financing on the property. Because the precise amount of the outstanding balance of existing financing may not be known to the parties at the time the purchase agreement is signed (or may change by reason of the seller's interim installment payments before the closing date), the purchase agreement should clarify that the cash portion of the purchase price will be adjusted depending on the amount of the outstanding balance of the loan as of the closing date.

(a) [4:294] Advantages of existing financing: The buyer's taking over existing financing offers these advantages:

• It may permit the seller to avoid prepayment penalties (which savings can be shared with the buyer);

• The terms of the existing financing may be more favorable than then-existing mortgage loan rates;

• The buyer may avoid the delay and cost in obtaining a new loan (see ¶ 6:314 ff. & 6:325 ff.).

(b) [4:295] "Subject to" vs. "assumption of" existing financing: The buyer may purchase the property "subject to" existing financing or may specifically "assume" existing financing. These are two completely different concepts and are frequently confused (see detailed discussion at ¶ 6:313 ff. & 6:325 ff.):

1) [4:296] "Subject to": When property is purchased "subject to" existing financing, the buyer makes no arrangements with the existing lender to contractually take over the loan. The loan still remains a lien against the property and the buyer simply starts making payments to the existing lender after the closing. Most significantly, the buyer has no independent liability to the lender since not in any contractual relationship with the lender. [Cornelison v. Kornbluth (1975) 15 C3d 590, 596-597, 125 CR 557, 561]

➪ [4:297] PRACTICE POINTER: The absence of personal liability to the lender may make the "subject to" alternative attractive to buyers. But it leaves the seller (as the original contracting borrower) open to potential residual liability on the loan. At a minimum, the seller risks a negative impact on the seller's credit rating should the buyer fail to make loan payments.

Moreover, many trust deeds in favor of institutional lenders contain a "due-on-sale" clause (see ¶ 6:388 ff.). Such a clause permits the lender to accelerate the loan upon a sale of the encumbered property to a new party unless the lender gives specific written approval of the buyer. While it is not illegal to purchase property subject to an existing deed of trust that contains a due-on-sale clause, the buyer runs the risk that the loan will be accelerated in the event the lender discovers the transfer.

2) [4:298] Assumption: Many existing loans may be specifically assumed by the buyer upon the lender's approval of the buyer's credit and the payment of a fee. A buyer's assumption is subject to the statute of frauds and, therefore, must be in writing. [Civ.C. § 1624(a)(6), ¶ 6:323]

Unlike the "subject to" transaction (¶ 4:296), an assumption renders the buyer contractually liable to the lender. At the same time, the seller also remains liable as a "surety." [Birkhofer v. Krumm (1935) 4 CA2d 43, 48-49, 40 P2d 553, 556; see also Civ.C. § 2832 re positions of sureties]

Of course, the obligations of the seller and assuming purchaser are subject to antideficiency laws. (See ¶ 6:510 ff.)

➪ [4:299] PRACTICE POINTER: If the buyer desires to assume the loan, the purchase agreement should specify who is obligated to pay the assumption fee (if any).

➪ [4:300] PRACTICE POINTER: Buyers and sellers often provide that the buyer will "assume" an existing loan, but do not contemplate what happens should the lender refuse to give its approval. If the buyer cannot assume the loan, the parties should have negotiated whether (i) the buyer nonetheless remains obligated to purchase the property and pay off the existing financing (together with any prepayment penalty), or (ii) the buyer can, at its election, terminate the purchase agreement. In either event, the buyer should, at a minimum, be required to use good faith efforts to make application to assume the existing financing.

3) [4:301] Beneficiary statement: In either case (buyer assuming existing financing or taking subject to existing financing), a "beneficiary statement" (or other form of "estoppel certificate") should be obtained from the existing lender. [Civ.C. § 2943]

The owner (seller) and certain other "entitled persons" (see Civ.C. § 2943(a)(4)) may compel a lender to deliver a written statement providing the following information about the loan:

• The amount of the unpaid loan balance and the interest rate;

• The amount of overdue installments (principal and/or interest);

• The amount of periodic payments;

• The date on which the obligation matures;

• The date to which real property taxes and special assessments have been paid to the extent known by the lender;

• The amount of hazard insurance in effect and the term and premium therefor to the extent known by the lender;

• The amount in any impound account for the payment of property taxes and insurance premiums;

• The nature and, if known, the amount of any additional charges, costs or expenses paid or incurred by the lender that have become a lien on the property; and

• Whether the secured obligation may be transferred to a new borrower. [See Civ.C. § 2943(a)(2)]

(The above information is statutorily-required; but most lenders will supply additional information if requested.)

a) [4:302] Impact: A beneficiary statement "may be relied upon by the entitled person or his or her authorized agent in accordance with its terms …" [Civ.C. § 2943(d)(1)] Thus, a current beneficiary statement may be the basis upon which the parties make their allocations at the closing between the cash portion of the purchase price and the amount of the then-existing financing.

However, a beneficiary statement does not itself amount to a representation that may be relied upon as establishing the amount necessary to pay off the secured obligation. For that purpose, the parties must request a payoff demand statement (see ¶ 4:304.1 ff.). [Civ.C. § 2943(d)(1)]

b) [4:303] Time-frame: The beneficiary statement must be provided by the trust deed beneficiary within 21 days after written request therefor. [Civ.C. § 2943(b) & (e)(4); Venhaus v. Shultz (2007) 155 CA4th 1072, 1080, 66 CR3d 432, 437—trust deed holder's failure to timely provide property owner with beneficiary statement deemed sufficiently wrongful to support negligent interference with prospective economic relations claim]

➪ [4:304] PRACTICE POINTER: Because it often takes lenders more than 21 days to respond (particularly private lenders), a beneficiary statement is one of the first matters that should be pursued after execution of the purchase agreement.

If it is impossible to obtain a beneficiary statement by the closing date, the buyer may wish to rely on the seller's representation and warranty as to the outstanding balance of existing financing (¶ 4:450).

c) [4:304.1] "Payoff demand statement" distinguished; significance: "Entitled persons" (including the obligor and authorized escrow holders; see Civ.C. § 2943(a)(4)) also have the right, upon written request, to be furnished with the secured lender's "payoff demand statement." [Civ.C. § 2943(c)—payoff demand statement to be delivered within 21 days of receipt of request]

The request for and delivery of a payoff demand statement typically happens through escrow (¶ 4:604). The statement is significant because, unlike a beneficiary statement (¶ 4:301 ff.), it may be relied upon by the borrower "for the purpose of establishing the amount necessary to pay the [secured] obligation in full." [Civ.C. § 2943(d)(1) (emphasis added); California Nat'l Bank v. Havis (2004) 120 CA4th 1122, 1134-1135, 16 CR3d 245, 253—

lender's letter provided to escrow agent stating it had received payoff funds, but not informing borrower of amount necessary to satisfy loan, could not be relied upon as basis for extinguishing lender's lien on property]

In effect, therefore, Civ.C. § 2943(d) puts the responsibility for calculating the amount needed to satisfy the secured loan on the lender (trust deed beneficiary/mortgagee)—not the debtor (trustor/mortgagor). [Cathay Bank v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1996) 46 CA4th 266, 271, 53 CR2d 595, 598]

In this regard, the lender may amend a payoff demand statement that sets forth incomplete or erroneous information. If notice of any such amendment is not given in writing, a written amendment must be delivered to the "entitled person" or their authorized agent no later than the next business day after notification. [Civ.C. § 2943(d)(2); California Nat'l Bank v. Havis (2004) 120 CA4th 1122, 1136, 16 CR3d 245, 255—lender's declaration purportedly memorializing oral amendment to letter containing payoff information improperly excluded in summary judgment proceeding because letter not payoff demand statement (see above) and Civ.C. § 2943(d)(2) (requiring amendment to be in writing) is not a rule of evidence under which declaration testimony could be excluded]

1/ [4:304.2] "Reliance" date: In connection with a voluntary transaction, the statement may be relied upon as of the earlier of the (i) close of escrow, (ii) transfer of title, or (iii) recordation of a lien. [Civ.C. § 2943(d)(3)(A)]

With regard to foreclosure transactions, the statement may be relied upon as of the date of acceptance of the "last and highest bid" at the foreclosure sale. [Civ.C. § 2943(d)(3)(B)]

2/ [4:304.3] Result if payoff demand statement understated: Amounts that were due but not included in the payoff demand statement (or any amended statement, see ¶ 4:304.1) remain recoverable by the lender pursuant to the original note … but only as an unsecured obligation. [Civ.C. § 2943(d)(3)]

In other words, amounts erroneously omitted from the payoff demand statement are not secured by the deed of trust after the entitled person changes their position in reliance on the statement (e.g., by closing escrow and paying off the lender's demand on the assumption it completely discharges the note). [See Cathay Bank v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1996) 46 CA4th 266, 271, 53 CR2d 595, 598]

[4:304.4] Reserved.

d) [4:304.5] Ambiguous requests for statement treated as request for payoff demand statement: Where a request for a Civ.C. § 2943 statement does not specify a beneficiary statement or payoff demand statement, the trust deed beneficiary (lender) "shall treat the request as a request for a payoff demand statement." [Civ.C. § 2943(e)(1)]

e) [4:304.6] Maximum fee: The lender may charge a maximum $30 fee for furnishing a beneficiary statement or payoff demand statement. [Civ.C. § 2943(e)(6) (inapplicable to mortgages or deeds of trust insured by Federal Housing Administrator or guaranteed by Administrator of Veterans Affairs)]

f) [4:304.7] Penalty for failure to provide statement: Willful failure to prepare and deliver a beneficiary statement or payoff demand statement within 21 days after receipt of written request therefor renders the beneficiary (lender) liable to the "entitled person" for (i) all damages the entitled person may suffer, plus (ii) a $300 penalty (whether or not the entitled person sustains actual damages). [See Civ.C. § 2943(e)(4)—"willful" failure means intentional noncompliance with Civ.C. § 2943 "without just cause or excuse"]

6. [4:305] Tax Allocations: For tax purposes, it is sometimes advantageous to allocate the property (and therefore the purchase price) between personal and real property. Personal property may occasionally be depreciated faster than real property.

On the other hand, there may be other reasons why more of the purchase price should be allocated to the real property. This is essentially a tax question; but counsel should be aware of the following issues:

a. [4:306] Documentary transfer tax: A "documentary transfer tax" (payable to the County Tax Assessor) is an excise tax imposed by counties and some municipalities in connection with the recordation of deeds or other documents evidencing transfers of ownership of real property within the county or municipality. [See Rev. & Tax.C. § 11911; 926 North Ardmore Ave., LLC v. County of Los Angeles (2017) 3 C5th 319, 332, 219 CR3d 695, 704, fn. 13—transfer tax is excise tax on privilege of conveying real property by means of written instrument; see also Ashford Hospitality v. City & County of San Francisco (2021) 61 CA5th 498, 505-509, 275 CR3d 672, 677-680—city transfer tax with tiered or graduated rates did not violate U.S. Constitution's Equal Protection Clause; Fielder v. City of Los Angeles (1993) 14 CA4th 137, 142, 146, 17 CR2d 630, 633,

635—upholding constitutionality of Los Angeles City ordinance imposing transfer tax of $2.25 for each $500 of purchase price for real property sold and rejecting state law preemption challenge thereto]

The documentary transfer tax rate is lower than the personal property sales tax rate. [See Rev. & Tax.C. § 11911]

(1) [4:306a] Taxable transfers; "realty sold": Counties and municipalities are authorized to impose documentary transfer taxes when there is "realty sold." [Rev. & Tax.C. § 11911(a)]

"Realty sold" is not defined in Civ.C. § 11911 (above), so courts look to the "sufficiently similar" phrase "change in ownership" (Rev. & Tax.C. § 60 et seq.; ¶ 13:66 ff.) to determine whether a particular transaction qualifies as "realty sold." [731 Market Street Owner, LLC v. City & County of San Francisco (2020) 50 CA5th 937, 944-945, 264 CR3d 490, 495—after sale and transfer of underlying property, city and county could not impose transfer tax on commercial lease with remaining term of more than 35 years because no change occurred in leasehold's ownership]

(2) [4:306.1] Based on "consideration or value": Documentary transfer taxes may be based either on consideration (purchase price) or property value. [See Rev. & Tax.C. § 11911; Brown v. County of Los Angeles (1999) 72 CA4th 665, 668, 85 CR2d 414, 415—no authority to base tax on amount of unpaid debt]

(a) [4:306.2] "Consideration" as basis: The transfer tax must be based upon the purchase price (consideration) where that amount is definite or may be definitely determined. [Brown v. County of Los Angeles (1999) 72 CA4th 665, 668-669, 85 CR2d 414, 415-416]

(b) [4:306.3] "Value" as basis: On the other hand, where the purchase price (consideration) is indefinite or contingent on future occurrences, the tax may be based upon the property's net value. [Brown v. County of Los Angeles (1999) 72 CA4th 665, 669, 85 CR2d 414, 416]

1) [4:306.4] Excluding value of personal property: But the portion of the property's "value" representing personal property and/or intangible assets must be excluded. [County of Los Angeles v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (2003) 112 CA4th 1108, 1122, 5 CR3d 575, 586-587]

➪ [4:306.5] PRACTICE POINTER: Third parties can determine the purchase price of property by the amount of documentary transfer tax set forth on the face of the recorded deed. Hence, your client may wish to file a separate, unrecorded statement evidencing the documentary transfer tax paid. Title companies can provide you with the appropriate form.

[4:306.6 - 4:306.9] Reserved.

(3) [4:306.10] Statutory exemptions: The statutes authorizing local imposition of a documentary transfer tax also provide numerous exemptions from the tax (Rev. & Tax.C. §§ 11921-11930). Notably, the federal government and its agencies, and any state government or "political subdivision" thereof, are exempt from paying the tax when acquiring title to real property. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 11922; see 85 Ops.Cal.Atty.Gen. 235—exempt "political subdivision" includes cities]

(4) [4:306.11] Legal entity transfers: Generally, the transfer of an interest in a legal entity does not result in a change in ownership of the entity's real property (Rev. & Tax.C. § 64(a)). Under Rev. & Tax.C. § 11911, however, a transfer tax may be imposed whenever the transfer results in a change in ownership of real property within the meaning of Rev. & Tax.C. § 64(c) or (d) (distinguishing between "true" changes in ownership and "paper" ones). This is so provided there is a written instrument reflecting a sale of the property for consideration. [See 926 North Ardmore Ave., LLC v. County of Los Angeles (2017) 3 C5th 319, 338, 219 CR3d 695, 700, 709 (transfer tax upheld)—written instruments not only reflected transfer of beneficial ownership in building, but other evidence demonstrated two family member trusts paid another family member's subtrusts for interests acquired in building, constituting consideration for sale]

b. [4:307] Real property tax assessment: Real property taxes are based on the purchase price of the property (¶ 13:65). Allocating a low number to the real property can thus keep the real property tax down.

c. [4:308] Tax basis: On the other hand, allocating a low number to the real property reduces the tax basis of the property for income tax purposes (¶ 13:4 ff.). In turn, when the property is sold, the taxable gain (income tax due in respect of the sale) will be higher (¶ 13:301 ff.).

Cross-refer: For a comprehensive treatment of tax issues in real property purchase and sale transactions, see Ch. 13.

7. [4:310] Liquidated Damages: To avoid uncertainty and litigation should a breach occur, the parties may wish to add a liquidated damages provision fixing the amount of damages in advance. [See Allen v. Smith (2002) 94 CA4th 1270, 1278, 114 CR2d 898, 903; El Centro Mall, LLC v. Payless Shoesource, Inc. (2009) 174 CA4th 58, 63, 94 CR3d 43, 47—objective is to stipulate to "pre-estimate of damages" so parties can know with reasonable certainty extent of liability in event of breach]

Liquidated damages clauses may be included for either party's benefit. However, real property transactions typically liquidate only the seller's damages.

a. Pros and cons for seller

(1) [4:311] Advantages: For the buyer's breach of an agreement to purchase real property, the seller is entitled to recover the "excess, if any, of the amount which would have been due to the seller under the contract over the value of the property to him or her, consequential damages according to proof, and interest." [Civ.C. § 3307] This is basically the difference between the fair market value of the property on the scheduled closing date and the contract price—i.e., a "benefit of the bargain" measure of recovery (see detailed discussion at ¶ 11:101 ff.). [Kuish v. Smith (2010) 181 CA4th 1419, 1425-1426, 105 CR3d 475, 480 (also noting considerations of good and bad faith are not required in determining seller's damages)]

However, if the contract includes a valid liquidated damages provision (in an amount sufficient to compensate the seller), the seller's lawsuit for buyer's breach will be much simpler: The seller still must prove a breach, but will not have to obtain appraisals (¶ 6:650 ff.) or introduce other proof of damages. Moreover, in an appreciating market, the seller will be entitled to receive liquidated damages and perhaps still sell the property to a new buyer for an even higher price … a result not possible under Civ.C. § 3307 (of course, the seller will no longer be entitled to Civ.C. § 3307 "benefit of the bargain" damages). [See Kuish v. Smith, supra, 181 CA4th at 1426, 105 CR3d at 480]

(2) [4:312] Disadvantages: From the seller's perspective, there are two potential disadvantages to a liquidated damages provision: (a) In a depreciating market, the seller's actual damages could exceed the agreedupon liquidated amount (but even then, such a clause may still be advantageous because it eliminates the cost and uncertainty of proving damages in litigation); and (b) in residential transactions, liquidated damages generally cannot exceed 3% of the purchase price (¶ 4:321), whereas there is no ceiling on the recovery of nonliquidated damages (Civ.C. § 3307).

b. Pros and cons for buyer

(1) [4:313] Advantage: In agreeing to liquidated damages payable to the seller, buyers are able to fix the amount of their "downside" exposure. (Conceptually, liquidated damages are similar to option payments: As with an option to purchase, the buyer is entitled to tie up the property for a certain period of time, but may "walk away" from the deal for the price of the option payments. See Ch. 8 for a thorough discussion of options.)

(2) [4:314] Disadvantages: A disadvantage, of course, is that the buyer will be required to pay the liquidated damages even if the property has appreciated in value from the time the contract price was set. Also, the seller's burden in the event of a lawsuit will be far simpler, because the seller will not have to prove damages suffered (¶ 4:311); and when the seller's lawsuit is easier, it is more likely the seller will bring one. (Sellers who have to prove both breach and damages may be less inclined to sue at all.)

c. Validity

(1) [4:315] Generally valid unless "unreasonable": Generally, a liquidated damages provision is valid unless the contesting party shows the provision was "unreasonable under the circumstances existing at the time the contract was made." [Civ.C. § 1671(b); see Civ.C. § 1676—provisions for liquidated damages to seller if buyer breaches real property purchase agreement are valid subject to Civ.C. §§ 1671 and 1677 (¶ 4:315.1 ff.); Vitatech Int'l, Inc. v. Sporn (2017) 16 CA5th 796, 805, 224 CR3d 691, 698; Allen v. Smith (2002) 94 CA4th 1270, 1278, 114 CR2d 898, 903; see also Hong v. Somerset Assocs. (1984) 161 CA3d 111, 112, 207 CR 597, 598—$25,000 liquidated damages for buyer's breach of agreement to purchase $1,320,000 apartment complex held reasonable under circumstances]

(a) [4:315.1] Presumption of validity: Civ.C. § 1671(b) (¶ 4:315) effectively states a presumption of validity, placing the burden on the party who seeks invalidation to show the liquidated damages clause was unreasonable when the contract was executed. [Californians For Population Stabilization v. Hewlett-Packard Co. (1997) 58 CA4th 273, 288, 67 CR2d

621, 629 (abrogated on other grounds by Cortez v. Purolator Air Filtration Products Co. (2000) 23 C4th 163, 171-173, 96 CR2d 518, 524); see also Krechuniak v. Noorzoy (2017) 11 CA5th 713, 721, 217 CR3d 740, 747; El Centro Mall, LLC v. Payless Shoesource, Inc. (2009) 174 CA4th 58, 63, 94 CR3d 43, 46]

(Amounts approximating 2% of the purchase price as liquidated damages have been deemed "standard" in commercial real estate transactions. See Hong v. Somerset Assocs. (1984) 161 CA3d 111, 116, 207 CR 597, 600, fn. 7.)

(b) [4:316] Reasonableness determination: Civ.C. § 1671(b) gives contracting parties considerable leeway in liquidating damages for a breach. In litigation over the validity of the provision, all circumstances existing at the time the contract was executed are considered. [See Cal. Law Rev. Comm'n comment to West's Ann. Civ.C. § 1671; Californians For Population Stabilization v. Hewlett-Packard Co. (1997) 58 CA4th 273, 288, 67 CR2d 621, 629 (abrogated on other grounds by Cortez v. Purolator Air Filtration Products Co. (2000) 23 C4th 163, 171-173, 96 CR2d 518, 524); Roodenburg v. Pavestone Co., L.P. (2009) 171 CA4th 185, 195, 89 CR3d 558, 566; El Centro Mall, LLC v. Payless Shoesource, Inc. (2009) 174 CA4th 58, 63, 94 CR3d 43, 46]

The factors generally considered include:

- the relationship that the liquidated damages bear to the range of harm that reasonably could be anticipated at the time of the making of the contract (see ¶ 4:316.6);
- the parties' relative bargaining power;
- whether the parties were represented by counsel when the contract was made;
- the parties' anticipation that proof of actual damages would be costly or inconvenient;
- the difficulty of proving causation and foreseeability; and
- whether the liquidated damages clause is included in a form contract (and thus not the product of negotiation). [Cal. Law Rev. Comm'n comment to West's Ann. Civ.C. § 1671; Weber, Lipshie & Co. v. Christian (1997) 52 CA4th 645, 654-655, 60 CR2d 677, 681-682; see also El Centro Mall, LLC v. Payless Shoesource, Inc., supra, 178 CA4th at 63, 94 CR3d at 46-47—liquidated damages amount must represent "reasonable endeavor" by parties to estimate fair average compensation for any loss sustained (so-called "reasonable endeavor test")]

In the context of a real property purchase agreement, courts evaluating reasonableness consider, among other things, the amount of the liquidated damages in relation to the total purchase price, how long the seller commits to taking the property off the market, what other obligations the seller agrees to before the closing date, and the parties' relative sophistication. [See Hong v. Somerset Assocs. (1984) 161 CA3d 111, 116, 207 CR 597, 600]

1) [4:316.1] Damages actually suffered irrelevant: Since "reasonableness" is judged as of the time the contract was made, the amount of damages actually suffered has no bearing on the validity of a liquidated damages provision. [Hong v. Somerset Assocs. (1984) 161 CA3d 111, 115, 207 CR 597, 600; El Centro Mall, LLC v. Payless Shoesource, Inc. (2009) 178 CA4th 58, 63, 94 CR3d 43, 46]

2) [4:316.2] Effect as inducement to perform irrelevant: Nor is a liquidated damages clause invalid simply because it operates to encourage performance, so long as it represents a reasonable attempt to anticipate the losses to be suffered in the event of a breach. [Californians For Population Stabilization v. Hewlett-Packard Co. (1997) 58 CA4th 273, 289, 67 CR2d 621, 629 (abrogated on other grounds by Cortez v. Purolator Air Filtration Products Co. (2000) 23 C4th 163, 171-173, 96 CR2d 518, 524)]

(c) [4:316.6] Invalid penalty distinguished—disproportionate to anticipated harm: A liquidated damages clause generally will be considered unreasonable, and thus an unenforceable penalty under Civ.C. § 1671(b), if it bears no reasonable relationship to the range of actual damages the parties could have anticipated would flow from a breach. [Ridgley v. Topa Thrift & Loan Ass'n (1998) 17 C4th 970, 977, 73 CR2d 378, 382—6-month interest "prepayment charge" in loan agreement was invalid liquidated damages clause as applied to borrower's late monthly payment; see also Vitatech Int'l, Inc. v. Sporn (2017) 16 CA5th 796, 806, 808-811, 224 CR3d 691, 699, 701-703 (noting amounts disproportionate to anticipated damages equal penalties)—stipulated judgment for more than four times amount manufacturer agreed to accept as full settlement of its claims deemed unenforceable penalty for buyer's breach of settlement agreement; Grand Prospect Partners, L.P. v. Ross Dress for Less, Inc. (2015) 232 CA4th 1332, 1337, 182 CR3d 235, 240-242 (applying general rule to contractual conditions agreed to by "sophisticated" parties)—excusing commercial tenant from opening store or paying rent in absence of anchor store imposed unenforceable penalty/ forfeiture on landlord, but allowing tenant to terminate lease after 12 months without anchor store did not; Purcell v. Schweitzer (2014) 224 CA4th 969, 975-976, 169 CR3d 90, 95—settlement agreement provision reinstating full, original amount owed if borrower made one late payment constituted unenforceable penalty because provision bore no reasonable relationship to damages lender might be expected to actually suffer from borrower's breach (¶ 6:233.3); compare Creditors Adjustment Bureau, Inc. v. Imani (2022) 82 CA5th 131, 135-137, 298 CR3d 228, 230-231—stipulated judgment for actual, agreed upon damages caused by lessee's failure to pay amounts owed on ten-year commercial lease was neither unenforceable penalty/forfeiture nor liquidated damages provision and therefore fully enforceable against lessee; JJD-HOV Elk Grove, LLC v. Jo-Ann Stores, LLC (2022) 80 CA5th 409, 421, 426, 295 CR3d 725, 733, 737, rev.grntd. 10/12/22 (Case No. S275843), cited for persuasive value pursuant to CRC 8.1115 (declining to follow Grand Prospect Partners)—commercial lease provision varying tenant's rent based on shopping center's occupancy level or number of anchor stores deemed enforceable against landlord]

1) Application

• [4:316.7] A settlement agreement provision requiring forfeiture of a home buyer's $31,000 deposit due to a three-week delay in delivering a quitclaim deed was an invalid penalty. There was no evidence of reasonably anticipated damages even though the delay kept the subject property off the market for three weeks. [Timney v. Lin (2003) 106 CA4th 1121, 1128, 131 CR2d 387, 391-392, fn. 3]

• [4:316.8] That part of a real property purchase agreement permitting the seller to retain a defaulting buyer's down payment was deemed an invalid penalty during a period of rising property values and thus not enforceable as a valid liquidated damages clause:

> "Although such a provision [for liquidated damages] in a contract for the sale of real property is presumptively valid, if the down payment is reasonable in amount [citations], when as in this case the evidence establishes that it would not 'be impracticable or extremely difficult to fix the actual damages' [citation], such a provision may not be enforced as one for liquidated damages [citations]." [Freedman v. Rector, Wardens & Vestrymen of St. Mathias Parish (1951) 37 C2d 16, 23, 230 P2d 629, 633; see also Kuish v. Smith (2010) 181 CA4th 1419, 1425-1429, 105 CR3d 475, 480-483—"nonrefundable deposit" provision in real property purchase agreement, even if construed as liquidated damages provision, constituted invalid forfeiture during rising market]

• [4:316.9] A commercial lease provision allowing the landlord to collect double rent if the tenant breached the lease in any manner was an invalid penalty. The double-rent provision lacked a proportional relationship to the actual damages likely to be suffered. [Harbor Island Holdings, L.L.C. v. Kim (2003) 107 CA4th 790, 797, 132 CR2d 406, 410]

• [4:316.10] A commercial lease provision charging a retail tenant 10 cents per square foot per day in the event of a breach was an unenforceable penalty to the extent it was used as the basis for estimating percentage rental damages. Another section of the lease provided a readily ascertainable basis for calculating percentage rental damages, rendering the liquidated damages clause unnecessary except to penalize the tenant. (The provision was presumptively valid, however, as to damages for loss of synergy, goodwill and patronage.) [El Centro Mall, LLC v. Payless Shoesource, Inc. (2009) 174 CA4th 58, 64, 94 CR3d 43, 47]

• [4:316.11] A contractual provision appearing at first glance to be an unenforceable penalty may instead be a provision that permissibly calls for alternative performance by the obligor. Thus, "[w]here the contract clearly reserves to the owner the power to make a realistic and rational choice in the future with respect to the subject matter of the contract, a valid alternative performance provision will be found." [See McGuire v. More-Gas Investments, LLC (2013) 220 CA4th 512, 514, 523, 163 CR3d 225, 228, 235 (internal quotes omitted)—summary judgment reversed where movant failed to eliminate possibility contractual provisions in two real estate purchase contracts were valid alternative performance provisions]

2) [4:316.12] Compare—canceling discount for late payments: A lender may agree to deduct a certain amount from a borrower's total debt contingent on the borrower making timely installment payments. If the borrower fails to do so, however, canceling the discount and requiring the borrower to pay back the entire amount of the original debt does not constitute an unenforceable penalty. Rather, the discount amount is part of the lender's actual damages because it was a portion of the existing debt. [Jade Fashion & Co., Inc. v. Harkham Indus., Inc. (2014) 229 CA4th 635, 648-649, 177 CR3d 184, 196—supplier's agreement to deduct $17,500 from buyer's total debt if buyer made timely installment payments did not constitute unenforceable penalty when supplier refused to allow deduction after buyer paid five installments late]

By the same token, a purported discount can be an unenforceable penalty if it increases the amount of the original debt owed. [See Red & White Distribution, LLC v. Osteroid Enterprises, LLC (2019) 38 CA5th 582, 584, 588-589, 251 CR3d 400, 402, 405-406—settlement agreement provision allowing lender to file stipulated judgment for $700,000 more than settlement amount if borrower breached agreement was unenforceable penalty; Harbor Island Holdings, L.L.C. v. Kim (2003) 107 CA4th 790, 793, 798-799, 132 CR2d 406, 407, 411—provision in commercial lease extension that conditionally "deferred" half of monthly rent payments was unenforceable penalty because it effectively tripled amount of rent owed in event of any breach]

[4:316.13 - 4:316.14] Reserved.

3) [4:316.15] Whether commercial or consumer transaction: The same standards apply in both consumer and commercial transactions. Despite an "arm's-length commercial transaction," parties are entitled to Civ.C. § 1671's protection against unreasonable penalties. [See Ridgley v. Topa Thrift & Loan Ass'n (1998) 17 C4th 970, 981, 73 CR2d 378, 385, fn. 5; Harbor Island Holdings, L.L.C. v. Kim (2003) 107 CA4th 790, 799, 132 CR2d 406, 411-412]

Cross-refer: Invalidation as a "penalty" more commonly occurs in the context of financing transactions and, in particular, with contractual late payment and prepayment charges. See ¶ 6:230 ff., 6:259 ff.

➪ [4:317] PRACTICE POINTER: To help ensure the enforceability of a liquidated damages provision, it can't hurt to recite some "magic words" reflecting the factors courts look to when reasonableness is contested. For instance, the contract might recite that in fixing the liquidated amount, the parties considered the actual harm likely to be suffered in the event of a breach and that they agree the liquidated sum is "fair and reasonable" under the circumstances.

[4:318] Reserved.

(2) [4:319] Formality requirements: No provision obligating the buyer to pay liquidated damages to the seller is valid unless (a) separately signed or initialed by both buyer and seller; and (b) if included in a printed contract, set out either in minimum 10-point bold type or minimum 8-point bold contrasting red print. [Civ.C. § 1677(a) & (b); see Kuish v. Smith (2010) 181 CA4th 1419, 1429, 105 CR3d 475, 483—nonrefundable deposit provision in real property purchase agreement could not be construed as liquidated damages provision because, among other things, it failed to meet Civ.C. § 1677 signature requirement]

(These requirements are intended to make it more likely that the parties will appreciate the consequences of a liquidated damages clause. See Allen v. Smith (2002) 94 CA4th 1270, 1283, 114 CR2d 898, 907; Hong v. Somerset Assocs. (1984) 161 CA3d 111, 115, 207 CR 597, 599-600.)

(a) [4:319.1] Substantial compliance sufficient: Substantial compliance with the Civ.C. § 1677 requirements is sufficient to validate a liquidated damages clause where the circumstances "make it likely that the parties appreciate[d] the consequences" of agreeing to such a clause. [Allen v. Smith (2002) 94 CA4th 1270, 1282-1283, 114 CR2d 898, 907; Guthman v. Moss (1984) 150 CA3d 501, 511, 198 CR 54, 61—substantial compliance with § 1677 even though liquidated damages clause not initialed but appeared on same page as parties' signatures, and contesting party drafted the clause as amendment to escrow instructions]

(b) [4:320] Distinguish—liquidating damages to *buyer: Section 1677 applies only to provisions liquidating the seller's damages. [Civ.C. § 1677] A liquidated damages clause in the buyer's favor is subject only to the Civ.C. § 1671 "reasonableness" limitation. [Civ.C. § 1679]

(3) Limitations re residential property

(a) [4:321] 3% ceiling: For a buyer's breach of an agreement to purchase residential property (defined as a dwelling containing not more than four residential units, where the buyer intends to occupy one or more of the units as the buyer's residence, Civ.C. § 1675(a)), liquidated damages for the benefit of the seller generally cannot exceed 3% of the purchase price. [Civ.C. § 1675(c) & (d); Timney v. Lin (2003) 106 CA4th 1121, 1126, 131 CR2d 387, 390, fn. 2]

1) [4:322] "Reasonableness" exception: Even a 3% liquidated damages clause is invalid to the extent "unreasonable." Conversely, a more-than-3% liquidated damages clause is valid if "reasonable." [Civ.C. § 1675(c) & (d)]

"Reasonableness" for this purpose is determined in reference to (i) the circumstances existing when the contract was made; and (ii) the price and other terms and circumstances of any subsequent sale or contract to sell and purchase the same property if that sale or contract is made within six months of the buyer's default. [Civ.C. § 1675(e)]

➪ [4:322.1] PRACTICE POINTER: Despite the validity of "reasonable" liquidated damages clauses for more than 3% (¶ 4:322), common practice, and the better view, limits liquidated damages to a maximum 3%, thus avoiding future disputes as to whether a greater amount is "reasonable." [See Allen v. Smith (2002) 94 CA4th 1270, 1282, 114 CR2d 898, 906—liquidated damages provision in real property purchase contract stated "the amount retained shall be no more than 3% of the purchase price. Any excess shall be returned to Buyer"]

[4:323] Reserved.

2) [4:323.1] Special rules re purchase agreement for newly-constructed condominium (10 units or more): Special rules apply when the buyer of a newly-constructed attached condominium unit (as defined by Civ.C. § 783) located within a structure of 10 or more units breaches a purchase agreement and the amount actually paid to the seller pursuant to the agreement's liquidated damages provision exceeds 3% of the unit's purchase price (Civ.C. § 1675(f)):

a) [4:323.2] Accounting required: The seller is required to perform an accounting of its costs and revenues related to and fairly allocable to the construction and sale of subject unit, as well as to any delay caused by the buyer's default, within 60 calendar days after the final close of escrow for the unit. [Civ.C. § 1675(f)(1)(A)]

1/ [4:323.3] Earlier accounting for "new qualified buyer": If the default is by a "new qualified buyer" (below), the seller must perform the accounting (¶ 4:323.2) within 60 calendar days after the buyer entered into the agreement. [Civ.C. § 1675(f)(5)]

A "new qualified buyer" is a buyer who has been issued a loan commitment satisfying the agreement's loan contingency provision, and who has agreed to pay a purchase price greater than or equal to the price agreed to be paid by the original buyer of the unit. [Civ.C. § 1675(f)(7)]

b) [4:323.4] Possible refund to buyer: The seller must make reasonable efforts to mitigate any damages arising from the buyer's default. In addition, the seller is required to refund to the buyer any amounts retained as liquidated damages in excess of the greater of either 3% of the originally agreed-upon purchase price of the unit, or the amount of the seller's losses resulting from the buyer's default, as calculated by the accounting described at ¶ 4:323.2. Any such refund shall be made within 90 days after the close of escrow for the sale or lease of all of the units within the condominium structure. [Civ.C. § 1675(f)(1)(B), (2)]

c) [4:323.5] Less-than-3% liquidated damages presumed valid: If the amount of liquidated damages retained by the seller after the accounting does not exceed 3% of the unit's purchase price, the amount is valid unless the buyer establishes it is unreasonable under the Civ.C. § 1675(e) criteria (¶ 4:322). [Civ.C. § 1675(f)(3)]

(b) [4:324] Multiple liquidated damages payments: If more than one payment by the buyer is to constitute liquidated damages under Civ.C. § 1675 (re residential property purchase agreements, ¶ 4:321 ff.), the amount of any payment after the first payment is valid as liquidated damages only if (i) the total of all such payments satisfies Civ.C. § 1675 (generally, does not exceed 3% of purchase price); and (ii) a separate liquidated damages provision satisfying Civ.C. § 1677 (¶ 4:319) is separately signed or initialed by each party for each of the subsequent payments. [Civ.C. § 1678]

1) [4:324.1] Substantial compliance sufficient: Substantial compliance with the Civ.C. § 1678 requirements is sufficient to validate multiple liquidated damages payments where the circumstances show the parties' awareness that additional payments were to be subject to the liquidated damages clause. [Allen v. Smith (2002) 94 CA4th

1270, 1282-1283, 114 CR2d 898, 907—increased deposit in counteroffer valid liquidated damages even though not specifically referred to as "liquidated damages" since buyer's agent wrote the language in the counteroffer signed by both parties; see also ¶ 4:319.1]

(4) [4:325] Exception for "real property sales contracts": The liquidated damages rules described at ¶ 4:321 ff. (Civ.C. §§ 1675 et seq.) do not apply to "real property sales contracts" (land sale contracts) under Civ.C. § 2985. [Civ.C. § 1681]

d. [4:326] Practical enforcement problems: The full amount of agreed-upon liquidated damages is often placed in escrow as the buyer's "good faith deposit"; but the seller is not entitled to receive that amount unless and until the buyer's breach occurs and some action is taken by both parties to cause the escrow holder to release the monies.

This is so even though the purchase agreement (and/or separate escrow instructions) states that the liquidated damage amount is to be paid to the seller by the escrow holder automatically and without further consent of the buyer upon the buyer's breach. As a practical matter, escrow holders generally refuse to release monies in dispute (see ¶ 4:633 ff.). Indeed, most preprinted escrow instructions provide that the escrow holder is not obligated to disburse disputed funds, but may interplead them in court—with buyer and seller paying the escrow holder's attorney fees and litigation expenses (see ¶ 4:647).

8. [4:327] Condition of Title: The purchase agreement should carefully set forth the condition of title required to be conveyed by the seller and accepted by the buyer.

a. [4:328] "Marketable title": Although the terms "marketable title" and "insurable title" are frequently used to describe the condition of title to be conveyed, they are usually inadequate to precisely describe the seller's and buyer's obligations.

In legal effect, "marketable title" means "a title which a reasonable purchaser, well informed as to the facts and their legal bearings, willing and anxious to perform his contract, would, in the exercise of that prudence which business men ordinarily bring to bear on such transactions, be willing and ought to accept." More simply, "marketable title" is generally defined as one that is free from reasonable doubt in law or fact; one that may readily be sold to a reasonably prudent purchaser. A mere suspicion or speculative possibility of a future defect in title does not render it unmarketable. [Mertens v. Berendsen (1931) 213 C 111, 113, 1 P2d 440, 441; Mortgage Assocs., Inc. v. Fidelity & Dep. Co. of Maryland (2002) 105 CA4th 28, 37, 129 CR2d 365, 371; see Mellinger v. Ticor Title Ins. Co. of Calif. (2001) 93 CA4th 691, 695, 113 CR2d 357, 360—triable issue whether reasonable purchaser would buy property knowing encroachment affected small portion of property (¶ 3:102 ff.)]

Given the highly technical, legal definition, title could be "marketable" (or "insurable") yet be unacceptable to the buyer. For example, a seller arguably holds marketable title even though it may be subject to a third party's recorded option to purchase at a lower price. Or, the property may be encumbered by a long-term ground lease yielding a very low rent, or by extremely restrictive covenants effectively precluding development. These restrictions may still render title "marketable," but hardly what the buyer bargained for.

b. Practical considerations

(1) [4:329] Seller's perspective: Sellers are concerned that their obligations to deliver title are clear and somewhat limited; significantly, they typically do not want to be bound to deliver title free of those encumbrances which may be costly, time-consuming or impossible to remove. (Encumbrances and liens are also referred to as "exceptions to title" or "title exceptions" in preliminary title reports or title policies—i.e., exceptions to title insurance coverage; see ¶ 3:210 ff., 3:236 ff.)

Ideally, the seller should only agree to deliver title subject to such exceptions as those in existence at the time of signing the purchase agreement (other than monetary liens which the seller should remove at closing).

(2) [4:330] Buyer's perspective: Buyers are principally concerned that they not be required to purchase the property subject to title exceptions they have not reviewed and approved. Therefore, the buyer should always be entitled to review a current title report and complete copies of the title exceptions.

➪ [4:331] PRACTICE POINTER: A title report only lists the exceptions to title; it does not include or attach copies of the exceptions. Indeed, descriptions in the title report do not necessarily correctly or adequately describe their substance. Thus, reviewing actual copies of the exceptions to title is essential to ascertain the full condition of title.

[4:332 - 4:333] Reserved.

c. [4:334] Preliminary report; preliminary title report: The easiest way for sellers to verify the condition of title is to review a current "preliminary report" (also referred to as a "preliminary title report"). Time and expense permitting, it is beneficial to order the report early in the negotiations so that the parties will know the condition of title upon signing the purchase agreement. In this manner, they will not later be surprised by discovery of a judgment lien, mechanic's lien or other involuntary lien (of which the seller was unaware) or a voluntary lien, encumbrance or deed restriction (that the seller may have forgotten about). [See Alfaro v. Community Housing Improvement System & Planning Ass'n, Inc. (2009) 171 CA4th 1356, 1389, 124 CR3d 271, 301—buyer who receives and reads preliminary title report has actual notice of any revealed deed restrictions]

➪ [4:335] PRACTICE POINTER: When ordering a preliminary report before entering into a purchase agreement, it makes sense to use a well-known title company that would be acceptable to most buyers. This will avoid the possibility of having to switch title companies at a later date (which, in turn, would require the purchase of a second title report).

(1) [4:336] Delivery to buyer: The preliminary report and copies of all exceptions to title should be delivered to the buyer as soon as possible. The buyer should then be given a certain period of time to approve or disapprove the report (see ¶ 4:404 ff.).

(2) [4:337] Use as exhibit to contract: The title report can be attached as an exhibit to (or otherwise identified and incorporated by reference in) the purchase agreement. Also, the agreement should identify those exceptions to title that will, and will not, be removed as of the closing.

Cross-refer: Preliminary reports are discussed in detail in Ch. 3; see, in particular, ¶ 3:200 ff.

d. Removal of title exceptions

(1) [4:338] Nonmonetary exceptions: Most sellers prefer not to have any obligation to remove nonmonetary exceptions to title (e.g., easements bordering the property, or covenants, conditions and restrictions affecting the property). However, to circumvent any buyer's right to terminate the contract, it may be beneficial for the seller to have the right—at the seller's election—to remove those nonmonetary title exceptions of which the buyer disapproves. Therefore, consider providing in the purchase agreement that, if the buyer disapproves a particular exception to title, the seller will have the right—but not the obligation—to remove the exception within a specified period of time.

(2) [4:339] Monetary liens: The agreement should require the seller to remove all monetary liens other than (a) financing that the buyer agrees to take over; (b) current taxes constituting a "lien not yet due and payable" at the closing (however, current real estate taxes are usually prorated as of the closing, ¶ 4:612 ff.); and (c) bonds or assessments to be allocated between buyer and seller as of the closing (¶ 4:617).

e. [4:340] Method of conveyance: In connection with the condition of title, it is also advisable (though not essential) to specify the method of conveyance. Typically, this will be a grant deed (but see ¶ 4:38, 4:41 re conveyancing instruments for personal and intangible property).

f. [4:341] Statutory implied covenants relating to title: Whether or not expressed in the purchase agreement, two important covenants regarding the condition of title are implied in a real property conveyance (Civ.C. § 1113, ¶ 4:37.1): Unless otherwise expressly provided in the conveyancing instrument, by executing a conveyance using the word "grant" (e.g., a grant deed), the grantor impliedly covenants that:

- Prior to the time of execution of the deed, the grantor has not conveyed the grantor's estate in the property, or any right, title or interest therein, to any other person (Civ.C. § 1113(1)); and

- At the time of execution of the deed, the conveyed estate is free from encumbrances made or suffered by the grantor or any person claiming under the grantor (Civ.C. § 1113(2)).

  These implied covenants (but no others) may be sued upon in the same manner as if they had been expressly inserted in the conveyance. [Civ.C. § 1113]

g. [4:342] Title insurance: The seller has no implied obligation to provide title insurance. [See Seymour v. Shaeffer (1947) 82 CA2d 823, 825, 187 P2d 95, 97 (disapproved on other grounds by Ellis v. Mihelis (1963) 60 C2d 206, 216, 32 CR 415, 421)] Thus, the same section of the agreement addressing the condition of title should also specify that title insurance will be issued at, and as a condition of, the closing, insuring that title is in the condition called for by the agreement. The agreement should further identify which party is responsible for the costs of procuring the insurance.

(1) [4:343] CLTA or ALTA: The purchase agreement must state whether the title insurance is to be a CLTA Standard (California Land Title Association), ALTA Owner's (American Land Title Association) or CLTA/ALTA Homeowner's policy (see ¶ 3:75 ff.). If ALTA coverage is required, the agreement should indicate who has the obligation to procure and pay for the survey.

➪ [4:344] PRACTICE POINTER: A survey may disclose exceptions to title that are not reflected in the preliminary report. These additional title exceptions should be handled the same way as recorded exceptions—i.e., the buyer will want the right, within a specified period of time, to approve or disapprove such exceptions.

(2) [4:344.1] Mandatory disclosure statement in escrow if no title insurance to be issued: If, in an escrow transaction, a title insurance policy will not be issued to the buyer at, or as a condition of, the closing, a mandatory disclosure statement regarding the advisability of obtaining title insurance must be provided to the buyer (Civ.C. § 1057.6). See ¶ 4:601.1.

9. Physical Condition of Property and Inspections/Investigations

a. [4:345] Practical considerations: Those sections of the purchase agreement addressing the physical condition of the property, and rights of inspection and investigation, are a reflection of several important concerns for the parties:

[4:346] Reserved.

(1) [4:347] Seller's concerns: The seller has three main concerns with respect to the physical condition of the property:

- Compliance with statutory written disclosure requirements (Civ.C. § 1102 et seq.; see ¶ 4:354 ff.);
- Avoiding potential liability for fraud or negligent misrepresentation arising out of the failure to disclose known defects;
- Disclaiming or limiting any other implied or express representations, so that the conveyance is otherwise an "as is" sale (¶ 4:351).

(2) [4:348] Buyer's concerns: The buyer, in contrast, has these two principal concerns:

- Maximizing the buyer's recourse against the seller by requiring specific representations and warranties concerning the physical condition of the property;
- Entering into the transaction with full knowledge about the physical condition of the property by ensuring a right, mechanism and time period to conduct inspections, investigations, studies and other "due diligence" concerning the physical condition.

[4:349] Reserved.

b. [4:350] Buyer's inspection rights: Most purchase agreements should allow the buyer a broad right to inspect the physical condition of the property; and should provide the buyer with sufficient time and access to the property to perform all the buyer's "due diligence" inspections, investigations and analyses. (Generally, the only situation where a buyer is not given time to inspect the physical condition of the property is where the buyer is an existing tenant—who presumably knows all the pertinent information.)

- Checklist: A checklist for the buyer's inspection ("due diligence") is set forth at ¶ 4:367 ff.

➪ [4:350a] PRACTICE POINTERS FOR SELLERS: A clause should also be added to the agreement, for the seller's benefit, stating that the buyer will rely on its own inspection and that, except as otherwise stated, neither the seller nor seller's agents makes any express or implied representations concerning the physical condition of the land or improvements.

Additionally, sellers should insist on the buyer's agreement to indemnify the seller for any loss, damage or injury to the property resulting from the buyer's (or buyer's agent's) inspections. (When there is significant concern about potential damage from a buyer's inspections, the seller may also want the buyer to name the seller as an additional insured on the buyer's insurance policies. However, such a provision is unusual because neither party wants to delay commencement of inspections while the buyer attempts to procure further insurance coverage. And, in any event, the seller's insurance usually will cover any such damage.)

(1) [4:350.1] "Home inspection" regulation: Many residential property buyers hire a home inspection service to conduct a thorough physical inspection of the prospective property. "Home inspections" and "home inspectors," as defined at ¶ 4:350.2, are subject to statutory regulation to ensure that consumers can rely upon the competence of home inspectors. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 7195 et seq.]

(a) [4:350.2] Definitions—which home inspections, inspectors and reports: A "home inspection" for this purpose is a "noninvasive, physical examination, performed for a fee, in connection with a transfer … of [one to four dwelling units], of the mechanical, electrical, or plumbing systems or the structural and essential components of [the dwelling] designed to identify material defects in those systems, structures, and components." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 7195(a) & (e)]

A "home inspector" is any individual who performs a "home inspection" (above). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 7195(d)]

A "home inspection report" is any written report prepared for a fee following a home inspection. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 7195(c)—for dwellings with pools/spas, report must identify which, if any, of seven drowning prevention safety features (as defined) the pool/spa is equipped with and state if pool/spa has fewer than two; see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 7196.2 (requiring inspector's observation of "any shade of yellow corrugated stainless steel tubing" be included in report along with statutorily-prescribed notification re manufacturers' safety recommendations)]

A "material defect" within the meaning of these statutes is any condition that significantly affects the value, desirability, habitability or safety of the dwelling. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 7195(b)—"style or aesthetics shall not be considered in determining whether a system, structure, or component is defective"]

(b) [4:350.3] Inspector's duty of care: A home inspector who is not a licensed contractor, structural pest control operator, architect or registered engineer has a duty "to conduct a home inspection with the degree of care that a reasonably prudent home inspector would exercise." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 7196; Moreno v. Sanchez (2003) 106 CA4th 1415, 1435, 131 CR2d 684, 699; Leko v. Cornerstone Bldg. Inspection Service (2001) 86 CA4th 1109, 1116, 103 CR2d 858, 863-864]

The duty is more precisely clarified by an uncodified statement of legislative intent: "[I]n ascertaining the degree of care that would be exercised by a reasonably prudent home inspector … , the court may consider the standards of practice and code of ethics of the California Real Estate Inspection Association, the American Society of Home Inspectors, or other nationally recognized professional home inspection association." [Stats. 1996, Ch. 338, § 1]

1) [4:350.4] Liability: A home inspector or home inspection company that negligently fails to discover and/or disclose defects in real property it inspects may be liable to clients who purchase the property for breach of the common law or statutory duty to exercise due care in inspecting the property and preparing a home inspection report. [Moreno v. Sanchez (2003) 106 CA4th 1415, 1436, 131 CR2d 684, 699—inspector liable in tort despite written contract; Leko v. Cornerstone Bldg. Inspection Service (2001) 86 CA4th 1109, 1119, 103 CR2d 858, 866]

To the extent the home inspector's breach of duty overlaps with a broker's duty to inspect and disclose, the liability is joint and several. [Leko v. Cornerstone Bldg. Inspection Service, supra, 86 CA4th at 1116, 1119, 103 CR2d at 864, 866; see discussion at ¶ 2:157.16]

a) [4:350.5] Liability to remote purchasers: In certain circumstances, a home inspector's liability may even extend to subsequent purchasers (nonclients).

A home inspector who negligently prepares an inspection report directly for a broker and/or buyer, knowing with "substantial certainty" that the report may also be provided to future purchasers, can be held liable to those future purchasers who rely on the report to their detriment. [Leko v. Cornerstone Bldg. Inspection Service (2001) 86 CA4th 1109, 1120-1121, 103 CR2d 858, 866-867]

2) [4:350.6] Waiver or liability limits invalid: Contractual provisions purporting to waive the Bus. & Prof.C. § 7196 duty, or to limit a home inspector's liability to the cost of the home inspection report, are invalid as contrary to public policy. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 7198]

3) [4:350.7] Accrual of cause of action; statute of limitations: The statute of limitations on an action for breach of duty arising from a home inspection report is normally four years from the date of the inspection. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 7199] The cause of action accrues (commencing the limitations period) not on the date of the inspection, but when the homeowner discovers, or with the exercise of reasonable diligence should have discovered, the breach (so-called "delayed discovery rule"). [Moreno v. Sanchez (2003) 106 CA4th 1415, 1432, 131 CR2d 684, 696]

The written contract may provide for a shorter limitations period, but it cannot shorten the accrual period. [Moreno v. Sanchez, supra, 106 CA4th at 1432-1434, 131 CR2d at 696-698—contract substituting "straight one-year statute of limitations" for "delayed discovery" accrual unenforceable]

[4:350.8 - 4:350.9] Reserved.

(c) [4:350.10] Unfair business practices: It is an unfair business practice for a home inspector, or any company employing an inspector, or any company that has control of or a financial interest in such company to (Bus. & Prof.C. § 7197):

• Perform (or offer to perform) for an additional fee any repairs to a structure on which the inspector (or inspector's company) has prepared a home inspection report in the past 12 months;

• Inspect for a fee any property in which the inspector (or inspector's company) has a financial interest or interest in the transfer of the property;

• Offer or deliver compensation to the owner, broker or agent of the inspected property for the referral of business to the inspector or inspection company;

• Agree to make an inspection or prepare a report when the employment or fee is contingent upon the conclusions in the report, preestablished findings, or the close of escrow. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 7197(a)-(d) (exempting licensed roof contractors, as defined, who perform repairs for purposes of providing roof certifications if specified conditions are met)]

c. Impact of "as is" sale

(1) [4:351] Implied warning to buyers: Many real property sales are made on a so-called "as is" basis. The term is not well-defined by law. "[A]n 'as is' provision in any sale puts potential buyers on notice that the seller makes no warranty about the quality or condition of the thing sold. In practice it serves as a kind of 'red flag' warning the buyer that the goods or property to be sold may not be in perfect condition or of ideal quality." [Shapiro v. Hu (1986) 188 CA3d 324, 333, 233 CR 470, 475; see also Loughrin v. Sup.Ct. (Barr) (1993) 15 CA4th 1188, 1195, 19 CR2d 161, 164—"as is" sale simply means buyer "accepts the property in the condition visible or observable by him"]

(a) [4:351.1] Special caveat for buyers of tax-defaulted property: Tax-defaulted real property is usually sold on an "as is" basis at public auction (Rev. & Tax.C. § 3691 et seq.). Bidders are impliedly, if not expressly, warned to thoroughly research the value and condition of the property, as common law contract remedies (e.g., rescission or damages) are not available (but see ¶ 4:351.1a). [Ribeiro v. County of El Dorado (2011) 195 CA4th 354, 356-357, 125 CR3d 577, 578-579—investor who mistakenly bought real estate from public entity at tax sale without knowing bond arrearage amount was limited to statutory remedies and not entitled to rescind; Van Petten v. County of San Diego (1995) 38 CA4th 43, 50-51, 44 CR2d 816, 821 (buyer who purchased in reliance on grossly overinflated assessed value had no remedy) —exclusive remedies are refund of purchase money paid and only where court determines tax deed is void (Rev. & Tax.C. § 3729) or property "should not have been sold" (Rev. & Tax.C. § 3731)]

In effect, the doctrine of "caveat emptor" applies at tax sales, and absent an explicit statutory remedy, the buyer has no remedy. [See Craland, Inc. v. State of Calif. (1989) 214 CA3d 1400, 263 CR 255]

1) [4:351.1a] Contra authority: One earlier case holds otherwise—i.e., the contractual remedy of rescission is available in connection with the purchase of tax-defaulted property because the Revenue & Taxation Code does not state its remedies are exclusive. [See Schultz v. County of Contra Costa (1984) 157 CA3d 242, 247, 203 CR 760, 763]

Schultz, supra, however, has been criticized and probably was not decided correctly. [See Ribeiro v. County of El Dorado (2011) 195 CA4th 354, 367, 125 CR3d 577, 586—"we decline to follow Schultz and conclude that the holdings in Craland and Van Petten were correct"; Van Petten v. County of San Diego (1995) 38 CA4th 43, 50, 44 CR2d 816, 821—"We follow the well-settled rule … that purchasers of property at a tax sale are limited to statutory remedies and reject Schultz's holding to the contrary"; Craland, Inc. v. State of Calif. (1989) 214 CA3d 1400, 1407, 263 CR 255, 260—"We disagree with Schultz ..."]

(b) [4:351.2] Special caveat re property bought at execution/foreclosure sales: The principal of "caveat emptor" is particularly apt when buying real property at an execution or foreclosure sale because there may be no opportunity to fully inspect the property before purchase. [See Washington Mut. Bank v. Jacoby (2009) 180 CA4th 639, 643-647, 103 CR3d 245, 248-251—despite unknown damage to property's interior, buyer not entitled to excess funds from sheriff's sale and fire insurance policy paid to lender in satisfaction of note secured by trust deed (insurance policy is personal contract between named insured and company that does not run with land)]

(2) [4:352] Seller's disclosure obligations and potential liability notwithstanding: Neither an "as is" sale nor the buyer's right of inspection exonerates the seller from (a) the obligation to make written disclosures required by Civ.C. § 1102 et seq. (¶ 4:354 ff.), or (b) liability for failure to disclose known defects in the property (i.e., intentional misrepresentation or fraudulent concealment; see ¶ 4:353 ff., 11:350 ff.). [See Civ.C. § 1102.1(a) & (b)—delivery of real estate transfer disclosure statement or manufactured home/mobilehome transfer disclosure statement "may not be waived in an 'as is' sale"; Shapiro v. Hu (1986) 188 CA3d 324, 333-334, 233 CR 470, 476; but see Heliotis v. Schuman (1986) 181 CA3d 646, 650-651, 226 CR 509, 511-512—seller's attorney not obligated to disclose property defects to purchaser]

d. [4:353] Common law disclosure requirements: The seller has a common law obligation to disclose any facts within the seller's knowledge that materially affect the value or desirability of the property if the seller also is aware that those facts are not known to the buyer or within reach of the buyer's "diligent attention and observation." [Lingsch v. Savage (1963) 213 CA2d 729, 735, 29 CR 201, 204; Shapiro v. Sutherland (1998) 64 CA4th 1534, 1544, 76 CR2d 101, 107—sellers had duty to disclose neighborhood noise problem; see also Alfaro v. Community Housing Improvement System & Planning Ass'n, Inc. (2009) 171 CA4th 1356, 1389-1393, 124 CR3d 271, 301-304—mere recording of affordable housing deed restriction did not relieve sellers of duty to disclose its existence (defrauded buyers are not charged with constructive notice of public records)]

A fact is "material" for this purpose if it would have a significant and measurable effect on the property's market value. [Calemine v. Samuelson (2009) 171 CA4th 153, 161, 89 CR3d 495, 501; Assilzadeh v. California Fed'l Bank, FSB (2000) 82 CA4th 399, 410, 98 CR2d 176, 182; see also Holmes v. Summer (2010) 188 CA4th 1510, 1518-1519, 1528, 116 CR3d 419, 424-425, 432—monetary liens and encumbrances may affect value and desirability of residential properties (seller's broker had duty to disclose substantial risk that overencumbered residential property could not be freely transferred, rendering broker potentially liable to buyer on negligence theory), discussed further at ¶ 2:170.9]

(1) [4:353.1] Applicable to residential *and commercial transactions: The seller's common law duty to disclose undiscoverable material facts applies in commercial as well as residential real estate transactions. [See Stevenson v. Baum (1998) 65 CA4th 159, 165, 75 CR2d 904, 907 (mobilehome park)—seller "does not contend that there is a different or lesser duty to disclose in a commercial real estate transaction … than in a residential real estate transaction, and we have found no California case law so holding" (emphasis added)]

(2) [4:353.2] Effect of obvious defects: The common law obligation does not apply when a defect is obvious (or should be obvious upon a buyer's reasonably prudent inspection). In such cases, the seller has no duty to bring the defect to the buyer's attention except as required by Civ.C. § 1102 et seq. (residential real estate transactions, ¶ 4:354).

Thus, a buyer who through "diligent attention and observation" could have discovered the adverse condition will be hard-pressed to convince a trier of fact that the seller's nondisclosure amounted to fraud or misrepresentation. [See Pagano v. Krohn (1997) 60 CA4th 1, 10, 70 CR2d 1, 5]

➪ [4:353.3] PRACTICE POINTER: The issue of what is or is not an "obvious" defect can be debatable. Thus, the better approach is to enumerate in the purchase agreement any known defects in the property and have the buyer acknowledge and accept them.

(3) [4:353.4] Disclosure of "essential facts" sufficient: The seller has not failed to disclose material facts when the buyer is aware of the "essential facts" concerning a particular condition. [Pagano v. Krohn (1997) 60 CA4th 1, 10, 70 CR2d 1, 5; see also Calemine v. Samuelson (2009) 171 CA4th 153, 161, 89 CR3d 495, 502—once "essential facts" are disclosed, seller has no duty to provide details that would merely elaborate on disclosed facts]

• [4:353.5] Seller's disclosure of a general water intrusion problem at the condo development satisfied Seller's duty since Seller's particular unit was not affected by the water intrusion. [Pagano v. Krohn (1997) 60 CA4th 1, 10, 70 CR2d 1, 5]

• [4:353.5a] Similarly, Seller's duty regarding water intrusion in and around a condo development's slabs and sidewalks was satisfied once he provided Buyer with a general outline of the completed repairs and recommended obtaining a physical inspection. [Calemine v. Samuelson (2009) 171 CA4th 153, 164, 89 CR3d 495, 503-504—details regarding type and scope of repairs falls within "elaboration" category that is not part of seller's disclosure duty]

• [4:353.6] Seller's disclosure of the existence of an easement was sufficient where the true nature of the easement (for pipeline running beneath mobilehome spaces) could have been discovered by a search of the public records. [Stevenson v. Baum (1998) 65 CA4th 159, 165, 75 CR2d 904, 907]

• [4:353.7] Seller who disclosed to a condo buyer that the project's homeowner's association had sued the developer for construction defects and that the litigation had settled was not further bound to investigate and disclose the details of the lawsuit (buyer could have examined the court file). [Assilzadeh v. California Fed'l Bank, FSB (2000) 82 CA4th 399, 411, 98 CR2d 176, 183; but see also Calemine v. Samuelson (2009) 171 CA4th 153, 166, 89 CR3d 495, 505—seller's duty to disclose "essential facts" extends to previous as well as pending lawsuits]

[4:353.8 - 4:353.9] Reserved.

(4) [4:353.10] Disclosure of opinions re value not required: The seller's duty of disclosure does not include a duty to disclose opinions learned from others concerning how the practical ramifications of disclosed facts might adversely impact the property's value. [Assilzadeh v. California Fed'l Bank, FSB (2000) 82 CA4th 399, 411-412, 98 CR2d 176, 183-184; see also ¶ 2:170.9]

e. [4:354] Statutory disclosure requirements (residential property; manufactured homes/mobilehomes): By statute (Civ.C. § 1102 et seq.), sellers of single-family residential property (including leases with an option to purchase same) are required to make several written disclosures to prospective buyers regarding the physical condition of the property; and similar statutory disclosure requirements apply to resales of manufactured homes and mobilehomes (as defined in Health & Saf.C. §§ 18007 & 18008, respectively). [See Civ.C. § 1102(a); Bus. & Prof.C. § 10018.08 (defining "single-family residential property" as (i) real property improved with one to four dwelling units, including any leasehold exceeding one year's duration of such, (ii) a unit in a residential stock cooperative, condominium or planned unit development, and (iii) mobile/manufactured homes offered for sale or sold through real estate brokers pursuant to Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131.6); Health & Saf.C. §§ 18025(c) & 18046(c)—sales of used manufactured homes/mobilehomes by licensed real estate brokers and salespersons are subject to Civ.C. § 2079; Civ.C. § 798.74.4 (requirements include use of Civ.C. § 1102.6d Manufactured Home and Mobilehome Transfer Disclosure Statement; ¶ 2:185.3); Realmuto v. Gagnard (2003) 110 CA4th 193, 200-201, 1 CR3d 569, 574-575 (decided under former law) (discussing purposes of Civ.C. § 1102 et seq.); Richman v. Hartley (2014) 224 CA4th 1182, 1184, 169 CR3d 475, 477 (decided under former law)—transfer disclosure requirements apply even to "mixed-use" properties if they contain up to four dwelling units (¶ 2:185.1)]

The § 1102 et seq. "transfer disclosure" requirements are nonwaivable, even in an "as is" sale (¶ 4:352). [Civ.C. §§ 1102(c), 1102.1(a) & (b); Realmuto v. Gagnard, supra, 110 CA4th at 201-202, 1 CR3d at 575—nonwaiver provision not limited to particular form of waiver]

Indeed, when the property is otherwise within the ambit of the disclosure statutes, the disclosure requirements apply notwithstanding the buyer's stated intent not to use it as a residence. [Realmuto v. Gagnard, supra, 110 CA4th at 203, 1 CR3d at 577]

➪ [4:354.1] PRACTICE POINTER: Remember that the Civ.C. § 1102 et seq. obligations are in addition to—not in lieu of—the parties' and agents' obligations to disclose any fact "materially affecting the value and desirability of the property, including … the physical conditions of the property and previously received reports of physical inspections …" [Civ.C. § 1102.1(a) & (b); see ¶ 2:186]

Indeed, the statutory scheme even more broadly states that the identification of items for disclosure in Civ.C. § 1102 et seq. "does not limit or abridge any obligation for disclosure created by any other provision of law or which may exist in order to avoid fraud, misrepresentation, or deceit in the transfer transaction." [Civ.C. § 1102.8 (emphasis added)]

(1) [4:355] Form of transfer disclosure statement: For single-family residential property sales, the statutory disclosures must be made on the form prescribed by Civ.C. § 1102.6 ("Real Estate Transfer Disclosure Statement"). [Civ.C. §§ 1102.1(a), 1102.6]

Mobilehome/manufactured home resales: A separate, but parallel transfer disclosure statement is prescribed by Civ.C. § 1102.6d for resales of manufactured homes or mobilehomes used for residential purposes. [See Civ.C. §§ 1102.1(b) & (c), 1102.6d ("Manufactured Home and Mobilehome Transfer Disclosure Statement")]

(a) [4:356] "Good faith" requirement: Each of the required disclosures (and each act that may be performed in making the disclosures) must be made in "good faith"—i.e., "honesty in fact in the conduct of the transaction." [Civ.C. § 1102.7; Shapiro v. Sutherland (1998) 64 CA4th 1534, 1545, 76 CR2d 101, 107]

(b) [4:357] Unavailable information: If an item of information required to be disclosed is unknown or unavailable to the seller (or agent) at the time the disclosures are required to be made, and the seller (or agent) has made a "reasonable effort" to ascertain it, the seller may instead use an "approximation of the information"; but the approximation must be identified as such, must be "reasonable" and based on the best information "reasonably available" to the seller (or agent), and cannot be used for purposes of circumventing or evading Civ.C. § 1102 et seq. [Civ.C. § 1102.5—disclosure requirements in effect on date all parties enter contract/agreement are requirements that apply]

(c) [4:357.1] Special disclosure notice if property subject to continuing lien securing special tax levy: See discussion at ¶ 2:197.

(2) Delivery

(a) Time for delivery

1) [4:358] Section 1102.6 transfer disclosure statement (residential property): In the case of an outright sale of any single-family real property, the completed Civ.C. § 1102.6 transfer disclosure statement must be delivered to the prospective buyer "as soon as practicable before transfer of title." [Civ.C. § 1102.3(a)]

In the case of sale by a real property sales contract (as defined by Civ.C. § 2985), or a lease with an option to purchase, or a ground lease coupled with improvements, the completed § 1102.6 statement must be delivered "as soon as practicable before execution of the contract." [Civ.C. § 1102.3(b)]

The seller must indicate compliance with the delivery requirement on the real property sales contract, the lease "or any addendum attached thereto or on a separate document." [Civ.C. § 1102.3(c)]

2) [4:358.1] Section 1102.6d transfer disclosure statement (manufactured home/mobilehome resales): In the case of a sale or lease with option to purchase of a manufactured home or mobilehome involving an agent, the Civ.C. § 1102.6d transfer disclosure statement must be delivered to the prospective buyer "as soon as practicable" but, at the latest, by the close of escrow. [Civ.C. § 1102.3a(a)(1)]

If no agent is involved in the sale (or lease with option to purchase), the § 1102.6d statement must be delivered "at the time of execution of any document by the prospective transferee with the transferor for the purchase of the manufactured home or mobilehome." [Civ.C. § 1102.3a(a)(2)]

The seller must indicate compliance with the delivery requirement either on the transfer disclosure statement, an addendum thereto, or on a separate document. [Civ.C. § 1102.3a(b)]

(b) [4:359] Method of delivery: The requisite transfer disclosure statement must be transmitted to the buyer by personal delivery or to a prospective buyer by mail. (Unless the contract otherwise states, delivery to the transferee's spouse (or registered domestic partner, see Fam.C. § 297.5(a)) suffices.) [Civ.C. § 1102.10]

(c) [4:359.1] Condition precedent to buyer's performance of purchase contract: The seller's delivery of the transfer disclosure statement is a nonwaivable condition precedent to the buyer's duty to perform the purchase contract. "The Legislature plainly contemplated that buyers would never be irrevocably committed to performing the contract without having received the required disclosures." [Realmuto v. Gagnard (2003) 110 CA4th 193, 201, 1 CR3d 569, 575—seller's failure to deliver transfer disclosure statement was fatal to suit against buyer for specific performance of contract to purchase seller's home where seller sued buyer for specific performance; see also ¶ 11:80.5 ff., 11:88.2]

(d) [4:359.2] Buyer's right to terminate/rescind if delivered after offer executed: If any disclosure, or material amendment of disclosure, required by Civ.C. § 1102 et seq. is delivered "after the execution of an offer to purchase," the prospective buyer has (i) three days after delivery in person, (ii) five days after delivery by deposit in the mail, or (iii) five days after delivery of an electronic record, as statutorily specified, to "terminate the offer" by delivering a written notice of termination to the seller or seller's agent. The period of time the prospective buyer has in which to terminate their offer commences when Sections I, II and, if the seller is represented by an agent in the transaction, then also Section III, of the Civ.C. § 1102.6 form are completed and delivered to the buyer or buyer's agent. A real estate agent may complete their own portion of the required disclosure by providing all the information on the agent's inspection disclosure set forth in said form. [Civ.C. §§ 1102.3, last para. (emphasis added), 1102.3a(c)]

Although the statute refers to the buyer's right to terminate their "offer," it is generally understood as giving the buyer the right to rescind the contract if the buyer's offer is accepted before delivery of the transfer disclosure statement. [See Realmuto v. Gagnard (2003) 110 CA4th 193, 201, 1 CR3d 569, 575]

[4:359.3 - 4:359.4] Reserved.

(3) [4:359.5] Amendments: Disclosures made pursuant to Civ.C. § 1102 et seq. may be amended in writing by the seller (or the seller's agent); but amendments are subject to Civ.C. §§ 1102.3 or 1102.3a (buyer's right to terminate offer if material amendment delivered after execution of offer, ¶ 4:359.2). [Civ.C. § 1102.9]

(4) [4:360] Impact: The statutory disclosures are not warranties by the seller or seller's agent; nor are they a substitute for warranties or inspections that the parties actually obtain. Further, the seller's Civ.C. § 1102.6 (or § 1102.6d) disclosures are not intended to be part of the purchase contract between the buyer and seller. [See Civ.C. §§ 1102.6, 1102.6d; Brasier v. Sparks (1993) 17 CA4th 1756, 1760, 22 CR2d 1, 3—in their breach of contract, misrepresentation and negligence suit against seller, buyers could not rely, as part of purchase contract, on seller's statement in § 1102.6 form that seller was unaware of building code violations]

Rather, the purpose of the statutory scheme is to make "specific and clear" disclosures otherwise required by the common law and thereby assist prospective buyers in reaching an informed decision whether to purchase the property. [See Calemine v. Samuelson (2009) 171 CA4th 153, 162, 89 CR3d 495, 502]

(a) [4:361] Potential fraud exposure: Nonetheless, the seller remains exposed to liability for knowing false representations or omissions in the disclosure statement. This result is implicit in Civ.C. § 1102.4, which provides that the seller (or seller's or buyer's agent) incurs no liability for any "error, inaccuracy, or omission" of information in the statement if the error, inaccuracy or omission was "not within the personal knowledge of the seller or that listing or buyer's agent, was based on information timely provided by public agencies or by other persons providing information as specified … , and ordinary care was exercised in obtaining and transmitting it." [See Civ.C. § 1102.4(a); Shapiro v. Sutherland (1998) 64 CA4th 1534, 1547, 76 CR2d 101, 108]

Moreover, Civ.C. § 1102.8 expressly provides that the seller's potential liability for fraud, misrepresentation or deceit is unaffected by the statutory transfer disclosure statement requirements (see ¶ 4:354.1).

1) [4:361.1] Liability to remote purchasers ("indirect deception doctrine"): In certain circumstances, the seller's potential fraud liability may even extend to subsequent purchasers. Under the so-called "indirect deception doctrine," a seller who makes a fraudulent misrepresentation (or omission) to a direct buyer while intending or having reason to expect it will be relied and acted upon by a third person (subsequent buyer) is liable to the third person for loss suffered in justifiable reliance thereon. [Shapiro v. Sutherland (1998) 64 CA4th 1534, 1548, 76 CR2d 101, 109-110 (relying on Rest.2d Torts § 533)]

Thus, a subsequent buyer who relies on a prior seller's Civ.C. § 1102.6 disclosure statement may have an action for deceit against the prior seller even though the two were not in contractual privity. [Shapiro v. Sutherland, supra, 64 CA4th at 1550, 76 CR2d at 111—when seller sold property to relocation company whom seller knew would immediately resell, seller's failure to disclose known neighborhood noise problem to relocation company supported fraud cause of action by relocation company's buyer against seller]

Cross-refer: A seller's fraud liability to remote purchasers is discussed further at ¶ 11:355.1 ff.

(5) [4:362] Exemption for certain transfers: Certain single-family residential property (or manufactured home/ mobilehome) transfers are exempt from the § 1102 et seq. disclosure statement requirements. [Civ.C. §§ 1102(a), 1102.2]

Among the several exemptions, the statutory disclosures are not required for:

- Sales or transfers pursuant to court order (in probate, by a trustee in bankruptcy, pursuant to writ of execution or decree for specific performance, etc.). [Civ.C. § 1102.2(b)]

- Sales or transfers to a mortgagee or trust deed beneficiary upon the mortgagor's/trustor's default, or by foreclosure sale after default, or by a mortgagee or trust deed beneficiary who acquired the property by foreclosure sale. [Civ.C. § 1102.2(c); see Assilzadeh v. California Fed'l Bank, FSB (2000) 82 CA4th 399, 409, 98 CR2d 176, 182 (condo acquired by nonjudicial foreclosure)]

- Sales or transfers by a fiduciary in the course of administration of a decedent's estate, guardianship, conservatorship or trust (except that this exemption does not apply if the trustee is a natural person who is sole trustee of a revocable trust and either owned or occupied the property within the preceding year). [Civ.C. § 1102.2(d)]

- Sales or transfers between co-owners. [Civ.C. § 1102.2(e)]

- Sales or transfers to a spouse or registered domestic partner (see Fam.C. § 297.5(a)) or person(s) in the line of consanguinity of a transferor; or between spouses or registered domestic partners (see Fam.C. §§ 297.5(b), 299(d)) pursuant to a judgment of dissolution or legal separation or property settlement agreement incident thereto. [Civ.C. § 1102.2(f) & (g)]

- Transfers or exchanges to or from a governmental entity. [Civ.C. § 1102.2(j)]

- Sales or transfers of any portion of property not constituting single-family residential property. [Civ.C. § 1102.2(k)]

- The sale, creation, or transfer of any lease of any duration, except a lease with an option to purchase or a ground lease coupled with improvements. [Civ.C. § 1102.2(l)]

➪ [4:362.1] PRACTICE POINTER: As discussed, the Civ.C. § 1102 et seq. disclosure requirements do not displace the seller's (and seller's agent's) common law disclosure obligations (¶ 4:353 ff., 4:354.1; see ¶ 2:186). Thus, even if a transfer falls within one of the statutory exemptions (¶ 4:362 ff.), a Transfer Disclosure Statement (or other similar written document) should still be delivered to the prospective buyer if there are known defects in the property.

(6) [4:363] Statutory remedy for noncompliance: The validity of a sale subject to Civ.C. § 1102 et seq. is not affected by the seller's failure to provide the statutory disclosure statement. However, willful or negligent noncompliance when the sale has been completed (see ¶ 11:361.1) renders the seller liable for the buyer's "actual damages." [Civ.C. § 1102.13; Shapiro v. Sutherland (1998) 64 CA4th 1534, 1545, 76 CR2d 101, 107-108; but see also Loken v. Century 21-Award Properties (1995) 36 CA4th 263, 274, 42 CR2d 683, 690—Civ.C. § 2079.4 2-year statute of limitations applies to buyer's cause of action alleging seller's broker's "per se violation" of § 1102 because it stems from broker's Civ.C. § 2079 inspection disclosure duty (discussed at ¶ 2:180.1 ff.)]

(The seller is not in noncompliance if information properly disclosed is subsequently rendered inaccurate because of any act, occurrence or agreement after delivery of the required disclosures. See Civ.C. § 1102.5(a).)

(a) [4:363.1] Compare—common law liability despite exempt transactions: In exempt transactions (¶ 4:362), a seller cannot incur liability under Civ.C. § 1102.13 for failure to deliver the transfer disclosure statement. However, the seller may still be liable under the common law duty of disclosure (¶ 4:353). [See Loughrin v. Sup.Ct. (Barr) (1993) 15 CA4th 1188, 1195, 19 CR2d 161, 164]

[4:363.2 - 4:363.4] Reserved.

(7) [4:363.5] Seller's disclosure obligations ordinarily inapplicable to homeowners' associations: Unless it acts as the seller, is a party to the sale contract or otherwise has assumed a fiduciary or "special" relationship with the buyer, a homeowner's association has no duty to disclose to prospective purchasers facts affecting the value or desirability of the property being sold. (The association has a fiduciary relationship with the seller and other association members, not with prospective purchasers.) [Kovich v. Paseo Del Mar Homeowners' Ass'n (1996) 41 CA4th 863, 866, 48 CR2d 758, 760]

Nor does a homeowner's association have a duty to monitor the seller for compliance with the seller's statutory and common law disclosure obligations. [Kovich v. Paseo Del Mar Homeowners' Ass'n, supra, 41 CA4th at 869, 48 CR2d at 762]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Thus, e.g., a homeowner's association has no obligation to inform a prospective purchaser in the common interest development about construction defects in individual units or the existence of litigation against the developer to repair the defects. The seller is charged with the responsibility of disclosing that information, not the homeowner's association with whom the buyer has no fiduciary or contractual relationship. [Kovich v. Paseo Del Mar Homeowners' Ass'n, supra, 41 CA4th at 865, 48 CR2d at 759]

f. [4:364] Additional disclosure requirements: Provisions scattered through various state codes and federal statutes require additional disclosures in connection with the sale of specified property:

(1) [4:365] "Natural hazard" areas: If the property is located within a specified "flood hazard area" designated by the Federal Emergency Management Agency, an "area of potential flooding" shown on an inundation map prepared pursuant to Water Code § 6161, a "very high fire hazard severity zone" designated pursuant to Gov.C. § 51178, a "wildland" fire area designated pursuant to Pub.Res.C. § 4125 (substantial forest fire risks), an "earthquake fault zone" designated pursuant to Pub.Res.C. § 2622, or a "seismic hazard zone" designated pursuant to Pub.Res.C. § 2696, the seller or seller's agent must, in addition to the Civ.C. § 1102.6 (or Civ.C. § 1102.6d) transfer disclosure statement, deliver to prospective buyers a statutory "Natural Hazard Disclosure Statement" advising of the hazardous condition. [Civ.C. § 1103 et seq.; see Civ.C. § 1103.3 re time for delivery]

The Civ.C. § 1103 et seq. disclosure requirements are nonwaivable. [Civ.C. § 1103(d)—waiver "void as against public policy"]

(a) [4:365.1] Which types of property: Civ.C. § 1103 et seq. applies to sales, exchanges, real property sales contracts as defined in Civ.C. § 2985, leases with options to purchase, any other options to purchase, and ground leases coupled with improvements, of any "single-family residential real property." Section 1103 et seq. also applies to resales of manufactured homes or mobilehomes used as a residence. [See Civ.C. § 1103(b); Bus. & Prof.C. § 10018.08 (defining "single-family residential real property" as (i) real property improved with one to four dwelling units, including any leasehold exceeding one year's duration of such, (ii) a unit in a residential stock cooperative, condominium or planned unit development, and (iii) mobile/manufactured homes when offered for sale or sold through real estate brokers per Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131.6)]

Comparable provisions applicable to transfers of all other types of property are contained in Gov.C. §§ 8589.3, 8589.4, 51183.5; and Pub.Res.C. §§ 2621.9, 2694, 4136.

Several types of transfers, however, are exempt from the Civ.C. § 1103 et seq. disclosure requirements. [See Civ.C. § 1103.1; and ¶ 2:187.13] (The exemptions are similar to the exemptions applicable to the real estate transfer disclosure requirement, ¶ 4:362.)

(b) [4:365.2] Form of statement; impact: The form of the natural hazard disclosure statement is prescribed by Civ.C. § 1103.2. Like the Civ.C. § 1102.6 (and Civ.C. § 1102.6d) disclosure statement (¶ 4:360), it is not a warranty. Its purpose is to enable prospective buyers to rely on the information in deciding whether and on what terms to purchase the property. The statement also warns buyers that the identified hazards may limit their ability to develop the property, to obtain insurance or to receive disaster assistance. [See Civ.C. § 1103.2(a)]

1) [4:365.3] Other disclosure obligations unaffected: As under Civ.C. § 1102 et seq. (transfer disclosure statement), the identification of items for disclosure in Civ.C. § 1103 et seq. neither limits nor abridges the seller's (and agent's) disclosure obligations under other law that may exist to avoid fraud, misrepresentation or deceit in the sale transaction. Quite apart from Civ.C. § 1103 et seq., sellers and their agents remain bound to disclose facts materially affecting the value and desirability of the property. [Civ.C. § 1103.8; see also ¶ 2:187.14]

Cross-refer: The natural hazard disclosure requirements are quite complex. They are discussed in greater detail at ¶ 2:187 ff.

(2) [4:366] Certain industrial use zoning: See discussion at ¶ 2:199.4.

(3) [4:366.1] Hazardous materials: Sellers must disclose the existence of hazardous substances. [Health & Saf.C. § 78700 (added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257; eff. 1/1/24), and ¶ 2:192 ff.]

(a) [4:366.2] Lead-based paint in pre-1978 residential structures: Federal law requires sellers of "target housing" (most residential properties constructed before 1978, see 42 USC § 4851b(27)) to disclose the presence of known lead-based paint and lead-based paint hazards (see 42 USC § 4851b(14) & (15)) in the housing before the buyer becomes obligated under the purchase contract. [42 USC § 4852d; 24 CFR Part 35 (HUD regulations) & 40 CFR Part 745 (parallel EPA regulations); see 24 CFR § 35.88]

Additionally:

• [4:366.3] “Target housing” sellers must provide their prospective purchasers with a federally-approved lead-based paint hazard information pamphlet (an EPA pamphlet entitled “Protect Your Family From Lead in Your Home” or a state promulgated equivalent; see 24 CFR § 35.88). [24 CFR § 35.88(a)(1)]

• [4:366.4] Sellers must also furnish to prospective “target housing” purchasers available records and reports on lead-based paint and lead-based paint hazards within the housing or common areas. A list of the records or reports provided to the purchaser must be included in the purchase contract or by attachment thereto; and if no such records or reports are available, the contract must so indicate. [24 CFR §§ 35.88(a)(4), 35.92(a)(3)]

• [4:366.5] Before becoming obligated under the purchase contract, the purchaser must be given a 10-day opportunity to conduct a risk assessment or inspection for lead-based paint and lead-based paint hazards (unless the parties mutually agree in writing upon a different period of time or the purchaser waives the risk assessment/inspection right in writing). [42 USC § 4852d(a)(2)(C); 24 CFR § 35.90]

1) [4:366.6] Exempt housing: Certain pre-1978 housing is exempt from the disclosure/warning requirements: e.g., housing for the elderly or persons with disabilities (unless any child under age six resides or is expected to reside in the housing); and 0-bedroom dwellings (studio apartments, dormitory housing, etc.). [See 42 USC § 4851b(27); 24 CFR §§ 35.82(b), (c), (d) & 35.86]

2) [4:366.7] Agent's obligations: The seller's real estate agent, if any, is required to inform the seller of the lead-based paint disclosure obligations and to ensure the seller's compliance. The agent is personally responsible for making the disclosures if the seller fails to do so. [42 USC § 4852d(a)(4); 24 CFR § 35.94; see also ¶ 2:195.1]

3) [4:366.8] Prescribed form of disclosures/warnings: Specific disclosure and warning language must be included in the purchase contract or in an attachment thereto. [See 42 USC § 4852d(a); 24 CFR §§ 35.88(a), 35.92(a)]

4) [4:366.9] Acknowledgment and certification; retention of records: Sellers must obtain the purchaser's acknowledgment of receipt of the required disclosures and information. The seller, purchaser and any participating real estate agent must sign a certification of accuracy of the seller's disclosure and the purchaser's acknowledgment, and the seller must keep a copy of the completed certification for at least three years after the sale is consummated. [24 CFR § 35.92(a)(4), (7) & (c)(1)]

5) [4:366.10] Penalties for noncompliance: Sellers and their agents who knowingly violate the disclosure requirements are subject to civil or criminal fines of up to $10,000 per violation and/or imprisonment for up to one year; and may be enjoined. The violator also faces treble damages liability to the purchaser in a private civil suit (three times the amount of the lessee's actual damages caused by the failure to disclose), along with the purchaser's costs, attorney fees and expert witness fees incurred in the civil action. [See 42 USC §§ 3545, 4852d(b); 24 CFR § 35.96]

(b) [4:366.11] Disclosure by providing DRE environmental hazards booklet: A consumer information booklet entitled “Environmental Hazards: A Guide for Homeowners, Buyers, Landlords and Tenants,” published by the Department of Real Estate and available through the California Association of Realtors, describes common environmental hazards (including asbestos, lead-based paint and mold) that can affect real property. The seller's delivery of this booklet to the buyer “is deemed to be adequate to inform” the buyer of common environmental hazards that can affect the property. [Civ.C. § 2079.7(a)]

➪ [4:366.11a] PRACTICE POINTER: Notwithstanding delivery of the booklet to the buyer, prudence suggests that the seller explicitly disclose in writing any known environmental hazard conditions on the property. [See Civ.C. § 2079.7(b)—nothing in Civ.C. § 2079.7(a) alters seller's/broker's duty “to disclose the existence of known environmental hazards on or affecting the real property”]

Cross-refer: For further discussion of hazardous materials disclosure requirements in real property sales transactions, see ¶ 2:192 ff. And for a comprehensive treatment of environmental hazards liabilities, see Ch. 5.

[4:366.12 - 4:366.14] Reserved.

(4) [4:366.15] Home roof warranties: Sellers of newly-constructed residential structures must provide their buyers with copies of roof warranties. [Civ.C. §§ 1797.90-1797.96]

(5) [4:366.16] Anchoring water heaters: All new and replacement water heaters and all existing residential water heaters must be braced, anchored or strapped to resist displacement in an earthquake. (At a minimum, water heaters must be secured in accordance with the California Plumbing Code or a municipality's modifications thereto made pursuant to Health & Saf.C. § 17958.5.) [Health & Saf.C. § 19211(a)]

Sellers of any real property containing a water heater must provide their prospective purchasers with written certification of compliance with this requirement. The certification may be included in the transactional documents, the Homeowner's Guide to Earthquake Safety (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10149), the real estate sales contract or receipt for deposit, or the Civ.C. § 1102.6/§ 1102.6a Real Estate Transfer Disclosure Statement. [Health & Saf.C. § 19211(b)]

(6) [4:366.17] Proximity of registered sex offenders: Contracts for the sale of single-family residential real property must contain a statutory notice, in at least 8-point type, advising that (i) law enforcement maintains for public access a data base of information about the location of registered sex offenders (applicable to contracts entered into on or after 7/1/99 and before 9/1/05); or (ii) the Department of Justice maintains for public access an "Internet Web site at www.meganslaw.ca.gov" containing the addresses where registered sex offenders reside or the "community of residence and ZIP Code" in which the offenders reside (applicable to contracts entered into on or after 4/1/06). A contract entered into on or after 9/1/05 and before 4/1/06, must contain one or the other of these notices. (see Civ.C. § 2079.10a(a) (also applicable to residential lease or rental agreements))]

(a) [4:366.18] Notice "deemed" adequate: Unless otherwise required by an existing duty (statutory or common law), no further information is required from the seller regarding the proximity in the neighborhood of registered sex offenders —i.e., delivery of the statutory notice (¶ 4:366.17) is "deemed" adequate. [Civ.C. § 2079.10a(b), (c)]

(b) [4:366.19] Statutory immunity: Registered sex offenders have no cause of action against the disclosing party based on information contained in a Civ.C. § 2079.10a notice. [Civ.C. § 2079.10a(b)]

(7) [4:366.20] Toxic mold on nonresidential property: See discussion at ¶ 2:195.10.

(8) [4:366.21] Continuing lien securing special tax levy, assessment installments: See discussion at ¶ 2:197 ff.

(9) [4:366.22] Supplemental property tax bills: See discussion at ¶ 2:198.

(10) [4:366.23] Transfer fees: Sellers of residential property are required to notify buyers of any fees that must be paid upon transfer or sale of the property. [Civ.C. §§ 1098, 1098.5 & 1102.6e]

(The above statutory provisions also apply to transfers of all other types of properties except that the requisite disclosure statements need not provide actual dollar-cost examples of the transfer fees; ¶ 4:366.23b.)

(a) [4:366.23a] Defined: Subject to specified exceptions (below), a "transfer fee" includes any required payment imposed by a covenant, restriction or condition contained in a deed, contract, security instrument or other document affecting the transfer or sale of, or interest in real property. [Civ.C. § 1098]

A transfer fee does not include, among other charges, governmentally imposed taxes; mechanics' lien fees; fees incurred pursuant to court-ordered transfers, payments or judgments; and fees incurred in connection with marital separation/dissolution agreements or estate or trust administrations. [See Civ.C. § 1098(a)]

(b) [4:366.23b] Recorded disclosure statement by entity imposing fee: As a condition of payment of the transfer fee, the person or entity imposing the fee must record with the county recorder for the county where the property is located, concurrently with the instrument creating the transfer fee requirement, a document titled "Payment of Transfer Fee Required" that sets forth, in at least 14-point boldface type, all of the following:

• Current owners, legal description and assessor's parcel number;

• Fee amount (if flat), percentage of sales price constituting fee, or method for calculating same;

• Actual dollar-cost examples of fees for homes priced at $250,000, $500,000 and $750,000;

• Date/circumstances under which transfer fee requirement expires, if any;

• Purpose for which funds from fee will be used;

• Entity to which funds from fee will be paid and specific contact information regarding where funds are to be sent;

• Signature of authorized representative of entity to which funds from fee will be paid; and

• Subject to specified exceptions under federal regulations, private transfer fees created on or after 2/8/2011 must contain an additional notice in at least 14-point boldface type disclosing the fact that federal housing agencies are prohibited from dealing in mortgages on properties encumbered by private transfer fee covenants that do not provide a "direct benefit" to the real property encumbered, and persons who want to purchase such properties may have difficulty obtaining financing. [See Civ.C. § 1098.5(a), (b); compare Fowler v. M & C Ass'n Mgmt. Services, Inc. (2013) 220 CA4th 1152, 1156-1157, 163 CR3d 717, 719-721—title transfer fees that do not exceed association's actual cost of changing records fall within Davis-Stirling Common Interest Development Act exception to recording requirement] Caution: Excepted transfer fee covenants are not required to comply with the above additional notice requirement; see Civ.C. § 1098.6, ¶ 4:366.24.

(c) [4:366.23c] Seller's disclosure statement for buyer: In addition, for properties transferred on or after 1/1/08 that are subject to a transfer fee, the seller must provide the buyer, at the same time the Civ.C. § 1102.6 Transfer Disclosure Statement (¶ 4:355) is provided, an additional disclosure statement containing all the following information:

• Notice that payment of transfer fee is required upon property's transfer;

• Amount of fee required for asking price of real property and description of how that fee is calculated;

• Notice that final fee amount may be different if fee is based upon percentage of final sale price;

• Entity to which funds from fee will be paid;

• Purposes for which funds from fee will be used; and

• Date or circumstances under which obligation to pay transfer fee expires, if any. [Civ.C. § 1102.6e]

(d) [4:366.24] Transfer fees *created on or after 1/1/19 prohibited; exceptions: Other than excepted transfer fee covenants as defined under federal regulation, transfer fees created on or after 1/1/19 are prohibited. Any transfer fee created in violation of the foregoing prohibition is "void as against public policy." Also, effective 1/1/19, excepted transfer fee covenants are not required to comply with Civ.C. § 1098.5(b)(2)(H)'s additional notice requirement (¶ 4:366.23c). [Civ.C. § 1098.6]

(11) [4:366.25] Lawsuits or claims that threaten or affect property: See discussion at ¶ 2:212.

(12) [4:366.26] Water-conserving plumbing fixtures: See discussion at ¶ 2:213.

(13) [4:366.27] Energy use; nonresidential buildings: Regulations adopted by the California Energy Commission require commercial building owners to disclose a building's energy use over the past 12 months to prospective buyers, lessees and lenders. Nonresidential buildings must comply with these regulations at staggered dates based on a building's square footage. [See 20 CCR § 1680 et seq.]

(14) [4:366.28] Miscellaneous statutory disclosures: Sellers and/or brokers are subject to many other statutory disclosure requirements. For further discussion, see ¶ 2:170 ff.

g. [4:367] Buyer's "due diligence" (investigation) checklist: The nature and scope of a buyer's inspection and investigation naturally varies with the type and extent of real and personal property being conveyed. The most common items are noted in the checklist at ¶ 4:368 ff.

As a general rule, however, all investigations should be conducted with an eye toward both the current use of the property and the buyer's (or subsequent user's) intended future use. Also, the buyer should be cognizant of a lender's concerns (e.g., although the buyer might not care that the property is in violation of certain laws or encroaches on other property, a lender might be unwilling to finance the purchase under such circumstances).

➪ [4:367.1] PRACTICE POINTER FOR BUYER: Preprinted form purchase agreements may contain an "automatic approval" clause stating that all matters are deemed approved unless the buyer specifically disapproves of a matter in writing. To protect against inadvertent waivers, buyers may want to consider modifying the agreement to require written notice of the buyer's approval of all due-diligence items.

(1) [4:368] Geological: A geological investigation is essential when the property is unimproved or in a hillside or slide area or other area of unstable soil.

(2) [4:369] Seismic: A seismic investigation is particularly important if the structure is old. In any event, many municipalities now require compliance with specific seismic safety standards.

(3) [4:370] Toxic/environmental: Some type of investigation for toxic and environmental violations is critical.

For instance, a buyer who thoroughly investigates the environmental condition of the property prior to closing of the transaction is positioned to qualify for the “contiguous property owner” or “bona fide potential purchaser” exemption from, or to assert the “innocent landowner” defense to, CERCLA liability. See ¶ 5:235 ff. for detailed discussion of buyer's environmental “due diligence.”

(4) [4:371] Engineering: An engineering investigation should cover both the existing improved structures and the buyer's proposed development of the property.

(5) [4:372] Building: Every structure should be inspected by a knowledgeable professional to determine (at a minimum) the condition of:

• The foundation;

• The roof;

• Plumbing;

• Electrical (wiring, outlets, etc.);

• Heating, ventilating and air conditioning systems;

• Elevators;

• Security system; and

• Pools and spas.

(Of course, all of the above should pass inspection for compliance with applicable building and other Code requirements.)

(6) [4:373] Survey: In older, established neighborhoods, a survey (or at least a boundary survey) is beneficial to determine whether there are any encroachments, unrecorded rights of way, etc. As a practical matter, however, surveys are rarely conducted for other improved residential structures, and smaller commercial and industrial properties. (This is simply a matter of custom arising from the cost-benefit analysis of procuring a survey.)

On the other hand, an ALTA/American Congress on Surveying and Mapping Land Title (ACSM) survey of the property (ALTA Survey) is almost always required for ALTA title insurance coverage.

(a) [4:373.1] Benefits of ALTA survey: Some of the benefits of an ALTA survey include:

• The buyer can determine the exact location and boundaries of the property to be purchased. It is often difficult from the “metes and bounds” legal description for nonsurveyors to make such a determination.

• An ALTA survey provides the precise location of easements and physical encumbrances described in the title insurance exception schedules and physical improvements located on the property. Again, it is sometimes difficult to determine the exact location of easements from the “metes and bounds” descriptions in the public records.

• An ALTA survey may disclose physical encroachments not indicated in the title commitment, such as boundary fences that do not correspond with the true boundaries, or potential prescriptive easements, thereby reducing the possibility of subsequent litigation. [Cf. Martin v. Van Bergen (2012) 209 CA4th 84, 87-88, 146 CR3d 667, 668-669—fence erected on neighboring properties by parties' predecessors in interest without benefit of any survey did not correspond to true boundary, resulting in defendants ultimately losing 8% to 10% of their almond orchard]

(7) Plans and specifications

(a) [4:374] Generally: Buyers should consider reviewing the architectural plans and specifications for all improvements on the property. (Preferably, these should be "as built" plans and specifications—i.e., reflecting the improvements as actually built, not as they were proposed to be built.) However, most sellers are understandably reluctant to certify the accuracy or completeness of plans and specifications prepared by a third party. And, in any event, they should be reviewed with a degree of circumspection, as they may be out of date or incorrect.

(b) [4:375] Tenant improvement/build-out plans and specifications: Buyers purchasing commercial rental property should consider obtaining copies of the plans and specifications for any substantial tenant improvement work that has been completed or is in the process of being completed.

(8) [4:376] Status of permits: The buyer may want to review those governmental permits that are applicable to the property and relate to both the property's current and intended future use (e.g., zoning permits, building permits, conditional use permits, etc.).

(9) [4:376.1] Regulations affecting intended use: Similarly, the buyer should investigate whether there are any governmental land use regulations affecting the intended use of the property (e.g., building moratoriums on beachfront property; condominium conversion limitations, etc.). (Even in the face of known preexisting land use regulations, certain language can be added to the purchase and sale agreement that may help the buyer successfully pursue a possible "takings" cause of action.) See further discussion at ¶ 4:408 ff.

[4:376.2 - 4:376.4] Reserved.

(10) [4:376.5] ADA compliance: Title III of the Americans with Disabilities Act (ADA Title III, 42 USC § 12181 et seq.) broadly prohibits private entities from discriminating on the basis of disability in "places of public accommodation" (places open to the public, including places of lodging, food and drink establishments, sales and entertainment facilities, private schools, etc., 42 USC § 12181(7)) and in "commercial facilities" (nonresidential places that, although not open to the public, affect commerce, including factories, warehouses and office buildings, 42 USC § 12181(2)). The purpose is to ensure that these properties are readily accessible to and usable by disabled persons. [42 USC § 12181 et seq.]

If the property to be purchased is a "place of public accommodation" or a "commercial facility" subject to the ADA, an inspection of the premises will be crucial to assess the facility's current ADA compliance and to identify those areas that may require immediate ADA compliance measures (see ¶ 4:376.6 ff.). If the buyer intends to use the property in a business that will be serving the public, it may be advisable to conduct the inspection with an architect knowledgeable about ADA compliance.

(a) [4:376.6] Mandatory retrofitting in places of public accommodation: As to "places of public accommodation," ADA Title III generally mandates retrofitting (removing architectural barriers to handicapped access) in existing structures (facilities occupied before 1/26/93) and precludes alterations or new construction that could create obstacles to handicapped access (42 USC §§ 12182 & 12183). [See Pinnock v. International House of Pancakes Franchisee (SD CA 1993) 844 F.Supp. 574—upholding constitutionality of ADA retrofitting requirements (neither a "taking" nor unconstitutionally void for vagueness, etc.)]

1) [4:376.7] Scope of retrofitting: ADA retrofitting or remedial action ("barrier removal," see 42 USC § 12182(b)(2)(A)(iv) & (v)) may impose a broad range of compliance obligations—e.g., (i) installing ramps and making curb cuts in sidewalks and entrances, (ii) widening doors and installing accessible door hardware, (iii) repositioning furniture, shelves and telephones, (iv) adding raised markings on elevator buttons, (v) installing flashing alarm lights, (vi) installing grab bars in toilet stalls and raised toilet seats, (vii) creating specially-designated and accessible handicapped parking spaces, (viii) removing high-pile, low-density carpeting, etc.

2) [4:376.7a] Ongoing obligation: The duty to remove architectural access barriers at places of public accommodation (¶ 4:376.6 ff.) extends beyond initial construction and significant alterations of existing structures. A place of public accommodation must remove architectural barriers "where such removal is readily achievable." [42 USC § 12182(b)(2)(A)(iv); see also 28 CFR § 36.304(a)—removal is "readily achievable" if it is "easily accomplishable and able to be carried out without much difficulty or expense"; Madden v. Del Taco, Inc. (2007) 150 CA4th 294, 296, 301-304, 58 CR3d 313, 314-315, 318-321—restaurant had duty to remove concrete trash container blocking wheelchair access to its entrance, even if there was "no significant alteration to its building" since its construction]

3) [4:376.7b] Compare—compliance with state access standards: California's disability access standards do not apply to an entire building or facility constructed prior to July 1, 1970. California's disability access standards apply to (i) public accommodations or facilities constructed on or after July 1, 1970, and (ii) areas where "alterations, structural repairs or additions are made" to existing public accommodations constructed prior to July 1, 1970. [Health & Saf.C. §§ 19955 & 19959]

a) [4:376.7c] "Public accommodation or facilities" defined: "Public accommodation or facilities" means "a building, structure, facility, complex, or improved area which is used by the general public," and includes "auditoriums, hospitals, theaters, restaurants, hotels, motels, stadiums, and convention centers." [Health & Saf.C. § 19955—"hospitals" includes, but is not limited to, hospitals, nursing homes, and convalescent homes]

b) [4:376.7d] No ongoing obligation: Unlike the ADA (¶ 4:376.7a), California does not impose an ongoing obligation for existing public accommodations or facilities to remove access barriers. Public accommodations are required to comply with California's disability access standards only if the facility is newly constructed or being repaired or altered (and, if so, only to the specific area being repaired or altered). [Skaff v. Rio Nido Roadhouse (2020) 55 CA5th 522, 536-538, 269 CR3d 578, 587-589 (reversing judgment for plaintiff on Health & Saf.C. § 19955 claim because plaintiff did not present evidence that restaurant and bar made any alterations that would trigger compliance with state disability access standards)]

(b) [4:376.8] No new barriers to handicapped access in commercial facilities: "Commercial facilities" are not subject to ADA Title III provisions regarding barrier removal (¶ 4:376.6 ff.). But such facilities cannot alter existing structures or construct new buildings in a manner that would impede handicapped access. [See 42 USC § 12183]

(c) Particular due diligence concerns for buyers

1) [4:376.9] Changing uses: Buyers should keep in mind that a property's ADA compliance level may change after the sale transaction closes. If the buyer intends to alter the type of business conducted at the facility or the nature of public accessibility, new and additional retrofitting/remediation may be required under Title III.

2) [4:376.10] Rental properties: Where there are tenants on the property, the buyer's compliance survey should include an examination of the leases to identify whether ADA compliance responsibility has been allocated between landlord and tenants; if so, the buyer should inspect the premises to determine whether the seller (landlord) and tenants have satisfied (or are satisfying) their ADA obligations.

If the leases do not address ADA compliance responsibilities, the buyer may want to negotiate with the seller to ensure compliance as of the closing (e.g., adding a contingency for the buyer's benefit that the seller complete ADA compliance measures as of a specified date); and should consider obtaining a seller's indemnification that will survive the closing.

➪ [4:376.11] PRACTICE POINTER—SELLER'S WARRANTIES/REPRESENTATIONS*: Although it makes sense to ask for a seller's warranty that the property complies with ADA Title III, many sellers will be reluctant to provide such warranties because of the quagmire of ambiguities involved in Title III. The next best thing is for the buyer to insist upon a representation that, to the seller's best knowledge, there are no Title III violations.

(11) [4:377] Tangible personal property: To the extent items of tangible personal property are being conveyed with the real property, they should be appropriately inspected (specifically, e.g., lighting fixtures, power generation systems, laundry equipment, etc.).

h. Pest control

(1) Inspection report

(a) [4:378] Seller's obligation to deliver to buyer: If a structural pest control inspection report (pursuant to Bus. & Prof.C. § 8516) is required by the purchase and sale agreement or as a condition of financing the transaction, the seller must deliver to the buyer a copy of the report "[a]s soon as practical before transfer of title … or the execution of a real property sales contract" (land sale contract). [Civ.C. § 1099(a)] Either personal or mail delivery to the buyer, buyer's agent or spouse (or registered domestic partner; see Fam.C. § 297.5(a)) is authorized. [See Civ.C. § 1099(c)]

➪ [4:378.1] PRACTICE POINTER: Since a duty to prepare the report arises from the lender's financing conditions or the parties' contractual conditions, the associated expense should also be negotiated by the parties.

[4:379] Reserved.

(2) [4:380] Provision for correction of defects: In drafting an applicable provision in the purchase agreement for pest control work, it is customary that only "curative work" (not "preventive work") be performed by the seller. (See also Civ.C. § 4780(a) regarding condominium projects: Unless otherwise provided in CC&Rs, homeowner's association is responsible for repair and maintenance of common areas occasioned by presence of wood-destroying pests or organisms.)

i. [4:381] "Good working order": Many purchase agreements require the seller to provide the electrical, plumbing and other "systems" in "good working order" at the close of the transaction. This is particularly true in residential sales.

j. [4:382] Local laws: State law and local ordinances require that certain safety mechanisms, such as smoke alarms and sprinkler systems, be installed on the property. [See, e.g., Health & Saf.C. § 13113.8 (smoke alarms)] The purchase agreement should require the seller to comply with such laws (or alternatively, give the buyer a monetary credit in lieu of compliance).

k. [4:383] Final inspection: Residential buyers in particular often desire the right of a final "walk-through" shortly before the closing (usually, to inspect for the correction of defects brought to the seller's attention and/or to conduct one last review for prior undetected problems in the physical condition of the property). However, a provision for the seller's benefit should be included specifying that the buyer's "satisfaction" with the condition of the property at the final walk-through stage is not a condition or "contingency"; and that the buyer will nevertheless be obligated to purchase the property on the terms set forth in the purchase agreement.

(Of course, the buyer's obligation should be contingent upon the seller's performing any agreed-upon repairs and corrections.)

➪ [4:384] PRACTICE POINTER: "Personal satisfaction" conditions are a real trap for sellers: They may give buyers an easy way out of the transaction by permitting the buyer (arguably, without good cause) to determine the property is "unsatisfactory" and thus elect to terminate the purchase agreement (or sue for breach). Thus, it is in the seller's best interest that the final walk-through be viewed as a mere courtesy; and the requisite physical condition of the property as of the closing date be measured by an ascertainable, objective standard.

A well-drafted purchase agreement should reflect that the property will be transferred in the same condition as of the date of the purchase agreement, with the exception of ordinary wear and tear and specifically agreed-upon required repairs.

10. [4:385] Contingencies (Conditions) to Closing and Parties' "Due Diligence": Both buyer and seller may desire to have certain conditions precedent (often referred to as "contingencies" or "conditions") to their respective obligations to buy and sell the property. Sometimes, the contingencies are structured as conditions precedent to the "effectiveness" of the purchase agreement—i.e., the agreement does not take effect until the contingencies are satisfied. More often, however, the contract is "effective" upon execution and each party's respective obligations to close the transaction are subject to, and conditioned upon, satisfaction of specified contingencies. [See Steiner v. Thexton (2010) 48 C4th 411, 419, 106 CR3d 252, 258—common form of real estate contract binds both parties at outset, while including contingency (e.g., loan or inspection contingency) that allows one or both parties to withdraw if contingency fails]

a. In general

(1) [4:386] Nature of contingencies: Obviously, certain basic contingencies and conditions are implicit in every contract (e.g., buyer clearly is not obligated to pay the purchase price unless seller tenders the deed and possession; and vice-versa). However, most buyers and sellers insist on identifying particular contingencies tailored to their intentions.

For example, the buyer generally requires a certain amount of time to investigate the property and otherwise conduct "due diligence" to determine whether the buyer even wants to purchase the property. The buyer is typically given a specified period within which to make such investigations and, if not satisfied, to elect to terminate the agreement.

(2) [4:387] Seller's concerns: Although sellers should be willing to accommodate the buyer's contingency concerns, contingencies are naturally against the seller's interests because they leave the deal "hanging." Thus, sellers should strive to ensure that (a) all contingencies are limited in scope and specifically identified, (b) the contingency periods are as short as possible, and (c) the buyer is required to give specific written notice of an election to terminate the agreement or otherwise be deemed to have approved and/or waived the contingencies.

(3) [4:388] Covenants distinguished: Care must be taken to identify contingencies as conditions rather than covenants. A "covenant" is a promise or obligation. "A condition is an event, not certain to occur, which must occur, unless nonoccurrence is excused, before performance under a contract becomes due." [Rest.2d Contracts §§ 224, 225]

The consequences of characterizing a "condition" as a "covenant" can be disastrous: The failure of a condition excuses a party's performance under the contract. But the nonperformance of a covenant gives rise to an action for breach of contract.

➪ [4:389] PRACTICE POINTER: Neither party should "covenant" to perform that which may be expensive, impractical or impossible to perform. Such events should, at best, be made contingencies. In short, neither party should promise to do anything over which the party has no direct control.

Cross-refer: For a more detailed discussion of breach of covenants vs. satisfaction of conditions, see ¶ 11:70 ff.

b. [4:390] Identifying benefited parties: Contingencies for the buyer's benefit should be separately identified as being "solely for the benefit of the buyer." Conversely, contingencies for the seller's benefit should be identified as "solely for the benefit of the seller." In this way, there will be no room for dispute as to who, as between buyer and seller, has the right to invoke the contingency to withdraw from the contract or, instead, to waive the contingency and proceed with the transaction notwithstanding its nonoccurrence. [See WYDA Assocs. v. Merner (1996) 42 CA4th 1702, 1714, 50 CR2d 323, 330—where contract was silent on issue, court determined, under the facts, financing contingency was for buyer's benefit, but contingency period (time allotted buyer to obtain financing) was for seller's benefit]

c. [4:391] Discretion in approving satisfaction of contingencies: The party for whose benefit a contingency exists will generally want the broadest latitude in determining whether it has been satisfied. The other party, of course, will want to limit the benefited party's discretion to approve or disapprove satisfaction of a contingency.

On this issue, there are several alternatives:

- The benefited party may be given the right to disapprove a contingency in its sole and absolute discretion (obviously a disadvantage for the other party).

- Alternatively, the benefited party may be given the right to disapprove a contingency in its "reasonable" discretion (which could then lead to dispute over what is "reasonable").

- Or, the parties can set specific or identifiable objective standards for approving or disapproving a condition. For example, if the buyer's obligation to purchase the property is contingent upon obtaining financing, the parties might agree that this condition will be deemed satisfied if the buyer can obtain a loan at (or less than) a specified interest rate for a term of a specific (or minimum) number of years.

d. [4:392] Checklist of contingencies for seller's benefit: These are some of the contingencies commonly included for the seller's benefit:

(1) [4:393] Co-owners' consent: When the property is co-owned, one owner may have authority to sign for the others (e.g., partners, board of directors, cotrustees, spouse or registered domestic partner), but may also be required (or may simply prefer) to obtain the co-owners' consent. In this situation, the signing seller may require a contingency period to obtain the requisite consents.

(2) [4:394] Lender's consent: When a lender holding a lien against the property must approve the sale, the seller will require a contingency to obtain the lender's consent. (This most often happens when the buyer intends to purchase the property subject to an existing loan that includes a "due-on-sale" clause (see ¶ 4:296 ff., 6:388); or if the lender has the right to approve any proposed sale as a profit or equity participant in the property (see ¶ 6:60 ff.).)

(3) [4:394.1] Verification of buyer's authority: It might be important to verify the authority of the prospective buyer. This is especially so where the buyer is a partnership, corporation or other business entity; the seller wants to be assured that the individuals with whom it is negotiating and who will be executing the agreement have authority to bind the entity. The seller, therefore, may want to make the deal contingent on proof that the entity is duly formed and its constituents are officers empowered to conclude the transaction on the entity's behalf. (See ¶ 4:203 ff., 4:242 ff. re statement of partnership/statement of partnership authority, etc.; see also ¶ 4:436 re warranty of authority.)

(4) [4:395] Approval of buyer's financial condition: In seller-financed transactions, the seller will want to review and approve the buyer's financial statement (and perhaps other financial information) before determining whether it is obligated to sell. Such a contingency may also be desirable in transactions not involving seller financing, to enable the seller to determine if the buyer has the financial capability to close. This is especially important when a particularly long escrow period is contemplated … because, during that time, the seller will be rendering the property unmarketable based on the assumption the buyer has the financial strength to close.

(5) [4:396] Counsel's review and approval of agreement: When a purchase agreement is reached without counsel's involvement, the parties may sometimes provide that the contract is contingent on their respective attorneys' review and approval.

➪ [4:397] PRACTICE POINTER: Such a contingency can create serious potential for dispute, litigation or at least renegotiation. Because every contract carries with it an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing (¶ 4:275.5), the lawyers may not have much leeway for disapproving or modifying an agreement already signed by the parties.

For this reason, the better practice is not to sign a purchase agreement until the lawyers have reviewed and approved it.

e. [4:398] Checklist of contingencies for buyer's benefit: The following are some of the more common contingencies that buyers typically attempt to negotiate (but because each buyer and property are unique, not all will be reasonable or applicable under a given set of circumstances):

(1) [4:399] Co-owners' consent: See ¶ 4:393 (the same applies when several buyers are purchasing the property as co-owners).

(2) [4:400] Counsel's review and consent: See ¶ 4:396 ff.

(3) [4:401] Financing: This is perhaps the most critical contingency for buyers because they must have time and discretion to obtain acceptable financing. Although the time-frame for obtaining a loan will vary depending on market conditions and the size and complexity of the financing, even in a straightforward residential transaction 30-45 days is usually required to secure a written loan commitment and fund the loan.

➪ [4:402] PRACTICE POINTER FOR SELLERS: The seller can retain some control over the buyer's discretion in satisfying this contingency by requiring the buyer to obtain a loan at the "then-prevailing interest rate and then-prevailing terms and conditions for comparable loans secured by comparable property."

It is also in the seller's interest to set a definite time period for the buyer to obtain suitable financing (e.g., 60 or 90 days). The specified contingency period is for the seller's benefit—i.e., it ensures the seller will not have to keep their property off the market indefinitely while the buyer looks for funding. [See WYDA Assocs. v. Merner (1996) 42 CA4th 1702, 1714, 50 CR2d 323, 330]

(4) [4:403] Physical inspection: Most buyers want broad discretion in their approval or disapproval of the physical condition of the property (including geological, soil and environmental conditions, and, if applicable, ADA compliance (¶ 4:376.5)). As indicated earlier, it is to the seller's advantage not to condition approval on the buyer's personal satisfaction but, instead, to tie approval to some objective standard (see ¶ 4:384).

In addition, a condition of the closing should be that the property is in the same physical condition as when the purchase agreement was signed (except for reasonable wear and tear and specifically agreed-upon required repairs, ¶ 4:384).

(5) [4:404] Condition of title: Information pertinent to the condition of title that comes from outside the recorded chain of title may place the buyer on reasonable inquiry notice (constructive notice) of possible clouds on title (such as judgment liens; see Marriage of Cloney (2001) 91 CA4th 429, 441-442, 110 CR2d 615, 625—purchaser had constructive notice from escrow agent's knowledge). Therefore, buyers should thoroughly research the condition of title to the property to be purchased.

In this regard, buyers should always insist on the right to review a preliminary title report, as well as copies of all of the title exceptions set forth therein (¶ 4:334 ff.). If a survey will be procured, a review of the condition of title should also include the buyer's right to review the survey. In addition, the purchase agreement should specify that a condition of the closing will be issuance of a title insurance policy showing only those title exceptions permitted by the purchase agreement.

➪ PRACTICE POINTERS

WESTLAW © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

• [4:405] For buyer's counsel: Again, remember to clarify the buyer's right to review actual copies of exceptions to title; the title report is an abbreviated description of the documents of record and thus may not itself be sufficient to determine the condition of title. (See ¶ 4:331.)

• [4:405.1] For lienholders' counsel: Make sure all information lienholders include in a recorded instrument is accurate to ensure their liens are in the property's chain of title and will appear during a "reasonable inquiry." [See Vasquez v. LBS Fin'l Credit Union (2020) 52 CA5th 97, 108, 113-114, 265 CR3d 78, 86, 90-91—buyers owned property free and clear of judgment liens against seller due to lienholder incorrectly using seller's middle name as first name on recorded abstracts of judgment]

(a) [4:406] Election to terminate in event of title exception: Even if a title insurance company is willing to issue an endorsement or otherwise insure against enforceability of certain title exceptions, it may be in the buyer's interest to expressly reserve a right to terminate the agreement if a title exception exists (other than as agreed in the purchase contract).

➪ [4:407] PRACTICE POINTER: A title insurance policy only provides coverage in the amount of the premium. If buyers will incur additional development expenses, they may not want to run the risk of a future claim despite the existence of title insurance. Title insurance is simply "insurance"; it does not eliminate the cost, delay and aggravation of a lawsuit. (See more detailed discussion at ¶ 3:6 ff.)

In short, it may be immaterial to the buyer that the title company does not consider the potential claim serious. In evaluating an exception to title contingency, consider whether your client is willing to take the risk that a title exception will result in a third party claim.

(6) [4:408] Feasibility of property for development or buyer's intended use: Buyers intending to develop the property or vary its existing use may require time to make various studies and investigations to determine whether the contemplated development or use is legally permitted and physically and/or practically feasible. There should, of course, be a deadline for the buyer to complete the necessary investigation. However, a condition to the closing should also be included to the effect that no new law, moratorium, ordinance or regulation is adopted or enacted that would make the buyer's development or intended use unlawful.

➪ [4:408.1] PRACTICE POINTER RE PREEXISTING LAND USE REGULATIONS AFFECTING INTENDED USE*: Some buyers may want to go forward with a real estate purchase notwithstanding known existing land use regulations that could impede the intended use, hoping they can successfully challenge the regulations or obtain a variance. When representing a buyer who anticipates challenging existing governmental regulations affecting the plans for the property, the purchase and sale agreement should include language expressly defining the buyer's expectations with regard to the contemplated use despite knowledge of the land use regulations—i.e., "Buyer is acquiring the same rights as Seller, including the right to challenge the validity or application of any existing regulations." If the buyer's plans are ultimately thwarted by the regulations, such language may make it easier for the buyer to prevail in a damages suit for an unlawful "taking." [See Palazzolo v. Rhode Island (2001) 533 US 606, 635-636, 121 S.Ct. 2448, 2467]

(7) [4:409] Review of third party contracts: In commercial and rental property transactions there are invariably several third party contracts the buyer should review—e.g., contracts for janitorial service, security service, air conditioning service, landscaping service, property management; fire and liability insurance policies; employment agreements; personal property leases; and other agreements affecting use or operation of the property. The buyer will want to approve these contracts as a condition to the obligation to purchase the property.

(8) [4:410] Rental property—review of leases and rent roll: Buyers purchasing rental property naturally need a right to review the leases and/or a "rent roll"; and, if there will be a particularly long period of time before closing, the buyer may also want a right to review subsequent rent rolls received up until the closing date. Additionally, the buyer may want to prohibit the seller from entering into any new leases during the term of the purchase agreement unless they are acceptable to the buyer or each lease is on terms satisfying certain specific parameters.

Reviewing rent rolls associated with commercial property is particularly important to prospective buyers because the property's value is quite often based, at least in part, on its rental history. [See Enea v. Sup.Ct. (3-D) (2005) 132 CA4th 1559, 1568, 34 CR3d 513, 519, fn. 4]

As with other third party agreements, the buyer's review and approval of leases and a rent roll is typically a condition to the obligation to purchase the property.

(a) [4:411] Pertinent lease items: All leases should be carefully examined by buyer's counsel since an assignment of a lease may also carry with it the specific assumption of liabilities. Aside from verifying rents and security deposits, counsel should:

- Make certain the buyer has received complete copies of all leases and amendments thereto (together with an appropriate representation and warranty by the seller; see ¶ 4:441).
- Verify whether there is any prepaid rent; and, if so, ensure the buyer receives an appropriate credit at the closing (¶ 4:609).
- Verify the terms of each lease, including any options to extend or renew.
- Determine whether any tenant has an option to lease additional space or right of first refusal to lease additional space.
- Ascertain whether any tenant has an option to purchase the property or a right of first refusal to purchase (see Ch. 8).
- Determine whether any tenant has exclusive use rights (i.e., exclusive right to operate a particular type of business on the property).
- Ascertain the landlord's rights upon damage, destruction or condemnation of the leased spaces and whether all the leases for the project are consistent with respect to those issues and other landlord rights.

Should damage, destruction or condemnation occur, serious problems may arise if different tenants are to be treated differently. For example, under some leases, the landlord might be obligated to rebuild (and the tenants would be obligated to continue their leases); but, under other leases, damage or destruction may give the tenants a right to terminate their leases. Clearly, the landlord would prefer consistency in its (and the tenants') obligations upon damage to or destruction of the premises.

- Verify the landlord's rights and remedies under each lease in the event of a tenant's default in payment of rent.
- Determine whether any real estate broker commissions may be due in respect to the lease for the balance of the term or for any extension of the term (buyers may be deemed to have assumed such commission obligations even though they did not actually execute a listing agreement with the broker).
- Determine whether the landlord has any obligation to make additional improvements to the building or any tenant's premises.
- Ascertain whether there are any tenant credits or allowances outstanding (e.g., tenant improvement allowances, rent concessions, etc.).
- Determine whether there is a tenants' association (such as a merchants' association) in existence or to be formed and whether the landlord is required to contribute any sums to the association.
- Verify whether the leases are subordinate to future financing; if not, the buyer may have difficulty refinancing the property prior to or after the closing. (However, this is not an issue in transactions involving residential leases.)
- Determine whether there are any common area or other shared expenses by the tenants; and, if so, whether the sharing of expenses is consistent among all tenants (landlords often charge certain tenants for certain common area expenses, but not other tenants).
- Determine whether any tenant uses or stores hazardous materials on the property (see Ch. 5).
- Identify the ownership of various improvements on and installations made to the premises.

• Determine whether there are any parking problems.

• In residential properties, determine whether unlawfully excessive security deposits are being held by the seller (Civ.C. § 1950.5 (amended Stats. 2023, Ch. 733; eff. 7/1/24) sets maximum limits for residential units); and, if the property is in a rent control jurisdiction, whether the rents charged and collected are within applicable rent control limits.

• Verify which expenses are paid by the tenant and which by the landlord (see ¶ 7:32 ff. for discussion of costs allocation between landlord and tenant).

• Carefully review any lease guaranties.

Cross-refer: These and other issues are covered in depth in Friedman, Garcia & Hoy, Cal. Prac. Guide: Landlord-Tenant (TRG).

(b) [4:412] Postclosing lease issues: A variety of postclosing lease matters must also be considered:

1) [4:413] Tenant defaults: If a tenant is in default at the time of closing, determine who has the right to collect rent arrearages that came due in the preclosing period. Typically, the seller will want the right to recover rent arrearages owing before the closing. While this makes sense conceptually, it does not make sense to bifurcate two different landlords' claims (the buyer's and the seller's) against the tenant. Instead, the buyer should agree that, to the extent past-due rent is recovered after the closing, the buyer will rebate to the seller that amount attributable to the preclosing rental period.

• [4:414] Comment: Some practical problems in implementing such a "rebate" obligation should also be addressed in the agreement. Notably, a judgment does not often state the months to which the back-due rent applies. Moreover, if there is a settlement, it may be difficult or impossible to determine how the settlement amount is to be allocated between pre-closing and post-closing rental periods. In any event, it is in the buyer's interest not to agree to any obligation to pursue a defaulting tenant (whether by litigation or otherwise).

➪ [4:415] PRACTICE POINTER: It is in the buyer's interest to include a provision in the contract to the effect that, in the event the buyer commences litigation against defaulting tenants, any recovered amounts owing the seller should be deemed reduced by the cost of the litigation (attorney fees and other litigation expenses).

2) [4:416] Application of security deposits: The parties should also carefully negotiate the manner in which tenant security deposits are to be applied. In other words, tenant security deposits should be transferred (or credited) to the buyer to the extent there are no preclosing tenant defaults; but the seller should have the right to apply each preclosing defaulting tenant's security deposit to the respective default, thereby reducing the aggregate amount of security deposits to be transferred (or credited) to the buyer at the closing.

(On the seller's postclosing statutory obligations re tenant security deposits, see ¶ 4:421.)

3) [4:417] Payment of operating costs: Many commercial leases require the prepayment (or post-payment) of common area maintenance (or "operating") costs. Buyer and seller should agree on some method of accounting for tenant payments of these costs.

For example, operating costs are typically estimated at the beginning of each year and there is an adjustment at the end of the calendar year when actual expenses are known. Tenants then pay the shortfall (or are rebated or credited for excess payments made during the preceding year). The seller will want a credit for any additional sums that may be due from a tenant. Because the precise figures are usually unknown at the closing date, and because there is a certain benefit in not making any postclosing calculations, it is advisable simply to estimate the amount and make that the "agreed-upon amount" for purposes of buyer and seller prorations.

4) [4:417.1] Change of ownership notice to tenants: At or immediately after the closing, a letter signed by the seller should be sent to all tenants advising them that the property, and (to the extent applicable) all security deposits, have been transferred to the new owner (see ¶ 4:421), and stating that all future rent should be paid to the new owner (as specified).

(9) Rental property—receipt of satisfactory estoppel certificates

(a) [4:418] Estoppel certificates (nonresidential property): Buyers purchasing rental property (as well as lenders financing the purchase of such property) are concerned that the leases and rent roll provided by the seller are correct and that the tenants have no claims of landlord breach under their leases. Buyers (and lenders) are also concerned about any waivers by the seller of rights against a tenant (these are not necessarily reflected in the lease but are binding on the buyer). [See Doll v. Maravilas (1947) 82 CA2d 943, 949, 187 P2d 885, 888; and Civ.C. § 823—tenant has same rights against buyer after closing that tenant held against seller before closing]

Therefore, when feasible, an "estoppel certificate" from each tenant (or "offset statement") satisfactory to the buyer (and lender) should be required. An estoppel certificate typically includes a certification as to the date of the lease; the parties to the lease; any amendments to the lease; the lease commencement and termination dates; whether the tenant has any rights of first refusal or options to purchase the property or to lease additional space; whether the landlord is in default under the lease; the amount of the security deposits; and the amount of rent. [See Robert T. Miner, M.D., Inc. v. Tustin Avenue Investors, LLC (2004) 116 CA4th 264, 273, 10 CR3d 178, 183—"By providing independent verification of the presence or absence of any side deals, estoppel certificates prevent unwelcome post-transaction surprises that might adversely affect the building's income stream"]

(For those nonresidential properties where it is not feasible to obtain tenant estoppel certificates, see ¶ 4:420.)

• FORM: Tenant Estoppel Certificate, see Form 4:J.

1) [4:418.1] Binding effect: Tenants are bound by the representations contained in their estoppel certificates. [Plaza Freeway Ltd. Partnership v. First Mountain Bank (2000) 81 CA4th 616, 619, 628-629, 96 CR2d 865, 867, 874—tenant bound by lease termination date stated in estoppel certificate provided to property's buyer; see more detailed discussion at ¶ 7:292.2 ff.]

➪ [4:418.2] PRACTICE POINTER FOR BUYER'S COUNSEL: It is good practice for buyer's counsel to compare each lease with the corresponding estoppel certificate to make sure the two are consistent and the certificate does not contain any ambiguities.

That way, should it be necessary later for the buyer to use the certificate as evidence against the tenant (e.g., in an eviction proceeding), there will be no dispute as to what the tenant intended to represent in the certificate.

2) [4:419] Compare—residential property: Buyers generally do not insist on estoppel certificates in residential rental (i.e., apartment project) transactions since they are extremely difficult and cumbersome to obtain. Moreover, the buyer's concerns can usually be alleviated by the seller's representation and warranty that the leases and rent rolls are complete and correct; that there are no outstanding tenant defaults; and that the tenants have not claimed any defaults by the seller. (Although the tenants will not be bound by the seller's representations, the seller will remain liable to the buyer for breach of such representations; see ¶ 4:420.1.)

(b) [4:420] Alternative to estoppel certificates: Although many commercial leases require tenants to deliver an estoppel certificate (and may permit the landlord to deliver one on behalf of tenants who fail to do so), some leases are silent on the subject. In the latter case, the purchase agreement should provide some mechanism to fill the gap.

1) [4:420.1] Seller's estoppel certificate; buyer's right to rely thereon: One alternative is to allow the seller to deliver its own estoppel certificate that will constitute a representation and warranty as to the statements therein (duration of leases, amount of rents, etc.). Of course, this does not bind the individual tenants; but if the representations therein are false, it will give the buyer the right to sue the seller for a breach of the purchase agreement. [See Linden Partners v. Wilshire Linden Assocs. (1998) 62 CA4th 508, 531, 73 CR2d 708, 722]

When a seller executes an estoppel certificate on a tenant's behalf, the buyer has no duty to investigate the accuracy of representations therein—even if there are avenues of knowledge available to the buyer which, if pursued, would reveal the falsity of the seller's representations. [Linden Partners v. Wilshire Linden Assocs., supra, 62 CA4th at 529, 73 CR2d at 720-721—sellers' estoppel certificate overstating tenant's current monthly rent breached purchase agreement, giving buyers damages remedy (buyers had no duty to undertake independent investigation as to correct method for computing tenant's rent and amount thereof)]

(10) [4:421] Rental property—disposition of tenant security deposits: Notwithstanding a sale, the seller (landlord) remains personally liable for tenant security deposits unless the seller either (a) transfers the security deposits to the buyer and notifies the tenants of the transfer (and of any claims made against the security) and provides the tenants with specified additional information; or (b) returns the security deposits to the tenants (after lawful deductions) together with an accounting. Compliance with either alternative may be made a contingency in the purchase agreement. [Civ.C. §§ 1950.5(g) (residential property), 1950.7(d) (commercial property); and see detailed treatment in Friedman, Garcia & Hoy, Cal. Prac. Guide: Landlord-Tenant (TRG), Ch. 2E]

(11) [4:422] Income and expense statements: The buyer may want to review and approve the seller's recent income and expense statements for the property (typically, back two or three years immediately preceding the date of the purchase agreement). This should include a review of the recent property tax bill.

(12) [4:423] Subdivision, zoning and use: It is in the buyer's interest to ascertain whether the land and improvements are in compliance with land use laws and regulations. This will entail verification of compliance with state and local zoning laws (Subdivision Map Act, etc.). [See Sixells, LLC v. Cannery Business Park (2008) 170 CA4th 648, 652, 88 CR3d 235, 238—contract that allowed purchaser of property to "waive" recording of final map violated Subdivision Map Act and was therefore void]

(A certificate of compliance may be obtained; see Gov.C. § 66499.35.)

The buyer may also want to verify the existence of permits, such as certificates of occupancy and building permits. Occasionally, the buyer may desire a contingency period to obtain a rezoning (or subdivision) of the property or permits to change the property's legally-permitted use.

(13) [4:424] Residential property—sale of buyer's residence: A contingency tied to sale of the buyer's residence is common in residential transactions. Buyers naturally may want to be relieved of any purchase obligation if unable to sell their existing house.

(14) [4:425] Changes in condition: A "catch-all" contingency should be included to ensure there are no material, adverse changes in the property, its management or operation, its revenues (e.g., rental income) or expenses, its physical condition, or its zoning between the date of execution of the purchase agreement and the closing. If such conditions have changed, the buyer will want either a right to terminate the agreement or an appropriate adjustment in the purchase price.

f. Consequences of failure/disapproval of contingency

(1) [4:426] Termination or adjustment of contract: When contingencies are tied to a party's approval or disapproval, disapproval typically triggers the benefited party's right to terminate the purchase agreement. However, this is not necessarily so upon the failure of a contingency; in that case, the remedy may instead be an appropriate adjustment in the contract price. For example, the parties can provide that if rental income for the property falls below a certain level, the purchase price will be automatically reduced to reflect a multiple of the actual rental income in existence as of the closing date.

Alternatively, the contract may give the party for whose benefit the contingency operates the option of either terminating the agreement or adjusting the obligation accordingly in the event of a specified failure of conditions. [See, e.g., Galdjie v. Darwish (2003) 113 CA4th 1331, 1338, 7 CR3d 178, 182—buyer's failure to remove lender approval contingency (¶ 4:394) justified seller's cancellation of agreement]

(2) [4:427] Contract not revived by retraction of disapproval: Once the purchase agreement is terminated by a party's disapproval of a contingency, the benefited party cannot thereafter revive the contract by retracting the disapproval. [Beverly Way Assocs. v. Barham (1990) 226 CA3d 49, 56, 276 CR 240, 244—buyer's disapproval of survey, approval of which was condition precedent to purchase obligation, terminated contract: buyer could not later waive condition and specifically enforce contract]

(3) [4:428] Exercise of benefited party's rights: If a contingency is not fulfilled, the benefited party should be required to give express written notice thereof to the other party (and escrow holder if an escrow has been opened). If notice is not given, the purchase agreement should provide for one of two alternatives: that the conditions are deemed either (a) automatically approved and satisfied; or (b) automatically disapproved and unsatisfied (and the parties' respective obligations to buy and sell automatically terminated).

➪ [4:428.1] PRACTICE POINTER: In some instances, the other party may wish to have the right to rectify or otherwise satisfy the failure of a condition. For example, if a buyer disapproves a particular exception to title, the seller may want the right—but not the obligation—to clear the disapproved exception within a certain period of time. Such rights should be clearly specified in the agreement.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(4) [4:429] Return of documents and monies upon termination: The purchase agreement should provide that, if it is terminated pursuant to a failure of condition, all monies and documents are to be returned (by the escrow and parties, respectively) to the party who originally deposited same. However, this obligation is typically made subject to the right to retain certain monies to offset miscellaneous escrow and title charges incurred to date; and the purchase agreement should specify how those costs will be shared and paid.

Cross-refer: On cancellation of an escrow, see ¶ 4:633 ff.

11. [4:430] Maintaining Property Prior to Closing: Whether characterized as a condition or covenant, the buyer customarily requires that the physical condition of the property, condition of title, and revenues from (and management of) the property be the same (or substantially the same) on the closing date as on the date the purchase agreement is signed. The buyer will thus want to establish specific guidelines for the leasing, management and/or operation of the property (depending on the type of property involved) during the term of the purchase agreement; and/or the buyer may want to have the right to approve any new leases or change in operation or management of the property prior to the closing. A plan for continued operation of the property is therefore beneficial, particularly if a long-term escrow is contemplated.

12. Representations and Warranties

a. General considerations

(1) [4:431] Competing objectives: Representations and warranties are usually intensely negotiated by attorneys. At one end of the spectrum is the seller, who takes the position that the buyer is capable of learning as much about the property as it needs to know, independent of any seller representations, and who will therefore argue that no seller representations or warranties are required. The buyer, in contrast, contends that much of the information about the property is uniquely within the seller's knowledge or, in any event, that it would simply be more expedient for the seller to disclose information about the property in the form of representations and warranties.

(2) [4:432] No avoidance of certain seller disclosure obligations: Notwithstanding a provision expressly stating the seller makes no representations or warranties, the seller cannot avoid its common law and statutory obligations to disclose certain matters affecting the property (see ¶ 4:351 ff.).

(3) [4:433] Distinction between "representation" and "warranty": Lawyers typically lump "representations" and "warranties" together as if they amounted to one and the same. But there is a technical difference between the terms: A representation is deemed to be antecedent, and as an inducement to, a contract but not part of the contract. A warranty is given contemporaneously with, and as part of, the contract. [See Black's Law Dictionary]

Even so, in most purchase and sale agreements, this is a distinction without much of a difference: Representations and warranties are rarely divided into "antecedent" representations and "contemporaneous" warranties. In either case, the substance of the representation or warranty is the primary concern.

The sections at ¶ 4:436 ff. highlight the most important representations and warranties that should be considered in any purchase and sale agreement.

(4) [4:434] Impact: For so long as they remain in existence, representations and warranties are independent obligations, the breach of which may draw a lawsuit and resulting liability. However, representations and warranties may be deemed merged into the deed, and are thereby extinguished by the conveyance, unless the parties expressly agree they will "survive the closing." [See Linden Partners v. Wilshire Linden Assocs. (1998) 62 CA4th 508, 524, 73 CR2d 708, 717—agreement obligated sellers to deliver "true, accurate and complete copies of all leases and other contracts" containing "no untrue statement of material fact" and further provided sellers' representations and warranties in connection therewith "shall survive the close of escrow" (buyers thus had breach of contract remedy after escrow closed when sellers' estoppel certificate re tenant rent proved inaccurate); Western Filter Corp. v. Argan, Inc. (9th Cir. 2008) 540 F3d 947, 952 (applying Calif. law); but see also Ram's Gate Winery, LLC v. Roche (2015) 235 CA4th 1071, 1079-1081, 185 CR3d 935, 940-942 (limiting doctrine's applicability to cases where contractual terms are inconsistent with deed or where parties clearly intend all contractual obligations to be subsumed in recorded deed's recitals); and ¶ 4:16, 4:454]

[4:435] Reserved.

b. Buyer's and seller's authority and performance

(1) [4:436] Authority of signing parties: If the transaction is between entities, each will want the signing parties to specifically represent they have the authority to bind their respective corporate, partnership, trust or other entity to the purchase agreement.

➪ [4:437] PRACTICE POINTER: Occasionally, this point may be a source of contention as where, e.g., a junior officer of a corporation does not wish to make any individual representations. The dilemma can sometimes be solved by a party delivering specific corporate resolutions or, in the case of a partnership, limited liability company or trust, by providing the other party with a copy of the partnership agreement, articles of organization or declaration of trust demonstrating the signing party's authority. Alternatively, a written opinion of counsel as to the authority of the signing party might suffice to resolve the issue.

(2) [4:438] Performance: Hand in hand with the warranty of authority is a representation from each party that they have the ability to perform the purchase agreement in accordance with its terms.

In particular, the buyer may insist on the seller's representation that there are no outstanding agreements or restrictions that would preclude or impair the seller's ability to convey the property in accordance with the purchase agreement.

• [4:438.1] Comment: Such a seller's warranty may be superfluous because the seller has already obligated itself to convey the property in accordance with the purchase contract; a representation that it can do so would not seem to add much. In any event, a covenant to the same effect is implied in the grant deed; see ¶ 4:37.1, 4:341.

c. [4:439] Condition of title: Sellers are often reluctant to make any representation concerning the condition of title (other than that they hold title). In any event, such representations really are not necessary because the buyer is given the right to review a title report and thereafter receive a title insurance policy.

(1) [4:439.1] Encumbrances: Sellers should beware of making any broad representation that the property is "free and clear from all encumbrances." As applied to an estate in land, an "encumbrance" may include "whatever charges, burdens, obstructs, or impairs [the property's] use or impedes its transfer"; even encroachments unknown to or unanticipated by the seller may breach such a warranty or representation if they impair the property's use and transferability. [See Johnson v. Bridge (1923) 60 CA 629, 632, 213 P 512, 513 (emphasis added)—encroachment of house on adjoining property was an encumbrance that breached seller's warranty of delivery to buyer "free and clear of all encumbrances"; Quality Wash Group V, Ltd. v. Hallak (1996) 50 CA4th 1687, 1694-1695, 58 CR2d 592, 597—encroachment of leasehold's fixtures and improvements (car wash) onto adjoining property breached seller's warranty that title was "free from any liens and/or encumbrances"]

d. [4:440] Maintaining property and business before closing: Sellers should represent that they will maintain the property, and its operation and use, in a manner substantially similar to that in existence at the time of signing the purchase agreement. (The mirror image of such representation may also be reflected in a contingency for the buyer's benefit; see ¶ 4:425.)

e. [4:441] Rental property—leases and rent roll: In rental property transactions, the seller at a minimum should represent the completeness and accuracy of the leases and rent roll, including whether any tenant is in default. Depending in part on whether tenant estoppel certificates are obtained (¶ 4:418), the buyer might also insist on a seller's representation that neither the tenants nor seller are in default in their respective lease obligations. (See also ¶ 4:420.1 re seller's estoppel certificate.)

f. [4:442] Zoning and other regulatory matters: Buyers often want assurances that the property's usage and all structures are in compliance with applicable zoning laws and that all building and other legally-required permits have been obtained. However, knowing that their buyers can usually ascertain these facts by investigation, sellers may be reluctant to give such representations.

(In any event, most buildings have at least a few minor violations of state or local building codes. Therefore, a blanket representation regarding the property's compliance with law would probably be untrue.)

g. [4:443] Reports, surveys, etc. in seller's possession: The buyer may wish to review geological reports, surveys, plans and specifications, traffic studies, feasibility studies, environmental reports, and the like which are in the seller's possession. The seller should make certain that any such documents are delivered "as a courtesy only" and with the stipulation that "seller makes no representation or warranty as to the completeness or correctness thereof."

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

h. [4:444] Condemnation: Buyers often want to know whether a condemnation proceeding is presently pending and whether there is any "threatened or pending condemnation, street widening or other public taking" affecting the property. The latter is not necessarily an appropriate representation for sellers to make. While it is easy for sellers to know (and represent) whether a condemnation proceeding has commenced (since the seller would presumably be a party, or at least have been notified in writing), sellers may be unaware of whether a condemnation proceeding has been threatened or is pending. Moreover, the words "threatened or pending" are inherently vague (see ¶ 4:456 re "knowledge").

i. [4:445] Litigation: Likewise, the disclosure of existing, pending or threatened litigation affecting the property is naturally important to buyers. As with potential condemnation proceedings (¶ 4:444), however, the concept of "pending or threatened" is similarly—and perhaps more—vague in the context of litigation.

For example, if a tenant or adjoining landowner has sent a letter to the seller demanding that the seller perform some act and indicating the tenant/adjoining landowner will enforce their rights or take appropriate steps to resolve the problem, is that "threatened" litigation? What if the letter was sent three months ago; is the "threatened" litigation still "pending"? (See ¶ 4:456 re "knowledge.")

j. [4:446] Ownership of personal and intangible property: Even if the buyer conducts a UCC search (see ¶ 4:36), the buyer may require a separate representation by the seller as to the seller's ownership of the personal property to be conveyed. If a bill of sale from the seller is to be used, this representation should be set forth in that document (see Form 4:C).

k. [4:447] Third party rights to use and possess property: In addition to identifying all leases affecting rental property, the buyer may want a representation that "no other parties have any right to use, occupy or possess the property."

➪ [4:448] PRACTICE POINTER: Such a representation presents serious risks for sellers: It may effectively amount to an "insurance policy" for the buyer's benefit that any claims by third parties, no matter how unsupported or frivolous, will be defended by the seller after the closing.

l. [4:449] Contracts affecting property: The buyer may want the seller's representation that there are only certain identified third party contracts affecting the property, and no others.

m. [4:450] Outstanding financing after closing: If the buyer is purchasing the property "subject to" an existing loan, and no beneficiary statement will be obtained (see ¶ 4:301 ff.), the seller should be required to represent the material terms of the loan, its then-outstanding balance, and that neither borrower nor lender are then in default.

n. [4:451] Buyer's financial condition/statement: Because the buyer's sole obligation typically is only to pay the purchase price, sellers generally do not require much in the way of representations and warranties by the buyer. However, in seller-financed transactions, the seller will usually require the buyer to represent the accuracy of the financial statement and any other financial information provided by buyer to seller. (See also ¶ 4:436 ff. re buyer's representation concerning authority.)

o. [4:452] Hazardous materials: Though sometimes difficult to negotiate, buyers may insist on a representation that the property is free of hazardous materials. (See Ch. 5.)

p. [4:452.1] No terrorist activity? As an alternative, or in addition, to checking the USA Patriot Act's "Specially Designated Nationals" (SDN) List (¶ 1:126.1, 4:460.2), the parties may wish to include a clause warranting that they are not on the list, not barred from doing business under antiterrorism laws, and, in consummating the transaction, neither they nor any entity with whom they will or may do business will violate those laws.

q. [4:453] General provisions pertaining to all representations and warranties: Certain "catch-all" closing provisions should be included that pertain to all specifically-enumerated representations and warranties:

(1) [4:454] Survival of representations and warranties: The duration for which the representations and warranties exist should be identified. Unless expressly provided otherwise, they may be deemed merged into the deed and therefore terminated upon the conveyance (i.e., they do not survive and thus cannot be sued on after) the closing. [See Western Filter Corp. v. Argan, Inc. (9th Cir. 2008) 540 F3d 947, 952 (applying Calif. law)—closing date itself triggers contractual limitation on liability unless parties agree to survival clause; but see also Ram's Gate Winery, LLC v. Roche (2015) 235 CA4th 1071, 1079-1081, 185 CR3d 935, 940-942 (limiting doctrine's applicability to cases where contractual terms are inconsistent with deed or where parties clearly intend all contractual obligations to be subsumed in recorded deed's recitals); and ¶ 4:16, 4:434]

Also, the parties may find it desirable to specify a short limitations period for bringing suit based on the breach of any representation. Although legal, contractual stipulations to shorten statutes of limitations must be "clear and explicit," as they are disfavored and construed strictly against the party invoking them. [See Western Filter Corp. v. Argan, Inc., supra, 540 F3d at 953 (applying Calif. law)—stock purchase agreement provision allowing claims to survive closing date for one year deemed too ambiguous to override and reduce longer limitations periods fixed by statute]

(2) [4:455] “True and correct as of the closing”: The parties' representations should be true and correct as of the closing date. If any representation, which was true when made, later becomes untrue by reason of a change in circumstances, the party making the representation should be obligated to disclose that development; and, if a material change, the other party may want the right to terminate or otherwise modify the purchase agreement.

(3) [4:456] “Knowledge” and “best of knowledge”: In legal terms, “knowledge” may refer to “actual” and “constructive” knowledge—i.e., both that which a party actually knows and should have known under the circumstances. Thus, it is advisable to negotiate the definition of “knowledge” in each context.

For example, suppose a seller warrants that, to the seller's knowledge, there is no “pending or threatened” litigation or condemnation proceeding affecting the property. Without further clarification, a telephone call from a tenant to the on-site property manager complaining about the condition of the property and threatening to report the matter to a regulatory agency (or threatening to “consult with my lawyer about a lawsuit”) may be a “threatened litigation” to the seller's “knowledge.” And a notice of a public hearing to discuss a street widening may be “knowledge” of a “pending condemnation.” Accordingly, sellers may want to limit their “knowledge” to those matters for which they have received “actual, formal, written notice.”

Another way to resolve these issues is to limit the parties' representations to “the best of their knowledge, but without making any independent investigation thereof.”

[4:457 - 4:459] Reserved.

13. [4:460] “Due Diligence” Issues: The term “due diligence” is just another way of referring to an investigation by the parties. In other words, “conducting due diligence” is a somewhat fanciful way of referring to conducting an investigation or doing research with respect to particular issues. (However, the term “due diligence” has now become somewhat of a term of art in purchase and sale transactions.)

a. [4:460.1] Checklist for buyers and sellers: Consult the earlier sections of this Chapter discussing conditions and contingencies (¶ 4:392 ff.) and representations and warranties (¶ 4:436 ff.) for a checklist of “due diligence” issues to be reviewed by buyer and seller.

b. [4:460.2] Obligations under USA Patriot Act: Although the rules and regulations are still being promulgated, real estate attorneys may eventually be brought under the umbrella of § 352 of the USA Patriot Act and subject to its investigation obligations regarding “anti-money laundering” procedures. Also, under a Presidential Executive Order issued after September 11, 2001, real estate attorneys involved in closings must check the names of buyers and sellers against the federal government's Specially Designated Nationals (SDN) List. See ¶ 1:126 ff. and 4:452.1.

14. [4:461] Indemnification: Upon a breach of the purchase agreement, the injured party will be entitled to recover consequential damages under basic contract principles (see generally, Civ.C. § 3300—those damages which “in the ordinary course of things, would be likely to result” from the breach); and/or, in some cases of breach of representation, under tort principles (see generally, Civ.C. § 3333—damages compensating for all detriment proximately caused “whether it could have been anticipated or not”). (Damages are discussed in detail in Ch. 11.)

However, the parties may want to negotiate a separate indemnification provision.

a. [4:462] In general: “Indemnity” is statutorily defined as “a contract by which one engages to save another from a legal consequence of the conduct of one of the parties, or of some other person.” [Civ.C. § 2772; Wilshire-Doheny Associates, Ltd. v. Shapiro (2000) 83 CA4th 1380, 1396, 100 CR2d 478, 490; see also Hot Rods, LLC v. Northrop Grumman Systems Corp. (2015) 242 CA4th 1166, 1179, 196 CR3d 53, 62—although indemnity provisions typically refer to third party claims, they may encompass direct claims if the parties so intend (¶ 4:465)]

In effect then, an indemnification agreement may protect the indemnitee (benefited party) against liability caused by the indemnitor (obligated party), a third party, or even the indemnitee's own negligence. [See generally, Heppler v. J.M. Peters Co., Inc. (1999) 73 CA4th 1265, 1275-1276, 87 CR2d 497, 507-508; Building Maint. Service Co. v. AIL Systems, Inc. (1997) 55 CA4th 1014, 1029, 64 CR2d 353, 362]

However, an agreement to indemnify a person for their own negligence will be upheld only if clear and explicit; and such agreement is strictly construed against the indemnitee. [Goldman v. Ecco-Phoenix Elec. Corp. (1964) 62 C2d 40, 44, 41 CR 73, 75; Peter Culley & Assocs. v. Sup.Ct. (Park Hill Joint Venture) (1992) 10 CA4th 1484, 1492, 13 CR2d 624, 629; see Rooz v. Kimmel (1997) 55 CA4th 573, 583, 585-587, 64 CR2d 177, 183, 185-186 (indemnity against "any and all liabilities" absolved escrow company from its own "active" negligence in failing to record deed of trust); but see also Civ.C. § 2782—provision in construction contract to indemnify indemnitee for indemnitee's own negligence unenforceable as violative of public policy]

(1) [4:462.1] Guaranty compared: A guaranty is a promise "to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another" (Civ.C. § 2787). It is distinct from an indemnity in that a guarantor promises to perform the principal's obligation should the principal fail to perform, while an indemnitor promises to reimburse the indemnitee for losses suffered. [Trust One Mortg. Corp. v. Invest America Mortg. Corp. (2005) 134 CA4th 1302, 1309, 37 CR3d 83, 88-89]

b. [4:463] Scope of indemnity provisions: The nature and breadth of an indemnification agreement are negotiable by the parties; except to the extent limited by public policy (e.g., Civ.C. § 2782 re construction contracts, ¶ 4:462), the parties have great freedom in allocating liability risks. [Heppler v. J.M. Peters Co., Inc. (1999) 73 CA4th 1265, 1277, 87 CR2d 497, 508]

The agreement may be narrow in scope—e.g., obligating the indemnitor only for specified liabilities and only if the liability is predicated on a judgment against the indemnitee. Or the agreement may be sweeping in scope, obligating the indemnitor to pay all claims against the indemnitee for damage to persons or property based on the commission of (or failure to perform) specified acts, and to pay the costs of defending the indemnified party in litigation (or arbitration) of third party claims through trial and appeal. [Carr Business Enterprises, Inc. v. City of Chowchilla (2008) 166 CA4th 14, 20, 82 CR3d 128, 132—clause containing words "indemnify" and "hold harmless" is indemnity provision generally obligating indemnitor to reimburse indemnitee for any damages indemnitee becomes obligated to pay third persons]

The agreement may require negligence by the indemnitor as a condition to indemnification, or may impose a broader obligation, requiring full indemnification even if the indemnitor is not negligent (or otherwise at fault). [Heppler v. J.M. Peters Co., Inc., supra, 73 CA4th at 1277, 87 CR2d at 509]

➪ [4:464] PRACTICE POINTER: Avoid general "boilerplate" indemnification language such as "saves, indemnifies and holds harmless from and against liability on all claims arising out of …" Such language is itself likely to result in litigation because ambiguous on the scope of the indemnification obligation. (For example, is the indemnitor obligated to pay for the costs of the indemnitee's defense or only on claims reduced to judgment? If obligated to pay for the indemnitee's attorney fees and costs, does the indemnitor have the right to select counsel and control litigation strategy, decision-making and settlement of the case?) [See Heppler v. J.M. Peters Co., Inc. (1999) 73 CA4th 1265, 1278, 87 CR2d 497, 509—"To obtain greater indemnity, more specific language must be used" (internal quotes and citation omitted)]

In any event, such general language is not itself enough to create an obligation to indemnify for the indemnitee's own negligence. Specific and unequivocal language to that effect is required. [Goldman v. Ecco-Phoenix Elec. Corp. (1964) 62 C2d 40, 44, 41 CR 73, 75; Heppler v. J.M. Peters Co., Inc., supra, 73 CA4th at 1278, 87 CR2d at 509]

The parties may want to consider obtaining contractual liability insurance to back up any indemnity given in the purchase and sale agreement.

(1) [4:465] Rules of interpretation: Whether an indemnity provision covers a given case turns primarily on rules of contract interpretation. Thus, first and foremost, the parties' mutual intent as expressed in the agreement controls (Civ.C. § 1636). [Rossmoor Sanitation, Inc. v. Pylon, Inc. (1975) 13 C3d 622, 633, 119 CR 449, 456; Peak-Las Positas Partners v. Bollag (2009) 172 CA4th 101, 105, 90 CR3d 775, 781; see also Hot Rods, LLC v. Northrop Grumman Systems Corp. (2015) 242 CA4th 1166, 1179-1182, 196 CR3d 53, 62-65 (concluding parties' broad indemnity provision, when read in conjunction with rest of buy-sell agreement, was meant to apply to both first and third party claims)—buyer of environmentally compromised real property entitled under indemnity provision to sue seller directly for buyer's own damages]

Also, indemnification provisions are construed strictly against the indemnitee. [Rossmoor Sanitation, Inc. v. Pylon, Inc., supra, 13 C3d at 632, 119 CR at 455 (especially where issue is whether indemnitor is responsible for indemnitee's negligent acts); see Heppler v. J.M. Peters Co., Inc. (1999) 73 CA4th 1265, 1278, 87 CR2d 497, 509]

Absent clear intent to the contrary in the indemnification agreement, indemnity provisions are interpreted under the rules set forth in Civ.C. § 2778:

(a) [4:466] “Indemnity against liability” (or equivalent terms) means the indemnitee is entitled to recover “upon becoming liable.” [Civ.C. § 2778(1)]

(b) [4:467] “Indemnity against claims, or demands, or damages, or costs” (or equivalent terms) means the indemnitee is not entitled to recover without payment thereof. [Civ.C. § 2778(2)]

(c) [4:468] “Indemnity against claims, or demands, or liability” includes the costs of defending such claims, demands or liabilities “incurred in good faith, and in the exercise of a reasonable discretion.” [Civ.C. § 2778(3); but see also Carr Business Enterprises, Inc. v. City of Chowchilla (2008) 166 CA4th 14, 20, 82 CR3d 128, 132—third-party-claim indemnity provisions that include attorney fees as loss items not tantamount to provision for attorney fees award in contract action triggering Civ.C. § 1717 (discussed at ¶ 11:138.5); and Rideau v. Stewart Title of Calif., Inc. (2015) 235 CA4th 1286, 1298, 185 CR3d 887, 894 (discussed at ¶ 4:644.2)]

(d) [4:469] Right to conduct defense: Upon the indemnitee's request, the indemnitor is bound to defend actions or proceedings against the indemnitee respecting matters covered by the indemnity; but the indemnitee has the right to conduct the defense if the indemnitee so chooses. [Civ.C. § 2778(4)]

(e) [4:470] Conclusive obligation if indemnitor refuses defense: If after the indemnitee's request, the indemnitor “neglects” to defend the indemnitee, a recovery against the indemnitee “suffered by him in good faith” is conclusive against the indemnitor. [Civ.C. § 2778(5); see Peter Culley & Assocs. v. Sup.Ct. (Park Hill Joint Venture) (1992) 10 CA4th 1484, 1495-1496, 13 CR2d 624, 631—“recovery” against indemnitee within meaning of § 2778(5) refers only to recovery by judgment (not settlement); Heppler v. J.M. Peters Co., Inc. (1999) 73 CA4th 1265, 1285, 87 CR2d 497, 514]

(f) [4:471] Presumptive obligation if indemnitor not on notice of litigation or denied right to control defense: If the indemnitor is not given reasonable notice of the action or proceeding against the indemnitee, or is not allowed to control the indemnitee's defense, judgment against the indemnitee is only “presumptive evidence” against the indemnitor. [Civ.C. § 2778(6)]

(g) [4:472] Stipulation to conclusive effect of judgment: A stipulation that a judgment against the indemnitee shall be conclusive upon the indemnitor is inapplicable if the indemnitee has a “good defense upon the merits” that the indemnitee failed to establish in the action “by want of ordinary care.” [Civ.C. § 2778(7)]

[4:473] Reserved.

c. [4:474] Subjects covered by indemnification provisions: Indemnification provisions in real property purchase agreements typically cover these areas:

- Any breach by the seller of the purchase agreement;

- Any liability or obligation of the seller under various third party contracts assumed by the buyer (including leases);

- The inaccuracy or breach of any representation or warranty made by the seller (see Quality Wash Group V, Ltd. v. Hallak (1996) 50 CA4th 1687, 1695, 58 CR2d 592, 597—seller liable to buyer under provision agreeing to hold buyer harmless (indemnify) from any damage resulting from falsity of representation that leasehold estate and fixtures were free from encumbrances); and

- Any other act or omission to act of the seller (or seller's agents) before the close of escrow that causes the buyer damage or loss.

[4:474.1 - 4:474.4] Reserved.

15. [4:474.5] Assumption of Liabilities: It is sometimes advisable to include a provision in the purchase agreement stating that the buyer will assume all obligations pertaining to the property after the closing date, but that the seller is liable for all obligations pertaining to the property up to the closing date. This approach clarifies who is liable to pay maintenance and operating expenses, insurance, taxes, etc., even though appropriate changes have not yet been made in billing records.

16. [4:475] Risk of Loss (Damage, Destruction or Condemnation Before Closing): All purchase and sale agreements should include a "risk of loss" provision. Its purpose is to define the rights and obligations of buyer and seller in the event that, prior to closing, the property is damaged, destroyed or taken (or designated to be taken) by eminent domain. The parties are free to contract on this issue without statutory interference (¶ 4:480). But absent a contractual agreement, the parties' rights and obligations are governed by the Uniform Vendor and Purchaser Risk Act (Civ.C. § 1662; ¶ 4:476 ff.).

a. [4:476] Statutory rules (no contractual provision on the subject): These rules apply pursuant to the Uniform Vendor and Purchaser Risk Act, unless the contract otherwise provides:

(1) Burden of loss follows transfer of title or possession

(a) [4:477] Seller's burden *before transfer: The seller bears the risk of loss until transfer of legal title or possession. "If, when neither the legal title nor the possession of the subject matter of the contract has been transferred, all or a material part thereof is destroyed without fault of the purchaser or is taken by eminent domain, the vendor cannot enforce the contract, and the purchaser is entitled to recover any portion of the purchase price that he has paid." [Civ.C. § 1662(a)]

• [4:477.1] Comment: Civ.C. § 1662 does not define what constitutes the loss or destruction of a "material part" of the property so as to render the contract unenforceable by the seller; nor is there any known case law on point. The statute is also silent as to the parties' rights upon a "nonmaterial" loss or destruction. Thus, even when they intend to be governed by the Uniform Act, it behooves the parties to define these points.

(b) [4:478] Buyer's burden *after transfer: Conversely, the buyer bears the risk of loss following transfer of legal title or possession. "If, when either the legal title or possession of the subject matter of the contract has been transferred, all or any part thereof is destroyed without fault of the vendor or is taken by eminent domain, the purchaser is not thereby relieved from any duty to pay the price, nor is he entitled to recover any portion thereof that he has paid." [Civ.C. § 1662(b); see, e.g., Long v. Keller (1980) 104 CA3d 312, 317, 163 CR 532, 534—buyer in possession as lessee]

(2) [4:479] Transfer of "possession": Under Civ.C. § 1662 (¶ 4:476 ff.), the risk of loss follows the transfer of legal title or possession. Thus, if the parties elect to defer to the Uniform Act in lieu of a contract provision apportioning the risk of loss, they should take care to specify what constitutes "possession."

Clearly, the buyer has possession when the buyer physically moves in and assumes sole use of the property. However, the parties might contractually agree that the mere moving of personal property to the realty before the closing amounts to a transfer of "possession" as well. Conversely, to narrow the opportunity for future dispute, it may be prudent to specify that the buyer's (or buyer's agent's) mere entering upon the property (for any period of time) strictly for the purpose of making various inspections will not be deemed tantamount to "possession" for purposes of shifting the risk of loss. [See MacKintosh v. Agricultural Fire Ins. Co. (1907) 150 C 440, 444, 89 P 102, 104—prospective buyer with option to purchase not in "possession" where merely given possession to test premises for slag and ore, subject to owner's management and free access]

b. [4:480] Contract provision: Because the Uniform Act (¶ 4:476 ff.), does not provide a comprehensive resolution of risk of loss issues, it is wise to address the subject through a separately-negotiated contract provision. Indeed, a risk of loss provision in the purchase agreement makes sense for both parties because (1) the buyer does not want to be obligated to purchase the property if it is not in the condition anticipated when the agreement was executed; and (2) the seller does not want the buyer to be able to invoke some preclosing "minor" damage to the property as a ground for terminating the contract.

Accordingly, the parties should both (1) negotiate a definition of the event triggering a risk of loss provision (e.g., the closing date rather than the transfer of "possession"); and (2) strive to set parameters on the degree of damage (or condemnation) that will trigger specified risk of loss consequences. These are a few of the alternatives:

(1) [4:481] Right to terminate and/or reduction in purchase price: One possibility is to provide that if the cost to repair the preclosing damage exceeds a certain dollar amount, or the square footage destroyed before closing exceeds a specified amount, the buyer will not be obligated to purchase the property. If the cost of repair or percentage of property damage is less than the agreed-upon maximum, the buyer would be required to purchase but entitled to a corresponding reduction in the purchase price.

Alternatively, the buyer's rights can be tied to the reduction in value of the property by reason of the damage or a condemnation. For example, if a critical accessway to a retail property is taken by eminent domain, the square footage percentage of the property taken may be small, but the effect on the value of the property may be quite substantial. In such a case, reduction in market value would be an appropriate measuring stick for reducing the purchase price.

(2) [4:482] Disposition of insurance proceeds and condemnation award: If the buyer elects to purchase the property notwithstanding the degree of damage or condemnation, the buyer will want either a credit against the purchase price or payment of the insurance proceeds (or condemnation award). The parties should anticipate this possibility and agree that, in the event the buyer is obligated or elects to purchase the property, the seller will assign to the buyer (a) the insurance proceeds (plus some credit for both the deductible amount and any uninsured damage); and (b) the condemnation award.

(3) [4:483] Buyer obtaining insurance: Another alternative is for the buyer simply to arrange for insurance to cover the buyer's rights under the purchase agreement prior to the closing. This may be accomplished either by purchasing a separate policy of insurance with the appropriate coverage, or becoming an additional insured under the seller's policy.

➪ [4:484] PRACTICE POINTER: If the parties opt for this alternative, the purchase agreement should provide that the buyer's mere purchasing of insurance does not thereby shift the risk of loss to the buyer. This is important because, even if the buyer has insurance coverage, the buyer may still wish to preserve a right to terminate the agreement in the event of damage, destruction or condemnation.

17. [4:485] Arbitration/Mediation vs. Litigation: The parties may wish to provide that in the event of any dispute under the contract, they will submit the matter to mediation or binding or nonbinding arbitration (as specified). There is a vast diversity of opinion among attorneys as to the wisdom of such a provision. It is generally agreed, however, that the less complex the case, the less money involved and the quicker the resolution desired, the greater the advantage of mediation, arbitration or another ADR process over full-blown litigation.

a. [4:486] Litigation: Unless the parties contract for enforceable arbitration or another ADR mechanism, or agree to arbitrate after a disagreement arises, litigation is the only method of resolving their contract disputes. In weighing the litigation vs. ADR alternatives, these are some of the pros and cons on the litigation side:

[4:487] Reserved.

(1) [4:488] Advantages of litigation: Although the benefits may vary for plaintiffs and defendants, litigation generally offers the advantages of:

• Full discovery rights;

• Motion practice permissible;

• Right to jury trial;

• Right of postjudgment appeal;

• An experienced judge instead of a private arbitrator or mediator (although retired judges are often used in arbitrations and mediations and now offer a full range of “alternative dispute resolution” services).

(2) [4:489] Disadvantages of litigation: On the downside, litigation is generally more expensive and more protracted than arbitration or mediation. [See Frei v. Davey (2004) 124 CA4th 1506, 1512, 22 CR3d 429, 434 (in noting that “[h]undreds of thousands of dollars in attorney fees have been spent and the parties have litigated through two trials and three appeals,” court commented that home buyers' suit for specific performance of purchase agreement was “a graphic illustration of a case that should have been mediated at an early stage”)]

[4:489.1 - 4:489.4] Reserved.

(3) [4:489.5] Judicial reference alternative: As an alternative to traditional litigation, the parties may provide for lawsuits arising out of the agreement to be resolved by judicial reference pursuant to CCP § 638 et seq. The reference may be binding—in which case judgment is entered on the referee's decision; or it may be advisory only—in which case the referee reports its findings and recommendations to the court for the court to consider and accept or reject. A judicial reference proceeding is conducted like a trial but is not heard by a jury. The parties also retain their appellate rights. [See generally,

Trend Homes, Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Azperren) (2005) 131 CA4th 950, 954-956, 964, 32 CR3d 411, 413-414, 421 (disapproved on other grounds by Tarrant Bell Property, LLC v. Sup.Ct. (Abaya) (2011) 51 C4th 538, 545, 121 CR3d 312, 318, fn. 5); and Woodside Homes of Calif., Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Fogler) (2003) 107 CA4th 723, 727, 132 CR2d 35, 38]

Like arbitration provisions (¶ 4:490.5), judicial reference clauses may be subject to challenge for "unconscionability" (see ¶ 7:73.5, 11:36). [Trend Homes, Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Azperren), supra; Pardee Const. Co v. Sup.Ct. (Rodriguez) (2002) 100 CA4th 1081, 1091-1092, 123 CR2d 288, 296]

Cross-refer: Judicial reference is discussed in detail in Knight, Chernick, Quinn & Gupta, Cal. Prac. Guide: Alternative Dispute Resolution (TRG), Ch. 6.

b. Arbitration

(1) [4:490] Right to elect arbitration: The parties are fully entitled to provide for arbitration of their disputes; and an agreement to arbitrate is generally valid, enforceable and irrevocable. [CCP § 1281; but see CCP § 1298, ¶ 4:493]

(a) [4:490.1] Scope: An arbitration provision in a real estate contract may be worded broadly enough to encompass virtually any dispute arising from any transaction relating to the agreement. [See Johnson v. Siegel (2000) 84 CA4th 1087, 1094, 101 CR2d 412, 416-417—where arbitration clause in purchase agreement was broadly worded to apply to any dispute arising out of the agreement or any resulting transaction, parties required to arbitrate dispute over seller's alleged omissions in Civ.C. § 1102 Transfer Disclosure Statement]

1) [4:490.2] Limitation—bodily injury, wrongful death and property damage claims: A real estate purchase and sale agreement cannot mandate binding arbitration of bodily injury, wrongful death or property damage claims arising out of the transaction (e.g., causes of action arising from patent or latent defects in the property). [CCP § 1298.7; see Gravillis v. Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage Co. (2006) 143 CA4th 761, 773-780, 49 CR3d 531, 539-545—arbitration exclusion for "bodily injury" does not include purely emotional distress claims; but see also ¶ 4:496.1b re potential FAA preemption]

➪ [4:490.3] PRACTICE POINTER: Should your client wish to arbitrate any dispute arising from a purchase and sale agreement, the arbitration provision should include the words "any claim arising from or related to this agreement." Using narrower language, such as "any claim arising from or related to the construction and application of any provision of the agreement," will not give your client the broad coverage it wants. [See Bono v. David (2007) 147 CA4th 1055, 1067, 54 CR3d 837, 845-846]

(b) [4:490.4] Fraud in the inducement defense to enforcement: Contractual arbitration is properly refused where a party to the contract establishes they were fraudulently induced to enter into the agreement to arbitrate. But fraud in the inducement of the underlying contract (the purchase and sale agreement itself) is not sufficient to defeat an arbitration clause (the arbitrator is competent to decide that issue). [See CCP § 1281; see also Johnson v. Siegel (2000) 84 CA4th 1087, 1094-1095, 101 CR2d 412, 417—purchaser attempting to avoid arbitration unsuccessfully alleged underlying purchase agreement rather than arbitration clause was rescinded due to fraud]

(c) [4:490.5] "Unconscionability" defense to enforcement: Contractual arbitration also may properly be refused upon a showing of both procedural and substantive unconscionability. [See Sanchez v. Valencia Holding Co., LLC (2015) 61 C4th 899, 906, 910, 912, 190 CR3d 812, 817, 820, 822 (comprehensive discussion of unconscionability defense); see also AT & T Mobility LLC v. Concepcion (2011) 563 US 333, 340, 131 S.Ct. 1740, 1745-1746 (recognizing courts may, under California law, refuse to enforce any contract "found to have been unconscionable at the time it was made," while simultaneously holding FAA preempts California's judicial rule regarding unconscionability of class arbitration waivers in consumer actions)]

Cross-refer: The unconscionability defense is treated in detail in Knight, Chernick, Quinn & Gupta, Cal. Prac. Guide: Alternative Dispute Resolution (TRG), Ch. 5.

(2) Pros and cons

(a) [4:491] Advantages of arbitration: In contrast to litigation, arbitration generally is faster (no motion practice and limited discovery), less expensive (expeditious resolution usually means lower attorney fees and costs), and private (most arbitration proceedings are conducted in private and parties can maintain results in confidence).

Moreover, arbitrators may award the full range of relief available in litigation, including specific performance, injunctions and, in an appropriate case, even punitive damages. [See Social Services Union/American Fed. of Nurses, SEIU Local 535, AFL-CIO v. Alameda County Training & Employment Bd. (1989) 207 CA3d 1458, 1464, 255 CR 746, 749 (injunctive relief); Baker v. Sadick (1984) 162 CA3d 618, 627, 208 CR 676, 682 (punitive damages)]

(b) [4:492] Disadvantages of arbitration: But the parties should also weigh these disadvantages:

- An agreement to binding arbitration forfeits the right to a jury trial.
- Arbitration awards are not self-executing: If the award is not paid or specifically performed (as the case may be), the prevailing party must commence a court action.
- As a practical matter, arbitration rarely allows the parties extensive discovery comparable to that available in litigation (see CCP §§ 1283, 1283.05).
- There is only a very limited right of judicial review of the arbitrator's award (CCP §§ 1286.2 (grounds for vacating award), 1286.6 (grounds for correcting award)).

(3) [4:493] Statutory formalities—"real estate contract arbitration": A provision for binding arbitration of any dispute under a contract to convey real property (or contemplating same) is enforceable only if the following requirements are met (CCP § 1298):

- The provision must be clearly titled "ARBITRATION OF DISPUTES." [CCP § 1298(a)]
- If included in a printed contract, the provision must be set out in at least 8-point bold type or in contrasting minimum 8-point red type; and if included in a typed contract, the provision must appear in capital letters. [CCP § 1298(a)]
- Immediately before the line or space provided for the parties to indicate their assent or nonassent to the arbitration provision, and immediately following that provision, the following language must appear:

> "NOTICE: BY INITIALLING IN THE SPACE BELOW YOU ARE AGREEING TO HAVE ANY DISPUTE ARISING OUT OF THE MATTERS INCLUDED IN THE 'ARBITRATION OF DISPUTES' PROVISION DECIDED BY NEUTRAL ARBITRATION AS PROVIDED BY CALIFORNIA LAW AND YOU ARE GIVING UP ANY RIGHTS YOU MIGHT POSSESS TO HAVE THE DISPUTE LITIGATED IN A COURT OR JURY TRIAL. BY INITIALLING IN THE SPACE BELOW YOU ARE GIVING UP YOUR JUDICIAL RIGHTS TO DISCOVERY AND APPEAL, UNLESS THOSE RIGHTS ARE SPECIFICALLY INCLUDED IN THE 'ARBITRATION OF DISPUTES' PROVISION. IF YOU REFUSE TO SUBMIT TO ARBITRATION AFTER AGREEING TO THIS PROVISION, YOU MAY BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF THE CALIFORNIA CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE. YOUR AGREEMENT TO THIS ARBITRATION PROVISION IS VOLUNTARY.
>
> "WE HAVE READ AND UNDERSTAND THE FOREGOING AND AGREE TO SUBMIT DISPUTES ARISING OUT OF THE MATTERS INCLUDED IN THE 'ARBITRATION OF DISPUTES' PROVISION TO NEUTRAL ARBITRATION." [CCP § 1298(c)]

If included in a printed contract, the above language must be set out in at least 10-point bold type or contrasting minimum 8-point bold red type; and if included in a typed contract, it must appear in capital letters. [CCP § 1298(c); see also Villacreses v. Molinari (2005) 132 CA4th 1223, 1232, 34 CR3d 281, 287—§ 1298(c) "advisory" language is "accompaniment" to arbitration provision and not intended to be the arbitration agreement itself]

(a) [4:494] Initialing provision indicates assent: As the statute states, by initialing the arbitration provision, a party indicates its assent to be bound thereby. [CCP § 1298(c); Johnson v. Siegel (2000) 84 CA4th 1087, 1095, 101 CR2d 412, 417; Woodside Homes of Calif., Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Fogler) (2003) 107 CA4th 723, 729, 132 CR2d 35, 40—residential property buyers made aware of judicial reference provision in purchase agreement because they had to initial paragraph separately; compare Bruni v. Didion (2008) 160 CA4th 1272, 1293, 73 CR3d 395, 413 (discussed at ¶ 4:495)]

1) [4:494.1] Mutual assent required? There is a split of authority whether an arbitration provision is enforceable if lacking the parties' mutual assent (e.g., seller who did not initial the provision attempts to enforce it against buyer who did initial):

• [4:494.2] One case holds that all parties must affirmatively assent to the arbitration clause (separately initialed). [See McAvoy v. Hilbert (2009) 172 CA4th 707, 711-712, 91 CR3d 437, 441—arbitration provision in open listing agreement unenforceable because, among other things, not initialed by both parties]

Another case reaches the same result applying general contract principles: Unless all parties assent, the arbitration provision operates only as an unaccepted offer to submit disputes to binding arbitration (at least where the arbitration provision lists the parties in the conjunctive—e.g., "Buyer, Seller and Agent Agree … "). [Marcus & Millichap Real Estate Invest. Brokerage Co. v. Hock Invest. Co. (1998) 68 CA4th 83, 89-91, 80 CR2d 147, 150-151 (declining to decide whether mutuality of arbitral obligation is always required); compare Laymon v. J. Rockcliff, Inc. (2017) 12 CA5th 812, 824, 219 CR3d 185, 195-196 (citing Marcus & Millichap in finding no lack of mutuality)—provision relating to arbitration with nonparty brokers, when initialed by their buyers or sellers, constituted accepted offer to arbitrate (provision stated broker accepted offer by agreeing in writing to arbitrate); Westra v. Marcus & Millichap Real Estate Invest. Brokerage Co., Inc. (2005) 129 CA4th 759, 764-765, 28 CR3d 752, 755-756—arbitration provision enforceable by nonsignatory real estate agent where both buyer and seller initial it (discussed at ¶ 4:495.5 ff.)]

• [4:494.3] Yet another case, however, disagrees: CCP § 1298 does not require mutuality of remedy—i.e., an arbitration provision in a real estate contract may be enforceable against the party who assented thereto even though it would not be enforceable against the other party who did not assent. [Grubb & Ellis Co. v. Bello (1993) 19 CA4th 231, 238-240, 23 CR2d 281, 284-285—written assent of other party is not "necessary, essential, natural or proper" to accomplish statutory goals]

a) [4:494.4] Comment: The Grubb & Ellis view is questionable. The court confined its analysis strictly to the language of CCP § 1298(c) and did not consider general contract principles. [See Stirlen v. Supercuts, Inc. (1997) 51 CA4th 1519, 1538-1539, 60 CR2d 138, 150—"To the extent Grubb & Ellis suggests mutuality of arbitral obligation is not required, we question the court's analysis … which has never been relied upon by other courts and is hard to reconcile with other pertinent cases requiring mutuality of the arbitral obligation"; see also Marcus & Millichap Real Estate Invest. Brokerage Co. v. Hock Invest. Co. (1998) 68 CA4th 83, 91, 80 CR2d 147, 151—"We agree with the criticism of [Grubb & Ellis]"]

Moreover, dispensing with a mutuality of remedy requirement could give the seller—who is usually the offeree in real estate sales transactions—an unfair advantage: Once the buyer initialed the arbitration provision (which would normally occur upon submission of the offer), the seller would have no incentive to affix the seller's initials and thereby bind itself to arbitrate; the seller "could have its cake and eat it too"—i.e., the seller could force the buyer to arbitrate when in the seller's best interests and could refuse to arbitrate if it believed arbitration would be disadvantageous. [See Marcus & Millichap Real Estate Invest. Brokerage Co. v. Hock Invest. Co., supra, 68 CA4th at 91, 80 CR2d at 151, fn. 6]

2) [4:495] Assent may be *inferred although initials absent: A party's failure to initial an arbitration provision does not necessarily show the party did not agree to the provision. The underlying circumstances (e.g., clerical error) may provide the basis for a reasonable inference that the party intended to be bound by the provision. [Basura v. U.S. Home Corp. (2002) 98 CA4th 1205, 1215-1216, 120 CR2d 328, 335—fact builder initialed arbitration provisions in 20 out of 48 real estate contracts permitted reasonable inference builder intended to be bound by arbitration clause under all contracts; compare Bruni v. Didion (2008) 160 CA4th 1272, 1293, 73 CR3d 395, 413—no assent implied from unsigned one-page arbitration provision contained in 30-page booklet, printed in single-spaced 10-point type and buried in "voluminous" stack of purchase and sale documents]

[4:495.1 - 4:495.4] Reserved.

3) [4:495.5] Compare—enforcement by nonsignatory agent: A nonsignatory real estate broker (sued by the buyer or seller) may be entitled to enforce the agreement's arbitration provision in its capacity as agent to one or more of the signatory parties (i.e., the buyers and/or sellers). "A nonsignatory to an agreement to arbitrate may be required to arbitrate, and may invoke arbitration against a party, if a preexisting confidential relationship, such as an agency relationship between the nonsignatory and one of the parties to the arbitration agreement, makes it equitable to impose the duty to arbitrate upon the nonsignatory." [Westra v. Marcus & Millichap Real Estate Invest. Brokerage Co., Inc. (2005) 129 CA4th 759, 765, 28 CR3d 752, 756 (emphasis added)]

• [4:495.6] A nonsignatory broker could compel arbitration of a buyer's fraud claims against the broker and seller pursuant to the purchase agreement's provision initialed only by the buyer and seller. Reason: The broker had a preexisting relationship as the agent to both parties to the agreement. [See Westra v. Marcus & Millichap Real Estate invest. Brokerage Co., Inc., supra, 129 CA4th at 766, 28 CR3d at 756-757—also noting provision clearly stated buyer, seller and broker agreed to arbitrate disputes involving purchase agreement subject matter; see also Laymon v. J. Rockcliff, Inc. (2017) 12 CA5th 812, 824, 219 CR3d 185, 195-196—arbitration provision enforceable by nonparty brokers when initialed by their buyers or sellers (¶ 4:494.2)]

• [4:495.7] Nonsignatory "cooperating" brokers could compel arbitration of their principal's (i.e., the buyer's) failure to disclose claims against the cooperating and listing brokers pursuant to the purchase agreement's arbitration provision initialed only by the buyer and seller. However, the cooperating brokers could not compel the listing brokers (i.e., seller's agents) also to arbitrate the claim. Reason: The listing brokers were nonsignatories to the arbitration agreement and did not have a preexisting, confidential or contractual relationship with the cooperating brokers. [Nguyen v. Tran (2007) 157 CA4th 1032, 1038-1039, 68 CR3d 906, 910-911—nonsignatory may not invoke arbitration clause against another nonsignatory]

(b) [4:496] Federal Arbitration Act preemption (contracts affecting commerce): The Federal Arbitration Act (FAA, 9 USC §§ 1-14) governs contractual arbitration under written contracts involving interstate or foreign commerce (or maritime transactions). [9 USC §§ 1, 2; see also AT & T Mobility LLC v. Concepcion (2011) 563 US 333, 344, 131 S.Ct. 1740, 1748—FAA's "principal purpose" is to ensure private arbitration agreements are enforced according to their terms]

Because it embodies a strong federal policy favoring arbitration, and to assure uniform results as to arbitrability of disputes within its scope, the FAA preempts conflicting state law under the Supremacy Clause. [Southland Corp. v. Keating (1984) 461 US 1, 12, 104 S.Ct. 852, 859—FAA governs arbitrability in "either state or federal court"; see also AT & T Mobility LLC v. Concepcion, supra, 563 US at 341, 131 S.Ct. at 1747—FAA displaces state law that "prohibits outright" arbitration of particular type of claim; Allied-Bruce Terminix Cos., Inc. v. Dobson (1995) 513 US 265, 270-271, 115 S.Ct. 834, 838—FAA was enacted to overcome state courts' "ancient hostility" to arbitration and refusal to enforce arbitration agreements]

1) [4:496.1] Application to real property purchase agreements "involving commerce": The words "involving commerce" under the FAA (9 USC § 2) are broadly defined as the functional equivalent of "affecting commerce": i.e., the FAA applies if the underlying contract facilitates interstate (or foreign) commercial transactions or directly or indirectly affects commerce between states; the transaction need not literally be in the flow of interstate commerce. [See Allied-Bruce Terminix Cos., Inc. v. Dobson (1995) 513 US 265, 277, 115 S.Ct. 834, 841; Citizens Bank v. Alafabco, Inc. (2003) 539 US 52, 56-57, 123 S.Ct. 2037, 2040—economic activity in question must represent "general practice" subject to federal control that bears on interstate commerce in "substantial way" (emphasis added); Shepard v. Edward Mackay Enterprises, Inc. (2007) 148 CA4th 1092, 1097, 56 CR3d 326, 329—"involving commerce" ordinarily signals "broadest permissible exercise of Congress' commerce clause power"]

Moreover, the parties need not have contemplated "substantial interstate activity" when they entered into the underlying agreement. For an agreement to "involve commerce" for purposes of the FAA, the underlying transaction need only ultimately involve interstate commerce. [Shepard v. Edward Mackay Enterprises, Inc., supra, 148 CA4th at 1097, 56 CR3d at 329]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Additionally, the dispute need not arise from the particular part of the transaction involving interstate commerce; the FAA applies if the underlying transaction as a whole involved interstate commerce. [Shepard v. Edward Mackay Enterprises, Inc., supra, 148 CA4th at 1101, 56 CR3d at 332]

In real estate practice, perhaps surprisingly, many seemingly "routine" purchase and sale contracts may be construed as "involving commerce" within the meaning of the FAA.

• [4:496.1a] A contract for the purchase of a single family residence that anticipated the use of HUD federal financing, when coupled with the parties' use of copyrighted transaction forms promulgated by the National Association of Realtors for members' exclusive use, was held to evidence a transaction involving commerce within the meaning of the preemptive FAA, rendering CCP § 1298 inapplicable. [Hedges v. Carrigan (2004) 117 CA4th 578, 586-587, 11 CR3d 787, 793-794; see also Pinnacle Museum Tower Ass'n v. Pinnacle Market Develop. (US), LLC (2012) 55 C4th 223, 232, 234, 145 CR3d 514, 519, 521—FAA applicable because materials and products incorporated into condominium project were manufactured in other states; Westra v. Marcus & Millichap Real Estate Invest. Brokerage Co., Inc. (2005) 129 CA4th 759, 764, 28 CR3d 752, 755 (citing Hedges)—real estate agent's failure to initial purchase agreement's arbitration clause as required by CCP § 1298 "would appear to be beside the point" (on issue whether agent was a party to principals' arbitration agreement) because "at least one court has held that section 1298 is preempted by federal law"]

a) [4:496.1b] FAA preemption of CCP § 1298.7 bodily injury, wrongful death and property damage exclusion? As noted earlier, California law prohibits real estate purchase and sale agreements from mandating binding arbitration of bodily injury, wrongful death and property damage claims arising out of the transaction (CCP § 1298.7, ¶ 4:490.2). However, at least two cases address potential FAA preemption of this provision. [See Gravillis v. Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage Co. (2006) 143 CA4th 761, 780, 49 CR3d 531, 544-545 (suggesting § 1298.7 may be preempted by the FAA when the agreement involves interstate commerce) (dictum); see also Pinnacle Museum Tower Ass'n v. Pinnacle Market Develop. (US), LLC (2012) 55 C4th 223, 235, 145 CR3d 514, 522—"even assuming" § 1298.7 extended to recorded condominium declaration, FAA would have preempted its application to construction defect case involving interstate commerce because § 1298.7 discriminates against arbitration (dictum)]

2) [4:496.2] Generally applicable contract law not preempted: The FAA prohibits states from conditioning the enforceability of arbitration agreements on compliance with special requirements (9 USC § 2). Thus, statutes subjecting arbitration agreements to requirements not applicable to contracts generally are preempted with respect to agreements "involving commerce." [Doctor's Assocs., Inc. v. Casarotto (1996) 517 US 681, 687, 116 S.Ct. 1652, 1656—FAA preempted Montana statute requiring enforceable arbitration clauses to be typed in underlined capital letters on first page; see also Sanchez v. Valencia Holding Co., LLC (2015) 61 C4th 899, 923-924, 190 CR3d 812, 831-832; Basura v. U.S. Home Corp. (2002) 98 CA4th 1205, 1214, 120 CR2d 328, 334—FAA preempts CCP § 1298.7 that allows new home purchaser to pursue construction and design defect action against developer despite having signed arbitration clause]

On the other hand, the FAA does not displace state law requirements applicable to all contracts (9 USC § 2)—i.e., requirements concerning the validity, revocability and enforceability of contracts generally. [Doctor's Assocs., Inc. v. Casarotto, supra, 517 US at 686-687, 116 S.Ct. at 1656]

• [4:496.3] When a contract provision contemplates that an arbitration clause will be effective only if both parties (buyer and seller) assent by initialing it, there is no enforceable agreement to arbitrate absent the parties' mutual assent. "The FAA does not preempt this analysis which is based on California law concerning the formation and interpretation of contracts generally." [Marcus & Millichap Real Estate Invest. Brokerage Co. v. Hock Invest. Co. (1998) 68 CA4th 83, 92-93, 80 CR2d 147, 152 (emphasis added); see also Mitchell v. American Fair Credit Ass'n, Inc. (2002) 99 CA4th 1345, 1357, 122 CR2d 193, 201-202 (statute mandating arbitration requirement to be signed by both parties not preempted)]

• [4:496.4] Likewise, generally applicable contract defenses, such as fraud, duress and unconscionability, may be applied to invalidate arbitration agreements without regard to the FAA. [Doctor's Assocs., Inc. v. Casarotto (1996) 517 US 681, 687, 116 S.Ct. 1652, 1656; Hedges v. Carrigan (2004) 117 CA4th 578, 583-584, 11 CR3d 787, 791; Flores v. Transamerica HomeFirst, Inc. (2001) 93 CA4th 846, 856, 113 CR2d 376, 384 (unconscionability)]

[4:496.5] Reserved.

3) [4:496.6] Choice of law governing how arbitration conducted not preempted: The FAA does not prevent the enforcement of agreements to arbitrate under state rules different from those set forth in the FAA itself. When the parties agree to abide by state rules of arbitration, enforcing those rules according to the terms of the agreement is consistent with the goals of the FAA, even if the result is that arbitration may be stayed where the FAA would otherwise permit it to proceed. [Volt Information Sciences, Inc. v. Board of Trustees of Leland Stanford Junior Univ. (1989) 489 US 468, 478-479, 109 S.Ct. 1248, 1255-1256—pursuant to choice-of-law clause, Calif. law governed whether arbitration required; Warren-Guthrie v. Health Net (2000) 84 CA4th 804, 812-816, 101 CR2d 260, 266-269 (disapproved on other grounds by Cronus Investments, Inc. v. Concierge Services (2005) 35 C4th 376, 393, 25 CR3d 540, 554, fn. 8)—pursuant to choice-of-law clause, Calif. law governed how arbitration is conducted as opposed to whether arbitration is required]

However, the parties' agreement must clearly evidence their intent to be bound by state law arbitration rules; a general choice-of-law clause will not trump the presumption that the FAA supplies the rules for arbitration. [Sovak v. Chugai Pharmaceutical Co. (9th Cir. 2002) 280 F3d 1266, 1269-1270; but see Mount Diablo Med. Ctr. v. Health Net of Calif., Inc. (2002) 101 CA4th 711, 722-726, 124 CR2d 607, 614-618—“generic” choice-of-law provision requiring application of California law sufficient to avoid FAA's procedural provisions; Valencia v. Smyth (2010) 185 CA4th 153, 167-168, 110 CR3d 180, 190-191 (citing Mount Diablo with approval)]

• [4:496.7] A standard form Residential Purchase Agreement choice-of-law provision expressly incorporating the CAA for purposes of deciding disputes provided a trial court with authority to stay or deny arbitration where (i) some of the parties were not parties to the arbitration agreement; and (ii) proceedings in different forums—arbitral and judicial—could have resulted in conflicting rulings on common issues of fact or law. [Gravillis v. Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage Co. (2006) 143 CA4th 761, 782-784, 49 CR3d 531, 546-548 (interpreting 2000 version of CAR standard form Residential Purchase Agreement)]

• [4:496.8] A standard form Residential Purchase Agreement provision adopting the FAA for purposes of “contract interpretation,” did not displace the parties' choice-of-law provision expressly incorporating the CAA for purposes of deciding disputes: “Both the FAA and the CAA employ the same principles of contract interpretation. Thus, regardless of which act governs the interpretation of the Agreement, the result is the same: Under the ‘plain meaning’ rule, the Agreement's choice-of-law provision requires the application of the CAA's procedural provisions.” [Valencia v. Smyth (2010) 185 CA4th 153, 157, 110 CR3d 180, 182 (emphasis in original) (interpreting 2002 version of CAR standard form Residential Purchase Agreement)]

[4:496.9] Reserved.

➪ [4:496.10] PRACTICE POINTER: It can be far more costly and difficult to litigate whether the purchase agreement “involves” or “affects” interstate commerce so as to be governed by the FAA than it is to adhere to the CCP § 1298 formality requirements in drafting an arbitration clause. Consequently, the most prudent approach at the drafting stage is to assume California law fully applies and follow the mandates of § 1298 (¶ 4:493 ff.).

(4) [4:497] Arbitration mechanics: The Code of Civil Procedure provides generally for the conduct of arbitration proceedings (see CCP § 1282 et seq.); however, those provisions are not exhaustive. It therefore behooves the parties to delineate basic rules and procedures in their agreement (failure to do so may lead to unnecessary delay and disagreement over what was intended to be an expedited method of dispute resolution).

➪ [4:498] PRACTICE POINTER: Many private arbitration organizations have their own rules and procedures. Thus, by selecting a particular organization (¶ 4:500), you may also be agreeing to be bound by its arbitration rules and procedures. If that is not the desired result, the agreement should so specify.

(a) [4:499] Issues to be addressed: At a minimum, the arbitration provisions should address the following issues with respect to arbitration mechanics:

• Whether arbitration is mandatory or simply an option: i.e., whether either party may elect arbitration or, instead, whether arbitration will be automatically required to the exclusion of litigation.

- A method for picking the arbitrator (and the arbitration association from which the arbitrator will be chosen), as well as the qualifications for the chosen arbitrator.

- Time-frame—how soon the arbitration hearing will be held.

- Rules of discovery.

- Payment and award of arbitration costs.

- Arbitrator's powers.

- That the award shall be valid, binding and enforceable.

(b) [4:500] Arbitration organizations: Some of the more popular arbitration organizations to choose from are:

- JAMS (Judicial Arbitration and Mediation Services, LLC): JAMS is made up of retired judges and has its own set of arbitration rules and procedures (see Knight, Chernick, Quinn & Gupta, Cal. Prac. Guide: Alternative Dispute Resolution (TRG)).

- AAA (American Arbitration Association): The AAA is made up of retired judges, practicing attorneys and nonattorney experts. It has detailed rules for selecting arbitrators and conducting arbitrations in various types of disputes. (See Knight, Chernick, Quinn & Gupta, Cal. Prac. Guide: Alternative Dispute Resolution (TRG).)

- County bar associations (many local bar associations have lists of arbitrators for particular types of disputes).

[4:500.1 - 4:500.4] Reserved.

(c) [4:500.5] Statutory limitation re "consumer arbitrations" under agreement providing for prevailing party fees and costs recovery: Most residential real estate purchase and sale agreements, including the California Association of Realtors' preprinted form (¶ 4:278 ff.), include a provision that, if initialed by the parties, requires disputes under the agreement to be submitted to binding arbitration (¶ 4:494). These agreements also usually provide that the prevailing party in any arbitration under the agreement can recover fees and costs (see ¶ 4:513 ff.). These provisions may be affected, however, by a California statute barring neutral arbitrators and private arbitration companies from administering "consumer arbitrations" under any agreement requiring the "consumer" to pay the opposing party's arbitration fees and costs if the consumer does not prevail. [CCP § 1284.3(a)]

It is unclear whether CCP § 1284.3 applies to contractual arbitrations under a residential purchase agreement, because the statute does not define "consumer arbitrations" or "consumer." Guidance indicating the statute does not apply in this context may come from the definitions adopted by the Judicial Council in its "ethics standards for neutral arbitrators in contractual arbitration." [See CRC Ethics Standards, Standard 2(d) & (e)—"consumer arbitration" is "an arbitration conducted under a predispute arbitration provision contained in a contract" with a "consumer party"; and "consumer party" includes a party who seeks or acquires "goods or services primarily for personal, family, or household purposes"]

➪ [4:500.6] PRACTICE POINTER: Nothing in § 1284.3(a) indicates the statute is nonwaivable. Thus, pending judicial or legislative clarification of the issue, parties to a residential purchase and sale agreement who want to ensure arbitrability of their disputes before a "neutral arbitrator" or "private arbitration company" should consider adding to the arbitration provisions language expressly waiving CCP § 1284.3(a); and the "consumer" should separately initial the waiver clause.

Cross-refer: For a comprehensive treatment of contractual arbitration provisions and proceedings, see Knight, Chernick, Quinn & Gupta, Cal. Prac. Guide: Alternative Dispute Resolution (TRG), Ch. 5.

c. [4:501] Mediation: As another litigation alternative, the parties may wish to provide for mediation of claims related to the agreement. Indeed, standard residential purchase agreements often contain such a provision, requiring the parties to mediate any dispute arising out of the agreement before resorting to arbitration or court action; and they even make mediation a condition precedent to the right to recover prevailing party attorney fees in litigation arising out of the agreement. [See Cullen v. Corwin (2012) 206 CA4th 1074, 1079, 142 CR3d 419, 423—fact that buyers initiated court action before requesting mediation did not allow prevailing sellers to reject buyers' mediation request and still recover fees under standard form purchase agreement (nor were sellers entitled to condition mediation on receipt of discovery responses); Lange v. Schilling (2008) 163 CA4th 1412, 1416-1418, 78 CR3d 356, 359-360—prevailing buyer not entitled to Civ.C. § 1717 attorney fees in action against sellers for failure to disclose, etc., where buyer did not attempt mediation before commencing litigation in violation of purchase agreement; Frei v. Davey (2004) 124 CA4th 1506, 1520, 22 CR3d 429, 440-441—prevailing sellers in buyers' action for specific performance not entitled to contractual attorney fees award because sellers refused to mediate dispute as required by purchase agreement; and ¶ 11:138.16a]

18. [4:505] "Like-Kind" (Tax-Deferred) Exchange: Either buyer or seller may want to effectuate a "like-kind" (tax-deferred) exchange under IRC § 1031. If so, the purchase agreement should include a provision on point and should specify that the party who accommodates the other party's exchange "shall not be at any expense or liability, whether actual or contingent" in connection therewith. However, because of broad potential environmental liability (see Ch. 5), many parties are unwilling to take title to property in order to accommodate the other's tax-deferred exchange.

Cross-refer: "Like-kind" exchanges pursuant to IRC § 1031 are discussed in detail in Ch. 13; see ¶ 13:304 ff.

19. Buyer's Remedy of Specific Performance

a. [4:506] Waiver by buyer: Any dispute under the purchase agreement could result in the buyer's filing suit for specific performance—with concurrent recordation of a lis pendens (¶ 11:300 ff.). Until the lis pendens is expunged, or the seller wins the lawsuit, the property may effectively be rendered unmarketable. With this in mind, many sellers require the buyer to waive their right to seek specific performance.

• [4:507] Comment: Buyers generally are unwilling to agree to such a waiver (or, for that matter, to any waiver of rights in the event of the seller's breach). But sellers counter that such a waiver is, at least arguably, in the nature of a liquidated damages provision for the seller's benefit: i.e., if the buyer can limit its dollar amount of liability through a liquidated damages provision, the seller (the argument goes) should similarly be able to limit its liability by narrowing the buyer's remedies. The buyer can presumably be made whole with money damages. (Although all real property is generally considered unique, that can be disproved at trial. See Trapasso v. Sup.Ct. (Majdali) (1977) 73 CA3d 561, 567, 140 CR 820, 823-824; Empfield v. Sup.Ct. (Spicka) (1973) 33 CA3d 105, 108, 108 CR 375, 377; Real Estate Analytics, LLC v. Vallas (2008) 160 CA4th 463, 474, 72 CR3d 835, 842; Civ.C. § 3387; and ¶ 11:220 ff.)

b. [4:508] Acknowledgment of buyer's right: Specific performance is available only if the property is considered "unique" and not all real property is deemed "unique" (see ¶ 4:507). Knowing this, buyers may want the seller to expressly acknowledge that the property is unique and the buyer is therefore entitled to all equitable relief, including specific performance, in the event of the seller's breach. Mutuality of remedies is not required—i.e., even though the seller's sole remedy may be liquidated damages, the buyer may seek specific performance. [See Bleecher v. Conte (1981) 29 C3d 345, 353, 213 CR 852, 856; and Civ.C. §§ 3386, 3389]

➪ [4:509] PRACTICE POINTER: In drafting such an acknowledgment clause, buyer's counsel should be careful not to limit the buyer's rights to specific performance; the agreement should preserve the remedies of both specific performance and the recovery of money damages.

Cross-refer: The specific performance remedy is discussed in detail at ¶ 11:150 ff. (seller's specific performance action) and ¶ 11:210 ff. (buyer's specific performance action).

20. [4:510] Compliance With Tax Withholding Laws: Subject to certain exceptions, federal and state tax laws require buyers to withhold a specified portion of the sale price for payment as a tax if the seller is located in another state or country.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

a. [4:510.1] Foreign Investment in Real Property Tax Act (FIRPTA): Buyers who purchase United States real property from a seller who is a "foreign person" ("any person other than a United States person"; IRC § 1445(f)(3)) must deduct and withhold from the seller's proceeds 10% of the gross sales price. [IRC § 1445(a); but see IRC § 1445(e)—other withholding requirements in cases of foreign partnership or corporation sellers]

Accordingly, a provision requiring the seller to deliver an affidavit or certification that the seller is not a "foreign person" should be included in the agreement (or separate escrow instructions). [See IRC § 1445(b)(2)—10% tax inapplicable if transferor furnishes transferee with affidavit stating under penalty of perjury transferor's U.S. taxpayer i.d. number and that the transferor is not a foreign person] Otherwise, 10% of the gross sales price should be withheld.

➪ [4:510.2] PRACTICE POINTER: There are certain exemptions from the IRC § 1445 withholding requirement (see IRC § 1445(b))—e.g., where buyer purchases the property to use as a residence for a price not exceeding $300,000 (IRC § 1445(b)(5)). Nonetheless, to ensure compliance, buyers are still advised to obtain the seller's affidavit or certification.

b. [4:510.3] California tax withholding requirements: Buyers of California real property interests (except those purchasing from a partnership or corporation that has a permanent place of business in California after the transfer of title) for a price exceeding $100,000 generally must withhold and pay to the Franchise Tax Board 3 1/3% of the sales price. The tax must be withheld regardless of whether the proceeds will be distributed locally or out of state. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 18662(e)(1)-(2)(A), (3)(A)]

Other withholding rates, specified as a percentage of the gain, may apply to sales of California real property by non-California partnerships and non-California "S" Corporations. [See Rev. & Tax.C. § 18662(e)(2)(B)]

The statute exempts several types of transactions, however—including a sale of the seller's principal residence. Thus, where an exemption is applicable, the purchase agreement (or separate escrow instructions) should require an affidavit attesting to compliance with the exemption's underlying conditions (e.g., an affidavit from the seller that the subject property is the seller's principal residence and not a second or vacation home; see Rev. & Tax.C. § 18662(e)(3)(D)).

Cross-refer: The federal and California tax withholding requirements and their respective exemptions are discussed further at ¶ 13:520 ff.

21. Broker Disclosures

a. [4:511] Disclosure of real estate licensee status: If either party to the transaction is a licensed real estate broker (or salesperson), disclosure of that fact should be made to the other party. [See 10 CCR § 2785(a)(17), (18) (Rules of the Real Estate Commissioner)] Although disclosure only seems to be required if the broker is receiving a commission (Whitehead v. Gordon (1969) 2 CA3d 659, 663, 82 CR 778, 780; Estrin v. Watson (1957) 150 CA2d 107, 108, 309 P2d 506, 507), it is prudent to disclose a party's status as broker (or salesperson) in any event.

A broker's (or salesperson's) failure to make the requisite status disclosure could result in penalties or discipline under the Real Estate Licensing Law (Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10176, 10177) and/or liability for breach of fiduciary duty (see ¶ 2:155 ff.).

- Cross-refer: A number of broker disclosures are statutorily required in residential real property transactions (Civ.C. §§ 2079.12-2079.24). See detailed discussion at ¶ 2:170 ff.

b. [4:512] Disclosure and indemnity regarding broker commissions: Real estate broker commissions can be the subject of substantial dispute and litigation. It is therefore important to identify which broker has represented which party and to provide cross-indemnities by seller and buyer.

To avoid creating third party beneficiary rights in favor of brokers within the purchase agreement, it is usually prudent not to include any statement affirmatively requiring the payment of broker commission (see ¶ 4:256). However, each party should acknowledge the broker who represented them and agree to indemnify the other for (1) any claim made by the indemnifying party's broker; and (2) any claim made by a broker who alleges entitlement to a commission by or through the indemnifying party.

22. [4:513] Attorney Fees: Except as otherwise agreed by the parties or expressly provided by statute, attorney fees are not recoverable in litigation. [CCP § 1021; California Union Square L.P. v. Saks & Co. LLC (2021) 71 CA5th 136, 141-142, 286 CR3d 115, 119-120 (conflicting attorney fee provisions in commercial lease); Pacific Custom Pools, Inc. v. Turner Const.

Co. (2000) 79 CA4th 1254, 1267, 94 CR2d 756, 765 (attorney fee provision in construction subcontract); Wilshire-Doheny Associates, Ltd. v. Shapiro (2000) 83 CA4th 1380, 1396, 100 CR2d 478, 489-490 (indemnity provisions authorizing attorney fee recovery)]

Moreover, there is no specific statute that provides for the recovery of attorney fees in an action for breach of, or an action arising out of, a real property purchase agreement. Thus, an attorney fee provision should be included in the purchase agreement if the parties wish to have the right to a prevailing party fee award in the event of such an action. The provision may be made subject to specified restrictions and conditions (see ¶ 11:138.15). And, under a properly-worded attorney fee provision, attorney fees may be recoverable in a contract action or in a tort action arising out of the purchase and sale agreement (¶ 4:518).

Compare: Statutes that govern specific types of property (e.g., the Davis-Stirling Common Interest Development Act and Mobilehome Residency Law) may provide an independent basis for recovering attorney fees; see ¶ 4:518.13.

a. [4:514] Civ.C. § 1717 reciprocal prevailing party fee recovery right in contract actions: In any action on a contract, where the contract specifically provides that attorney fees and costs incurred to enforce the contract are to be awarded to either party or the prevailing party, the party determined to be the prevailing party on the contract (whether or not that party is specified in the contract) "shall be entitled to reasonable attorney's fees in addition to other costs." [Civ.C. § 1717(a); see Khan v. Shim (2016) 7 CA5th 49, 55-57, 212 CR3d 292, 297-298 (summarizing applicable law)]

In effect then, even if the contract provides that only one party may recover attorney fees in litigation on or to enforce the contract, it will be read as creating reciprocal rights in favor of the prevailing party, regardless of which party initiates the action. [Civ.C. § 1717(a); see Pacific Custom Pools, Inc. v. Turner Const. Co. (2000) 79 CA4th 1254, 1269-1270, 94 CR2d 756, 766-767; Berkla v. Corel Corp. (9th Cir. 2002) 302 F3d 909, 919 (applying Calif. law)—§ 1717(a) enacted "to limit the ability of a dominant contracting party to provide for a right to attorney's fees on only one side of an agreement"; Jackson v. Homeowners Ass'n Monte Vista Estates-East (2001) 93 CA4th 773, 779, 113 CR2d 363, 366—§ 1717(a) reciprocal remedy triggered by attorney fee provision in CC&Rs]

(1) [4:514.1] Applies only in actions "on the contract": The reciprocal right to prevailing party attorney fees applies only in an action on the contract or to enforce the contract containing the attorney fees provision. [Civ.C. § 1717(a); Khan v. Shim (2016) 7 CA5th 49, 56, 212 CR3d 292, 298; see also Mountain Air Enterprises, LLC v. Sundowner Towers, LLC (2017) 3 C5th 744, 747, 220 CR3d 650, 653—although affirmative defenses do not constitute "actions" for purposes of recovering fees, defendant nonetheless entitled to fees where its assertion of option contract as affirmative defense triggered said agreement's attorney fee provision (see ¶ 11:138.4); compare Hart v. Clear Recon Corp. (2018) 27 CA5th 322, 327, 237 CR3d 907, 911 (unsuccessful action to prevent foreclosure filed by borrower's nonsignatory family members based on intra-family title dispute)—lender could not recover attorney fees against borrower's family members by invoking trust deed's collateral protection provision since said provision fell outside § 1717 's ambit (¶ 6:417.8)]

By contrast, there is no prevailing party reciprocal right to fees under Civ.C. § 1717 when the underlying cause of action (as to which the fee claimant "prevails") sounds in tort rather than contract. [Xuereb v. Marcus & Millichap, Inc. (1992) 3 CA4th 1338, 1342, 5 CR2d 154, 157; see Gil v. Mansano (2004) 121 CA4th 739, 743-745, 17 CR3d 420, 423-425—party does not prevail in "action on a contract" by successfully asserting contract defense to tort action; Exxess Electronixx v. Heger Realty Corp. (1998) 64 CA4th 698, 708-709, 75 CR2d 376, 383—lessee who prevailed in tort action (failure to disclose defects) not entitled to § 1717 fees under lease provision authorizing fee award in action "to enforce the terms of the contract"]

Whether an action is based on contract or tort depends on the nature of the right sued upon, not the form of the pleading or relief demanded. If the action is based on breach of promise, it is contractual; if based on breach of a noncontractual duty, it is tortious. "If unclear, the action will be considered based on contract rather than tort." [Kangarlou v. Progressive Title Co., Inc. (2005) 128 CA4th 1174, 1178, 27 CR3d 754, 756 (emphasis added; internal quotes omitted)]

(2) [4:514.2] Prevailing party: The party entitled to recover Civ.C. § 1717 fees is the one "who recovered a greater relief in the action on the contract." By the same token, the court may determine there is no prevailing party. [Civ.C. § 1717(b)(1)]

An "action on the contract" (above) refers to the whole lawsuit, including both trial and appeal. Thus, § 1717 does not apply to discrete proceedings or separate phases within a lawsuit. [See de la Carriere v. Greene (2019) 39 CA5th 270, 273, 276-277, 251 CR3d 795, 798, 800 (finding defendant recovered "greater amount" on contract action both before and after appeal)—defendant who voluntarily dismissed appeal challenging his damage award remained "prevailing party," resulting in plaintiff losing her bid for appellate attorney fees]

Cross-refer: For a detailed discussion of Civ.C. § 1717 "prevailing party" determinations, see ¶ 11:139 ff.

(3) [4:515] "Magic words" not required: No statutory "form" language is required to trigger Civ.C. § 1717. The statute comes into play so long as the contract authorizes an award of attorney fees incurred to enforce the contract. [International Billing Services, Inc. v. Emigh (2000) 84 CA4th 1175, 1183-1184, 101 CR2d 532, 537—words "promise to reimburse Company for any legal fees …" did not make provision an indemnity agreement rather than fee award clause]

(4) [4:516] Recovery generally not limited to particular kinds of claims under the contract: Generally, the parties cannot limit a Civ.C. § 1717 fee recovery to a particular type of claim under the contract: A contractual provision for attorney fees in an action to enforce the contract "shall be construed as applying to the entire contact, unless each party was represented by counsel in the negotiation and execution of the contract, and the fact of that representation is specified in the contract" (Civ.C. § 1717(a), 2nd para. (emphasis added)). [Paul v. Schoellkopf (2005) 128 CA4th 147, 152-153, 26 CR3d 766, 769-770; Kangarlou v. Progressive Title Co., Inc. (2005) 128 CA4th 1174, 1178, 27 CR3d 754, 756; see also Andrade v. Western Riverside Council of Governments (2024) 99 CA5th 1020, 1026-1027, 318 CR3d 396, 401-402 (finding Civ.C. § 1717 's goal is to avoid "lopsided arrangements" where one party can limit other party's attorney fee recovery to particular claims)—error to deny § 1717 fees to homeowner seeking to rescind loan agreements that impermissibly limited fee provisions to judicial foreclosure actions (¶ 11:138, 11:138.2a)]

(5) [4:517] Not limited to recovery by individuals: Again, the "fundamental policy" underlying Civ.C. § 1717 is to "prevent unfair litigation tactics through one-sided attorney fee provisions" (¶ 4:516). As such, the § 1717 reciprocal right to prevailing party attorney fees "applies to business entities as well as to individuals." [ABF Capital Corp. v. Grove Properties Co. (2005) 126 CA4th 204, 223, 23 CR3d 803, 816 (emphasis added)]

b. [4:518] CCP § 1021 fee recovery in tort actions ("arising out of" fee provisions): Provided the contractual attorney fee provision is worded broadly enough, "prevailing party" fees may be awardable under the general authority of CCP § 1021 even though not awardable under Civ.C. § 1717 (because not an "action on the contract" or because otherwise barred by § 1717).

Pursuant to § 1021, "parties may validly agree that the prevailing party will be awarded attorney fees incurred in any litigation between themselves, whether such litigation sounds in tort or contract." [Santisas v. Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 608, 71 CR2d 830, 836 (emphasis added; internal quotes omitted) (real estate purchase agreement provided for prevailing party fee recovery in actions "arising out of the execution of the agreement or the sale")]

(1) Contracts providing basis for fee recovery

• [4:518.1] A broadly-worded fee clause stating the prevailing party shall be entitled to recover its attorney fees and costs in "any lawsuit or other legal proceeding to which this agreement gives rise" provides a basis for the prevailing party's fee recovery in any suit (contract or tort) arising from the parties' underlying transactional relationship. [Xuereb v. Marcus & Millichap, Inc. (1992) 3 CA4th 1338, 1342-1343, 5 CR2d 154, 157-158 (emphasis added)—CCP § 1021 fees recoverable in tort action alleging brokers failed to conduct competent inspection of property (court concluded dispute arose out of real estate purchase agreement containing fee recovery provision); see also Palmer v. Shawback (1993) 17 CA4th 296, 299-300, 21 CR2d 575, 576]

• [4:518.2] A clause in the purchase and sale agreement providing for prevailing party attorney fees and costs "in any action, proceeding, or arbitration between Buyer and Seller arising out of this Agreement" entitles the successful party to a fee award in a tort action arising out of the real estate transaction. [Johnson v. Siegel (2000) 84 CA4th 1087, 1100-1102, 101 CR2d 412, 421-422—sellers who prevailed on summary judgment in buyer's suit for fraud and misrepresentation (nondisclosure of flood and drainage problems) entitled to fee award; see also Childers v. Edwards (1996) 48 CA4th 1544, 1548-1549, 56 CR2d 328, 330-331 (same attorney fee clause); Lerner v. Ward (1993) 13 CA4th 155, 160-161, 16 CR2d 486, 489 (similar attorney fee clause)]

• [4:518.3] Similarly, a seller who successfully defended against the buyer's tort action (alleging breach of various duties under Calif. law concerning sale of building containing asbestos) was entitled to CCP § 1021 fees where the underlying purchase agreement provided for a fee recovery in favor of the party who prevailed in "any suit or other proceeding with respect to the subject matter or enforcement of this Agreement." [3250 Wilshire Blvd. Building v. W.R. Grace &

Co. (9th Cir. 1993) 990 F2d 487, 489 (emphasis added); see also Khan v. Shim (2016) 7 CA5th 49, 55, 59-62, 212 CR3d 292, 297, 300-303 (applying Civ.C. § 1021 and CCP §§ 1032 & 1033.5)—contractual fee provision covering any litigation or arbitration between parties concerning agreement's "terms, interpretation or enforcement or the rights of any party in relation thereto" deemed broad enough to cover seller's fees for successful defense of buyer's tort claims (emphasis in original)]

(2) Contracts not providing basis for fee recovery

• [4:518.4] Where the attorney fee provision only authorized fees in an action "to enforce the terms of the contract," the prevailing party on a tort cause of action (failure to disclose defects) was not entitled to fees. [Exxess Electronixx v. Heger Realty Corp. (1998) 64 CA4th 698, 708-709, 75 CR2d 376, 383; see also Gil v. Mansano (2004) 121 CA4th 739, 743, 17 CR3d 420, 423]

• [4:518.5] Likewise, CCP § 1021 fees were not recoverable in a professional negligence (attorney malpractice) action where the underlying contract authorized fees in an action "to enforce the terms of the parties' agreement." Such a narrowly-drawn provision "cannot be read as a contractual agreement to award fees in an action brought for legal malpractice" which, like a fiduciary duty or fraud cause of action, sounds in tort. [Loube v. Loube (1998) 64 CA4th 421, 429-430, 74 CR2d 906, 911]

[4:518.6 - 4:518.10] Reserved.

(3) [4:518.11] Limitation—no fee recovery "reciprocity" under § 1021: CCP § 1021, unlike Civ.C. § 1717, does not contain a "reciprocity" provision. Thus, where the party claiming fees prevails on a tort (rather than a contract) cause of action, so that CCP § 1021 (and not Civ.C. § 1717) applies, the right to an attorney fee award may only be based on the terms of the underlying contract. If the contract only gives one party the right to an attorney fee award should that party prevail in litigation, the unnamed party does not have a reciprocal right to a fee award in the event the unnamed party prevails. [Moallem v. Coldwell Banker Comm'l Group, Inc. (1994) 25 CA4th 1827, 1831-1833, 31 CR2d 253, 255-256—despite attorney fee clause in underlying brokerage agreement, tenant who prevailed only on tort claims in action arising out of real estate transaction could not recover fees against real estate agent because attorney fee clause ran only in named agent's favor]

➪ [4:518.12] PRACTICE POINTER: Where a dispute arises out of a purchase and sale transaction, it is not uncommon for the aggrieved party to pursue both contract and tort (fraud, etc.) causes of action. A broadly-worded prevailing party fee recovery provision (see ¶ 4:518.1 ff.) should trigger entitlement to an attorney fee recovery no matter which cause of action (tort or contract) the aggrieved party prevails on. (But again, since there is no "reciprocal" right to fees under CCP § 1021, make sure the attorney fee clause is drafted to benefit whichever party prevails, rather than only a particular named party.) See Form 4:H.

On the other hand, if you want to restrict the fee recovery right to litigation related to a contract cause of action, a narrowly-worded provision limiting attorney fees to actions "on the contract" or "to enforce the contract" is recommended. [See Exxess Electronixx v. Heger Realty Corp. (1998) 64 CA4th 698, 708-709, 75 CR2d 376, 383 & fn. 17 (citing text)]

c. [4:518.13] Fee recovery under other statutes: Some types of real property (e.g., common interest developments and mobilehomes) may be governed by specific statutes that allow parties to recover attorney fees and costs if they prevail in litigation involving alleged violations of those statutes, or that otherwise arise out of the statutes. [See Tract 19051 Homeowners Ass'n v. Kemp (2015) 60 C4th 1135, 1138-1139, 1143-1144, 184 CR3d 701, 703, 707 (suit alleging development tract was common interest development and defendant/homeowner was violating its restrictions)—defendant/homeowner awarded prevailing party attorney fees under Davis-Stirling Common Interest Development Act even though court ultimately determined development tract did not qualify as common interest development; Canyon View Ltd. v. Lakeview Loan Servicing, LLC (2019) 42 CA5th 1096, 1099, 1114, 1118-1119, 256 CR3d 233, 235-236, 246-247, 251—mobilehome park owner who successfully quieted title to multiple mobilehomes purchased at proceedings regulated by Mobilehome Residency Law entitled to attorney fees and costs under said law]

d. [4:519] Effect of assignment: If either party's rights under the contract are assigned, the assignee should explicitly agree to assume the assignor party's attorney fee obligation; otherwise, the attorney fee provision is not enforceable against the assignee. [See Glynn v. Marquette (1984) 152 CA3d 277, 280, 199 CR 306, 307—intervening buyer who did not specifically assume contract obligations not subject to attorney fee provision]

[4:519.1 - 4:519.4] Reserved.

e. [4:519.5] Recovery in arbitration proceedings: Contractual provisions for fee awards in any "suit" or "action" on, or "arising out of," the contract have been held to authorize a prevailing party fees and costs award in arbitration proceedings. [See Harris v. Sandro (2002) 96 CA4th 1310, 1314, 117 CR2d 910, 914; Tate v. Saratoga Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1989) 216 CA3d 843, 856-857, 265 CR 440, 447-448 (abrogated on other grounds by Advanced Micro Devices, Inc. v. Intel Corp. (1994) 9 C4th 362, 376-377, 36 CR2d 581, 589-590); but see Corona v. Amherst Partners (2003) 107 CA4th 701, 703-704, 706-707, 132 CR2d 250, 251-252, 254—arbitration fees and costs not awardable by court on petition to confirm award where party never requested arbitrator to decide the issue although within scope of arbitrable disputes]

Nonetheless, to leave no room for doubt on the subject, if the agreement calls for arbitration (instead of litigation), the attorney fee provision should be modified to authorize a prevailing party fee recovery in the event of arbitration under the contract (see ¶ 4:518.2).

(1) [4:519.6] "Consumer arbitration" limitation: This may be affected by a statute that bars neutral arbitrators and private arbitration companies from administering a consumer arbitration under a contract requiring the losing consumer to pay the opposing party's fees and costs. [See CCP § 1284.3(a), discussed at ¶ 4:500.5 ff.]

Cross-refer: Civ.C. § 1717 and CCP § 1021 attorney fee awards in purchase and sale litigation (including the issue of "prevailing party" determinations) are discussed in greater detail in Ch. 11; see ¶ 11:136 ff. and 11:392 ff.

23. Assignment

a. [4:520] Contract assignable unless otherwise agreed: Unless otherwise agreed, real property purchase agreements are generally assignable. [See Civ.C. § 1458—"right arising out of an obligation is the property of the person to whom it is due, and may be transferred as such"; and Farmland Irrig. Co. v. Dopplmaier (1957) 48 C2d 208, 222, 308 P2d 732, 740—agreement assignable unless assignment would impair party's chances of obtaining performance expected from other party]

However, absent the other party's consent, an assignment does not release the assignor from the assignor's obligations under the contract. [See Civ.C. § 1457—"burden of an obligation" can only be transferred with consent of party entitled to its benefit; and Britschgi v. McCall (1953) 41 C2d 138, 144, 257 P2d 977, 980]

➪ [4:521] PRACTICE POINTER FOR SELLERS: Sellers may have good reason to insist on a provision against assignment (or, at least, a provision conditioning assignment on the seller's prior consent). This is particularly so where the seller is providing financing to the buyer or where the purchase agreement contemplates substantial interaction between buyer and seller before closing; simply stated, the seller may not want to do business with a stranger.

➪ [4:522] PRACTICE POINTER FOR BUYERS—"DOUBLE" OR "BACK-TO-BACK" ESCROWS: Buyers can often avoid nonassignability provisions by setting up a second escrow in which they sell to their intended assignees immediately after acquiring title from the seller. The second escrow closes immediately after the first.

But caveat: If there is seller financing, the transfer to the second buyer may violate a due-on-sale clause in the seller's deed of trust. (See ¶ 4:297; and more detailed discussion at ¶ 6:388 ff.)

(1) [4:523] Impact of "or nominee" designation in contract: Many purchase agreements state the buyer's name but also include the term "or nominee" (i.e., "… (buyer) or buyer's nominee"). This may indicate an intent to make the buyer's rights assignable to a third party. However, the word "nominee" connotes only the delegation of authority to the nominee in a representative or "nominal" capacity—not a transfer or assignment to the nominee of any property in or ownership of the rights of the person nominating them. It follows that, without a formal assignment to the nominee, the contract may be too "uncertain" to be specifically enforceable at the nominee's behest. [See Cisco v. Van Lew (1943) 60 CA2d 575, 583, 141 P2d 433, 438—third party "nominees," who did not expressly assume buyer's obligation, could not specifically enforce purchase agreement]

b. [4:524] Issues of assumption (by assignee) and exoneration (of assignor): As noted, an assignment generally does not itself relieve the assignor of the assignor's obligations under the contract (¶ 4:520), although the assignee's acceptance of benefits under the contract can be deemed an assumption of the assignor's contractual obligations (see Civ.C. § 1589).

Notwithstanding these general rules, it is to the seller's benefit to specify that the assignor buyer will still remain liable under the contract. It is also prudent to provide that the buyer's assignment will not be permitted unless the assignee (new buyer) executes a specific assumption of all of the original buyer's (assignor's) obligations under the purchase agreement. Any such provision should also clearly state that the assignee's assumption does not exonerate the assignor buyer.

24. [4:525] No Third Party Beneficiaries: Contracts made expressly for the benefit of a third person are enforceable by the third person (at any time before the parties thereto rescind the agreement; see Civ.C. § 1559). On the other hand, third parties who are only incidentally or remotely benefited by performance of a contract are not entitled to enforce it. [Prouty v. Gores Technology Group (2004) 121 CA4th 1225, 1232-1233, 18 CR3d 178, 183-184; Bancomer, S.A. v. Sup.Ct. (Reilly) (1996) 44 CA4th 1450, 1458, 52 CR2d 435, 440]

Generally, it is a question of fact whether a particular third person is an intended or simply incidental beneficiary to the contract; the decision requires a construction of the contracting parties' intent, "gleaned from reading the contract as a whole in light of the circumstances under which it was entered." [Bancomer, S.A. v. Sup.Ct. (Reilly), supra, 44 CA4th at 1458, 52 CR2d at 440; Prouty v. Gores Technology Group, supra, 121 CA4th at 1233, 18 CR3d at 184; see Steinberg v. Buchman (1946) 73 CA2d 605, 609-610, 167 P2d 207, 209—prospective buyer did not intend seller's broker (claiming commissions from prospective sale proceeds) to be third party beneficiary of purchase agreement and thus was not liable to broker in refusing to complete purchase]

It need not be demonstrated that both contracting parties intended to benefit the third party but, rather, that the promisor understood that the promisee had such intent. [Schauer v. Mandarin Gems of Calif., Inc. (2005) 125 CA4th 949, 958, 23 CR3d 233, 239]

Disputes over third party beneficiary rights (e.g., broker claiming commission as third party beneficiary of purchase agreement) can complicate a purchase and sale transaction. Therefore, since the parties' intent is a decisive factor (above), it is advisable to include a provision expressly stating that only the parties executing the agreement are parties to the agreement and no third party shall have any rights thereunder.

25. [4:526] Joint and Several Liability: By statute, obligations imposed on several persons generally are presumed to be joint and several (rather than several). [See Civ.C. §§ 1431, 1659, 1660] Nonetheless, contracts involving multiple parties on a side of the transaction often include a provision expressly stating the obligations of the parties are joint and several.

26. [4:527] Integration ("Entire Agreement") Provision and Amendment Requirements: To minimize potential future dispute over what the parties agreed to, only those terms within the "four corners" of the document should constitute the purchase agreement. This result may be achieved through an "integration clause," specifying that: (a) The purchase agreement signed by the parties constitutes their entire and sole agreement; and (b) no party has relied on any representations, warranties, statements or inducements of the other party (or their brokers or other representatives) that are not specifically set forth in the purchase agreement. [See EPA Real Estate Partnership v. Kang (1992) 12 CA4th 171, 176-177, 15 CR2d 209, 212—evidence of prior agreement between parties inadmissible when purchase contract contains integration provision; but see also Ron Greenspan Volkswagen, Inc. v. Ford Motor Land Develop. Corp. (1995) 32 CA4th 985, 987, 38 CR2d 783, 784—contract clause stating parties relied only on express representations in contract does not, as a matter of law, bar action for fraud based on representations outside contract]

Similarly, the parties should include language prohibiting any amendment to the purchase agreement unless in writing and signed by both parties.

➪ [4:528] PRACTICE POINTER: By the same token, to ensure the parties are bound by applicable escrow instructions, care should be taken to include any escrow instructions (which may be separately executed) as part of the purchase agreement.

a. [4:529] Admissibility of extrinsic evidence: Notwithstanding an "integration clause" (¶ 4:527), extrinsic evidence may be admissible in litigation over the contract. Under the parol evidence rule, terms set forth in a writing that is intended by the parties as "a final expression of their agreement with respect to such terms" may not be contradicted by evidence of any prior or contemporaneous oral agreement. [CCP § 1856(a); EPA Real Estate Partnership v. Kang (1992) 12 CA4th 171, 175, 15 CR2d 209, 211]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

However, extrinsic evidence may be considered to explain an ambiguity, interpret terms of the agreement, or establish an "illegality or fraud." [CCP § 1856(g); see also CCP § 1856(a)-(h); Riverisland Cold Storage, Inc. v. Fresno-Madera Production Credit Ass'n (2013) 55 C4th 1169, 1172, 151 CR3d 93, 94-95 (overruling prior contrary authority)—extrinsic evidence of fraudulent promises at variance with writing's terms admissible; WYDA Assocs. v. Merner (1996) 42 CA4th 1702, 1710-1711, 50 CR2d 323, 327-328 (ambiguous financing contingency in purchase and sale agreement); and ¶ 4:270.4, 11:355.10 ff.]

b. [4:530] Dealing with preliminary agreements and memoranda: The parties may have signed some form of preliminary written agreement or memorandum of intent before consulting counsel and/or with the intent that the preliminary writing be superseded by a formal purchase agreement (¶ 4:275 ff.). In such cases, the final purchase agreement should provide either that (1) the initial written agreement is entirely superseded; or (2) in the event of any inconsistency between the two agreements, the latter prevails.

27. Notice Provision

a. [4:531] Purpose: Various notices between the parties may be permitted or required by the agreement. Unless the agreement identifies the manner and time-frame for giving such notice, either party may find a "way out" of its obligations on the ground of defective notice. To eliminate these concerns, it is strongly recommended that the agreement include a notice provision, specifying: (1) the form of notice required (oral or written); (2) the addresses to which notices are to be given; (3) the manner in which notice may be given (e.g., by personal delivery, certified mail, regular mail, air courier, fax transmission, etc.); and (4) the time the notice becomes effective (e.g., upon receipt, proper transmission, etc.). The parties may also wish to specify that notices will not be effective unless also given in writing to the parties' legal counsel and, perhaps, other designated persons.

➪ [4:531.1] PRACTICE POINTER: Though the parties are of course free to agree that oral notice will suffice, that invites later dispute and possible parol evidence problems. Thus, all notices should be required to be in writing.

b. [4:532] Notice to escrow holder: Typically, any notice required to be given to the escrow holder is also intended to be given to the other party. Because there can be a delay in transmission from the time the escrow holder receives notice and then notifies the other party, any notice to be given to the escrow holder should concurrently be given to the other party.

For example, if the buyer is required to give notice to the escrow holder of its disapproval of a contingency by a certain deadline, as a matter of prudence, the notice should be given to both the escrow holder and the seller at the same time.

c. [4:533] Effective date: Generally, notice that is hand-delivered or transmitted by fax should be effective upon receipt. Notices sent by mail can generally be deemed effective within an agreed-upon number of days after deposit in the ordinary course of mail (typically, 48 or 72 hours after mailing).

d. [4:533.1] Compare—constructive notice: Under certain circumstances, a party may be deemed by law to have notice although no formal notice was transmitted or received. Such "constructive notice" exists when a person "has actual notice of circumstances sufficient to put a prudent person upon inquiry as to a particular fact …" [Civ.C. § 19 (emphasis added); see Marriage of Cloney (2001) 91 CA4th 429, 436-437, 110 CR2d 615, 621]

Moreover, a letter correctly addressed and properly mailed is presumed to have been received by its addressee in the ordinary course of the mail. [Ev.C. § 641]

28. [4:534] Severability: Formal contracts often contain a "severability" clause, indicating that if any provision of the agreement is deemed void or unenforceable, the balance will remain enforceable and not affected thereby. Such "severability" language generally is effective, although, if the unlawful portion of the contract is the "essence" of the parties' agreement, the entire agreement will be unenforceable. [Keene v. Harling (1964) 61 C2d 318, 321-322, 38 CR 513, 516; see also Baeza v. Sup.Ct. (Castle & Cooke Calif., Inc.) (2011) 201 CA4th 1214, 1230, 135 CR3d 557, 568—severance appropriate where illegal provision collateral to contract's main purpose; Persson v. Smart Inventions, Inc. (2005) 125 CA4th 1141, 1153-1154, 23 CR3d 335, 344-345 (distinguishing prohibited "partial rescission" of contract (¶ 11:475) from set-aside of unenforceable severable provision)]

• [4:534a] A provision in a real estate purchase and sale agreement purporting to limit the damages recoverable by buyers should the developer be in breach was deemed "separate and independent" and therefore severable from other provisions requiring the buyers to comply with certain nonadversarial prelitigation procedures before proceeding with their construction defect action against the developer: "[The] allegedly unlawful provision … is collateral to the main purpose of the contract [i.e., the sale and purchase of real property, a lawful purpose], and may be severed from it without interfering with enforcement of the lawful provisions of the contract." [Baeza v. Sup.Ct. (Castle & Cooke Calif., Inc.) (2011) 201 CA4th 1214, 1231, 135 CR3d 557, 569]

➪ [4:534.1] PRACTICE POINTER: Severability language can, of course, be included in a purchase and sale agreement. Bear in mind, however, that this is a boilerplate provision requiring particularly careful consideration in each transaction to determine whether severability is advisable (i.e., either party may not want to go through with the deal if certain parts thereof are held void).

29. [4:535] "Time of the Essence": A provision stating that all time periods and deadlines are "of the essence" is advisable. Violation of such a provision may amount to a breach of the contract and excuse the other party's obligation to perform. [See Galdjie v. Darwish (2003) 113 CA4th 1331, 1337-1338, 7 CR3d 178, 182; Pittman v. Canham (1992) 2 CA4th 556, 560, 3 CR2d 340, 342—buyer's failure to pay purchase price by specified date terminated seller's obligation to convey; Consolidated World Investments, Inc. v. Lido Preferred, Ltd. (1992) 9 CA4th 373, 380-382, 11 CR2d 524, 528-529—buyer's failure to request opening of escrow within specified time period for closing of escrow terminated seller's obligation to convey; but see also ¶ 4:537]

Compare: If no time is specified for the performance of an obligation under the contract, "a reasonable time is allowed" (see ¶ 4:282.1 and 11:56 ff.). [Civ.C. § 1657; see also Conservatorship & Estate of Buchenau (2011) 196 CA4th 1031, 1039, 127 CR3d 109, 115 (no "time of essence" clause)—public guardian's 19-day delay in delivering all documents necessary to transfer title to purchaser of property at auction not unreasonable under the circumstances (noting also, however, that an essential time for performance may be implied when so required); Katemis v. Westerlind (1953) 120 CA2d 537, 543, 261 P2d 553, 558, app. after new trial (1956) 142 CA2d 799, 299 P2d 383—buyer's two-day delay in paying balance due under sale contract was at most a "technical and unintentional" default that did not defeat buyer's right to specific performance where "time of essence" clause not included in contract]

a. [4:536] Waiver by conduct: Despite an agreement that "time is of the essence," the parties can waive such a provision by conduct indicating time might not really be "of the essence." [See Galdjie v. Darwish (2003) 113 CA4th 1331, 1339-1340, 7 CR3d 178, 183-184—trial court properly found that seller waived agreement's time provisions by continuing to deal with buyer after dates specified in agreement; Johnson v. Goldberg (1955) 130 CA2d 571, 577, 279 P2d 131, 135—seller waived 10-day alleged "time of essence" condition for buyer to make deposit with title company]

b. [4:536.1] Estoppel to assert "time of the essence" provision: Similarly, under appropriate circumstances, either party may be estopped, by his or words or conduct, to assert a "time of the essence" provision in defense to enforcement of the agreement (Ev.C. § 623—one party's deliberate inconsistent words or conduct to the detriment of the other party who acted, or failed to act, in reliance thereon). [See McCown v. Spencer (1970) 8 CA3d 216, 224, 87 CR 213, 218—seller estopped to assert buyer's failure to timely perform]

➪ [4:537] PRACTICE POINTER: One party's failure to timely perform does not result in an "automatic discharge" of the agreement (it may not amount to a "material" breach, or it may be the subject of a waiver or estoppel, ¶ 4:536 ff.), and therefore may not necessarily excuse timely performance by the other. [See MacFadden v. Walker (1971) 5 C3d 809, 815-816, 97 CR 537, 540-541—buyer's default in installment payments under land sale contract does not give vendor absolute right to terminate contract (equities weighed in favor of avoiding forfeiture); Galdjie v. Darwish (2003) 113 CA4th 1331, 1341-1343, 7 CR3d 178, 185-186—where seller waived buyer's failure to timely obtain loan approval, buyer's default did not automatically terminate agreement and seller's obligation to provide termite report to escrow; see also Katemis v. Westerlind (1953) 120 CA2d 537, 543, 261 P2d 553, 558 (¶ 4:535)]

Thus, the "nondefaulting" party should nonetheless tender full performance whenever practical. For example, even if the buyer does not timely deliver the purchase price at closing, the seller should demonstrate the seller's readiness, willingness and ability to perform by delivering the deed and other required closing documents to the escrow holder (or any other designated intermediary); failure to do so could put the seller in breach.

c. [4:537.1] Application to option agreements: A "time of the essence" clause in an option agreement is of no effect. "[S]uch considerations have nothing to do with options … Rather, on the lapse of the option period the matter is completely ended and the offer is withdrawn." [Allen v. Smith (2002) 94 CA4th 1270, 1282, 114 CR2d 898, 905 (internal quotes and citations omitted); see discussion at ¶ 8:100 ff.]

Cross-refer: These principles are discussed in greater detail in Ch. 11 in connection with breach of contract remedies and, specifically, conditions precedent vs. conditions concurrent. See ¶ 11:70 ff.

30. [4:538] Delivery of Possession: The contract should specify the date the seller is obligated to deliver possession to the buyer. This will almost always be the closing date.

a. [4:539] Lease in event of preclosing or delayed transfer of possession: If the buyer is to take possession before the closing or the seller is to remain in possession for some time after the closing, it is advisable to create a lease, either within the purchase agreement or by separate instrument. By so doing, the owner (buyer or seller, as the case may be) will be guaranteed the expeditious remedy of unlawful detainer should possession be wrongfully withheld.

Any such lease will usually be abbreviated; but it should always specify the rental amount and a definite date for the end of its term. (See comprehensive treatment of leases and rental agreements in Friedman, Garcia & Hoy, Cal. Prac. Guide: Landlord-Tenant (TRG), Ch. 2B.)

31. Further Acts

a. [4:540] General provision: The parties may wish to include a "further acts" provision, requiring buyer and seller to take those steps and execute such documents as may be reasonably necessary to carry out the provisions of the purchase agreement (and transactions contemplated by the agreement).

➪ [4:541] PRACTICE POINTER: Think carefully about including such a provision; it may invite disputes as to what is "reasonably necessary." Also, since the buyer's obligation is generally confined to paying the purchase price, a "further acts" provision typically benefits the buyer alone; sellers, therefore, should avoid a broadly-worded, "further acts" clause.

After reflection, the parties may deem it more prudent to rely strictly on the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing (¶ 4:275.5) to ensure that each will do what is necessary to perform the contract; or, alternatively, to specify what particular "further acts" are contemplated. [See also Civ.C. § 1656—necessary incidents to contract implied]

b. [4:542] Execution of specific documents: Occasionally, and particularly when the buyer wishes to process various permit or development applications, it will be advisable to identify with some degree of specificity the kinds of documents the seller must execute to facilitate the processing of permits and other development approvals. In this situation, the seller should also include a statement indicating the seller is not obligated to pay any fees and incurs no liability for having executed these documents.

32. [4:543] No Transfer During Escrow: It is sometimes beneficial to add a provision barring the seller from selling, encumbering or marketing the property during the term of the purchase agreement. (Of course, such action may in any event violate an express representation or warranty or otherwise breach the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, giving the buyer a cause of action for breach.)

33. Governing Law and Venue

a. [4:544] Choice of law: Rules on interpretation and enforceability of contracts vary from state-to-state. Thus, the parties should designate which state's laws will govern the transaction in the event of a dispute.

(1) [4:544.1] Enforceability of choice of law provisions: Generally, contractual choice of law provisions, agreed to in an arm's length transaction, will be respected and enforced by California courts. In testing the validity of such provisions, California courts apply the principles set forth in Rest.2d Conflict of Laws § 187, "which reflect a strong policy favoring enforcement." [Nedlloyd Lines B.V. v. Sup.Ct. (Seawinds Ltd.) (1992) 3 C4th 459, 464-465, 11 CR2d 330, 333; see also Washington Mut. Bank, FA v. Sup.Ct. (Briseno) (2001) 24 C4th 906, 916-917, 103 CR2d 320, 328; Gramercy Investment Trust v. Lakemont Homes Nevada, Inc. (2011) 198 CA4th 903, 909, 130 CR3d 496, 501]

Under the Restatement approach, the court first must determine whether (a) the chosen state has a "substantial relationship" to the parties or their transaction or (b) there is any other "reasonable basis" for the parties' choice of law.

If neither of these tests is met, the inquiry ends; and the court need not enforce the parties' choice of law. [Nedlloyd Lines B.V. v. Sup.Ct. (Seawinds Ltd.), supra, 3 C4th at 466, 11 CR2d at 334; see also Gramercy Invest. Trust v. Lakemont Homes Nevada, Inc., supra, 198 CA4th at 909-910, 130 CR3d at 501-502—New York choice of law provision contained in agreements to finance California real estate project deemed unenforceable because, among other things, New York had insufficient contacts with transaction (discussed further at ¶ 6:273.1b)]

If, however, either test is met, the court must next determine whether the chosen state's law is contrary to a "fundamental policy" of California. Absent such conflict, the court must enforce the parties' choice of law. Conversely, if there is such a conflict, the court must determine whether California has a "materially greater interest" than the chosen state in determining the particular issue; if not, the chosen state's law will be applied. [Nedlloyd Lines B.V. v. Sup.Ct. (Seawinds Ltd.), supra; Washington Mut. Bank, FA v. Sup.Ct. (Briseno), supra, 24 C4th at 916-917, 103 CR2d at 328; see ABF Capital Corp. v. Grove Properties Co. (2005) 126 CA4th 204, 217-219, 23 CR3d 803, 810-812—because Calif. fundamental policy mandates reciprocal treatment of unilateral contractual attorney fee provisions vis-à-vis business entities, Calif. rather than N.Y. law applied to determine prevailing parties' entitlement to attorney fees]

(a) [4:544.2] Enforcement despite contract of adhesion: The same enforceability analysis applies even though the choice of law clause is contained in a contract of adhesion. The Nedlloyd (Rest.2d) analysis "contains safeguards to protect contracting parties, including consumers, against choice-of-law agreements that are unreasonable or in contravention of a fundamental California policy." [Washington Mut. Bank, FA v. Sup.Ct. (Briseno) (2001) 24 C4th 906, 917-918, 103 CR2d 320, 329 (provision in standard nonnegotiable deed of trust)]

➪ [4:545] PRACTICE POINTERS: If the parties intend the transaction to be governed by out-of-state law, the form and substance of the agreement should be approved in writing (before signing) by local counsel. Certain provisions may be unenforceable in other jurisdictions; and the mechanics of closing may be entirely different in other states.

Further, if the parties want to reserve the right to litigate any tort claims arising from their agreement, they should choose a state (within the limits allowed by choice of law rules, ¶ 4:544.1) with laws that govern contract and tort claims arising from a contractual relationship. California law so provides, but the laws of other states frequently used in choice of law provisions (such as New York, Delaware and Illinois) do not.

b. [4:546] Venue (forum-selection clause): It may also be desirable to designate the court in which any suit on the transaction must be brought (particularly if the transaction involves out-of-state or multi-state contacts)—e.g., if a state action, in the superior court of the State of California for the county where the property is located; or, if a federal action, in the United States District Court for the appropriate federal judicial district of California.

(1) [4:546.1] Enforceability: Generally, the same liberal approach to the enforceability of contractual choice of law clauses (¶ 4:544 ff.) applies to the enforceability of contractual forum-selection clauses. Thus, so long as freely and voluntarily agreed to in arm's length negotiations, the parties' contractual selection of a particular forum to litigate their disputes will normally be given effect. [See Nedlloyd Lines B.V. v. Sup.Ct. (Seawinds Ltd.) (1992) 3 C4th 459, 464, 11 CR2d 330, 332-333; Smith, Valentino & Smith, Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Life Assur. Co. of Penn.) (1976) 17 C3d 491, 495-496, 131 CR 374, 377; CQL Original Products, Inc. v. National Hockey League Players' Ass'n (1995) 39 CA4th 1347, 1353, 46 CR2d 412, 415 (enforcing forum-selection clause designating Ontario, Canada as jurisdictional situs for claims arising under licensing agreement)]

(a) [4:546.2] Enforcement despite contract of adhesion: A forum-selection clause contained in a contract of adhesion is enforceable so long as the clause "provided adequate notice to the party that he was agreeing to the jurisdiction cited in the contract." [Intershop Communications, AG v. Sup.Ct. (Martinez) (2002) 104 CA4th 191, 201-202, 127 CR2d 847, 855—"A finding of adhesion merely begins another inquiry—whether a particular provision within the contract should be denied enforcement on ground that it defeats the expectations of the weaker party or it is unduly oppressive or unconscionable"]

(b) [4:546.3] Reasonableness factor: Although forum-selection clauses are presumed valid and therefore enforceable, they will not be enforced if shown to be "unreasonable under the circumstances of the case." For example, "when a party, under the terms of a forum selection clause, has the option to litigate in more than one forum, that party cannot choose to extensively litigate in the original forum … and then decide to enforce the right it otherwise would have had to compel the other party to litigate in a different forum. Such circumstances make enforcement of the forum selection clause unreasonable as a matter of law." [Trident Labs, Inc. v. Merrill Lynch Commercial Finance Corp. (2011) 200

CA4th 147, 157, 132 CR3d 551, 558-559—by exercising its "sole discretion" under forum-selection clause to litigate extensively in California for over 19 months, lender forfeited its right to later invoke the clause for purpose of changing venue to Illinois]

(c) [4:546.4] Distinguish—"permissive" forum-selection clause: A contractual clause designating a specific court where any suit on the transaction must be brought is a "mandatory" forum-selection clause, subject to the enforceability analysis set forth at ¶ 4:546.1 ff. [See Animal Film, LLC v. D.E.J. Productions, Inc. (2011) 193 CA4th 466, 471, 123 CR3d 72, 76—mandatory clauses ordinarily are given effect without any analysis of convenience, only question being whether enforcement is unreasonable]

On the other hand, a clause that simply provides for submission to a particular court's jurisdiction without ruling out other jurisdictions is a "permissive" forum-selection clause. Its enforceability turns on traditional forum non conveniens analysis. [Intershop Communications, AG v. Sup.Ct. (Martinez) (2002) 104 CA4th 191, 196-197, 127 CR2d 847, 850-851; see also Animal Film, LLC v. D.E.J. Productions, Inc., supra, 193 CA4th at 472, 123 CR3d at 77—forum-selection clause deemed permissive in nature because it merely provided for submission to Texas jurisdiction rather than mandating litigation exclusively in Texas]

Cross-refer: For a detailed discussion of forum-selection clauses and the doctrine of forum non conveniens, see Weil & Brown et al., Cal. Prac. Guide: Civ. Pro. Before Trial (TRG), Ch. 3.

➪ [4:547] PRACTICE POINTER: If the sufficiency of "contacts" with California might be in doubt in the event a California choice-of-law and/or forum-selection clause is used, it may be helpful to include a recitation that the agreement has been "prepared, negotiated and executed" in California. [See generally, Civ.C. § 1646 (interpretation according to law and usage of place where contract to be performed or where it is made)]

34. [4:548] Merger; Survival of Warranties: As indicated earlier, execution of the deed extinguishes the contract and all its warranties and representations unless otherwise agreed (¶ 4:16, 4:434, 4:454). Thus, to the extent consistent with the parties' desires (particularly the buyer's), it is advisable to add a catchall provision stating that all warranties, representations, covenants and other obligations of the parties shall survive the closing of the transaction and recordation and delivery of the deed. This will help ensure that all of the parties' obligations (including the seller's representations) remain actionable in the event of a breach after the sale becomes final.

35. [4:549] Construction Against Draftsperson: Under general rules of contract interpretation, contract language is construed most strongly against the party who caused the uncertainty to exist (i.e., the draftsperson). [Civ.C. § 1654; see also Civ.C. § 1442—forfeiture provisions strictly construed against benefited party; and CCP § 1864—when different constructions are otherwise equally proper, construction most favorable to party in whose favor provision was made prevails]

To overcome this result, the parties may deem it prudent to include a provision stating that the purchase agreement has been negotiated at arm's length, with each side represented by independent counsel, and that neither party should be construed as the draftsperson.

36. [4:550] Counterparts: Typically, the parties separately execute identical versions of their purchase agreement. A "counterpart execution" provision confirms that separate execution of identical copies is tantamount to the parties' signatures on the same copy.

37. [4:551] No Waiver Provision: In some cases, either party's failure to require strict adherence to a particular term in the contract may be construed as a waiver of the right to insist on future compliance. To help avoid this result, the parties may wish to include language indicating that the waiver of a right or failure to require strict compliance with the conditions of the agreement shall not be deemed to be a continuing waiver. (However, bear in mind that even a "no waiver" provision can be waived.)

38. [4:551.1] No Joint Venture or Partnership: The parties may want to add a provision stating that their relationship is solely that of buyer and seller, and no partnership, joint venture, agency or other relationship exists between buyer and seller. Generally, this provision is unnecessary; but it is sometimes included to defeat any claim that one party was, or was intended to be, a partner or agent of the other.

39. [4:552] Definitional Section: Some attorneys believe a definitional section should be included at the beginning of the purchase agreement, setting forth an alphabetical dictionary of important terms. This approach ensures the parties have the same understanding of pivotal terms, thus narrowing potential points of dispute. By the same token, such provisions should be kept short, as they may otherwise complicate, rather than simplify, the terms.

40. [4:553] Captions; Gender: Many lawyers who draft contracts include “boilerplate” language stating that the captions, titles or headings shall have no meaning and that reference to “he” shall also mean “she” (and vice-versa) or, as appropriate, “it or them.” Such provisions are frequently superfluous; they really do nothing to ensure the validity or enforceability of purchase agreements and, thus, are not essential.

41. [4:554] Incorporation of Recitals and Exhibits: “Recitals” appearing at the beginning of a contract might appear to be merely prefatory, not an operative part of the purchase agreement; but recitals often contain important substantive provisions (or at least statements of agreed-upon facts). Therefore, it is advisable to include a separate paragraph specifically incorporating recitals as part of the contract. See discussion at ¶ 4:284.

Likewise, any exhibits to the agreement (including third party contracts related to the transaction), the terms of which are intended to be made a part of the agreement, must clearly be incorporated by reference. [See Versaci v. Sup.Ct. (Palomar Community College Dist.) (2005) 127 CA4th 805, 814, 26 CR3d 92, 98]

42. [4:555] Attorney Signatures: Frequently, signature blocks on contracts bear attorney signatures under the legend “approved as to form and content.” In so stating, counsel are simply asserting they are the attorneys for their particular clients and that the document is in proper form and embodies the deal that was made between the parties. [See Freedman v. Brutzkus (2010) 182 CA4th 1065, 1067, 1070, 106 CR3d 371, 372, 374—recital by itself does not operate as representation to opposing party's attorney that can provide basis for tort liability]

1. [4:560] Overview: Every purchase and sale involves the transfer of various documents and monies, as well as the coordination of several ancillary preclosing, closing and postclosing matters. Of course, buyers do not want to part with their money and sellers do not want to permit recordation of the deed until each is assured the other will perform. Thus, there must be some reliable mechanism for transferring title, documents and money.

a. [4:561] "Sit-down closings" vs. escrow: There are two basic mechanisms to effectuate the final transfers and ancillary closing steps: escrows and traditional (or so-called "sit-down") closings. In a traditional closing (still used in some states), the parties (or their representatives) simply pass the documents and monies across the table. An outside party may be used to record the deed (and related documents). However, almost all of the closing paper work is handled directly by buyer and seller or their counsel.

In California, the use of an escrow as a central repository is considered to be the easiest, most efficient and inexpensive method of consummating a purchase and sale. There are many qualified escrow holders in this state and the fees are competitively priced (far less expensive than using attorneys). Thus, the parties typically opt for an escrow rather than a sit-down closing.

➪ [4:562] PRACTICE POINTER: Many clients oppose the use of an escrow because they do not trust an escrow officer to prepare certain documents and perform various other tasks, and they want to avoid escrow fees. Even so, the parties can always reserve to themselves those tasks they do not wish the escrow holder to handle; and escrows are almost always less expensive than employing attorneys to handle closing mechanics. On balance, there is little advantage in opting for a traditional nonescrow closing. An escrow makes sense even if the only thing required of the escrow holder is to record the deed and disburse the monies.

Moreover, some third party involvement usually is needed even in nonescrow closings. Typically, the money and deed will be delivered to a title insurance company, with express instructions to disburse the money to the seller only after recordation of the deed (and issuance of an appropriate title insurance policy). (Of course, it is possible simply to send the deed to the county recorder for recordation the day of the closing, while the parties sit around the table and wait for recording confirmation as the "go-ahead" for transferring the monies. But this is obviously not the safest or most efficient way to close the deal.)

b. Definitions

(1) [4:563] Escrow: An "escrow" is statutorily defined as "… any transaction in which one person, for the purpose of effecting the sale, transfer, encumbering, or leasing of real or personal property to another person, delivers any written instrument, money, evidence of title to real or personal property, or other thing of value to a third person to be held by that third person until the happening of a specified event or the performance of a prescribed condition, when it is then to be delivered by that third person to a grantee, grantor, promisee, promisor, obligee, obligor, bailee, bailor, or any agent or employee of any of the latter." [Fin.C. § 17003(a); see also Civ.C. § 1057; and Summit Fin'l Holdings, Ltd. v. Continental Lawyers Title Co. (2002) 27 C4th 705, 711, 117 CR2d 541, 545]

(With regard to Internet escrow companies, the statutory definition of "escrow" includes the transfer of the "Internet-authorized equivalent" of money. See Fin.C. § 17003(b).)

In practical effect, therefore, an escrow is the intermediary structure for effecting the final steps toward closing. The escrow holds the deed and money pending satisfaction of specified conditions, at which point the deed and money are transferred to the appropriate party and the transaction is closed. [See Tribeca Cos., LLC. v. First American Title Ins. Co. (2015) 239 CA4th 1088, 1109, 192 CR3d 354, 371]

(a) [4:563.1] Only initial deposit required: The existence of an escrow as defined by Fin.C. § 17003(a) does not require a completed delivery from escrow; it requires only that the transaction contemplate such delivery. The delivery that must occur for an escrow to exist under the statute is the initial deposit. [Pasternak v. Boutris (2002) 99 CA4th 907, 919, 121 CR2d 493, 502]

(2) [4:564] Escrow agent: An "escrow agent" is "any person engaged in the business of receiving escrows for deposit or delivery." [Fin.C. § 17004; see also Fin.C. § 17004.5 (same for "Internet escrow agent")]

Generally, an escrow agent's "limited role" in the transaction is "as an agent who carries out the escrow instructions"; the escrow agent's role ends upon the successful exchange of payments and instruments. [Paul v. Schoellkopf (2005) 128 CA4th 147, 154, 26 CR3d 766, 770 (internal quotes omitted); see also Tribeca Cos., LLC. v. First American Title Ins. Co. (2015) 239 CA4th 1088, 1109-1110, 192 CR3d 354, 371—escrow agent's failure to carry out any instruction it contracted to perform provides injured party with breach of contract cause of action (¶ 4:581)]

(3) [4:565] Escrow vs. escrow holders: The terms "escrow," "escrow holder" and "escrow agent" are sometimes used interchangeably. Technically, the "escrow" is the transaction or structure for the closing, whereas the "holder" or "agent" is the company handling the escrow transaction. The term "escrow officer" is commonly used to refer to the particular individual handling the escrow on behalf of the escrow holder or agent.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

c. [4:566] Regulation of escrows: Escrows and escrow holders are regulated by the Department of Corporations and the Commissioner of Corporations. Licensing, audits, posting of bonds, records, trust accounts and various other matters are subject to specific statutory provisions (Fin.C. § 17400 et seq.; and see 10 CCR §§ 1709-1769). Title insurance company escrows are subject to additional laws (see Ins.C. § 12404 et seq.).

2. [4:567] Selecting Escrow Holder: All persons or entities engaged in the business of being an escrow holder must meet specified qualifications (Fin.C. § 17200 et seq.—licensing requirements). But, among those of equal qualifications, there is great diversity in competence, cost and honesty. Escrow holders tend to fall into one of the following categories:

a. [4:568] Title insurance company escrows: Although an "underwritten title company" is in the business of preparing title searches, title reports, certificates and abstracts of title, it also may engage in the escrow business and act as an escrow agent by satisfying specific statutory requirements. [See Ins.C. §§ 12340.5, 12389; ¶ 3:28]

The advantage of using a title insurance company escrow is that it tends to have experienced escrow officers and can easily coordinate the escrow work with the title side of the transaction. As a result, the escrow officer and title officer can more easily work together (and often have worked together before); moreover, they are often located in the same building, facilitating communication and expeditious closing.

(1) [4:568.1] Title insurer performing limited escrow functions: Some title insurers act as a limited "subescrow," performing only basic escrow functions such as paying out funds and recording documents but not undertaking to prepare or review escrow documents or ensuring that the parties' escrow instructions are carried out. In that capacity, the title insurer cannot be held to any escrow "agency" duties with regard to functions beyond its limited undertaking. [See In re Estates of Collins (2012) 205 CA4th 1238, 1255, 141 CR3d 227, 240—when same entity acts as title insurer and escrow holder, knowledge obtained as title insurer is not imputed to escrow principal because title insurer is not principal's agent; Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1996) 46 CA4th 1181, 1193-1194, 54 CR2d 84, 91—title insurer engaged by escrow agent to hold and pay out loan proceeds on agent's command and ensure recording of deeds did not thereby become buyers' fiduciary for purposes of searching records or transmitting title information]

b. [4:569] Escrow companies owned and operated by lending institutions: These escrow holders also tend to be fairly experienced by reason of the sheer volume of their workload. If associated with a reputable lending institution, they are more readily perceived as coming from a position of financial strength and honesty.

c. [4:570] Unaffiliated escrow companies: There are many fine unaffiliated ("independent") escrow companies engaged solely in the escrow business. However, because they are independent, before employing one of these escrows, it is important to verify that the company is competent, legitimate and financially sound.

d. [4:571] Attorney as escrow holder: There is no legal reason why the parties cannot designate the buyer's or seller's attorney to act as escrow holder. [See Fin.C. § 17006—exempting licensed attorneys from escrow licensing requirement so long as client is principal in transaction and attorney not in escrow business; Virtanen v. O'Connell (2006) 140 CA4th 688, 697, 44 CR3d 702, 708]

However, prudent attorneys generally avoid acting as escrow holder because of the expanded liability risks and potential conflict of interests: In the attorney's capacity as escrow holder, the attorney owes duties to all parties to the escrow (see ¶ 4:580). If there are conflicting demands from the attorney's client and another party to the escrow, the attorney cannot favor the client over the other party and "convert" the escrowed property for the client's use. [Virtanen v. O'Connell, supra, 140 CA4th at 692-693, 697, 44 CR3d at 705-706, 708-709—where attorney representing stock purchaser agreed to hold stock certificates in escrow, seller terminated sale and delivered rescission notice to attorney demanding return of certificates, and despite demand, attorney closed transaction and delivered certificates to transfer agent to effectuate share transfer, attorney liable to seller for breach of fiduciary duty, negligence and conversion; see also ¶ 4:644 ff.]

➪ [4:571.1] PRACTICE POINTER: Attorneys who agree to assume such a "two-hat" role and then face conflicting demands in their capacity as escrow holder may consider interpleading the escrowed property to decrease the risk of potential liability. [See Virtanen v. O'Connell (2006) 140 CA4th 688, 693, 44 CR3d 702, 706; and ¶ 4:647]

➪ [4:572] PRACTICE POINTERS RE CHOICE*: Regardless of the kind of escrow holder to be selected, certain practical considerations should weigh heavily in the choice:

- Location: Choose a "geographically desirable" escrow holder. This will not necessarily be where the property is located. Rather, pick an escrow holder that is geographically convenient to expedite the delivery of documents, monies, etc.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

• Experience/competence: A competent escrow officer will lighten counsel's burdens and keep the client's legal bill down. Conversely, incompetent escrow holders can make the transaction a nightmare for the parties and their lawyers.

Fundamentally, therefore, choose an escrow holder (and a particular escrow officer) who is experienced. If appropriate, select one with whom you have previously worked and who has proved to be responsive and accommodating.

• Disciplinary record: In addition, you may consider checking to see if the escrow holder under consideration has been the subject of disciplinary action by the Department of Real Estate, the Department of Corporations and/or the Department of Insurance. State law requires each of those governmental agencies to maintain an internet website displaying a database of individuals who have been subjected to professional discipline related to the escrow industry. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10176.1; Fin.C. § 17423.1; Ins.C. § 12414.31]

• Availability: Also, determine ahead of time if the desired escrow officer will be available to handle the transaction through the closing. If the officer has vacation plans or otherwise may be unavailable once the escrow opens, it may be best to select someone else. (It is always disconcerting to surprisingly discover after the fact that someone new has had to take over a complicated closing.)

• Cost: Escrow holders charge varying fees, but the fees are negotiable. The agreed-upon fees should reflect the amount of work the escrow holder is required to do (the parties may be doing a great deal of the work themselves, such as calculating prorations, preparing certain documents for recordation, etc.).

• Title issues: The escrow is often the intermediary in resolving a variety of title issues and frequently works extensively with the title insurance company. Thus, it makes sense to choose an escrow holder/officer who is somewhat schooled in title insurance issues.

• Financial strength and integrity: The escrow holder should have sufficient financial strength (in view of the magnitude of the transaction) to cover its potential liability in connection with the escrow (¶ 4:644 ff.). Of course, you should also strive to choose an escrow holder who presents the narrowest possible risk of potential liability: i.e., select one who has a reputation for honesty.

If you are unfamiliar with a particular escrow holder's financial strength and reputation, caution your clients accordingly.

• Be wary of broker-affiliated escrow holders: Real estate brokers frequently direct their clients to an escrow. However, some brokers own an interest in the escrow they recommend. Make certain the escrow holder is being chosen for the right reasons (experience, honesty, financial strength), not simply to further the broker's economic interest or working relationship.

3. Creating an Escrow

a. [4:573] Contract required: Escrow transactions are contractual in nature and, so, cannot be created without the agreement of seller, buyer and escrow holder. There must be a legally binding contract that specifically creates an escrow by designating an escrow holder and instructing the escrow appropriately. The mere delivery of documents without a corresponding contract does not suffice. [Elliott v. Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1923) 64 CA 508, 511, 222 P 175, 177; but see Pasternak v. Boutris (2002) 99 CA4th 907, 919-920, 121 CR2d 493, 502—cases standing for proposition that escrow requires binding contract antedate Fin.C. § 17003(a) (¶ 4:563)]

b. [4:574] Delivery in escrow required: By the same token, an effective escrow is created (escrow "opened") only when all the parties have delivered mutually consistent instructions (the contract) to the escrow holder. The delivery may be subject to certain conditions, but in any event there must be a delivery by which the grantor parts with "all future dominion and control" over the documents. [See Kenney v. Parks (1899) 125 C 146, 150, 57 P 772, 773; and Civ.C. § 1057 (essentially providing that escrow is created by deposit of "grant" with third party to be delivered on performance of a condition); and ¶ 4:563.1]

c. [4:575] Escrow instructions: In California, escrows are created by the execution and delivery of “escrow instructions” (the contract), sometimes referred to as “joint escrow instructions” (when given jointly by the parties). Despite the escrow's tri-party nature, the escrow holder rarely signs the instructions. (Indeed, most preprinted escrow instructions promulgated by escrow holders do not even contemplate the holder's execution of its own document.)

Practice varies between Northern and Southern California as to the form of instructions:

• In Southern California, buyer and seller typically execute and deliver to the escrow holder identical or “joint” escrow instructions at the inception of the transaction—i.e., either concurrently with execution of the purchase agreement or shortly thereafter.

• In Northern California, buyer and seller each give separate instructions to the escrow holder, typically just prior to the closing. While the seller's and buyer's instructions might not be identical, they will be substantially consistent.

4. Parties to Escrow

a. [4:576] Escrow holder, buyer and seller: Commonly, the only parties to the escrow are the seller, buyer and escrow holder. The obvious advantage in excluding others is that there are fewer people who can interfere with the purchase and sale. Most standard “general conditions” of escrow instructions permit the escrow holder to refrain from proceeding with the transaction in the event of conflicting demands (see ¶ 4:591, and Form 4:K); naturally, the fewer the parties, the less the likelihood of conflicting demands and, so, the less risk that the transaction will not be consummated. In any event, there is rarely a need to make anyone other than seller, buyer and escrow holder parties to the escrow.

b. [4:577] Lenders: Lenders who fund a portion of the purchase price do not typically become a party to the escrow. Rather, lender and borrower (buyer) create separate “loan escrow instructions” (typically, at the same escrow). These instructions provide the escrow holder with directions to record the loan documents and disburse the loan proceeds upon recordation of the deed and deed of trust (and upon recording or filing of any other specified instruments) and issuance of the lender's title insurance policy.

c. [4:578] Real estate brokers: Real estate brokers' commissions are customarily paid through the escrow out of the seller's proceeds. This is usually accomplished by means of the seller's written instruction authorizing disbursement. This may make the broker a third party beneficiary of the escrow, though not necessarily a party to the escrow. (Indeed, even without a broker disbursement instruction, a broker who has a separate written commission agreement may be able to claim a third party right to the commission portion of the seller's proceeds.)

➪ [4:579] PRACTICE POINTER: There are certain things you can do to minimize broker entanglement with an escrow:

• One possibility, of course, is for the seller simply to refuse to pay the broker through the escrow. (Many listing agreements do not specifically require payment through or by the escrow holder.) Broker commissions can simply be paid the day after the escrow closes.

• Alternatively, if a broker disbursement instruction is required (or desired), the seller may elect not to deliver the instruction to escrow until immediately before the closing. This will at least minimize (if not preclude) the broker's involvement in the escrow until the seller is relatively well-assured that the escrow is actually about to close.

5. [4:580] Escrow Holder's Fiduciary Relationship to Principals: An escrow holder is a limited agent and fiduciary to all parties to the escrow. [Summit Fin'l Holdings, Ltd. v. Continental Lawyers Title Co. (2002) 27 C4th 705, 711, 117 CR2d 541, 545; Virtanen v. O'Connell (2006) 140 CA4th 688, 703, 44 CR3d 702, 714]

As such, an escrow holder has a fiduciary duty to communicate to the principals knowledge acquired in the course of the agency with respect to material facts that might affect a principal's decision regarding the pending transaction. [Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1996) 46 CA4th 1181, 1193-1194, 54 CR2d 84, 91; Vournas v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1999) 73 CA4th 668, 674-675, 86 CR2d 490, 494-495 & fn. 8; see also Kangarlou v. Progressive Title Co., Inc. (2005) 128 CA4th 1174, 1178-1179, 27 CR3d 754, 756-757—escrow holder's fiduciary duty to communicate facts learned about broker's license arises out of its fiduciary duty to obtain evidence that broker is regularly licensed before delivering broker's compensation]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

On the other hand, an escrow holder "has no general duty to police the affairs of its depositors." [Summit Fin'l Holdings, Ltd. v. Continental Lawyers Title Co., supra, 27 C4th at 711, 117 CR2d at 545 (emphasis added)]

a. Scope of agency

(1) [4:581] Generally limited to escrow instructions: The parameters of an escrow holder's agency and fiduciary obligations to the parties are set by the express provisions of the escrow instructions. Absent clear evidence of fraud, an escrow holder's relationship with the parties to the escrow is thus limited to complying strictly with the parties' instructions. [Summit Fin'l Holdings, Ltd. v. Continental Lawyers Title Co. (2002) 27 C4th 705, 711, 117 CR2d 541, 545; see also Rideau v. Stewart Title of Calif., Inc. (2015) 235 CA4th 1286, 1294, 185 CR3d 887, 891—injured party has breach of contract action if escrow holder fails to carry out instruction it contracted to perform; Kangarlou v. Progressive Title Co., Inc. (2005) 128 CA4th 1174, 1179, 27 CR3d 754, 757—escrow holder's fiduciary duty to strictly comply with escrow instructions is within its duties undertaken by agreeing to execute the escrow]

It follows that an escrow holder incurs no liability for the failure to do something not within the terms of the escrow or for a loss incurred while correctly following the escrow instructions. [Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1996) 46 CA4th 1181, 1194, 54 CR2d 84, 91—acting pursuant to instructions only as "subescrow" in paying out funds and recording documents, title insurer owed no duty to buyers to search records or transmit title information and thus was not liable to buyers for failure to disclose lien; see also Tribeca Cos., LLC v. First American Title Ins. Co. (2015) 239 CA4th 1088, 1107, 1110-1114, 192 CR3d 354, 369, 372-375—title company did not err in refunding third-party investor's $1 million deposit despite contrary instructions from investment firm that set up escrow account for joint venture that never materialized (instructions applied only to funds actually deposited by investment firm and did not entitle it to control disposition of funds deposited by "nonrelated" third party); Blackburn v. McCoy (1934) 1 CA2d 648, 655, 37 P2d 153, 155-156—escrow had no duty to inform purchaser of price optionee agreed to pay owners because instructions silent as to same]

[4:581.1 - 4:581.4] Reserved.

(2) [4:581.5] Limited dual agency at commencement of escrow: At the inception of an escrow (upon delivery of documents and moneys), the escrow holder is a dual agent for both buyer and seller (and any other parties to the escrow). [Vournas v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1999) 73 CA4th 668, 674, 86 CR2d 490, 494]

However, the relationship is only one of a "limited" (not a general) agency in accordance with the escrow instructions, and the escrow holder's duties are limited accordingly. "The primary duty owed by an escrow holder is to strictly and faithfully perform the instructions given to it by the parties to the escrow." [Vournas v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co., supra, 73 CA4th at 674, 86 CR2d at 494; see Siegel v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1996) 46 CA4th 1181, 1194, 54 CR2d 84, 91—acting pursuant to instructions only as "subescrow" in paying out funds and recording documents, title insurer owed no duty to buyers to search records or transmit title information and thus was not liable to buyers for failure to disclose lien]

(3) [4:581.6] Separate agencies upon completion of escrow conditions: When the conditions of the escrow are satisfied, the "dual agency" technically terminates. [See Marriage of Cloney (2001) 91 CA4th 429, 440, 110 CR2d 615, 623]

Thereafter, the escrow holder becomes an agent for each of the parties to the transaction "in respect to those things placed in escrow, to which each has thus become completely entitled." Accordingly, the escrow holder becomes the agent of the buyer with regard to transfer/recordation of the deed (as instructed) and the agent of the seller with regard to payment of the money (as instructed). [Shreeves v. Pearson (1924) 194 C 699, 707, 230 P 448, 451—once escrow closes, escrow holder not agent of buyer if escrow holder steals seller's proceeds]

(a) [4:581.7] Compare—escrow holder also acting as lender's settlement agent: An escrow holder who also acts as the lender's settlement agent owes the lender duties separate and apart from those owed the buyer and seller. Indeed, the settlement agent's responsibilities continue beyond the close of escrow—i.e., until the loan in fact closes. [See Plaza Home Mortg., Inc. v. North American Title Co., Inc. (2010) 184 CA4th 130, 136-140, 109 CR3d 9, 14-17—although escrow holder's duties vis-à-vis buyer and seller ended with close of escrow, its duty to disclose postescrow payoffs as settlement agent for lender continued until loan actually closed]

b. [4:582] Standard of care: As agents, escrow holders owe a duty of good faith to their principals. They also owe a duty to exercise "ordinary skill and diligence" in their employment. Thus, they may be held liable not only for contract damages resulting from a violation of the escrow instructions, but also for tort damages proximately resulting from the negligent performance of their duties (¶ 4:644 ff.). [Amen v. Merced County Title Co. (1962) 58 C2d 528, 532, 25 CR 65, 67; Common Wealth Ins. Systems, Inc. v. Kersten (1974) 40 CA3d 1014, 1030, 115 CR 653, 664; see also Woodworth v. Redwood Empire Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1971) 22 CA3d 347, 366-367, 99 CR 373, 387]

(1) [4:582.1] Distinguish—not a "trustee's" standard of care: Curiously, although case law states that escrow holders are "fiduciaries" in the performance of their obligations (¶ 4:580), they are not held to the higher standard of care (duty of highest good faith and fair dealing) normally imposed upon fiduciaries in other contexts (e.g., under the trust law). Indeed, escrow holders are not trustees within the meaning of the trust law and do not have the powers or obligations of a true trustee. Rather, an escrow holder's "fiduciary relationship" is limited to exercising ordinary care in carrying out the escrow instructions. [See Prob.C. § 82(b)(14)—"trust" does not include "any arrangement under which a person is nominee or escrowee for another"; Hannon v. Western Title Ins. Co. (1989) 211 CA3d 1122, 1129, 260 CR 21, 25; Lee v. Escrow Consultants, Inc. (1989) 210 CA3d 915, 921, 259 CR 117, 121]

As a result, conduct which might give rise to a breach of fiduciary duty action against a trustee will not necessarily support a cause of action against an escrow holder. [See, e.g., Hannon v. Western Title Ins. Co., supra, 211 CA3d at 1129, 260 CR at 25—seller's claim that escrow holder breached fiduciary duty by depositing escrow funds in noninterest bearing account in exchange for personal gratuities from bank not cognizable under Prob.C. § 16004 (prohibiting trustee's self-dealing with trust property)]

(2) [4:582.2] Possible breach of duty even when escrow instructions followed? It has been suggested that an escrow holder who strictly follows the escrow instructions may nonetheless be liable for breach of fiduciary duty when a party to the escrow is subjected to double payment of a loan because the escrow holder paid the wrong party. [Summit Fin'l Holdings, Ltd. v. Continental Lawyers Title Co. (2002) 27 C4th 705, 717, 117 CR2d 541, 550 (J. Werdegar concur.opn.)]

c. [4:582.5] Knowledge within scope of agency imputed to principals: Escrow holders are presumed to have fulfilled their fiduciary duty to disclose to the principals (buyer and seller) information obtained in the course of the agency that is material to the pending transaction (¶ 4:580). Consequently, information obtained by an escrow holder within the scope of the escrow is imputed to the principals. [See California Nat'l Bank v. Havis (2004) 120 CA4th 1122, 1138, 16 CR3d 245, 256—seller's lender's communication with escrow agent re deed of trust reconveyance imputed to buyer's lender; Marriage of Cloney (2001) 91 CA4th 429, 440, 110 CR2d 615, 623—information re seller's true full name obtained by escrow agent properly imputed to buyer even though agent failed to disclose information to buyer; Triple A Mgmt. Co., Inc. v. Frisone (1999) 69 CA4th 520, 534-535, 81 CR2d 669, 678]

(1) [4:582.6] Imputed knowledge extends to documents: Knowledge of information contained in documents provided to escrow is imputed from the escrow holder to the principals because the principals have a right to see all such documents. [Marriage of Cloney (2001) 91 CA4th 429, 440, 110 CR2d 615, 624, fn. 10]

(2) [4:582.7] Escrow holder serving in multiple capacities: The fact that an escrow holder was serving in multiple capacities when the escrow holder acquired information material to the pending transaction is irrelevant. So long as the escrow holder obtained the information within the course and scope of the escrow, the information is imputed to the principals. [Marriage of Cloney (2001) 91 CA4th 429, 443, 110 CR2d 615, 626—fact escrow agent was allegedly acting in notary public capacity when she learned about seller's correct name had no effect on imputing agent's knowledge to buyer; compare In re Estates of Collins (2012) 205 CA4th 1238, 1255, 141 CR3d 227, 240-241—knowledge obtained by title insurer also acting as escrow holder not imputed to principal/lender (insurer's escrow officer merely knew about defunct lis pendens from dismissed quiet title action that did not carry with it notice of forged deed)]

(3) [4:582.8] Compare—information obtained outside course of agency: The scope of the imputed knowledge, however, is directly related to the scope of the escrow agent's duties arising from the escrow instructions. Thus, information obtained by an escrow holder outside the scope of the limited agency is not imputed to either principal. [Triple A Mgmt. Co., Inc. v. Frisone (1999) 69 CA4th 520, 534-535, 81 CR2d 669, 678—knowledge escrow agent acquired in prior escrow not imputed to principal of current escrow who was not a party to prior escrow]

6. [4:583] Preparing Escrow Instructions: Escrow instructions can be included within the purchase and sale agreement or may be created later by a subsequent instrument. Most practitioners prefer to include the instructions within the purchase agreement. But, because many purchase agreements are executed without reference to the mechanics of escrow (other than a statement that an escrow will be opened), escrow instructions are often prepared and executed after the purchase agreement is signed.

a. Form of instructions

(1) [4:584] Preprinted instructions: Every escrow company has its own preprinted form of escrow instructions. So long as they do not conflict with the underlying purchase agreement, using these form instructions will usually be an expeditious and cost-saving choice. (Under ordinary rules of contract interpretation, any uncertainty in the preprinted instructions will be construed against the escrow (the drafter). See Civ.C. § 1654; Campbell v. Scripps Bank (2000) 78 CA4th 1328, 1338, 93 CR2d 635, 644 (citing text); and Francis v. Eisenmayer (1959) 171 CA2d 221, 227, 340 P2d 54, 58.)

Many preprinted escrow instructions are simply stapled to the front of the previously-executed purchase and sale agreement, and incorporate all terms and conditions of the agreement.

(a) [4:584.1] Combined "C.A.R." form (single family residential properties): One section of the "Residential Purchase Agreement and Joint Escrow Instructions" form published by the California Association of Realtors (¶ 4:278, 4:278.2) incorporates several paragraphs from the body of the agreement, making the document operative as both a purchase and sale agreement and joint escrow instructions (once the agreement is delivered to and accepted by the escrow). However, the escrow holder usually will require certain additional documents, including its "general conditions" or "general provisions" (¶ 4:591). Also, buyer and seller can supplement the document with additional instructions as appropriate to their transaction.

➪ [4:584.2] PRACTICE POINTER: Of course, as with any standardized (preprinted) form, "form" escrow instructions should be carefully scrutinized before execution; and modifications should be made to fit the specifics of a particular transaction. See ¶ 4:278.5.

(2) [4:585] Attorney-drafted instructions: Escrow instructions may, of course, be drafted by counsel in lieu of using the escrow's preprinted form (subject, however, to execution of the escrow's "general conditions" (¶ 4:591 ff.) and any other instruments it requires).

(a) [4:586] Use simple "nonlegalese" language: Attorney-drafted escrow instructions should use simple, lucid and unqualified language. Escrow officers are not lawyers and it should not be presumed that they will understand the full significance of legal terms.

(3) [4:587] Oral instructions: Written escrow instructions are not statutorily required; thus, principles of agency and contract law apply to make oral escrow instructions binding and enforceable. [Zang v. Northwestern Title Co. (1982) 135 CA3d 159, 168, 185 CR 176, 181—escrow and its agent liable for violating oral instruction to obtain deed of trust] In practice, however, escrow holders will not accept oral instructions.

➪ [4:588] PRACTICE POINTER: As noted at ¶ 4:581 ff., the scope of the escrow holder's agency and duties is limited by the terms of the escrow instructions. Therefore, prudence dictates that escrow instructions always be put in a signed writing, thus minimizing the potential for dispute over the extent of the escrow's obligations.

(4) [4:589] Supplemental instructions from attorney: During the course of an escrow, it is often necessary for one party to give notices or miscellaneous directions to the escrow holder (e.g., directions from buyer regarding approval of title report; or instructions from seller identifying where net proceeds should be delivered). Escrow holders frequently accept such supplemental written notices and directions from counsel on behalf of the client.

➪ [4:589.1] PRACTICE POINTER: If the escrow holder will accept supplemental directions only from the parties, counsel should make certain the client is available to sign such directions; or, have the client execute a limited power of attorney designating you as the client's attorney in fact for that purpose (see ¶ 4:225 ff.).

(5) [4:590] Amended instructions: The parties may decide to change their instructions after the escrow is opened. However, to ensure that all parties have agreed to the change, it is advisable to provide in the initial written instructions that any subsequent amendment will be effective only if given in writing and signed by both buyer and seller. As a result, any act by the escrow holder pursuant to an amendment not signed by both parties would be invalid and thereby expose the escrow to consequential liability. [See Lee v. Escrow Consultants, Inc. (1989) 210 CA3d 915, 924, 259 CR 117, 123 (amendment forged)]

(6) [4:590.1] Mandatory statement for all *written escrow instructions: Although there are essentially no formalities for escrow instructions (again, they may even be oral), all written escrow instructions executed by a buyer or seller must contain a statement, in minimum 10-point type, that includes the license name and name of the department issuing the license or authority under which the escrow person is operating. [Civ.C. § 1057.7]

However, this statutory statement is not required in supplemental or amended escrow instructions. [Civ.C. § 1057.7]

b. [4:591] “General conditions”: Preprinted escrow instructions almost always contain so-called “general conditions” (or “general provisions”) of the escrow—i.e., various terms and conditions that escrow holders include to protect themselves. The general conditions deal with a host of issues, including the method for giving notice, attorney fees, right of the escrow holder to interplead disputed monies and documents, time for performance, and indemnity.

• FORM: Sample General Conditions of Escrow Holder, see Form 4:K.

➪ [4:592] PRACTICE POINTER: Read the general conditions carefully before signing the instructions. Many contain unreasonable exculpatory provisions exonerating the escrow from liability that may otherwise legally exist. You should negotiate these and other objectionable conditions in an effort to gain optimum protection for your clients.

➪ [4:593] PRACTICE POINTER: If the instructions are included in the purchase agreement, the agreement should contain a provision obligating the parties to execute the escrow's “general conditions” and whatever other instruments it may require.

c. [4:594] “Memorandum with which escrow need not be concerned”: This phrase is often used in escrow instructions to cover an issue that does not require the escrow to do anything, but which represents the parties' agreement in connection with a matter to be handled outside escrow or otherwise unrelated to the escrow. For example, “as a memorandum with which escrow need not be concerned, after the close of escrow seller shall repair all elevators to make them fully operational.”

Similar language also is commonly used in preprinted escrow instructions incorporated into a purchase agreement (as with the “C.A.R.” combined residential purchase agreement and joint escrow instructions, ¶ 4:584.1) to identify material in the agreement that is not part of the instructions but simply for the escrow holder's information and with which the escrow need not be concerned.

• [4:594.1] Comment: Technically, use of the phrase “memorandum with which escrow need not be concerned” is unnecessary. However, escrow holders like to add that language to their instructions for the purpose of clarifying that the escrow has no obligation in respect to the designated matters.

d. [4:595] Inconsistencies with underlying contract: Where there is an apparent conflict or ambiguity in or between the escrow instructions and the underlying purchase agreement, the two will be read together to ascertain the parties' intent and fix their rights and obligations. [Katemis v. Westerlind (1953) 120 CA2d 537, 542, 261 P2d 553, 557; see also Civ.C. § 1642]

However, it is prudent practice to specifically state in separate escrow instructions that, in the event of inconsistencies, the instructions supersede the underlying purchase agreement (or vice-versa if that is the parties' desire).

(1) [4:595.1] Compare—provisions *exclusive to escrow instructions: Wholly new rights and/or obligations under the purchase and sale agreement cannot be inferred from provisions exclusive to the escrow instructions.

For instance, a provision in the escrow instructions for the recovery of attorney fees in an action arising out of the escrow does not authorize an attorney fee award in a dispute over the purchase and sale agreement. The attorney fee provision in the escrow instructions addresses the rights and obligations of the escrow holder vis-à-vis the buyer and seller, whereas the purchase agreement relates to the rights and obligations between the buyer and seller. [See Paul v. Schoellkopf (2005) 128 CA4th 147, 152-154, 26 CR3d 766, 769-771]

e. [4:596] Escrow holder's acceptance: As earlier indicated, the parties rarely require the escrow holder to execute the escrow instructions. The escrow holder's acceptance of the instructions is generally considered to be its tacit (if not express) agreement to perform the specified obligations.

➪ [4:597] PRACTICE POINTER: Escrow holders naturally will have no hesitancy to accept their own preprinted instructions. However, if attorney-drafted instructions are used—and especially if the instructions are particularly unique or complicated—it makes sense to let the escrow holder review them before the parties sign. Don't assume that a designated escrow will accept your version of the functions to be performed by the escrow holder.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

7. [4:598] Escrow Holder's Functions: An escrow holder's specific acts and functions vary from case-to-case, depending on the idiosyncrasies of the transaction. In any event, they should be carefully spelled out in the escrow instructions.

Typical escrow functions are highlighted at ¶ 4:599 ff.:

a. [4:599] Acceptance of buyer's initial deposit: Usually, the escrow's preliminary function is to accept the buyer's initial deposit (downpayment). Unless the instructions expressly provide otherwise, the escrow holder has no duty to place the deposit in an interest-bearing account or otherwise to pay interest thereon (although many escrows routinely deposit monies in interest-bearing accounts). [Hannon v. Western Title Ins. Co. (1989) 211 CA3d 1122, 1128, 260 CR 21, 24]

Of course, any instruction requiring the payment of interest should also specify to whom the interest should be credited.

b. Title insurance matters

(1) [4:600] Ordering preliminary title report (and copies of title exceptions) and arranging for delivery to buyer: For a discussion of the need for a preliminary title report, and the importance of examining the title exceptions, see ¶ 4:327 ff.; and comprehensive treatment at ¶ 3:200 ff. (Of course, if the parties have already obtained a preliminary title report, the escrow holder will not need to do so.)

(2) [4:601] Arranging for buyer's "statement of information": Every title insurance company requires the buyer to execute a "statement of information" (sometimes known as a "statement of identity"). The statement requests certain information about the buyer so that the title company may determine if any liens or other deficiencies in title will attach against the buyer's interest upon recordation of the deed. (This is important because the title company is being asked to insure that the buyer will hold title free of all encumbrances or claims except those appearing of record as of the closing; see Ch. 3.)

For example, if an abstract of judgment has been recorded against the buyer, it will (like any other "floating lien") attach to the purchased property immediately upon recordation of the deed.

(3) [4:601.1] Mandatory disclosure statement if title insurance will not be issued: In an escrow transaction, where a policy of title insurance will not be issued to the buyer, the following notice must be provided in a separate document to the buyer and must be signed and acknowledged by the buyer (Civ.C. § 1057.6):

> "IMPORTANT: IN A PURCHASE OR EXCHANGE OF REAL PROPERTY, IT MAY BE ADVISABLE TO OBTAIN TITLE INSURANCE IN CONNECTION WITH THE CLOSE OF ESCROW SINCE THERE MAY BE PRIOR RECORDED LIENS AND ENCUMBRANCES WHICH AFFECT YOUR INTEREST IN THE PROPERTY BEING ACQUIRED. A NEW POLICY OF TITLE INSURANCE SHOULD BE OBTAINED IN ORDER TO ENSURE YOUR INTEREST IN THE PROPERTY THAT YOU ARE ACQUIRING." [Civ.C. § 1057.6]

c. [4:602] Preparing and recording grant deed and other documents: Escrow holders typically prepare and record the grant deed. If the parties contemplate the escrow's preparation of additional documents (whether for recordation or otherwise), the instructions should so state.

d. [4:603] Notification to parties: Occasionally, the parties may want the escrow holder to advise them of various contingency deadlines or to provide other special notices. Any such special notice requirements should be specifically stated in the instructions. (Otherwise, escrow holders do not typically advise the parties of deadlines or even when, or whether, documents or monies have been received.)

e. [4:604] Requesting payoff demand statements from existing lienholders: The escrow holder should be instructed to obtain payoff demand statements from existing lienholders and to arrange for lien releases upon consummation of the payoff.

A secured lender's "payoff demand statement" is a written statement in response to a written request setting forth the amounts required as of the date of preparation of the statement to fully satisfy all obligations secured by the subject loan. The written statement will include a per diem accrual rate so that the escrow holder can calculate the precise amount due as of the closing. [See Civ.C. § 2943(a)(5) & (c)—lender must prepare payoff demand statement within 21 days after request; California Nat'l Bank v. Havis (2004) 120 CA4th 1122, 1133, 16 CR3d 245, 252—Civ.C. § 2943(a)(5) "sets forth the necessary requirements of the payoff demand statement so that a borrower who desires to pay off a mortgage in full will know the exact amount due on the loan on a specific date" (emphasis in original)]

As earlier discussed, the lender's payoff demand statement may be relied upon as establishing the full amount necessary to discharge the secured obligation. Thereafter, any amounts owing which were mistakenly omitted from the lender's demand survive only as an unsecured obligation. [Civ.C. § 2943(d)(1), (3); see Cathay Bank v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1996) 46 CA4th 266, 271, 53 CR2d 595, 598; and more detailed discussion at ¶ 4:304.1 ff.]

(1) [4:604.1] Compare—no duties re obtaining and recording reconveyance of trust deed: The trustor under a deed of trust has a statutory right to full reconveyance of the trust deed when the obligation has been satisfied (¶ 6:406). The procedure for obtaining and recording a trust deed reconveyance is codified in Civ.C. § 2941 (¶ 6:407 ff.). Pursuant to the statute, duties regarding the reconveyance process are imposed only on the trust deed beneficiary and trustee; those duties do not "shift" at any time to the escrow holder. [Markowitz v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Co. (2006) 142 CA4th 508, 521-525, 48 CR3d 217, 226-229]

f. [4:605] Coordinating with new lender for loan escrow instructions and issuance of lender's title insurance policy: If a new loan will be recorded, the escrow will need to coordinate with the new lender, and arrange for the preparation of separate lender's escrow instructions and issuance of the lender's title insurance policy.

g. [4:606] Confirming new hazard insurance or assigning and prorating existing insurance: Any new lender will require the buyer to obtain appropriate hazard (casualty) insurance; and, in any event, it is always prudent for the buyer to procure such insurance. If the seller's existing coverage is not a blanket policy, the parties may be able to simply elect to assign the existing policy to the buyer and prorate the premiums; in that event, the instructions should specifically direct the escrow holder to compute any contemplated prorations (¶ 4:607 ff.).

h. [4:607] Prorations: Prorations are an extremely important part of the escrow's function. What to prorate, and the basis on which the proration is to be made, should be specifically delineated in the escrow instructions.

➪ [4:607.1] PRACTICE POINTERS: There is no requirement, of course, that prorations be computed by the escrow holder. The parties may wish to calculate their own prorations; this may be advisable with more complex issues … such as the application of security deposits to delinquent rents, or unbilled (or uncollected) tenant common area maintenance expenses. In cases where the parties wish to make their own calculations, they should simply deliver a mutually-approved written proration statement to the escrow holder prior to (and effective as of) the closing date.

[4:607.2] Typical prorations: Common items requiring proration include:

(1) [4:608] Utility bills (electric, gas, water, telephone, etc.)—i.e., ascertaining and apportioning preclosing utility expenses to the seller.

(a) [4:608.1] Compare—buyer's utility security deposit and notice obligations: Although it does not bear on utility bill prorations in escrow, buyers should be aware that they may be required, by local law, to give utility providers notice of the purchase and a security deposit (Gov.C. § 43008):

1) [4:608.2] Notice of transfer: A local municipality may require that, upon transfer of fee title (as evidenced by recordation) to a residential building of over four units that is provided with water and/or power by a municipal utility, the transferee notify the utility of the change in title within 30 days of the transfer. [Gov.C. § 43008(b)]

2) [4:608.3] Security deposit: The municipal utility may require the transferee to make a security deposit (up to six months' "estimated reasonable utility charges"), which may be held by the utility for up to two years (subject to an additional two-year extension in the event of delinquencies in paying utility charges). [See Gov.C. § 43008(b)]

(The utility has discretion to waive the security deposit based on the transferee's creditworthiness and "any other factors determined by the utility." Gov.C. § 43009.)

3) [4:608.4] Utility's lien rights: In the event the transferee fails to make the required deposit or to timely notify the utility of the transfer, the utility is entitled to record a lien against the property for the amount of the required deposit. (But the validity of the purchase and sale transaction is not affected; nor is the priority of all preexisting recorded liens on the property.) [Gov.C. § 43008(b)]

(2) [4:609] Rents and security deposits: Where the transaction involves rental property, the proration of tenant rents and security deposits can be particularly complex. For example, the application of security deposits to preclosing tenant defaults will not be known by the escrow officer unless there is a specific instruction from the parties. Also, the buyer should be given credit for any prepaid rents. The proration of rents and security deposits by an escrow (or any other third party) should be carefully monitored by the parties and their counsel.

(3) [4:610] Interest on existing loans: If the buyer is assuming or taking subject to an existing loan, the outstanding interest and principal balance must be prorated as of the closing date.

(4) [4:611] Prepayment penalties: If the sale will trigger any loan prepayment penalties, the escrow instructions (or purchase agreement) should identify who bears responsibility for the penalties or, if shared, how the amount will be prorated.

(5) [4:612] Real property taxes: Real property taxes are payable on a fiscal year basis of July 1 through June 30; and are due in two equal installments (unless the owner elects to pay the entire amount in a lump-sum on the first due date). But the tax bills are not sent until around November 1, covering the period from the preceding July 1 through June 30 of the following year. The first installment payment is due on December 10 of the current year; the second (relating to the period January 1 through June 30 of the following year) not until April 10. All of this means that for transactions closing after July 1, but before approximately November 1 (when the current tax bill is available), it is impossible to determine the precise property tax due as of the closing (for which the seller, of course, should bear responsibility). There are three ways to handle this problem:

(a) [4:613] Prorate on basis of past bill: One alternative is simply to prorate the property taxes based on the past bill; i.e., do not have any subsequent proration in the event the taxes go up or down.

This approach has the advantage of simplicity in that no one has to "chase" anyone else after the close of escrow to collect any difference between the estimated and actual tax bills. Moreover, if the property has not been sold since the last tax bill (or major improvements have not been made to the property in the interim), it is unlikely the current property taxes due will differ from the preceding year (except in cases of added bonds and assessments; see ¶ 4:617).

(b) [4:614] Reimbursement: Provide that, to the extent the tax bill is higher or lower than estimated (based on the prior year's bill), the benefited party will reimburse the other upon a certain number of days' notice after the new tax bill is available.

Of course, the obvious disadvantage to this approach is the lack of "finality" to the transaction despite the closing of escrow; it necessarily leaves rights and obligations hanging in limbo for a period of time.

(c) [4:615] Retain funds in escrow: Withhold a certain amount of money in escrow to be used by the escrow holder to pay or refund any difference to the appropriate party based on the next tax bill (see ¶ 4:631).

➪ [4:616] PRACTICE POINTER: In any event, remember that the escrow holder will only prorate based on the parties' instructions. Accordingly, unless new information is given, it will prorate based on the last available tax bill (and the last "available" tax bill may not reflect the taxes that will be due for the period).

(6) [4:617] Bonds and assessments: In addition to property taxes, special bonds or assessments may require prorations (these may be tacked on to the property tax bill). The same proration problems involved with real property taxes (¶ 4:613) must be addressed here as well.

(7) [4:618] Third party management and related contracts: Payments due under various third party service contracts (e.g., for property management, garbage collection, air-conditioning service, landscaping maintenance) which the buyer will be taking over should be prorated as of the closing date.

(8) [4:619] Lender's impound accounts (for taxes and insurance): Also, proration may be required for monies withheld in lender impound accounts for taxes and insurance.

i. Tax withholding matters

(1) [4:620] Preparing "FIRPTA" statement: See ¶ 4:510.1 ff.

(2) [4:620.1] Notice of California tax withholding requirements; withholding taxes: Escrow holders are required to provide written notification of the California requirements for withholding taxes under Rev. & Tax.C. § 18662(e) (¶ 4:510.3). [See generally, Rev. & Tax.C. § 18662(e)(7)(C)]

At the parties' request, they may also withhold any such taxes and remit them to the Franchise Tax Board. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 18662(e)(7)(B)]

j. [4:621] Execution and delivery of legally-required notices and filings: Any documents required to be delivered by either party to local or state governmental entities (e.g., Notice of Change of Ownership) should be prepared by the escrow.

k. [4:622] Transferring and delivering keys, documents and monies: When and where the various documents and monies are to be delivered should be specified. As applicable to the nature of the transaction, the escrow instructions should identify and describe, e.g., the exact disposition of keys to the premises, licenses and permits, leases, third party contracts, tenant notification letters (i.e., letters notifying tenants of new owner), plans, drawings and any other documents which the escrow is to handle.

➪ [4:623] PRACTICE POINTER: Generally, it is better not to involve the escrow in the transfer of documents which it does not need to see or handle or would not even understand. Those items should simply be delivered between the parties outside of escrow, either directly or through their respective agents.

(1) [4:624] Limitation re funds: By statute, no title insurance company or "controlled escrow company" (see below) may disburse funds from an escrow account until the escrow is certain that the funds are actually available. [Ins.C. § 12413.1] (In other words, if a party delivers a check to the escrow or title company, the escrow holder must make certain the check is good before disbursing funds.)

A "controlled escrow company" is one which is controlled by, controls, or is under common control with, a title insurance company or underwritten title company. [See Ins.C. § 12340.6—"controlled escrow company" also means natural persons employed or controlled by title insurers or underwritten title companies] This law does not apply to independent escrows, although most have found it good practice to adhere to the statute nonetheless.

l. [4:625] Preparing settlement statement: See discussion at ¶ 4:639 ff.

[4:625.1 - 4:625.9] Reserved.

m. [4:625.10] Possible new duties under USA Patriot Act: Although the rules and regulations are still being promulgated, like real estate attorneys, escrow companies may be brought under the umbrella of § 352 of the USA Patriot Act (¶ 1:126), requiring exhaustive steps to investigate and report "money laundering." "Financial institutions" subject to the Act expressly include "persons involved in real estate closings and settlements" (31 USC § 5312(a)(2)(U)), but the implementing Treasury regulations have not yet stated whether that language applies to escrow companies handling the closing of real estate transactions.

➪ [4:625.11] PRACTICE POINTER: If and when escrows become bound to follow (or voluntarily choose to follow) USA Patriot Act procedures, buyers' counsel will have to know how to respond when asked by the escrow agent about the source of funds to be deposited by the client into escrow. You may not be able to respond if you have not set up your own program to detect possible money laundering (¶ 1:126) or if the information is protected by the attorney-client privilege.

8. Closing and Termination of Escrow

a. [4:626] Closing date: The "close of escrow" typically occurs upon recordation of the deed (or other conveyancing instrument). The escrow instructions should identify the specific date for the close of escrow and instruct the escrow holder to record the deed on that date.

(1) [4:627] Impact: The purchase and sale are technically final with the close of escrow. However, the escrow holder must still complete a few other acts—preparation of the final version of the closing statement and disbursement of various documents and monies (¶ 4:631).

(2) [4:628] Delivery of title policy: The title insurance policy is effective as of the date of recordation of the conveyancing instrument. However, the policy is rarely delivered the day of closing; indeed, it is typically not sent until several days later.

(3) [4:628.1] Return of recorded documents: County recorders generally take some time to return the original recorded documents. In certain counties the recorded documents may not be returned for several weeks. (The return time for some documents, however, may be significantly shorter pursuant to California's Electronic Recording Delivery Act. The Act authorizes county recorders to establish a system for the electronic delivery, recording and return of specified instruments affecting a right, title or interest in real property. See Gov.C. § 27390 et seq.)

It is possible, however, to obtain a "conformed copy" of the instrument being recorded on the date of its recordation. The conformed copy is a duplicate of the original; it is stamped by the county recorder and bears the instrument number of the document that was actually recorded.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

➪ [4:628.2] PRACTICE POINTER: To obtain a conformed copy, you simply need to ask the escrow holder to do so. The county recorder will charge only a few dollars for each conformed copy.

(4) [4:628.3] Effect of conflicting demands: An escrow holder who, despite conflicting demands from the parties, closes the escrow and delivers the property to one of the parties instead of interpleading it, breaches their duties as an escrow holder (¶ 4:647).

(5) [4:628.4] Failure to tender performance by closing date not necessarily fatal: If it is not clearly specified that time is of the essence in the escrow transaction, a "reasonable time" may be allowed for performing escrow conditions even after the scheduled closing date has passed. [See Conservatorship & Estate of Buchenau (2011) 196 CA4th 1031, 1039, 127 CR3d 109, 115 (no "time of the essence" clause)—public guardian's 19-day delay in delivering all documents necessary to transfer title to purchaser of property at auction not unreasonable under the circumstances (noting also, however, that an essential time for performance may be implied when so required) (discussed further at ¶ 4:634)]

b. [4:629] Closing costs: "Closing costs" include, at a minimum, the escrow holder's fees (including so-called "document preparation fees"), recording fees, title insurance fees and documentary transfer taxes. The parties can negotiate the payment of closing costs any way they choose.

Discount escrow fees are permissible so long as they are related reasonably to the value of services actually performed (¶ 4:642.5).

However, by law, certain fees cannot be charged by escrows. [See, e.g., Rev. & Tax.C. § 18662(e)(7)—unlawful for real estate escrow person to charge fee for complying with state tax withholding requirements (see ¶ 4:510.3) unless escrow provides "assistance" with regard thereto—e.g., actually withholds and remits required tax to Franchise Tax Board or helps parties clarify with Franchise Tax Board whether withholding is required pursuant to Rev. & Tax.C. § 18662 (but, in that event, escrow's fee cannot exceed $45)]

➪ [4:630] PRACTICE POINTER: Often, the parties simply indicate that closing costs shall be paid "in accordance with customary practice." However, such language invites later dispute because "customary practices" vary across the state. Thus, if "customary practice" is to be the yardstick, at least designate what customary practice the parties are referring to —i.e., the practice where the property is located or, instead, where the escrow is located (or, perhaps, some other place).

(For example, in Southern California, the seller customarily pays the cost of the title policy; in Northern California, the buyer typically pays for its own title policy.)

c. [4:631] Postclosing withholds: Often, money will be left in escrow to pay off expenses that are either unknown or unresolved at the time of the closing (e.g., real property tax prorations, ¶ 4:615; or state tax withholdings, see Rev. & Tax.C. § 18662(e)(4)(A)). Although the escrow may arguably have "closed" by its own terms, it remains open for the purpose of finalizing any unresolved issues or disbursing withheld funds.

➪ [4:632] PRACTICE POINTER: In any event, issues left to be resolved as of the closing should be subject to specific instructions so that the escrow holder is not left "hanging" on any matter. Remember, the escrow holder will only act in accordance with specific instructions and will not (and should not) make any substantive decisions outside the "four corners" of its instructions. If the instructions are not clear, the money will remain in escrow pending the parties' mutual directions.

d. [4:633] Cancellation of escrow: Depending on the terms of the purchase agreement (and escrow instructions), one party may be given the unilateral right to "cancel" the escrow (e.g., upon the failure of a contingency for one party's benefit). But, notwithstanding a right of unilateral cancellation, escrow holders are reluctant to disburse any remaining funds without both parties' written authorization; and this is so despite one party's clear right to the monies still on deposit.

(1) [4:634] Effect on potential liabilities: Cancellation of the escrow together with the return of funds deposited in escrow does not itself terminate the underlying purchase agreement or exonerate the parties from liability under the escrow instructions or purchase agreement … unless such cancellation is specifically stated in writing by the parties. [See Civ.C. § 1057.3(e); Conservatorship & Estate of Buchenau (2011) 196 CA4th 1031, 1039-1040, 127 CR3d 109, 115-116—buyers' purported cancellation of escrow via email deemed ineffective even though time for seller's performance technically had expired (buyers' refusal to consummate their contractual obligation considered breach of contract, authorizing seller to retain deposit); Galdjie v. Darwish (2003) 113 CA4th 1331, 1341-1343, 7 CR3d 178, 185-186—seller's cancellation of escrow for buyer's default in failing to timely obtain loan and subsequent waiver of such default did not preclude buyer from suing seller for specific performance; Cohen v. Shearer (1980) 108 CA3d 939, 942, 167 CR 10, 12—parties' execution of agreement terminating escrow did not preclude buyers from maintaining suit for specific performance of sale contract]

(2) Return of escrow funds

(a) [4:635] Duty to ensure return: If the purchase transaction is not completed by the closing date (or any agreed-upon extension thereof) or the escrow is cancelled, buyer and seller are obligated to "ensure that all funds deposited into an escrow account are returned to the person who deposited the funds or who otherwise is entitled to the funds under the contract …" [Civ.C. § 1057.3(a); see also Rutherford Holdings, LLC v. Plaza Del Rey (2014) 223 CA4th 221, 233-234, 166 CR3d 864, 874—absent contrary escrow instructions, title to deposit vests in seller when seller accepts underlying contract (¶ 4:291.1)]

(b) [4:636] Statutory penalties for noncompliance: A buyer or seller who fails to execute any document required by the escrow holder to release such funds within 30 days after the other party's written demand "shall be liable" to the person making the deposit for all of the following (Civ.C. § 1057.3(b)):

• The amount of the funds on deposit not held in good faith to resolve a good faith dispute; plus

• Treble the above amount, but in no event less than $100 or more than $1,000; plus

• Reasonable attorney fees incurred in recovering the above penalties. [Civ.C. § 1057.3(b)]

1) [4:637] Exception for "good faith" disputes: There is no liability under Civ.C. § 1057.3 for failure to return escrow funds if the funds are withheld in order to resolve a "good faith dispute" between buyer and seller. "A party who is denied the return of the funds deposited in escrow is entitled to damages under this section only upon proving that there was no good faith dispute as to the right to the funds on deposit." [Civ.C. § 1057.3(c)]

A "good faith dispute" is one in which the trier of fact finds that the party refusing to return the deposited funds had a reasonable belief in their legal entitlement to the funds. [Civ.C. § 1057.3(f)(2)]

(c) [4:638] Discharge of escrow liability by deposit in court: Upon commencement of a cause of action to recover Civ.C. § 1057.3 penalties, the escrow holder is required to deposit the disputed funds into court, less any cancellation fee and charges incurred. At that point, the escrow holder is discharged of further responsibility for the funds. [Civ.C. § 1057.3(d); see also Civ.C. § 1057.3(g)—nothing in § 1057.3 restricts escrow holder's ability to file interpleader action in event of dispute over proper distribution of deposited funds; and ¶ 4:647]

9. Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act and Closing Statements

a. [4:639] Nature and purpose of Act: The Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (RESPA, 12 USC § 2601 et seq.) requires uniformity in a closing (or "settlement") statement. Its general purpose is to ensure that home buyers are given full and timely information on the nature and costs of the closing process; and, more specifically, to (1) eliminate "kickbacks" or "referral fees" that tend to unnecessarily increase settlement costs (see 12 USC § 2607), and (2) reduce the amounts home buyers are required to place in escrow to ensure the payment of real estate taxes and insurance (see 12 USC § 2609). [12 USC § 2601(a) & (b); Freeman v. Quicken Loans, Inc. (2012) 566 US 624, 626-627, 132 S.Ct. 2034, 2037-2038; Byars v. SCME Mortg. Bankers, Inc. (2003) 109 CA4th 1134, 1141, 135 CR2d 796, 800]

The Act applies to real estate transactions involving "federally related mortgage loans." [12 USC § 2603] Technically, these are loans used to finance the purchase of one-to-four unit dwellings made by a particular category of lenders; but the breadth of the definition covers so many lenders that almost every escrow holder complies with RESPA in all one-to-four unit residential property sales (12 USC § 2602(1)). [See Washington Mut. Bank, FA v. Sup.Ct. (Brown) (1999) 75 CA4th 773, 779, 89 CR2d 560, 565]

(1) [4:639.1] State law preempted only if inconsistent: RESPA does not preempt or otherwise affect state laws on the same subject except to the extent those laws are inconsistent with the Act. A state law giving consumers greater protection is not inconsistent with RESPA. [See 12 USC § 2616; Washington Mut. Bank, FA v. Sup.Ct. (Brown) (1999) 75 CA4th 773,

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

786-787, 89 CR2d 560, 570-571—state law private rights of action, including Bus. & Prof.C. § 17200 cause of action for "unfair and deceptive business practices," based on RESPA violations not preempted]

(2) [4:639.2] One-year limitations period; equitable tolling: Civil actions alleging illegal "kickbacks" or "unearned fees" in violation of RESPA must be brought within one year of the alleged violation (12 USC § 2614). Nonetheless, "the doctrine of equitable tolling may, in the appropriate circumstances, suspend the limitations period until the borrower discovers or had reasonable opportunity to discover the violation." [Merritt v. Countrywide Fin'l Corp. (9th Cir. 2014) 759 F3d 1023, 1036-1040 (internal quotes omitted)—error to dismiss RESPA claims as time-barred without first considering whether period could be equitably tolled to later date when borrowers received loan documents and discovered alleged violations]

b. [4:640] Uniform settlement statement required: Escrows handling residential transactions covered by the Act (¶ 4:639) must use a federally-prescribed standard form (known as the HUD-1 form) for the statement of settlement (closing) costs. [12 USC § 2603(a); see 24 CFR § 3500 et seq.; Washington Mut. Bank, FA v. Sup.Ct. (Brown) (1999) 75 CA4th 773, 779, 89 CR2d 560, 565]

(1) [4:641] Contents: RESPA directs the uniform settlement form to "conspicuously and clearly" itemize all charges imposed on the borrower (buyer) and seller in connection with the closing; and to indicate whether any title insurance premium included in the charges covers or insures the lender's interest in the property, the borrower's interest, or both. (Variations and deletions are permitted to reflect differing local practices.) [12 USC § 2603(a); see Bloom v. Martin (9th Cir. 1996) 77 F3d 318, 320-321—disclosure of postsettlement "demand fees" and "reconveyance fees" not required]

(2) [4:642] When due: The escrow holder must complete and make the settlement form available for the buyer's inspection "at or before" the closing (unless the buyer has waived this right or the particular locality has been exempted by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development because a final settlement statement is not customarily provided at or before the closing or is otherwise impractical in that locality). Upon request, the buyer has the right to inspect the settlement form on the day before the closing. [12 USC § 2603(b)]

[4:642.1 - 4:642.4] Reserved.

c. [4:642.5] Discounts related to value of services performed permissible: Escrow fee discounts do not constitute "kickbacks" in violation of RESPA (¶ 4:639) so long as the discounts are reasonably related to the value of services performed. [Lane v. Residential Funding Corp. (9th Cir. 2003) 323 F3d 739, 745; see also ¶ 3:65.3]

d. [4:642.6] Yield spread premiums not per se illegal: Yield spread premiums (YSPs) paid to mortgage brokers as bonuses for loans above par value are not necessarily illegal "kickbacks" or fees in violation of RESPA. Their legality depends on whether (1) services were actually performed; and (2) the bonuses received were reasonably related to the value of those services. [Maganallez v. Hilltop Lending Corp. (ND CA 2007) 505 F.Supp.2d 594, 603]

A mortgage broker's failure to adequately disclose a YSP bears on whether the premium violates RESPA. And, the fact a different broker in the same geographic market would not have been paid a similar amount is also a consideration. But RESPA requires more to support a violation—i.e., a loan-specific analysis of whether the total mortgage broker compensation from all sources is reasonable. [Maganallez v. Hilltop Lending Corp., supra, 505 F.Supp.2d at 604]

e. [4:642.7] Overcharges not prohibited: Mere overcharges (e.g., unearned processing fees) do not violate RESPA, which bars giving or accepting any portion, split or percentage of a charge for real estate settlement services unless those services are actually performed (12 USC § 2607(b)): "[RESPA] was not intended to serve as a price cap for settlement services." [Maganallez v. Hilltop Lending Corp. (ND CA 2007) 505 F.Supp.2d 594, 604; see also Freeman v. Quicken Loans, Inc. (2012) 566 US 624, 631, 637-638, 132 S.Ct. 2034, 2040, 2044—RESPA does not prohibit single settlement-service provider's retention of unearned fee but, rather, bars provider from splitting fee with one or more persons; Martinez v. Wells Fargo Home Mortg., Inc. (9th Cir. 2010) 598 F3d 549, 558—RESPA's "clear and unambiguous" language does not reach practice of overcharging ($800 underwriting fee charged in exchange for settlement services did not violate RESPA)]

f. [4:642.8] "Mark-ups" prohibited: On the other hand, RESPA prohibits settlement services providers from charging for the services of a third party vendor (e.g., credit reports) and keeping a portion of the charge for themselves. [Maganallez v. Hilltop Lending Corp. (ND CA 2007) 505 F.Supp.2d 594, 605] allocations, prorations, calculations and the like have been made. Escrow officers occasionally debit or credit the wrong account or simply make mathematical errors.

10. Escrow Holder Liability

a. To buyer and/or seller

(1) [4:644] Contract damages: The escrow instructions are a contract that the escrow holder is bound to follow as a party to the escrow. Strict compliance is required. If it disburses the property deposited in escrow in violation of the instructions or otherwise fails to comply with the instructions, the escrow holder is liable to the injured party for breach of contract. [Summit Fin'l Holdings, Ltd. v. Continental Lawyers Title Co. (2002) 27 C4th 705, 711, 117 CR2d 541, 545; Amen v. Merced County Title Co. (1962) 58 C2d 528, 531-532, 25 CR 65, 67; Virtanen v. O'Connell (2006) 140 CA4th 688, 703, 44 CR3d 702, 714—rule applies to attorney escrow holder; see also ¶ 4:571]

(a) [4:644.1] Limitation—*no transmutation of contract action into tort action: Parties to the escrow who sue an escrow agent for failing to perform as specified in the escrow instructions ordinarily cannot sue for tort damages. The "transmutation" of what is essentially a breach of contract into a tort cause of action has been rejected in favor of a general rule precluding tort recovery for noninsurance contract breaches, at least where bad faith denial of the existence of, or liability under, the breached contract is not at issue. [Money Store Invest. Corp. v. Southern Calif. Bank (2002) 98 CA4th 722, 732, 120 CR2d 58, 65 (dictum)—escrow party's negligence cause of action subject to summary adjudication because it was same as contract cause of action]

(b) [4:644.2] Recovery of attorney fees: If the escrow instructions contain an appropriate attorney fee provision, the party who prevails in an action arising from breach of the instructions is entitled to recover attorney fees (Civ.C. § 1717). [See Kangarlou v. Progressive Title Co., Inc. (2005) 128 CA4th 1174, 1178-1179, 27 CR3d 754, 756-757—buyer who prevailed in breach of fiduciary duty action against escrow holder (failure to obtain evidence that broker was regularly licensed before delivering broker compensation and failure to communicate same to buyer) entitled to § 1717 fees (suit was an action on the contract because fiduciary duties arose only by reason of the escrow contract); compare Rideau v. Stewart Title of Calif., Inc. (2015) 235 CA4th 1286, 1292, 1301-1302, 185 CR3d 887, 890, 897-898—buyer could not recover attorney fees against escrow holder based on escrow instruction's indemnity provision (clause as written provided escrow company with "one way" protection against third party lawsuits and did not apply to fees incurred in litigation between buyer and escrow holder based on their contract (¶ 11:138.5))]

(2) [4:645] Tort damages: Buyers and sellers aggrieved by the escrow holder's breach of duties are not limited to contract damages. Because the escrow holder is a fiduciary and agent of the parties (¶ 4:580 ff.), it is also exposed to tort liability (e.g., negligence liability for failure to exercise ordinary skill and diligence in the employment). [Amen v. Merced County Title Co. (1962) 58 C2d 528, 532, 25 CR 65, 67; and see Virtanen v. O'Connell (2006) 140 CA4th 688, 696, 44 CR3d 702, 708—negligence, breach of fiduciary duty and conversion; Lee v. Escrow Consultants, Inc. (1989) 210 CA3d 915, 924, 259 CR 117, 123—fraud and wrongful disbursement of escrow funds; Francis v. Eisenmayer (1959) 171 CA2d 221, 226, 340 P2d 54, 56-57—misrepresentation; compare Lee v. Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1968) 264 CA2d 160, 163, 70 CR 378, 380—no breach of fiduciary duty for failure to disclose information unrelated to specific escrow instructions]

(a) [4:645.1] Failure to disclose: When an escrow holder knows a party to the escrow is relying on it for protection as to facts learned by the escrow holder, the escrow holder can be held liable if it does not disclose those facts to the party. [Vournas v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1999) 73 CA4th 668, 674-675, 86 CR2d 490, 495—no escrow liability for failure to disclose need for beneficiary consent to trustee's sale of trust property because not part of escrow instructions and no evidence escrow holder knew trustee was unaware of beneficiary consent requirement; Lee v. Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1968) 264 CA2d 160, 163, 70 CR 378, 380—no breach of fiduciary duty for failure to disclose information unrelated to specific escrow instructions; see Marriage of Cloney (2001) 91 CA4th 429, 440, 110 CR2d 615, 624, fn. 10—in nontort action, escrow holder had duty to disclose to buyer that seller's actual name was different than that on deed]

(b) [4:645.2] Foreseeable damages: As in other tort cases, an escrow holder is only liable for reasonably foreseeable damages. An escrow holder is not liable if there was a "superseding cause," i.e., a reasonably unforeseeable independent intervening act that caused the plaintiff's damages. This is generally a question of fact. [See Tung v. Chicago Title Co.

(2021) 63 CA5th 734, 745-747, 278 CR3d 182, 189-191—question of fact whether seller's loss of use damages were foreseeable consequence of escrow holder's errors]

b. [4:646] Generally *no liability to third parties: Escrow holders owe a duty of care only to the parties to and participants in the escrow. Consequently, escrow holders who follow their principals' instructions ordinarily cannot be held liable to strangers to the escrow on a negligence theory. [Vournas v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1999) 73 CA4th 668, 674-675, 86 CR2d 490, 494-495; see also Alereza v. Chicago Title Co. (2016) 6 CA5th 551, 559, 211 CR3d 469, 474—absent clear evidence of fraud, escrow holder's obligations are limited to compliance with parties' instructions]

(1) Application

- [4:646.1] Escrow Holder could not be held liable to Trust Beneficiaries, who were nonparties to the escrow, where Trustee sold the trust property in violation of a restriction in the trust instrument requiring the beneficiaries' consent. There was no reference to the need for beneficiary consent in the escrow instructions and Escrow Holder was unaware of any restrictions on the trustee's powers. [Vournas v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1999) 73 CA4th 668, 674-675, 86 CR2d 490, 495]
- [4:646.2] Escrow Holder was instructed by parties to the escrow to pay off a promissory note secured by the subject property. Plaintiff, a nonparty to the escrow, sued Escrow Holder for breach of fiduciary duty and negligence, contending that Escrow Holder, knowing that the note had been assigned to plaintiff by another nonparty to the escrow, should have paid the note to it. Escrow Holder was not liable because it did not owe a duty of care to plaintiff, a nonparty, based on an assignment from another nonparty. [Summit Fin'l Holdings, Ltd. v. Continental Lawyers Title Co. (2002) 27 C4th 705, 707-708, 117 CR2d 541, 543 (disapproving Kirby v. Palos Verdes Escrow Co., Inc. (1986) 183 CA3d 57, 227 CR 785); compare Builders' Control Service of Northern Calif., Inc. v. North American Title Guar. Co. (1962) 205 CA2d 68, 73-75, 22 CR 712, 715-717—escrow holder may be liable for disbursing funds in violation of assignment made by party to escrow]
- [4:646.3] Escrow holder did not owe a duty of care to the guarantor of a commercial gas station lease when, in the first of a series of missteps, its escrow officer negligently miscommunicated the business' name to its insurer. The insurer sent out a notice of cancellation and the business' lessor, fearing the gas station was operating without insurance, filed an unlawful detainer action. Although the guarantor had provided the purchase funds and a note secured by his own residence to assist his nephew in acquiring the gas station business, the guarantee was given after the close of escrow and only for the purpose of settling the unlawful detainer action. Thus, because the guarantor was not a party to the escrow, nor mentioned in the escrow instructions as a third party beneficiary, the escrow holder was not liable for any losses the guarantor sustained after the gas station business declined. [Alereza v. Chicago Title Co. (2016) 6 CA5th 551, 553, 211 CR3d 469, 470]

[4:646.4 - 4:646.6] Reserved.

(2) [4:646.7] Liability on third party beneficiary theory: Liability might lie on a third party beneficiary theory where the escrow was intended to directly benefit a nonparty. [See Feinberg v. Intrastate Escrow Corp. (1963) 216 CA2d 80, 83-85, 30 CR 781, 783-784—third party beneficiary of escrow that was secretly canceled could recover against escrow holder under estoppel principles; compare Markowitz v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Co. (2006) 142 CA4th 508, 527-528, 48 CR3d 217, 230-231—evidence established no more than plaintiff (third party) was incidental, not intended, beneficiary of escrow instructions]

c. [4:647] Interpleader remedy to avoid liability: When conflicting demands are made by the parties to the escrow, escrow holders often move to interplead the disputed funds in an effort to shield themselves from potential liability.

The escrow's “general conditions” usually give the escrow holder the right of interpleader; and also typically provide that the buyer and seller will pay the escrow holder's attorney fees and costs incurred in connection therewith (but see Francis v. Eisenmayer (1959) 171 CA2d 221, 229, 340 P2d 54, 58—escrow instructions requiring buyer and seller to pay escrow holder's attorney fees incurred in connection with escrow (including interpleader) did not give escrow holder right to recover fees in buyer's action for escrow's independent fraud). However, under CCP § 386 et seq., interpleader is a viable remedy even if the instructions are silent on the point (see CCP § 396(b)).

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Indeed, when there are conflicting demands to the escrowed property, if the escrow holder closes escrow (i.e., delivers the property to one of the parties) without interpleading the property, the escrow holder breaches their duties as an escrow holder; it is not enough for the escrow holder to close the escrow and expect the aggrieved party to immediately file suit to halt the property transfer. [Virtanen v. O'Connell (2006) 140 CA4th 688, 697-699, 44 CR3d 702, 708-710—closing escrow not "functional equivalent" of filing interpleader action; see also ¶ 4:571]

d. [4:648] Mobile home sale escrows: Health & Saf.C. § 18035(f) requires the escrow agent for the sale of a mobile home to hold funds in escrow upon receiving written notice of a dispute between the parties to the escrow, notwithstanding any written escrow instructions to the contrary (Health & Saf.C. § 18035(k)). An agent who fails to comply with this Code provision may be liable to the injured party. [See Castillo v. Express Escrow Co. (2007) 146 CA4th 1301, 1306-1308, 53 CR3d 485, 489-490]

EXHIBIT "A" TO BILL OF SALE

[All personal property to be transferred to the buyer should be itemized. However, do not forget that, in addition to the rather obvious items of personal property, there may be some items of intangible property which you may wish to include (such as contract rights, etc.). Some lawyers use a separate Assignment for the transfer of intangible property (see Form 4:D for the transfer of intangible property), but there is nothing necessarily wrong with modifying the Bill of Sale to include the transfer of intangible property.]

(c) Buyer's inspection and examination of the physical condition of the Property. Buyer shall have access to the property at reasonable times and shall have the right to conduct, at Buyer's expense, soil tests, engineering feasibility studies, environmental investigations and such other studies with respect to the physical condition of the Property as Buyer may desire. Buyer shall bear no additional cost, expense or liability (whether actual or contingent) as a result of the exchange transaction and shall not be required to take title to any other property as part of such exchange transaction. If the parties to this Agreement are unable to agree as to the terms of the modification of this Agreement to allow Seller to exchange the Property by _____, 20__, the Close of Escrow shall take place as if the Seller had not exercised its right to exchange the property for Other Property. [Note: Due to potential liability arising from the environmental condition of real property, it is unwise for a Buyer to take title to a second piece of property merely to accommodate the Seller's desire to effectuate a tax-deferred exchange. See Chapter 5.]

6. REPRESENTATIONS AND WARRANTIES BY SELLER.

6.1. Seller makes the representations and warranties in this Paragraph 6, each and all of which shall survive any and all inquiries and investigations made by Buyer and shall survive the Close of Escrow and recordation of the Grant Deed.

6.1.1. _____ is a [corporation, partnership, etc.] duly organized, validly existing and in good standing under the laws of the State of California which has the power and authority to enter into this Agreement and to consummate the transactions contemplated hereby. The Seller and the specific, individual parties signing this Agreement on behalf of Seller represent and warrant that the parties signing this Agreement on behalf of the Seller have the full legal power, authority and right to execute and deliver this Agreement.

6.1.2. Neither the entering into this Agreement nor the performance of any of Seller's obligations under this Agreement will violate the terms of any contract, agreement or instrument to which Seller is a party.

6.1.3. To the best of Seller's knowledge, the Real Property is zoned to permit the operation of a [describe type of project; e.g. office building, shopping center, apartment project, etc.]. Seller has not actually received any formal, written notice of any pending change in zoning from any governmental or quasi-governmental authority, which change would materially affect the present zoning of the Land or the present use of the Real Property. The term “formal written notice” as used in this Agreement shall mean that kind and method of notice which must legally be given to the owner of the Real Property, but shall not mean notice by publication.

6.1.4. Seller has not actually received any formal written notice of any pending widening, modification or realignment of any street or highway contiguous to the Real Property or any existing or proposed eminent domain proceeding which would result in a taking of all or any part of the Real Property.

6.1.5. Seller has not actually received any formal written notice that any of the easements, covenants, conditions, restrictions or agreements to which the Real Property is subject interferes with or is breached by the use or operation of the Real Property as presently used and operated as a [describe type of project].

6.1.6. Seller has not been served (by means of formal, legal service of process as required by law) with any litigation, and no arbitration proceedings have been commenced, which do or will affect any aspect of the Property or Seller's ability to perform its obligations under this Agreement. In addition, within the last ____________ (___) [years or months], Seller has not been threatened in writing with any litigation (or arbitration) by a third party which would affect any aspect of the Property or Seller's ability to perform its obligations under this Agreement.

6.1.7. Seller has not actually received any formal written notice of any presently uncured violation of any law, ordinance, rule or regulation (including, but not limited to, those relating to zoning, building, fire, health and safety) of any governmental, quasi-governmental authority bearing on the construction, operation, ownership or use of the Property.

6.1.8. There are not any written commitments to, or written agreements with, any governmental or quasi-governmental authority or agency materially affecting the Property which have not been heretofore disclosed by Seller to Buyer in writing.

6.1.9. Seller has not been served (by means of formal, legal service of process as required by law) or formally notified in writing by any governmental or quasi-governmental authority (i) that the Real Property or any adjoining property, contains or may contain any "Hazardous Materials" in violation of any "Environmental Regulations" (as those terms are defined in Paragraph 6.1.10, below); or (ii) that the Seller has stored, used or maintained Hazardous Materials or suffered, permitted, allowed or acquiesced in any storage, use or maintenance of Hazardous Materials on, in or under the Real Property in violation of any Environmental Regulations. In addition, to the best of Seller's knowledge, but without any specific investigation therefore, there are no Hazardous Materials in any way relating to all or any portion of the Real Property or the area surrounding the Real Property.

6.1.10. As used in this Agreement, the terms "Environmental Regulations" and "Hazardous Materials" shall have the following meanings:

(a) "Environmental Regulations" shall mean all applicable statutes, regulations, rules, ordinances, codes, licenses, permits, orders, approvals, plans, authorizations, and similar items, of all governmental agencies, departments, commissions, boards, bureaus or instrumentalities of the United States, states and political subdivisions thereof and all applicable judicial and administrative and regulatory decrees, judgments and orders relating to the protection of human health or the environment, including, without limitation: (i) all requirements, including but not limited to those pertaining to reporting, licensing, permitting, investigation and remediation of emissions, discharges, releases or threatened releases of Hazardous Materials, whether solid, liquid or gaseous in nature, into the air, surface water, groundwater or land, or relating to the manufacture, processing, distribution, use, treatment, storage, disposal, transport or handling of Hazardous Materials, whether solid, liquid or gaseous in nature; and (ii) all requirements pertaining to the protection of the health and safety of employees or the public.

(b) "Hazardous Materials" shall mean (i) any flammables, explosive or radioactive materials, hazardous wastes, toxic substances or related materials including, without limitation, substances defined as "hazardous substances," "hazardous materials," "toxic substances" or "solid waste" in the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980, as amended, 42 U.S.C. Sec. 9601, et seq.; the hazardous Materials Transportation Act, 49 U.S.C. Section 1801, et seq.; the Toxic Substances Control Act, 15 U.S.C., Section 2601 et seq.; the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act of 1976, 42 U.S.C. Section 6901 et seq.; and in the regulations adopted and publications promulgated pursuant to said laws; (ii) those substances listed in the United States Department of Transportation Table (49 C.F.R. 172.101 and amendments thereto) or by the Environmental Protection Agency (or any successor agency) as hazardous substances (40 C.F.R. Part 302 and amendments thereto); (iii) those substances defined as "hazardous wastes," "hazardous substances" or "toxic substances" in any similar federal, state or local laws or in the regulations adopted and publications promulgated pursuant to any of the foregoing laws or which otherwise are regulated by any governmental authority, agency, department, commission, board or instrumentality of the United States of America, the State of California or any political subdivision thereof; (iv) any pollutant or contaminant or hazardous, dangerous or toxic chemicals, materials, or substances within the meaning of any other applicable federal, state, or local law, regulation, ordinance, or requirement (including consent decrees and administrative orders) relating to or imposing liability or standards of conduct concerning any hazardous, toxic or dangerous waste, substance or material, all as amended; (v) petroleum or any by-products thereof; (vi) any radioactive material, including any source, special nuclear or by-product material as defined at 42 U.S.C. 6.1.11. The term “Leases” means all written agreements between Seller and all parties having rights to occupy or possess the Property. By ___________ (___), Seller shall deliver to Buyer true and complete copies of all the Leases. A schedule of all Leases as of ___________, 20__, is attached hereto as Exhibit “E,” listing all Leases, the duration of each, the then current rental payable under each, and certain other information respecting each such Lease (“Rent Roll”). Except as set forth in the Rent Roll, there are no other Leases in force as of the date of this Agreement, and no person, other than (i) the tenants named in the Leases; and (ii) those parties who have rights under any Permitted Exception, have any right to use, occupy or possess the Property or any portion thereof. Except as set forth in the Rent Roll, no rent concessions are due any tenant; no rent has been paid more than one (1) month in advance by any tenant; no security or other deposit or advance payments of any kind have been made by any tenant; no tenant has any claim against Seller for any security deposit or other deposits (except for the return of the unused portion of their security deposit at the termination of the tenant's lease); no breach exists on the part of any tenant, whether in the payment of rent (or other sum), or the performance of any obligations or covenant under their respective Lease; and no tenant has any defense or off-set to rent or any other obligation accruing after the Close of Escrow. Each of the Leases described in the Rent Roll is in full force and effect. Seller has not received any written notice of any breach on the part of Seller under any Lease. After the execution of this Agreement, no Lease will be modified or amended and there will be no new Leases except those employing the form of Lease attached hereto as Exhibit “F,” (and only then for a rental of ___________). [identify here the parameters for rent rates and other terms and conditions for any Leases to be signed after the date of the Agreement, but before the Close of Escrow]. There are no oral agreements for the use, occupancy or possession of the Property or any portion thereof. There are no oral agreements with any tenant, which materially change the terms of any of the Leases or which would make the information on the Rent Roll materially inaccurate. If, by ___________, 20__, any of the information in the Rent Roll and/or any of the representations and warranties of Seller in this Paragraph 6.1.11 have become untrue, Seller shall provide Buyer with an updated rent roll (“Updated Rent Roll”) and the representations and warranties made by Seller in this Paragraph 6.1.11 shall be deemed to be made with respect to the Updated Rent Roll.

6.1.12. As used herein, the term “Other Contracts” means all agreements, written and oral, to which Seller is a party and which directly affect the ownership or operation of the Property (other than the Leases). As of the date of this Agreement, there are no Other Contracts except those listed in Exhibit “G,” attached hereto. By _____, 20__, Seller shall deliver to Buyer true and complete copies of all Other Contracts. All of the Other Contracts may be terminated without penalty upon the giving of not more than thirty (30) days' notice by Seller (or Seller's successor-in-interest to the Property). There is no material default or breach by Seller, or any other party, to any Other Contract. Prior to the Close of Escrow, no Other Contract will be modified or amended without the written consent of Buyer, and there will be no additional Other Contracts without the prior written consent of Buyer.

6.1.13. Until the Close of Escrow, the Property will continue to be operated in substantially the same manner as operated as of the date of this Agreement. Seller will not do or cause anything to be done that would change, alter or modify the operation of the Property as a [describe type of project] in the manner in which it is operated as of the date of this Agreement, without the prior written consent of Buyer.

6.1.14. Seller has neither engaged nor dealt with any broker or finder in connection with the sale contemplated by this Agreement except for ___________ (“___”). Seller shall pay, and shall hold Buyer harmless from and against, any commission or finder's fee payable to ___________ or any other party who represents or claims to represent Seller.

6.1.15. Seller will not alter the physical condition of the Property from and after the date of this Agreement, reasonable wear and tear excepted. If, through no fault of Seller, the physical condition of the Property is different on the date scheduled for the Close of Escrow as of the date of this Agreement, the terms and conditions of Paragraph 6.2, below shall apply. [The Buyer may wish to require the Seller to deliver the subject property with all plumbing, heating, ventilation and air conditioning, and other systems in “good working order.”]

6.2. If, prior to the Close of Escrow, new events have occurred which were beyond the control of Seller and which render any previously true representation or warranty untrue, Seller shall, within three (3) days thereafter, disclose those matters by written notice to Buyer. Buyer shall have ten (10) days after the earlier of (i) such disclosure; or (ii) Buyer's independent discovery that such representation or warranty has become untrue, to elect, in its sole and absolute discretion, and as its sole remedy, by written notice to Seller within said ten (10) day period, whether (1) to purchase the Property; or (2) terminate this Agreement. If Buyer elects to terminate this Agreement pursuant to this Paragraph 6.2, Escrow shall immediately terminate upon Seller's receipt of Buyer's notice of election to terminate this Agreement and all sums and documents deposited in Escrow shall be returned to the parties who deposited the same and Seller and Buyer shall each pay one-half (1/2) of Escrow costs. If Buyer fails to notify Seller and Escrow Holder of its election to terminate this Agreement within said ten (10) day time period provided above, Buyer shall be deemed to have accepted the modified representations and warranties and elected to purchase the Property.

6.3. The books and records pertaining to operating income and expenses of the Property for the three (3) most recent years of operation ("Income and Expense Records") thereto shall be open to inspection by Buyer or Buyer's agents during regular business hours upon reasonable notice after the date hereof, and Seller shall cooperate with Buyer or Buyer's agents during regular business hours upon reasonable notice after the date hereof.

6.4. Other than those express representations and warranties contained in this Agreement, Seller makes no warranty or representation, express or implied, including but not limited to, implied warranties of merchantability and fitness for a particular purpose.

6.5. Except to the extent Seller has made a specific representation and warranty with respect thereto, no document or information provided by Seller to Buyer shall constitute a representation as to the completeness or accuracy of such documents or information. [The Buyer may want the Seller to deliver various documents in the Seller's files (such as reports, studies, geological investigations, etc.). Although the Seller may be willing to accommodate the Buyer as a courtesy only, the Seller does not want to be liable in the event such information is inaccurate or incomplete. Therefore, care should be taken to specifically indicate those documents and information as to which the Seller makes a representation and warranty as to their contents, and which documents and information are being provided only as a courtesy to the Buyer.]

6.6. [Consider whether, on behalf of the Seller, you want to define "Seller's knowledge" as being limited to the knowledge of specific individuals. For example, limit the representations to the knowledge of the Property Manager or a specific principal of the Seller who would likely be in a position to know the facts pertaining to the representation.]

7. REPRESENTATIONS AND WARRANTIES BY BUYER.

7.1. Buyer makes the following representations and warranties in this Paragraph 7, each and all of which shall survive any and all inquiries and investigations made by Seller and shall survive the Close of Escrow and recordation of the Grant Deed.

7.1.1. Each and all of the information and any financial statement delivered by Buyer to Seller is true and correct. [Typically, this representation is only made if the transaction is seller financed. However, even in a non-seller financed transaction, the Seller may want to review the Buyer's financial statement before executing the contract. By including this representation and warranty, the Seller may also be able to sue for fraud (punitive) damages if the representation or warranty is untrue. Nevertheless, the Buyer may want to include a provision similar to that in Paragraph 6.2, above, which states that, if the financial condition of the Buyer changes prior to the Close of Escrow, Buyer will notify Seller and Seller will have the right to terminate the Agreement.]

7.1.2. Buyer has neither engaged nor dealt with any broker or finder in connection with the sale contemplated by this Agreement except for _________________ ("____________"). Buyer shall pay, and hold Seller harmless from and against, any commission or finder's fee payable to _____, _____, or any other party who represents or claims to represent Buyer. [This representation and warranty will need to be modified if the Buyer has no obligation to pay a broker's commission.]

7.1.3. _____ is a [corporation, partnership, etc.] duly organized, validly existing and in good standing under the laws of the State of California which has the power and authority to enter into this Agreement and to consummate the transactions contemplated hereby. The Buyer, and the specific, individual parties signing this Agreement on behalf of Buyer represent and warrant that the parties signing this Agreement on behalf of the Buyer have the full legal power, authority and right to execute and deliver this Agreement.

7.1.4. Buyer has or will make its own investigation concerning the physical condition of the Property, condition of title or any other matter pertaining to the Property, and, other than the specific representations and warranties made by Seller pursuant to this Agreement, Buyer is not relying on any representations, warranties or inducements of Seller or Seller's broker with respect to the physical condition of the Property, condition of title to the Property, or any other matter pertaining to the Property. Accordingly, except for those specific representations and warranties of Seller set forth in this Agreement, Buyer is purchasing the Property and each and every aspect thereof in an "as-is" condition.

8. INDEMNIFICATION.

8.1. Subject to any other provisions of this Agreement to the contrary, each party ("Indemnitor") agrees to indemnify and hold the other party ("Indemnitee") harmless from and against any claim, loss, damage or expense, including any reasonable attorneys' fees (including attorneys' fees on appeal), asserted against or suffered by the Indemnitee resulting from:

(a) Any breach by the Indemnitor of this Agreement;

(b) Any liability of the Indemnitor with respect to the Property, under the Leases or Other Contracts, or otherwise, as provided in Paragraph 9, below; or

(c) The inaccuracy or breach of any of the representations, warranties or covenants made by the Indemnitor.

8.2. The Indemnitee shall submit any claim for indemnification under this Agreement to the Indemnitor in writing within a reasonable time after Indemnitee determines that an event has occurred which has given rise to a right of indemnification under this Paragraph 8 and shall give Indemnitor a reasonable opportunity to investigate and cure any default of Indemnitor under this Agreement and eliminate or remove any claim by a third party. Notwithstanding the foregoing, if the nature of Indemnitor's default or the third party claim is such that it would be impractical or unreasonable to give Indemnitor an opportunity to investigate and cure such default and remove such claim, Indemnitee need not give Indemnitor such opportunity.

8.3. If such claim for indemnification relates to a claim or demand presented in writing by a third party against Indemnitee, Indemnitor shall have the right to employ counsel reasonably acceptable to Indemnitee to defend any such claim or demand, and Indemnitee shall make available to Indemnitor, or its representatives, all records and other materials in its possession or under its control reasonably required by Indemnitor for its use in contesting such liability. If Indemnitor does not elect to defend any such claim or demand, Indemnitee may do so at its option, but shall not have any obligation to do so.

9. ASSUMPTION OF LIABILITIES.

9.1. Effective as of the Close of Escrow, Buyer shall be deemed to have assumed all obligations and liabilities of Seller pertaining to the Property or under the Other Contracts, except all obligations and liabilities with respect thereto which arise prior to the Close of Escrow or which arise as a result of events which occur prior to the Close of Escrow. Except for the foregoing assumption of obligations and liabilities by Buyer, Buyer does not assume and shall not be liable for any of the obligations or liabilities of Seller of any kind or nature affecting or otherwise relating to Seller, the Property, the Leases, the Other Contracts, or otherwise.

9.2. Seller shall, prior to the Close of Escrow, timely perform and discharge all obligations and liabilities of every kind whatsoever to be discharged prior to the Close of Escrow and arising from or relating to (i) the Property, including, but not limited to, the use and ownership of the Property; (ii) the operation of the Property; (iii) the Leases; and (iv) the Other Contracts.

10. LIQUIDATED DAMAGES.

IF BUYER FAILS TO COMPLETE THE PURCHASE OF THE PROPERTY AS HEREIN PROVIDED BY REASON OF ANY DEFAULT OF BUYER, IT IS AGREED THAT THE DEPOSITS ACTUALLY MADE PURSUANT TO PARAGRAPHS 2(a) AND 2(b) OF THIS AGREEMENT SHALL BE NON-REFUNDABLE AND SELLER SHALL BE ENTITLED TO SUCH DEPOSITS, WHICH AMOUNTS SHALL BE ACCEPTED BY SELLER AS LIQUIDATED DAMAGES AND NOT AS A PENALTY AND (TOGETHER WITH THE RIGHT TO RECOVER ATTORNEY'S FEES AS PROVIDED IN THIS AGREEMENT) SHALL BE SELLER'S SOLE AND EXCLUSIVE REMEDY. IT IS AGREED THAT SAID AMOUNT CONSTITUTES A REASONABLE ESTIMATE OF THE DAMAGES TO SELLER PURSUANT TO CALIFORNIA CIVIL CODE SECTION 1671 ET SEQ. BUYER AND SELLER AGREE THAT IT WOULD BE IMPRACTICAL OR IMPOSSIBLE TO PRESENTLY PREDICT WHAT MONETARY DAMAGES SELLER WOULD SUFFER UPON BUYER'S FAILURE TO COMPLETE ITS PURCHASE OF THE PROPERTY. BUYER DESIRES TO LIMIT THE MONETARY DAMAGES FOR WHICH IT MIGHT BE LIABLE HEREUNDER AND BUYER AND SELLER DESIRE TO AVOID THE COSTS AND DELAYS THEY WOULD INCUR IF A LAWSUIT WERE COMMENCED TO RECOVER DAMAGES OR OTHERWISE ENFORCE SELLER'S RIGHTS. IF FURTHER INSTRUCTIONS ARE REQUIRED BY ESCROW HOLDER TO EFFECTUATE THE TERMS OF THIS PARAGRAPH 10, BUYER AND SELLER AGREE TO EXECUTE THE SAME. THE PARTIES ACKNOWLEDGE THIS PROVISION BY PLACING THEIR INITIALS BELOW:

11. ARBITRATION OF DISPUTES.

IF ANY CLAIM OR DISPUTE ARISES UNDER THIS AGREEMENT, THEN SUCH DISPUTE SHALL BE RESOLVED BY A GENERAL REFERENCE PURSUANT TO CALIFORNIA CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 638 AND IN ACCORDANCE WITH THE FOLLOWING PROVISIONS OF THIS PARAGRAPH 11. IT IS THE INTENT OF THE PARTIES TO THIS AGREEMENT THAT THIS REFERENCE AGREEMENT PROVISION BE SPECIFICALLY ENFORCEABLE, AS FOLLOWS:

(a) A CONTROVERSY, DISPUTE OR CLAIM ARISING OUT OF OR PERTAINING TO THIS AGREEMENT SHALL BE TRIED BY A REFEREE UNDER AN ORDER OF GENERAL REFERENCE TO TRY ALL ISSUES OF FACT AND LAW, WHETHER LEGAL OR EQUITABLE, TO BE CHOSEN BY COUNSEL FOR THE PARTIES FROM A LIST OF RETIRED SUPERIOR COURT JUDGES FURNISHED BY THE ___________ SUPERIOR COURT, WITH ALL PARTIES HEREBY WAIVING ANY RIGHT TO A TRIAL BY JURY. IF COUNSEL ARE UNABLE TO AGREE, THEN THE REFEREE SHALL BE APPOINTED BY THE COURT IN ACCORDANCE WITH CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 640, WITH EACH PARTY ENTITLED TO ONLY ONE DISQUALIFICATION PURSUANT TO CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE SECTION 170.6. THE TRIAL SHALL BE CONDUCTED AND THE ISSUES DETERMINED IN COMPLIANCE WITH ALL JUDICIAL RULES AND ALL STATUTORY AND DECISIONAL LAW OF THE STATE OF CALIFORNIA, AS IF THE MATTER WERE FORMALLY LITIGATED IN SUPERIOR COURT AND NOT BY WAY OF A REFERENCE. THE PREVAILING PARTY IN THE REFERENCE SHALL BE ENTITLED TO RECEIVE AS PART OF THE JUDGMENT IN ITS FAVOR AN AWARD OF ALL ACTUAL ATTORNEYS' FEES AND COSTS INCURRED WITH RESPECT TO THE REFERENCE, PLUS INTEREST AT THE HIGHEST RATE PERMITTED BY LAW AS NOT BEING USURIOUS FROM AND AS OF THE DATE OF THE ALLEGED BREACH.

(b) THE REFEREE SHALL CONDUCT AND DECIDE ALL PRE-TRIAL AND POST-TRIAL PROCEDURES WHICH MAY ARISE AS IF THE MATTER WERE FORMALLY LITIGATED IN THE SUPERIOR COURT. THE JUDGMENT ENTERED UPON THE DECISION OF THE REFEREE SHALL BE SUBJECT TO ALL POST-TRIAL PROCEDURES AND TO APPEAL IN THE SAME MANNER AS AN APPEAL FROM ANY ORDER OF JUDGMENT IN A CIVIL ACTION. ALL RULES OF EVIDENCE AS SET FORTH IN THE CALIFORNIA EVIDENCE CODE, OTHER STATUTORY AND DECISIONAL LAW OF CALIFORNIA AND ALL ___________ COUNTY SUPERIOR COURT RULES AND CALIFORNIA RULES OF COURT SHALL BE APPLICABLE TO ANY PROCEEDING BEFORE THE REFEREE. THE TRIAL SHALL BE CONDUCTED ON CONSECUTIVE DATES, AS OPPOSED TO BEING CONDUCTED PIECEMEAL ON VARIOUS DATES SEPARATED BY POSTPONEMENTS

OR ADJOURNMENTS, AND IS TO BE CONDUCTED IN A COURTROOM IF AT ALL POSSIBLE AND, IF NOT, IN SURROUNDINGS WITH FORMALITY AS CLOSE TO A COURTROOM AS POSSIBLE.

(c) THIS REFERENCE AGREEMENT MAY BE SPECIFICALLY ENFORCED BY THE FILING OF A COMPLAINT OR PETITION OR MOTION SEEKING SPECIFIC ENFORCEMENT OR BY MOTION DIRECTED TO THE LAW AND MOTION DEPARTMENT OF THE ___________ SUPERIOR COURT RULES.

(d) NOTICE: BY INITIALING IN THE SPACE BELOW, YOU ARE AGREEING TO HAVE ANY DISPUTE ARISING OUT OF THE MATTERS INCLUDED IN THE "ARBITRATION OF DISPUTES" PROVISION DECIDED BY NEUTRAL ARBITRATION AS PROVIDED BY CALIFORNIA LAW AND YOU ARE GIVING UP ANY RIGHTS YOU MIGHT POSSESS TO HAVE THE DISPUTE LITIGATED IN A COURT OR JURY TRIAL. BY INITIALING IN THE SPACE BELOW YOU ARE GIVING UP YOUR JUDICIAL RIGHTS TO DISCOVERY AND APPEAL, UNLESS THOSE RIGHTS ARE SPECIFICALLY INCLUDED IN THE "ARBITRATION OF DISPUTES" PROVISION, ABOVE. IF YOU REFUSE TO SUBMIT TO ARBITRATION AFTER AGREEING TO THIS PROVISION, YOU MAY BE COMPELLED TO ARBITRATE UNDER THE AUTHORITY OF THE CALIFORNIA CODE OF CIVIL PROCEDURE. YOUR AGREEMENT TO THIS PROVISION IS VOLUNTARY.

WE HAVE READ AND UNDERSTAND THE FOREGOING AND AGREE TO SUBMIT DISPUTES ARISING OUT OF THE MATTERS INCLUDED IN THE "ARBITRATION OF DISPUTES" PROVISION, ABOVE, TO NEUTRAL ARBITRATION.

BUYER: ___________ SELLER: ___________

[Note: Borrower and Seller may want to modify the foregoing arbitration provision to provide that the arbitration will be held in accordance with the rules of a specific arbitration association, such as the American Arbitration Association or Judicial Arbitration and Mediation Services, Inc. ("JAMS"). In addition, the arbitration provision can be modified to limit discovery and control other issues. See text of Chapter 4.]

[Note: Consider whether you want to include a mediation requirement. Mediation is a non-binding alternative dispute resolution method. The advantage to mediation is that it may result in a quick, inexpensive settlement. The disadvantage is that, if no settlement is reached, it will have involved an unnecessary expenditure of time and legal fees.]

In any event, the Seller will want the right to be able to file a lawsuit and record a lis pendens irrespective of whether arbitration or mediation is required under the Agreement.

12. BUYER'S WAIVER OF RIGHT TO COMPEL SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

As an inducement to Seller to enter into this Agreement, Buyer specifically agrees that it shall not have, and hereby forever relinquishes and waives, any right to compel Seller to specifically perform this agreement or otherwise compel Seller to sell the Property to Buyer. Buyer further acknowledges and agrees that the Property is not unique; that the Property is being purchased for speculative, investment purposes; that Buyer will not suffer irreparable harm if Seller fails to convey title; and that money damages will be an adequate remedy to compensate Buyer for Seller's failure to sell the Property to Buyer. Buyer hereby agrees that it will not, and waives any right to, file any lis pendens against the Property (or any portion thereof) and Buyer further waives any right to seek specific performance under California Civil Code Sections 3384, et seq. Note: Obviously, the Buyer will not want to agree to this provision because it will preclude the Buyer from compelling the Seller to sell Buyer the property.

13. ESCROW AND CLOSING.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

13.1. As soon as possible after the full execution of this Agreement, Buyer and Seller shall open an escrow for the purpose of consummating the purchase and sale contemplated by this Agreement (“Escrow”) by depositing an executed copy of this Agreement with ________________ Company, at ________________, ________________, California (“Escrow Holder”). This Agreement shall constitute escrow instructions to Escrow Holder. Seller and Buyer shall, promptly upon request by Escrow Holder, execute such additional escrow instructions as may be reasonably required by Escrow Holder, including Escrow Holder's standard printed conditions and stipulations with respect to escrows concerning the purchase and sale of real property; provided, however, that if there is any conflict between the provisions of this Agreement and the provisions of any such additional instructions, the provisions of this Agreement shall prevail. Upon delivery to Escrow of a fully executed copy of this Agreement by both parties, Escrow shall be deemed opened on the terms and conditions set forth in this Agreement.

13.2. Escrow shall close, and the Grant Deed shall be recorded in the Office of the County Recorder of ________________ County, California on ___________, 20__ (“Close of Escrow”).

13.3. Within the time set forth below, or if none is specified, prior to the Close of Escrow, Seller shall deliver to Escrow Holder, or if so indicated, to Buyer, the following documents and items:

(e) At least one (1) day prior to Close of Escrow, Seller shall deliver such certifications, declarations or other documents as may be required under Internal Revenue Code § 1445 and California Revenue and Tax Code § 18662, together with any and all other documents required by law pertaining to foreign or out-of-state sellers.

(f) To Buyer at the location of the Property, at Close of Escrow, all original executed counterparts of each Lease, Other Contract, Permit (as that term is defined in the Agreement) and Warranty (as that term is defined in the Assignment). To Buyer and Escrow Holder, by no later than ___________, 20__, the Updated Rent Roll.

(g) To Buyer, upon Close of Escrow, one (1) executed letter addressed to all the tenants of the Property advising them of the consummation of the purchase and sale of the Property and directing the tenants to pay the rent and other charges due under the Leases to Buyer.

(h) To Buyer, at the location of the Property, at Close of Escrow, all keys to the Property, adequately and properly labeled.

(i) To Buyer, at the location of the Property at Close of Escrow, all books, records, booklets, catalogs, advertising material and manuals regularly maintained by Seller at the Property relating to the use or operation of the Property, but excepting from the foregoing Seller's standard operational manuals.

(j) To Buyer, at least ___ (_) days prior to the Close of Escrow, a termite and pest control report prepared by a California licensed pest exterminator and paid for by Seller at its sole cost and expense, showing accessible areas of the Improvements to be free of visible infestation caused by wood destroying insects, fungi and dry rot.

(k) To Buyer at the Property, such executed and completed applications as may be required to effectuate a transfer to Buyer of the Permits (as that term is defined in the Assignment).

13.4. Buyer shall deliver to Escrow Holder prior to the Close of Escrow the balance of the cash portion of the Purchase Price set forth in Paragraph 2, as adjusted pursuant to this Agreement, together with an additional sum sufficient to cover Buyer's closing costs as set forth in Paragraph 13.7.2, below.

13.5. On the Close of Escrow, the Escrow Holder shall record the Grant Deed and shall deliver the monies and instruments to which each party is entitled pursuant to this Agreement, only when the Title Company is in a position to issue its CLTA [or, if applicable, ALTA] policy of title insurance subject only (i) to the Permitted Exceptions; and (ii) Title Company's standard pre-printed exceptions, with liability in the amount of the purchase price, showing title to the Real Property vested in Buyer (or as designated by Buyer) ("Title Policy").

13.6. Upon Close of Escrow, possession of the Property shall be delivered to Buyer subject to the Permitted Exceptions and all rights of tenants under the Leases, and the following items, documents and monies shall be delivered to the parties by Escrow Holder as set forth below:

(a) To Seller: the cash portion of the Purchase Price as set forth in Paragraph 2 as adjusted pursuant to this Agreement and reduced by the amount of Seller's closing costs as set forth in Paragraph 13.7.1, below.

(b) To Buyer: the Title Policy.

13.7. Upon Close of Escrow, Escrow and title charges shall be paid in the manner provided below.

13.7.1. Seller shall pay: [Allocation of the following costs varies depending on local customary practice.]

(a) The cost of the Title Policy.

(b) The cost of any and all documentary transfer tax or stamps or other sales tax.

(c) One-half (1/2) of the Escrow fees.

13.7.2. Buyer shall pay:

(a) One-half (1/2) of the cost of the Title Policy.

(b) All recording fees.

(c) One-half (1/2) of the Escrow fees.

13.8. If Escrow fails to close as a result of the default of this Agreement by a party, the defaulting party shall pay all title and escrow charges; provided, however, that nothing in this Paragraph 13 shall be deemed to limit, and the provisions of this Paragraph 13 shall be in addition to, all other rights and remedies of the non-defaulting party.

13.9. Escrow Holder is authorized and instructed to debit Seller for Seller's closing costs as set forth in Paragraph 13.7.1, above.

14. PRORATIONS.

14.1. Prorations shall be made as of the Close of Escrow. All prorations shall be made on the basis of a thirty (30) day month and shall be paid in cash to Seller if it is entitled thereto, or shall be credited against the cash portion of the Purchase Price if Buyer is entitled thereto. Such prorations shall be made by Escrow Holder on the basis of a statement(s) approved by Buyer and Seller and deposited into the Escrow prior to the Close of Escrow. The date used for prorations is hereinafter referred to as the "Proration Date."

(a) All real estate taxes and all personal property taxes due and owing as of the Proration Date, and all penalties and interest thereon, shall be paid by Seller. Current real estate taxes, special assessments and personal property taxes which are not yet due and owing shall be prorated based upon the most recent tax bill, so that the portion of current taxes allocable to the period from the beginning of such tax year through the Proration Date shall be charged to and paid by Seller and the portion of the current taxes allocable to the portion of such tax year from the Proration Date to the end of such tax year shall be charged to and paid by Buyer. Proration of taxes and assessments shall be final as of the Proration Date, regardless of the amount of taxes or assessments that actually are, or subsequently become, due.

(b) Expenses of operating the Property (other than insurance premiums, taxes and utility charges) which were prepaid by Seller for a period beyond the Proration Date.

(c) Unpaid rent under the Leases for the period in which the Proration Date occurs shall be prorated as if the same had been collected by Seller. Buyer shall receive a credit against the cash portion of the Purchase Price payable by Buyer in an amount equal to all prepaid rent under the Leases which is applicable to the period after the Proration Date, and all unused security or other deposits under the Leases. To the extent rent applicable to the period prior to the Proration Date is collected by Buyer subsequent to the Proration Date, Buyer shall remit to Seller that portion of such rent applicable to the period prior to the Proration Date, less Buyer's cost of collection of same which Buyer has paid to third parties. Any rent recovered by Buyer subsequent to the Proration Date pertaining to a particular tenant shall first be applied to any delinquency of said tenant after the Proration Date. Nothing contained herein shall require buyer to endeavor to collect any rent which was delinquent as of the Proration Date.

14.2. Buyer shall be responsible for obtaining and paying for utility services from and after Close of Escrow.

15. DAMAGE OR DESTRUCTION PRIOR TO CLOSE OF ESCROW.

If the Property, or any portion thereof, is damaged or destroyed prior to the Close of Escrow from any cause whatsoever, whether an insured risk or not, including but not limited to, fire, flood, accident or other casualty which, according to the Buyer's and Seller's best estimate, would cost more than _________________ Dollars ($________) to repair, Buyer shall have the option, upon written notice to Seller, to either (i) terminate this Agreement; or (ii) purchase the Property. If Buyer elects to terminate this Agreement, Escrow shall immediately terminate upon Seller's receipt of Buyer's notice of election to terminate and Escrow Holder shall thereupon promptly return all documents, items and monies in its possession to the party who shall have deposited same with Escrow Holder. In the event of such termination, each party shall pay one-half (1/2) of the Escrow fees. If Buyer elects to purchase the Property, Buyer shall be entitled to, and Seller shall assign to Buyer, all insurance proceeds covering such damage or destruction and, in addition, Seller shall pay Buyer the amount of any deductible (which can be paid by Seller by means of a credit against the Purchase Price). In the event that Buyer's and Seller's best estimate of the cost of repair is _________________ Dollars ($________) or less, Buyer shall purchase the Property and be entitled to, and Seller shall assign to Buyer, all insurance proceeds covering such damage or destruction. In addition, the difference between the amount of insurance proceeds available and the cost of repair shall be deducted from the cash portion of the Purchase Price. Should any damage or destruction occur prior to the Close of Escrow, the date scheduled for the Close of Escrow shall be extended for a period of time not to exceed thirty (30) days, for the purpose of allowing Buyer and Seller sufficient time to estimate the cost of repair. If Buyer fails to notify Seller of its election under this Paragraph 15, Buyer shall be deemed to have elected to purchase the Property.

16. EMINENT DOMAIN.

16.1. The words “condemnation” or “condemned” as used in this Paragraph 16 shall mean the exercise of, or intent to exercise, the power of eminent domain expressed in writing, as well as the filing of any action or proceeding for such purpose, by any person, entity, body, agency or authority having the right or power of eminent domain (the “condemning authority”).

16.2. If Seller receives written notice from a condemning authority advising of a condemnation of all or any portion of the Property (“Condemnation Notice”), Seller shall immediately advise Buyer of same in writing and deliver therewith a copy of the Condemnation Notice. Within ten (10) days after Buyer's receipt of the Condemnation Notice, Buyer shall notify Seller of its election to either (i) terminate this Agreement and the Escrow; or (ii) purchase the Property. If Buyer elects to terminate this Agreement, Escrow shall immediately terminate upon Seller's receipt of Buyer's notice of election to terminate this Agreement and Escrow Holder shall thereupon promptly return all documents, items and monies in its possession to the party who shall have deposited same with Escrow Holder. In the event of such termination, each party shall pay one-half (1/2) of the Escrow fees. If Buyer elects to purchase the Property, Seller shall transfer to Buyer at the Close of Escrow all proceeds from condemnation or Seller's right to receive all such proceeds. If Buyer fails to notify Seller of its election under this Paragraph 16, Buyer shall be deemed to have elected to purchase the Property.

17. SURVIVAL OF CLOSE OF ESCROW.

All representations, warranties, covenants, conditions, agreements and obligations contained in or relating to this Agreement shall survive the Close of Escrow and the recordation of the Grant Deed and shall not merge therein unless specifically stated otherwise in this Agreement.

18. NOTICES.

All notices to be given pursuant to this Agreement shall be either (i) personally delivered; (ii) sent via certified or registered mail, postage prepaid; (iii) overnight courier (such as Federal Express, DHL, etc.); or (iv) by telecopy transmittal. 28. INVALIDITY OF ANY PROVISION.

If any provision (or any portion of any provision) of this Agreement is held to be illegal, invalid, or unenforceable by a court of competent jurisdiction under present or future laws effective during the term of this Agreement, the legality, validity, and enforceability of the remaining provisions (or the balance of such provision) shall not be affected thereby.

29. NO RECORDATION.

Buyer shall not record this Agreement, any memorandum of this Agreement, any assignment of this Agreement, or any other document which would cause a cloud on the title to the Property.

30. DRAFTING OF AGREEMENT.

Buyer and Seller acknowledge that this Agreement has been negotiated at arm's length, that each party has been represented by independent counsel and that this Agreement has been drafted by both parties and no one party shall be construed as the draftsperson.

[Form 4:K] Sample General Conditions of Escrow Holder

[Author's Note: What follows is an example of standard, general conditions typically required by an escrow holder. However, remember that these terms are negotiable.]

1. Your duty to act as escrow holder shall not commence until these instructions, signed by all parties, are received by you. Until such time either party may unilaterally cancel and, upon written request delivered to you, a party may withdraw funds and documents such party previously handed to you.

2. All funds received in this escrow shall be deposited with a State or National bank with other escrow funds. Make disbursements by your check; checks not presented for payment within six months after date are subject to service charges in accordance with your schedule in effect from time to time. Make all adjustments and proratings on the basis of a 30 day month. “Close of Escrow” as used in this escrow means the date on which documents are recorded, unless otherwise specified. All documents and funds due the respective parties herein are to be mailed to the addresses set out below their respective signatures, unless otherwise instructed. Our signatures on any document and instructions pertaining to this escrow indicate our unconditional approval of same. Whenever provision is made herein for the payment of any sum, the delivery of any instrument or the performance of any act “outside of escrow”, you as escrow holder shall have no responsibility therefor, shall not be concerned therewith and are specifically relieved of any obligation relative thereto.

3. You shall not be responsible or liable in any manner whatsoever for the sufficiency or correctness as to form, manner of execution or validity of any documents deposited in escrow, nor as to the identity, authority or rights of any person executing the same, either as to documents of record or those handled in this escrow. Your duties hereunder shall be limited to the safekeeping of such money and documents received by you as escrow holder and for the disposition of the same in accordance with the written instructions accepted by you in this escrow. You shall not be required to take any action in connection with the collection or maturity of any obligations deposited in this escrow, unless otherwise instructed.

4. Seller represents and warrants, and you shall be fully protected, in assuming that as to any insurance policy handed you, such policy is in force, has not been hypothecated, and that all necessary premiums therefor have been paid. You will transmit for assignment any insurance policy handed you for use in this escrow, but you shall not be responsible for verifying the acceptance of the assignment and policy by the insurance company. ESCROW HOLDER WILL MAKE NO ATTEMPT TO VERIFY THE RECEIPT OF THE REQUEST FOR ASSIGNMENT BY THE ISSUING COMPANY. You are hereby placed on notice that if the insurance company should fail to receive said assignment, the issuing company may deny coverage for any loss suffered by Buyer. IT IS THE OBLIGATION OF THE BUYER OR HIS/HER REPRESENTATIVE TO VERIFY THE ACCEPTANCE OF THE ASSIGNMENT OF THE POLICY BY THE ISSUING COMPANY.

5. Deliver assurances of title, and insurance policies, if any, to holder of senior encumbrance or his/her order, or if there are no encumbrances, then to the buyer or his order.

6. In the event that the conditions of this escrow have not been complied with at the expiration of the time provided for herein, or any extension thereof, you are instructed to complete the same at the earliest possible date thereafter, unless we or either of us has made written demand upon you for the return of the money and/or instruments deposited by either of us, in which case you may withhold and stop all further proceedings in this escrow without liability upon your part for interest on funds held or for damages until written mutual cancellation instructions signed by all parties shall have been deposited in this escrow, whereupon you are then instructed to disburse the escrow funds and instruments accordingly, less your proper charges, to the respective parties hereto whereupon this escrow will without further notice be considered terminated.

7. NO NOTICE, DEMAND OR CHANGE OF INSTRUCTIONS SHALL BE OF ANY EFFECT IN THIS ESCROW UNLESS GIVEN IN WRITING BY ALL PARTIES AFFECTED THEREBY. In the event conflicting demands or notices are made or served upon you or any controversy arises between the parties hereto, or with third persons, growing out of or relating to this escrow, you shall have the absolute right to withhold and stop all further proceedings in and performance of this escrow until you receive written notification satisfactory to you of the settlement of the controversy by agreement of the parties thereto, or by final judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction. All of the parties to this escrow hereby jointly and severally promise and agree to pay promptly on demand as well as to indemnify you and to hold you harmless from and against all litigation and interpleader costs, damages, judgments, attorney's fees, expenses, obligations and liabilities of every kind which, in good faith, you may incur or suffer in connection with or arise out of this escrow, whether said litigation, interpleader, obligations, liabilities or expenses arising during the performance of this escrow or subsequent thereto, directly or indirectly.

8. You are hereby authorized to deposit any funds or documents handed you under these escrow instructions, or cause the same to be deposited, with any duly authorized sub-escrow agent, subject to your order at or prior to close of escrow, in the event such deposit shall be necessary or convenient for the consummation of this escrow.

9. All parties agree that as far as your rights and liabilities are involved, this transaction is an escrow and not any other legal relation and you are an escrow holder only on the within expressed terms, and you shall have no responsibility of notifying any of the parties to this escrow of any sale, resale, loan, exchange, or other transaction involving any property herein described or of any profit realized by any person, firm or corporation (broker, agent and parties to this and/or any other escrow included) in connection therewith, regardless of the fact that such transaction(s) may be handled by you in this escrow or in another escrow. NO ACTION SHALL LIE AGAINST ESCROW HOLDER FOR ANY CLAIM, LOSS, LIABILITY OR ALLEGED CAUSE OF ACTION OF ANY KIND OR NATURE WHATSOEVER, HOWEVER CAUSED OR INCURRED, UNDER THIS ESCROW OR IN CONNECTION WITH THE HANDLING OR PROCESSING OF THIS ESCROW UNLESS BROUGHT WITHIN TWELVE (12) MONTHS AFTER THE CLOSE OF ESCROW.

10. You are not to be concerned with the giving of any disclosures except as expressly required by Federal or State law to be given by an escrow agent. Neither are you to be concerned with the effect of zoning ordinances, land division regulations, or building restrictions which may pertain to or affect the land or improvements that are the subject of this escrow.

11. The parties to this escrow have satisfied themselves outside of escrow that the transaction covered by this escrow is not in violation of the Subdivision Map Act or any other law regulating land division, and you as escrow holder are relieved of all responsibility and/or liability in connection therewith, and are not to be concerned with the enforcement of said laws.

12. In the event any Offer to Purchase, Deposit Receipt or any other form of Purchase Agreement is deposited in this escrow, it is understood that such document shall be effective only as between the parties signing said document. You as escrow holder are not to be concerned with the terms of such document and are relieved of all responsibility in connection therewith. You are to be concerned only with the directives specifically set forth in the escrow instructions and amendments thereto, and are not to be concerned with or liable for items designated as “memoranda” in the within escrow instructions nor with any other agreement or contract between the parties. You are authorized to furnish copies of escrow instructions, supplements, amendments, or notices of cancellation and closing statements in this escrow to real estate broker(s) and lender(s) referred to in this escrow. You are not required to submit any title report issued in connection with this escrow to any party or agent unless directed to do so by written mutual instructions. You may, however, do so without incurring liability to any party for such submission. You are hereby authorized to submit such report to any proposed lender.

13. Time is of the essence of these escrow instructions. In the event of failure to pay fees or expenses due you hereunder, on demand, the parties agree to pay a reasonable fee for any attorney's services which may be required to collect such fees or expenses.

14. If a party to this escrow unilaterally assigns or orders the proceeds of this escrow to be paid to other than the original parties to this escrow, such assignment or order shall be subordinated to the expenses of this escrow, liens of record on the subject property, and payments directed to be made by original parties together. If the result of such assignment or order would be to leave the escrow without sufficient funds to close, then you are directed to close nevertheless, and to pay such assignment or orders only out of the net proceeds and to pay them in the order in which such assignments or orders are received by you. You are to furnish a copy of these instructions, amendments thereto, closing statements and/or any other documents deposited in this escrow to the lender or lenders and/or the real estate broker or brokers involved in this transaction upon request of such lenders or brokers. In the event of an assignment or transfer of interest by operation of law, with or without the approval or consent of any or all of the parties hereto, you shall retain the right to deduct any and all escrow costs, fees and expenses provided for herein from said assigned or transferred funds, properties or rights, said assignment or transfer notwithstanding.

15. If there is no written activity by any principal delivered to this escrow within any six-month period after the time limit date as set forth in the escrow instructions or written extension thereof, your agency obligation shall terminate at your option and all documents, monies or other items held by you shall be returned to the respective parties entitled thereto, less fees and charges herein provided.

16. If any check submitted to escrow is dishonored upon presentment for payment, you are authorized to notify all principals and/or their respective agents of such nonpayment.

17. These instructions may be executed in counterparts, each of which shall be deemed an original regardless of the date of its execution and delivery. All such counterparts together shall constitute one and the same document.

18. The parties to these escrow instructions authorize you to destroy these instructions and all other instructions and records in this escrow at any time after five (5) years from date of close of escrow.

California Practice Guide: Real Property Transactions | September 2024 Update

Chapter 5. Environmental Hazards Liability

A. Introduction

[5:1] Environmental hazards liability is among the most complex and dynamic areas of real property practice. An intricate body of statutory requirements and restrictions, common law interpretations, enforcement practices, and assessment and remediation techniques are in a continual state of evolution and flux. All of this has combined to create new and increased risks for both buyers and sellers of real property, requiring all parties to a real estate transaction to focus energy, attention and funds on assessing the environmental condition of the subject property. For this reason, it is crucial that all parties to a real property acquisition understand the scope of the applicable law.

[5:2] Scope Note: This Chapter provides a basic introduction to the principal federal and California statutes and cases governing environmental hazards liability of buyers and sellers of real property, together with some considerations for structuring a purchase and sale transaction to accommodate environmental concerns. However, practitioners should also be aware that statutory and common law in the area has significant implications far beyond the concerns of buyers and sellers of real property: Lenders, trustees, brokers, tenants, adjoining landowners and others are all affected by environmental laws in various ways. A comprehensive treatment of the subject could itself consume volumes and, thus, is beyond the scope of this Practice Guide. Moreover, practitioners are cautioned to monitor developments in the field, as the relevant laws, and the interpretation of those laws, continue to change rapidly and in dramatic ways.

1. [5:3] Federal Laws: The basic federal statutory scheme in the area of environmental hazards liability includes the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 (CERCLA, 42 USC § 9601 et seq.); and the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act (RCRA, 42 USC § 6901 et seq.), which includes the EPA Technical Standards and Corrective Action Requirements for Owners and Operators of Underground Storage Tanks (42 USC § 6991 et seq.).

a. [5:4] CERCLA: CERCLA (42 USC § 9601 et seq.) (also known as the federal “Superfund” law) is the chief Federal Act imposing liability on owners and operators of real property for hazardous waste disposal. It is the primary source of environmental hazards liability for buyers and sellers. [Burlington Northern & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. United States (2009) 556 US 599, 602, 129 S.Ct. 1870, 1874—CERCLA is designed to promote “timely cleanup of hazardous waste sites” and ensure associated costs are borne by those responsible for contamination; see also California Dept. of Toxic Substances Control v. Hearthside Residential Corp. (9th Cir. 2010) 613 F3d 910, 915—CERCLA encourages responsible parties to remediate hazardous facilities without delay and also encourages early settlement between potentially responsible parties and environmental regulators]

CERCLA has survived constitutional challenge under the Commerce Clause: The legislative history reflects Congress' recognition that even if the hazardous substance disposal has not caused off-site damage and is confined within an individual state, the unregulated management of hazardous substances significantly threatens interstate commerce. [See Voggenthaler v. Maryland Square LLC (9th Cir. 2013) 724 F3d 1050, 1059—applying CERCLA to soil and groundwater contamination is proper under Commerce Clause as a means of regulating "articles in commerce and activities affecting commerce"; United States v. Olin Corp. (11th Cir. 1997) 107 F3d 1506, 1509-1511 (relying on U.S. Supreme Court's approach for testing constitutionality of federal statutes under Commerce Clause as set forth in United States v. Lopez (1995) 514 US 549, 559-562, 115 S.Ct. 1624, 1630-1631)]

(1) [5:5] Basis for CERCLA liability—operative terms: CERCLA liability is triggered by a "potentially responsible party's" (PRP's, ¶ 5:7) "release" (or threatened release) of a "hazardous substance" from a "facility" into the "environment." [42 USC §§ 9604, 9606(a), 9607(a); United States v. Chapman (9th Cir. 1998) 146 F3d 1166, 1170]

(a) [5:5.1] "Hazardous substance": CERCLA defines "hazardous substance" as "any substance designated pursuant to" several other statutes or EPA regulations promulgated under CERCLA. [42 USC § 9601(14); Cose v. Getty Oil Co. (9th Cir. 1993) 4 F3d 700, 704; Castaic Lake Water Agency v. Whittaker Corp. (CD CA 2003) 272 F.Supp.2d 1053, 1059]

There is no minimum level threshold. "Any substance" as used by CERCLA means just that—i.e., any quantity of a hazardous substance. [A & W Smelter & Refiners, Inc. v. Clinton (9th Cir. 1998) 146 F3d 1107, 1110; Johnson v. James Langley Operating Co., Inc. (8th Cir. 2000) 226 F3d 957, 962; but see Amoco Oil Co. v. Borden, Inc. (5th Cir. 1989) 889 F2d 664, 669 (interpreting CERCLA causation requirement to impose minimum level requirement "through the back door")]

1) [5:5.2] Not petroleum: There is a significant exception: A "hazardous substance" for CERCLA (and State Superfund) purposes does not include petroleum, natural gas or synthetic gas usable for fuel (42 USC § 9601(14)). See ¶ 5:90 ff.

(b) [5:5.3] "Release": The term "release" as used by CERCLA includes "any spilling, leaking, pumping, pouring, emitting, emptying, discharging, injecting, escaping, leaching, dumping, or disposing into the environment" of a hazardous substance (including the abandonment or discarding of barrels or other closed receptacles containing such substances). [42 USC § 9601(22); Pakootas v. Teck Cominco Metals, Ltd. (9th Cir. 2006) 452 F3d 1066, 1074-1075; see also Sycamore Industrial Park Assocs. v. Ericsson, Inc. (7th Cir. 2008) 546 F3d 847, 852-853—there is substantial overlap in terms used by CERCLA to define "release" and "disposal" (¶ 5:63.1a)]

1) [5:5.3a] Includes "passive migration": CERCLA's inclusion of the term "leaching" indicates that "passive migration" of hazardous substances constitutes a "release." [Pakootas v. Teck Cominco Metals, Ltd. (9th Cir. 2006) 452 F3d 1066, 1075; compare ABB Indus. Systems, Inc. v. Prime Technology, Inc. (2nd Cir. 1997) 120 F3d 351, 358; and McCoy v. Gustafson (2009) 180 CA4th 56, 103 CR3d 37, fn. 29—it is an "open question" under CERCLA whether passive underground migration of contaminants amounts to "release"]

Compare: On the other hand, passive migration does not necessarily constitute a "disposal" under CERCLA (see ¶ 5:63.2 ff.).

[5:5.3b - 5:5.3e] Reserved.

2) [5:5.3f] Exclusions: A CERCLA "release" expressly excludes:

- any release that results in toxic exposure to employees solely within the workplace with respect to claims they may make against their employer (42 USC § 9601(22)(A));
- engine exhaust emissions from motor vehicles, rolling stock, aircraft, vessels, or a pipeline pumping station engine (42 USC § 9601(22)(B));
- certain nuclear incident releases (see 42 USC § 9601(22)(C)); and
- the normal application of fertilizer (42 USC § 9601(22)(D)).

(c) [5:5.4] “Facility”: A “facility” within the meaning of CERCLA means (i) any building, structure, installation, equipment, pipe, pipeline, well, pit, pond, lagoon, impoundment, ditch, landfill, storage container, motor vehicle, rolling stock or aircraft, or (ii) any site or area where a hazardous substance has been deposited, stored, disposed of, placed, or otherwise “come to be located.” [42 USC § 9601(9); see Pakootas v. Teck Cominco Metals, Ltd. (9th Cir. 2006) 452 F3d 1066, 1074—Upper Columbia River in Washington State deemed “facility” because hazardous waste from British Columbia upstream smelter had “come to be located” there]

A “facility” under CERCLA does not include any consumer product in consumer use or any vessel. [42 USC § 9601(9)]

1) [5:5.5] Encompasses multiple locations: Hazardous substances may be located in several discrete locations, each of which is a CERCLA “facility.” Thus, several “facilities” may be related to a single hazardous waste discharge or disposal. [United States v. Meyer (WD MI 1999) 120 F.Supp.2d 635, 639—private sewer line around perimeter of property and municipal sewer line into which waste released both qualified as “facilities”; see also Lincoln Properties, Ltd. v. Higgins (1992) 823 F.Supp. 1528, 1536-1538—CERCLA “facility” may include buildings adjacent to original source from which contaminated vapors are migrating]

2) [5:5.6] Exclusions: A CERCLA “facility” does not include:

- groundwater (Castaic Lake Water Agency v. Whittaker Corp. (CD CA 2003) 272 F.Supp.2d 1053, 1076—including groundwater in CERCLA's broad definition of “facility” “stretches the definition beyond reason and defies common sense”); or

- a consumer product in consumer use or vessel (42 USC § 9601(9); see Otay Land Co., LLC v. U.E. Ltd., L.P. (2017) 15 CA5th 806, 829-830, 225 CR3d 119, 138-139—commercial shooting range not “consumer product in consumer use”; Castaic Lake Water Agency v. Whittaker Corp., supra, 272 F.Supp.2d at 1073-1076—water wells, as opposed to water within wells supplied to consumers, are a CERCLA “facility”; Rivas v. Safety-Kleen Corp. (2002) 98 CA4th 218, 238, 119 CR2d 503, 519—structures containing asbestos building materials, as opposed to containers of such materials for consumer use, are a CERCLA “facility”).

(d) [5:5.7] “Environment”: The “environment” as defined by CERCLA is (i) the navigable waters, waters of the contiguous zone, and the ocean waters of which the natural resources are under exclusive U.S. management authority under the Magnuson-Stevens Fishery Conservation and Management Act (16 USC § 1801 et seq.), and (ii) any other surface water, ground water, drinking water supply, land surface or subsurface strata, or ambient air within the U.S. or under U.S. jurisdiction. [42 USC § 9601(8)]

[5:5.8 - 5:5.9] Reserved.

(e) [5:5.10] Compare—minimal toxic exposure within confined area: By making a “release” of hazardous materials from a “facility” into the “environment” the operative triggers of liability, Congress necessarily limited CERCLA's reach. It does not cover (and is inapplicable to) toxic exposure of only a few persons inside an enclosed space. [Rivas v. Safety-Kleen Corp. (2002) 98 CA4th 218, 234, 119 CR2d 503, 515, 517—workers' on-the-job toxic chemical exposure from using cleaning solvents to wash auto parts not a “release into the environment” covered by CERCLA]

(2) Clean-up cost recoupment and remediation actions

(a) [5:6] Federal government right of action: Under CERCLA, the federal government has a right of action against, among others, current and former owners and operators of a contaminated real property to recover amounts spent by the government in cleaning up the site. The federal government may also order other parties who are “potentially responsible” for the contaminated condition of the property to clean up the site. [42 USC §§ 9604, 9606, 9607; see ¶ 5:121 ff.]

(b) [5:6.1] Private right of action: Additionally, parties who undertake the clean-up of a contaminated site have a private right of action under CERCLA to recoup all or a portion of those “response costs” from other “potentially responsible parties.” [42 USC §§ 9607(a)(4)(B) & 9613(f); United States v. Atlantic Research Corp. (2007) 551 US 128, 131, 127 S.Ct. 2331, 2333-2334; see ¶ 5:125 ff.]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(This is a significant remedy, setting CERCLA apart from many other environmental laws—including the RCRA; see ¶ 5:125.10 ff.)

(3) [5:7] "Potentially responsible parties": CERCLA identifies the "potentially responsible parties" (PRPs) who can be ordered by the government to remediate a hazardous waste site or, alternatively, sued for reimbursement of the government's or a private party's clean-up costs with respect to the site.

As discussed in more detail below (¶ 5:60 ff.), there are four classes of PRPs under CERCLA: owners, operators, arrangers and transporters. [42 USC § 9607(a); Burlington Northern & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. United States (2009) 556 US 599, 608-609, 129 S.Ct. 1870, 1878; Cooper Indus., Inc. v. Aviall Services, Inc. (2004) 543 US 157, 161, 125 S.Ct. 577, 580-581]

The "owner" and "operator" classes encompass a wide range of property owners and occupants. The classes include both current and former owners and operators, and the owners and operators of any site or area where a hazardous substance has "come to be located." [See 42 USC §§ 9601(9) (defining "facility"), 9607(a)(1), (2); Atlantic Richfield Co. v. Christian (2020) 590 US _, _, 140 S.Ct. 1335, 1347, 1352—98 landowners within 300-square mile area were PRPs because pollutants from former copper smelter facility had "come to be located on the landowners' properties"; see ¶ 5:5.4, 5:62 ff.]

(4) Nature and scope of liability

(a) [5:8] Retroactive, joint and several liability: CERCLA liability is retroactive and subject to a potentially open-ended statute of limitations. Therefore, if a hazardous waste condition existed on the property at the time a PRP had an interest in the property, liability can be imposed on the PRP at any time—even many years after the PRP transferred its interest in the contaminated site and without regard to whether the contamination occurred before CERCLA was enacted (see ¶ 5:63 ff., 5:70).

Moreover, though there may be several PRPs, CERCLA liability generally is joint and several. The defendant PRP bears the burden of proving its liability for the hazardous waste can be apportioned with reasonable certainty among the various (sometimes many) PRPs. If that burden is not met, each PRP may be held jointly and severally liable for the entire clean-up cost. [42 USC § 9607(a) et seq.; see ¶ 5:72 ff.]

(PRPs sued for contribution under CERCLA can also be held jointly liable; see ¶ 5:135.10.)

(b) [5:9] Tantamount to strict liability; limited defenses: Technically, CERCLA does not impose strict liability on PRPs. However, because there are so few defenses to liability, and the recognized defenses are extremely narrow, CERCLA has, for all practical purposes, created a strict liability scheme. [See AIU Ins. Co. v. Sup.Ct. (FMC Corp.) (1990) 51 C3d 807, 836, 274 CR 820, 852—CERCLA "is a strict liability statute that serves essentially remedial goals, irrespective of fault"; Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp. (9th Cir. 2001) 270 F3d 863, 870 (en banc); and ¶ 5:64 ff., 5:100 ff.]

1) [5:10] Lack of knowledge immaterial: A PRP is subject to CERCLA liability whether or not it actually knew of the hazardous condition at the time the PRP had an interest in the property. [United States v. Monsanto Co. (4th Cir. 1988) 858 F2d 160, 168; see ¶ 5:64 ff.]

2) [5:11] Irrespective of fault: Similarly, CERCLA liability may be assessed regardless of whether the PRP participated in causing the contamination of the property. [United States v. Monsanto Co. (4th Cir. 1988) 858 F2d 160, 167; see ¶ 5:64]

[5:11.1 - 5:11.4] Reserved.

(5) [5:11.5] Federally-mandated accrual date for state law causes of action: CERCLA controls the commencement of the statute of limitations both on CERCLA and state law causes of action for personal injury or property damage caused or contributed to by the release of hazardous substances from a facility into the environment. [42 USC § 9658(a)(1); see discussion at ¶ 5:143.1 ff.]

(6) [5:12] Exclusive federal jurisdiction; effect on state law claims: U.S. district courts have exclusive original jurisdiction over claims arising under CERCLA. [42 USC § 9613(b)]

While state courts lack jurisdiction over CERCLA claims, they retain jurisdiction over claims brought under other sources of law, including state common law claims. [Atlantic Richfield Co. v. Christian (2020) 590 US _, _, 140 S.Ct.

[5:13 - 5:14] Reserved.

b. RCRA

(1) [5:15] Permits; reporting/notification requirements: The Resource Conservation and Recovery Act of 1976 (RCRA, 42 USC § 6901 et seq.) was enacted to provide a mechanism for preventing the creation of new hazardous waste sites by, among other things, establishing a system for tracking hazardous wastes from the time they are created through the time of their disposal. RCRA accomplishes this by way of a permitting scheme and reporting/notification requirements imposed upon those who generate or transport hazardous wastes, and upon the owners and operators of facilities for the treatment, disposal or storage of hazardous wastes. [Pakootas v. Teck Cominco Metals, Ltd. (9th Cir. 2006) 452 F3d 1066, 1078; see also Hinds Investments, L.P. v. Angioli (9th Cir. 2011) 654 F3d 846, 850—RCRA's primary purpose is to "minimize the present and future threat to human health and the environment" by reducing hazardous waste generation and ensuring its proper treatment, storage and disposal]

These permitting and reporting/notification requirements are accompanied by stiff criminal and civil penalties for noncompliance. [See generally, 42 USC § 6928] (Specific penalty provisions are codified throughout RCRA depending upon the specific kind of violation involved.)

(2) [5:16] Reporting re underground storage tanks: RCRA also contains the EPA Technical Standards and Corrective Action Requirements for Owners and Operators of Underground Storage Tanks. [42 USC § 6991 et seq.; 40 CFR Part 280] Several reporting requirements are imposed:

- [5:17] Any owner of an underground storage tank (UST) that contains petroleum or any other substance designated as "hazardous" must report to the designated state or local authority information concerning the "age, size, type, location and uses" of each such UST. [42 USC § 6991a(a)(1)]
- [5:18] An owner of a UST must also report to the designated authority any actual or threatened discharge of a substance from a UST and the nature and scope of the corrective action being taken by the UST owner in response. [42 USC § 6991b(c)(3)]
- [5:19] Additionally, if a UST is ever taken out of service, the owner must report that fact to the designated authority, along with other information relevant to the nonoperational UST. [42 USC § 6991a(a)(2)]

(3) [5:20] Distinguished from CERCLA: Unlike CERCLA, RCRA is not principally designed to effectuate the clean-up of hazardous waste sites or to compensate those who remediate environmental hazards. RCRA's primary purpose is to reduce the generation of hazardous waste and ensure the proper treatment, storage and disposal of hazardous waste that is nonetheless generated "so as to minimize the present and future threat to human health and the environment." [42 USC § 6902(b); Meghrig v. KFC Western, Inc. (1996) 516 US 479, 483, 116 S.Ct. 1251, 1254; Pakootas v. Teck Cominco Metals, Ltd. (9th Cir. 2006) 452 F3d 1066, 1078]

Unlike CERCLA, the RCRA does not provide private parties with a damages remedy for past or ongoing clean-ups (see ¶ 5:125.10 ff.).

c. [5:21] Other Federal Acts: Some of the other Federal Acts relating to environmental hazards liability include:

- The Federal Water Pollution Prevention and Control Act, more commonly known as the Clean Water Act (33 USC § 1251 et seq.). [See Communities for a Better Environment v. State Water Resources Control Bd. (2003) 109 CA4th 1089, 1092, 1 CR3d 76, 78—Act's goal is "to restore and maintain the chemical, physical, and biological integrity of the Nation's waters"; Idaho Conservation League v. Poe (9th Cir. 2023) 86 F4th 1243, 1244 (upholding environmental organization's "citizen suit" against miner who committed ongoing Clean Water Act (CWA) violations by operating suction dredge in river without proper CWA permit); Natural Resources Defense Council v. California Dept. of Transp. (9th Cir. 1996) 96 F3d 420, 424—private party's suit against state officials for prospective injunctive relief under Act's "citizen suit" provision (33 USC § 1365) not barred by 11th Amendment immunity]

- The Clean Air Act (42 USC § 7401 et seq.).

• The Toxic Substances Control Act (15 USC § 2601 et seq.).

• The National Environmental Policy Act (42 USC § 4321 et seq.).

• The Residential Lead-Based Paint Hazard Reduction Act (42 USC § 4851 et seq.).

Cross-refer: The Residential Lead-Based Paint Hazard Reduction Act (above) and regulations promulgated thereunder impose significant disclosure obligations on sellers (and potentially their brokers) of "target housing" (most residential structures built before 1978) with regard to lead-based paint and related hazards. See detailed discussion at ¶ 4:366.2 ff.

d. [5:22] EPA regulations: The Environmental Protection Agency has chief responsibility for implementing and enforcing federal environmental hazards laws, and promulgates regulations that expand upon the vast body of applicable federal law.

[5:23 - 5:24] Reserved.

2. [5:25] California State Laws: The State of California has enacted several hazardous substance liability statutes. The Carpenter-Presley-Tanner Hazardous Substance Account Act (so-called California "Superfund," Health & Saf.C. § 78000 et seq. (recodified & added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257, oper. 1/1/24)) is a companion to the Federal CERCLA. Likewise, California's Hazardous Waste Control Law (Health & Saf.C. § 25100 et seq.) is the analogue to the Federal RCRA.

California has also adopted several statutes requiring reporting and notification with respect to certain hazardous substances under specified circumstances. These include: the Porter-Cologne Water Quality Control Act (Water C. § 13000 et seq.); the Safe Drinking Water and Toxic Enforcement Act of 1986 ("Proposition 65," Health & Saf.C. § 25249.5 et seq.); the Asbestos Notification Law (Health & Saf.C. § 25915 et seq.); and the Hazardous Substances Underground Storage Tank Act (Health & Saf.C § 25280 et seq.).

And another state statutory scheme, the Environmental Responsibility Acceptance Act (Civ.C. § 850 et seq.), creates a unique procedure to expedite identification of potentially responsible parties and the assumption of response action by PRPs to remediate contaminated sites.

Each of these Acts is briefly described at ¶ 5:26 ff.

a. [5:26] California "Superfund" (remediation and clean-up liability): The so-called California "Superfund" (Health & Saf.C. § 78000 et seq. (recodified & added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257, oper. 1/1/24)) governs liability to the state for hazardous waste remediation and clean-up costs. It is patterned after the Federal CERCLA (¶ 5:4 ff.) and contains provisions substantially similar to CERCLA in most areas—including provisions governing who can be held liable and the defenses to liability. [See Castaic Lake Water Agency v. Whittaker Corp. (CD CA 2003) 272 F.Supp.2d 1053, 1084, fn. 40; Orange County Water Dist. v. Alcoa Global Fasteners, Inc. (2017) 12 CA5th 252, 297, 219 CR3d 474, 513—State Superfund implements California's CERCLA responsibilities and establishes Hazardous Substance Account to fund environmental remediation actions and related efforts; Van Horn v. Department of Toxic Substances Control (2014) 231 CA4th 1287, 1298, 180 CR3d 416, 424—state's principal interest under Superfund is timely and efficient clean-up of hazardous substance releases that threaten public health and environment]

As under CERCLA, liability for hazardous waste remediation is strict. However, the California Superfund is different from CERCLA in certain respects. For example:

(1) [5:27] Apportionment of liability: Unlike CERCLA, the California Superfund requires apportionment of clean-up costs among potentially responsible parties (PRPs) to the extent possible. [Health & Saf.C. § 79760 (recodified & added Stats. 2022, Ch.257, oper. 1/1/24); see Orange County Water Dist. v. Alcoa Global Fasteners, Inc. (2017) 12 CA5th 252, 340, 219 CR3d 474, 549 (decided under predecessor statute) (finding county water district's reliance on federal authorities regarding apportionment unpersuasive); Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. City of Lodi, Calif. (9th Cir. 2002) 302 F3d 928, 946—liability under California Superfund not joint and several but apportioned according to fault]

Moreover, the oversight agency (Department of Toxic Substances Control) must propose an expedited settlement with PRPs whose hazardous substance contribution to a contaminated site is minimal. [Health & Saf.C. § 79920 (recodified & added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257, oper. 1/1/24)]

(a) [5:27.1] "Orphan fund" for reimbursement of insolvent or defunct PRP's share: A PRP who, under federal law (which imposes joint and several liability, ¶ 5:72 ff.), has had to pay clean-up costs for the share of an insolvent or defunct PRP may apply for reimbursement through California's Orphan Share Reimbursement Trust Fund. [See Health & Saf.C. § 80000 et seq. (recodified & added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257, oper. 1/1/24)]

(2) [5:28] Liability not retroactive: The California Superfund expressly does not create any new liability for acts that occurred prior to January 1, 1982 (if such acts were not otherwise in violation of law at the time committed) and, therefore, unlike CERCLA, does not impose unlimited retroactive liability. [Health & Saf.C. § 78185(a) (recodified & added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257, oper. 1/1/24); see OrangeCounty Water Dist. v. Sabic Innovative Plastics US, LLC (2017) 14 CA5th 343, 388-389, 222 CR3d 83, 122-123 (decided under predecessor statute) (noting statute establishes affirmative defense)—summary adjudication improper where defendant's acts did not violate law at time committed and evidence consisted solely of water district's admission it was unaware of any environmental violation charges against defendant prior to property's 1972 sale]

(3) [5:29] Disclosure requirements: The California Superfund requires that nonresidential real property owners disclose to any prospective buyer, lessee or renter the presence of any hazardous substance that the owner knows or has reason to believe has been released on or under the property. Failure to do so subjects the owner to actual damages and any other remedies provided by law. In addition, sanctions may be imposed for failure to make such disclosures. [See Health & Saf.C. § 78700 (recodified & added Stats. 2022, oper. 1/1/24); Epochal Enterprises, Inc. v. LF Encinitas Properties, LLC (2024) 99 CA5th 44, 49-50, 57, 317 CR3d 573, 577, 583-584 (decided under predecessor statute)—lease provision limiting commercial landlord/owner's liability was invalid and therefore did not preclude tenant/lessee's damages award because said provision necessarily violated landlord/owner's statutory duty to disclose presence of asbestos on leased property]

b. [5:30] Hazardous Waste Control Law: The RCRA (¶ 5:15 ff.) authorizes states to establish their own programs for tracking hazardous wastes, provided the state requirements are not less stringent than the RCRA's. [People v. Union Pac. R.R. Co. (2006) 141 CA4th 1228, 1240, 47 CR3d 92, 98] The Hazardous Waste Control Law (HWCL, Health & Saf.C. § 25100 et seq.) is the California counterpart to the RCRA; it regulates state facilities that generate, process, treat or store hazardous wastes by, among other things, authorizing the California Department of Toxic Substances Control (DTSC) to take a variety of actions concerning the facilities.

(1) [5:31] DTSC inspections, testing and financial responsibility determinations: Among other things, the HWCL authorizes the DTSC to:

- Make inspections of (a) sites on which hazardous waste is treated, stored, handled or disposed of, (b) real property on which there has been a disposal of hazardous waste, or (c) real property that is within 2,000 feet of a property on which there has been a disposal of hazardous waste;
- Conduct various tests and monitoring activities on those sites; and
- Require specified parties who have a reasonable basis to believe there has been or may be a release or threatened release of a hazardous substance, hazardous wastes or hazardous material, and any person having information regarding the activities of any of those parties, to furnish and transmit to the DTSC information relating to those parties' ability to pay for or perform a response, or corrective action (but only for the purpose of determining how to finance a response or corrective action or otherwise enforce the HWCL). [See Health & Saf.C. §§ 25185, 25185.5 & 25185.6]

(2) [5:32] DTSC remediation orders; permit action: The HWCL also authorizes the DTSC to issue orders requiring the owner or operator of such properties to take actions and make reports concerning hazardous waste thereon. [Health & Saf.C. § 25187.1(a)]

Further, the DTSC has the right to deny, suspend and revoke permits applied for or issued pursuant to the HWCL. [Health & Saf.C. §§ 25186, 25186.1, 25186.2 & 25186.5]

(3) [5:33] California Superfund remedies upon voluntary written request: If the person responsible for a hazardous release voluntarily requests in writing that the DTSC issue an order for corrective action pursuant to the remedies set forth in California's Superfund law (as opposed to those provided in the HWCL), the DTSC must do so. [See Health & Saf.C. § 25187(b)(1)(A); Soco West, Inc. v. California Environmental Protection Agency (2013) 213 CA4th 1511, 1515, 1519, 153 CR3d 440, 442-443, 446—Legislature intended responsible party, not DTSC, to "dictate the appropriate cleanup program"]

[5:34 - 5:35] Reserved.

c. [5:36] Porter-Cologne Water Quality Control Act of 1970: This Act (Water C. § 13000 et seq.) is the California analogue to the Federal Clean Water Act. Implemented by the Water Resources Control Board and its many Regional Water Quality Control Boards (RWQCBs), the Act regulates the proposed or actual dispersal and/or disposal (¶ 5:36.2) of a broad range of substances (¶ 5:36.1) that will or might have an effect on the quality of California waters (¶ 5:36.3 ff.). [See Coastal Environmental Rights Foundation v. California Regional Water Quality Control Bd. (2017) 12 CA5th 178, 181-183, 218 CR3d 596, 600-602 (summarizing statutory framework for regulating water quality)]

(1) Definitions

(a) [5:36.1] "Waste": The Act's definition of "waste" includes "sewage and any and all other waste substances, liquid, solid, gaseous, or radioactive, associated with human habitation, or of human or animal origin, or from any producing, manufacturing, or processing operation, including waste placed within containers of whatever nature prior to, and for purposes of, disposal." [Water C. § 13050(d)]

The Act's definition can encompass innocuous substances that are not harmful on their own, but can become harmful as a result of human activity. [See Lake Madrone Water Dist. v. State Water Resources Control Bd. (1989) 209 CA3d 163, 169-170, 256 CR 894, 897-898—silt and sediment that accumulated in creek bed and then released when dam's gate valve opened deemed "waste" (dam created "man-made artificial location for its concentration," rendering otherwise "innocuous substance" one "deadly to aquatic life"); Sweeney v. Calif. Regional Water Quality Control Bd. (2021) 61 CA5th 1093, 1116-1119, 275 CR3d 442, 461-463—uncontaminated dirt deemed "waste" because "it was harmful as used in reconstructing the levee in tidal wetlands"]

(b) [5:36.2] "Discharge": The Act does not define "discharge." Accordingly, courts apply the term's ordinary meaning—i.e., (i) "to allow (a liquid, gas, or other substance) to flow out from where it has been confined," (ii) "to give outlet or vent to," and (iii) "to emit." [See Sweeney v. Calif. Regional Water Quality Control Bd. (2021) 61 CA5th 1093, 1120-1121, 275 CR3d 442, 464-465—placement of fill materials into waters to build and repair levees was a "discharge"]

(c) [5:36.3] "Waters of the state": "Waters of the state" are "any surface water or groundwater, including saline waters, within the boundaries of the state." [Water C. § 13050(e); see Sweeney v. Calif. Regional Water Quality Control Bd. (2021) 61 CA5th 1093, 1121-1122, 275 CR3d 442, 465-466—waste discharged into "channels and ditches" satisfied "waters of the state" element, even though most activities occurred on dry land]

1) [5:36.3a] Compare—Federal Clean Water Act definition: The federal Clean Water Act applies to "the waters of the United States," which refers to "relatively permanent, standing or continuously flowing bodies of water forming geographical features," such as "streams, oceans, rivers, and lakes." The Act also extends to adjacent wetlands that are indistinguishable from "waters of the United States," i.e., wetlands that have "a continuous surface connection with that water, making it difficult to determine where the 'water' ends and the 'wetland' begins." [33 USC § 1362(7); Sackett v. EPA (2023) 598 US 651, 671, 676-679, 684, 143 S.Ct. 1322, 1336, 1339-1341, 1344 (internal quotations omitted)—wetlands on residential property were not "waters of the United States" because they were distinguishable from nearby lake]

(d) [5:36.4] "Pollution": "Pollution" means "an alteration of the quality of the waters of the state by waste to a degree which unreasonably affects" either (i) "the waters for beneficial uses" or (ii) "facilities which serve these beneficial uses." [Water C. § 13050(l)(1)]

Pollution may include "contamination," which means "an impairment of the quality of the waters of the state by waste to a degree which creates a hazard to the public health through poisoning or through the spread of disease." Contamination includes "any equivalent effect resulting from the disposal of waste, whether or not waters of the state are affected." [Water C. § 103050(l)(2), (k)]

(2) [5:37] Notice requirements: The Act imposes strict notification requirements on persons who have discharged hazardous substances in or on state waters, irrespective of fault. Failure to comply with the Act's notification requirements may result in substantial monetary fines and, in some cases, imprisonment. [See Water C. §§ 13271 & 13272]

(3) [5:38] Remedial enforcement: The RWQCBs are empowered to enforce the Act through cease and desist, clean-up and abatement orders against responsible parties, or to remediate affected sites themselves and recover the clean-up costs from responsible parties. [See Water C. §§ 13301, 13304(a), (b), (c)]

RWQCBs are also authorized to impose requirements on proposed waste discharges. [See Water C. § 13263(a); Santa Clara Valley Water Dist. v. San Francisco Bay Regional Water Quality Control Bd. (2020) 59 CA5th 199, 209-211, 273 CR3d 333, 339-341—RWQCB had jurisdiction to impose mitigation requirements for water district's flood control project because it would require periodic removal of unnecessary sediment from creek, which is "discharge of waste"]

(4) [5:39] Persons liable: Enforcement actions are authorized against persons who have "caused or permitted" waste to be discharged into the state's waters, creating or threatening to create "a condition of pollution or nuisance." [Water C. § 13304(a); see Sweeney v. Calif. Regional Water Quality Control Bd. (2021) 61 CA5th 1093, 1122-1123, 275 CR3d 442, 466—evidence of "likely, potential, or threatened harm" to aquatic habitat and species supported cleanup and abatement order]

Section 13304(a) imposes liability on two independent classes of persons: (i) persons who "caused" a discharge, and (ii) persons who "permitted" a discharge. [See United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. v. Regional Water Quality Control Bd. (2019) 42 CA5th 851, 876-877, 255 CR3d 796, 816-817 (distinguishing Water C. § 13304(a)'s "independent" terms "caused" and "permitted"); and ¶ 5:39.1 ff.]

The Act does not impose liability on persons "whose involvement with a spill was remote and passive." [Redevelopment Agency of City of Stockton v. BNSF Ry. Co. (9th Cir. 2011) 643 F3d 668, 671, 677-678 (internal quotes omitted)—railroads not liable under § 13304(a) for water pollution caused by nearby industrial site, even though contaminants flowed through "french drain" installed by railroads to remove water from roadbed (railroads "did not cause or permit" contamination and their involvement was "entirely passive and unknowing"); discussed further at ¶ 5:153.1]

(a) [5:39.1] Persons who "caused" discharge: Consistent with the common law of nuisance (see ¶ 5:150 ff.), liability under Water C. § 13304(a) for causing a discharge extends not only to a person who maintains the nuisance, but also the person who creates or assists in creating it. [City of Modesto Redevelop. Agency v. Sup.Ct. (Dow Chem. Co.) (2004) 119 CA4th 28, 37-38, 43, 13 CR3d 865, 871-872, 875-876 ("Modesto I")—dry cleaning solvent and equipment manufacturers/distributors could be liable under § 13304(a) if they took affirmative steps toward improper waste discharge, but not by merely placing solvents into commerce stream without adequate warnings re improper disposal dangers; see also City of Modesto v. Dow Chem. Co. (2018) 19 CA5th 130, 159, 227 CR3d 764, 786 ("Modesto II")—proper causation analysis is whether it is more likely than not defendant's conduct was "substantial factor" in causing pollution]

(b) [5:39.2] Persons who "permitted" discharge: Even if a person did not "cause" a spill, they may be liable under Water C. § 13304(a) if they "permitted" a discharge. [See San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. v. San Diego Regional Water Quality Control Bd. (2019) 36 CA5th 427, 439-440, 248 CR3d 496, 505 (stressing "persons may be subject to a cleanup or abatement order if they have caused or permitted a discharge of waste," even if they are "not found to be a substantial factor or but for cause" of the discharge) (emphasis in original; internal quotes omitted)]

1) [5:39.3] Owner's liability for lessee's discharge; knowledge requirement: A property owner is liable under Water C. § 13304(a) if they "permit" a discharge by a lessee. The property owner, however, must have actual or constructive knowledge of the lessee's activities. This means the property owner can only be ordered to clean up a discharge caused by a lessee if the owner knew or should have known that the lessee's activity created a reasonable possibility of a discharge and the owner allowed the lessee's activity to take place. [United Artists Theatre Circuit, Inc. v. Regional Water Quality Control Bd. (2019) 42 CA5th 851, 864-865, 880-881, 887-888, 255 CR3d 796, 806-807, 820, 825-826—shopping center owner could be ordered to clean up PCE discharged by tenant who operated dry cleaning business because owner knew about tenant's activities]

(c) [5:39.4] Corporate parent's liability for subsidiary's discharge: A parent corporation may be liable for a subsidiary's toxic discharge if the corporate parent had control over the subsidiary's operations that resulted in pollution. [Atlantic Richfield Co. v. Central Valley Regional Water Quality Control Bd. (2019) 41 CA5th 91, 97, 100, 253 CR3d 888, 892, 895 (applying Supreme Court's standard for imposing liability on corporate parent set forth in United States v. Bestfoods (1998) 524 US 51, 118 S.Ct. 1876 (¶ 5:77 ff.))—"proper standard" for determining corporate parent's liability for waste discharged from subsidiary's abandoned mine is "eccentric control over any category of mining activity resulting in toxic discharge"]

(d) [5:39.5] Federal government's compliance: Under the Clean Water Act (¶ 5:21), federal agencies managing federal lands generally must comply with state water pollution laws and regulations, including state laws and regulations governing discharges from nonpoint sources (i.e., pollution sources that are not "point sources" under the Clean Water Act), such as the Porter-Cologne Act (¶ 5:36). [33 USC § 1323(a); Central Sierra Environmental Resource Ctr. v. Stanislaus Nat'l Forest (9th Cir. 2022) 30 F4th 929, 932, 938-940—Forest Service did not violate Porter-Cologne Act where state previously agreed to waive compliance with reporting and permitting requirements; see also 33 USC § 1362(14) (defining "point source" as "any discernable, confined and discrete conveyance … from which pollutants are or may be discharged")]

(e) [5:39.6] Discharges compliant with permits, waivers and prohibitions; relevance of RWQCBs' water quality objectives: Water quality objectives in a RWQCB's plan do not directly apply to individual dischargers, "but instead reflect standards that regulators must take into account in fashioning requirements that do apply to dischargers." RWQCBs have available three methods for imposing specific obligations on dischargers: (i) imposing "water discharge requirements" (or WDRs), which are functionally permits that authorize specific discharges under enumerated conditions; (ii) granting waivers, which must include conditions that restrict the discharges covered by the waivers; and (iii) setting particular prohibitions that specify conditions or areas where waste discharges are not permitted. [Central Sierra Environmental Resource Ctr. v. Stanislaus Nat'l Forest (9th Cir. 2022) 30 F4th 929, 940-942 (citing Water C. §§ 13243, 13263(a) and 13269) (emphasis in original)]

Dischargers that comply with applicable WDRs, waivers and prohibitions are not liable under the Porter-Cologne Act, even if their discharges cause pollution levels in local waterways to exceed an RWQCB's water quality objectives. [Central Sierra Environmental Resource Ctr. v. Stanislaus Nat'l Forest, supra, 30 F4th at 942-943—Forest Service did not violate Porter-Cologne Act by allowing livestock grazing in national forest, even though runoff from grazing allegedly caused bacteria levels in local streams to exceed relevant water quality objectives]

d. [5:40] Hazardous Substances Underground Storage Tank Act: This Act (Health & Saf.C. § 25280 et seq.) regulates underground storage tanks (USTs) and imposes requirements on owners and operators of the property on which they are located.

(1) [5:41] Reporting UST leaks: Unauthorized leaks from a UST must be reported—in most cases, within 24 hours of the leak. [Health & Saf.C. § 25295]

(2) [5:42] Other regulations: Property owners and operators are also subject to regulations regarding permitting of USTs, closure of USTs, soil clean-up, tank removal and repair, and maintenance of USTs, among other things. [See Health & Saf.C. § 25296 et seq.]

e. [5:43] Safe Drinking Water and Toxic Enforcement Act of 1986 (Proposition 65): Proposition 65 (Health & Saf.C. § 25249.5 et seq.) provides that persons in the course of business shall not knowingly "discharge or release" a chemical known to the state to cause cancer or reproductive toxicity "into water or onto or into land where such chemical passes or probably will pass into any source of drinking water …" [Health & Saf.C. § 25249.5]

Proposition 65 also prohibits persons in the course of business from knowingly or intentionally exposing any individual to any such carcinogenic chemical or reproductive toxin without giving the individual "clear and reasonable warning" in accordance with the Act. [Health & Saf.C. § 25249.6]

The chemicals requiring compliance under Proposition 65 are set forth in a list published by the Governor, which is periodically updated to include additional chemicals. [Health & Saf.C. § 25249.8]

(1) [5:43.1] "Discharge or release" defined: A prohibited "discharge or release" within the meaning of Health & Saf.C. § 25249.5 (¶ 5:43) refers to "a movement of chemicals from a confined space into the land or the water." It does not include the "passive migration" or "continued presence" of a toxic chemical in the land. [Consumer Advocacy Group, Inc. v. Exxon Mobil Corp. (2002) 104 CA4th 438, 441, 450, 128 CR2d 454, 456, 463]

(2) [5:43.2] Civil action for violation: A violation of Health & Saf.C. § 25249.5 is remediable by statutory civil penalties (up to $2,500 per day per violation). A civil action may be filed by any person in the "public interest," so long as state and local prosecuting agencies have been notified of the alleged violation and declined to pursue an enforcement action. [Health & Saf.C. § 25249.7(b)(1) & (d); Shamsian v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2003) 107 CA4th 967, 976, 132 CR2d 635, 642—CCP § 340(a) one-year statute of limitations applies, subject to federally-mandated CERCLA "discovery rule" (¶ 5:143.2)]

(3) [5:43.3] Constructive knowledge sufficient: A person may be liable for violating Proposition 65 (¶ 5:43 ff.) if they had constructive knowledge that a product contained a carcinogenic chemical or reproductive toxin. [Lee v. Amazon.com, Inc.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(2022) 76 CA5th 200, 240, 291 CR3d 332, 363—consumer not required to prove internet retailer had actual knowledge that products purchased from third-party seller on retailer's website contained mercury]

f. [5:44] Asbestos Notification Law: The Asbestos Notification Law (Health & Saf.C. § 25915 et seq.) sets forth a scheme for notifying employees, contractors and other persons providing services on a property of the presence of asbestos on that property.

(1) [5:45] Properties affected: The notification requirement applies to owners, lessees, sublessees and owners' agents with respect to all or any portion of a "public or commercial building" constructed prior to 1979. Residences, schools and apartment buildings with less than 10 units are excluded. [Health & Saf.C. §§ 25915, 25915.2]

(2) [5:46] Content of notice: The requisite notice must include, among other things, the location of asbestos in the building, procedures for minimizing release of and exposure to asbestos in the building, results of any asbestos survey of the building, and a description of potential health risks. [Health & Saf.C. § 25915(a) & (b)]

In addition, warning signs must be posted in any area of a building where construction, remodeling or maintenance may cause the release of or exposure to asbestos. [Health & Saf.C. § 25916]

[5:46.1 - 5:46.4] Reserved.

g. [5:46.5] Environmental Responsibility Acceptance Act: The Environmental Responsibility Acceptance Act (ERAA, Civ.C. § 850 et seq.) establishes an elaborate procedural scheme for the expeditious identification of PRPs and remediation of contaminated sites. The burden is on property owners aware of a hazardous materials release at their property to take steps to identify and notify likely PRPs. The notified PRPs then bear the burden of providing the site owner and oversight agency with a release report and "commitment statement" to take remedial action. Disputed matters are supposed to proceed to mediation before litigation may be commenced. [Civ.C. § 850 et seq.]

The ERAA is discussed in detail at ¶ 5:138 ff.

h. [5:46.6] Polanco Redevelopment Act: The Polanco Redevelopment Act (Health & Saf.C. § 33459 et seq.) authorizes a redevelopment agency to bring an action against "responsible parties" for the costs of cleaning up contamination on property within the agency's redevelopment project area. The elements of a Polanco cost-recovery action differ from those for a government CERCLA cost-recovery action (¶ 5:121.1); but the Polanco Act incorporates the liability standards applied in CERCLA cases (¶ 5:64 ff.). The Polanco Act does not limit a redevelopment agency's rights to those available under CERCLA. [Health & Saf.C. § 33459 et seq.; see also Redevelopment Agency of City of Stockton v. BNSF Ry. Co. (9th Cir. 2011) 643 F3d 668, 678—railroads not liable under Polanco Act's CERCLA provision for contaminants running through their drainage system because they were not "owners" or "operators" within meaning of CERCLA; City of Modesto Redevelop. Agency v. Sup.Ct. (Dow Chem. Co.) (2004) 119 CA4th 28, 36-43, 13 CR3d 865, 870-876 ("Modesto I") (interpreting and applying Act's provision for agency cost-recoupment from "responsible parties"); City of Modesto v. Dow Chem. Co. (2018) 19 CA5th 130, 151-160, 227 CR3d 764, 780-786 (clarifying Act's causation requirements in light of Modesto I); Redevelopment Agency of City of San Diego v. San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. (2003) 111 CA4th 912, 914, 4 CR3d 317, 319—agency also had standing under Act to bring action for order compelling responsible parties to remove or remedy contamination within project area]

i. [5:46.7] Gatto Act: The Gatto Act (Health & Saf.C. § 25403 et seq.) is the "policy successor" to the Polanco Act (¶ 5:46.6). It enables cities, counties and housing authorities to investigate and clean up hazardous materials in blighted areas within their boundaries. It is to be interpreted and implemented consistent with the Polanco Act and the case law construing it. [Health & Saf.C. § 25403.8]

(Although the Polanco Act technically is still in effect, redevelopment agencies were dissolved in 2012 (Health & Saf.C. § 34172; see also City of Modesto v. Dow Chem. Co. (2018) 19 CA5th 130, 142, 227 CR3d 764, 772).)

j. [5:47] Other State Acts: The statutes discussed at ¶ 5:25 ff. comprise the heart of California's complex regulatory scheme governing hazardous substances. However, there are several other California hazardous materials statutes, which should be reviewed for applicability to each particular transaction. These include:

• California's Business Plan Requirements (Health & Saf.C. § 25500 et seq.);

• The Elder California Pipeline Safety Act of 1981 (Gov.C. § 51010 et seq.);

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

• California Hazardous Substances Act (Health & Saf.C. § 108100 et seq.);

• California Methamphetamine Contamination Property Cleanup Act of 2005 (Health & Saf.C. § 25400.10 et seq.);

• Air Toxic “Hot Spots” Information and Assessment Act of 1987 (Health & Saf.C. § 44300 et seq.).

[5:48 - 5:55] Reserved.

3. [5:56] Local Laws: The release and remediation of hazardous substances is also regulated at the local (city/county) level.

a. [5:56.1] Preemption issues: Generally, CERCLA and the California Superfund permit local governments to enact hazardous waste ordinances and pursue remedies in addition to those provided by CERCLA and the California Superfund, so long as those remedies do not conflict or interfere with the purposes and objectives of CERCLA or the California Superfund. [Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. City of Lodi, Calif. (9th Cir. 2002) 302 F3d 928, 943]

Any local ordinance provisions that prohibit conduct expressly authorized by, or that stand as “an obstacle to the accomplishment and execution” of the full purposes of, CERCLA or the California Superfund are preempted. [Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. City of Lodi, Calif., supra, 302 F3d at 956-957—portions of municipal ordinance authorizing City to investigate and remediate existing or threatened hazardous waste within its borders preempted by CERCLA and California Superfund]

(1) [5:57] Preemption where contaminated property listed as California Superfund remediation site: When the California Department of Toxic Substances Control (DTSC) has listed contaminated property as a site subject to remedial clean-up under the California Superfund, the sole authority for administering actual remediation of the property is vested with the DTSC. Thus, remediation of a designated California Superfund site may not be subject to local regulation without the DTSC's approval and supervision. [City of Lodi v. Randtron (2004) 118 CA4th 337, 349-350, 13 CR3d 107, 114—where City was designated as California Superfund site, remediation order issued by City pursuant to ordinance authorizing City's investigation and remediation of its contaminated soil and groundwater was preempted by California Superfund]
