1. Persons and Entities Subject to Liability

a. [5:60] Categories of "PRPs": CERCLA and the California Superfund designate four categories of individuals and entities as "potentially responsible parties" (PRPs). PRPs include:

- current owners and operators of the contaminated property (see California Dept. of Toxic Substances Control v. Hearthside Residential Corp. (9th Cir. 2010) 613 F3d 910, 911 (interpreting "owner and operator" to mean "current" owner/operator at time clean-up costs are incurred for purposes of CERCLA liability; and¶ 5:82.16));

- property owners and operators at the time the hazardous materials were disposed of on the property;

- individuals and entities who arranged with a third party for the disposal, treatment or transportation of their hazardous materials at or to a facility owned by a third party, and which facility contains those hazardous materials (see California Dept. of Toxic Substances Control v. Alco Pac., Inc. (9th Cir. 2007) 508 F3d 930, 934—so-called "arranger liability"; and¶ 5:83); and

- individuals and entities who accepted hazardous materials for transport to disposal or treatment facilities, incineration plants or other sites of their choosing from which there is a release or threatened release of hazardous materials. [42 USC § 9607(a)(1)-(4); Health & Saf.C. § 78145 (recodified & added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257, oper. 1/1/24); Burlington Northern & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. United States (2009) 556 US 599, 608-609, 129 S.Ct. 1870, 1878; Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp. (9th Cir. 2001) 270 F3d 863, 874-875 (en banc)]

  In effect, CERCLA's broad reach "extends liability all the way down the causal chain," from those who generate waste through those who maintain it and those who dispose of it. [OHM Remediation Services v. Evans Cooperage Co., Inc.

(5th Cir. 1997) 116 F3d 1574, 1578; see also Pneumo Abex Corp. v. High Point, Thomasville & Denton R.R. Co. (4th Cir. 1998) 142 F3d 769, 774]

(1) [5:60a] Actual liability not the touchstone: Actual liability under CERCLA is not the touchstone for PRP status. Even before any determination of actual liability, a party who ostensibly fits into one of the categories referenced at ¶ 5:60 may be “potentially liable” simply by being sued under the Act. [See Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp. (9th Cir. 2001) 270 F3d 863, 874; United States v. Hercules, Inc. (8th Cir. 2001) 247 F3d 706, 716 (same)]

“The courts may eventually clear a CERCLA defendant or third-party defendant from liability; but until it does, such a defendant is at least potentially liable.” [OHM Remediation Services v. Evans Cooperage Co., Inc. (5th Cir. 1997) 116 F3d 1574, 1582; see also Pneumo Abex Corp. v. High Point, Thomasville & Denton R.R. Co. (4th Cir. 1998) 142 F3d 769, 773, fn. 2—courts have understood “potentially responsible party” to “refer to a party who may be covered by the statute at the time that said party is sued under the statute”]

(2) [5:60b] Contractual PRP status: Nothing in CERCLA precludes an otherwise “innocent” party from becoming a PRP by contract. [See Karras v. Teledyne Indus., Inc. (SD CA 2002) 191 F.Supp.2d 1162, 1169—where PRPs ordered to reimburse government for response costs set up trusts to perform work pursuant to order by written agreement, trusts contractually agreed to be liable for clean-up and thereby became PRPs eligible to pursue CERCLA contribution action]

(3) [5:60.1] Federal government not immune: CERCLA expressly waives federal government sovereign immunity, making each “department, agency, and instrumentality of the United States” subject to CERCLA liability “in the same manner and to the same extent … as any nongovernmental entity …” [42 USC § 9620(a)(1); see also United States v. Shell Oil Co. (9th Cir. 2002) 294 F3d 1045, 1053—CERCLA's sovereign immunity waiver is coextensive with scope of liability imposed by CERCLA (i.e., if CERCLA “provides for liability, then § 9620(a)(1) waives sovereign immunity to that liability”); Nu-West Mining, Inc. v. United States (D ID 2011) 768 F.Supp.2d 1082, 1087 (same)]

Consequently, the federal government and its agencies are subject to PRP liability as an “owner” or “operator” of a facility where hazardous substances are disposed of or released; the federal government is afforded no immunity or defense that is not shared by private parties. [See Pennsylvania v. Union Gas Co. (1989) 491 US 1, 10, 109 S.Ct. 2273, 2279 (overruled on other grounds by Seminole Tribe of Florida v. Florida (1996) 517 US 44, 66, 116 S.Ct. 1114, 1128); United States v. Shell Oil Co. (9th Cir. 2002) 294 F3d 1045, 1053—CERCLA's waiver of sovereign immunity coextensive with scope of liability imposed by 42 USC § 9607; East Bay Mun. Util. Dist. v. United States Dept. of Commerce (DC Cir. 1998) 142 F3d 479, 482-484—CERCLA's waiver of sovereign immunity extends to any instance in which government owned or operated a facility, regardless of whether it acted in a regulatory or proprietary capacity]

(4) [5:60.2] State and local governments not immune: CERCLA also abrogates state and local government immunity in terms virtually identical to its waiver of federal government immunity. [See 42 USC § 9601(20)(D)—state/local government exclusion from CERCLA “owner”/“operator” liability “shall not apply to any State or local government which has caused or contributed to the release or threatened release of a hazardous substance from the facility, and such a State or local government shall be subject to the provisions of this chapter in the same manner and to the same extent … as any nongovernmental entity”; East Bay Mun. Util. Dist. v. United States Dept. of Commerce (DC Cir. 1998) 142 F3d 479, 480—municipal utility district responsible as “owner” for costs of cleaning up hazardous waste from abandoned mine site it acquired in developing reservoir system]

(a) [5:60.3] Compare—emergency responder defense: State and local governments are shielded from CERCLA liability when hazardous substances are released during fire-fighting and other emergency undertakings (unless damages are the result of gross negligence or intentional misconduct). [42 USC § 9607(d)(2); see AMW Materials Testing, Inc. v. Babylon, N.Y. (2nd Cir. 2009) 584 F3d 436, 442-448 (rejecting contention that defense applies only in contribution context)—town and fire department did not have sufficient “control” over facility containing stored hazardous materials at time of fire to be deemed “operators” for liability purposes]

b. [5:61] Liability of property owners and operators: The discussion at ¶ 5:62 ff. focuses primarily on the liability of current and former owners and operators of a contaminated property. A detailed treatment of the laws affecting the other two categories of PRPs (¶ 5:60) is beyond the scope of this Practice Guide.

The California Superfund adopts by reference the provisions of CERCLA regarding “responsible parties” and liable persons. [Health & Saf.C. § 78145(a)(1) (recodified & added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257, oper. 1/1/24); see also Orange County Water Dist. v. Alcoa Global Fasteners, Inc. (2017) 12 CA5th 252, 297, 219 CR3d 474, 514 (decided under predecessor statute)] Therefore, the discussion of CERCLA liability at ¶ 5:62 ff. applies equally to liability under the California Superfund.

Although the first two categories of PRPs refer to the "owner and operator" (¶ 5:60) of a "facility" (¶ 5:5.4 ff.), those terms are not redundant. In some circumstances, the operator may not be the owner, or a "facility" may have more than one operator. [See Geraghty & Miller, Inc. v. Conoco, Inc. (5th Cir. 2000) 234 F3d 917, 928 (abrogated on other grounds as recognized by Vine Street LLC v. Borg Warner Corp. (5th Cir. 2015) 776 F3d 312, 317)]

(1) General parameters

(a) [5:62] "Owner" liability; permit/easement/license holders distinguished: Any person who owns (or owned at the time of disposal) a "facility" (42 USC § 9601(9); ¶ 5:5.4) is an "owner" under CERCLA, unless the person can meet each of the contiguous property owner exemption requirements (42 USC § 9607(q); ¶ 5:85 ff.). [42 USC § 9607(a)(1), (2)]

Though CERCLA does not define "owner" for PRP purposes, the term clearly includes those who own (or owned) a fee interest in the contaminated site (¶ 5:62a). On the other hand, looking to the common law, courts have concluded that mere holders of possessory interests in the contaminated land, such as permittees, easement holders or licensees, are not "owners" subject to CERCLA liability. [See City of Los Angeles v. San Pedro Boat Works (9th Cir. 2011) 635 F3d 440, 444 (revocable permit holder); Long Beach Unified School Dist. v. Dorothy B. Godwin Calif. Living Trust (9th Cir. 1994) 32 F3d 1364, 1368-1369 (easement holder); see also Redevelopment Agency of City of Stockton v. BNSF Ry. Co. (9th Cir. 2011) 643 F3d 668, 679—having an easement or license does not make one an "owner" for purposes of CERCLA liability]

1) [5:62a] Regardless of fault: A person can be an "owner" for PRP purposes even if they are not responsible for the underlying release of a hazardous substance and cannot be compelled to pay for any part of the cleanup—e.g., they are protected by the "innocent landowner" defense (42 USC § 9607(b)(3); ¶ 5:110 ff.), the statute of limitations has expired (¶ 5:121.13 ff.), or the person is entitled to some other affirmative defense (¶ 5:100 ff.) or exemption from liability (¶ 5:84 ff.). Indeed, a person is a PRP if they own (or owned at the time of disposal) a site or area where hazardous substances have "come to be located" and the site or area is not a "contiguous property" (42 USC § 9607(q); ¶ 5:85 ff.). [Atlantic Richfield Co. v. Christian (2020) 590 US _, _, 140 S.Ct. 1335, 1347, 1352-1353, 1356—landowners deemed PRPs and not contiguous property owners where pollutants from former smelter facility came "to be located" on their properties and they "had reason to know their property could be contaminated" (¶ 5:7, 5:85.1); see also United States v. Atlantic Research Corp. (2007) 551 US 128, 136, 127 S.Ct. 2331, 2336—"[E]ven parties not responsible for contamination may fall within the broad definitions of PRPs in [42 USC § 9607(a)]"]

2) [5:62.1] Lessee as "owner": Persons who have only a leasehold (possessory) interest in property are, of course, not regarded as owners under general property law. Nonetheless, in certain circumstances, courts have extended CERCLA "owner" liability to lessees. [Commander Oil Corp. v. Barlo Equip. Corp. (2nd Cir. 2000) 215 F3d 321, 326, 329]

a) [5:62.2] De facto ownership determinative; relevant factors: The lessee's right of control over the site is not itself the equivalent of "ownership" for CERCLA purposes. Rather, a lessee can be subject to CERCLA liability as an "owner" only if its rights under the lease bear sufficient indicia of ownership as to be tantamount to the rights of an owner; i.e., the inquiry is whether the lessee is, in effect, a de facto owner. [Commander Oil Corp. v. Barlo Equip. Corp. (2nd Cir. 2000) 215 F3d 321, 331]

Factors that may be sufficient to transform a lessee into an "owner" under CERCLA include:

• an extensive lease term, with no reservation of rights in the owner (lessor) to determine how the property is used;

• the owner's inability to terminate the lease before it expires by its terms;

• the lessee's right to sublet all or part of the property without notice to the owner and without the owner's consent;

• the lessee's obligation to pay all taxes, assessments, insurance and operating and maintenance costs; and

• the lessee's responsibility for making all repairs to the property. [Commander Oil Corp. v. Barlo Equip. Corp., supra, 215 F3d at 330-331—lessee did not bear sufficient "indicia of ownership" (e.g., lessee required to obtain written consent from record owner to sublet or alter property)]

b) [5:62.3] Compare—"operator" liability: A lessee's right of control over the contaminated site can give rise to CERCLA operator liability (¶ 5:62.5 ff.). [See Commander Oil Corp. v. Barlo Equip. Corp. (2nd Cir. 2000) 215 F3d 321, 328 (distinguishing "operator" from "owner" liability)]

[5:62.4] Reserved.

(b) [5:62.5] "Operator" liability: A nonowner party may still be a PRP under either of the first two CERCLA categories if it is or was an "operator" of the hazardous waste facility. [See 42 USC § 9607(a)(1), (2); Long Beach Unified School Dist. v. Dorothy B. Godwin Calif. Living Trust (9th Cir. 1994) 32 F3d 1364, 1367—easement holder may be "operator" subject to CERCLA liability if it uses its easement to operate a facility that releases hazardous materials]

"Under the plain language of the statute, any person who operates a polluting facility is directly liable for the costs of cleaning up the pollution … This is so regardless of whether that person is the facility's owner, the owner's parent corporation or business partner, or even a saboteur who sneaks into the facility at night to discharge its poisons out of malice." [United States v. Bestfoods (1998) 524 US 51, 65, 118 S.Ct. 1876, 1886 (addressing parent corporation's direct "operator" liability for subsidiary's pollution; ¶ 5:77 ff.)]

1) [5:62.6] Actual control over contaminated facility required: An "operator" for CERCLA purposes is one who "directs the workings of, manages, or conducts the affairs of a [contaminating] facility." It is not enough that the alleged PRP have the authority to control the facility. An "operator" under CERCLA "must manage, direct, or conduct operations specifically related to pollution, that is, operations having to do with the leakage or disposal of hazardous waste, or decisions about compliance with environmental regulations." [United States v. Bestfoods (1998) 524 US 51, 66-67, 118 S.Ct. 1876, 1887 (emphasis added)—PRP "operator" must participate in contaminated facility's polluting activities; Geraghty & Miller, Inc. v. Conoco, Inc. (5th Cir. 2000) 234 F3d 917, 928 (abrogated on other grounds as recognized by Vine Street LLC v. Borg Warner Corp. (5th Cir. 2015) 776 F3d 312, 317)—material issue of fact whether contractor employed to investigate and assist in constructing remediation facility was "operator"; see also Nu-West Mining, Inc. v. United States (D ID 2011) 768 F.Supp.2d 1082, 1089-1091—federal government was subject to "operator" liability as "a matter of law" due to its active involvement in design and location of contaminated mining site waste dumps and its direct responsibility for ensuring same complied with mining plans and environmental rules]

Pursuant to this standard, a CERCLA "operator" must, in effect, be actively involved in running the facility where the pollution occurs, typically on a day-to-day managerial basis—for example, negotiating contracts for dumping waste at the facility, or directing where the wastes are to be dumped. [See American Cyanamid Co. v. Capuano (1st Cir. 2004) 381 F3d 6, 22-23; Browning-Ferris Indus. of Ill., Inc. v. Ter Maat (7th Cir. 1999) 195 F3d 953, 957; Long Beach Unified School Dist. v. Dorothy B. Godwin Calif. Living Trust (9th Cir. 1994) 32 F3d 1364, 1367]

Merely standing by and failing to prevent contamination is not enough to confer CERCLA "operator" status. [See Long Beach Unified School Dist. v. Dorothy B. Godwin Calif. Living Trust, supra, 32 F3d at 1368; Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp. (CD CA 2003) 287 F.Supp.2d 1118, 1194, aff'd (9th Cir. 2006) 433 F3d 1260]

2) [5:62.7] Federal government's operator liability: In many cases, the federal government's legal and regulatory authority can directly affect an entire industry or a specific facility's operations. [See, e.g., United States v. Central Eureka Mining Co. (1958) 357 US 155, 157-161, 78 S.Ct. 1097, 1098-1101 & fn. 4—federal government ordered gold mines closed during World War II for purpose of reallocating resources to boost copper mining production]

The federal government's general control over an industry or facility, however, is not enough to make the federal government an "operator" under CERCLA. Under the Bestfoods standard (¶ 5:62.5 ff.), the federal government must "manage, direct, or conduct operations" specifically related to pollution at the facility to be subject to CERCLA liability as an "operator." [United States v. Sterling Centrecorp Inc. (9th Cir. 2020) 977 F3d 750, 758-759—United States not liable as prior "operator" for exercising "general regulatory authority over the mining industry during World War II" and ordering gold mine that became Superfund Site to shut down its mining operations]

(2) [5:63] Intervening owners/operators as PRPs: CERCLA originally designated as PRPs those who are current owners and operators of a contaminated property, as well as those who owned and/or operated the property at the time the contamination occurred. [42 USC § 9607(a)] This, of course, left immune from liability former owners and operators of a contaminated property who did not own or operate the property at the time of the hazardous substance release (i.e., those who either transferred their interest in the property or ceased to operate the property before any action was taken or liability imposed with respect to the contamination).

Amendments in 1986 closed this gap by adding intervening landowners to the categories of PRPs: An intervening landowner is a PRP if it (a) took title to the property after the release of hazardous materials thereon; (b) has not contributed to the contaminated condition of the property; (c) has actual knowledge of the presence of hazardous materials on the property; and (d) fails to disclose the environmental condition of the property to the subsequent buyer of the property. [42 USC § 9601(35)(C)]

(a) [5:63.1] "Disposal" requirement: Intervening landowners or operators can be liable as PRPs only if there was a "disposal" of hazardous waste on the property during the period when they held or operated the property. [42 USC § 9607(a)(2); see Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp. (9th Cir. 2001) 270 F3d 863, 875 (en banc); and¶ 5:60]

Therefore, what constitutes a "disposal" is crucial to establishing liability of intervening owners or operators.

1) [5:63.1a] Statutory definition: For purposes of 42 USC § 9607(a), CERCLA defines "disposal" as the "discharge, deposit, injection, dumping, spilling, leaking, or placing" of hazardous material into or on land or water so that the hazardous material may enter the environment or be emitted into the air or discharged into any waters. [42 USC § 9601(29) (incorporating RCRA definition of "disposal," 42 USC § 6903(3)); see Otay Land Co., LLC v. U.E. Ltd., L.P. (2017) 15 CA5th 806, 834-836, 225 CR3d 119, 142-143—spent lead and target debris at shooting range constituted solid waste disposal when left to accumulate; Orange County Water Dist. v. Sabic Innovative Plastics US, LLC (2017) 14 CA5th 343, 373, 381, 386-387, 222 CR3d 83, 110, 117, 121-122 (finding evidence of "release" not required)—hazardous substance need not actually reach environment for "disposal" to occur; Voggenthaler v. Maryland Square LLC (9th Cir. 2013) 724 F3d 1050, 1064 (finding disposal need not be directly into groundwater or on land)—dry cleaning facility liable for spilling toxic chemical onto its floor that subsequently entered environment over several decades; compare Sycamore Industrial Park Assocs. v. Ericsson, Inc. (7th Cir. 2008) 546 F3d 847, 850-853—cleanup of hazardous substance (asbestos) contained entirely inside building does not support CERCLA cost-recovery action; 3550 Stevens Creek Assocs. v. Barclays Bank of Calif. (9th Cir. 1990) 915 F2d 1355, 1361—asbestos built into structure cannot enter environment or be emitted into air and therefore is not actionable under CERCLA]

2) [5:63.2] Passive migration of hazardous waste? The circuits have taken a variety of approaches to the question whether a "disposal" (as defined in ¶ 5:63.1a) includes passive migration of hazardous materials, depending in large part on the factual circumstances of the case. [See Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp. (9th Cir. 2001) 270 F3d 863, 875-877 (collecting cases)]

The Ninth Circuit decides the issue by examining the statutory terms (discharge, deposit, injection, dumping, etc.) in relation to the facts of the case and then determining "whether the movement of contaminants is, under the plain meaning of the terms, a 'disposal.'" [Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp., supra, 270 F3d at 879 (emphasis added)—under facts of case, gradual passive migration of contamination through soil not a "disposal"; see also Pakootas v. Teck Cominco Metals, Ltd. (9th Cir. 2016) 830 F3d 975, 977, 983-985 (finding Carson Harbor's en banc decision controlling)—"aerial deposition" of hazardous substances through smelter's smokestacks not a "disposal"]

a) [5:63.3] Affirmative human conduct not essential: Most of the statutory terms (discharge, deposit, dumping, etc.) connote active conduct. But Carson, supra, observes that, in some circumstances, there may be a "disposal" without affirmative human conduct (e.g., leaking abandoned storage tanks). [See Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp. (9th Cir. 2001) 270 F3d 863, 880-881—"'leaking' and 'spilling' may not require affirmative human conduct" (citation omitted)]

b) [5:63.4] Compare—passive migration as "release": Whether or not it constitutes a "disposal," passive migration of hazardous substances can amount to a CERCLA "release"; see¶ 5:5.3a.

(3) [5:64] No-fault liability: Courts construe CERCLA as imposing strict liability (¶ 5:9), subject only to very limited defenses (¶ 5:100 ff.). Thus, PRPs who are either current owners or operators, or intervening or former owners or operators, can potentially be held liable for the presence of hazardous materials on the property even though they had no involvement in creating the contaminated condition. [Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp. (9th Cir. 2001) 270 F3d 863, 870 (en banc); Long Beach Unified School Dist. v. Dorothy B. Godwin Calif. Living Trust (9th Cir. 1994) 32 F3d 1364, 1366—"CERCLA liability has been described as 'a black hole that indiscriminately devours all who come near it'"; Orange County Water Dist. v. Sabic Innovative Plastics US, LLC (2017) 14 CA5th 343, 376-377, 222 CR3d 83, 113-114—current operator strictly liable for response costs even if hazardous substance release predated commencement of operator's lease]

(a) [5:65] Buyers' exposure: Once in the chain of title, buyers of real property can be held liable even if they did not have any interest in the property at the time it became contaminated and, except in extremely rare cases (see¶ 5:110 ff.), even if they did not know of the presence of hazardous materials on the property at the time they took title. [United States v. Monsanto Co. (4th Cir. 1988) 858 F2d 160, 168]

Indeed, in a subsequent contribution action to recover cleanup costs (¶ 5:125.3 ff.), a "no-fault" current owner may be allocated a share of liability. This will prevent the owner from receiving a "windfall" if they purchased contaminated property at below-market value and then restored its value by compelling the former owner or operator to pay the full cleanup cost. [See Valbruna Slater Steel Corp. v. Joslyn Mfg. Co. (7th Cir. 2019) 934 F3d 553, 567—current owner who "clearly understood" site's serious pollution problems before purchasing steel mill property, and who "paid far less than the asking price," was liable for 25% of cleanup costs in contribution action against former steel mill's owner/operator]

(b) Sellers' exposure

1) [5:66] Sellers who generated contamination or owned property at time of hazardous substance occurrence: Sellers of contaminated property who owned the property at the time the hazardous substance disposal occurred (whether or not they caused the disposal), or who were generators of the hazardous materials, remain PRPs under CERCLA and the California Superfund notwithstanding a completed sale and regardless of how much time has passed since they owned the property. [42 USC § 9607(a)(2), (3) & (4)]

2) [5:67] Intervening sellers: Sellers of contaminated property who neither owned the property at the time the contamination occurred nor generated any of the hazardous substances affecting the property will escape liability under CERCLA only if they:

• Did not have actual knowledge of the presence of hazardous substances on the property at the time they sold the property; or

• Had actual knowledge of the presence of hazardous substances on the property at the time of the sale and disclosed same to the buyer pursuant to CERCLA requirements. [42 USC § 9601(35)(C)]

Sellers who have actual knowledge of the contaminated state of their property and fail to disclose same to the buyer before conveying title remain PRPs under CERCLA and lose the right to assert any defenses they may have to CERCLA liability. [42 USC § 9601(35)(C)]

3) [5:68] Nondisclosure State Superfund liability: In addition, the California Superfund imposes an affirmative obligation on owners of nonresidential real property to disclose to prospective buyers, lessees or renters the presence of any hazardous substance that the owner knows or has reason to believe has been released on or under the property. Failure to make such a disclosure subjects owners to liability for the buyer's, lessee's or renter's actual damages arising therefrom. [Health & Saf.C. § 78700 (recodified & added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257, oper. 1/1/24)]

Further, if the owner has knowingly and intentionally failed to disclose to the buyer, lessee or renter a material environmental hazard of which the owner had actual knowledge, the owner may also be subject to civil penalties of up to $5,000 for each occurrence. [Health & Saf.C. § 78700 (recodified & added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257, oper. 1/1/24)]

(4) [5:69] Liability retroactive and open-ended: CERCLA liability is retroactive and open-ended:

(a) [5:70] Pre-CERCLA contamination: A PRP is subject to CERCLA liability even if the contamination occurred before CERCLA was enacted, and even if the contamination was lawful at the time it occurred. [United States v. Olin Corp. (11th Cir. 1997) 107 F3d 1506, 1513-1515; United States v. Dickerson (D MD 1986) 640 F.Supp. 448, 451]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

A PRP also can be held liable under CERCLA even if its entire relationship to the property (purchase, ownership and sale) occurred before CERCLA was enacted. [United States v. Northeastern Pharmaceutical & Chem. Co., Inc. (8th Cir. 1986) 810 F2d 726, 732-734]

This principle would seem also to apply to intervening landowners. The intervening landowner will be a PRP if it knew of the contamination on its property and failed to disclose that fact to the buyer, even if the sale took place before CERCLA became law. [See United States v. Northeastern Pharmaceutical & Chem. Co., Inc., supra, 810 F2d at 732-734 (concerning preenactment conduct generally); 42 USC § 9601(35)(C)]

(b) [5:71] Future contamination: Similarly, liability under CERCLA can be open-ended. PRPs with respect to a property remain PRPs as to any future discovery of hazardous substances on that property, whenever occurring. [42 USC § 9601(35)(C)]

(5) [5:72] Joint and several vs. several liability: Although CERCLA imposes a strict liability standard on PRPs, it does not mandate joint and several liability in every case. Rather, Congress intended the scope of liability to be determined on the basis of "traditional and evolving principles" of common law. As such, § 433A of the Restatement (Second) of Torts is the "universal starting point" in determining joint and several liability issues under CERCLA. [Burlington Northern & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. United States (2009) 556 US 599, 613-614, 129 S.Ct. 1870, 1880-1881]

(a) [5:72.1] Joint and several liability for indivisible harm: Thus, where the harm is indivisible, CERCLA liability is joint and several, and any single PRP can be held liable for the entire amount of the response costs regardless of the degree to which that PRP participated in contaminating the property. [See Burlington Northern & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. United States (2009) 556 US 599, 614, 129 S.Ct. 1870, 1881 (citing Rest.2d Torts § 433A, comm. i)—courts refuse to make arbitrary apportionment when two or more causes produce single, indivisible harm; United States v. Monsanto Co. (4th Cir. 1988) 858 F2d 160, 171-172; Pakootas v. Teck Cominco Metals, Ltd. (9th Cir. 2018) 905 F3d 565, 588—CERCLA liability ordinarily joint and several except in rare cases where environmental harm to site "is shown to be divisible"]

(b) [5:73] Several liability (apportionment of liability) for distinct harms: On the other hand, in accordance with § 433A of the Restatement, apportionment of liability is appropriate under CERCLA where there are "distinct harms" (¶ 5:73.1) for which there is a reasonable basis to determine the harm caused by each PRP (¶ 5:74). [Burlington Northern & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. United States, supra; see also PCS Nitrogen Inc. v. Ashley II of Charleston LLC (4th Cir. 2013) 714 F3d 161, 181]

1) [5:73.1] "Distinct harms" defined: "Distinct harms" are separate injuries. Defendants may be able to demonstrate that harms are "distinct" based on geographical factors, such as where a site consists of noncontiguous areas of contamination, or separate and distinct subterranean "plumes" of groundwater contamination. [See United States v. Hercules, Inc. (8th Cir. 2001) 247 F3d 706, 717-718]

2) [5:74] Reasonable basis for determining divisibility of "single harm": Apportionment of CERCLA liability is also appropriate when there is a reasonable basis for determining that each defendant caused a separate amount of harm, limited in time, and no single defendant has any responsibility for the harm caused by the other(s); e.g., two defendants, independently operating the same plant, pollute a stream over successive periods of time, or discharge waste into the stream in readily identifiable quantities. [Matter of Bell Petroleum Services, Inc. (5th Cir. 1993) 3 F3d 889, 895, 903; see United States v. P.H. Glatfelter Co. (7th Cir. 2014) 768 F3d 662, 678—remand required where contamination theoretically capable of apportionment; United States v. Hercules, Inc. (8th Cir. 2001) 247 F3d 706, 718—divisibility even possible where wastes have become cross-contaminated or commingled]

a) [5:74.1] Burden and standard of proof: A defendant PRP seeking to avoid joint and several liability bears the burden of proving that a reasonable basis for apportionment exists. [Burlington Northern & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. United States (2009) 556 US 599, 614, 129 S.Ct. 1870, 1881; see Matter of Bell Petroleum Services, Inc. (5th Cir. 1993) 3 F3d 889, 895, 901-902—court erred in ordering joint and several liability where PRP met burden of proving reasonable basis for apportionment; compare PCS Nitrogen Inc. v. Ashley II of Charleston LLC (4th Cir. 2013) 714 F3d 161, 182-183—although harm at site was "theoretically divisible," PRP's methodologies failed to provide evidence necessary to establish reasonable basis for apportionment]

The normal preponderance of the evidence standard of proof applies. [See Pakootas v. Teck Cominco Metals, Ltd. (9th Cir. 2018) 905 F3d 565, 589 (noting "[t]his burden is substantial because the divisibility analysis is intensely factual" (internal quotations omitted)); Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. City of Lodi, Calif. (9th Cir. 2002) 302 F3d 928, 947—municipality cannot enact ordinance imposing higher clear and convincing evidence burden of proof on defendant PRP seeking to apportion liability]

b) [5:74.2] Evidence required? There is a split of authority on the nature of proof required to support a finding that a reasonable basis for apportionment exists:

Some courts require concrete and specific evidence in support of any proposed apportionment. [See United States v. Hercules, Inc. (8th Cir. 2001) 247 F3d 706, 718; Chem-Nuclear Systems, Inc. v. Bush (2002) 292 F3d 254, 260—relying on chain of possible inferences insufficient]

Other courts have permitted informal estimates or data to support apportionment. [See Matter of Bell Petroleum Services, Inc. (5th Cir. 1993) 3 F3d 889, 903-904; United States v. Hercules, Inc., supra, 247 F3d at 719]

c) [5:74.3] No zero-share apportionment: Current operators subject to CERCLA cost-recovery claims are by definition jointly and severally liable regardless of fault. Thus, even when current operators do not contribute any environmental contamination to a site and take steps to remediate the pollution, they are liable to some degree and cannot avoid joint and several liability through a zero-share apportionment: "The structure and purposes of CERCLA simply do not permit current owner or operator PRPs to use individual share apportionment to apportion themselves a zero-share harm … Such a rule would frustrate the several narrow statutory defenses and exemptions Congress created to address truly 'innocent' landowners." [PCS Nitrogen Inc. v. Ashley II of Charleston LLC (4th Cir. 2013) 714 F3d 161, 184-185; but see ¶ 5:125.3 ff. regarding PRP's ability to sue other responsible parties for contribution]

d) [5:74.4] Equitable factors *not considered: In keeping with the strict liability nature of CERCLA (¶ 5:9), equitable considerations (e.g., relative fault) "play no role" in the apportionment analysis. [Burlington Northern & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. United States (2009) 556 US 599, 615, 129 S.Ct. 1870, 1882, fn. 9—apportionment is proper only when evidence supports divisibility of damages jointly caused by PRPs; see also PCS Nitrogen Inc. v. Ashley II of Charleston LLC (4th Cir. 2013) 714 F3d 161, 182—equitable considerations play no role in apportionment analysis because availability of 42 USC § 9613(f) contribution action mitigates any resulting inequality (¶ 5:74.7); United States v. Hercules, Inc. (8th Cir. 2001) 247 F3d 706, 718—where causation unclear, courts should not "split the difference" in attempt to achieve equity]

1/ [5:74.5] Applicable in "exceptional cases"? Courts appear to be split on whether equity can enter into the CERCLA liability apportionment process in "exceptional cases" (as where a PRP is insolvent). [See United States v. Hercules, Inc. (8th Cir. 2001) 247 F3d 706, 718, fn. 10—rejecting suggestion that financial condition should "play a role" in divisibility analysis; compare Matter of Bell Petroleum Services, Inc. (5th Cir. 1993) 3 F3d 889, 896, 902, fn. 13—suggesting insolvency should be considered to avoid "unjust" result]

2/ [5:74.6] Compare—equity applicable at contribution phase: On the other hand, equitable factors are relevant at the contribution phase (¶ 5:134). [United States v. Hercules, Inc. (8th Cir. 2001) 247 F3d 706, 718]

e) [5:74.7] Effect of failure to prove basis for apportionment: A defendant PRP who is unable to demonstrate a reasonable basis for apportionment may be held liable to the government for the entire harm (¶ 5:72.1). However, this does not mean the PRP must ultimately shoulder a disproportionate amount of the response costs: The PRP may sue other responsible parties for contribution (¶ 5:125 ff.) and, in that action, may assert both legal and equitable (¶ 5:134) theories of cost allocation. [United States v. Monsanto Co. (4th Cir. 1988) 858 F2d 160, 173]

Joint and several liability may even be imposed in contribution cases (see ¶ 5:135.10).

(c) [5:75] Settlement with EPA: Under certain circumstances, a PRP may be able to achieve apportionment of liability by entering into a settlement with the Environmental Protection Agency. However, this settlement option is available only to PRPs whose participation in creating the hazardous condition was relatively minimal and who meet other CERCLA criteria. [See 42 USC § 9622(g); see also ¶ 5:198 re "prospective purchaser agreements"]

[5:76] Reserved.

(6) [5:77] Liability of corporate parents, officers, directors and shareholders: A corporate parent may be reached under CERCLA for its subsidiary's pollution on either a derivative liability theory or a direct operator liability theory. As discussed at ¶ 5:77.1 ff., however, a corporate parent is not exposed to CERCLA liability simply because the parent has authority over the subsidiary or shares a common board of directors or common officers. [United States v. Bestfoods (1998) 524 US 51, 68-70, 118 S.Ct. 1876, 1887-1889]

(a) [5:77.1] Derivative liability on veil-piercing theory: CERCLA did not displace the general principle of corporate law that a parent corporation is not liable for the acts of its subsidiaries; nor, however, did CERCLA rewrite the well-settled rule that the corporate veil may be pierced, rendering shareholders liable for the corporation's conduct when the corporate form would otherwise be misused to accomplish certain wrongful purposes (such as fraud) on the shareholders' behalf. [United States v. Bestfoods (1998) 524 US 51, 61-63, 118 S.Ct. 1876, 1884-1885]

It follows, therefore, that a subsidiary's owner or operator liability under CERCLA may be imputed to the parent corporation under traditional veil-piercing standards; i.e., if it is appropriate to pierce the corporate veil because of misuse of the corporate form, a parent corporation may incur derivative liability for its subsidiary's pollution under CERCLA. [United States v. Bestfoods, supra, 524 US at 62-64, 118 S.Ct. at 1885-1886]

1) [5:77.2] Whether subsidiary liable as CERCLA owner or operator: The indirect veil-piercing approach can subject a parent corporation to CERCLA liability either as an owner or operator. “If a subsidiary that operates, but does not own, a facility is so pervasively controlled by its parent for a sufficiently improper purpose to warrant veil piercing, the parent may be held derivatively liable for the subsidiary's acts as an operator.” [United States v. Bestfoods (1998) 524 US 51, 64, 118 S.Ct. 1876, 1886, fn. 10]

2) [5:77.3] Veil-piercing standard? There is disagreement whether, in considering the propriety of imposing CERCLA derivative liability, courts should borrow state veil-piercing (“alter ego”) law or apply a federal common law.

One line of authority maintains that, given the federal interest in uniform application of CERCLA, federal common law—not state formulations of the “alter ego” doctrine—must govern the circumstances under which corporate veil-piercing is warranted under CERCLA. [Lansford-Coaldale Joint Water Auth. v. Tonolli Corp. (3rd Cir. 1993) 4 F3d 1209, 1225; see also Joslyn Mfg. Co. v. T.L. James & Co., Inc. (5th Cir. 1990) 893 F2d 80, 83—“Veil piercing should be limited to situations in which the corporate entity is used as a sham to perpetrate a fraud or avoid personal liability” (emphasis omitted)]

The U.S. Supreme Court in Bestfoods, supra, noted but did not resolve the split of authority because the question was not presented in that case. [See United States v. Bestfoods (1998) 524 US 51, 63, 118 S.Ct. 1876, 1885, fn. 9]

Other courts, observing that CERCLA is silent on the issue, apply state veil-piercing law. [See Carter-Jones Lumber Co. v. Dixie Distributing Co. (6th Cir. 1999) 166 F3d 840, 847]

a) [5:77.4] Comment: For all practical purposes, the problem may not be worth debating. As one court noted, since “federal common law draws upon state law for guidance, … the choice between state and federal [veil-piercing] law may in many cases present questions of academic interest, but little practical significance.” [In re Acushnet River & New Bedford Harbor Proceedings Re Alleged PCB Pollution (D MA 1987) 675 F.Supp. 22, 33]

Cross-refer: For a comprehensive treatment of veil-piercing under the “alter ego doctrine,” see Friedman, Soza & Jann, Cal. Prac. Guide: Corporations (TRG), Ch. 2.

(b) [5:78] Direct “operator” liability based on active control of polluting facility: Although the contamination site is owned by the subsidiary, a parent corporation may incur direct CERCLA liability as an “operator” if it actively controlled and managed the polluting facility. “Nothing in [CERCLA] bars a parent corporation from direct liability for its own actions in operating a facility owned by its subsidiary.” [United States v. Bestfoods (1998) 524 US 51, 64, 118 S.Ct. 1876, 1886; see Schiavone v. Pearce (2nd Cir. 1996) 79 F3d 248, 254—subsidiary's direct “owner” liability is “entirely distinct from parent operator liability, proof of which looks to the independent actions of the parent corporation, evidenced through its control over the polluting site” (emphasis in original)]

1) [5:78.1] Corporate shield no bar: If any act of operating a subsidiary's facility is done on behalf of a parent corporation, the existence of the parent-subsidiary relationship under state corporate law is irrelevant. The parent is subject to direct CERCLA liability for its own acts regardless of the corporate shield or the legal structure of ownership. [United States v. Bestfoods (1998) 524 US 51, 65, 118 S.Ct. 1876, 1886; see Browning-Ferris Indus. of Ill., Inc. v. Ter Maat (7th Cir. 1999) 195 F3d 953, 955; Riverside Market Develop. Corp. v. International Bldg. Products, Inc. (5th Cir. 1991) 931 F2d 327, 330—persons cannot escape CERCLA liability by hiding behind corporate shield when, as operators, they actually participate in prohibited conduct]

2) [5:78.2] Focus on parent's direct interactions with subsidiary's facility: The nature of the relationship between parent and subsidiary—i.e., whether the parent operates the subsidiary's general business, whether the two share common directors or officers, etc.—goes to the question of derivative liability (¶ 5:77.1*); it is not dispositive of the parent's direct liability as a CERCLA "operator." [United States v. Bestfoods (1998) 524 US 51, 70-71, 118 S.Ct. 1876, 1889]

A parent faces direct "operator" liability only if it operates the polluting facility, evidenced by participation in the facility's activities. Mere authority to control the PRP subsidiary is not enough. [United States v. Bestfoods, supra, 524 US at 65-72, 118 S.Ct. at 1887-1889]

a) [5:78.3] Degree of participation: A parent's activities that involve the facility but which are simply consistent with its investor status (e.g., monitoring subsidiary's performance, supervising its finance and budget decisions, and articulating general policies and procedures) should not themselves give rise to direct liability. "The critical question is whether, in degree and detail, actions directed to the facility by an agent of the parent alone are eccentric under accepted norms of parental oversight of a subsidiary's facility." [United States v. Bestfoods (1998) 524 US 51, 71-72, 118 S.Ct. 1876, 1889]

The parent must "manage, direct, or conduct operations specifically related to pollution, that is, operations having to do with the leakage or disposal of hazardous waste, or decisions about compliance with environmental regulations." [United States v. Bestfoods, supra, 524 US at 66-67, 118 S.Ct. at 1887 (emphasis added); see United States v. Sterling Centrecorp Inc. (9th Cir. 2020) 977 F3d 750, 757-758—parent corporation's "pervasive control" over facility's environmental response operations was established by parent corporation's official directing compliance with cleanup and abatement order and subsidiary lacking "financial wherewithal to do so"]

A fortiori, the mere fact that the parent is the sole owner of the subsidiary is insufficient to confer direct "operator" status on the parent. [See Castaic Lake Water Agency v. Whittaker Corp. (CD CA 2003) 272 F.Supp.2d 1053, 1079]

b) [5:78.4] Derivative liability standard distinguished: By the same token, the parent's involvement in the subsidiary's polluting activities need not rise to the level of behavior that would warrant piercing the corporate veil. The parent might not have overstepped the bounds of corporate separateness sufficiently to warrant imputing CERCLA liability on an alter ego theory, yet may be involved enough in the facility's management that it should be held liable as an operator. [United States v. Bestfoods (1998) 524 US 51, 66, 118 S.Ct. 1876, 1886, fn. 12]

3) [5:78.10] Interaction through common directors/officers; government's burden: A corporation, of course, can only act through an agent (its directors, officers or other duly-authorized employees). And typically, parents and subsidiaries share common directors and/or officers. But on the question of the parent's direct operator liability, it cannot be assumed a common director or officer acted on the parent's behalf in managing the polluting facility. "[D]irectors and officers holding positions with a parent and its subsidiary can and do 'change hats' to represent the two corporations separately, despite their common ownership." [United States v. Bestfoods (1998) 524 US 51, 69-70, 118 S.Ct. 1876, 1888 (internal quotes and citation omitted)]

The burden is on the party (usually the government) asserting the parent's liability as an "operator" to show the common officers/directors were acting in their capacities as officers/directors of the parent, and not as officers/directors of the subsidiary, when they participated in polluting activities or decision-making at the subsidiary's facility. [See United States v. Bestfoods, supra, 524 US at 70, 118 S.Ct. at 1888 & fn. 13; United States v. Sterling Centrecorp Inc. (9th Cir. 2020) 977 F3d 750, 757-758—official tasked with directing environmental response operations wore parent corporation's "hat" (official used parent corporation's letterhead, received communications in his capacity as parent's official, rarely mentioned subsidiary, and sent compliance reports directly to parent; in short, official's actions benefitted parent corporation to subsidiary's detriment); and see ¶ 5:79]

(c) [5:78.15] Direct "operator" liability based on joint venture: Bestfoods, supra, expressly left room for a parent corporation to be liable directly as a CERCLA "operator" by way of its participation in the facility with its subsidiary as a joint venturer. However, liability will be imposed on that theory only where the existence of the parent-subsidiary joint venture is properly documented. [BP Amoco Chem. Co. v. Sun Oil Co. (D DE 2001) 166 F.Supp.2d 984, 994—no factual basis to conclude relationship between alleged joint venturers was anything other than that of shareholders to corporate subsidiary]

(d) [5:79] Application to officer, director and shareholder liability for corporate pollution: The U.S. Supreme Court in Bestfoods, supra, dealt exclusively with the liability of a corporate parent for its subsidiary's polluting activities. All indications, however, are that the Bestfoods analysis and principles apply as well to attempts to reach corporate directors, officers and shareholders for environmental contamination caused by the corporate entity. [See United States v. Bestfoods (1998) 524 US 51, 62, 118 S.Ct. 1876, 1885—"nothing in CERCLA purports to reject [the] bedrock principle" that the corporate form erects a shield against personal liability absent a basis for piercing the corporate veil]

Thus, as with parent and subsidiary, a director, officer or shareholder can be held responsible under CERCLA for the corporate entity's hazardous substance release or disposal only (i) on an indirect (derivative) liability theory where abuse of the corporate form (or fraud) warrants piercing the corporate veil (¶ 5:77.1 ff.); or (ii) a direct liability theory as an "operator" where the particular director, officer or shareholder actively participated in day-to-day management of the polluting facility (¶ 5:78 ff.). [See Browning-Ferris Indus. of Ill., Inc. v. Ter Maat (7th Cir. 1999) 195 F3d 953, 955-956; United States v. Meyer (WD MI 1999) 120 F.Supp.2d 635, 640—defendant owner was operator by directing construction, alteration and repair of sewer lines releasing waste]

Similarly, as with parent and subsidiary, on the question of direct operator liability, it cannot be assumed that an officer/director common to a shareholder and the corporation acted on the shareholder's behalf in managing the polluting facility. Rather, it must be shown that the common officer/director was acting as an officer/director of the shareholder, and not as an officer/director of the corporation, when the common officer/director participated in decisions regarding the facility's operations (¶ 5:78.10). [See Raytheon Constructors, Inc. v. Asarco Inc. (10th Cir. 2003) 368 F3d 1214, 1217-1219—successor of minority shareholder of mining corporation not liable as direct operator for environmental clean-up costs at mine site based on actions of shareholder's president who also served as president of corporation]

On the other hand, as with parent and subsidiary, a director, officer or shareholder cannot hide behind the corporate shield to escape direct liability as an operator of the polluting facility. [Browning-Ferris Indus. of Ill., Inc. v. Ter Maat, supra, 195 F3d at 955—corporate officer/principal shareholder directly liable as CERCLA "operator" of landfill site if he operated landfill personally on day-to-day basis, rather than merely directing corporation's business]

1) [5:79.1] Example: In an analogous state law case, a corporate president was held personally liable for civil fines arising from the corporation's violations of the California Hazardous Waste Control law (¶ 5:30). The result apparently turned on a direct liability theory, based on the fact the president was responsible for all of the corporation's operating decisions. [Liquid Chem. Corp. v. Department of Health Services (1991) 227 CA3d 1682, 1705-1706, 279 CR 103, 114-116—"we have little doubt that the state Legislature by enacting HWCA intended to impose liability on those individuals personally responsible for decisions relative to the management of hazardous waste"]

2) [5:79.2] Indemnity rights: Notwithstanding personal liability, the responsible individual (director, officer, shareholder or employee) may have indemnity rights against the PRP corporation under a properly-worded indemnification agreement (which may be rooted in the corporation's bylaws).

That CERCLA imposes personal liability on corporate personnel is not enough to void an otherwise enforceable indemnification agreement. A right of indemnification does not affect the director's/officer's/employee's liability with respect to the government but simply shifts the source of payment for the resulting damages. [United States v. Lowe (5th Cir. 1994) 29 F3d 1005, 1010; see also¶ 5:230 ff. re buyer-seller environmental indemnities]

[5:80] Reserved.

(e) [5:81] Compare—cost-shifting liability of successor corporations: Private parties who incur response costs are entitled to bring a cost recovery suit against PRPs for full indemnification (42 USC § 9607(a)); and PRPs who incur response costs are entitled (after having been sued or having settled with the government) to bring a private contribution action against other PRPs to recoup a portion of the liability (42 USC § 9613(f)(1)); see¶ 5:125 ff. Whether a successor corporation to a now-defunct PRP corporation can be reached in cost-recovery/contribution suits turns on the law of successor liability. See detailed discussion at¶ 5:126.5 ff.

Under the California Superfund, a PRP may apply for reimbursement from the state's "orphan fund" if part of the clean-up cost has been apportioned to a now-defunct corporation; see¶ 5:27.1.

(7) [5:82] Liability of limited partners: PRP issues similar to those in the corporate liability context also arise with regard to contaminated facilities owned and operated by a limited partnership. Like a corporation with regard to its shareholders, a limited partnership ordinarily erects a personal liability shield around its limited (as opposed to its general) partners except to the extent limited partners actively participate in control of the business. [See Corps.C. § 15903.03; and Friedman, Soza & Jann, Cal. Prac. Guide: Corporations (TRG), Ch. 2]

(a) [5:82.1] "Owner" liability: The scant authority regarding CERCLA's interaction with state partnership law comes down on both sides of the CERCLA "owner" liability issue:

• [5:82.2] One district court rejects state law as the benchmark for liability. Reasoning that both individuals and partnerships are statutorily defined "persons" under CERCLA, this court upholds a plaintiff's claim for imposing joint and several liability against the offending partnership's general and limited partners. [Soo Line R.R. Co. v. B.J. Carney & Co. (D MN 1992) 797 F.Supp. 1472, 1485-1486]

• [5:82.3] But an Eleventh Circuit decision disagrees with any notion in Soo Line, supra, that CERCLA imposes liability directly on a limited partner merely because the partnership is liable as an "owner." Observing that neither CERCLA nor its legislative history addresses limited partner liability, this court concludes that state law governs limited partners' CERCLA liability based on the partnership's ownership of the contaminated site. [Redwing Carriers, Inc. v. Saraland Apartments (11th Cir. 1996) 94 F3d 1489, 1499-1502 & fn. 12]

Therefore, limited partners cannot be reached for the partnership's CERCLA liability as an "owner" where they took no active part in control of the partnership's business. [Redwing Carriers, Inc. v. Saraland Apartments, supra, 94 F3d at 1503]

[5:82.4] Comment: The Eleventh Circuit Redwing position (¶ 5:82.3) is probably the most consistent with principles announced by the U.S. Supreme Court in the corporate parent-subsidiary context (¶ 5:77 ff.). Most probably, a limited partner (who is not a direct owner of the polluting facility) can incur indirect (derivative) liability as an "owner" under CERCLA only if there is a basis for piercing the limited liability shield of the limited partnership form (¶ 5:77.1 ff.).

(b) [5:82.5] Compare—direct operator liability: Even under the view that limited partners cannot be held indirectly liable under CERCLA based on the partnership's ownership of the contaminated site, they can be held directly liable as operators of the site if they in fact personally operated the facility. [Redwing Carriers, Inc. v. Saraland Apartments (11th Cir. 1996) 94 F3d 1489, 1503-1504—mere authority to control facility not enough to impose "operator" liability]

• [5:82.6] Comment: To this extent, Redwing, supra, clearly appears consistent with the U.S. Supreme Court's Bestfoods analysis. By analogy to the corporate parent-subsidiary context, limited partners who actively participate in management of the partnership's polluting facility are themselves "operators" under CERCLA and directly liable as such (see¶ 5:78 ff.).

(8) [5:82.15] Liability of general partners in limited liability partnership: Corporate law principles have also been used to determine the CERCLA "owner" liability of a general partner in a limited liability partnership. One district court, applying state law, ruled that general partners in a limited liability partnership can be held individually liable for the partnership's CERCLA liability if the partnership assets are insufficient to satisfy the liability. [See United States v. 175 Inwood Assocs. LLP (ED NY 2004) 330 F.Supp.2d 213, 223-224]

(9) [5:82.16] Determining when "owner and operator" status occurs for purposes of CERCLA liability: Ownership status is measured at the time clean-up costs are incurred (not when a recovery lawsuit seeking reimbursement is filed): "Congress's decision to activate the statute of limitations [for cost-recovery actions; 42 USC § 9613(g)(2)] at the time of cleanup is strong contextual evidence that Congress intended the owner at the time of cleanup to be the 'current owner' in a subsequent recovery suit." [California Dept. of Toxic Substances Control v. Hearthside Residential Corp. (9th Cir. 2010) 613 F3d 910, 915—"owner" of contamination source at time of cleanup responsible for remediation costs associated with adjacent property even though owner sold its property before State filed cost-recovery suit; but see Pennsylvania Dept. of Environmental Protection v. Trainer Custom Chemical, LLC (3rd Cir. 2018) 906 F3d 85, 87 (distinguishing Hearthside) —current property owner liable for cleanup costs it incurred before purchasing property]

c. "Arranger" liability

(1) [5:83] Product manufacturers/distributors: CERCLA is not a vehicle for toxic tort (personal injury/product liability) actions against third party product manufacturers and distributors. Nor can third party product manufacturers be reached for response (cleanup) costs as CERCLA owners/operators. [Rivas v. Safety-Kleen Corp. (2002) 98 CA4th 218, 233-234, 119 CR2d 503, 515]

Nonetheless, under the plain language of the statute a product manufacturer or distributor may qualify as a 42 USC § 9607(a) PRP "arranger" and thus be subject to a CERCLA recovery action if it takes "intentional steps" to dispose of a hazardous substance. [Burlington Northern & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. United States (2009) 556 US 599, 611-613, 129 S.Ct. 1870, 1879-1880—although aware of incidental spills, pesticide manufacturer did not qualify as "arranger" because it did not sell pesticide with intention of any being disposed during transfer process; see also Rivas v. Safety-Kleen Corp., supra, 98 CA4th at 233-234, 119 CR2d at 515, fn. 8 (collecting cases)—manufacturers and distributors "occasionally" may find themselves subject to CERCLA recovery actions if they intend to arrange for disposal of pollutants under guise of product sales]

(a) [5:83.1] "Useful product" defense: In light of the "intentional steps" requirement (¶ 5:83), courts have long recognized the so-called "useful product" defense that prevents a seller of a "useful product" from being subject to "arranger" liability, even when the product itself is a hazardous substance. In other words, a person may be subject to "arranger" liability only if the material in question constitutes "waste" rather than a useful product. Thus, "a company selling a product that uses and/or generates a hazardous substance as part of its operation may not be held liable as an arranger under CERCLA unless … [it] entered into the relevant transaction with the specific purpose of disposing of a hazardous substance." [See Team Enterprises, LLC v. Western Investment Real Estate Trust (9th Cir. 2011) 647 F3d 901, 909 (emphasis in original)—manufacturer of machine used in dry cleaning process not liable as an "arranger" for contribution to environmental cleanup costs]

On the other hand, even when a sale includes a useful product component, the seller still may be held liable as an arranger if the evidence establishes the seller intended to dispose of a hazardous substance through the sale. [See United States v. Dico, Inc. (8th Cir. 2019) 920 F3d 1174, 1178-1180—despite evidence that contaminated buildings' structural steel beams would be reusable if decontaminated, substantial evidence supported finding seller intended to arrange for hazardous substance disposal]

[5:83.2 - 5:83.4] Reserved.

(2) [5:83.5] Federal government: The federal government is not immune from liability under CERCLA (¶ 5:60.1). Thus, it may qualify as a 42 USC § 9607(a) PRP "arranger" and be subject to a CERCLA cost-recovery action if it has "direct involvement in arrangements for the disposal of waste." [See Nu-West Mining, Inc. v. United States (D ID 2011) 768 F.Supp.2d 1082, 1088—federal government was subject to "arranger" liability for contamination caused at four mining sites it leased to private companies (government not only had requisite "intent" to dispose of hazardous substance, it "owned" substance and had "authority to control" and "exercised some actual control" over disposal of same)]

d. Exemptions and immunities

(1) [5:84] Limited liability of lenders and fiduciaries: Lenders and various fiduciaries (trustees and executors) are subject to potential Superfund liability as "owners" or "operators" of a contaminated property. However, federal and state laws create significant exemptions for certain lenders and fiduciaries:

(a) Exemptions under CERCLA

1) [5:84.1] Secured lenders not participants in management: Banks and other lenders are "owners" or "operators" exposed to CERCLA liability for property they hold as collateral only if they are "actually participating in the management or operational affairs" of the borrower (merely having the capacity to influence a PRP's management decisions does not bring the lender within the scope of CERCLA liability). [See 42 USC § 9601(20)(A), (F)(i), (G)]

Also, lenders will not incur CERCLA "owner" or "operator" liability by foreclosing on a contaminated property so long as they (i) do not take over the property's business operations, and (ii) sell or lease the property at the "earliest practicable, commercially reasonable time, on commercially reasonable terms." [See 42 USC § 9601(20)(F)(ii)]

a) [5:84.2] EPA "policy guidance" reviving EPA Regs: An EPA "policy guidance" instructs EPA investigators to look to EPA 1992 regulations in determining when banks and secured lenders may incur CERCLA liability. Although they had been struck down as exceeding the EPA's rulemaking authority, these regulations are now revived as consistent with the legislation cited at ¶ 5:84.1. [See 57 Fed. Reg. 18344]

b) [5:84.2a] Public or quasi-public companies: Although not "typical" lenders, public or quasi-public companies that merely hold legal title to property in order to secure recoupment of developments costs are exempt from "owner" liability under 42 USC § 9601(20)(A)'s security interest exception. [In re Bergsoe Metal Corp. (9th Cir. 1990) 910 F2d 668, 671—fact that port authority held paper title to lead recycling plant it helped finance did not make it an "owner" under CERCLA; Monarch Tile, Inc. v. City of Florence (11th Cir. 2000) 212 F3d 1219, 1222—city that retained "indicia of ownership" in property for purpose of securing repayment of development bonds qualified for secured creditor exception; see also United States v. Capital Tax Corp. (7th Cir. 2008) 545 F3d 525, 531-532 & fn. 5—firm that buys distressed real estate properties and resells them for profit, retaining only legal title to secure remaining purchase price, may be exempt from owner liability under CERCLA'S "security interest" exception and common law equitable conversion principles]

2) [5:84.3] Fiduciaries: Trustees, executors/administrators of a decedent's estate, guardians, receivers, conservators and other such fiduciaries generally are immune from personal liability under CERCLA unless (i) the trust (or other estate) was specifically established to limit the property owner's liability; (ii) the fiduciary's negligence caused or contributed to the hazardous substance release; or (iii) the fiduciary is actively managing the business for profit. [See 42 USC § 9607(n)]

(b) [5:84.4] State law exemptions: The California Superfund also exempts certain lenders and fiduciaries from state liability. [Health & Saf.C. § 25548 et seq.]

The state exemptions are similar (but not completely identical) to those under CERCLA. [See Health & Saf.C. §§ 25548.1, 25548.2, 25548.3, 25548.4 & 25548.5]

[5:84.5 - 5:84.9] Reserved.

(2) [5:84.10] Small-quantity waste generator ("de micromis") exemption: Individuals and small businesses that generate specified small amounts of hazardous waste or household-type garbage are exempt from CERCLA response cost liability ("de micromis exemption"). However, this exemption applies only to EPA-designated "National Priority List" (NPL) sites, and only if "all or part" of the disposal, treatment or transport of waste occurred before April 1, 2001. [42 USC § 9607(o)(1)]

(a) [5:84.11] Burden of proof and payment of defense costs: The burden is on a private party bringing a contribution action against a de micromis generator to show the de micromis exemption does not apply. [42 USC § 9607(o)(4)]

Moreover, if the de micromis generator prevails in the suit on the basis of the 42 USC § 9607(o) exemption, the private party plaintiff must pay the de micromis party's "reasonable" defense costs, including attorney fees and expert witness fees. [42 USC § 9607(p)(7)]

(b) [5:84.12] Exceptions: There are three situations in which an otherwise eligible de micromis generator will not escape CERCLA liability:

• The EPA determines that the wastes involved "have contributed significantly or could contribute significantly, either individually or in the aggregate," to the cost of remediation or natural resource restoration with respect to the site;

• The EPA determines that the de micromis party did not cooperate in the clean-up or natural resource restoration with respect to the site; or

• The de micromis generator has been convicted of a criminal violation for the same conduct to which the exemption would apply. [42 USC § 9607(o)(2)]

(3) [5:84.13] Municipal solid waste generator exemption: Residential properties, small businesses and nonprofit organizations that generate "municipal solid waste"—the term of art for household-type garbage—at NPL sites (see¶ 5:84.10) are also exempt from CERCLA response cost liability. [42 USC § 9607(p)(1)]

(a) [5:84.14] "Municipal solid waste": "Municipal solid waste" is statutorily defined. Examples include "food and yard waste, paper, clothing, appliances, consumer product packaging, disposable diapers, office supplies, cosmetics, glass and metal food containers, elementary or secondary school science laboratory waste, and household hazardous waste." [42 USC § 9607(p)(4)]

The statute also defines what does not constitute "municipal solid waste." [See 42 USC § 9607(p)(4)]

(b) [5:84.15] Exempt entities: This exemption applies to:

- Owners, operators, or lessees of residential property;

- Business entities that employed on average no more than 100 full-time employees, or the equivalent, for three years prior to notification of liability, and that are small-business concerns under the Small Business Act (15 USC § 631 et seq.); and

- Nonprofit organizations that employed no more than 100 paid individuals during the year prior to notification of liability. [42 USC § 9607(p)(1)]

(c) [5:84.16] Private party contribution actions only: Only private party contribution actions against owners, operators or lessees of residential property that generate "municipal solid waste" are within the exemption (42 USC § 9607(p)(6)). The exemption statute does not apply to government actions or private party cost-recovery actions against homeowners or renters for contamination caused by their garbage.

However, a private party bringing a cost-recovery suit against a municipal solid waste generator is subject to the same burden of proof and defense cost rules applicable to private parties suing a "de micromis generator" for contribution (¶ 5:84.11). [See 42 USC § 9607(p)(5)(B) & (7)]

(d) [5:84.17] Exceptions: The three exceptions to the "de micromis exemption" (¶ 5:84.12) also apply to the "municipal solid waste generator" exemption. [See 42 USC § 9607(p)(2)]

(4) [5:85] Contiguous property owner exemption: A person who owns real property that is or may be contaminated by a hazardous substance release or threatened release from contiguous or "otherwise similarly situated" real property that is not owned by that person is not considered a CERCLA owner or operator solely by reason of the contamination, so long as certain conditions (¶ 5:85.1) are satisfied. [42 USC § 9607(q)(1)(A) (emphasis added)]

(a) [5:85.1] Qualifying conditions: A property owner invoking this exemption must satisfy the following conditions by a preponderance of the evidence (42 USC § 9607(q)(1)(A), (B); Atlantic Richfield Co. v. Christian (2020) 590 US _, _, 140 S.Ct. 1335, 1356):

- The property owner did not cause, contribute or consent to the hazardous substance release on the adjacent property (42 USC § 9607(q)(1)(A)(i));

- The property owner is not potentially liable, or affiliated with any person who is potentially liable, through (i) any direct or indirect familial relationship, or any contractual, corporate or financial relationship (other than that created by the instruments by which title to the property is conveyed or financed, or by a contract for the sale of goods or services), or (ii) the result of a reorganization of a business entity that was potentially liable (42 USC § 9607(q)(1)(A)(ii));

- The property owner has taken reasonable steps to stop any continuing or threatened future release, and to prevent or limit human, environmental or natural resource exposure to any hazardous substances released from its property (42 USC § 9607(q)(1)(A)(iii));

- The property owner has provided full cooperation, assistance and access to persons authorized to conduct response actions or natural resource restoration at the contiguous property from which there has been an actual or threatened release of hazardous substances (42 USC § 9607(q)(1)(A)(iv); see Atlantic Richfield Co. v. Christian, supra, _ US at _, 140 S.Ct. at 1356—landowners did not qualify as contiguous property owners because, among other things, their proposed restoration plan would interfere with EPA's cleanup (¶ 5:62a));

• The property owner has complied with any land use restrictions imposed with respect to any response action at the property, and does not impede the effectiveness or integrity of any "institutional control" employed in connection with a response action (42 USC § 9607(q)(1)(A)(v));

• The property owner has complied with any EPA information requests or administrative subpoenas (42 USC § 9607(q)(1)(A)(vi));

• The property owner has provided all legally required notices regarding the discovery or release of any hazardous substances at its property (42 USC § 9607(q)(1)(A)(vii)); and

• The property owner has made "all appropriate inquiry" within the meaning of 42 USC § 9601(35)(B) regarding the property, and did not know or have reason to know that its property was or could be contaminated by a hazardous substance release or threatened release from the contiguous property (42 USC § 9607(q)(1)(A)(viii); see Atlantic Richfield Co. v. Christian, supra, _ US at _, 140 S.Ct. at 1356—landowners did not qualify as contiguous property owners because, among other things, they purchased property after mining company built "Washington Monument sized smelter" near town and "evidence of public knowledge of contamination was almost overwhelming" (internal quotes omitted) (¶ 5:62a); and ¶ 5:85.6 ff.).

1) [5:85.2] Comment: A memorandum posted on the EPA website, intended to assist the EPA staff in making enforcement decisions, offers some general guidance concerning the conditions set forth at ¶ 5:85.1 (see "Enforcement Discretion Guidance Regarding Statutory Criteria for Those Who May Qualify as CERCLA Bona Fide Prospective Purchasers, Contiguous Property Owners, or Innocent Landowners (`Common Elements')," available at www.epa.gov).

➪ [5:85.3] PRACTICE POINTER: The most significant reason for a buyer of contaminated or potentially contaminated property to preserve the contiguous property owner exemption is to minimize the buyer's proportionate share of liability and maximize the recovery of clean-up costs from other PRPs in the event a CERCLA contribution claim (¶ 5:125.4) is later asserted against the buyer.

Also, lenders and insurers may be more willing to finance and insure, and tenants to lease, the property notwithstanding the apparent contamination.

(b) [5:85.4] Available only in CERCLA actions: The contiguous owner exemption is available only in CERCLA actions. It will not exempt a property owner from liability under the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act (¶ 5:125.10 ff.) or any other non-CERCLA cause of action.

Nor is there any comparable exemption under the California Superfund. Therefore, when a state agency orders the clean-up of property contaminated by a hazardous substance release from contiguous property, an owner exempt under CERCLA may still end up responsible for a share of the cleanup costs under state law. (But see ¶ 5:87 ff. re state law limited immunity for "bona fide purchasers" from statutory nonagency clean-up cost claims.)

(c) [5:85.5] "Otherwise similarly situated" property defined: The contiguous property owner exemption applies to a person who owns real property contiguous "or otherwise similarly situated" to the property that is the source of the contamination (¶ 5:85). Presumably, the "otherwise similarly situated" language is intended to cover the owner of property down gradient from the contaminating property, even if the down gradient property is not right next to the contaminating property. However, it is unclear how many miles apart the two properties can be for a property owner to be covered by the exemption.

(d) [5:85.6] Standard for "appropriate inquiry": The contiguous property owner exemption requires potential purchasers to conduct an "appropriate inquiry" before purchasing the property (42 USC § 9607(q)(1)(A)(viii)). An "appropriate inquiry" generally requires a duly-qualified "environmental professional" (¶ 5:85.7) to:

— Interview past and present owners, operators and occupants of the site (40 CFR § 312.23);

— Review various government and historical documents pertaining to the site going back to 1960 (40 CFR §§ 312.24, 312.26);

— Visually inspect the site and adjoining properties (unless "unusual circumstances" make the inspection unperformable) (40 CFR § 312.27);

— Document and comment on significant data gaps or other uncertainties regarding possible contamination of the site (such as conditions limiting the site inspection) (40 CFR §§ 312.21(c)(2), 312.27(c)(2));

— Account for commonly known or reasonably ascertainable information about the site (40 CFR § 312.30); and — Address the likely presence of contamination of the site and the ability to detect any such contamination (40 CFR § 312.31). [See 40 CFR § 312.1 et seq.]

If the site is abandoned (40 CFR § 312.10(b)) and no current owner is available to be interviewed, the professional must conduct at least one interview with the owner or occupant of a neighboring property in order to obtain information about past owners or uses of the site. [40 CFR § 312.23(d)]

1) [5:85.7] "Environmental professional" qualifications: The "appropriate inquiry" must be conducted by or under the supervision of an "environmental professional," defined as an individual who "possesses sufficient specific education, training, and experience necessary to exercise professional judgment to develop opinions and conclusions" about real or threatened hazardous substance releases at the site. [See 40 CFR § 312.10(b)(1) (also detailing specific qualifications and minimum period of "relevant experience") & (5)]

2) [5:85.8] Time-frame: An "appropriate inquiry" must be conducted within one year prior to acquisition of the property; and if conducted more than six months before the acquisition date, certain aspects of the inquiry (e.g., interviews and visual inspection) must be updated. [40 CFR § 312.20(a), (b)]

3) [5:85.9] Procedures used to comply with standard: "Environmental professionals" may employ the procedures set forth in the American Society for Testing and Materials (ASTM) International Standard E1527-05 to comply with the "appropriate inquiry" standard. [40 CFR § 312.11]

4) [5:85.10] Written report requirement: The results of the inquiry must be documented in a written report that contains, at a minimum, certain information, including a prescribed statement signed by the environmental professional. [See 40 CFR § 312.21(c), (d)]

[5:85.11 - 5:85.14] Reserved.

(e) [5:85.15] Effect of finding contamination during preacquisition inquiry—disqualifying event: Contiguous property owners who find contamination before purchasing property cannot qualify for the contiguous property owner exemption once they take title. However, those property owners may nonetheless qualify for the "bona fide prospective purchaser" exemption so long as certain conditions are satisfied (¶ 5:86.1). [42 USC § 9607(q)(1)(C)]

1) [5:85.16] Comment: As a practical matter, the contiguous property owner exemption is extremely difficult to establish with respect to industrial and most commercial properties, since they typically have some level of contamination. Nonetheless, as with the "innocent landowner defense" (¶ 5:116), availability of the exemption may have the positive effect of encouraging real estate buyers to conduct vigorous environmental investigations before taking title. Such investigations heighten the awareness of all parties regarding the environmental condition of the property and frequently result in achieving a more balanced allocation of risks (see¶ 5:220 ff.).

(5) [5:86] Bona fide prospective purchaser exemption: Persons who otherwise would be liable as CERCLA owners or operators may be protected under the "bona fide prospective purchaser" exemption even if they detected contamination during a preacquisition due diligence (and thus would not be eligible for the CERCLA "innocent landowner defense," ¶ 5:114). [42 USC § 9607(r)]

"[A] bona fide prospective purchaser whose potential liability for a release or threatened release is based solely on the purchaser's being considered to be an owner or operator of a facility shall not be liable as long as the bona fide purchaser does not impede the performance of a response action or natural resource restoration." [42 USC § 9607(r)

(1); see also Voggenthaler v. Maryland Square LLC (9th Cir. 2013) 724 F3d 1050, 1061-1062—shopping center owner not entitled to bona fide prospective purchaser exemption because, among other things, it failed to prevent further harm by not limiting human and environmental exposure to contamination already present; PCS Nitrogen Inc. v. Ashley II of Charleston LLC (4th Cir. 2013) 714 F3d 161, 179-181—even though it did not introduce hazardous substances, current owner of contaminated parcel not entitled to bona fide prospective purchaser exemption because it did not "exercise appropriate care" at site]

(The Brownfields Utilization, Investment, and Local Development Act (BUILD Act), effective 3/23/18 (PL 115-141, Div. N, 132 Stat. 1052) expanded the bona fide prospective purchaser definition to include tenants and lessees of facilities where certain requirements are met, see ¶ 5:86.3.)

(a) [5:86.1] "Bona fide prospective purchaser" criteria: A facility's owner or lessee can be a "bona fide prospective purchaser" within the meaning of the 42 USC § 9607(r) exemption only under the following circumstances:

1) [5:86.2] Owners: If the person is the facility's owner, the person must have acquired the property after January 11, 2002, and must establish all of the following criteria by a preponderance of the evidence (42 USC § 9601(40)(A)(i)(II); Voggenthaler v. Maryland Square LLC (9th Cir. 2013) 724 F3d 1050, 1061-1062):

• All "disposal" of hazardous substances at the facility must have occurred before the person acquired the facility (42 USC § 9601(40)(B)(i));

• The person made "all appropriate inquiries," according to generally accepted good commercial and customary standards and practices as described in the statute, into the previous ownership and uses of the facility (42 USC § 9601(40)(B)(ii); see¶ 5:86.6);

• The person provided all legally required notices regarding the discovery or release of any hazardous substances at the facility (42 USC § 9601(40)(B)(iii));

• The person has taken reasonable steps to stop any continuing release, prevent any threatened future release, and prevent or limit human, environmental or natural resource exposure to any previously released hazardous substances (42 USC § 9601(40)(B)(iv));

• The person has provided full cooperation, assistance and access to persons authorized to conduct response actions or natural resource restoration at the facility (42 USC § 9601(40)(B)(v));

• The person is in compliance with any land use restrictions established or relied on in connection with response action at the facility, and does not impede the effectiveness or integrity of any "institutional control" employed at the facility in connection with a response action (42 USC § 9601(40)(B)(vi));

• The person has complied with any EPA information requests or administrative subpoenas (42 USC § 9601(40)(B)(vii)); and

• The person is not potentially liable, or affiliated with any potentially liable person, for response costs through (i) any direct or indirect familial relationship, or (ii) any contractual, corporate or financial relationship (other than that created by the instruments by which title to the facility is conveyed or financed, by a tenancy, by the instruments creating a leasehold interest in the facility, or by a contract for the sale of goods or services), or (iii) the result of reorganization of a business that was potentially liable (42 USC § 9601(40)(B)(viii)).

2) [5:86.3] Lessees: If the person is the facility's lessee, the following requirements apply:

• The lessee must have acquired the leasehold interest after January 11, 2002 (42 USC § 9601(40)(A)(ii)(I));

• The lessee must establish, by a preponderance of the evidence, that the leasehold interest is not designed to avoid liability under CERCLA (42 USC § 9601(40)(A)(ii)(II));

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

• Either (i) the facility owner is able to establish all of the criteria set forth in ¶ 5:86.2 or (ii) the lessee is able to establish those criteria, or (iii) the owner was able to establish those criteria when the leasehold took effect, but can no longer do so due to circumstances unrelated to the lessee's actions, and the lessee is able to establish all of the criteria (except for the requirement of making appropriate inquiries into the previous ownership and uses of the facility). [42 USC § 9601(40)(A)(ii)(III)]

➪ [5:86.4] PRACTICE POINTER: The reasons for preserving the bona fide prospective purchaser exemption are the same as those for preserving the contiguous property owner exemption. See¶ 5:85.3.

(b) [5:86.5] Available only in CERCLA actions: As with the contiguous property owner exemption, the bona fide prospective purchaser exemption is available only in CERCLA actions; see¶ 5:85.4. (But California law gives “bona fide purchasers” limited liability protection from statutory nonagency cleanup cost claims; see¶ 5:87 ff.)

(c) [5:86.6] Standard for “appropriate inquiry”: Like the contiguous property owner exemption, the bona fide prospective purchaser exemption requires the potential purchaser to conduct an “appropriate inquiry” before purchasing the property (¶ 5:86.1). The same basic “appropriate inquiry” standard applies (40 CFR § 312.1(b)(1)(ii); see¶ 5:85.6 ff.). Additionally, the site assessment must include a search of environmental clean-up liens recorded against the property (40 CFR § 312.25), take into account any specialized knowledge or experience of the prospective purchaser relevant to the property (40 CFR § 312.28), and evaluate whether the purchase price reasonably reflects the property's fair market value if it were not contaminated (40 CFR § 312.29).

(d) [5:86.7] “Contiguous property owner” may qualify: A would-be contiguous property owner who purchases property knowing or having reason to know that the property was or could be contaminated does not qualify for the contiguous property owner exemption, but may qualify for the bona fide prospective purchaser exemption (¶ 5:85.15).

1) [5:86.8] Groundwater investigation required? In addition to the other conditions that would-be contiguous property owners must satisfy to qualify for the bona fide prospective purchaser exemption, they must show that “reasonable steps” were taken to stop any continuing or threatened future release of hazardous substances at the property (¶ 5:86.1). Those “reasonable steps” could include the investigation and remediation of any groundwater contamination, even though under the “reasonable steps” condition of the contiguous property owner exemption, the owner is not required to investigate and remediate groundwater contamination (42 USC § 9607(q)(1)(D)).

➪ [5:86.9] PRACTICE POINTER: Until this issue is clarified by the EPA or the courts, such an owner might consider erring on the side of caution and voluntarily eliminate any groundwater contamination in order to avoid being brought into a postpurchase third-party CERCLA action.

(6) [5:87] State law exemption for bona fide purchasers of “urban infill area”: Under California's Land Reuse and Revitalization Act (LRRA, Health & Saf.C. § 25395.60 et seq.), certain qualifying buyers (“bona fide purchasers”) of contaminated property in an “urban infill area” who enter into a preacquisition “consultative services agreement” with certain state agencies and agree to clean up the property and pay the agency's costs to oversee the clean-up, may receive limited liability protection and a right of contribution against PRPs.

The exemption also is available to “innocent landowners,” “contiguous property owners” and “prospective purchasers,” as defined, under roughly the same conditions (¶ 5:87.1 ff.). [See Health & Saf.C. §§ 25395.70, 25395.75 & 25395.91] The California LRRA (Health & Saf.C. § 25395.60 et seq.) is due to be repealed by its own terms effective 1/1/27. [Health & Saf.C. § 25395.109]

(a) Qualifying criteria

1) [5:87.1] Property: The property must have been acquired on or after January 1, 2005, cannot be listed as a federal or state Superfund site or a Hazardous Substances Underground Storage Tank Act site, and must be located in an “urban infill area.” [Health & Saf.C. § 25395.79.2]

(An “urban infill area” within the meaning of the Act is essentially contaminated redevelopment property—i.e., vacant or “underutilized” land in an urban area that has been previously developed or is surrounded by previously-developed parcels. See Health & Saf.C. § 25395.79.2(c).)

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

2) [5:87.2] Purchaser: The buyer of the qualifying property (¶ 5:87.1) must meet the Act's standards for a "bona fide purchaser" … which are essentially the same criteria required for a CERCLA "bona fide prospective purchaser" (¶ 5:86.1). [Health & Saf.C. §§ 25395.69, 25395.80]

(b) [5:87.3] Agency "consultative services agreement" required: A purchaser who meets the qualification set forth at ¶ 5:87.2 must enter into an agreement with one of three state agencies (see Health & Saf.C. §§ 25395.64, 25395.68, 25395.71) to:

• Perform a site assessment and, if the agency determines it is necessary, prepare and implement a response plan (Health & Saf.C. § 25395.92(a));

• Reimburse the agency for all costs incurred to review and/or oversee implementation of the site assessment plan (Health & Saf.C. § 25395.93(b)); and

• Provide notice to the public of the response plan and an opportunity for public participation in any response activities (Health & Saf.C. § 25395.96(a)).

(c) [5:87.4] Scope of liability immunity: Qualifying purchasers (¶ 5:87.2) are immune from nonagency claims brought "under any applicable statute" for response costs "or other damages" associated with a release or threatened release of hazardous substances on the property. [Health & Saf.C. § 25395.81(a)(1)]

Exceptions: However, there are several exceptions, which further narrow the already-narrow immunity protection. Significantly, the Act provides no immunity for claims:

— under federal statutes (including CERCLA);

— for bodily injury or wrongful death;

— under the state Hazardous Waste Control Law (¶ 5:30) or Polanco Act (¶ 5:46.6);

— by the state board, regional board or Department of Toxic Substances Control to protect public health and safety or the environment pursuant to an applicable statute. [See Health & Saf.C. § 25395.86]

1) [5:87.5] Common law claims? Although the Act itself defines "applicable law" to include common law claims (Health & Saf.C. § 25395.66), that language is not used in the immunity statute. Quite the contrary, Health & Saf.C. § 25395.81 expressly limits the purchaser's immunity to liability "under an applicable statute." Commentators have suggested this inconsistency might be the result of a drafting error—i.e., that there was no legislative intent to exclude common law claims from the immunity protection. But absent further legislative or judicial clarification, purchasers probably should assume the statute will be literally interpreted to provide no immunity shield from common law liability.

[5:87.6 - 5:87.9] Reserved.

(d) [5:87.10] Right of contribution: Bona fide purchasers (as well as innocent landowners and contiguous landowners) have a right of contribution from responsible persons for response costs incurred. They are also entitled to prevailing party attorney and expert fees in successful litigation under an applicable contribution or cost recovery statute, subject to certain conditions (among other things, a written demand for clean-up costs must have been served on the defendant). [See Health & Saf.C. §§ 25395.84(a), 25395.85]

1) [5:87.11] Limited by National Contingency Plan? The right of contribution under the Act might be narrowed by a CERCLA provision, which limits a private party's cost recovery to necessary costs of response consistent with the National Contingency Plan (¶ 5:126.1). According to the Seventh Circuit, this federal restriction cannot be trumped by state law and, therefore, clean-up costs inconsistent with the National Contingency Plan cannot be recovered under a state contribution statute. [PMC, Inc. v. Sherwin-Williams Co. (7th Cir. 1998) 151 F3d 610, 617-618]

The Ninth Circuit has not ruled on the issue.

[5:87.12 - 5:87.14] Reserved.

(7) [5:87.15] State law exemption for "bona fide ground tenant": The state Land Reuse and Revitalization Act (¶ 5:87) also provides a "bona fide ground tenant" leasing contaminated property with limited liability protection and a contribution right against PRPs.

Note: For purposes of this exemption only, a "release" does not include passive migration. [Health & Saf.C. § 25395.102(c)]

This state law exemption is part of the California LRRA, due to expire 1/1/27. [Health & Saf.C. § 25395.109]

(a) Qualifying criteria

1) [5:87.16] Property: The property must meet all of the conditions of Health & Saf.C. § 25395.79.2 (¶ 5:87.1), except that the Hazardous Substances Underground Storage Tank Act "petroleum site" exclusion (Health & Saf.C. § 25395.79.2(b)(3)) does not apply. [Health & Saf.C. § 25395.102(d)]

2) [5:87.17] "Bona fide ground tenant": The ground tenant must show by a preponderance of the evidence all of the following:

• It acquired a nonfee interest in, and control of, the property on or after January 1, 2007, pursuant to either:

— a ground lease with a term of 25 years or more;

— an easement with a term of 25 years or more; or — any other legal means for access and use of the property that provides a term of 25 years or more and is acceptable to the state agency entering into an agreement with the tenant to assess the property's contamination and implement a clean-up response plan if necessary (¶ 5:87.18);

• It meets the Act's standards for a "bona fide purchaser" (¶ 5:87.2);

• All hazardous waste releases occurred before the tenant acquired legal access to and control of the property;

• The tenant did not cause or contribute to any hazardous waste release on the property;

• It has contractually agreed with one or more specified persons or entities (¶ 5:87.18) that payments to the property owner, or any alternate revenue streams or assets acceptable to the agency, be pledged to secure a loan the proceeds of which are dedicated to implementing a clean-up plan; and

• The tenant is not, or affiliated with any person who is, potentially liable for the subject release through either:

— a direct or indirect familial relationship;

— a contractual, corporate or financial relationship, unless that relationship arises from the written document(s) by which the tenant obtains control and implements development of the property, or a contract for the sale of goods or services; or

— the result of a reorganization of a business that was potentially liable for the release. [Health & Saf.C. § 25395.102(b)]

(b) [5:87.18] "Appropriate inquiries" and site assessment/response implementation agreement required: To qualify for the immunity described at ¶ 5:87.19 ff., the tenant who meets the qualifications set forth at ¶ 5:87.16 ff. must (i) make all "appropriate inquiries" and (ii) enter into an agreement (the "Agreement") with the agency and one or more specified persons or entities (the property owner, a redevelopment agency, or a city or county) to:

• Perform an assessment of the risk of the property's intended use to the health and safety of the property's intended occupants (Health & Saf.C. § 25395.103(b)), and, if the agency determines it is necessary, implement a response plan;

• Reimburse the agency for all costs incurred to review and/or oversee the site assessment/response plan implementation; and

• Submit sufficient information to the agency to show that the property and ground tenant satisfy the required criteria (¶ 5:87.16 ff.). [Health & Saf.C. § 25395.103]

(c) [5:87.19] Scope of liability immunity: A qualifying ground tenant (¶ 5:87.17 ff.) enjoys the same immunity from nonagency claims afforded to a qualifying "bona fide purchaser" (¶ 5:87.4) once it obtains a "certification" of immunity from the agency that meets the criteria of Health & Saf.C. § 25395.104(b) & (c). [Health & Saf.C. § 25395.104(a)(1)]

In addition, once the Agreement is made (¶ 5:87.18), the agency cannot require the ground tenant to take any clean-up action other than that specified in the Agreement. [Health & Saf.C. § 25395.104(a)(2)]

1) [5:87.20] Persons/entities subject to immunity: The immunities described at ¶ 5:87.19 apply not only to the qualifying ground tenant, but also to (i) any successor who similarly qualifies and assumes the tenant's obligations under the Agreement (¶ 5:87.18), and (ii) a person who provides financing to the qualifying successor. [Health & Saf.C. § 25395.104(e)]

Moreover, a qualifying ground tenant who purchases the property subsequent to leasing or acquiring an easement thereon may convert its status to that of a "bona fide purchaser" so long as it meets the criteria therefor (¶ 5:87.2), and thereby qualify for the "bona fide purchaser" immunities (¶ 5:87.4). [Health & Saf.C. § 25395.104(l)]

2) [5:87.21] May apply to "de minimis" release during response action: A tenant who acquires immunity status retains that status if a release occurs during a response action that is "de minimis" and the agency determines that all necessary clean-up actions to address the release have been taken. [Health & Saf.C. § 25395.105(a)]

3) [5:87.22] Exceptions: "Bona fide ground tenant" immunity does not apply to claims for bodily injury or wrongful death or under the Hazardous Waste Control Law (¶ 5:30), criminal acts, permit violations, contractual indemnity agreements between purchasers and sellers of real property, or response actions ordered by an agency to protect public health and safety or the environment under an "applicable statute." [Health & Saf.C. § 25395.106(a), (b)]

a) [5:87.23] Common law claims? It is unclear whether the "bona fide ground tenant" immunity statute applies to common law claims; prudence suggests, however, that ground tenants should assume that it does not. See discussion at¶ 5:87.5.

(d) [5:87.24] Right of contribution: The right of contribution available to bona fide purchasers, innocent landowners and contiguous landowners (¶ 5:87.10) also applies to bona fide ground tenants. [See Health & Saf.C. § 25395.85]

1) [5:87.25] Limited by NCP?See discussion at¶ 5:87.11.*

2. Scope of Liability

a. [5:88] "Response costs," plus incidental costs of enforcement: PRPs are liable under CERCLA and the California Superfund for "response costs"—i.e., the cost of cleaning up the contaminated property. [See 42 USC § 9601(23) & (25), defining "removal" and "response" under CERCLA; and Health & Saf.C. §§ 79650 & 78140 (recodified & added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257, oper. 1/1/24)]

Under both CERCLA and the California Superfund, PRPs can also be held liable for costs incidental to enforcement (e.g., litigation and oversight expenses), as well as interest on the amount of the response costs. [See 42 USC § 9607(a)(4); Health & Saf.C. §§ 79650 & 78140, oper. 1/1/24); and further discussion at¶ 5:121.10, 5:122 & 5:126.10]

(1) [5:88.1] Manner of assessment: The statutory liability may be assessed against a PRP in a variety of ways:

• The PRP may be ordered by the state or federal government to clean up the contaminated property. [42 USC §§ 9604, 9606; see¶ 5:122]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

- The state or federal government may partially or totally remediate the hazardous condition itself and then sue one or more PRPs to recover its response costs. [42 USC § 9607; see also 42 USC § 9613(b) & (c) re jurisdiction/venue and nationwide service of process; and discussion at¶ 5:121.1 ff.]

- A private party may undertake the remediation, either voluntarily or by compulsion under government order, and then sue one or more other PRPs for cost recovery or contribution. [42 USC §§ 9607(a)(4)(B) & 9613(f); see¶ 5:125 ff.]

(2) [5:89] Punitive damages for noncompliance with abatement order: Under CERCLA, a PRP who fails to remedy the contamination in compliance with a state or federal government clean-up order may be assessed punitive damages in an amount up to three times the government's cost of remediating the site. [42 USC § 9607(c)(3)]

(3) [5:89.1] Other civil penalties: In addition, PRPs can be subject to civil penalties of $25,000 per day for certain CERCLA violations, including failure to comply with governmental clean-up orders. [See 42 USC §§ 9606 & 9609]

➪ [5:89.2] PRACTICE POINTER: Because of the enormous breadth of liability under CERCLA and the potentially disastrous costs of remediating a contaminated property, real property buyers and sellers must take care to insulate themselves from liability in every way possible. Buyers in particular must be able to evaluate when the environmental risks involved in the intended transaction are too great to justify consummating the purchase. (See¶ 5:110 ff. re "innocent landowner defense"; ¶ 5:220 ff. re contractual protections; ¶ 5:238 ff. re environmental site assessments; and¶ 5:250 ff. re insurance.)

b. [5:90] Petroleum exclusion: Both CERCLA and the California Superfund exclude refined and unrefined petroleum, natural gas and synthetic gas usable for fuel from the definition of "hazardous substance." [42 USC § 9601(14); Health & Saf.C. § 78075(b) (recodified & added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257, oper. 1/1/24); see also McCoy v. Gustafson (2009) 180 CA4th 56, 113-114, 103 CR3d 37, 82-83—petroleum exclusion includes fuel oil, leaded gasoline, indigenous components in refined or unrefined gasoline and any such components added during refining process]

Accordingly, these substances are not regulated by CERCLA and the California Superfund; and owners and operators have no liability under those statutes for the cleanup costs. [Cose v. Getty Oil Co. (9th Cir. 1993) 4 F3d 700, 704; Wilshire Westwood Assoc. v. Atlantic Richfield Corp. (9th Cir. 1989) 881 F2d 801, 803, 810; KFC Western, Inc. v. Meghrig (1994) 23 CA4th 1167, 1177-1178, 28 CR2d 676, 683]

(1) [5:90.1] Defendant's burden: The burden of proving that the petroleum exclusion applies rests with the party seeking to assert it. Therefore, in a cost-recovery action (¶ 5:126 ff.), once plaintiff presents evidence sufficient to show a release or threatened release of hazardous substances (¶ 5:126c ff.), defendant bears the burden of proving the petroleum exclusion applies. [Johnson v. James Langley Operating Co., Inc. (8th Cir. 2000) 226 F3d 957, 963, fn. 4; see also Otay Land Co, LLC v. U.E. Ltd., L.P. (2017) 15 CA5th 806, 836-837, 225 CR3d 119, 144]

(2) [5:91] Compare—CERCLA liability for "adulterated" petroleum and natural gas contamination: The petroleum and gas exclusions do not apply where the petroleum or gas on the property has become adulterated with other hazardous substances that are regulated by CERCLA and that are not normally found in petroleum or natural gas. In that event, a PRP's liability may be assessed as usual under CERCLA (¶ 5:85 ff.). [See 50 Fed.Reg. 13,460; Mid Valley Bank v. North Valley Bank (ED CA 1991) 764 F.Supp. 1377, 1384—petroleum exclusion inapplicable to waste oil containing nonindigenous CERCLA hazardous substance]

But the petroleum exclusion is fully applicable if the petroleum product contains a specifically-listed CERCLA hazardous substance that is indigenous to petroleum (unless the CERCLA hazardous substance is present in the petroleum at a concentration level exceeding levels that naturally occur in the petroleum product). [Cose v. Getty Oil Co. (9th Cir. 1993) 4 F3d 700, 704; see State of Washington v. Time Oil Co. (WD WA 1988) 687 F.Supp. 529, 532]

(3) [5:92] Compare—RCRA liability: Although the petroleum exclusion brings petroleum and natural gas outside the scope of CERCLA, these hazardous waste products are regulated by other statutes—including the Federal Resource Conservation and Recovery Act of 1976 (RCRA, 42 USC § 6901 et seq.) and California's Hazardous Waste Control Law (Health & Saf.C. § 25100 et seq.).

(However, RCRA private party remedies are not as expansive as those under CERCLA; significantly, a private party cannot sue under RCRA to recover the costs of clean-up efforts. See¶ 5:125.10 ff.)

[5:93 - 5:99] Reserved.

3. [5:100] Defenses: As earlier discussed, CERCLA and the California Superfund generally impose strict liability, without regard to fault (¶ 5:64). The statutes recognize only very limited PRP defenses; and those defenses are narrowly construed.

a. [5:101] Statutory defenses: The statutory defenses to PRP liability are the same under CERCLA and the California Superfund: (1) the act of war/act of God defense; (2) the third party defense; and (3) the "innocent landowner defense." [42 USC §§ 9601(35) & 9607(b); Health & Saf.C. § 78145(b) (recodified & added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257, oper. 1/1/24) (incorporating CERCLA defenses by reference)]

➪ [5:102] PRACTICE POINTER: As discussed at ¶ 5:103 ff., these defenses are narrowly construed. Among the relatively few reported decisions to date considering the defenses, only a small fraction have found in favor of the PRP. Therefore, the statutory defenses should not be relied upon as effective insulation from environmental hazards liability. And, in any event, these defenses should not be relied upon in lieu of careful environmental assessment and investigation of a property prior to closing a purchase and sale transaction (¶ 5:235 ff.).

(1) [5:103] Act of war/act of God defense: Proof by a preponderance of the evidence that the release or threatened release of a hazardous substance and the resulting damages were caused solely by an "act of God" or "act of war" is a complete defense to PRP liability. [42 USC § 9607(b)(1) & (2)]

(a) [5:104] "Act of God" narrowly defined: CERCLA codifies a very narrow definition of "act of God":

> "… an unanticipated grave natural disaster or other natural phenomenon of an exceptional, inevitable, and irresistible character, the effects of which could not have been prevented or avoided by the exercise of due care or foresight." [42 USC § 9601(1)]

The definition is literally applied to require a truly exceptional natural phenomena. Consequently, most cases considering the "act of God" defense have rejected it. [See United States v. Stringfellow (CD CA 1987) 661 F.Supp. 1053, 1061—heavy rainfall not "act of God" within meaning of CERCLA defense where rains foreseeable based on normal climatic conditions and where harm caused by rain on toxic waste disposal facility could have been prevented through design of proper drainable channels; United States v. W.R. Grace & Co.-Conn. (D MT 2002) 280 F.Supp.2d 1135, 1148—fact that vermiculite and asbestos were naturally-occurring on properties was not natural phenomena of exceptional nature within ambit of "act of God" defense]

(b) [5:104.1] "Act of war" narrowly construed: CERCLA does not define "act of war." The few authorities discussing the defense, however, suggest the term has a narrow meaning in line with the general legislative intent that CERCLA operate as a strict liability statute with narrowly-construed exceptions. [United States v. Shell Oil Co. (9th Cir. 2002) 294 F3d 1045, 1061]

Consequently, the Ninth Circuit has held that an "act of war" triggering the CERCLA § 9607(b)(2) defense does not include all types of governmental action taken under authority of the War Powers Clause of the U.S. Constitution; there must minimally be acts of combat. "To take but one example, we have been unable to discover any case in which wartime price controls have been held to be 'acts of war.'" [United States v. Shell Oil Co., supra, 294 F3d at 1061-1062 (rejecting 42 USC § 9607(b)(2) defense based on government activities in regulating wartime petroleum production)]

(c) [5:105] "Sole" cause limitation: Neither defense is available unless the PRP can show the "act of God" or "act of war" was the sole cause of the hazardous substance release. [United States v. Stringfellow (CD CA 1987) 661 F.Supp. 1053, 1061 ("act of God" defense); United States v. Shell Oil Co. (9th Cir. 2002) 294 F3d 1045, 1062 ("act of war" defense)]

(2) [5:106] Third party defense: Alternatively, a PRP may establish a complete defense by proving by a preponderance of the evidence that the release or threatened release of a hazardous substance and the damages resulting therefrom were caused solely by "an act or omission of a third party other than an employee or agent of the defendant, or than one whose act or omission occurs in connection with a contractual relationship, existing directly or indirectly, with the defendant …" [42 USC § 9607(b)(3)]

Thus, the third party defense is available only to PRPs who have no direct or indirect employee, agency or contractual relationship with the party responsible for the hazardous substance contamination. [United States v. Monsanto Co. (4th Cir. 1988) 858 F2d 160, 169—PRP's lease relationship with disposing party negated defense; United States v. 175 Inwood Assocs. LLP (ED NY 2004) 330 F.Supp.2d 213, 227-229 (same even where lease assigned to party asserting defense); O'Neil v. Picillo (D RI 1988) 682 F.Supp. 706, 728—PRP failed to meet burden of proving a "totally unrelated third party is the sole cause of the release" (emphasis in original)]

(a) [5:106.1] Narrowly construed: Like the other CERCLA defenses, the third party defense is construed narrowly to further CERCLA's remedial purpose. [Castaic Lake Water Agency v. Whittaker Corp. (CD CA 2003) 272 F.Supp.2d 1053, 1080]

(b) [5:107] Contractual relationship limitation—application to real property sale transactions: The circumstances under which buyers of contaminated properties might successfully assert the 42 USC § 9607(b)(3) defense appear very limited:

• With respect to the immediate seller, a buyer's third party defense would undoubtedly fail because buyer and seller are in a direct contractual relationship.

• Moreover, buyers will undoubtedly face difficulty in successfully asserting the third party defense with respect to any other person or entity who ever owned the property because the buyers arguably have an "indirect" contractual relationship with all persons and entities in the chain of title. [See California Dept. of Toxic Substances Control v. Westside Delivery, LLC (9th Cir. 2018) 888 F3d 1085, 1094-1099—defendant who purchased contaminated property at county tax auction had indirect contractual relationship with previous owner and thus could not claim third party defense]

(c) [5:108] "Due care" and "precautions" limitations: Even if a PRP can overcome the contractual relationship limitation, a successful third party defense also requires proof that:

• The PRP "exercised due care with respect to the hazardous substance concerned, taking into consideration the characteristics of such hazardous substance, in light of all relevant facts and circumstances"; and

• The PRP "took precautions against foreseeable acts or omissions of any such third party and the consequences that could foreseeably result from such acts or omissions." [42 USC § 9607(b)(3); see State of New York v. Shore Realty Corp. (2nd Cir. 1985) 759 F2d 1032, 1049—defense not available because precautions against foreseeable act or omissions condition not satisfied; Castaic Lake Water Agency v. Whittaker Corp. (CD CA 2003) 272 F.Supp.2d 1053, 1082-1084—defendants raised genuine issue of fact re third party defense by proffering evidence that they took steps to protect their drinking water customers from contaminated water]

1) [5:108.1] Defense defeated by willful ignorance: Under the provisions set forth at ¶ 5:106 ff., "[w]illful ignorance of how a third party disposes of a hazardous substance would preclude use of the defense." [United States v. Bliss (ED MO 1987) 667 F.Supp. 1298, 1304, fn. 3]

[5:108.2 - 5:108.4] Reserved.

2) [5:108.5] "Due care" condition construed:42 USC § 9607(b)(3) does not define "due care" in the context of the third party defense. But the legislative history indicates that a PRP raising the defense must show that it took all precautions with respect to the particular waste that a "similarly situated reasonable and prudent person" would have taken under the circumstances "to protect the public from a health or environmental threat." [See Castaic Lake Water Agency v. Whittaker Corp. (CD CA 2003) 272 F.Supp.2d 1053, 1082]

"Due care" does not, however, impose a duty on a purchaser to investigate prior to purchase "whether there is pollution on the land caused by someone with whom the purchaser is not in contractual privity." [United States v. 175 Inwood Assocs. LLP (ED NY 2004) 330 F.Supp.2d 213, 230 (internal quotes omitted) (but "no duty to investigate" rule inapplicable because defendant was in contractual privity with disposing party); Bob's Beverage, Inc. v. Acme, Inc. (ND OH 1999) 169 F.Supp.2d 695, 715]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

• [5:108.6] Defendants who had notice of the presence of hazardous substances on their property when they purchased it, but took almost five years to complete clean-up activities, failed to show they used "due care" under the circumstances. [United States v. 175 Inwood Assocs. LLP, supra, 330 F.Supp.2d at 230]

• [5:108.7] Defendant first detected hazardous substances in on-site groundwater samples in 1988. It did not, however, report the detection to the EPA or the equivalent state agency until 1992, even though by its own account many 55-gallon drums containing the substances had been left outside, unattended on the property adjoining its own, for years. A reasonable jury could not conclude that defendant took all precautions with respect to the hazardous waste that a similarly situated reasonable person would have taken under the circumstances. [Bob's Beverage, Inc. v. Acme, Inc. (ND OH 1999) 169 F.Supp.2d 695, 716]

(d) [5:109] "Sole" cause limitation: Like the "act of war"/"act of God" defense, the third party defense applies only where a totally unrelated third party is the sole cause of the contamination.

The "sole" cause limitation incorporates the concept of proximate or legal cause in negligence jurisprudence. As such, a third party is not the sole cause of contamination if the hazardous substance release was unforeseeable and the party's conduct was an indirect and insubstantial link in the chain of events leading to the release. [Castaic Lake Water Agency v. Whittaker Corp. (CD CA 2003) 272 F.Supp.2d 1053, 1081-1082 (collecting cases)]

A fortiori, the third party defense is not available where there are multiple causes of the release or threatened release at the contaminated site. [United States v. Stringfellow (CD CA 1987) 661 F.Supp. 1053, 1061—multiple causes precluded third party defense based on alleged "negligence and reckless conduct" of State of California; see also State of New York v. Shore Realty Corp. (2nd Cir. 1985) 759 F2d 1032, 1049]

(3) [5:110] "Innocent landowner defense": PRPs not eligible for the third party defense because they are in a direct contractual relationship with the polluting party (¶ 5:106 ff.) may nonetheless escape liability under CERCLA's "innocent landowner defense." [42 USC § 9601(35)(A)] A buyer may successfully assert the innocent landowner defense against the immediate seller, despite their direct contractual relationship, so long as the buyer can satisfy all of the statutory conditions (¶ 5:111 ff.).

The innocent landowner defense applies in different ways to different types of situations (e.g., PRPs who acquired their properties by gift, bequest or operation of law are treated differently from governmental entity PRPs; see 42 USC § 9601(35)(A)). The discussion at ¶ 5:111 ff. focuses on the defense as applied between buyers and sellers of real property.

(a) [5:111] Qualifying conditions: In the context of real property buyers and sellers, a property owner asserting the innocent landowner defense must satisfy the following conditions by a preponderance of the evidence:

• The property owner acquired the property after the disposal or placement of the hazardous substance on, in or at the property;

• At the time the property owner acquired an interest in the property, the property owner did not know and had no reason to know that any hazardous substance that is the subject of the release or threatened release was disposed of on, in or at the property (see¶ 5:113);

• The property owner exercised due care with respect to the subject hazardous substance, taking into consideration the characteristics of that substance, under the circumstances (see ¶ 5:108, 5:108.5 ff.);

• The property owner took precautions against foreseeable acts or omissions of third parties and the consequences that could foreseeably result from such acts or omissions (see¶ 5:108);

• The property owner has provided full cooperation, assistance and access to the property to persons authorized to conduct response actions at the property (including the cooperation and access necessary for the installation, integrity, operation and maintenance of any complete or partial response action);

• The property owner has complied with any land use restrictions established or relied on in connection with the response action at the property; and

• The property owner has not impeded the effectiveness or integrity of any "institutional control" employed at the property in connection with a response action. [42 USC § 9601(35)(A); see Kaufman & Broad-South Bay v. Unisys Corp. (ND CA 1994) 868 F.Supp. 1212, 1216]

1) [5:112] Comment: Most of the relatively few reported decisions to have considered the innocent landowner defense have rejected it (see United States v. Monsanto Co. (4th Cir. 1988) 858 F2d 160, 168, fn. 14); and the cases upholding the defense have involved special circumstances (see, e.g., United States v. Pacific Hide & Fur Depot, Inc. (D ID 1989) 716 F.Supp. 1341, 1347-1349—successful PRPs inherited property and were not involved in business causing contamination; United States v. Serafini (MD PA 1988) 706 F.Supp. 346, 353-354—court conceded plausibility of innocent landowner defense, but only in context of denying government's summary judgment motion).

The EPA website offers some general guidance regarding the threshold conditions (see "Enforcement Discretion Guidance Regarding Statutory Criteria for Those Who May Qualify as CERCLA Bona Fide Prospective Purchasers, Contiguous Property Owners, or Innocent Landowners (`Common Elements')," available at www.epa.gov).

(b) [5:113] "Appropriate inquiry" required: To establish that the property owner had no reason to know of the presence of hazardous materials on the property (¶ 5:111), the owner must prove that:

• On or before the date the property was acquired, the property owner made "all appropriate inquiries" into the previous ownership and uses of the property consistent with good commercial or customary practice; and

• The property owner took "reasonable steps" to stop any continued release, prevent any threatened future release, and prevent or limit any human, environmental or natural resource exposure to any previously released hazardous substance. [42 USC § 9601(35)(B)(i); see United States v. W.R. Grace & Co.-Conn. (D MT 2002) 280 F.Supp.2d 1135, 1147-1148—"appropriate inquiry" requirement not met where owner merely stated that when property purchased there was no active mining and it was not aware of presence of asbestos]

1) [5:114] Applicable standard: The "appropriate inquiry" standard for the innocent landowner defense is the same as for the bona fide prospective purchaser exemption. [40 CFR § 312.1(b)(1)(i); ¶ 5:86.6]

2) [5:115] Effect of finding contamination during preacquisition inquiry—defense not available: A property owner who finds contamination before purchasing the property cannot assert the innocent landowner defense but may qualify for the "bona fide prospective purchaser" exemption so long as certain conditions are satisfied (¶ 5:86 ff.).

a) [5:116] Comment: Like the "contiguous property owner" exemption (¶ 5:85), the innocent landowner defense is extremely difficult to establish with regard to industrial and most commercial properties since they usually have some level of contamination. Nonetheless, a vigorous preacquisition environmental investigation conducted in an effort to preserve the innocent landowner defense has certain benefits.

[5:117 - 5:118.4] Reserved.

(c) [5:118.5] Same analysis re eligibility for cost recovery action: Although cast as an affirmative defense, CERCLA's "innocent landowner" provisions also set forth the appropriate analysis for determining whether a current landowner, presumed to be a PRP, is free from liability and thus eligible to bring a cost recovery action (as opposed to a contribution action) against other PRPs (¶ 5:125.1 ff.). [Boyce v. Bumb (ND CA 1996) 944 F.Supp. 807, 812, fn. 10]

(d) [5:118.6] Defense available to prior owners? It is an open question whether the innocent landowner defense is available only to current owners, or both current and past owners. [See Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp. (9th Cir. 2001) 270 F3d 863, 883, fn. 10 (en banc)]

(4) [5:119] No third party or innocent landowner defense for intervening landowners who fail to disclose hazardous materials: Intervening landowners are not eligible to assert either the third party defense or the innocent landowner defense (see also ¶ 5:63 re intervening landowner status under CERCLA):

Notwithstanding availability of the innocent landowner defense generally, "if the defendant obtained actual knowledge of the release or threatened release of a hazardous substance at [the property] when the defendant owned the real property and then subsequently transferred ownership of the property to another person without disclosing such knowledge, such defendant shall be treated as liable … and no [third party or innocent landowner] defense … shall be available to such defendant." [42 USC § 9601(35)(C)]

Accordingly, a seller who takes a head-in-the-sand approach to a known (or potential) hazardous substance condition by failing or refusing to disclose the problem to a prospective buyer, is disqualified from taking advantage of the third party defense or innocent landowner defense in subsequent litigation.

b. [5:120] No nonstatutory defenses: CERCLA liability is subject only to those defenses specifically set forth in the statutory scheme and no others.

(1) [5:120.1] Equitable defenses: Nonstatutory equitable defenses such as laches are not recognized defenses to CERCLA liability. [Town of Munster, Ind. v. Sherwin-Williams Co., Inc. (7th Cir. 1994) 27 F3d 1268, 1271]

Thus, e.g., the notion of caveat emptor will not itself operate as a seller's defense to a buyer's claim for contribution toward the cost of cleaning up an environmentally troubled property. [Smith Land & Improvement Corp. v. Celotex Corp. (3rd Cir. 1988) 851 F2d 86, 89-90 (but "caveat emptor" may be considered in mitigation of amount due by contribution); see also Mardan Corp. v. C.G.C. Music, Ltd. (9th Cir. 1986) 804 F2d 1454, 1457, fn. 3 (but upholding bar to buyer's indemnification action against seller based on express settlement and release agreement)]

(a) [5:120.2] Compare—response cost allocation: Equitable defenses may be considered, however, in allocating response cost liability between PRPs. See¶ 5:135.

[5:120.3 - 5:120.4] Reserved.

(2) [5:120.5] Negligence-based defenses: Similarly, negligence-type defenses based on duty, causation or contribution are not recognized defenses to CERCLA liability. [State of Calif. Dept. of Toxic Substances Control v. Alco Pac., Inc. (CD CA 2002) 217 F.Supp.2d 1028, 1037]

However, causation may be considered in apportioning liability between PRPs (¶ 5:73 ff.) or in connection with the statutory third party defense (¶ 5:106 ff.).

4. [5:121] Government Rights of Action: The government has two options when there is a release (or threatened release) subject to CERCLA:

• The government may order a responsible party to conduct the clean-up pursuant to 42 USC § 9606 (¶ 5:122); or

• The government may conduct the clean-up itself and file a cost-recovery action under 42 USC § 9607(a)(4) (¶ 5:121.1 ff.). [42 USC § 9604; Cooper Indus., Inc. v. Aviall Services, Inc. (2004) 543 US 157, 161, 125 S.Ct. 577, 580; City of Rialto v. West Coast Loading Corp. (9th Cir. 2009) 581 F3d 865, 869; see also Matter of Bell Petroleum Services, Inc. (5th Cir. 1993) 3 F3d 889, 897—one purpose of statute is shifting cost of cleaning up environmental harm from taxpayers to parties who benefited from disposal of wastes that caused harm]

a. Government-conducted clean-up

(1) [5:121.1] Government's prima facie cost-recovery case: The government (having remediated the contaminated site) establishes a prima facie CERCLA case for recovery of its response costs by proving:

• the site is a "facility" (¶ 5:5.4);

• a "release" or "threatened release" (¶ 5:5.3) of a "hazardous substance" occurred at the facility (¶ 5:5.1);

• it incurred costs in responding to the release or threatened release; and

• the defendant is the liable party (¶ 5:7). [Redevelopment Agency of City of San Diego v. Salvation Army (2002) 103 CA4th 755, 764-765, 127 CR2d 30, 39; United States v. Chapman (9th Cir. 1998) 146 F3d 1166, 1169]

(a) [5:121.1a] "Necessary nexus" between costs incurred and defendant not required: With regard to the "incurred costs" element of its prima facie cost-recovery case, the government need only show that it in fact incurred response costs; it need not prove that the costs were necessary or that defendant caused the government to incur the costs. [United States v. W.R. Grace & Co.-Conn. (D MT 2002) 280 F.Supp.2d 1135, 1146-1147]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(b) [5:121.2] Defendant's burden: Once the government establishes its prima facie case, the burden shifts to defendant to prove the government's response action was inconsistent with the National Contingency Plan (NCP, see¶ 5:121.3 ff.). [United States v. Chapman (9th Cir. 1998) 146 F3d 1166, 1169]

1) [5:121.3] Nature of NCP: The "National Contingency Plan," promulgated by the EPA as regulations pursuant to CERCLA (42 USC § 9605(a); 40 CFR Part 300), sets forth governmental standards for environmental assessment, investigation, evaluation and clean-up, and establishes national priorities with respect to the use of Superfund moneys. [See Cooper Indus., Inc. v. Aviall Services, Inc. (2004) 543 US 157, 161, 125 S.Ct. 577, 580, fn. 2; Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. City of Lodi, Calif. (9th Cir. 2002) 302 F3d 928, 949]

2) [5:121.3a] Effect of failure to comply with NCP: The NCP is designed to make the party seeking response costs choose a cost-effective course of action. Accordingly, only response costs incurred in accordance with the NCP are recoverable under CERCLA. [Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. City of Lodi, Calif. (9th Cir. 2002) 302 F3d 928, 949; United States v. Chapman (9th Cir. 1998) 146 F3d 1166, 1170; see also Orange County Water Dist. v. Alcoa Global Fasteners, Inc. (2017) 12 CA5th 252, 325, 219 CR3d 474, 537 (noting State Superfund places NCP compliance at "heart" of environmental remediation actions)—failure to comply with national environmental remediation program standards precluded water district's State Superfund claim]

a) [5:121.3b] Compare—partial compliance: However, where some (but not all) response action did not comply with the NCP, clean-up costs remain recoverable to the extent the action taken was consistent with the NCP. [State of Minn. v. Kalman W. Abrams Metals, Inc. (8th Cir. 1998) 155 F3d 1019, 1024—although state agency could not recover costs for failed "high-risk, high-cost" action, it could recover costs for subsequent remedial action consistent with NCP]

3) [5:121.4] Government response action presumed consistent with NCP: When the United States is seeking recovery of response costs, consistency with the NCP is presumed. The burden is on the defendant to rebut the presumption of consistency by establishing that the government's response action was arbitrary and capricious. [State of Calif. ex rel. Calif. Dept. of Toxic Substances Control v. Neville Chem. Co. (9th Cir. 2004) 358 F3d 661, 673; Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. City of Lodi, Calif. (9th Cir. 2002) 302 F3d 928, 949]

A state agency is similarly entitled to the presumption of consistency with the NCP. [See Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. City of Lodi, Calif., supra, 302 F3d at 950 & fn. 20]

a) [5:121.5] Local municipalities? A city acting under the oversight of a state agency also is entitled to the presumption of consistency with the NCP. But whether a city seeking recovery of response costs on its own has the benefit of the presumption is undecided. [See Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. City of Lodi, Calif. (9th Cir. 2002) 302 F3d 928, 950 & fn. 20 (agreement between City and state agency re clean-up of toxic sites designated City as "lead enforcement entity" but in essence gave state agency responsibility of conducting clean-up); see also Orange County Water Dist. v. Alcoa Global Fasteners, Inc. (2017) 12 CA5th 252, 327, 219 CR3d 474, 538—policies underlying CERCLA's cost recovery provisions militated against extending NCP presumption to county water district's State Superfund claim]

[5:121.6 - 5:121.9] Reserved.

(2) [5:121.10] Recoverable costs: CERCLA permits the recovery of "all costs" arising from a removal or remedial action. [42 USC § 9607(a)(4)(A); see also United States v. Iron Mountain Mines (ED CA 2010) 724 F.Supp.2d 1086, 1092—if United States obtains less than complete relief from settling parties, it may bring action against any nonsettling PRPs for remainder (discussed further at¶ 5:136)]

(a) [5:121.11] Attorney fees: The U.S. Government or a State or Indian Tribe is entitled to recover its litigation expenses —including attorney fees—as part of its response costs. [United States v. Chapman (9th Cir. 1998) 146 F3d 1166, 1174-1176—"all costs" under 42 USC § 9607(a)(4)(A) includes attorney fees; see also Pakootas v. Teck Cominco Metals, Ltd. (9th Cir. 2018) 905 F3d 565, 583-584 (declining to limit Chapman to response cost actions premised on defendant's refusal to obey EPA cleanup order or fund response costs)]

But any other litigant is limited to recovery of "necessary costs of response" (¶ 5:125) which does not include litigation-related attorney fees (¶ 5:128). [Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. City of Lodi, Calif. (9th Cir. 2002) 302 F3d

928, 953—42 USC § 9607(a)(4)(A) "all costs" recovery (including attorney fees) not available to cities and other local municipalities]

1) [5:121.12] Limited to "reasonable fees": Although the statute does not expressly so provide, the Ninth Circuit interprets it to authorize an award of only such fees as the court deems reasonable. [United States v. Chapman (9th Cir. 1998) 146 F3d 1166, 1174—where government initially claimed $34,000 in response costs, $400,000 attorney fee award vacated and case remanded for redetermination of reasonable fees]

Not all courts agree, however. [See United States v. Domenic Lombardi Realty, Inc. (D RI 2004) 334 F.Supp.2d 105, 108—declining to follow Chapman because "CERCLA contains no statutory language limiting recovery to 'reasonable' fees or costs" in government enforcement actions (but court also noted it was sympathetic to defendant's concern that government overstaffed case and used it as training vehicle for junior attorneys)]

(b) [5:121.12a] Investigation costs: The U.S. Government or a State or Indian Tribe also is entitled to recover costs associated with investigating contamination and identifying potentially responsible parties. [Pakootas v. Teck Cominco Metals, Ltd. (9th Cir. 2018) 905 F3d 565, 580-582—Tribe entitled to recover costs of investigating presence and movement of toxic waste, determining whether contaminants leached into environment, and tracing contamination to defendant's activities]

(3) [5:121.13] Statute of limitations: A government cost-recovery action must be commenced within the following time periods:

• Removal action—within three years after completion of the removal action (or within six years after a "determination to grant a waiver under section 9604(c)(1)(C) … for continued response action");

• Remedial action—within six years after initiation of physical on-site construction of the remedial action, except that if remedial action is initiated within three years after completion of the removal action (above), costs incurred in the removal action may be recovered in the remedial action cost-recovery suit. [42 USC § 9613(g)(2); United States v. Drum Service Co. of Florida (MD FL 1999) 109 F.Supp.2d 1348, 1355-1356]

To determine which statute of limitations applies, the clean-up must be identified as either a "removal" or "remedial" action. [United States v. Drum Service Co. of Florida, supra, 109 F.Supp.2d at 1356] The terms are defined by statute (42 USC § 9601(23), (24)) and interpreted by case law. See¶ 5:133.17.

(a) [5:121.13a] Accrual of removal action—end of *entire removal phase: For purposes of triggering the statute of limitations, the general rule is that all removal actions performed at a single site constitute a single indivisible removal action. As such, the statute of limitations begins to run only at the conclusion of the entire removal phase. [State of Calif. Dept. of Toxic Substances Control v. Alco Pac., Inc. (CD CA 2004) 308 F.Supp.2d 1124, 1133—"This finding conforms with the vast majority of case law discussing the issue of CERCLA statute of limitations"]

"On a practical level, this appears to be the correct approach because it is apparent that the clean-up of toxic waste can often only be accomplished in phases. [I]t would defeat the purposes of [CERCLA] to require the government to sue responsible parties at the conclusion of each phase." [State of Calif. Dept. of Toxic Substances Control v. Alco Pac., Inc., supra, 308 F.Supp.2d at 1133 (internal citation omitted)]

1) [5:121.13b] "Unusual circumstances" exception? One court has applied a narrow exception to the general rule set forth at ¶ 5:121.13a, treating each removal action at a single site as a separate removal action under "unusual circumstances." [United States v. Ambroid Co., Inc. (D MA 1999) 34 F.Supp.2d 86, 88-89—"unusual circumstances" included EPA's completion of clean-up and closing of site, EPA's transfer of site responsibility to state authorities, and EPA's treatment of removal actions as separate]

However, Ambroid has been criticized as "a dubious precedent because no [other] court appears willing to follow it." [State of Calif. Dept. of Toxic Substances Control v. Alco Pac., Inc. (CD CA 2004) 308 F.Supp.2d 1124, 1133]

(b) [5:121.14] Accrual of remedial action—adoption of final remedial plan: The limitations period for a government cost-recovery remediation suit does not commence to run until adoption of a final remedial action plan. [State of Calif. ex rel. Calif. Dept. of Toxic Substances Control v. Neville Chem. Co. (9th Cir. 2004) 358 F3d 661, 663, 666-667—"initiation of physical onsite construction of remedial action" can only occur after final remedial action plan adopted (also noting this rule is consistent with all other circuits deciding issue)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

1) [5:121.14a] Effect of incurring costs before plan adopted: Costs incurred before a final remedial plan is approved are not recoverable in a remedial action. But those costs may be recovered as "removal" costs, subject to the three-year statute of limitations for removal actions. [State of Calif. ex rel. Calif. Dept. of Toxic Substances Control v. Neville Chem. Co. (9th Cir. 2004) 358 F3d 661, 663, 670, fn. 6]

2) [5:121.14b] Comment—private cost-recovery remedial suits? Neville, supra, did not address whether the rule at ¶ 5:121.14 ff. applies to private cost-recovery "remedial" suits (see¶ 5:133.15). [State of Calif. ex rel. Calif. Dept. of Toxic Substances Control v. Neville Chem. Co. (9th Cir. 2004) 358 F3d 661, 663, 667, fn. 3] However, there does not appear to be any logical reason why such suits should be treated differently.

(4) [5:121.15] Lien to secure costs recovery: CERCLA authorizes the government to file a lien on the contaminated property in order to secure recovery of its cleanup costs and damages. [42 USC § 9607(l)]

(a) [5:121.16] Automatic: The government's lien is created automatically—i.e., a lien on the contaminated property may be recorded without notice or a hearing. [See 42 USC § 9607(l)]

Moreover, because filing of the lien is an "enforcement activity," any preenforcement challenges to the merits of the lien (e.g., challenges pertaining to property owner's liability) are barred by 42 USC § 9613(h) (limiting federal court jurisdiction in connection with preenforcement review of government response action and administrative orders). [Reardon v. United States (1st Cir. 1991) 947 F2d 1509, 1512-1513; see also Pakootas v. Teck Cominco Metals, Ltd. (9th Cir. 2011) 646 F3d 1214, 1220—§ 9613(h) operates as a "jurisdiction-stripping" statute by withholding federal jurisdiction to review claims that constitute "challenges" to ongoing CERCLA clean-up actions, including those made in citizen suits and under non-CERCLA statutes]

(b) [5:121.17] Constitutionality? At least one circuit has held that 42 USC § 9607(l) violates the Fifth Amendment Due Process Clause because it deprives a property owner of a significant property interest without notice and a predeprivation hearing. [Reardon v. United States (1st Cir. 1991) 947 F2d 1509, 1523-1524; compare United States v. Glidden Co. (ND OH 1997) 3 F.Supp.2d 823, 837—no due process violation where owners received notice of EPA's intent to perfect lien and were provided with informal hearing before neutral EPA official (aff'd on this point in United States v. 150 Acres of Land (6th Cir. 2000) 204 F3d 698, 710-711)]

(c) [5:121.18] "Windfall lien" on "bona fide prospective purchaser" property: The government may also impose a so-called "windfall lien" on property owned by a "bona fide prospective purchaser" (¶ 5:86 ff.) to secure recovery of its otherwise unrecovered response (clean-up) costs so long as its response action increased the fair market value of the property above the fair market value of the property that existed before the response action was initiated. By agreement with the property owner, the lien may alternatively be imposed on other property of the owner. [See 42 USC § 9607(r)(2), (3) & (4)]

b. [5:122] Government ordered clean-up: Instead of undertaking the clean-up itself, the government may require a PRP to undertake the response action. [42 USC § 9606(a); Pakootas v. Teck Cominco Metals, Ltd. (9th Cir. 2006) 452 F3d 1066, 1072-1073; see also City of Rialto v. West Coast Loading Corp. (9th Cir. 2009) 581 F3d 865, 869—Congress gave government option of ordering PRPs to conduct clean-up because Superfund money is limited]

In such cases, the EPA either will issue an administrative order requiring remedial action or seek a court injunction compelling the responsible party to initiate the clean-up. [42 USC § 9606(a); City of Rialto v. West Coast Loading Corp., supra, 581 F3d at 870; Pakootas v. Teck Cominco Metals, Ltd., supra, 452 F3d at 1073]

It is unclear whether, in issuing a clean-up order under § 9606(a), the EPA must allege the same elements that are required for a private 42 USC § 9607(a) cost-recovery action. [Pakootas v. Teck Cominco Metals, Ltd., supra, 452 F3d at 1074, fn. 13]

(1) [5:122.1] Private cost-recovery/contribution actions: Private parties who are ordered to undertake a response action may file suit against other PRPs to recover all or a part of the clean-up costs incurred. [See 42 USC §§ 9607(a) (joint and several cost-recovery actions), 9613(f)(1) (contribution actions)] See detailed discussion at¶ 5:125 ff.

(2) [5:122.2] Costs recoverable by government: The government may incur recoverable enforcement costs even when private parties are ordered to conduct the clean-up. [Atlantic Richfield Co. v. American Airlines, Inc. (10th Cir. 1996) 98 F3d 564, 569]

(a) [5:122.3] Oversight costs: The government's recoverable enforcement costs include costs incurred in monitoring or overseeing a responsible party's clean-up. [United States v. E.I. DuPont de Nemours & Co. Inc. (3rd Cir. 2005) 432 F3d 161, 162 (en banc); United States v. Chromalloy American Corp. (5th Cir. 1998) 158 F3d 345, 349]

The California Superfund expressly includes enforcement and oversight activities within the meaning of "response." [See Health & Saf.C. § 78140 (recodified & added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257, oper. 1/1/24)]

(b) [5:122.4] Indirect costs of managing Superfund program in general: The government may also recover the proportion of the overall costs incurred to manage the Superfund program in general that are attributable to the particular clean-up project involved. [United States v. W.R. Grace & Co. (9th Cir. 2005) 429 F3d 1224, 1250]

(3) [5:123] Judicial review of clean-up orders: CERCLA permits judicial review of challenges to government clean-up orders, but limits the timing of such reviews. In short, a PRP can obtain judicial review of an administrative order requiring remedial action either before or after it has complied with the order; and, as soon as it spends dollar one, it can always seek cost recovery from other PRPs and obtain judicial review of those claims. [See 42 USC § 9613(h); City of Rialto v. West Coast Loading Corp. (9th Cir. 2009) 581 F3d 865, 871-872—once PRP begins complying with order it cannot seek judicial review until it completes required work]

"It is true that there are some limitations and disincentives attendant to each avenue of judicial review. But Congress intentionally chose not to authorize judicial review whenever a PRP desired. Instead, by specifying the '[t]iming of review' in § 9613(h), Congress chose to prioritize 'the timely cleanup of hazardous waste sites.'" [City of Rialto v. West Coast Loading Corp., supra, 581 F3d at 872 (emphasis in original); Pakootas v. Teck Cominco Metals, Ltd. (9th Cir. 2011) 646 F3d 1214, 1220—by enacting § 9613(h), Congress "made a choice" to protect execution of CERCLA plans during their pendency from lawsuits that might interfere with expeditious clean-up efforts; compare General Elec. Co. v. E.P.A. (DC Cir. 2004) 360 F3d 188, 190-191—judicial review timing limits do not apply to challenges to CERCLA's constitutionality]

(a) [5:123.1] Section 9613(h) does not bar state court actions: Unlike 42 USC § 9613(b) (¶ 5:12), § 9613(h) does not apply to state courts and, therefore, does not affect their jurisdiction. 42 USC 9613(h) only applies to federal courts and does not implicitly prohibit state court actions arising under state law. Thus, a property owner may bring an action in state court under state common law to recover restoration damages to rehabilitate property that is subject to an ongoing CERCLA cleanup. [Atlantic Richfield Co. v. Christian (2020) 590 US _, _, 140 S.Ct. 1335, 1349-1352—Montana state court had jurisdiction over property owners' lawsuit seeking restoration damages under state common law to rehabilitate property within Superfund site (property owners, however, were required to obtain EPA approval for their proposed plan; ¶ 5:169.3)]

[5:124] Reserved.

5. Private Rights of Action

a. [5:125] Authority, generally—"necessary costs of response": CERCLA expressly gives private parties the right to sue PRPs to recover all or a portion of the "necessary costs of response" incurred in remediating the contaminated property. [42 USC §§ 9607(a)(4)(B) & 9613(f); see United States v. Atlantic Research Corp. (2007) 551 US 128, 131, 127 S.Ct. 2331, 2333; Cooper Indus., Inc. v. Aviall Services, Inc. (2004) 543 US 157, 160, 125 S.Ct. 577, 580; Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp. (9th Cir. 2001) 270 F3d 863, 870 (en banc)]

Courts have also indicated private contribution actions may be brought under federal common law, although that is "debatable." [Cooper Indus., Inc. v. Aviall Services, Inc., supra, 543 US at 162, 125 S.Ct. at 581]

Similarly, the California Superfund provides for private actions between PRPs seeking contribution or indemnity. [Health & Saf.C. § 79670 (recodified & added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257, oper. 1/1/24); see also Otay Land Co., LLC v. U.E. Ltd., L.P. (2017) 15 CA5th 806, 825-826, 225 CR3d 119, 135-136 (decided under predecessor statute) (finding State Superfund's private right of action to be a grant of statutory indemnity that permits recovery of voluntarily incurred clean-up costs); Orange County Water Dist. v. Alcoa Global Fasteners, Inc. (2017) 12 CA5th 252, 301, 219 CR3d 474, 517 (decided under predecessor statute) (finding State Superfund's private right of action to be "an instance of statutory indemnity," entitling nonliable county water district to sue industrial site owners and operators for costs associated with project intended to address groundwater contamination (¶ 5:126.3)); Fullerton Redevelop. Agency v. Southern Calif. Gas Co. (2010) 183 CA4th 428, 432-433, 107 CR3d 396, 399 (decided under predecessor statute)—PRPs ordered to clean up contaminated property pursuant to state law may seek contribution and indemnity from those liable for associated costs]

(1) [5:125.1] Contribution vs. cost-recovery action: CERCLA recognizes two distinct types of private party actions:

- A cost-recovery suit (42 USC § 9607(a)) brought by a private party, whether a party subject to any of the CERCLA defenses (¶ 5:101 ff.) or a PRP, to recoup all of its own clean-up expenditures from a responsible party (i.e., a suit for complete indemnity in the nature of joint and several liability); or

- A contribution suit (42 USC § 9613(f)(1)) brought by a private PRP against other PRPs to recoup that portion of the plaintiff PRP's clean-up liability it paid, or has become liable to pay, under a settlement or judgment that exceeds the plaintiff PRP's pro rata (equitable) share of the overall liability. [United States v. Atlantic Research Corp. (2007) 551 US 128, 138-139, 127 S.Ct. 2331, 2338; see also Whittaker Corp. v. United States (9th Cir. 2016) 825 F3d 1002, 1006-1007 (¶ 5:125.2b, 5:125.3); Ameripride Services Inc. v. Texas Eastern Overseas Inc. (9th Cir. 2015) 782 F3d 474, 490 (¶ 5:126.10)]

  The remedies under 42 USC § 9607(a) and § 9613(f) are not coextensive or interchangeable. Quite the contrary, the two remedies "complement each other by providing causes of action to persons in different procedural circumstances." [United States v. Atlantic Research Corp., supra, 551 US at 139, 127 S.Ct. at 2338 (emphasis added; internal quotes omitted); see also Cooper Indus., Inc. v. Aviall Services, Inc. (2004) 543 US 157, 163, 125 S.Ct. 577, 582, fn. 3—cost-recovery and contribution remedies "are similar at a general level in that they both allow private parties to recoup costs from other private parties. But the two remedies are clearly distinct"]

  (a) [5:125.2] Cost-recovery action: A private party may bring a 42 USC § 9607(a) action against PRPs for full recovery of the costs it incurred in cleaning up the contaminated site. [United States v. Atlantic Research Corp. (2007) 551 US 128, 139, 127 S.Ct. 2331, 2338; see also Kotrous v. Goss-Jewett Co. of Northern Calif. (9th Cir. 2008) 523 F3d 924, 934—private parties may bring cost recovery actions even if they themselves are PRPs (discussed further at¶ 5:125.7); AMCAL Multi-Housing, Inc. v. Pacific Clays Products, Inc. (CD CA 2007) 518 F.Supp.2d 1194, 1196—private PRPs may bring cost recovery suits regardless of whether any statutory defense to PRP status applies (¶ 5:101 ff.)]

  Compare: A PRP who pays money to satisfy a clean-up settlement or judgment against it does not "incur" its own response costs but, instead, reimburses other parties for costs they incurred. Therefore, in this scenario, the plaintiff's claim against other PRPs is for contribution (¶ 5:125.3)—not§ 9607(a) "cost recovery." [United States v. Atlantic Research Corp., supra, 551 US at 138, 127 S.Ct. at 2338 & fn. 5; Agere Systems, Inc. v. Advanced Environmental Technology Corp. (3rd Cir. 2010) 602 F3d 204, 225]

  1) [5:125.2a] Recovery of voluntary clean-up costs: A 42 USC § 9607(a) cost-recovery action lies without any prior establishment of plaintiff's liability to a third party. Therefore, voluntarily-incurred clean-up costs are recoverable in (indeed, only in) a § 9607(a) cost-recovery action. [United States v. Atlantic Research Corp. (2007) 551 US 128, 139, 127 S.Ct. 2331, 2338, fn. 6; see also W.R. Grace & Co.-Conn. v. Zotos Int'l, Inc. (2nd Cir. 2009) 559 F3d 85, 96—PRPs not previously subjected to 42 USC §§ 9606/9607 actions who remediate contaminated sites under consent orders with state agencies voluntarily incur costs for purposes of filing cost-recovery actions; Consolidated Edison Co. of New York, Inc. v. UGI Utilities, Inc. (2005) 423 F3d 90, 97—PRP who entered into voluntary clean-up agreement with state agency to avoid liability for state law claims entitled to bring § 9607(a) cost-recovery action]

  Compare—42 USC § 9613(f) contribution claims for clean-up expenditures incurred during or following a civil action or under administrative or judicially approved settlement: See discussion at¶ 5:125.4 ff.

  2) [5:125.2b] Cost-recovery after PRP settlement with third party: A PRP's right to contribution for some expenses following settlement with a third party does not necessarily preclude the PRP from bringing a cost-recovery action for other expenses. [See Whittaker Corp. v. United States (9th Cir. 2016) 825 F3d 1002, 1011-1013—cost-recovery action against government improperly dismissed where expenses company sought to recover for investigating and cleaning up site were separate and distinct from those for which it was found liable to third party]

  3) [5:125.2c] Action against settling § 9316(f)(2) PRP: A PRP who has resolved its liability to the government in an administrative or judicially-approved settlement is insulated from contribution claims under CERCLA regarding matters addressed in the settlement (¶ 5:136); however, it may still be subject to a 42 USC § 9607(a) cost-recovery suit. [United States v. Atlantic Research Corp. (2007) 551 US 128, 140, 127 S.Ct. 2331, 2339; see further discussion at¶ 5:136 ff.]

4) [5:125.2d] Joint and several liability: Whereas reimbursement costs are equitably apportioned in a 42 USC § 9613(f) contribution action, PRP liability in a 42 USC § 9607(a) cost-recovery action apparently is joint and several. [United States v. Atlantic Research Corp. (2007) 551 US 128, 140, 127 S.Ct. 2331, 2338-2339 & fn. 7—"We assume without deciding" that § 9607(a) provides for joint and several liability]

(b) [5:125.3] Contribution action: 42 USC § 9613(f) explicitly grants PRPs a right of "contribution," construed in its traditional sense as referring to a "tortfeasor's right to collect from others responsible for the same tort after the tortfeasor has paid more than his or her proportionate share, the shares being determined as a percentage of fault." [United States v. Atlantic Research Corp. (2007) 551 US 128, 138, 127 S.Ct. 2331, 2337-2338 (quoting Black's Law Dictionary); see also Whittaker Corp. v. United States (9th Cir. 2016) 825 F3d 1002, 1007—parties use contribution to get reimbursed for being made to pay more than their fair share to someone else]

42 USC § 9613(f)(1) contribution actions are authorized before or after common liability under CERCLA has been established and there has been an inequitable distribution of the common liability. "[A] PRP's right to contribution under [§ 9613(f)(1)] is contingent upon an inequitable distribution of common liability among liable parties." [United States v. Atlantic Research Corp., supra, 551 US at 139, 127 S.Ct. at 2338; Agere Systems, Inc. v. Advanced Environmental Technology Corp. (3rd Cir. 2010) 602 F3d 204, 219—42 USC § 9613(f) contribution claims require "common liability" among PRPs at time underlying claim is resolved]

In 42 USC § 9613(f)(1) contribution actions, as distinguished from 42 USC § 9607(a) cost-recovery actions, plaintiffs may only recover costs they did not "incur." A PRP who pays money to satisfy a settlement agreement or a court judgment reimburses other parties for costs they incurred, and is thereby limited to a § 9613(f)(1) contribution claim. [United States v. Atlantic Research Corp., supra, 551 US at 139, 127 S.Ct. at 2338; see also Hobart Corp. v. Waste Mgmt. of Ohio, Inc. (6th Cir. 2014) 758 F3d 757, 767-768 & fn. 8 (finding no "logical distinction" between § 9613(f)(1) and (f)(3)(B) for purposes of cost reimbursement)—plaintiff's sole remedy against other PRPs under administrative settlement is contribution action; compare Agere Systems, Inc. v. Advanced Environmental Technology Corp. (3rd Cir. 2010) 602 F3d 204, 225 (distinguishing Atlantic Research)—PRPs who were never sued themselves and therefore did not have § 9613(f) contribution claims for costs they previously paid pursuant to private settlement agreements with other PRPs could pursue § 9607(a) cost-recovery action to recoup said costs]

1) [5:125.4] Section 9606/9607(a) action or settlement of liability as prerequisite to § 9613(f) contribution suit: CERCLA expressly authorizes PRP contribution claims only "during or following any civil action" under 42 USC § 9606 or § 9607(a), or by a PRP who has resolved its response-costs liability to the United States or a state in an administrative or judicially-approved settlement. [42 USC § 9613(f)(1) & (3)(B); see United States v. Atlantic Research Corp. (2007) 551 US 128, 132, 127 S.Ct. 2331, 2334 & fn. 1; Agere Systems, Inc. v. Advanced Environmental Technology Corp. (3rd Cir. 2010) 602 F3d 204, 217; see also Bernstein v. Bankert (7th Cir. 2012) 733 F3d 190, 201-202—PRP is limited to contribution once its CERCLA liability to government is "resolved"; and ¶ 5:125.5 ff.]

A PRP who has neither been sued by the government under 42 USC § 9606 to compel a clean-up or under § 9607(a) to recover response costs, nor been adjudged liable for response costs in an administrative or judicially approved settlement, may not obtain contribution under § 9613(f) from other liable parties for voluntarily-incurred clean-up costs. [See Cooper Indus., Inc. v. Aviall Services, Inc. (2004) 543 US 157, 160-161, 125 S.Ct. 577, 580] A PRP who has voluntarily incurred clean-up costs may, however, pursue cost recovery under § 9607(a). [See United States v. Atlantic Research Corp. (2007) 551 US 128, 138-139, 127 S.Ct. 2331, 2337-2338 (¶ 5:125.2a)]

a) [5:125.5] Administrative order sufficient? It is unsettled whether an administrative clean-up order itself qualifies as a "civil action" under 42 USC § 9606 or § 9607(a), permitting the PRP to bring a 42 USC § 9613(f)(1) contribution claim. [Cooper Indus., Inc. v. Aviall Services, Inc. (2004) 543 US 157, 168, 125 S.Ct. 577, 584, fn. 5 (raising but not deciding issue); see also Beazer East, Inc. v. Mead (3rd Cir. 2008) 525 F3d 255, 262 (noting Supreme Court "apparently left open" issue, but finding such claims "not wholly insubstantial and frivolous")]

b) [5:125.5a] Settlement of non-CERCLA liability: A settlement must resolve a CERCLA-specific liability to trigger 42 USC § 9613(f)(3)(B)'s right to contribution. [Territory of Guam v. United States (2021) 593 US 310, 313-316, 141 S.Ct. 1608, 1611-1612—consent decree resolving Clean Water Act claims did not trigger 3-year statute of limitations period for CERCLA contribution action]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

The Supreme Court expressly rejected arguments previously credited by some federal circuit courts of appeal in concluding that a settlement resolving a party's environmental liability under a non-CERCLA statute can trigger § 9613(f)(3)(B)'s right to contribution. [Territory of Guam v. United States, supra, _ US at _, 141 S.Ct. at 1614-1615; see also Consolidated Edison Co. of New York, Inc. v. UGI Utilities, Inc. (2nd Cir. 2005) 423 F3d 90, 95—"We read section 113(f)(3)(B) to create a contribution right only when liability for CERCLA claims, rather than some broader category of legal claims, is resolved"]

Comment: Territory of Guam, supra, apparently abrogates existing precedent in the Third, Seventh and Ninth Circuits holding § 9613(f)(3)(B)'s right to contribution is triggered when the party resolves some portion of their cleanup liability, regardless of whether the liability arises under CERCLA or some other statute. [See Refined Metals Corp. v. NL Indus. Inc. (7th Cir. 2019) 937 F3d 928, 931-932—statute of limitations on current owner's contribution action began running when owner entered settlement resolving liability for cleanup, even if settlement did not specifically address owner's CERCLA liability (¶ 5:133.5a); Asarco LLC v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (9th Cir. 2017) 866 F3d 1108, 1120-1121—corrective measures taken under RCRA consent decree qualified as § 9613(f)(3)(B) "response action"; Trinity Indus., Inc. v. Chicago Bridge & Iron Co. (3rd Cir. 2013) 735 F3d 131, 136-137—industrial site owner could seek contribution pursuant to consent order issued under Pennsylvania's environmental cleanup acts even though order was not made pursuant to CERCLA]

c) [5:125.5b] Civil action requirement jurisdictional? According to one court, the "civil action" prerequisite to a 42 USC § 9613(f) contribution suit (¶ 5:125.4) is not a jurisdictional threshold. Rather, it constitutes an element of the claim that can be waived by failure to timely object. [See Beazer East, Inc. v. Mead (3rd Cir. 2008) 525 F3d 255, 261, 265]

d) [5:125.5c] Future response costs: A responsible party may agree to pay estimated future response costs as part of a settlement to discharge its CERCLA liability. The responsible party, however, cannot immediately recover any portion of the amount paid to cover future response costs from other responsible parties in a 42 USC § 9613(f)(1) contribution action. This is because "speculative, potential future response costs are not recoverable in a CERCLA contribution action," even if the party seeking contribution already paid those costs as part of a settlement and the payment is irrevocable. [ASARCO LLC v. Atlantic Richfield Co., LLC (9th Cir. 2020) 975 F3d 859, 865-866—plaintiff could not pursue § 9613(f)(1) contribution for estimated future response costs it paid to federal and state governments under consent decree (total cleanup costs were about $50 million less than amount plaintiff paid under consent decree); see¶ 5:126.10 ff.]

In such cases, the party seeking CERCLA contribution is limited to (i) contribution for necessary response costs that were already incurred, and (ii) a declaratory judgment to establish liability and a contribution allocation for costs that have not been incurred, but may be incurred in the future. [ASARCO LLC v. Atlantic Richfield Co., supra, 975 F3d at 867-868; see¶ 5:132.2]

2) [5:125.6] No expanded right to contribution under § 9613(f)(1) "saving clause":42 USC § 9613(f)(1) has a "saving clause," stating that nothing "shall diminish the right of any person to bring an action for contribution in the absence of a civil action under section[s] 9606 … or 9607." [42 USC § 9613(f)(1); City of Emeryville v. Robinson (9th Cir. 2010) 621 F3d 1251, 1262]

The sole effect of this sentence is to preserve any cause of action for contribution that might exist independently of § 9613(f)(1). But the saving clause does not create an alternative contribution right of action or expand § 9613(f)(1) to authorize contribution actions not brought "during or following" a 42 USC § 9606 or § 9607(a) civil action; nor does it specify what other independent contribution causes of action (if any) might exist outside § 9613(f)(1). [Cooper Indus., Inc. v. Aviall Services, Inc. (2004) 543 US 157, 166-167, 125 S.Ct. 577, 583-584; and see City of Emeryville v. Robinson (9th Cir. 2010) 621 F3d 1251, 1262 (interpreting § 9613(f)(1) saving clause as precluding any finding of preemption as to state law contribution claims)]

3) [5:125.7] Implied right to contribution under § 9607(a)? The U.S. Supreme Court has not yet decided whether a PRP who does not satisfy the CERCLA prerequisites to a 42 USC § 9613(f) contribution claim might have an implied right of contribution under 42 USC § 9607(a) (i.e., a cost-recovery action claiming some form of liability against other PRPs other than joint and several, see¶ 5:125.9). [Cooper Indus., Inc. v. Aviall Services, Inc. (2004) 543 US

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

157, 170-171, 125 S.Ct. 577, 586—"we need not and do not decide today whether any judicially implied right of contribution survived the passage of SARA"]

However, given the Court's holding in Atlantic Research Corp., supra (¶ 5:125.2 ff.), the issue arguably now is moot. Indeed, because 42 USC § 9607(a) expressly permits PRPs to seek cost recovery, the Court determined it "need not address the alternative" argument that § 9607(a) contains an additional implied right of contribution for PRPs who are not eligible for 42 USC § 9613(f) relief. [United States v. Atlantic Research Corp. (2007) 551 US 128, 141, 127 S.Ct. 2331, 2339, fn. 8; see also Kotrous v. Goss-Jewett Co. of Northern Calif. (9th Cir. 2008) 523 F3d 924, 934—PRPs must seek cost recovery, not contribution, if they themselves are not subject to cost recovery action (effectively overruling prior Ninth Circuit authority holding any action between PRPs is necessarily for contribution); E.I. DuPont de Nemours & Co. v. United States (3rd Cir. 2007) 508 F3d 126, 135—PRPs who voluntarily incur clean-up costs may assert § 9607(a) cost recovery actions, thereby eliminating need to rely on § 9613(f) as their exclusive remedy]

4) [5:125.8] Apportionment on several liability basis: A 42 USC § 9613(f)(1) contribution claim necessarily is one to apportion the parties' common liability on a several basis; the action cannot be brought to impose joint and several liability (see¶ 5:72 ff.). [United States v. Atlantic Research Corp. (2007) 551 US 128, 140, 127 S.Ct. 2331, 2338-2339; see also United States v. Aerojet General Corp. (9th Cir. 2010) 606 F3d 1142, 1145—CERCLA allows PRPs to apportion response costs equitably]

a) [5:125.8a] Equitable factors: In resolving contribution claims and allocating response costs among liable parties, the court may use whatever equitable factors it deems appropriate. [United States v. Atlantic Research Corp. (2007) 551 US 128, 140, 127 S.Ct. 2331, 2339; compare Otay Land Co., LLC v. U.E. Ltd., L.P. (2017) 15 CA5th 806, 864-865, 225 CR3d 119, 166-167 (California Superfund contribution/indemnity actions)—court's analysis must include consideration of party responsibility for contributing to contamination; see discussion at ¶ 5:134 ff.]

Consequently, after balancing the equities, a court may find in an appropriate case that a particular PRP's equitable share of the total liability should be zero—in effect permitting full cost recovery against other PRPs (or letting the "zero liability" PRP off the hook in another PRP's contribution action). But again, the claim by such a PRP is one for contribution, not 42 USC § 9607(a) full cost recovery. [Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. v. City of Lodi, Calif. (9th Cir. 2002) 302 F3d 928, 945]

5) [5:125.9] Collateral source rule inapplicable to CERCLA contribution actions: Under the common law "collateral source rule," payments made to an injured party from sources other than the tortfeasor may not be credited against the tortfeasor's liability even if the payments cover all or part of the harm for which the tortfeasor is liable. [Friedland v. TIC-The Indus. Co. (10th Cir. 2009) 566 F3d 1203, 1205-1206; see detailed discussion in Haning, Flahavan, Cheng & Wright, Cal. Prac. Guide: Personal Injury (TRG), Ch. 3]

Plaintiff in a 42 USC § 9613(f) contribution action, however, may not invoke the common law collateral source rule. Reason: A § 9613(f) suit is a claim between two or more culpable tortfeasors; thus, the policy underlying the collateral source rule—to provide the "innocent party" with the benefit of any windfall—is not advanced in such cases. [See Friedland v. TIC-The Indus. Co., supra, 566 F3d at 1206-1207—PRP who received full compensation from two insurers before settling cost-recovery action with government could not maintain contribution action against another PRP]

(c) [5:125.10] Compare—narrower private party remedies under RCRA: The Resource Conservation and Recovery Act (RCRA, ¶ 5:15) contains a "citizen suit" provision permitting private parties to bring suit against certain responsible persons (including former owners) who have contributed or are contributing to the handling, storage, treatment, transportation or disposal of hazardous waste. [42 USC § 6972]

Even so, "contributing to" for purposes of imposing RCRA "generator" liability means a person must have a "measure of control" over the waste at the time of disposal or be otherwise "actively involved" in the waste disposal process. [See Hinds Investments, L.P. v. Angioli (9th Cir. 2011) 654 F3d 846, 852, discussed further at¶ 5:25.10d]

1) Application

• [5:125.10a] An environmental group's suit against the U.S. Forest Service for allegedly contributing to the contamination of a national forest through the disposal of hazardous lead ammunition by hunters was denied.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Reason: The Forest Service played only a passive role in said disposal. [Center for Biological Diversity v. United States Forest Service (9th Cir. 2023) 80 F4th 943, 946, 953-955]

• [5:125.10b] An environmental organization's suit against a city for allegedly contributing to solid waste "transportation" by pumping contaminated water through its water-supply system was denied. Reason: "Transportation" of solid waste must be "directly connected" to the waste disposal process, e.g., by "shipping waste to hazardous waste treatment, storage, or disposal facilities." [California River Watch v. City of Vacaville (9th Cir. 2022) 39 F4th 624, 630-633]

• [5:125.10c] An environmental organization's suit against an electric utility for, among other things, allegedly discarding toxic wood treatment chemicals into storm waters via "tire-tracking" was denied. Reason: A plaintiff must show the defendant was "actively involved in" or had "some degree of control over" the waste disposal process. The evidence, however, showed that "tire-tracking" by the utility's trucks was a potential, as opposed to an actual, mechanism by which the utility might contribute to waste disposal and therefore insufficient to establish RCRA liability. [Ecological Rights Foundation v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (9th Cir. 2017) 874 F3d 1083, 1101]

• [5:125.10d] The owners of shopping centers that housed dry cleaning stores sued the manufacturers of the dry cleaning equipment used by those stores, claiming the equipment's design contributed to the disposal of hazardous waste. The alleged contributions, however, were deemed "passive" and thus insufficient to impose RCRA liability as "a matter of law." [Hinds Investments, L.P. v. Angioli (9th Cir. 2011) 654 F3d 846, 848, 852]

2) [5:125.10e] Standing to sue: A plaintiff who brings a "private citizen" RCRA suit acts as a private attorney general. However, a RCRA plaintiff is not required to be "innocent," and may even be a successor landowner bearing some responsibility for the subject contamination. [See Nashua Corp. v. Norton Co. (ND NY 2000) 116 F.Supp.2d 330, 356]

3) [5:125.11] Timing—imminent and substantial danger required: A private party may sue under RCRA only upon a showing that the hazardous waste at issue "may present an imminent and substantial endangerment to health or the environment." [42 USC § 6972(a)(1)(B) (emphasis added); Meghrig v. KFC Western, Inc. (1996) 516 US 479, 485, 116 S.Ct. 1251, 1255; Nashua Corp. v. Norton Co. (ND NY 2000) 116 F.Supp.2d 330, 356]

Thus, a private party RCRA suit is not authorized if the endangerment is not threatened to occur immediately (not "imminent") or the hazardous waste at issue no longer presents such a danger. The language in § 6972(a)(1)(B) "implies that there must be a threat which is present now, although the impact of the threat may not be felt until later." [Meghrig v. KFC Western, Inc., supra, 516 US at 486, 116 S.Ct. at 1255 (emphasis in original; internal quotes and citation omitted); Ecological Rights Foundation v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (9th Cir. 2017) 874 F3d 1083, 1101—"risk-based showing" sufficient, i.e., that activities may present imminent and substantial endangerment; Nashua Corp. v. Norton Co., supra, 116 F.Supp.2d at 356—no requirement that actual harm will occur immediately]

4) [5:125.12] Remedies limited to injunctive relief: A private party's remedies under RCRA are limited to injunctive relief—either (i) a prohibitory injunction restraining a responsible party from further violating the RCRA and/or (ii) a mandatory injunction ordering a responsible party to "take such other action as may be necessary …" [42 USC § 6972(a); Meghrig v. KFC Western, Inc. (1996) 516 US 479, 484, 116 S.Ct. 1251, 1254; see Nashua Corp. v. Norton Co. (ND NY 2000) 116 F.Supp.2d 330, 355-356; Express Car Wash Corp. v. Irinaga Bros., Inc. (D OR 1997) 967 F.Supp. 1188, 1192-1194]

5) [5:125.13] Impact—no RCRA damages remedy for past or ongoing clean-up: Taken together, the limitations at ¶ 5:125.12 make clear that RCRA's citizen suit provision does not give private parties a remedy to recover compensation for past clean-up efforts, whether denominated as "damages" or "equitable restitution." [Meghrig v. KFC Western, Inc. (1996) 516 US 479, 484, 487, 116 S.Ct. 1251, 1254, 1256; Nashua Corp. v. Norton Co. (ND NY 2000) 116 F.Supp.2d 330, 357-358—claims for past response costs, whether characterized as investigative or clean-up costs, dismissed; see also South Carolina Dept. of Health & Environmental Control v. Commerce & Industry Ins. Co. (4th Cir. 2004) 372 F3d 245, 255-256—RCRA is "preventative" as opposed to CERCLA which is "curative"]

a) [5:125.13a] No right to contribution or indemnity: It follows, therefore, that private parties have no right to contribution or indemnity under the RCRA. [United States v. Domestic Indus., Inc. (ED VA 1999) 32 F.Supp.2d 855, 870—no right to contribution or indemnity from third party for civil penalty assessed against RCRA defendant; see also Davenport v. Neely (MD AL 1998) 7 F.Supp.2d 1219, 1229—no right to contribution or indemnity from third parties for future clean-up costs incurred by RCRA defendant]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

b) [5:125.14] Preremediation RCRA compensation for future clean-up? The U.S. Supreme Court in Meghrig, supra, expressly did not consider whether, provided the hazardous waste presently poses a risk of imminent and substantial endangerment to health or the environment (¶ 5:125.11), a private party might succeed under RCRA in obtaining an injunction requiring a responsible party to pay clean-up costs arising after commencement of a RCRA suit or ordering remuneration for clean-up costs paid after “the invocation of RCRA's statutory process.” [Meghrig v. KFC Western, Inc. (1996) 516 US 479, 488, 116 S.Ct. 1251, 1256 (dictum)]

However, post-Meghrig cases have rejected any such right of recovery.

1/ [5:125.14a] No recovery for ongoing clean-up: Plaintiffs may not recover clean-up costs incurred after a RCRA suit has been filed when the remediation system was in place or substantially in place at the time the suit was filed. [Express Car Wash Corp. v. Irinaga Bros., Inc. (D OR 1997) 967 F.Supp. 1188, 1194]

2/ [5:125.14b] No recovery for unilateral clean-up: Nor may plaintiffs recover clean-up costs for remediation initiated voluntarily (without a court order) after commencement of a RCRA suit. [Avondale Fed. Sav. Bank v. Amoco Oil Co. (7th Cir. 1999) 170 F3d 692, 694—no reimbursement for “antsy” plaintiff who, in order to finalize land deal, unilaterally decided to clean up property after filing RCRA suit]

6) [5:125.15] Other procedural hurdles: Moreover, even to the extent a private party RCRA suit is authorized, there are preliminary procedural hurdles: Notably, a “citizen suit” generally may not be commenced without first giving 90 days' notice to the Administrator of the EPA, to the “State in which the alleged endangerment may occur,” and to potential defendants. [42 USC § 6972(b)(2)(A); Meghrig v. KFC Western, Inc. (1996) 516 US 479, 486, 116 S.Ct. 1251, 1255]

Further, no private party RCRA suit can proceed if either the EPA or the State has commenced, and is diligently prosecuting, a separate enforcement action. [42 USC § 6972(b)(2)(B) & (C); Meghrig v. KFC Western, Inc., supra, 516 US at 486, 116 S.Ct. at 1255]

And RCRA contains an “anti-duplication” provision stating that it does not apply (except to the extent not inconsistent) to activities subject to the Federal Water Pollution Control Act (which includes the Clean Water Act), the Safe Drinking Water Act, the Marine Protection Research and Sanctuaries Act of 1972, or the Atomic Energy Act of 1954. [See 42 USC § 6905(a); see also 42 USC § 6905(b)(1)—EPA Administrator shall “avoid duplication, to the maximum extent practicable,” with other specified acts; compare Ecological Rights Foundation v. Pacific Gas & Elec. Co. (9th Cir. 2017) 874 F3d 1083, 1089, 1094—anti-duplication provision did not bar RCRA citizen suit arising from stormwater discharge of pollutants (although Clean Water Act permitted EPA to require permits for such discharges, EPA declined to do so)]

[5:125.16 - 5:125.19] Reserved.

7) [5:125.20] Compare—remedies under other laws: The RCRA preserves clean-up costs recoupment remedies under other federal and state laws (42 USC § 6972(f)). Thus, private parties may have a damages remedy when the hazardous substance is covered by CERCLA or another environmental statute. [See 42 USC § 6972(f); Meghrig v. KFC Western, Inc. (1996) 516 US 479, 487, 116 S.Ct. 1251, 1256—RCRA does not preempt remedies under other federal and state laws]

(2) [5:126] Conditions for CERCLA private cost-recovery or contribution: There are four basic conditions to a private party's cost-recovery or contribution action under CERCLA (the conditions are the same under both 42 USC § 9607(a) and § 9613(f)(1)). [City of Colton v. American Promotional Events, Inc.-West (9th Cir. 2010) 614 F3d 998, 1002-1003; Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp. (9th Cir. 2001) 270 F3d 863, 870-871 (en banc); Rivas v. Safety-Kleen Corp. (2002) 98 CA4th 218, 233, 119 CR2d 503, 515]

Specifically, a plaintiff seeking cost recovery or contribution must establish the following four conditions:

• Defendant must be a PRP (¶ 5:126a ff.);

• A hazardous substance release or threat of a release (¶ 5:126c ff.);

• Consequential response costs (¶ 5:126h ff.); and

• NCP-consistent remediation (¶ 5:126.1 ff.).

(a) [5:126a] Defendant's PRP status: Defendant must be a PRP—i.e., defendant must fall within one of the four categories of persons covered by CERCLA (see¶ 5:60). [42 USC § 9607; City of Colton v. American Promotional Events, Inc.-West, supra; see also Chubb Custom Ins. Co. v. Space Systems/Loral, Inc. (9th Cir. 2013) 710 F3d 946, 961-962—PRPs are individuals or entities who through their own actions, including ownership of property, become statutorily liable under CERCLA for response costs]

1) [5:126b] Compare—defendant's insurance company as subrogee: A defendant's insurance company, in its capacity as subrogee, does not acquire PRP-like status by reimbursing its insured for response costs. This is so because "a subrogee—simply by stepping into the shoes of the insured via a reimbursement—cannot be liable for response costs under CERCLA, and thus cannot itself incur response costs." [See Chubb Custom Ins. Co. v. Space Systems/ Loral, Inc. (9th Cir. 2013) 710 F3d 946, 962, 971-972—insurer had no standing under 42 USC § 9607(a) to bring subrogation suit against third parties to recover payments made to its insured for response costs]

Indeed, insurance companies that reimburse businesses for their clean-up costs must follow strict statutory guidelines before they can recover money from third parties believed responsible for the underlying pollution. [See 42 USC § 9612(c)(2)—subrogation action is maintainable only if subrogee pays compensation to a "claimant" as defined; Chubb Custom Ins. Co. v. Space Systems/Loral, Inc., supra, 710 F3d at 971—insured must first make claim to Superfund or PRP before insurer can bring subrogation action under 42 USC § 9612(c)]

(b) [5:126c] Hazardous substance release: There must have been a "release or threatened release" of a "hazardous substance" from defendant's "facility" within the meaning of CERCLA (see¶ 5:5.1 ff.). [42 USC § 9607(a)(4); City of Colton v. American Promotional Events, Inc.-West, supra]

1) [5:126d] "Threatened release" events: A "threatened release" may include a defendant's ownership of corroding or deteriorating tanks, a defendant's lack of expertise in handling hazardous wastes, or a defendant's failure to license a "facility" (¶ 5:5.4). [See Johnson v. James Langley Operating Co., Inc. (8th Cir. 2000) 226 F3d 957, 963, fn. 3; State of New York v. Shore Realty Corp. (2nd Cir. 1985) 759 F2d 1032, 1045]

2) [5:126e] No liability for release of excluded materials: Plaintiff cannot recover if the release or threatened release involves only "excluded" materials. [Johnson v. James Langley Operating Co., Inc. (8th Cir. 2000) 226 F3d 957, 963 & fn. 4]

Thus, plaintiffs who seek response costs in connection with federally-permitted releases must assert their claims (if at all) under some other federal or common law. [Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp. (CD CA 2003) 287 F.Supp.2d 1118, 1183, aff'd (9th Cir. 2006) 433 F3d 1260]

a) [5:126f] Burden of proof: A plaintiff is only required to present evidence of a release or threatened release of hazardous substances, and not evidence regarding the nature of those substances. The burden then shifts to defendant to prove that excluded materials were released, such as under the "petroleum exclusion" (¶ 5:90). [Johnson v. James Langley Operating Co., Inc. (8th Cir. 2000) 226 F3d 957, 963 & fn. 4]

(c) [5:126h] Consequential response costs: The hazardous substance release or threatened release must have caused plaintiff response costs. [42 USC § 9607(a)(4); see City of Colton v. American Promotional Events, Inc.-West (9th Cir. 2010) 614 F3d 998, 1002-1003; Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp. (9th Cir. 2001) 270 F3d 863, 870-871 (en banc); Browning-Ferris Indus. of Ill., Inc. v. Ter Maat (7th Cir. 1999) 195 F3d 953, 958]

1) [5:126i] "Relaxed"/"loose" nexus standard: Courts evaluating the causation element of a private party CERCLA claim do not apply "traditional tort notions of causation" but, instead, utilize a "relaxed" standard. [Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp. (CD CA 2003) 287 F.Supp.2d 1118, 1185-1186, aff'd (9th Cir. 2006) 433 F3d 1260; see also Orange County Water Dist. v. Alcoa Global Fasteners, Inc. (2017) 12 CA5th 252, 306, 219 CR3d 474, 521—"[V]irtually every court" holds CERCLA plaintiff need not establish direct causal connection between defendant's hazardous substances and their release or plaintiff's response costs]

Specifically, plaintiff need only prove that defendant's hazardous materials were deposited on plaintiff's property from which there was a "release" (¶ 5:5.3), and that the release caused plaintiff response costs. [Kalamazoo River

Study Group v. Menasha Corp. (6th Cir. 2000) 228 F3d 648, 655; ITT Indus., Inc. v. BorgWarner, Inc. (WD MI 2009) 615 F.Supp.2d 640, 644—cost recovery claim not dependent on proving particular defendant responsible for "release causing response costs"; Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp., supra, 287 F.Supp.2d at 1186-1187—nexus between release for which defendant is responsible and costs incurred by plaintiff is "a loose one"; and see Orange County Water Dist. v. Alcoa Global Fasteners, supra, 12 CA5th at 306, 219 CR3d at 521 (noting "causation" requirement under both CERCLA and State Superfund is "independent of a given defendant")]

a) [5:126j] Compare—"de minimis" polluter defense to contribution liability: The CERCLA causation standard is not equated with a minimum or "threshold" release (or threatened release) of a hazardous substance; i.e., it is not part of plaintiff's prima facie burden to demonstrate a defendant was responsible for a minimum quantity of hazardous waste.

However, because contribution liability is apportioned equitably (¶ 5:125.9, 5:134), a defendant may avoid joint and several liability for response costs in a 42 USC § 9613(f) contribution action by demonstrating that its share of hazardous waste at the site "constitutes no more than background amounts of such substances in the environment and cannot concentrate with other wastes to produce higher amounts." [Acushnet Co. v. Mohasco Corp. (1st Cir. 1999) 191 F3d 69, 77; see also PMC, Inc. v. Sherwin-Williams Co. (7th Cir. 1998) 151 F3d 610, 616]

"This rule is not based on CERCLA's causation requirement, but is logically derived from § 9613(f)'s express authorization that a court take equity into account when fixing each defendant's fair share of response costs." [Acushnet Co. v. Mohasco Corp., supra, 191 F3d at 77-78 (but noting that not every "de minimis" polluter will avoid contribution liability under such a defense)]

2) [5:126k] "Incur costs" requirement broadly interpreted: Whether plaintiff "incurred" costs is broadly interpreted. The court is not required to trace the source of funds used to pay response costs, or to deny recovery to a PRP plaintiff who borrowed the funds. [See Karras v. Teledyne Indus., Inc. (SD CA 2002) 191 F.Supp.2d 1162, 1169—where PRPs ordered to reimburse government for response costs set up plaintiff Trusts to perform work pursuant to government order, Trusts "incurred costs" for services of environmental consultants even though they were not parties to order and received funds from PRPs]

3) [5:126*l*] "Two-site" cases: In "two-site" cases, where contamination at one location migrates to reach a different location, plaintiff meets its burden regarding causation if it (i) "identifies contaminant at its site," (ii) "identifies the same (or perhaps a chemically similar) contaminant at the defendant's site," and (iii) "provides evidence of a plausible migration pathway by which the contaminant could have traveled from the defendant's facility to the plaintiff's site." [Castaic Lake Water Agency v. Whittaker Corp. (CD CA 2003) 272 F.Supp.2d 1053, 1066 (summary judgment motion)]

This "burden-shifting approach is in keeping with CERCLA's broad remedial purpose, and is consistent with the 'minimum causal nexus' most courts require under CERCLA." [Castaic Lake Water Agency v. Whittaker Corp., supra, 272 F.Supp.2d at 1066 (internal citations omitted)]

a) [5:126m] Scope of settlement resolving CERCLA liability for only one site: PRPs who settle their CERCLA liability for contamination that migrated onto an adjacent site must include the original contamination site within the settlement in order to preclude a subsequent purchaser from bringing a contribution action to recover response costs to remediate the original contamination site. [See GP Vincent II v. Estate of Beard (9th Cir. 2023) 68 F4th 508, 516-518—subsequent purchaser of contaminated site may bring CERCLA contribution action against prior owners who previously settled their respective CERCLA liabilities for contamination that migrated onto adjacent property]

4) [5:126n] Multiple generator cases: A plaintiff asserting a CERCLA claim against multiple PRPs need not establish a "but for" causal link between each PRP's contamination and the response costs incurred. Rather, "where either [PRP's] conduct would have caused the same response cost to be incurred in the same amount, and the conduct was of substantially equal blameworthiness, the proper construction of the causation requirement … is that both [PRPs] should be treated as having caused the response cost." [Boeing Co. v. Cascade Corp. (9th Cir. 2000) 207 F3d 1177, 1185; Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp. (CD CA 2003) 287 F.Supp.2d 1118, 1186, aff'd (9th Cir. 2006) 433 F3d 1260 (discussing cases)—"other courts have reached similar conclusions"]

The issue of the "quantum" of contamination that a particular defendant contributed to the property is then addressed in allocating liability among the PRPs (see¶ 5:134). [Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp., supra, 287 F.Supp.2d at 1187, fn. 270]

(d) [5:126.1] Consistent with NCP: The final condition is that the remediation undertaken by plaintiff must have been "necessary costs of response … consistent with the national contingency plan" (NCP, ¶ 5:121.3 ff.). [42 USC § 9607(a)(4)(B); see City of Colton v. American Promotional Events, Inc.-West (9th Cir. 2010) 614 F3d 998, 1003—response costs are considered "necessary" when actual and real threat to human health or environment exists; Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp. (9th Cir. 2001) 270 F3d 863, 870-871 (en banc); and Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp. (CD CA 2003) 287 F.Supp.2d 1118, 1153-1154 (discussing cases)—Ninth Circuit has uniformly stated that consistency with NCP is essential element of private CERCLA actions]

In general, private response action is "consistent with the NCP" if, evaluated as a whole, it complies with certain EPA procedural requirements and results in a "CERCLA-quality cleanup." [40 CFR § 300.700(c)(3)(i); City of Colton v. American Promotional Events, Inc.-West, supra; Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. County of Los Angeles (9th Cir. 2006) 433 F3d 1260, 1265; Young v. United States (10th Cir. 2005) 394 F3d 858, 864]

Compare: A government entity's response costs are presumed to be consistent with the NCP (¶ 5:121.4), while private parties must plead and prove consistency with the NCP. [Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp. (CD CA 2003) 287 F.Supp.2d 1118, 1152, fn. 215, aff'd (9th Cir. 2006) 433 F3d 1260]

1) [5:126.1a] "Remedial" vs. "removal" actions; different NCP requirements: A private party's cost-recovery action may be "remedial" or "removal" (¶ 5:133.16a). The statutory requirements for NCP compliance relative to such actions are different, with the requirements for remedial actions being "much more detailed and onerous." [United States v. W.R. Grace & Co. (9th Cir. 2005) 429 F3d 1224, 1228 (internal quotes omitted)]

The NCP requires a party undertaking removal to conduct a site evaluation (40 CFR § 300.420). A party initiating a remedial action must conduct a site evaluation and complete a "feasibility study before selecting the appropriate remedy," which includes satisfying certain community relations requirements, such as providing a notice and public comment period (40 CFR § 300.430). [Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. County of Los Angeles (9th Cir. 2006) 433 F3d 1260, 1266, 1269—party seeking to recover remedial response costs failed to comply with NCP public comment and feasibility study requirements]

2) [5:126.2] Per se compliance where action taken pursuant to EPA order: Response action taken in compliance with the terms of an EPA order issued pursuant to CERCLA § 106 (42 USC § 9606) is deemed consistent with the NCP. [40 CFR § 300.700(c)(3)(ii); see Bancamerica Commercial Corp. v. Mosher Steel of Kansas, Inc. (10th Cir. 1996) 100 F3d 792, 796-797]

3) [5:126.2a] Substantial compliance sufficient: Consistency with the NCP does not require strict compliance; substantial compliance suffices. [Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp. (CD CA 2003) 287 F.Supp.2d 1118, 1159-1160]

This case-by-case standard has been adopted "to avoid discouraging private parties from cleaning up hazardous wastes for fear that recovery of their costs would later be precluded by less than perfect compliance with the NCP." [Waste Management of Alameda County, Inc. v. East Bay Regional Park Dist. (ND CA 2001) 135 F.Supp.2d 1071, 1100; Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp., supra, 287 F.Supp.2d at 1159]

a) [5:126.2b] Evaluated by examining clean-up in entirety: Substantial compliance is evaluated by focusing on the entirety of the clean-up, "rather than on a checklist of required actions." [Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp. (CD CA 2003) 287 F.Supp.2d 1118, 1160—requiring compliance with checklist might defeat cost recovery for meritorious clean-up based merely on party's technical failure]

b) [5:126.2c] Agency involvement as substitute for NCP public participation requirement: There is out-of-circuit authority that a government agency's significant oversight involvement in remedial action may demonstrate substantial compliance with the NCP public participation requirement. [See Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. County of Los Angeles (9th Cir. 2006) 433 F3d 1260, 1266-1267 (collecting cases)]

The Ninth Circuit has not yet decided this issue; but it has held that agency action amounting to no more than "minor and ministerial" involvement cannot be an effective substitute for public participation. [Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. County of Los Angeles, supra, 433 F3d at 1267]

[5:126.2d - 5:126.2f] Reserved.

4) [5:126.2g] “CERCLA-quality clean-up” required: In addition to showing that it substantially complied with the NCP (¶ 5:126.1 ff.), the private party must demonstrate that its actions resulted in a “CERCLA-quality clean-up.” [Young v. United States (10th Cir. 2005) 394 F3d 858, 864; Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp. (CD CA 2003) 287 F.Supp.2d 1118, 1160, aff'd (9th Cir. 2006) 433 F3d 1260]

A “CERCLA-quality clean-up” is one in which (i) the remedy is protective of human health and the environment; (ii) permanent solutions and alternative treatment or resource recovery technologies are implemented; (iii) it is cost-effective; and (iv) it is selected after “meaningful public participation.” [55 Fed.Reg. 8793; Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp. (CD CA 2003) 287 F.Supp.2d 1118, 1160; see also Young v. United States, supra, 394 F3d at 864-865—plaintiffs' response action “inconsistent with the NCP because it did not result in any—let alone CERCLA-quality—cleanup” (emphasis in original)]

5) [5:126.2h] Preremediation governmental approval not required: Whether a plaintiff's response costs are consistent with the NCP is a fact question to be determined at the damages stage of the case rather than by the “mechanism” of obtaining governmental agency approval before commencing remediation. [Cadillac Fairview/ California, Inc. v. Dow Chem. Co. (9th Cir. 1988) 840 F2d 691, 695—“[Defendants] will have ample opportunity at trial to express their concern that the costs incurred by [plaintiff] were unnecessary or inconsistent with the [NCP]”; Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp. (CD CA 2003) 287 F.Supp.2d 1118, 1154]

(e) [5:126.3] Similar conditions under State Superfund: The same prerequisites apply to private actions under the California Superfund, except that the last condition (remediation necessary and in compliance with the national contingency plan) is omitted. [See Health & Saf.C. § 79670(a) (recodified & added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257, oper. 1/1/24) —statute's liability provisions apply to “response or corrective” actions rather than removal and remedial actions; see also Orange County Water Dist. v. Alcoa Global Fasteners, Inc. (2017) 12 CA5th 252, 298, 219 CR3d 474, 515 (decided under predecessor statute) (deciding issue of apparent first impression)—county water district could bring private indemnity action against industrial site owners and operators to recover costs associated with project intended to address groundwater contamination even though district not liable under State Superfund]

[5:126.4] Reserved.

(3) [5:126.5] Successor liability—state vs. federal common law: Under certain circumstances, a successor corporation to a now-defunct PRP corporation can be held liable in a CERCLA cost-recovery or contribution action. Although CERCLA does not address the issue, courts uniformly agree that the equitable doctrine of successor liability applies to CERCLA. [United States v. General Battery Corp., Inc. (3rd Cir. 2005) 423 F3d 294, 298]

But the circuits are split on whether the successor liability standard is a question of state corporation law or federal common law:

(a) [5:126.6] View that federal common law controls: Some courts have attempted to fashion a “uniform” federal common law for CERCLA successor liability. [See United States v. General Battery Corp., Inc. (3rd Cir. 2005) 423 F3d 294, 298; United States v. Carolina Transformer Co. (4th Cir. 1992) 978 F2d 832, 837-838; John S. Boyd Co., Inc. v. Boston Gas Co. (1st Cir. 1993) 992 F2d 401, 408]

1) [5:126.7] “Traditional” successor liability rule: Courts adopting a federal common law generally follow the “traditional” successor liability rule: A successor corporation acquires the seller's CERCLA liabilities only if:

- the purchaser expressly or impliedly agrees to assume the liabilities;
- the transaction amounts to a de facto merger or consolidation;
- the transaction is an effort to fraudulently escape liability; or
- the purchaser is a “mere continuation” of the seller (see ¶ 5:126.7a). [New York v. National Services Indus., Inc. (2nd Cir. 2003) 352 F3d 682, 685; see also PCS Nitrogen Inc. v. Ashley II of Charleston LLC (4th Cir. 2013) 714

F3d 161, 173-176—extrinsic evidence established corporate successor intended to assume CERCLA liability for former fertilizer manufacturing site]

a) [5:126.7a] Successor liability under "mere continuation" (or "de facto merger") rule—"identity" between predecessor and successor corporations: The federal common law "mere continuation" (or "de facto merger") exception (sometimes referred to as the "identity" test) requires the existence of a single corporation after the transfer of assets, with an identity of stock, stockholders and directors between the successor and predecessor corporations. [United States v. General Battery Corp., Inc. (3rd Cir. 2005) 423 F3d 294, 305; New York v. National Services Indus., Inc. (2nd Cir. 2003) 352 F3d 682, 685; see K.C.1986 Ltd. Partnership v. Reade Mfg. (8th Cir. 2007) 472 F3d 1009, 1025—record did not show CERCLA successor liability under "mere continuation"/"de facto merger" rule]

[5:126.7b - 5:126.7d] Reserved.

2) [5:126.7e] Alternative "substantial continuity" standard? The courts appear to be split on whether an alternative "substantial continuity" standard may be applied to impose CERCLA successor liability.

Some circuits reject this approach, finding it inconsistent with general federal common law and United States v. Bestfoods (¶ 5:77 ff.). [See United States v. General Battery Corp., Inc. (3rd Cir. 2005) 423 F3d 294, 309 & fn. 12 (collecting cases); New York v. National Services Indus., Inc. (2nd Cir. 2003) 352 F3d 682, 685-687]

On the other hand, at least one circuit has not expressly ruled out applying the test because Bestfoods, supra, did not directly address corporate successor liability, and thus, "there may yet be contexts in which the substantial continuity test could survive." [K.C.1986 Ltd. Partnership v. Reade Mfg. (8th Cir. 2007) 472 F3d 1009, 1022 (discussing cases) (but not deciding issue because facts did not satisfy test even assuming it survived Bestfoods)]

In any event, proper application of the test, an "offshoot" of the "mere continuation" test (¶ 5:126.7a), requires a consideration of the following factors:

• Whether the successor corporation retains:

— the same employees,

— the same supervisory personnel,

— the same production facilities in the same location,

— the same product,

— the same name, and

— a continuity of assets and general business operations;

• Whether the successor corporation holds itself out as a continuation of the previous business;

• Whether the transfer to the successor corporation was an attempt to avoid CERCLA liability; and

• Whether the successor had knowledge of the unremediated contamination. [K.C. 1986 Ltd. Partnership v. Reade Mfg., supra, 472 F3d at 1022-1024]

(b) [5:126.8] View that state law controls: Other courts reject application of a "uniform" federal common law in this area, and instead look to state corporation law to determine whether CERCLA clean-up liability for pollution caused by a selling corporation extends to an acquiring corporation. [See Anspec Co., Inc. v. Johnson Controls, Inc. (6th Cir. 1991) 922 F2d 1240, 1248 (applying Mich. law in merger situation); but see also K.C.1986 Ltd. Partnership v. Reade Mfg. (8th Cir. 2007) 472 F3d 1009, 1025, fn. 4 (collecting cases) (not deciding issue because no assertion in case that applicable state law was any different from federal common law re successor liability)]

1) [5:126.8a] Rationale: State rules of decision normally will furnish "an appropriate and convenient measure of the governing federal law." Moreover, developing federal rules for successor liability is not essential to create "national uniformity" on the issue because state law does not vary widely on the subject. And, there is no evidence that applying state corporation law to this issue will frustrate CERCLA's objective of providing a clean-up mechanism and imposing clean-up costs on responsible parties. [See Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. Brown & Bryant, Inc. (9th Cir. 1998) 159 F3d 358, 362-363—declining to decide whether federal common law or state law supplied the rule of decision, but noting inherent problems with fashioning federal common law]

Cross-refer: The subject of a surviving corporation's successor liability for its predecessor's obligations under California state law is discussed in detail in Haning, Flahavan, Cheng & Wright, Cal. Prac. Guide: Personal Injury (TRG), Ch. 2; and Friedman, Soza & Jann, Cal. Prac. Guide: Corporations (TRG), Ch. 8.

(4) [5:126.9] Cost recovery suits against dissolved corporations; impact of state laws limiting capacity to be sued: Courts also are split on whether CERCLA preempts state laws limiting a dissolved corporation's capacity to be sued:

• [5:126.9a] An active California corporation could not maintain an action for environmental clean-up costs against a corporation dissolved prior to enactment of CERCLA. This was so even though the dissolved corporation previously owned and polluted the active corporation's real property. Reason: Under California law, a dissolved corporation cannot be sued for causes of action created after its dissolution. [Levin Metals Corp. v. Parr-Richmond Terminal Co. (9th Cir. 1987) 817 F2d 1448, 1451; see also Louisiana-Pacific Corp. v. ASARCO, Inc. (9th Cir. 1993) 5 F3d 431, 433—Washington state statute limiting time within which dissolved corporation retained capacity to be sued not preempted by CERCLA statute of limitations]

• [5:126.9b] A Delaware statute generally eliminating a corporation's capacity to be sued after its three-year windup period concludes trumped CERCLA's six-year limitations period under which New York claimed environmental clean-up costs against a defunct corporate polluter and its former shareholders. [Marsh v. Rosenbloom (2nd Cir. 2007) 499 F3d 165, 176 (noting "corporate law is overwhelmingly the province of the states")]

• [5:126.9c] Under Minnesota law, a former steel drum manufacturer had no capacity to be sued for contribution under CERCLA three years following the date on which it filed its voluntary dissolution certificate. [Onan Corp. v. Industrial Steel Corp. (D MN 1989) 770 F.Supp. 490, 494, aff'd (8th Cir. 1990) 909 F2d 511]

• [5:126.9d] Compare: A number of other courts have held otherwise, claiming CERCLA preempts state limits on the capacity of dissolved corporations to be sued in light of congressional intent that CERCLA impose broad-ranging liability. "Congress did not intend to allow corporations, upon discovering new toxic waste sites, to be able to avoid liability simply by dissolving and then hiding behind the shield of state statutes limiting their capacity to be sued." [Burlington Northern & Santa Fe Ry. Co. v. Consolidated Fibers, Inc. (ND TX 1998) 7 F.Supp.2d 822, 826-828 (collecting cases); see also BASF Corp. v. Cent Transp., Inc. (ED MI 1993) 830 F.Supp. 1011, 1013 (collecting cases)]

(5) [5:126.10] Scope of awardable "response costs": A private party's authorized "response cost" recovery includes "necessary costs of response" consistent with the national contingency plan. [42 USC § 9607(a)(4)(B); City of Colton v. American Promotional Events, Inc.-West (9th Cir. 2010) 614 F3d 998, 1003; W.R. Grace & Co.-Conn. v. Zotos Int'l, Inc. (2nd Cir. 2009) 559 F3d 85, 95; see also Ameripride Services Inc. v. Texas Eastern Overseas Inc. (9th Cir. 2015) 782 F3d 474, 490—private party who incurs 42 USC § 9607(a) liability for third party's response costs may seek contribution only for such costs as were "necessary and consistent" with national contingency plan, and private party who enters into settlement agreement discharging its § 9607(a) liability to third party may seek contribution only for settlement costs related to necessary response costs incurred consistent with national contingency plan]

Though CERCLA does not define "necessary costs of response," the phrase has been construed as limited to expenses reasonably related to the clean-up efforts. [Price v. United States Navy (9th Cir. 1994) 39 F3d 1011, 1015-1017; Durfey v. E.I. DuPont De Nemours & Co. (9th Cir. 1995) 59 F3d 121, 125]

(a) General parameters

1) [5:126.11] Includes cost of clean-up actions taken in response to *threatened contamination: CERCLA "response costs" are synonymous with "removal costs," and include the cost of clean-up efforts necessarily taken in response to the threat of release of hazardous substances into the environment. [See 42 USC § 9601(23), (25); Bonnieview Homeowners Ass'n v. Woodmont Builders, LLC (D NJ 2009) 655 F.Supp.2d 473, 494]

2) [5:126.12] Objective focus: In determining whether recovery costs are "necessary" in a private cost-recovery action, only the objective circumstances of the particular case should be considered; plaintiff's subjective intent in incurring response costs is irrelevant. [Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp. (9th Cir. 2001) 270 F3d 863, 872 (en banc) (disapproving "ulterior motive" analysis)—proper focus is whether response action addressed threat to human health or environment rather than whether party had business or other motive for clean-up]

3) [5:126.13] Agency clean-up directives not essential, but relevant: A directive from a public agency to clean up a site is not necessarily required to render remediation costs incurred "necessary" for purposes of a private cost-recovery suit. "Agency inaction is not dispositive of the question whether contamination presents an environmental risk worthy of response." [Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp. (9th Cir. 2001) 270 F3d 863, 872]

However, an agency clean-up order is "highly relevant and, in some cases, compelling" on the issue of whether the costs incurred were "necessary." [Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp., supra, 270 F3d at 872 (emphasis added)]

Moreover, in the absence of EPA or state agency action (a government civil suit or administrative clean-up settlement), a PRP may have no right to sue other liable parties under CERCLA for contribution (see¶ 5:125.4 ff.).

[5:126.14] Reserved.

4) [5:126.15] Recoverable expenses must be based on *existing obligation: Response costs that have not yet been incurred are not recoverable. Although a party may "incur" a cost without actually having paid for it, the mere possibility or even certainty that an obligation to pay will arise in the future does not establish that a cost has been incurred. [Trimble v. Asarco, Inc. (8th Cir. 2000) 232 F3d 946, 958 (abrogated on other grounds by Exxon Mobil Corp. v. Allapattah Services, Inc. (2005) 545 US 546, 551-552, 558-559, 125 S.Ct. 2611, 2616, 2620)—plaintiffs' "contingent" response costs not recoverable; see¶ 5:125.5c (re actions seeking contribution for settlement amounts paid toward future response costs)]

a) [5:126.16] Compare—liability for *future response costs: On the other hand, a party may obtain a declaratory judgment to establish liability for the recovery of future response costs. See¶ 5:132 ff.

5) [5:126.17] No recovery where compensation received under other federal or state law: Any person who receives compensation for removal costs pursuant to any non-CERCLA federal or state law is barred from recovering the same expenses under CERCLA. [42 USC § 9614(b); Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp. (CD CA 2003) 287 F.Supp.2d 1118, 1181-1182, aff'd (9th Cir. 2006) 433 F3d 1260—because increased rental income received by property owner seeking recovery of remediation costs not considered compensation for removal costs under state law, owner not precluded from seeking CERCLA recovery; compare Price v. United States Navy (SD CA 1992) 818 F.Supp. 1326, 1332-1333, aff'd in part, rev'd in part on other grounds (9th Cir. 1994) 39 F3d 1011—property owners' reimbursement from state and receipt of settlement for clean-up costs found to be made pursuant to state and/or federal laws, requiring setoff and credit to total amount of owners' CERCLA damages]

6) [5:126.18] "Nexus" between costs and *actual clean-up effort required: Costs are not deemed "necessary" absent "some nexus between the alleged response cost and an actual effort to respond to environmental contamination." [Young v. United States (10th Cir. 2005) 394 F3d 858, 863-864 (emphasis added)—alleged response costs not "necessary" where property continued to be contaminated and owners testified re no intention to spend any money to clean up property]

[5:126.19] Reserved.

(b) Recoverability of specific categories of response costs

1) [5:126.20] Costs of EPA monitoring/oversight of remedial action: Amounts awardable in a CERCLA cost-recovery/contribution action include the costs of EPA monitoring or oversight of the PRP's remedial action. [See United States v. E.I. DuPont De Nemours & Co., Inc. (3rd Cir. 2005) 432 F3d 161, 162-163; State of Calif. on Behalf of Calif. Dept. of Toxic Substances Control v. Celtor Chem. Corp. (ND CA 1995) 901 F.Supp. 1481, 1489-1490]

Indeed, "statutory definitions of remedial action and response unambiguously allow recovery of the costs of government oversight of private party remedial actions under [42 USC § 9607(a)]." [Atlantic Richfield Co. v. American Airlines, Inc. (10th Cir. 1996) 98 F3d 564, 567-571; but see Black Horse Lane Assocs., L.P. v. Dow Chemical Corp. (3rd Cir. 2000) 228 F3d 275, 298-299 & fn. 13—consultant fees not recoverable where private party sought reimbursement for costs incurred by environmental consultant retained to oversee another private party's clean-up obligation; Bonnieview Homeowners Ass'n v. Woodmont Builders, LLC (D NJ 2009) 655 F.Supp.2d 473, 494-499—homeowners association that retained environmental consultant and attorneys to review work performed by others and provide expertise in litigation not entitled to recover clean-up costs incurred in connection with residential lots (no evidence actions of consultant/counsel furthered clean-up)]

2) [5:126.21] Medical expenses, income loss: Purely private damages that have nothing to do with the remediation are not recoverable "response costs" under CERCLA. Thus, in a cost recovery or contribution action, plaintiffs cannot be awarded consequential medical expenses, medical monitoring costs or loss of income damages. [Price v. United States Navy (9th Cir. 1994) 39 F3d 1011, 1017; Durfey v. E.I. DuPont De Nemours & Co. (9th Cir. 1995) 59 F3d 121, 125; see also Syms v. Olin Corp. (2nd Cir. 2005) 408 F3d 95, 105; Daigle v. Shell Oil Co. (10th Cir. 1992) 972 F2d 1527, 1536—"congress intentionally deleted all personal rights to recovery of medical expenses from CERCLA"]

3) [5:126.22] Testing and sampling expenses: Expenses to test and process sampling of material to determine if contamination exists are recoverable response costs so long as the party seeking the recovery had an objectively reasonable belief of contamination and the testing and sampling procedures were fiscally reasonable and scientifically valid. [Johnson v. James Langley Operating Co., Inc. (8th Cir. 2000) 226 F3d 957, 964; Village of Milford v. K-H Holding Corp. (6th Cir. 2004) 390 F3d 926, 933]

Provided the above conditions are satisfied, consistency with the NCP (¶ 5:126.1 ff.) is not a prerequisite to the recovery of monitoring and investigation costs. [Village of Milford v. K-H Holding Corp., supra, 390 F3d at 934]

Moreover, testing and sampling expenses may be recoverable as reasonable and necessary costs of response even though they duplicate studies previously performed. [Village of Milford v. K-H Holding Corp., supra, 390 F3d at 935—"duplication in itself does not equate to unreasonableness"]

4) [5:126.23] Expert fees: The fees of plaintiff's experts are recoverable "necessary" costs so long as they are incurred as a necessary cost of remediation (e.g., to identify additional PRPs) and not solely in preparation for litigation (¶ 5:128). [Gussack Realty Co. v. Xerox Corp. (2nd Cir. 2000) 224 F3d 85, 92—expert fees not recoverable because not closely tied to actual clean-up, and plaintiffs were able to identify defendant as PRP without using experts; Castaic Lake Water Agency v. Whittaker Corp. (CD CA 2003) 272 F.Supp.2d 1053, 1078, fn. 32]

a) [5:126.24] Experts not required to conduct own testing: Expert costs can be recoverable under CERCLA even though the experts did not conduct their own testing. Assessing the extent of contamination often involves consulting with experts who simply interpret data gathered by others. [Gussack Realty Co. v. Xerox Corp. (2nd Cir. 2000) 224 F3d 85, 92]

5) [5:126.25] Costs to formulate RCRA plan: Although costs incurred to formulate a clean-up plan under RCRA (¶ 5:125.10 ff.) may be similar to expenses sought to be recovered in a CERCLA cost-recovery suit, the two categories of costs are distinguishable. RCRA costs are not recoverable in a CERCLA cost-recovery or contribution action. [See Nashua Corp. v. Norton Co. (ND NY 2000) 116 F.Supp.2d 330, 355]

6) [5:126.26] Site access maintenance costs: Costs incurred for routine physical maintenance of the contaminated site to aid in access to it are not recoverable. [Syms v. Olin Corp. (2nd Cir. 2005) 408 F3d 95, 103]

7) [5:126.27] Compensation for damage caused during clean-up: Costs incurred to repair damage caused by clean-up crews are not recoverable CERCLA response costs. [Syms v. Olin Corp. (2nd Cir. 2005) 408 F3d 95, 103-104—"Repair of damage caused during cleanup of contamination gives rise to an ordinary tort action, not a cost recovery action under CERCLA" (emphasis added)]

[5:126.28 - 5:126.29] Reserved.

(6) [5:126.30] Prejudgment interest on recoverable response costs: CERCLA expressly provides that amounts awarded in a cost recovery action "shall include" prejudgment interest (42 USC § 9607(a), last para.). This applies as well in a 42 USC § 9613(f)(1) contribution action, because 42 USC § 9613(f) incorporates the liability provisions of 42 USC § 9607. [See Bancamerica Commercial Corp. v. Mosher Steel of Kansas, Inc. (10th Cir. 1996) 100 F3d 792, 799–801—liability to be apportioned in § 9613(f)(1) contribution action is that set forth in § 9607(a), "which amount includes interest"; Ameripride Services Inc. v. Texas Eastern Overseas Inc. (9th Cir. 2015) 782 F3d 474, 491—courts must apply § 9607(a)'s methodology for calculating prejudgment interest rather than relying on equitable considerations; see also Bancamerica Commercial Corp. v. Mosher Steel of Kansas, Inc. (10th Cir. 1996) 103 F3d 80, 82 (concerning postjudgment interest)]

(7) [5:127] Attorney fees recovery: Under the longstanding "American rule," attorney fees generally are not a recoverable cost of litigation absent explicit congressional authorization (see generally, Alyeska Pipeline Service Co. v. Wilderness Society (1975) 421 US 240, 247, 95 S.Ct. 1612, 1616). And while CERCLA authorizes fee awards in certain CERCLA actions (see, e.g., 42 USC § 9659(f) (prevailing party fee award in citizen suits), 42 USC §§ 9601(25), 9604(b) (fee award in favor of government), and 42 USC § 9606(b)(2)(E) (fee award to party erroneously ordered to pay response costs in government abatement action)), it does not contain an express provision for attorney fee awards in a private litigant's costs recovery action. [See Key Tronic Corp. v. United States (1994) 511 US 809, 817, 114 S.Ct. 1960, 1966]

Thus, the propriety of an attorney fee award in a CERCLA private cost recovery suit depends on whether attorney fees can be considered a "necessary cost of response" (42 USC § 9607(a)(4)(B)). That turns on the purpose for which the claimed fees were incurred:

(a) [5:128] Litigation-related fees *not recoverable: Costs of "response" within the meaning of CERCLA are expenses incurred for "removal … and remedial action, … includ[ing] enforcement activities related thereto." [42 USC § 9601(25)]

However, "enforcement activities" for this purpose do not encompass a private party's action to recover clean-up costs from other PRPs. Therefore, fees incurred for prosecuting a private cost-recovery action are not awardable as "necessary costs of response." [Key Tronic Corp. v. United States (1994) 511 US 809, 818-819, 114 S.Ct. 1960, 1966-1967]

1) Application

• [5:128.1] For example, consulting fees incurred in preparation for litigation were not recoverable as necessary response costs by the purchaser of environmentally distressed property. [Black Horse Lane Assocs., L.P. v. Dow Chemical Corp. (3rd Cir. 2000) 228 F3d 275, 294-296]

• [5:128.2] Similarly, consulting fees for reviewing work performed by others, and attorney fees for providing expertise in litigation, were not recoverable as necessary response costs by a homeowners association. Neither the association nor its members did any investigation or remediation. [Bonnieview Homeowners Ass'n v. Woodmont Builders, LLC (D NJ 2009) 655 F.Supp.2d 473, 494-499]

• [5:128.3] A private party could not recover attorney fees incurred in negotiating an EPA consent decree. The fees were not a "necessary cost of response" because they were incurred primarily to protect a private party's interests as a defendant. [Key Tronic Corp. v. United States (1994) 511 US 809, 820-821, 114 S.Ct. 1960, 1968; see also Atlantic Richfield Co. v. American Airlines, Inc. (10th Cir. 1996) 98 F3d 564, 571]

• [5:128.4] Likewise, attorney fees for negotiating access to a contaminated site for clean-up purposes were not recoverable as response costs because they were incurred primarily to protect a private party's interests as a defendant. [Syms v. Olin Corp. (2nd Cir. 2005) 408 F3d 95, 104]

2) [5:129] Compare—contractual indemnification suits: The result may be otherwise in a private party's suit for indemnification. If the indemnification claim is based on a contract between the parties (e.g., buyer sues seller to recoup clean-up costs pursuant to seller's agreement to indemnify buyer for remediation expense, ¶ 5:230), and the contract contains a prevailing party fee-shifting provision, attorney fees would be recoverable pursuant to the contract (another exception to the "American rule"). [See Civ.C. § 1717; CCP §§ 1021, 1033.5(a)(10)(A), (c)(5)(B)]

3) [5:129.1] Compare—RCRA suits: The RCRA does not contain CERCLA's attorney fees restrictions. To the contrary, RCRA expressly empowers courts, when issuing any final order in actions brought pursuant to 42 USC § 6972, to "award costs of litigation (including reasonable attorney and expert witness fees) to the prevailing or substantially prevailing party, whenever the court determines such an award is appropriate." [42 USC § 6972(e); see Camellia Park Homeowners Ass'n v. Greenbriar Homes Co. (ND CA 1995) 882 F.Supp. 150, 151]

Nonetheless, RCRA's litigation attorney fees provision is of no benefit to parties seeking compensation for clean-up efforts, because that remedy is not authorized under RCRA. See discussion at¶ 5:125.10 ff.

(b) [5:130] Awardable fees incurred in searching for other PRPs: As contrasted with nonrecoverable litigation-related fees, some lawyers' work that is closely tied to the actual clean-up may constitute a "necessary cost of response" within the meaning of 42 USC § 9607(a)(4)(B). Notably, that component of a private litigant's fee claim representing work performed in identifying other PRPs falls in this category and thus is recoverable in a CERCLA suit. [Key Tronic Corp. v. United States (1994) 511 US 809, 820, 114 S.Ct. 1960, 1967; see Gussack Realty Co. v. Xerox Corp. (2nd Cir. 2000) 224 F3d 85, 92; Castaic Lake Water Agency v. Whittaker Corp. (CD CA 2003) 272 F.Supp.2d 1053, 1078—"search for PRPs serves CERCLA's statutory purpose because it leads to the identification of responsible parties and thereby speeds and encourages complete clean-ups"]

Unlike litigation services for prosecuting the claim, "these efforts might well be performed by engineers, chemists, private investigators or other professionals who are not lawyers … Tracking down other responsible solvent polluters increases the probability that a cleanup will be effective and get paid for. [The private litigant] is therefore quite right to claim that such efforts significantly benefited the entire cleanup effort and served a statutory purpose apart from the reallocation of costs. These kinds of activities are recoverable costs of response clearly distinguishable from litigation expenses." [Key Tronic Corp. v. United States, supra, 511 US at 820, 114 S.Ct. at 1967-1968 (emphasis added); see Key Tronic Corp. v. United States (9th Cir. 1994) 30 F3d 1105, 1106 (upholding portion of CERCLA fee award for services performed in searching for other PRPs and remanding for trial court determination of cost of such services); see also Village of Milford v. K-H Holding Corp. (6th Cir. 2004) 390 F3d 926, 936—recoverable attorney fees not limited to identification of PRPs so long as activities "for which the fees are incurred could have been performed by a non-attorney, are closely tied to an actual cleanup, are not related to litigation, and are otherwise necessary"]

b. [5:132] Future response costs (cost-recovery actions): A plaintiff in a 42 USC § 9607(a)cost-recovery action may obtain a declaratory judgment establishing liability for future response costs. [42 USC § 9613(g)(2); State of New York v. Solvent Chem. Co., Inc. (2nd Cir. 2011) 664 F3d 22, 25]

Circuit courts disagree, however, whether plaintiff must have previously incurred response costs to qualify for such relief. [See City of Colton v. American Promotional Events, Inc.-West (9th Cir. 2010) 614 F3d 998, 1005—declaratory relief re liability for future response costs available only if liability for past costs is established; Gussack Realty Co. v. Xerox Corp. (2nd Cir. 2000) 224 F3d 85, 91-92 (same); compare County Line Investment Co. v. Tinney (10th Cir. 1991) 933 F2d 1508, 1513 (suggesting declaratory relief may be available in absence of recoverable past costs)]

(1) [5:132.1] Lump-sum payment improper: But plaintiff may not be awarded a lump-sum payment of anticipated future expenses. The proper remedy for future response costs is a declaratory judgment dividing those costs among the responsible parties. [Gussack Realty Co. v. Xerox Corp. (2nd Cir. 2000) 224 F3d 85, 92]

(2) [5:132.2] Compare—contribution actions: A plaintiff in a 42 USC § 9613(f)contribution action likewise may obtain a declaratory judgment establishing liability for future response costs. However, circuit courts are unclear concerning the statutory basis for such relief. [See State of New York v. Solvent Chem. Co., Inc. (2nd Cir. 2011) 664 F3d 22, 25—manufacturer entitled to declaratory judgment on future contribution issue under 28 USC § 2201(a) (Declaratory Judgment Act); compare GenCorp, Inc. v. Olin Corp. (6th Cir. 2004) 390 F3d 433, 451—entry of declaratory judgment for future clean-up costs in contribution action proper under 42 USC § 9613(g)(2); United States v. Davis (1st Cir. 2001) 261 F3d 1, 46-47 (same); Boeing Co. v. Cascade Corp. (9th Cir. 2000) 207 F3d 1177, 1191-1192 (upholding grant of declaratory judgment in contribution case after recognizing that § 9613(g)(2) does not prohibit declaratory relief for § 9613(f) claims)]

[5:132.3 - 5:132.9] Reserved.

c. [5:132.10] Standard of proof: CERCLA cost-recovery plaintiffs must prove their case by a preponderance of the evidence, not with scientific certainty. [B.F. Goodrich v. Betkoski (2nd Cir. 1996) 99 F3d 505, 526 (overruled on other grounds by State of New York v. National Services Indus., Inc. (2nd Cir. 2003) 352 F3d 682); Nashua Corp. v. Norton Co. (ND NY 2000) 116 F.Supp.2d 330, 351]

d. Statute of limitations

(1) [5:133] CERCLA three-year/six-year limitations periods: Private party suits under CERCLA are subject to one of two distinct statutes of limitations:

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

• a three-year statute that applies in 42 USC § 9613(f) contribution actions (¶ 5:133.1 ff.); and

• a maximum six-year statute, as defined, applicable in initial 42 USC § 9607(a) cost recovery actions (see¶ 5:133.15 ff.). [42 USC § 9613(g)(2)(A) (removal actions) & (B) (remedial actions)]

(a) [5:133.1] Section 9613(f) contribution suits: There are two corresponding three-year limitations periods for 42 USC § 9613(f) contribution actions (¶ 5:125.3 ff.). [42 USC § 9613(g)(3); Cooper Indus., Inc. v. Aviall Services, Inc. (2004) 543 US 157, 167, 125 S.Ct. 577, 584]

The three-year periods run as follows:

1) [5:133.2] Three years from underlying judgment: If the underlying civil action is resolved by a judgment, the PRP's contribution suit must be commenced within three years from the date of the judgment. [42 USC § 9613(g)(3)(A); Cooper Indus., Inc. v. Aviall Services, Inc. (2004) 543 US 157, 167, 125 S.Ct. 577, 584; American Cyanamid Co. v. Capuano (1st Cir. 2004) 381 F3d 6, 11]

a) [5:133.3] Costs-recovery judgment required: The 42 USC § 9613(g)(3)(A) statute of limitations is triggered only when there is a judgment for the recovery of costs. Thus, the statute does not begin to run from the date of a declaratory judgment holding simply that a party is liable for future removal or remedial costs. [American Cyanamid Co. v. Capuano (1st Cir. 2004) 381 F3d 6, 12-13]

2) [5:133.4] Three years from underlying settlement: If the PRP's liability to the United States is resolved by an administrative or judicially approved settlement, the PRP's contribution suit must be commenced within three years from the date of the settlement. [42 USC § 9613(g)(3)(B); Cooper Indus., Inc. v. Aviall Services, Inc. (2004) 543 US 157, 167, 125 S.Ct. 577, 584; see also RSR Corp. v. Commercial Metals Co. (6th Cir. 2007) 496 F3d 552, 556—consent decree entered as "judicially approved settlement" serves both to authorize contribution actions and commence running of 3-year limitations period]

a) Application

• [5:133.5] A judicially approved settlement agreement between private parties to a 42 USC § 9607 cost-recovery action started the clock running on the three-year limitations period. Once the three-year period ran, not even a bankruptcy settlement with the government, fixing the costs of the agreement for the first time, could revive an expired contribution claim. While "[t]he triggering event for [the] statute of limitations … includes judicially approved settlements involving the United States or a State, [it] is not limited to those types of settlements on its face." [See ASARCO, LLC. v. Celanese Chem. Co. (9th Cir. 2015) 792 F3d 1203, 1209-1211]

• [5:133.6] A PRP who failed to timely file a contribution claim following entry of a consent decree could not evade the three-year statute of limitations by bringing a contribution claim "under the guise of" a 42 USC § 9607(a) cost-recovery action. [ITT Indus., Inc. v. BorgWarner, Inc. (WD MI 2009) 615 F.Supp.2d 640, 646]

b) [5:133.11] Computing end date: The FRCP 6(a) general rule, commonly referred to as the "anniversary method," applies when calculating the last day a contribution suit may be filed under the three-year statute (under the "anniversary rule," the day of the event triggering the period is excluded for purposes of computing the period's end date; see FRCP 6(a)(1)). Thus, when the limitations period is triggered by a settlement, counting begins the day after the judicially approved settlement is entered and ends three years later. [See ASARCO, LLC v. Union Pac. R.R. Co. (9th Cir. 2014) 765 F3d 999, 1007-1008 (distinguishing calendar-date method and finding it inapplicable)]

c) [5:133.12] Settlement must impose response costs sought in contribution action: A settlement triggers 42 USC § 9613(g)(3)(B)'s limitations period (¶ 5:133.4) only if it imposes the response costs that are the basis for seeking 42 USC § 9613(f)(1) contribution. [Arconic, Inc. v. APC Investment Co. (9th Cir. 2020) 969 F3d 945, 949, 952—plaintiffs' 42 USC § 9613(f) contribution action not time-barred because prior settlement with "de minimis" parties did not address response costs plaintiffs were seeking in their contribution action]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(b) [5:133.15] Section 9607(a) cost-recovery suits: A maximum six-year statute of limitations, as defined, applies to a private party's initial 42 USC § 9607(a)cost-recovery suit (¶ 5:125.2 ff.). [42 USC § 9613(g)(2); see also United States v. Atlantic Research Corp. (2007) 551 US 128, 139, 127 S.Ct. 2331, 2338; Agere Systems, Inc. v. Advanced Environmental Technology Corp. (3rd Cir. 2010) 602 F3d 204, 220]

1) [5:133.16] Accrual: The accrual date for the cause of action depends on whether plaintiff's response action was "remedial" or "removal":

• [5:133.16a] Remedial action: For a "remedial action," the six-year statute commences "after initiation of physical on-site construction of the remedial action"—i.e., suit must be brought within six years after the start of remediation. [See 42 USC § 9613(g)(2)(B); United States v. Navistar Int'l Transp. Corp. (7th Cir. 1998) 152 F3d 702, 711—rejecting EPA's suggested "bright line" rule tying commencement of statute of limitations to final written approval of remedial action (rather than when actual remedial work began)]

• [5:133.16b] Removal action: For a "removal action," the cost-recovery suit must be brought within three years after completion of the removal or six years "after a determination to grant a waiver under [42 USC § 9604(c)(1)(C)] … for continued response action." [42 USC § 9613(g)(2)(A); Geraghty & Miller, Inc. v. Conoco Inc. (5th Cir. 2000) 234 F3d 917, 925 (abrogated on other grounds as recognized by Vine Street LLC v. Borg Warner Corp. (5th Cir. 2015) 776 F3d 312, 317); see also Agere Systems, Inc. v. Advanced Environmental Technology Corp. (3rd Cir. 2010) 602 F3d 204, 220 & fn. 28—EPA suit to recover costs associated with removal action must be brought within 3 years after removal action completed, subject to three exceptions that extend limitations period (i.e., the § 9613(g)(2)(A) "consistency waiver" exception (above), "subsequent action" exception (¶ 5:133.18), or as part of "remedial action" exception (¶ 5:133.16a))]

a) [5:133.17] Distinguishing between "remedial" and "removal" actions: Occasionally, it may be difficult to determine whether the response action is "remedial" or "removal":

CERCLA's definitions of the terms (42 USC § 9601(23) and (24)) are expansive enough that certain activities may be covered by both; and industry use of the terms is not synonymous with the statutory definitions. [Geraghty & Miller, Inc. v. Conoco Inc. (5th Cir. 2000) 234 F3d 917, 925-927—monitoring wells initially installed to assess contamination that later performed "remedial" activity classified as removal action; see also General Elec. Co. v. Litton Indus. Automation Systems, Inc. (8th Cir. 1990) 920 F2d 1415, 1419 (abrogated on other grounds by Key Tronic Corp. v. U.S. (1994) 511 US 809, 814-815, 819, 114 S.Ct. 1960, 1964-1965, 1967)—excavation could be remedial or removal activity; Advanced Micro Devices, Inc. v. National Semiconductor Corp. (ND CA 1999) 38 F.Supp.2d 802, 813—"hindsight" cannot be used to classify activity]

Although cases addressing the issue tend to be fact-specific, removal actions are generally time-sensitive (immediate or interim) responses to public health threats, while remedial actions are permanent responses to threats for which an urgent response is not warranted. [United States v. W.R. Grace & Co. (9th Cir. 2005) 429 F3d 1224, 1227-1228, 1232—also noting that "tangled language of CERCLA hardly lends itself to clearcut distinctions between the two types of actions"; see also Valbruna Slater Steel Corp. v. Joslyn Mfg. Co. (7th Cir. 2019) 934 F3d 553, 564-565—construction of concrete cap to confine pollutants was not "remedial" action, even though "fix may have been permanent," because it was not intended to "substantially resolve" bulk of site's ongoing pollution problems; OBG Technical Services, Inc. v. Northrop Grumman Space & Mission Systems, Corp. (D CT 2007) 503 F.Supp.2d 490, 525—clean-up activities deemed remedial in nature (no imminent danger from contamination and clean-up took 14 years to complete, effectuating a permanent remedy)]

2) [5:133.18] Compare—subsequent actions: A suit seeking recovery of costs incurred in a subsequent remedial or removal action may be based on an earlier finding of liability so long as the subsequent action is initiated within three years after completion of the initial action and involves the same parties. [42 USC § 9613(g)(2); United States v. Navistar Int'l Transp. Corp. (7th Cir. 1998) 152 F3d 702, 709-710—not applicable where "subsequent action" brought against party who was involved in "initial action" only as third party defendant]

[5:133.19] Reserved.

(2) [5:133.20] Compare—RCRA suits: The RCRA contains no statute of limitations. [See Meghrig v. KFC Western, Inc. (1996) 516 US 479, 486, 116 S.Ct. 1251, 1255]

Even so, that omission will rarely provide an alternative remedy to litigants faced with a time-barred cost-recovery or contribution suit under CERCLA. As earlier discussed, there is no private party RCRA damages cause of action to recover costs for past or ongoing clean-up efforts. See¶ 5:125.10 ff.

(3) [5:133.21] Compare—California Superfund actions: The HSAA similarly contains no statute of limitations for actions under Health & Saf.C. § 79670(a) (recodified & added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257, oper. 1/1/24) (contribution or indemnity by a "person who has incurred response or corrective action costs"). [Otay Land Co., LLC v. U.E. Ltd., L.P. (2017) 15 CA5th 806, 851-852, 225 CR3d 119, 155-156 (decided under predecessor statute)]

In Otay Land Co., the court, applying common law accrual rules, determined a § 25363(d) (recodified as Health & Saf.C. § 79670, oper. 1/1/24) action does not accrue until plaintiff incurs removal or remedial action costs. "[T]he injury under the HSAA is not the release of contamination, but rather the incurrence of recoverable costs." [Otay Land Co., LLC v. U.E. Ltd., L.P, supra, 15 CA5th at 851, 225 CR3d at 155-156 & fn. 33 (noting plaintiffs did not contest, and thus appellate court would not address, trial court's application of CCP § 338(b)'s 3-year limitations period for trespass or injury to real property)]

e. [5:134] Manner of response cost allocation in contribution suit—equitable factors considered: The manner of apportioning response cost liability in a contribution action between PRPs is left to the court's discretion, "using such equitable factors as the court determines are appropriate." [42 USC § 9613(f)(1) (CERCLA); Health & Saf.C. § 79670(d) (recodified & added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257, oper. 1/1/24) (in California Superfund contribution or indemnity action court may allocate costs among liable parties using appropriate equitable factors); United States v. Atlantic Research Corp. (2007) 551 US 128, 140, 127 S.Ct. 2331, 2339] CERCLA does not limit the equitable factors a court may consider. [Ameripride Services Inc. v. Texas Eastern Overseas Inc. (9th Cir. 2015) 782 F3d 474, 480]

There is no set formulation of equitable considerations. "[I]n evaluating contribution claims under § 9613(f), [a court] is free to allocate responsibility according to any combination of equitable factors it deems appropriate." [See Acushnet Co. v. Mohasco Corp. (1st Cir. 1999) 191 F3d 69, 78 (internal quotes omitted) (collecting cases)—but equitable allocation must always be justified by the record; Akzo Nobel Coatings, Inc. v. Aigner Corp. (7th Cir. 1999) 197 F3d 302, 304—share allocation "is not a mechanical process"; Nashua Corp. v. Norton Co. (ND NY 2000) 116 F.Supp.2d 330, 352—using 8 factors to determine allocation; compare Otay Land Co., LLC v. U.E. Ltd., L.P. (2017) 15 CA5th 806, 864-865, 225 CR3d 119, 166-167 (California Superfund contribution/indemnity action)—"Whatever factors are appropriate in making an equitable allocation under the HSAA, party responsibility for contributing to the contamination must be part of the analysis"]

(1) [5:134.1] Voluntary clean-up and cooperation as factors: In equitably allocating responsibility between PRPs, courts are free to consider, along with other relevant factors, that a PRP itself engaged in voluntary clean-up efforts and the circumstances surrounding those efforts. [See generally, H.R. Rep. No. 99-253, pt. 3, at 19 (1985); ASARCO LLC v. Atlantic Richfield Co., LLC (9th Cir. 2020) 975 F3d 859, 868-870 & fn. 7 (reciting "Gore factors" commonly used in determining allocation)—trial court properly considered PRP's non-cooperation both in determining baseline allocation and separately awarding "uncertainty premium" based on PRP's egregious non-cooperation; Central Maine Power Co. v. F.J. O'Connor Co. (D ME 1993) 838 F.Supp. 641, 646—cooperation with government officials to prevent further environmental harm is "very important in the contribution analysis"; but see also¶ 5:125.4 (no 42 USC § 9613(f) contribution claim for purely voluntary clean-up costs)]

(2) [5:134.2] "De minimis" pollution activity as factor: Again, there is no requirement in CERCLA that a defendant be responsible for a minimum or "threshold" quantity of hazardous waste before liability may be imposed. However, courts may consider a PRP's "de minimis" contribution defense in equitably apportioning liability among the defendants; and, in an appropriate case, may conclude that, because a particular PRP's pollutants did not contribute more than "background" contamination, it should escape response costs liability altogether (i.e., its equitable or "fair share" of the response costs should be zero). [Acushnet Co. v. Mohasco Corp. (1st Cir. 1999) 191 F3d 69, 77-78; see also ¶ 5:126h ff.]

(3) [5:134.3] Liability not necessarily measured by volume or toxicity of hazardous waste contribution: Although blameworthiness of a defendant's decisions or omissions that led to the hazardous waste release is relevant to an equitable allocation among the PRPs, courts are not required to allocate liability based on the volume or toxicity of environmental waste attributable to each defendant. [Browning-Ferris Indus. of Ill., Inc. v. Ter Maat (7th Cir. 1999) 195 F3d 953, 958-959; Akzo Nobel Coatings, Inc. v. Aigner Corp. (7th Cir. 1999) 197 F3d 302, 304-305]

(4) [5:134.4] Accounting for settlements with some PRPs: The circuits are split regarding the proper method of apportioning CERCLA contribution liability among PRPs.

(a) [5:134.5] Discretionary allocation approach: Some circuits, including the Ninth Circuit, adopt the discretionary allocation approach. Simply put, courts are not required to employ any specific formula in allocating costs between private parties so long as the method used is consistent with CERCLA's purpose and goals—i.e., expeditiously cleaning up hazardous waste and assuring responsible parties pay for clean-up. [See Ameripride Services Inc. v. Texas Eastern Overseas Inc. (9th Cir. 2015) 782 F3d 474, 487 (declining to apply any single method in private-party context, while recognizing Congress' preference for pro tanto approach in government settlements); American Cyanamid Co. v. Capuano (1st Cir. 2004) 381 F3d 6, 20 & fn. 4 (collecting cases and discussing advantages and disadvantages of "pro tanto" vs. "claim reduction" approaches)—nonsettling PRPs' liability reduced by proportionate share of fault attributed to settling PRPs]

(b) [5:134.6] "Pro tanto" approach: Other circuits rely on the "pro tanto" approach, apportioning contribution liability on the basis of the total response (clean-up) costs, net of plaintiff's settlements with PRPs; i.e., in determining the total cost to which a defendant PRP must contribute, these courts ascertain plaintiff's total outlay and then reduce that amount by sums received or due under third party settlements involving the same site. The claimed advantage is that the pro tanto approach avoids "what could be a complex and unproductive inquiry into the responsibility of missing parties." [Akzo Nobel Coatings, Inc. v. Aigner Corp. (7th Cir. 1999) 197 F3d 302, 308 (rejecting "global assessment of responsibility" approach); K.C. 1986 Ltd. Partnership v. Reade Mfg. (8th Cir. 2007) 472 F3d 1009, 1017-1018; see also Friedland v. TIC-The Indus. Co. (10th Cir. 2009) 566 F3d 1203, 1209-1211—settlement amount paid by one defendant is credited against amount that may be recovered from nonsettling defendants when conduct of multiple defendants results in single injury with common damages (so-called "one satisfaction rule")]

(5) [5:135] Equitable defenses available: Whereas defenses to CERCLA liability to the government are strictly statutory (¶ 5:120 ff.), the same is not true in a purely private action between PRPs seeking contribution. Equitable defenses may be asserted against private plaintiffs in allocating CERCLA response costs (damages) among the liable parties. [Town of Munster, Ind. v. Sherwin-Williams Co., Inc. (7th Cir. 1994) 27 F3d 1268, 1273 (delay and prejudice); Smith Land & Improvement Corp. v. Celotex Corp. (3rd Cir. 1988) 851 F2d 86, 89-90 (caveat emptor)]

(6) [5:135.1] Parties' contractual obligations as factor: In apportioning response cost liability, the court may consider any contractual obligations between the parties, even though it may lack jurisdiction to enforce them. [Cadillac Fairview/Calif., Inc. v. Dow Chem. Co. (9th Cir. 2002) 299 F3d 1019, 1028—district court did not abuse discretion in apportioning 100% of response costs to government pursuant to its hold harmless agreement with other party; see also TDY Holdings, LLC v. United States (9th Cir. 2018) 885 F3d 1142, 1148-1149—district court erred in allocating 100% of response costs to government contractor where, among other factors, contract required use of subject chemicals and government had repeatedly agreed to share in clean-up costs at site]

f. [5:135.10] Possible joint liability among contribution defendants: Nothing in CERCLA imposes a several liability limit among defendants sued for contribution. The court's power in a CERCLA contribution suit to apply appropriate equitable factors in allocating response costs between PRPs (¶ 5:135 ff.) gives it discretion to decide that the defendants should be held jointly liable. [Browning-Ferris Indus. of Ill., Inc. v. Ter Maat (7th Cir. 1999) 195 F3d 953, 956-957 (describing issue as one "of first impression at the appellate level")—"Joint liability thus is optional, rather than unavailable"; see also Carter-Jones Lumber Co. v. Dixie Distributing Co. (6th Cir. 1999) 166 F3d 840, 847-848]

g. [5:136] Settlement shield: A PRP who has resolved its liability to the government in an administrative or judicially-approved settlement is insulated from contribution claims under CERCLA regarding matters addressed in the settlement. Nonsettling PRPs remain exposed to contribution claims (unless the settlement with the government otherwise provides). [42 USC § 9613(f)(2) & (3)(B); United States v. Atlantic Research Corp. (2007) 551 US 128, 140, 127 S.Ct. 2331, 2339; see also United States v. Coeur d'Alenes Co. (9th Cir. 2014) 767 F3d 873, 875—PRPs who do not enter into early settlements may ultimately bear disproportionate share of CERCLA liability (¶ 5:136.2); City of Emeryville v. Robinson (9th Cir. 2010) 621 F3d 1251, 1264—settlement shield limited to claims by nonparties who are, "at a minimum," PRPs to site at issue (discussed further at ¶ 5:136.1); ASARCO, LLC v. Union Pac. R.R. Co. (8th Cir. 2014) 762 F3d 744, 752—tolling agreement between

PRPs did not waive one PRP's statutory contribution shield after it settled its liability with federal government*; United States v. Iron Mountain Mines* (ED CA 2010) 724 F.Supp.2d 1086, 1092–1093—while federal government's settlement with some PRPs insulated them from contribution claims, it did not preclude government from recovering past clean-up costs from nonsettling PRPs]

(1) [5:136.1] Nonsettling PRPs' right of intervention: Because their contribution claims can be barred, nonsettling PRPs may intervene as of right in the CERCLA litigation to challenge a proposed government settlement with other PRPs. The right of intervention lies pursuant to FRCP 24(a)(2) and 42 USC § 9613(i) (CERCLA). [California Dept. of Toxic Substances Control v. Commercial Realty Projects, Inc. (9th Cir. 2002) 309 F3d 1113, 1118; United States v. Aerojet General Corp. (9th Cir. 2010) 606 F3d 1142, 1150 (agreeing with 8th and 10th Circuits)—nonsettling PRPs have "significant protectable interest" in litigation between government and would-be settling PRPs sufficient to satisfy statutory intervention requirements; and see City of Emeryville v. Robinson (9th Cir. 2010) 621 F3d 1251, 1260—nonsettling PRPs facing "imminent extinction" of their state law contribution claims for clean-up costs associated with their property (Site "B") could intervene as of right in federal action to enforce prior court-approved settlement barring any claims for contamination emanating from adjacent property (Site "A") (nonsettling PRPs had no notice of nor involvement in Site "A" litigation and settlement)]

(a) [5:136.2] Based on inadequate consent decree: Nonsettling PRPs who intervene in CERCLA litigation may do so on the ground that a proposed consent decree with the settling PRPs is neither procedurally nor substantively "fair, reasonable and consistent" with CERCLA's objectives. Indeed, courts usually "must find that the agreement is 'based upon, and roughly correlated with, some acceptable measure of comparative fault, apportioning liability among the settling parties according to rational (if necessarily imprecise) estimates of how much harm each [potentially responsible party] has done.'" [Arizona v. City of Tucson (9th Cir. 2014) 761 F3d 1005, 1011-1012 (brackets in original; internal quotes omitted)—district court abdicated its responsibility to independently scrutinize proposed agreements by deferring completely to state agency's interpretation of CERCLA's mandate; but see United States v. Coeur d'Alenes Co. (9th Cir. 2014) 767 F3d 873, 874—government-approved CERCLA settlement based solely on small business' ability to pay approved over intervening PRP's objection]

1) [5:136.3] Comment: Although courts normally must engage in some type of comparative fault analysis, CERCLA expressly permits the government to limit a PRP's liability based on its ability to pay (42 USC § 9622(e)(3)(A)). Moreover, "[c]ourts have routinely recognized the important policy considerations served by so-called 'ability to pay' settlements." [United States v. Coeur d'Alenes Co. (9th Cir. 2014) 767 F3d 873, 875-875—federal government seeks to avoid settlements that will force small businesses and individuals of modest means into bankruptcy or require them to sell off major assets]

(2) [5:137] Compare—private settlements: CERCLA is silent on the issue of whether a settlement solely between private parties effects a similar contribution claim bar. [American Cyanamid Co. v. Capuano (1st Cir. 2004) 381 F3d 6, 20] However, while varying approaches have been used, the judicial consensus appears to be that private party settlements approved by the court as being "fair and adequate" will likewise release the settling parties from nonsettling parties' contribution claims. [See Akzo Nobel Coatings, Inc. v. Aigner Corp. (7th Cir. 1999) 197 F3d 302, 308]

Some courts reach this result by stretching 42 USC § 9613(f)(2) (even though it expressly refers only to settlements with "the United States or a State") in order to further CERCLA's settlement-favoring policy. [See United States v. SCA Services of Indiana, Inc. (ND IN 1993) 827 F.Supp. 526, 530-532; Akzo Nobel Coatings, Inc. v. Aigner Corp., supra, 197 F3d at 308; City of Emeryville v. Robinson (9th Cir. 2010) 621 F3d 1251, 1265 (noting "overwhelming majority" of courts imposing CERCLA contribution bar in private-party settlements do so only where affected persons were either parties to action, PRPs involved in or aware of settlement discussions, or nonparties who otherwise had "at least constructive notice their contribution claims stood to be extinguished")]

Other courts strictly interpret § 9613(f)(2) as limiting contribution protection to PRPs who settle with the federal government or a particular state. [See Gurley v. City of West Memphis, Arkansas (ED AR 2007) 489 F.Supp.2d 876, 879—city's judicially approved settlement with other private PRPs did not bar nonparty business owner's contribution claim against city (also noting nonparty business owner had no opportunity to participate in or object to settlement); Comerica Bank-Detroit v. Allen Indus., Inc. (ED MI 1991) 769 F.Supp. 1408, 1413-1415—declining to extend 42 USC

§ 9613 contribution claim bar to strictly private settlements, but allowing similar contribution claim protection under Uniform Comparative Fault Act]

(a) [5:137.1] Contribution/indemnity claim bar under state law: Under the California Superfund, a good faith settlement agreement bars any claims for contribution or indemnity against settling PRPs by nonsettling joint tortfeasors … even if the government is not a party to the underlying action: "[A]ll claims for indemnity and contribution against the settling parties are barred 'regardless of whether they are brought pursuant to CERCLA or pursuant to any other federal or state statute or common law' [citation] where the settling tortfeasor agrees to comply with a cleanup and abatement order issued by the state 'in regard to the further remediation of the contamination, reducing substantially the possibility of any shortfall created by the approval of these settlements' [citation]." [Fullerton Redevelop. Agency v. Southern Calif. Gas Co. (2010) 183 CA4th 428, 435-436, 107 CR3d 396, 401—city's judicially approved good faith settlement with other private PRP barred contribution/indemnity claims against city by nonsettling joint tortfeasor even though State not a party to action]

➪ [5:137.2] PRACTICE POINTERFOR NONSETTLING PRPS*: Because they have no right of contribution against the settling defendants, nonsettling PRPs who want to guard against other PRPs settling for too little (i.e., arguably less than their fair share) must either intervene in the suits against them (as in government litigation, ¶ 5:136.1) "or challenge the bona fides of the settlements immediately after they are reached." [See Akzo Nobel Coatings, Inc. v. Aigner Corp. (7th Cir. 1999) 197 F3d 302, 308 (emphasis in original)]

(3) [5:137.5] Compare—settling parties not insulated from § 9607(a) cost-recovery suit:42 USC § 9613(f)(2) does not protect settling PRPs from a 42 USC § 9607(a) cost-recovery suit (¶ 5:125.2 ff.). [United States v. Atlantic Research Corp. (2007) 551 US 128, 140, 127 S.Ct. 2331, 2339]

However, according to the U.S. Supreme Court, permitting settling PRPs to be sued under § 9607(a) for full cost-recovery (a "supposed loophole") does not "eviscerate" the § 9316(f)(2) settlement bar and discourage settlement of CERCLA claims. This is because (a) the PRPs could in turn file a 42 USC § 9613(f) contribution counterclaim to trigger equitable apportionment of liability (¶ 5:125.9 ff.), and any prior settlement would undoubtedly be considered as part of the "liability calculus"; (b) the settlement bar "continues to provide significant protection" from contribution suits by PRPs that have inequitably reimbursed the costs incurred by other parties; and (c) settlement "carries the inherent benefit of finally resolving liability as to the United States or a State." [United States v. Atlantic Research Corp., supra, 551 US at 140-141, 127 S.Ct. at 2339]

(4) [5:137.6] Settling parties' right to bring § 9607(a) cost-recovery claim? The U.S. Supreme Court has left open the issue whether, in addition to 42 USC § 9113(f) contribution claims, parties who settle with the United States have 42 USC § 9607(a) cost-recovery claims for expenses sustained pursuant to consent decrees entered into following a CERCLA lawsuit. [See United States v. Atlantic Research Corp. (2007) 551 US 128, 139, 127 S.Ct. 2331, 2338, fn. 6—"We do not decide whether these compelled costs of response are recoverable under § 113(f), § 107(a), or both"; see also Agere Systems, Inc. v. Advanced Environmental Technology Corp. (3rd Cir. 2010) 602 F3d 204, 227]

The Seventh Circuit has concluded if the settlement does not "resolve" liability to the government and thereby release a party from liability, that party can pursue a CERCLA cost-recovery claim. [See Bernstein v. Bankert (7th Cir. 2012) 733 F3d 190, 202, 206 (noting party is limited to contribution remedy, however, when one is available)]

Several other circuit courts have concluded otherwise: I.e., PRPs who execute consent decrees with the EPA (or any other governmental agency) are not entitled to pursue CERCLA cost-recovery claims. [See Solutia, Inc. v. McWane, Inc. (11th Cir. 2012) 672 F3d 1230, 1236-1237—42 USC § 9613(f) provides exclusive remedy for PRPs who execute consent decrees*;Morrison Enterprises, LLC v. Dravo Corp.* (8th Cir. 2011) 638 F3d 594, 603 (same); Niagara Mohawk Power Corp. v. Chevron U.S.A., Inc. (2nd Cir. 2010) 596 F3d 112, 128 (same); see also Agere Systems, Inc. v. Advanced Environmental Technology Corp. (3rd Cir. 2010) 602 F3d 204, 227-229—allowing settling PRPs to bring 42 USC § 9607(a) cost-recovery actions would expose nonsettling PRPs to joint and several liability with no right to contribution due to protection afforded settling parties by their consent decrees with government (¶ 5:136)]

6. [5:138] Environmental Responsibility Acceptance Act (State Law): California's Environmental Responsibility Acceptance Act (ERAA, Civ.C. § 850 et seq.) provides a detailed procedure to facilitate notification between site owners and PRPs of hazardous substance contamination and expedite remediation by responsible parties. [Civ.C. § 850 et seq.]

The discussion at ¶ 5:138.1 ff. addresses the Act's significant features. However, the statutory scheme is quite complex and should be carefully consulted.

a. [5:138.1] Definitions: Various provisions of the ERAA turn on terms having statutorily-defined common meanings. These include:

(1) [5:138.2] "Actual awareness" means "actual knowledge of a fact pertaining to an obligation" under the Act, including actual knowledge of a release exceeding the "notification threshold" (¶ 5:138.6). [Civ.C. § 850(a)]

(a) [5:138.3] Imputed knowledge: Actual awareness by a site owner's employees or representatives will be imputed to the owner only if the employees/representatives are responsible for monitoring, responding to, or otherwise addressing the hazardous substance release. [Civ.C. § 850(a)]

Similarly, actual awareness by a PRP's employees or representatives will be imputed to the PRP only if the employees/representatives are responsible for monitoring, responding to, or otherwise addressing the hazardous substance release. [Civ.C. § 850(a)]

(2) [5:138.4] "Notice of potential liability" means the site owner's notice stating that a hazardous substance release exceeding the "notification threshold" has occurred at the site and the owner believes the "notice recipient" is a responsible party with respect to the release. [Civ.C. § 850(f); see¶ 5:138.15 ff.]

(3) [5:138.5] "Notice recipient" is either:

• A person who receives a "notice of potential liability" (¶ 5:138.4);

• A person who provides a "release report" pursuant to Civ.C. § 851(b) (¶ 5:138.35); or

• A person who offers a "commitment statement" to the site owner pursuant to Civ.C. § 851(c) (¶ 5:138.17, 5:138.45 ff.). [Civ.C. § 850(g)]

(4) [5:138.6] "Notification threshold" means any hazardous substance release of such magnitude that:

• The release is the subject of a "response action" ordered by or being performed by an oversight agency; or

• The release is impeding the site owner's ability to sell, lease or otherwise use the site. [Civ.C. § 850(h)]

(5) [5:138.7] "Commitment statement" is a written statement executed by the notice recipient (PRP) expressly reciting the language contained in Civ.C. § 854 (¶ 5:138.46 ff.).

[5:138.8] Reserved.

(6) [5:138.9] "Negative response" is the notice recipient's (PRP's) written response to a "notice of potential liability" indicating the recipient will not undertake any "response action"; or a "deemed negative response" (per Civ.C. § 851(c), ¶ 5:138.18) in the event of the recipient's failure to respond. [Civ.C. § 850(d)]

(7) [5:138.10] "Release report" is a notice sent by a responsible party to the site owner stating that a hazardous substance release has occurred on the site that is likely to exceed the "notification threshold." [Civ.C. § 850(m)]

(8) [5:138.11] "Written action" is any official action by an oversight agency expressly exercising clean-up authority in writing, pursuant to the agency's procedures, directing a response at the site. [Civ.C. § 850(s)]

[5:138.12 - 5:138.13] Reserved.

b. [5:138.14] Exclusions; effect of prior agency action: The ERAA ordinarily does not apply to property listed pursuant to Health & Saf.C. § 78760 et seq. (recodified & added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257, oper. 1/1/24) for response action. [See Civ.C. § 851(e)(1) (amended Stats. 2022, Ch. 258, oper. 1/1/24)] Nor does it apply where an oversight agency has issued an order or entered into an enforceable agreement unless:

• the order or enforceable agreement is issued or entered into after the owner accepts a commitment statement; or

• the agency that issued the order or entered into the agreement gives its written consent. [Civ.C. § 851(e)]

c. [5:138.15] Site owner's notification to PRPs: An owner of a contaminated site who has "actual awareness" of a "release exceeding the notification threshold" must take all "reasonable steps" to expeditiously identify the potentially responsible parties; and, as soon as reasonably possible after identifying PRPs, send a notice of potential liability to those PRPs and the agency that the owner believes to be the appropriate "oversight agency" (as defined in Civ.C. § 850(j)). [Civ.C. § 851(a)]

(1) [5:138.16] "Reasonable steps" for this purpose means taking the least expensive means available to ascertain the PRPs. [Civ.C. § 850(k)]

If the owner cannot otherwise identify any PRPs, "reasonable steps" include:

• Conducting a title search; and

• Reviewing all environmental reports in the owner's possession of which the owner has actual awareness pertaining to the site. [Civ.C. § 850(k)]

(2) [5:138.17] Notice recipient's response: Within 120 days of mailing of the notice of potential liability, notice recipients must respond to the site owner in writing, by certified mail, return receipt requested. [Civ.C. § 851(c)]

The response must take the form of a "commitment statement" (¶ 5:138.45 ff.) or a "negative response." [Civ.C. § 851(c)]

(a) [5:138.18] "Deemed" negative response: The notice recipient's failure to respond within the 120-day period or to strictly comply with the form of commitment statement prescribed by Civ.C. § 854 "shall be deemed a negative response." [Civ.C. § 851(c) (emphasis added)]

(b) [5:138.19] Extension of 120-day response period: However, the 120-day response period may be extended (thereby precluding a "deemed" negative response in the interim) by the site owner's written agreement. Also, an extension of up to 120 days "shall be provided" if the notice recipient commits to do a site investigation, "the results of which shall be provided to the owner and the oversight agency." [Civ.C. § 851(c)]

(c) [5:138.20] No monetary consequences for failure to respond: Notice recipients (PRPs) cannot incur any damages liability, fines or penalties under the ERAA for failure to make a written response (whether positive or negative) to a notice of potential liability. [Civ.C. § 853(b)]

[5:138.21 - 5:138.24] Reserved.

(3) Consequences of failure to give notice of potential liability

(a) [5:138.25] No monetary penalties: Nothing in Civ.C. § 850 et seq. subjects the site owner to damages, fines or penalties for failure to send a notice of potential liability. [Civ.C. § 853(c)]

(b) [5:138.26] No negligence per se exposure: Nor can the site owner's failure to send a notice of potential liability subject the owner to liability on a negligence per se theory (presumptive breach of duty; see¶ 5:170; and detailed treatment of "negligence per se" in Haning, Flahavan, Cheng & Wright, Cal. Prac. Guide: Personal Injury (TRG), Ch. 2). [Civ.C. § 853(c)]

(c) [5:138.27] Mitigation of owner's damages: On the other hand, the common law duty to mitigate damages "shall apply" if the site owner fails to give a timely notice of potential liability when required pursuant to Civ.C. § 850 et seq. [Civ.C. § 851(d)(1)]

Where the owner fails to mitigate damages by not giving timely notice, the owner's damage claim "shall be reduced in accordance with common law principles by the amount that the potentially responsible party provides would have likely been mitigated had a timely notice of potential liability been given." [Civ.C. § 851(d)(1)]

1) [5:138.28] Exception—awareness excusing notice of potential liability: No notice of potential liability is required by the owner (and hence the common law duty to mitigate damages (¶ 5:138.27) will not be triggered) when the party to whom the notice is owed already has actual awareness of the information required to be transmitted in the notice. [Civ.C. § 851(d)(5)]

[5:138.29 - 5:138.34] Reserved.

d. [5:138.35] PRP's obligation to provide site owner with release report: A PRP who has "actual awareness" of a hazardous materials release likely to exceed the "notification threshold" (¶ 5:138.6) must, as soon as reasonably possible after obtaining such actual awareness, provide the site owner with a "release report" (¶ 5:138.10). [Civ.C. § 851(b)]

(1) [5:138.36] Voluntary commitment statement: Within 120 days after issuance of the release report, the PRP optionally may also issue the site owner a "commitment statement" (¶ 5:138.45 ff.). [Civ.C. § 851(b)]

(2) [5:138.37] Not an admission of liability; no evidentiary effect: The PRP's issuance of a release report does not amount to an admission of liability and is not admissible evidence against the PRP in any litigation. [Civ.C. § 851(b)]

(3) [5:138.38] Consequences of failure to issue release report—resulting damages: Common law principles "shall apply" to the PRP's failure to issue a timely release report; i.e., the PRP "shall be responsible" to the site owner for damages the owner proves are likely caused by that failure. [Civ.C. § 851(d)(2)]

(a) [5:138.39] Exception—owner's awareness excusing release report: No release report is required from the PRP (and hence the owner will have no Civ.C. § 851(d)(2) damages cause of action, ¶ 5:138.38) if the site owner already has actual awareness of the information required to be transmitted in the release report. [Civ.C. § 851(d)(5)]

[5:138.40 - 5:138.44] Reserved.

e. [5:138.45] PRP commitment statement: As earlier noted, a notified PRP (or a PRP who is otherwise aware of a hazardous substance release) has the option of issuing a "commitment statement" to the site owner (¶ 5:138.36).

(1) [5:138.46] Statutory form and content: A commitment statement is effective only if executed in "substantially" the form prescribed by Civ.C. § 854. [Civ.C. § 854] The following are the main provisions:

(a) [5:138.47] Title: The statement must be labeled "Notice of Assumption of Government Imposed Site Investigation and/or Remedial Action Orders ('Commitment Statement')." [Civ.C. § 854]

(b) [5:138.48] Commitment to take response action: The parties must agree to abide by Civ.C. § 850 et seq. And the PRP must commit to undertake response action required by an oversight agency through a written action, directed to the site owner or PRP. [See Civ.C. § 854(a), (b), (c)]

1) [5:138.49] Covenant running with the land: The agreed-upon commitment "runs with the land," binding the site owner and all of the owner's successors in interest, including current and future lenders having a security interest in the site. [Civ.C. § 854(c)]

(c) [5:138.50] "Effectuating agreements": To facilitate the PRP's response action pursuant to the commitment, the parties must further agree that:

- The PRP will be allowed access to the site as necessary to perform its commitment (but will be liable for physical damage caused in conducting its response action) (Civ.C. § 854(d)(1));

- The parties will provide each other with copies of any communication with an oversight agency in connection with the hazardous materials release at the site (Civ.C. § 854(d)(2));

- Provided the PRP performs all of its obligations under the commitment statement, and except as otherwise provided in Civ.C. § 852(c) and (e) (¶ 5:138.75 ff., 5:138.87), no damages claim accruing after acceptance of the commitment statement shall be brought against the PRP by the site owner or its successors, heirs and assigns (Civ.C. § 854(d)(3)).

(d) [5:138.51] Admissibility: The commitment statement is inadmissible in any proceeding except an action to enforce the statement to the extent its contents would be admissible under other applicable law. [Civ.C. §§ 853(a), 854(e)]

(e) [5:138.52] Standing to enforce: The commitment statement may be enforced by the site owner, the PRP, and their successors, heirs and assigns. However, no third party beneficiary rights are created by the statement. [Civ.C. §§ 853(e), 854(e)]

(f) [5:138.53] Copy to prospective site transferees; notice: Until termination of the commitment statement or until all response actions thereunder have been completed, the site owner must provide a copy of the statement to any prospective purchaser or lessee. [Civ.C. § 854(f)]

And, within 14 days of transferring the site, the owner must notify the other parties to the commitment statement, by mail. [Civ.C. § 854(g)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(g) [5:138.54] Effective date: The commitment statement will become effective if executed by the site owner within 45 days after its issuance (see¶ 5:138.60); in that event, its terms take effect upon the PRP's receipt of the owner's acceptance. [Civ.C. § 854(h)]

(h) [5:138.55] Mediation upon rejection: Conversely, the site owner's rejection of the PRP's commitment statement triggers mediation under Civ.C. § 852(b) before any litigation concerning the contamination may be commenced (see¶ 5:138.60 ff.). [Civ.C. § 854(h)]

(i) [5:138.56] Terminable if no agency "written action" within two years: If at the end of two years from acceptance of the commitment statement, an oversight agency has not issued a "written action" (¶ 5:138.11) directed to the site owner or notice recipient, the owner has 60 days to terminate the commitment statement; in that event, the statement "shall have no further force or effect." [Civ.C. § 854(i); see also¶ 5:138.98]

(2) [5:138.57] Mandatory accompanying notice of rights: The PRP's commitment statement must be accompanied by the following statutory notice (14 point bold type if printed or bold capital letters if typed) (Civ.C. § 852(f)):

> "THIS FORM WAS DEVELOPED AS PART OF A PROCESS ENACTED BY THE CALIFORNIA LEGISLATURE TO PROVIDE OWNERS OF PROPERTY AND POTENTIALLY RESPONSIBLE PARTIES AN ALTERNATIVE TO LITIGATING DISPUTES OVER CONTAMINATION. IT IS YOUR OPTION AS TO WHETHER YOU SIGN THIS FORM OR OTHERWISE PARTICIPATE IN THIS PROCESS. IF YOU CHOOSE NOT TO PARTICIPATE IN THE PROCESS, YOU SHOULD NOTIFY THE PARTY WHO SENT YOU THIS FORM. THIS FORM INVOLVES A TRADEOFF WHEREBY EACH PARTY ACQUIRES AND RELINQUISHES CERTAIN RIGHTS. UNDER THIS FORM, THE PROPERTY OWNER GETS THE ASSURANCE THAT THE POTENTIALLY RESPONSIBLE PARTY IS OBLIGATED TO PERFORM INVESTIGATORY AND CLEANUP ACTIONS IN THE EVENT THAT GOVERNMENT AUTHORITIES ELECT TO REQUIRE THESE ACTIONS. ON THE OTHER HAND, THE PROPERTY OWNER FOREGOES CERTAIN CLAIMS ASSOCIATED WITH RESIDUAL CONTAMINATION THAT GOVERNMENT AUTHORITIES ALLOW TO REMAIN IN PLACE ON THE PROPERTY. IF YOU ELECT NOT TO SIGN THIS FORM, THE PROCESS DEVELOPED BY THE LEGISLATURE CONTEMPLATES THAT YOU WILL ATTEMPT TO MEDIATE ANY DISPUTES REGARDING THE CONTAMINATION. HOWEVER, MEDIATION IS NEITHER MANDATORY NOR BINDING. IF YOU HAVE QUESTIONS ABOUT THE PROCESS, YOU MAY WISH TO CONSULT AN ATTORNEY."

[5:138.58 - 5:138.59] Reserved.

(3) [5:138.60] Rejection and "deemed rejection" of commitment statement; effect: The site owner has 45 days after issuance of a PRP commitment statement to accept by sending an executed copy to the PRP by certified mail, return receipt requested. [Civ.C. § 852(a)]

The statement will be deemed rejected if not executed by the site owner within the 45-day period. [Civ.C. § 852(a)]

(a) [5:138.61] Commitment statement a nullity after rejection: The PRP (notice recipient) has no obligation with respect to the provisions of a rejected commitment statement. [Civ.C. § 852(a)]

(b) [5:138.62] Prelitigation mediation: Upon a rejection, unless the PRP elects not to proceed with mediation, the owner and PRP "shall participate in a mediation process prior to the commencement of any litigation which pertains to a release covered by the commitment statement." [Civ.C. § 852(b)(1)]

Either the PRP or site owner, however, may elect not to proceed further with the mediation process at any time before completion of the mediation. [Civ.C. § 852(b)(2)]

1) [5:138.63] Mediator: A Civ.C. § 852 mediator must be a "neutral third party"—i.e., either an attorney, engineer, environmentalist, hydrologist or retired judge who has served as a mediator. [See Civ.C. § 850(e)]

2) [5:138.64] Mediator's costs: Unless the site owner and PRP otherwise agree, the mediator's fees and costs "shall be borne equally" by the parties. [Civ.C. § 852(b)(7)]

3) [5:138.65] Effect of mediation settlement: To the extent the mediation results in a mutually-agreeable settlement, allocating liability and assigning owner and PRP rights and obligations in a manner different from or inconsistent with Civ.C. § 850 et seq., the settlement "shall supersede the terms" of Civ.C. § 850 et seq. pursuant to Civ.C. § 853(f) (¶ 5:138.125). [Civ.C. § 852(b)(3)]

4) Termination of mediation; litigation

a) [5:138.66] Termination by PRP's failure to participate within 90 days: If the PRP issuing the commitment statement fails to participate in mediation within 90 days of the owner's rejection of the commitment statement, the owner may proceed with litigation. [Civ.C. § 852(b)(3)]

b) [5:138.67] Termination by failure to effect settlement within 90 days: If a settlement of all issues cannot be reached within 90 days after the site owner's rejection of the commitment statement, the mediator "shall declare the mediation process unsuccessful and terminate the process." [Civ.C. § 852(b)(3)]

1/ [5:138.68] Agreed-upon extension: The site owner and PRP may mutually agree to extend the mediation process, but must give the mediator written notice thereof. [Civ.C. § 852(b)(3)]

2/ [5:138.69] Litigation or "other resolution": After termination of an unsuccessful mediation, the parties are free to litigate "or otherwise resolve" their claims. They may mutually agree to the terms of the commitment statement at any time after termination of an unsuccessful mediation, in which case Civ.C. § 850 et seq. governs the parties' rights and obligations. [Civ.C. § 852(b)(4)]

[5:138.70 - 5:138.74] Reserved.

(4) [5:138.75] Effect of commitment statement: Upon taking effect, a commitment statement has the following results (Civ.C. § 852(c)):

(a) [5:138.76] PRP's binding promise to take response action: It constitutes the PRP's binding promise to undertake any "response action" required by an oversight agency through a "written action," directed to the owner or PRP, in connection with the hazardous materials release that is the subject of the "notice of potential liability" or "release report." [Civ.C. § 852(c)(1)]

1) [5:138.77] No prospective release obligations: But the commitment statement creates no obligations with respect to hazardous substance releases occurring after the statement is signed, or with respect to any other release that is not the subject of the notice of potential liability. [Civ.C. § 852(c)(1)]

(b) [5:138.78] Site owner's binding promise to grant access: The statement also constitutes the site owner's binding promise to provide reasonable site access to the PRP to take any action "reasonably necessary or appropriate" to conduct a "response action." [Civ.C. § 852(c)(2)]

1) [5:138.79] PRP's damage liability: The grant of access does not affect the owner's rights if the PRP's onsite activities cause physical damage to the site that the PRP fails to repair within a reasonable period after completing all onsite activities. [Civ.C. § 852(c)(2)]

2) [5:138.80] Interference with owner's use: Unless otherwise ordered by the oversight agency, the PRP "shall take all reasonable steps to avoid interfering with the owner's use of the site." [Civ.C. § 852(c)(2)]

(c) [5:138.81] Stay of related civil actions: Once a commitment statement has been accepted, the court shall stay any action brought by the site owner against the PRP that issued the commitment statement—including, but not limited to, actions in trespass, nuisance, negligence and strict liability—which arise from or relate to a hazardous materials release for which a commitment statement has issued. [Civ.C. § 852(c)(3)]

1) [5:138.82] Duration: The stay shall be effective for up to two years from the date of acceptance of the commitment statement—but only for so long as the site response action is proceeding to an oversight agency's satisfaction. [Civ.C. § 852(c)(3)]

However, the stay period may be extended pursuant to written agreement between the site owner and PRP. [Civ.C. § 852(c)(3)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

2) [5:138.83] Exceptions—certain civil actions not stayed: No such stay will be ordered with regard to a civil action (i) seeking personal injury or wrongful death actions, or (ii) based on fraud, failure to disclose or misrepresentation related to any transaction between the site owner and PRP, or (iii) for breach of the commitment statement, or (iv) unrelated to the hazardous substance release. [Civ.C. § 852(c)(3)]

(d) [5:138.84] Tolling of statute of limitations: See ¶ 5:138.97.

(e) [5:138.85] Site owner's recoverable damages limited: In an action by a site owner who has accepted a PRP's commitment statement, and which arises from or relates to a hazardous substance release for which a commitment statement has issued, only the following damages are recoverable to the extent otherwise authorized by law (Civ.C. § 852(c)(4)):

• Damages for personal injuries or wrongful death caused by the hazardous substance release;

• Damages for breach of the commitment statement;

• Damages from the failure of a prospective purchaser to perform under a sales contract because of the hazardous substance release, where the nonperformance occurs before issuance of the commitment statement;

• Damages for lost use of the property before issuance of a commitment statement caused by the hazardous substance release;

• Recovery of costs of investigating and responding to the hazardous substance release where those costs are incurred before issuance of the commitment statement;

• Remedies for any breach of a preexisting contract entered into before acceptance of the commitment statement;

• Damages for lost rents and "any other damages recoverable under law associated with lost use of the site caused by any notice recipient during site response action activities." [Civ.C. § 852(c)(4)(A)-(G)]

(f) [5:138.86] Limited evidentiary effect: See ¶ 5:138.51.

(5) [5:138.87] Site owner's right of rescission: The site owner may obtain rescission of a commitment statement if the PRP repudiates its obligations under the statement; in that event, Civ.C. §§ 852 and 854 no longer apply to the site. [Civ.C. § 852(c)(5)]

(6) [5:138.88] Action for breach of commitment statement: At any time after acceptance of the commitment statement, the site owner or PRP may bring an action against the other for "material breach of rights and obligations associated with the commitment statement." Subject to the Civ.C. § 852(c)(3) stay (¶ 5:138.81), the parties may litigate these claims in the same action as any other claims they have in connection with the hazardous materials release that is the subject of the commitment statement. [Civ.C. § 852(e)]

f. [5:138.95] Tolling of statute of limitations: Various stages of the Civ.C. § 850 et seq. process trigger a tolling of applicable statutes of limitations:

(1) [5:138.96] Upon issuance of notice of potential liability, release report or commitment statement: Any applicable statute of limitations is tolled for 90 days following issuance of a notice of potential liability, a release report, or a commitment statement. [Civ.C. § 852(b)(5)]

(2) [5:138.97] Upon acceptance of commitment statement: Any applicable statute of limitations is tolled for two and one-half years from the date of acceptance of the PRP's commitment statement. [Civ.C. § 852(g)]

(a) [5:138.98] Site owner's option to terminate commitment statement where no agency "written action" within two years: If at the end of two years from the date of acceptance, an oversight agency has not issued a written action directed to the site owner or PRP, the owner has 60 days in which to terminate the commitment statement; and, in that event, the commitment statement "shall have no further force or effect." [Civ.C. § 852(g)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Upon the owner's election to terminate, Civ.C. § 852(c) (regarding effect of an accepted commitment statement, including the stay of related civil actions, ¶ 5:138.75 ff.) no longer applies to the site and no longer governs the owner's and PRP's rights and obligations. [Civ.C. § 852(g)]

(3) [5:138.99] Upon rejection of commitment statement and mediation: Further, any applicable statute of limitations is tolled from the time the site owner rejects a commitment statement until termination of the mediation process (¶ 5:138.62 ff.). However, if mediation is not commenced within 90 days after the owner's rejection, tolling of the statute of limitations terminates unless the parties otherwise agree. [Civ.C. § 852(b)(6)]

g. Related duties and rights

(1) [5:138.111] No affirmative ERAA duty to discover or investigate hazardous substance release: The ERAA (Civ.C. § 850 et seq.) does not itself impose any affirmative duty on a site owner or PRP to "discover, or determine the nature or extent of, a hazardous materials release at the site." [Civ.C. § 853(d)]

(a) [5:138.112] Compare—duties under other laws unaffected: By the same token, such an affirmative duty may exist independently of the ERAA under other laws and is not affected by the ERAA. [Civ.C. § 853(d)]

(2) [5:138.113] Contribution rights: Subject to authorized CERCLA defenses (¶ 5:101 ff.), notice recipients (PRPs) have a cause of action under the ERAA against other PRPs to recover reasonable response costs for conducting a response action approved or overseen by an oversight agency or as incurred pursuant to a commitment statement. [Civ.C. § 853(e)]

(a) [5:138.114] Equitable allocation among PRPs: This is a contribution action (¶ 5:125.4). As such, liability is to be allocated among the PRPs based upon the equitable factors specified in former Health & Saf.C. § 25356.3(c) "as it existed prior to its repeal by Chapter 39 of the Statutes of 2012." [Civ.C. § 853(e) (amended Stats. 2022, Ch. 258, oper. 1/1/24); Civ.C. § 853(e)]

Compare: Under the California Superfund, courts may allocate costs among the liable parties in a contribution action using "appropriate equitable factors" (¶ 5:134). [See Health & Saf.C. § 79670 (recodified & added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257, oper 1/1/24)]

(b) [5:138.115] Site owner's contribution liability: No ERAA contribution cause of action lies against a current or former site owner unless that owner operated a business that caused a hazardous substance release being addressed by a response action at the site and the costs incurred by the PRP plaintiff were in response to a release caused by the owner. [Civ.C. § 853(e)]

(c) [5:138.116] Three-year statute of limitations: No ERAA contribution recovery may be obtained for costs incurred more than three years before filing of the action. [Civ.C. § 853(e)]

[5:138.117 - 5:138.124] Reserved.

(3) [5:138.125] Superseding owner/PRP agreements: Nothing in Civ.C. § 850 et seq." affects or limits a site owner's preexisting contractual rights. Nor does the ERAA affect or limit the right of a site owner and PRP to agree to an allocation of liability or to an assignment of rights and obligations that is different from or inconsistent with the ERAA. "Such agreements shall supersede the terms of [Civ.C. § 850 et seq.]." [Civ.C. § 853(f) (emphasis added)]

1. [5:140] In General: Federal and state statutes (CERCLA, California Superfund, etc.) do not provide the exclusive avenues for legal redress of environmental hazards contamination. Remedies are also available under common law theories, including negligence, nuisance, trespass, and perhaps even strict liability. In some cases, these common law causes of action may fill the gaps left by statutory law on recoverable damages or a private right of action.

a. [5:141] Remedies for petroleum/gas contamination: For example, CERCLA and the California Superfund provide no redress for the release of refined and unrefined petroleum products and natural gas or synthetic gas usable for fuel, because these are not "hazardous substances" under those statutory schemes (¶ 5:90 ff.). And while those hazardous products are covered by the RCRA, a private party's RCRA remedies are very limited (significantly, no RCRA damages recovery for past or ongoing clean-up efforts; see ¶ 5:125.10 ff.).

Accordingly, to obtain a complete money judgment for damages suffered as a result of petroleum products contamination, plaintiff's best chance may lie in common law tort claims. [See, e.g., Wilshire Westwood Associates v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1993) 20 CA4th 732, 738, 745-746, 24 CR2d 562, 565, 569-570—subsequent purchasers' claim against former gas station tenant barred by CERCLA "petroleum exclusion" but assertable as continuing nuisance action; KFC Western, Inc. v. Meghrig (1994) 23 CA4th 1167, 1177-1182, 28 CR2d 676, 683-686—owner's action against prior owners for gasoline contamination clean-up barred by California Superfund "petroleum exclusion" but assertable on continuing nuisance and continuing trespass theories]

b. [5:142] Personal injury and property damage remedies: CERCLA (and, probably, similar statutes authorizing a private party costs recovery action) does not allow damages for injury to persons or property (except for injury to natural resources) (see ¶ 5:126.10 ff.). Therefore, common law tort theories may be the only viable avenue to recover for personal injury (medical expenses, emotional distress, etc.), loss of income or property damage arising from the presence of hazardous substances on the property. [See Potter v. Firestone Tire & Rubber Co. (1993) 6 C4th 965, 997, 999-1000, 1009, 25 CR2d 550, 571, 573, 579-590—recognizing potential cause of action for emotional distress damages from fear of cancer resulting from exposure to toxins, as well as damages liability for medical monitoring costs]

c. [5:143] Overcoming statute of limitations bars on statutory remedy: Further, PRPs attempting to recover clean-up costs from others responsible for the contamination may face formidable opposition to a statutory remedy in the form of a statute of limitations defense (see ¶ 5:133 ff.). Nonetheless, they may have a common law remedy to redress the continuing, ongoing effects of a prior hazardous substance release. [See, e.g., Newhall Land & Farming Co. v. Sup.Ct. (Mobil Oil Corp.) (1993) 19 CA4th 334, 341-347, 23 CR2d 377, 380-384—owner's common law action against remote predecessor in title]

(1) [5:143.1] CERCLA preemption re accrual of cause of action: Although state statutory and common law causes of action are subject to state statutes of limitations, state law does not necessarily define accrual of the cause of action (i.e., when the particular statute of limitations commences to run).

(a) [5:143.2] Federally-mandated "discovery rule": Pursuant to CERCLA, all statutes of limitations for personal injury or property damage actions arising from the release of hazardous substances from a facility into the environment (within the meaning of CERCLA, see ¶ 5:5 ff.) may commence to run no earlier than the date plaintiff knew or reasonably should have known that the injury or damage was caused or contributed to by the hazardous substance in issue. Statutes of limitations providing an earlier accrual date are preempted, even where plaintiff has not sued under CERCLA, instead pleading only state law claims. [42 USC § 9658(a)(1), (b)(4)(A); Angeles Chem. Co., Inc. v. Spencer & Jones (1996) 44 CA4th 112, 122, 51 CR2d 594, 599; Rivas v. Safety-Kleen Corp. (2002) 98 CA4th 218, 231, 119 CR2d 503, 513 & fn. 7; see also Freier v. Westinghouse Elec. Corp. (2nd Cir. 2002) 303 F3d 176, 203, 205 (rejecting 10th Amendment challenge to federally-mandated discovery-rule accrual)]

Thus, where the applicable state law statute of limitations does not apply the CERCLA "discovery rule" to plaintiff's toxic contamination injury/damage suit, CERCLA mandates that the limitations period begin to run when plaintiff discovers, or should have discovered, the injury and its cause. [Burlington Northern & Santa Fe R.R. Co. v. Poole Chem. Co. (5th Cir. 2005) 419 F3d 355, 362—42 USC § 9658 "engrafts" discovery rule on state statutes of limitations; see also McCoy v. Gustafson (2009) 180 CA4th 56, 112, 103 CR3d 37, 81—CERCLA preempts state statutes of limitations if applicable state law limitations period provides earlier commencement date than federal law; Angeles Chem. Co., Inc. v. Spencer & Jones, supra, 44 CA4th at 123, 51 CR2d at 599-600—CCP § 337.15 maximum 10-year latent construction defect statute of limitations preempted by CERCLA (¶ 5:160.1)]

Conversely, there is no federal preemption where the applicable state law statute of limitations applies the discovery rule, so that the limitations period commences on the same date under both state law and CERCLA (¶ 5:143.5). [See Alexander v. Exxon Mobil (2013) 219 CA4th 1236, 1252, 162 CR3d 617, 630, fn. 7 (concluding personal injury claims were not, as a matter of law, precluded under state discovery rule, making it unnecessary to consider whether federally-mandated discovery rule provided more generous commencement date); McCoy v. Gustafson, supra, 180 CA4th at 112-113, 103 CR3d at 81-82—no federal preemption where 3-year state law limitations period for injury to real property by permanent nuisance began running when plaintiff discovered bunker oil]

1) [5:143.3] Inapplicable to toxic exposure in workplace claims: By its terms, the preemption statute applies only where the state law suit alleges personal injury or property damage arising out of CERCLA's predicate elements—the "release" of a "hazardous substance" from a "facility" into the "environment" (¶ 5:5 ff.). [42 USC § 9658(a)(1)]

Thus, the 42 USC § 9658 preemptive accrual rule does not apply to state law claims based on toxic exposure confined within the workplace (no "release" into the "environment"; see ¶ 5:5.10). [Rivas v. Safety-Kleen Corp. (2002) 98 CA4th 218, 236, 119 CR2d 503, 517]

2) [5:143.4] Compare—special rule for minors: Under CERCLA, a minor's action accrues on the later of the date that:

— the action would have accrued under the federally-mandated "discovery rule" (¶ 5:143.2); or

— the minor reaches the age of majority or has a legal representative appointed. [42 USC § 9658(b)(4)(B)(i); see also CTS Corp. v. Waldburger (2014) 573 US 1, 11, 17, 134 S.Ct. 2175, 2184, 2187 (noting 42 USC § 9658(b)(4)(B) provides for equitable tolling for minor plaintiffs)]

3) [5:143.4a] Compare—special rule for incompetents: Similarly, under CERCLA, an incompetent person's action accrues on the later of the date that:

— the action would have accrued under the federally-mandated "discovery rule" (¶ 5:143.2); or

— the individual becomes competent or has a legal representative appointed. [42 USC § 9658(b)(4)(B)(ii); see also CTS Corp. v. Waldburger (2014) 573 US 1, 11, 17, 134 S.Ct. 2175, 2184, 2187 (noting 42 USC § 9658(b)(4)(B) provides for equitable tolling for incompetent plaintiffs)]

4) [5:143.5] Application under California law: The California statute of limitations applicable to actions for injury, illness or death apparently is consistent with the federal "discovery rule":

In a civil action for injury or illness based upon exposure to a hazardous material or toxic substance, the time for commencement of the action shall be no later than the later of two years from the date of injury or two years after plaintiff "becomes aware of, or reasonably should have become aware of, (1) an injury, (2) the physical cause of the injury, and (3) sufficient facts to put a reasonable person on inquiry notice that the injury was caused or contributed to by the wrongful act of another …" [CCP § 340.8(a) (emphasis added); see also CCP § 340.8(c)—asbestos injury actions subject to CCP § 340.2 (not CCP § 340.8) and medical malpractice actions subject to CCP § 340.5 (not § 340.8); Alexander v. Exxon Mobil (2013) 219 CA4th 1236, 1252, 162 CR3d 617, 630—§ 340.8 is "not intended to create a special discovery rule of accrual for claims predicated on exposure to hazardous substances, but rather to clarify that California's traditional discovery rule applies to such claims"]

A similar discovery rule applies in wrongful death actions based upon decedent's exposure to a hazardous material or toxic substance (time for commencement of the action shall be no later than the later of two years from date of decedent's death or two years from the first date plaintiff "is aware of, or reasonably should have become aware of, the physical cause of the death and sufficient facts to put a reasonable person on inquiry notice that the death was caused or contributed to by the wrongful act of another …"). [CCP § 340.8(b)]

a) [5:143.6] Comment: The first prong of the CCP § 340.8(a) statute of limitations (two years from the date of injury) seems superfluous: As a practical matter, plaintiff's "awareness" of the injury necessarily can only occur upon or after the injury, so that plaintiff will always have two years from the date of "awareness" to file suit.

(2) [5:143.7] CERCLA statute of limitations preemption *inapplicable to statutes of repose: Statutes of repose, unlike statutes of limitation, may cut off a claim before plaintiffs discover they have been wronged or even before any damages have been suffered (e.g., under North Carolina's statutory scheme, no tort action can be commenced more than 10 years after the defendant's last culpable act). "A statute of repose … puts an outer limit on the right to bring a civil action. That limit is measured not from the date on which the claim accrues but instead from the date of the last culpable act or omission of the defendant … The repose provision is therefore equivalent to 'a cutoff,' … in essence an 'absolute … bar' on a defendant's temporal liability …" [CTS Corp. v. Waldburger (2014) 573 US 1, 8, 134 S.Ct. 2175, 2182-2183]

CERCLA's preemption of certain state statutes of limitation (¶ 5:143.2 ff.) does not apply to statutes of repose that operate to bar claims CERCLA's delayed discovery rule was intended to address: "Although there is substantial overlap between the … two types of statute, each has a distinct purpose and each is targeted at a different actor. Statutes of limitations require plaintiffs to pursue 'diligent prosecution of known claims,' …. Statutes of repose effect a legislative judgment that a defendant should 'be free from liability after the legislatively determined period of time.'" [See CTS Corp. v. Waldburger, supra, 573 US at 8-9, 18, 134 S.Ct. at 2183, 2188—statutes of repose are not within Congress' preemptive mandate under a proper interpretation of 42 USC § 9658]

[5:144] The sections at ¶ 5:145 ff. discuss some of the common law theories that have been successfully pursued in the environmental hazards context.

2. [5:145] Strict Liability Cause of Action Predicated on Abnormally Dangerous/Ultrahazardous Activity: The use of a property for production, storage or disposal of hazardous substances may constitute an "abnormally dangerous" (or "ultrahazardous") activity subject to strict liability in tort (Rest.2d Torts § 520).

a. [5:146] Case-by-case approach: In deciding whether hazardous substance activity is "abnormally dangerous" for strict liability purposes, most courts align with the Restatement of Torts position in cautioning against "per se" rulings based on the nature of the toxic material (see Rest.2d Torts § 520, comm. f). Rather, the weight of authority approaches the issue on a case-by-case basis, considering the relevant factors listed in Rest.2d Torts § 520. [See T & E Indus., Inc. v. Safety Light Corp. (NJ Sup.Ct. 1991) 123 NJ 371, 390-394, 587 A2d 1249, 1259-1261—after considering Restatement factors, court concluded processing, handling and disposal of radium is abnormally dangerous activity subjecting processor to strict liability "under the facts of this case"; Ashland Oil, Inc. v. Miller Oil Purchasing Co. (5th Cir. 1982) 678 F2d 1293, 1307-1308—chemical waste disposal company and person with whom it arranged to dispose of hazardous substances pursuant to plan to introduce them into crude oil pipeline were strictly liable for engaging in ultrahazardous activity; see also Ahrens v. Sup.Ct. (Pacific Gas & Elec. Co.) (1988) 197 CA3d 1134, 1149, 243 CR 420, 428-429—triable issue of fact whether using, maintaining and operating electrical transformers containing PCBs at high-rise office building is "ultrahazardous"]

b. [5:147] As between buyers and former owners? Courts at one time took the position that a strict liability cause of action premised on an abnormally dangerous activity could be maintained only by neighboring property owners or other third party PRPs. The cause of action would not lie in favor of a buyer of property against a predecessor in title … because, under the doctrine of "caveat emptor," sellers were not liable to their buyers for the condition of the land existing at the time of transfer absent express agreement—i.e., unlike "innocent third parties," the buyer could have inspected the property or insisted on a warranty deed (Rest.2d Torts § 352, comm. (a)). [Philadelphia Elec. Co. v. Hercules, Inc. (3rd Cir. 1985) 762 F2d 303, 312; see also Pinole Point Properties, Inc. v. Bethlehem Steel Corp. (ND CA 1984) 596 F.Supp. 283, 292, fn. 5—seller not strictly liable for buyer's clean-up costs at alleged hazardous waste disposal site because remediation expense and diminished property value "not the type of harm for which strict liability generally attaches"]

This issue has yet to be squarely decided by a California court. However, out-of-state authority rejects the distinction under contemporary law: "We are not persuaded … that a landowner who engages in abnormally-dangerous activities should be liable only to neighboring property owners." [T & E Indus., Inc. v. Safety Light Corp. (NJ Sup.Ct. 1991) 123 NJ 371, 385, 587 A2d 1249, 1256—buyer could assert strict liability/abnormally dangerous activity cause of action against predecessor in title who contaminated property by radium dumping]

(1) [5:148] Rationale for upholding liability: In recognizing a buyer's right to state a strict liability cause of action against the seller who created the abnormally dangerous condition, the T & E court reasoned as follows:

• [5:148.1] Fundamentally, the policies underlying the abnormally-dangerous-activity doctrine do not rest on notions of property rights. The doctrine imposes liability on those who, for their own benefit, introduce an extraordinary risk of harm into the community, reflecting a policy that (i) the risk of loss justifiably be allocated as a cost of business to the enterpriser who engaged in the conduct and (ii) such enterprises are in a better position to absorb the extraordinary risk by passing it onto the public. [T & E Indus., Inc. v. Safety Light Corp. (NJ Sup.Ct. 1991) 123 NJ 371, 386-387, 587 A2d 1249, 1257]

• [5:148.2] Further, the doctrine of caveat emptor as applied between real estate buyers and sellers has largely eroded over time. Sellers who conceal or fail to disclose risky conditions on the land can be held liable to buyers who had no reason to know of the condition (Rest.2d Torts § 353).

"The same rationale is just as, if not more, persuasive when a seller who has engaged in an abnormally-dangerous activity and disposed of the byproducts of that activity onto the property markets the land. With knowledge of its activity and of its use of the land, the seller is in a better position to prevent future problems arising from its use of the property … [and] allowing a buyer to recover would place liability on the party responsible for creating the hazardous condition and marketing the contaminated land …" [T & E Indus., Inc. v. Safety Light Corp. (NJ Sup.Ct. 1991) 123 NJ 371, 387-389, 587 A2d 1249, 1257-1258]

3. [5:150] Nuisance Cause of Action: A "nuisance" is "[a]nything which is injurious to health … or is indecent or offensive to the senses, or an obstruction to the free use of property, so as to interfere with the comfortable enjoyment of life or property …" [Civ.C. § 3479; see Clary v. City of Crescent City (2017) 11 CA5th 274, 289-290, 217 CR3d 629, 646—"indecent or offensive to the senses" is sufficiently broad to cover conditions constituting eyesores (¶ 5:154); McCoy v. Gustafson (2009) 180 CA4th 56, 63, 103 CR3d 37, 42—interfering with free use and enjoyment of neighbor's property by contamination equals nuisance; City of Modesto Redevelop. Agency v. Sup.Ct. (Dow Chem. Co.) (2004) 119 CA4th 28, 39, 13 CR3d 865, 872 & fn. 7—"there is general agreement that [nuisance] is incapable of any exact or comprehensive definition" (internal quotes omitted)]

A nuisance cause of action may lie against those who created or contributed to an environmental hazard, as well as against "innocent" successor landowners who did not create the condition but allowed it to continue. [See Team Enterprises, LLC v. Western Investment Real Estate Trust (9th Cir. 2011) 647 F3d 901, 912—nuisance cause of action also lies against those who affirmatively instruct polluting entities to dispose of hazardous substances in an improper/unlawful manner or who manufacture/install disposal systems] Indeed, under California law, "[e]very successive owner of property who neglects to abate a continuing nuisance upon, or in the use of, such property, created by the former owner, is liable therefor in the same manner as the one who created it." [Civ.C. § 3483; see also Rest.2d Torts § 839 (providing essentially the same)]

Moreover, a nuisance cause of action may exist in favor of plaintiff successors in interest seeking to hold former owners and occupiers of the property liable for clean-up costs. [See, e.g., Shamsian v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2003) 107 CA4th 967, 979, 132 CR2d 635, 644 (leaking underground petroleum tanks); KFC Western, Inc. v. Meghrig (1994) 23 CA4th 1167, 1182, 28 CR2d 676, 685 (same); Newhall Land & Farming Co. v. Sup.Ct. (Mobil Oil Corp.) (1993) 19 CA4th 334, 341-345, 23 CR2d 377, 381-383 (soil contamination resulting from former landowners' operation of natural gas processing plant)]

a. [5:151] Actionable nuisance on own property: An actionable nuisance claim is not limited to conduct or activities having their origin on adjoining property. Under California law, a property owner may sue for damages caused by a nuisance created on plaintiff's own property. [Shamsian v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2003) 107 CA4th 967, 979, 132 CR2d 635, 644; Mangini v. Aerojet-General Corp. (Mangini I) (1991) 230 CA3d 1125, 1134, 281 CR 827, 832; see also Wilshire Westwood Associates v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1993) 20 CA4th 732, 745-746, 24 CR2d 562, 569-570]

b. [5:152] Actionable despite trespass: A nuisance cause of action may be stated even though continuing presence of the environmental contamination also constitutes a trespass. [Mangini v. Aerojet-General Corp. (Mangini I) (1991) 230 CA3d 1125, 1136, 281 CR 827, 833—hazardous substance invasion of plaintiff's property, otherwise amounting to trespass, "may also constitute a nuisance under the statutes"; see also Rest.2d Torts § 821D, comm. e]

c. [5:153] Actionable despite defendant's lack of current possessory interest: The fact a PRP no longer has (or never had) a possessory interest in the contaminated property, and thus is unable personally to abate the nuisance, is no bar to liability. Damages may be assessed against those who create or assist in creating the nuisance, as well as against those who maintain it. [Mangini v. Aerojet-General Corp. (Mangini I) (1991) 230 CA3d 1125, 1137, 281 CR 827, 834; see also Redevelopment Agency of City of Stockton v. BNSF Ry. Co. (9th Cir. 2011) 643 F3d 668, 673 (applying Calif. law)—"critical question" is whether defendant created or assisted in creating nuisance, discussed further at ¶ 5:153.1; State of Calif. on behalf of Calif. Dept. of Toxic Substances Control v. Campbell (9th Cir. 1998) 138 F3d 772, 782—"Unlike CERCLA, California law imposes liability on any person who maintains a nuisance—regardless of whether that person has an interest in the land"]

Nor is nuisance liability defeated by the fact plaintiff did not have an interest in the property at the time the hazardous condition was created. [Newhall Land & Farming Co. v. Sup.Ct. (Mobil Oil Corp.) (1993) 19 CA4th 334, 343, 23 CR2d 377, 382]

(1) [5:153.1] Compare—no nuisance liability for manufacture or distribution of hazardous material: The "law of nuisance is not intended to serve as a surrogate for ordinary products liability." As such, parties who manufacture and/or distribute hazardous ("defective") products ordinarily cannot be liable under a nuisance theory. [City of Modesto Redevelop. Agency v. Sup.Ct. (Dow Chem. Co.) (2004) 119 CA4th 28, 39, 13 CR3d 865, 872-873; see also Redevelopment Agency of City of Stockton v. BNSF Ry. Co. (9th Cir. 2011) 643 F3d 668, 674 & fn. 2—public nuisance is not premised on defect in product or failure to warn, but on affirmative conduct that assisted in creation of hazardous condition (railroads not liable under nuisance theory for contamination caused by nearby industrial site even though pollutants flowed through their "french drain" that was installed to remove water from roadbed; railroads' conduct was not "active, affirmative or knowing" with respect to contamination and therefore did not "create or assist in creating" nuisance)]

d. [5:153.5] No nuisance action against "innocent" lessor landowner: One court concludes lessor landowners cannot be held liable for a continuing nuisance damaging adjacent land when the condition is the fault of a tenant and the lessor landowner neither created nor contributed to the nuisance. Absent the landowner's participation in causing the environmental contamination, "[s]ome form of negligence by the landowner is required" (¶ 5:170 ff.). [See Resolution Trust Corp. v. Rossmoor Corp. (1995) 34 CA4th 93, 99-100, 40 CR2d 328, 331]

(1) [5:153.6] Comment: Resolution Trust Corp. involved a lessor landowner whose property had been leased for gas station usage but who played no role in causing an underground fuel leak that migrated onto adjoining property. In reaching its conclusion, the Resolution Trust Corp. court surveyed several California cases upholding nuisance liability for failure to clean up contamination that causes ongoing property damage (see cases cited at ¶ 5:150); but none of those cases, according to the Resolution Trust Corp. court, held a lessor landowner liable for a nuisance where the lessor "was not an active participant in causing the fuel leak and contamination." [Resolution Trust Corp. v. Rossmoor Corp. (1995) 34 CA4th 93, 99, 40 CR2d 328, 331]

(2) [5:153.7] Successor liability under Civ.C. § 3483 distinguished: Though the Resolution Trust Corp. court nowhere cited Civ.C. § 3483, it is doubtful the same rule (applicable to lessors sued for a tenant's contamination) could be extended to protect "innocent" successor landowners sued on a nuisance theory for contamination caused by prior owners. As noted at ¶ 5:150, Civ.C. § 3483 expressly states that successor landowners who neglect to abate a continuing nuisance created by the former owner are liable "in the same manner as the one who first created it." [Civ.C. § 3483]

e. [5:153.15] Actions taken pursuant to statute: Actions taken under express statutory authority cannot be deemed a nuisance. [Civ.C. § 3482] Therefore, common law challenges to statutorily-authorized conduct (by way of a nuisance suit or otherwise) are precluded. [See Williams v. Moulton Niguel Water Dist. (2018) 22 CA5th 1198, 1205-1207, 232 CR3d 356, 361-363—water districts immune from liability for damage to pipes caused by chemical added to water per government-issued permit; Carson Harbor Village, Ltd. v. Unocal Corp. (9th Cir. 2001) 270 F3d 863, 888—no nuisance action against government defendants who obtained permits to operate storm water runoff system pursuant to Clean Water Act; Farmers Ins. Exchange v. State of Calif. (1985) 175 CA3d 494, 503, 221 CR 225, 230—State and its agents immune from liability for having released chemically destructive spray into atmosphere to eradicate medfly infestation pursuant to governmentally-declared state of emergency]

By the same token, Civ.C. § 3482 immunity is applied narrowly and only when the alleged nuisance is exactly what was lawfully authorized. Thus, a pesticide applicator whose postapplication drift damaged nontarget crops was not protected from liability under § 3482 even though its operations were conducted lawfully pursuant to government-issued permits. Indeed, "the permits issued … [were] intended to prevent, not authorize, the very nuisance alleged here." [See Jacobs Farm/Del Cabo, Inc. v. Western Farm Service, Inc. (2010) 190 CA4th 1502, 1530-1532, 119 CR3d 529, 549-551—pesticide applicator's conduct was confined to its own economic interests and those of its clients (i.e., there was no public emergency or facts upon which defendant could assert necessity defense; discussed further at ¶ 5:170); see also Otay Land Co., LLC v. U.E. Ltd., L.P. (2017) 15 CA5th 806, 846-847, 225 CR3d 119, 151-152—although defendant had construction and operation permits, no Civ.C. § 3482 immunity from trespass and nuisance claims that arose from clean-up of shooting range debris]

f. [5:154] "Public" vs. "private" nuisance; impact on scope of damages recovery: A nuisance affecting an entire community or neighborhood, "or any considerable number of persons, although the extent of the annoyance or damage inflicted upon individuals may be unequal," is a "public nuisance"; otherwise, it is a "private nuisance." [Civ.C. §§ 3480, 3481; see also City of Los Angeles v. San Pedro Boat Works (9th Cir. 2011) 635 F3d 440, 452—California follows Restatement in defining public nuisance as substantial and unreasonable interference with public right and private nuisance as substantial and unreasonable interference with individual plaintiffs' enjoyment of their land; State of Calif. on Behalf of Calif. Dept. of Toxic Substances Control v. Campbell (9th Cir. 1998) 138 F3d 772, 782 (applying Calif. law)—polluted groundwater is public nuisance; Clary v. City of Crescent City (2017) 11 CA5th 274, 289-290, 217 CR3d 629, 646—private, weed-infested lots strewn with trash are public nuisances]

(1) [5:155] Personal injury and property damages recoverable for public nuisance—"special injury" limitation: A public nuisance can support recovery for personal harm and/or property damage; however, plaintiffs suing on a public nuisance theory must demonstrate special injury different in kind, and not merely in degree, from that suffered by the general public. [Civ.C. § 3493—private person may maintain action for public nuisance only if "specially injurious to himself"; see Kempton v. City of Los Angeles (2008) 165 CA4th 1344, 1349, 81 CR3d 852, 855; Newhall Land & Farming Co. v. Sup.Ct. (Mobil Oil Corp.) (1993) 19 CA4th 334, 341-342, 23 CR2d 377, 380-381]

In the environmental hazards context, a property owner's governmentally-mandated testing or remediation expenses are sufficient to allege "special injury." [Mangini v. Aerojet-General Corp. (Mangini I) (1991) 230 CA3d 1125, 1138, 281 CR 827, 834]

(2) [5:156] Compare—private nuisance: By contrast, a private nuisance supports recovery only for damage to property or a right incidental thereto (not for personal injury). But plaintiffs suing on this theory need only allege and prove the environmental hazard interfered with a property interest; they need not prove they suffered damage different in kind from that suffered by the general public. [Newhall Land & Farming Co. v. Sup.Ct. (Mobil Oil Corp.) (1993) 19 CA4th 334, 342, 23 CR2d 377, 381; see also Vanderpol v. Starr (2011) 194 CA4th 385, 396, 123 CR3d 506, 514—plaintiffs must show their property was "injuriously affected" or their "personal enjoyment lessened" in order to prevail on private nuisance claim]

g. [5:156.5] "Permanent" vs. "continuing" nuisance; impact on scope of damages recovery: A nuisance may be either "permanent" or "continuing" in nature. The distinction affects both the applicable statute of limitations (¶ 5:157 ff.) and the amount of recoverable damages (¶ 5:156.6 ff.). [See McCoy v. Gustafson (2009) 180 CA4th 56, 63, 103 CR3d 37, 42-43]

(1) [5:156.6] Permanent nuisance—past and prospective damages recoverable: Where the hazardous condition (the nuisance) cannot be reasonably discontinued or abated, it is "permanent" in character. [Mangini v. Aerojet-General Corp. (Mangini II) (1996) 12 C4th 1087, 1097, 51 CR2d 272, 278; Shamsian v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2003) 107 CA4th 967, 979, 132 CR2d 635, 644 (distinguishing "permanent" from "continuing nuisance"); see also McCoy v. Gustafson (2009) 180 CA4th 56, 84, 103 CR3d 37, 58—"crucial test" of permanency is whether nuisance can be abated]

Plaintiffs proceeding on a permanent nuisance theory are entitled to recover all damages—past, present and future—legally caused by the condition. Indeed, they must seek such damages in a single action because successive suits predicated on the same permanent nuisance are not allowed. [Spaulding v. Cameron (1952) 38 C2d 265, 267-268, 239 P2d 625, 627-628; Gehr v. Baker Hughes Oil Field Operations, Inc. (2008) 165 CA4th 660, 667, 81 CR3d 219, 224; see also Shamsian v. Atlantic Richfield Co., supra, 107 CA4th at 979, 132 CR2d at 647—damages for permanent nuisance are "assessed once and for all"]

(2) [5:156.7] Continuing nuisance—no prospective damages: On the other hand, if the environmental contamination (the nuisance) can be remedied at a reasonable cost by reasonable means, it is "continuing" in nature. [Mangini v. Aerojet-General Corp. (Mangini II) (1996) 12 C4th 1087, 1103, 51 CR2d 272, 281-282; McCoy v. Gustafson (2009) 180 CA4th 56, 63, 103 CR3d 37, 43; see also Shamsian v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2003) 107 CA4th 967, 979, 132 CR2d 635, 644—nuisance involving use that may be discontinued at any time is continuing]

Recovery on a continuing nuisance theory is limited to damages already accrued; plaintiff's prospective (future) damages are not awardable. [Mangini v. Aerojet-General Corp. (Mangini II), supra, 12 C4th at 1103, 51 CR2d at 282; see also McCoy v. Gustafson, supra, 180 CA4th at 84, 103 CR3d at 58—while injured party is entitled to bring series of successive actions, each seeking damages for new injuries occurring within 3 years of filing said actions (¶ 5:158), recoverable damages do not include decrease in market value; and Beck Develop. Co., Inc. v. Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1996) 44 CA4th 1160, 1216-1222, 52 CR2d 518, 556-560 (distinguishing "continuing" from "permanent" nuisance for damages and statute of limitations purposes)]

(a) [5:156.8] No diminution in value damages: For that reason, diminution in value damages (which, by their nature, compensate for future loss) are not recoverable in a continuing nuisance action. [Santa Fe Partnership v. ARCO Products Co. (1996) 46 CA4th 967, 977-978, 54 CR2d 214, 220—no damages recovery for diminution in market value caused by stigma of contaminated land where nuisance abatable and thus temporary in nature rather than permanent or indefinite; see also Gehr v. Baker Hughes Oil Field Operations, Inc. (2008) 165 CA4th 660, 668-670, 81 CR3d 219, 225-227—

plaintiff's claim for interest rate differential damages was actually a diminution in value damages claim and therefore not recoverable under loss of use theory (¶ 5:156.9)]

Another reason for disallowing these types of damages in a continuing nuisance action is to prevent plaintiffs from obtaining double recoveries—i.e., recovering for the depreciation in value and also having the cause of that depreciation removed. Moreover, where defendants are willing and able to abate nuisances, it would be unfair to award damages on the theory the nuisances will continue. [Gehr v. Baker Hughes Oil Field Operations, Inc., supra, 165 CA4th at 668, 81 CR3d at 225]

(b) [5:156.9] Loss of use damages distinguished: Plaintiffs prevailing on a continuing nuisance theory are entitled to recover damages for loss of use of their property. [Mangini v. Aerojet-General Corp. (Mangini II) (1996) 12 C4th 1087, 1103, 51 CR2d 272, 282; Shamsian v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2003) 107 CA4th 967, 982, 132 CR2d 635, 647; and see Gehr v. Baker Hughes Oil Field Operations, Inc., supra—loss of use damages entails physical injury to property resulting in actual physical loss of use]

h. [5:157] Statute of limitations: An action claiming property damage on a nuisance theory is subject to the CCP § 338(b) three-year statute of limitations. Accrual of the cause of action, however, and hence the date on which the statute commences to run, depends on whether plaintiff alleges and proves a "permanent" or "continuing" nuisance. [Mangini v. Aerojet-General Corp. (Mangini II) (1996) 12 C4th 1087, 1096, 51 CR2d 272, 277; see also McCoy v. Gustafson (2009) 180 CA4th 56, 63, 103 CR3d 37, 42-43; Shamsian v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2003) 107 CA4th 967, 979, 132 CR2d 635, 644]

(1) [5:157.1] Permanent nuisance—statute commences on discovery: With respect to a permanent nuisance (condition cannot reasonably be abated, ¶ 5:156.6), the statute of limitations commences to run on the date plaintiff discovered, or should have discovered, the contamination. [Mangini v. Aerojet-General Corp. (Mangini II) (1996) 12 C4th 1087, 1096, 51 CR2d 272, 277—3-year statute barred plaintiff's damages claims under nuisance and trespass theories for contamination of land through toxic waste (dumping); see also Gehr v. Baker Hughes Oil Field Operations, Inc. (2008) 165 CA4th 660, 667, 81 CR3d 219, 224—if nuisance inflicted permanent injury on land, plaintiff must bring single action within 3 years of its creation; Beck Develop. Co., Inc. v. Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1996) 44 CA4th 1160, 1216-1223, 52 CR2d 518, 556-560—contamination constituted permanent nuisance as to which 3-year statute had long since run]

A plaintiff is charged with "presumptive knowledge" of contamination so as to commence the running of the statute of limitations once the plaintiff "has notice or information of circumstances to put a reasonable person on inquiry, or has the opportunity to obtain knowledge from sources open to [the plaintiff's] investigation." [Shamsian v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2003) 107 CA4th 967, 980, 132 CR2d 635, 645 (internal quotes omitted)]

(2) [5:158] Continuing nuisance—successive actions allowed: By contrast, if plaintiff can plead a continuing nuisance (or trespass) theory (¶ 5:156.7), every continuation of the nuisance (or trespass) gives rise to a separate damages claim. An action alleging a continuing nuisance may be maintained at any time before the nuisance is abated or within three years thereafter. [Mangini v. Aerojet-General Corp. (Mangini II) (1996) 12 C4th 1087, 1093, 51 CR2d 272, 275; Baker v. Burbank-Glendale-Pasadena Airport Authority (1985) 39 C3d 862, 869, 218 CR 293, 297; and see Gehr v. Baker Hughes Oil Field Operations, Inc. (2008) 165 CA4th 660, 667, 81 CR3d 219, 224—recovery limited to actual injury suffered prior to commencement of each action]

(a) [5:158.1] Plaintiff's burden to show condition reasonably abatable: Plaintiffs proceeding on a continuing nuisance theory bear the burden of establishing by substantial evidence that the nuisance is "abatable"—i.e., that the environmental contamination can be remedied at a reasonable cost by reasonable means. [Mangini v. Aerojet-General Corp. (Mangini II) (1996) 12 C4th 1087, 1103-1104, 51 CR2d 272, 282—P's case succumbed to "permanent" nuisance statute of limitations because no substantial evidence that toxic dumping contamination was subject to clean-up and that remediation cost would be "reasonable"; McCoy v. Gustafson (2009) 180 CA4th 56, 90, 103 CR3d 37, 63-64—P's case succumbed to "permanent" nuisance statute of limitations where jury found it was unknown whether property contamination could be abated]

(b) [5:159] Plaintiff's election in doubtful cases: Several appellate decisions conclude that in doubtful cases, plaintiffs should have the right to elect whether to treat the nuisance as permanent or continuing and that courts are inclined to favor plaintiff's right to pursue successive actions. [See Mangini v. Aerojet-General Corp. (Mangini I) (1991) 230 CA3d 1125, 1144, 281 CR 827, 839; Wilshire Westwood Associates v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1993) 20 CA4th 732, 744, 24

CR2d 562, 569; Capogeannis v. Sup.Ct. (Spence) (1993) 12 CA4th 668, 679, 682, 15 CR2d 796, 802, 804; Beck Develop. Co., Inc. v. Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1996) 44 CA4th 1160, 1217, 52 CR2d 518, 556]

1) [5:159.1] Limitation—plaintiff's evidentiary burden: However, any election by a plaintiff to proceed on a continuing nuisance theory cannot withstand a statute of limitations challenge where there is no substantial evidence that the contamination at issue is reasonably abatable. [Mangini v. Aerojet-General Corp. (Mangini II) (1996) 12 C4th 1087, 1104, 51 CR2d 272, 282]

Plaintiff cannot simply allege that a nuisance is continuing in order to avoid the bar of the statute of limitations. "While a plaintiff's election of remedies is entitled to deference in doubtful cases, that choice must nevertheless be supported by evidence that makes it reasonable under the circumstances … It is only where the evidence would reasonably support either classification that the plaintiff may choose which course to pursue." [Beck Develop. Co., Inc. v. Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1996) 44 CA4th 1160, 1217, 52 CR2d 518, 556-557]

(3) [5:160] Application of latent defect 10-year statute of limitations: Where the toxic contamination results from a latent construction defect, CCP § 337.15 might defeat any otherwise viable cause of action pled on a continuing nuisance (or continuing trespass) theory. Suits subject to CCP § 337.15 are time-barred unless commenced no later than 10 years after "substantial completion" of the construction project. [CCP § 337.15]

One court of appeal so held in a landowner's action seeking indemnification for abating diesel fuel pollution caused by the defective installation of underground storage tanks. Plaintiff's suit, brought some 19 years after installation of the tanks, was maintained on a continuing nuisance (and continuing trespass) theory. But for CCP § 337.15, the action would have been timely because commenced within three years after abatement of the contamination. However, the appellate court concluded the 10-year latent defect statute controlled and dismissed the suit as untimely. [Chevron U.S.A. Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (DiSalvo Trucking Co.) (1994) 44 CA4th 1009, 1017-1020, 54 CR2d 324, 328-330; compare Estuary Owners Ass'n v. Shell Oil Co. (2017) 13 CA5th 899, 916-919, 221 CR3d 190, 203-206—§ 337.15 did not apply to nuisance claim alleging contamination from negligent operation of facility, as opposed to defect in defendant's construction of facility]

(a) [5:160.1] CERCLA "discovery rule" preemption: Cases involving the "release" of a "hazardous substance" from the "facility" into the "environment" within the meaning of CERCLA (¶ 5:5 ff.) are subject to CERCLA's "discovery rule" preemption with regard to any otherwise applicable statute of limitations (¶ 5:143.2). This will "trump" the CCP § 337.15 10-year statute in such cases because it runs without regard to when or whether plaintiff discovered (or should have discovered) the contamination. [Angeles Chem. Co., Inc. v. Spencer & Jones (1996) 44 CA4th 112, 123, 51 CR2d 594, 599]

(This issue most likely did not arise in the Chevron U.S.A. case, supra, because the contamination involved leaking underground fuel, apparently within the petroleum exclusion and thus not subject to CERCLA (¶ 5:90).)

[5:161 - 5:164] Reserved.

4. [5:165] Continuing Trespass Cause of Action: A trespass is "an invasion" of someone else's interest in the exclusive possession of land. The "essence" of the cause of action for trespass is the unauthorized entry onto the land of another. Under California law, trespass may include invasion by pollutants. [See Team Enterprises, LLC v. Western Investment Real Estate Trust (9th Cir. 2011) 647 F3d 901, 912]

Moreover, the continued presence of contaminants may support a property owner's cause of action against former owners and occupiers on a continuing trespass theory. [See Mangini v. Aerojet-General Corp. (Mangini I) (1991) 230 CA3d 1125, 1148-1149, 281 CR 827, 842 (owner vs. former tenant); KFC Western, Inc. v. Meghrig (1994) 23 CA4th 1167, 1181-1182, 28 CR2d 676, 685-686 (owner vs. immediate predecessor in title); Newhall Land & Farming Co. v. Sup.Ct. (Mobil Oil Corp.) (1993) 19 CA4th 334, 345-347, 23 CR2d 377, 383-384 (owner vs. remote predecessor in title)]

a. [5:166] Actionable despite lawful possession at time of contamination: Again, a trespass is a tort against another's right of exclusive possession. Thus, a continuing contamination traceable to a former owner or occupier (who had exclusive possession at the time) will support a later continuing trespass action by a subsequent possessor of the land. [Mangini v. Aerojet-General Corp. (Mangini I) (1991) 230 CA3d 1125, 1141, 281 CR 827, 837; Newhall Land & Farming Co. v. Sup.Ct. (Mobil Oil Corp.) (1993) 19 CA4th 334, 345-347, 23 CR2d 377, 383-384; see also 9201 San Leandro, LLC v. Precision

Castparts Corp. (ND CA 2008) 548 F.Supp.2d 732, 736 (acknowledging split of authority whether former property owners can be liable for trespassing their own property, but concluding more recent authority supports imposing liability)]

b. [5:167] "Consent" no defense as against subsequent possessor: Hazardous substance contamination of the land amounts to a continuing trespass as to a successor in interest even though the contamination occurred with the prior owner's/possessor's consent (e.g., former owner polluting own property or tenant engaging in activity permitted by its lease). Continuing trespass may be committed by the "continued presence on the land of a … thing … placed on the land … with the consent of the person then in possession of the land, if the actor fails to remove it after the consent [is] terminated." [Rest.2d Torts § 160; Mangini v. Aerojet-General Corp. (Mangini I) (1991) 230 CA3d 1125, 1141-1142, 281 CR 827, 837; see also Newhall Land & Farming Co. v. Sup.Ct. (Mobil Oil Corp.) (1993) 19 CA4th 334, 347, 23 CR2d 377, 384; KFC Western, Inc. v. Meghrig (1994) 23 CA4th 1167, 1182, 28 CR2d 676, 686—"concept of consent is unavailing to a former owner whose activities contaminated the property"]

c. [5:167.5] Compare—not actionable against "innocent" lessor landowner: Just as a continuing nuisance cause of action will not lie against an "innocent" lessor landowner for contamination caused by a tenant (¶ 5:153.5), lessor landowners cannot be held liable on a continuing trespass theory unless they actively caused or contributed to the contamination. "[T]respass requires an act which is intentional, reckless, negligent or the result of ultrahazardous activity." [Resolution Trust Corp. v. Rossmoor Corp. (1995) 34 CA4th 93, 100, 40 CR2d 328, 331]

d. [5:168] Statute of limitations—general considerations: Trespass actions are subject to a three-year statute of limitations (CCP § 338(b)). And because the gravamen of a trespass claim is that real property (not any particular owner) has been injured, the limitations period is not revived each time the property changes owners or occupants. [McCoy v. Gustafson (2009) 180 CA4th 56, 105, 110, 103 CR3d 37, 75, 79—owners of contaminated property must bring claims to court within statutory period or actions will be barred for them and all subsequent owners; see also Chubb Custom Ins. Co. v. Space Systems/Loral, Inc. (9th Cir. 2013) 710 F3d 946, 972 (applying Calif. Law)—limitations period begins to run when injury to property occurs]

(1) [5:168.1] Application to subrogation suits: The same three-year limitations period applies when an insurance company files subrogated claims against third parties believed to be responsible for the wrongful conduct. Because the insurance company has not suffered an injury itself, but instead is asserting the claims of its insured in subrogation, the limitations period begins to run when the insured knew, or should have known, of the wrongful conduct. [See Chubb Custom Ins. Co. v. Space Systems/Loral, Inc. (9th Cir. 2013) 710 F3d 946, 972 (applying Calif. Law)—limitations period began to run when insured new, or should have known, of release of hazardous substances on its properties]

(2) [5:168.2] Compare—pleading "continuing trespass" theory: Plaintiffs who successfully plead a "continuing trespass" theory can circumvent the statute of limitations bar to relief. [McCoy v. Gustafson (2009) 180 CA4th 56, 63, 103 CR3d 37, 42-43—new action can be filed every three years for damages caused by continuing trespass; Baugh v. Garl (2006) 137 CA4th 737, 747, 40 CR3d 539, 546—where trespass is continuing, statute does not bar action until three years after last act of trespass]

Indeed, the continued failure to remove a thing tortiously placed on land "constitutes a continuing trespass for the entire time during which the thing is on the land and … confers … an option to maintain a succession of actions based on a theory of continuing trespass or to treat [continued presence] as an aggravation of the original trespass." [Rest.2d Torts § 161, comm. b; see also Mangini v. Aerojet-General Corp. (Mangini I) (1991) 230 CA3d 1125, 1148-1149, 281 CR 827, 842; Capogeannis v. Sup.Ct. (Spence) (1993) 12 CA4th 668, 681, 15 CR2d 796, 804; Starrh & Starrh Cotton Growers v. Aera Energy LLC (2007) 153 CA4th 583, 597-598, 63 CR3d 165, 175—by "choosing" to continue tortious ponding practices, defendant eliminated its statute of limitations claim (discussed further at ¶ 5:168.4)]

(a) [5:168.3] Abatability essential to "continuing trespass" cause of action: Notwithstanding the foregoing, plaintiffs seeking to prevail on a continuing trespass theory must present evidence confirming the trespass can be abated. In this regard, courts apply one or more of the following tests:

— Whether the offensive activity is currently continuing;

— Whether the condition's impact will vary (i.e., worsen) over time; and/or

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

— Whether the condition can be remedied in a reasonable manner and for a reasonable cost compared with the benefits and detriments to be gained by abatement. [Starrh & Starrh Cotton Growers v. Aera Energy LLC (2007) 153 CA4th 583, 593-595, 63 CR3d 165, 172-173; see also McCoy v. Gustafson (2009) 180 CA4th 56, 84, 90, 103 CR3d 37, 58, 63—"crucial test" is whether trespass can be abated at reasonable cost]

1) Application

• [5:168.4] A "classic continuing trespass" existed where waste water produced from oil production activities on one land parcel began migrating into the aquifers underlying an adjacent property more than three years before its owner filed suit. The offensive activity was continuing in nature and the impact of the subsurface migration would worsen as time passed. [Starrh & Starrh Cotton Growers v. Aera Energy LLC (2007) 153 CA4th 583, 588, 595, 63 CR3d 165, 167-168, 173]

• [5:168.5] Compare: No "continuing trespass" was established where a prior owner dumped toxic materials on land more than three years before its current owner filed suit. Plaintiff failed to offer any evidence on the reasonableness of possible abatement—i.e., the only applicable test had not been proven (the harmful activity had stopped long ago and there was no evidence the impact of the toxic materials would vary over time). [See Mangini v. Aerojet-General Corp. (Mangini II) (1996) 12 C4th 1087, 1090, 51 CR2d 272, 273 (limiting its decision to cases where property owners seek to maintain actions after limitations period expires)]

[5:168.6 - 5:168.9] Reserved.

(b) [5:168.10] Subject to latent defect 10-year statute of limitations; CERCLA preemption limitation: The CCP § 338(b) three-year limitations period for continuing trespass (like a continuing nuisance cause of action) may be "trumped" by the CCP § 337.15 latent construction defect 10-year statute where the toxic contamination arises from faulty construction completed more than 10 years before suit was filed. [Chevron U.S.A. Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (DiSalvo Trucking Co.) (1994) 44 CA4th 1009, 54 CR2d 324; see ¶ 5:160]

But because it runs without regard to plaintiff's discovery of the contamination, the CCP § 337.15 statute is preempted by CERCLA in any case involving the "release" of a "hazardous substance" from a "facility" into the "environment" within the meaning of CERCLA (¶ 5:5 ff.). See ¶ 5:143.2.

e. [5:169] Measure of damages; general considerations: In any trespass case, the proper measure of damages is one that will fully compensate plaintiff for damages that have occurred or can with certainty be expected to occur as a result of the trespass. [Starrh & Starrh Cotton Growers v. Aera Energy LLC (2007) 153 CA4th 583, 599, 63 CR3d 165, 176]

If the trespass definitely will continue into the future because it cannot be abated, damages can be fully ascertained and full recovery is available for all harm suffered (i.e., a permanent measure of damages may be awarded). [Starrh & Starrh Cotton Growers v. Aera Energy LLC, supra, 153 CA4th at 598, 63 CR3d at 175]

On the other hand, if it cannot be determined whether the harm will continue because it is possible to terminate (abate) the trespass, the law will not presume the trespass actually will be discontinued. Here, there is no way to ascertain the full extent of future damages—i.e., a permanent measure of damages (which includes future harm) is not an appropriate choice. [Starrh & Starrh Cotton Growers v. Aera Energy LLC, supra, 153 CA4th at 598-599, 63 CR3d at 175-176]

(1) [5:169.1] Statutory measure: In California, when the trespass involves a wrongful occupation of land, the measure of damages is the value of the use of the property (for up to five years preceding commencement of the action), plus the reasonable cost of repairing or restoring the property to its original condition and the costs, if any, of recovering possession. [Civ.C. § 3334(a)]

Generally, the "value of the use" is the greater of the reasonable rental value of the property or the benefit obtained by reason of the wrongful occupation. [Civ.C. § 3334(b); see also Watson Land Co. v. Shell Oil Co. (2005) 130 CA4th 69, 78-79, 29 CR3d 343, 350-351—"benefit" damages not recoverable under Civ.C. § 3334 unless trespass provided defendant with financial or business advantage; Starrh & Starrh Cotton Growers v. Aera Energy LLC (2007) 153 CA4th 583, 604, 63 CR3d 165, 180-181—"benefit" damages include profits directly linked to defendant's wrongful trespass ("direct link" requires some showing that portion of profit is tied to decision leading to trespass)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(a) [5:169.2] Restoration costs must be reasonable; "diminution in value" alternative: In order to restore property to its original condition (i.e., abate a trespass), the contamination must be cleaned up. The clean-up costs are recoverable as statutory damages only if they are reasonable. [See Starrh & Starrh Cotton Growers v. Aera Energy LLC (2007) 153 CA4th 583, 599-601, 63 CR3d 165, 176-178 (noting case law also requires that costs (damages) bear reasonable relationship to harm caused by trespass)]

When restoration costs are not reasonable, diminution in value of the subject property may be an appropriate measure of damages. [Starrh & Starrh Cotton Growers v. Aera Energy LLC, supra, 153 CA4th at 602, 63 CR3d at 178]

1) [5:169.3] Compare—CERCLA PRPs may require EPA approval: If a party is a CERCLA PRP (¶ 5:60) and is seeking restoration damages for property that is subject to an ongoing CERCLA cleanup (i.e., a remedial investigation and feasibility study has been initiated), the party cannot seek restoration damages without EPA approval of their restoration plan. This is so even if the party is not asserting any claim under CERCLA and is only seeking relief under state common law. [42 USC § 9622(e)(6); Atlantic Richfield Co. v. Christian (2020) 590 US _, _, 140 S.Ct. 1335, 1352, 1357 (¶ 5:12, 5:123.1)]

f. [5:169.10] Attorney fees; agricultural cases: The prevailing plaintiff in an action for trespass to land "under cultivation," or intended or used for "raising livestock," is entitled by statute to a reasonable attorney fee award. [CCP § 1021.9; see also Starrh & Starrh Cotton Growers v. Aera Energy LLC (2007) 153 CA4th 583, 606-607, 63 CR3d 165, 182-183—§ 1021.9 attorney fees recoverable for both surface and subsurface trespasses; compare Belle Terre Ranch, Inc. v. Wilson (2015) 232 CA4th 1468, 1475-1477, 182 CR3d 393, 398-400—§ 1021.9 attorney fees not recoverable where nominal ("symbolic") damages were awarded vineyard based on technical invasion of its property with no proof of injury (trespass must result in some tangible harm to real or personal property)]

5. Negligence Cause of Action

a. [5:170] "Negligence per se" based on statutory violation: Violation of a statute may raise a presumption that the violator was negligent. The presumption arises if (1) defendant violated a statute; (2) the violation proximately caused plaintiff's injury; (3) the injury resulted from the kind of occurrence the statute was designed to prevent; and (4) plaintiff was among the class of persons the statute was intended to protect. [See Ev.C. § 669; Jacobs Farm/Del Cabo, Inc. v. Western Farm Service, Inc. (2010) 190 CA4th 1502, 1526-1527, 119 CR3d 529, 546-547—farmer stated negligence per se claim against pesticide applicator for violating statutory duty to first evaluate likelihood of damage and then defer or halt pesticide application if there was "reasonable possibility" of damage to nontarget crops]

Moreover, where environmental contamination of property violates a statute, the current owner (if among the class of persons the statute was intended to protect) may be able to prevail against predecessors in the chain of title/possession on a theory of negligence per se. [See Newhall Land & Farming Co. v. Sup.Ct. (Mobil Oil Corp.) (1993) 19 CA4th 334, 347-348, 23 CR2d 377, 384-385—remote successor in title stated negligence per se cause of action based on violation of Water C. § 13000 et seq.; City of Modesto Redevelop. Agency v. Sup.Ct. (Dow Chem. Co.) (2004) 119 CA4th 28, 44-45, 13 CR3d 865, 877—city stated negligence per se claim for clean-up costs against dry cleaning solvent and equipment manufacturers and distributors responsible for dry cleaners' discharge of chlorinated solvents into public sewer systems in violation of Water C. § 13350(b)(1)]

Cross-refer: For a detailed discussion of "negligence per se" liability, see Haning, Flahavan, Cheng & Wright, Cal. Prac. Guide: Personal Injury (TRG), Ch. 2 Part II.

[5:170.1 - 5:170.4] Reserved.

b. [5:170.5] Negligence based on breach of duty to disclose: A former owner may also be liable to successors in the chain of title on a theory of breach of duty to disclose environmental defects when it was foreseeable that nondisclosure would affect subsequent buyers. [Newhall Land & Farming Co. v. Sup.Ct. (Mobil Oil Corp.) (1993) 19 CA4th 334, 349-351, 23 CR2d 377, 386-387]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Privity of title is not a prerequisite to the culpable former owner's nondisclosure liability. So long as it was foreseeable that subsequent sales would occur and, consequently, that the nondisclosure would be passed on, the former owner who breached the duty of disclosure remains liable even to remote subsequent purchasers. Liability for damages resulting from negligence based on breach of the duty to disclose does not "vanish simply because of the fortuitous event of an intervening resale." [Newhall Land & Farming Co. v. Sup.Ct. (Mobil Oil Corp.), supra, 19 CA4th at 350-351, 23 CR2d at 387]

c. [5:171] Negligent misrepresentation: A cause of action may lie against a former property owner for negligent misrepresentations made on its behalf by an environmental services company retained to prepare a report regarding efforts to remediate contamination on the property. [Shamsian v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2003) 107 CA4th 967, 983-984, 132 CR2d 635, 647-648]

Recovery for negligent misrepresentation requires plaintiffs to prove (1) misrepresentation of a past or existing material fact, without reasonable ground for believing it to be true, and with intent to induce reliance on the fact misrepresented; (2) ignorance of the truth and justifiable reliance on the misrepresentation by the party to whom it was directed; and (3) resulting damage. [See Shamsian v. Atlantic Richfield Co., supra, 107 CA4th at 983-984, 132 CR2d at 647-648—plaintiffs' failure to allege that environmental report falsely represented removal of contaminants, test results or any other fact was fatal to negligent misrepresentation cause of action]

(1) [5:171a] Possible fraud liability for "misleading" representations: A negligent misrepresentation cause of action cannot be predicated on statements that are simply misleading. But a fraud cause of action is broader and may lie in circumstances where a negligent misrepresentation cause of action will not: A person can be liable for fraud for the "suppression of a fact, by one who is bound to disclose it, or who gives information of other facts which are likely to mislead for want of communication of that fact" (Civ.C. § 1710). [See Shamsian v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (2003) 107 CA4th 967, 983-984, 132 CR2d 635, 648—court noted that if plaintiff had alleged environmental report was misleading, a fraud cause of action could have been asserted against property owner]

d. Negligence liability to adjacent property owners

(1) [5:171.1] General negligence principles apply: Whether property owners who are damaged from contamination originating on adjacent land can state a negligence cause of action against the neighboring landowner turns on general common law negligence principles: i.e., plaintiff must show the defendant landowner owed the plaintiff a duty of due care, that defendant breached that duty, that plaintiff suffered injury, and that the breach proximately caused plaintiff's injury. [See Resolution Trust Corp. v. Rossmoor Corp. (1995) 34 CA4th 93, 101, 40 CR2d 328, 332—leakage from underground diesel storage tank migrated onto adjoining property]

(2) [5:171.2] Landlord's negligence liability for tenant's contamination: As discussed, a lessor landowner cannot be held liable on a nuisance theory or a trespass theory for a tenant's hazardous waste contamination where the lessor did not participate in causing the contamination (¶ 5:153.5, 5:167.5). In such cases, the lessor's liability to adjacent property owners can only rest on a negligence theory. [Resolution Trust Corp. v. Rossmoor Corp. (1995) 34 CA4th 93, 100-101, 40 CR2d 328, 332]

However, plaintiffs may have a difficult time proving the neighboring lessor landowner owed them a duty of care:

(a) [5:171.3] Control, knowledge and ability to remediate required: A lessor owes no duty to third persons concerning dangerous conditions on the premises that came into existence after the tenant took possession unless the lessor controlled the premises to such a degree that the lessor knew of the specific condition and was able to do something to obviate it. [Uccello v. Laudenslayer (1975) 44 CA3d 504, 512, 118 CR 741, 746]

Among the relevant factors are the likelihood of injury, the probable seriousness of such injury, the burden of reducing or avoiding the risk, and the lessor's degree of control over the risk-creating condition. [See Mora v. Baker Commodities, Inc. (1989) 210 CA3d 771, 779, 258 CR 669, 674]

1) [5:171.4] Impact of duty to inspect at inception of lease: Lessors have a duty to inspect their premises at the inception of a lease to ensure the property is reasonably safe from dangerous conditions. [Mora v. Baker Commodities, Inc. (1989) 210 CA3d 771, 781, 258 CR 669, 675]

But this duty charges the landlord only with knowledge of such matters as would have been disclosed by a reasonable inspection. What is reasonable is determined on a case-by-case basis in light of the burden of reducing or avoiding the risk and the likelihood of injury. The lessor need not take extraordinary measures or make unreasonable expenditures of time and money in trying to discover hazards where the potential for serious danger is not foreseeable. [Mora v. Baker Commodities, Inc., supra, 210 CA3d at 782, 258 CR at 675-676; see Resolution Trust Corp. v. Rossmoor Corp. (1995) 34 CA4th 93, 103, 40 CR2d 328, 333]

2) [5:171.5] Impact of right of reentry: A lessor without direct control over the occupation or operation of the rented premises may nonetheless retain some control over the property based on a right of reentry. [See, e.g., Sachs v. Exxon Co., U.S.A. (1992) 9 CA4th 1491, 1496-1498, 12 CR2d 237, 241-242—gas station lease requiring tenant to comply with all laws applicable to premises impliedly gives landlord reasonable right of reentry to inspect for fuel contamination]

However, a lessor's right of reentry does not necessarily establish a duty to adjacent landowners. The lessor must still be aware of the specific dangerous condition and be able to do something about it. [Resolution Trust Corp. v. Rossmoor Corp. (1995) 34 CA4th 93, 102, 40 CR2d 328, 333]

(b) [5:171.6] Application—gasoline leakage from leased premises: Lessors who rented out property for use as a gas station could not be held liable on a negligence theory to an adjacent property owner who suffered damage from diesel fuel that migrated from Tenant's underground storage tank. [Resolution Trust Corp. v. Rossmoor Corp. (1995) 34 CA4th 93, 40 CR2d 328]

• [5:171.7] Lessors had no duty to enter and inspect at the outset of the lease simply because a gas station was to be operated and some potential for leakage is inherent in the business. Plaintiff made no showing the gas station or storage tank was in place to be inspected at the inception of the lease; and the only thing Lessors could have done to prevent the later leakage was to refuse to rent to a gas station. "That course of action would be unreasonable for the landlord and for a society which depends on gas stations to function." [Resolution Trust Corp. v. Rossmoor Corp. (1995) 34 CA4th 93, 103, 40 CR2d 328, 333]

• [5:171.8] Nor, under the circumstances, could Lessors be found negligent for failure to terminate Tenant's lease or perform rigorous testing upon learning of the gasoline leaks: Earlier leaks had been promptly remedied and Lessors had no reason to know the leakage was likely to contaminate adjoining property. Moreover, "as a matter of public policy, we will not place a duty on the landlord to do extensive and expensive soil testing to determine whether a spill has migrated to adjoining property. A landlord's duty to act arises only if the landlord knows or has reason to know the leakage has not been stopped or damage to adjoining property is imminent and avoidable. That is particularly true where, as here, the landlord has limited control over the property." [Resolution Trust Corp. v. Rossmoor Corp. (1995) 34 CA4th 93, 103-104, 40 CR2d 328, 333-334]

At most, upon learning of a leak, Lessors had a duty to ascertain whether the condition had been corrected and whether damage to third parties was imminent and preventable. In this case, there was no evidence showing a breach of that duty. [Resolution Trust Corp. v. Rossmoor Corp., supra, 34 CA4th at 104, 40 CR2d at 334]

• [5:171.9] Finally, even assuming Lessors owed a duty to plaintiff after the leaks occurred and breached that duty, plaintiff failed to show the breach caused its injury. Plaintiff made no showing the diesel migration to its property occurred after Lessors knew of the leakage, which was a prerequisite for them to prevent it. [Resolution Trust Corp. v. Rossmoor Corp. (1995) 34 CA4th 93, 104-105, 40 CR2d 328, 334]

[5:180] Because the consequences of PRP liability under federal/state statutory and common law can be quite severe, real property buyers and sellers must focus careful attention on the environmental condition of the property in the context of their purchase and sale transaction.

1. [5:181] Buyers' Concerns: From an environmental hazards perspective, a prospective buyer's goal in a purchase and sale transaction is to avoid becoming a PRP with respect to environmentally-troubled property. Once in the chain of title, a buyer will automatically become a PRP, regardless of whether the buyer was in any way responsible for the contaminated condition (see ¶ 5:63 ff.). Fortunately, a prospective buyer is in the best position to avoid purchasing an environmental liability by undertaking a thorough site investigation and assessment before taking title (see ¶ 5:235 ff.).

a. [5:182] "Innocent landowner defense": If a careful environmental assessment of the property before purchase fails to disclose any hazardous substance condition, the buyer is eligible to raise the "innocent landowner defense" to CERCLA and California Superfund liability (42 USC § 9601(35)). As discussed, however, this defense is difficult to assert successfully because it depends, in part, upon the buyer having made an adequate effort to discover the environmental condition prior to purchase (¶ 5:110 ff.).

➪ [5:183] PRACTICE POINTER: The buyer's dilemma is that, if hazardous substances not revealed by a preclosing investigation are ultimately found to exist on the property, the adequacy of the buyer's environmental assessment might be challenged by the government or a plaintiff PRP. For this reason, buyers are best advised not to rely solely on the protection of the innocent landowner defense; instead, they should focus their efforts on (i) discovering any environmental hazards problems that may exist and (ii) negotiating an acceptable allocation of environmental risks with the seller (see ¶ 5:220 ff.).

[5:183.1 - 5:183.4] Reserved.

b. [5:183.5] "Bona fide prospective purchaser" exemption (post-1/11/02 acquisitions): PRPs not eligible to raise CERCLA's "innocent landowner defense" may nonetheless be protected by CERCLA's "bona fide prospective purchaser" exemption (42 USC § 9607(r)(1)) if they acquired the property after January 11, 2002. Very detailed criteria must be satisfied, however, for a buyer to qualify as a "bona fide prospective purchaser" (42 USC § 9601(40)). See discussion at ¶ 5:86 ff.

c. [5:184] Private right of action against others: A buyer who takes title to a property determined to be contaminated may be able to recover all or a portion of its clean-up costs from the seller (and others in the chain of title) by seeking indemnity or contribution under CERCLA or the California Superfund or, perhaps, a common law theory.

➪ [5:185] PRACTICE POINTER: In negotiating with the seller regarding environmental hazards liability, the buyer should strive for a provision indefinitely preserving all of its rights against the seller, thus ensuring that an indemnity or contribution suit can be brought if the property is unexpectedly found to be contaminated. Of course, the value of such a suit necessarily depends on the continued existence and financial strength of the seller and other PRPs (¶ 5:197).

Remember that a buyer can procure from a title insurance company a search of the chain of title to determine prior owners of the property.

d. [5:186] Structuring transaction around environmental hazards: In some cases, a buyer will learn of the presence of hazardous substances on the property before taking title—either because the buyer's environmental assessment detects contamination or because the seller discloses the condition. Buyers in such a scenario have various options. (They may alternatively take steps to qualify under CERCLA's "bona fide purchaser" exemption. See ¶ 5:86 ff.)

Although the proper course of action is entirely deal-specific and depends on the scope and complexity of (and cost to cure) the particular toxic problem, the following are some alternative solutions:

(1) [5:187] Seller's deposit in escrow: The buyer can attempt to get an accurate fix on the remediation cost through an environmental consultant's preclosing site assessment. In turn, as a condition of the sale, the buyer might require the seller to deposit in escrow funds sufficient to cover the estimated clean-up expense.

(a) [5:188] Disadvantage: This approach may be attractive to a buyer who cannot afford to delay the closing pending the seller's complete remediation (¶ 5:189 ff.). However, this option also poses a serious risk: The seller's deposit may turn out to fall far short of the actual clean-up costs, leaving the buyer exposed to significant PRP liability, with no recourse other than to incur the expense of litigation in an attempt to shift the cost to other PRPs. [See Long Beach Unified School Dist. v. Dorothy B. Godwin Calif. Living Trust (9th Cir. 1994) 32 F3d 1364, 1365—shortsightedness in estimating clean-up expense left buyer "holding a rather contaminated bag," necessitating CERCLA contribution litigation]

(2) [5:189] Delay closing pending remediation: Alternatively, the buyer might insist that the seller remedy the environmental problem at the seller's sole expense before closing and delay the closing in order to allow completion of full remediation.

(a) [5:190] Advantages: Delaying closing pending remediation is theoretically the buyer's most desirable approach because it allows the buyer to avoid purchasing a property known to be contaminated, while at the same time shielding the buyer from possible CERCLA and/or California Superfund liability arising from transportation and disposal of the hazardous materials removed from the property (42 USC § 9607(a)(3) & (4), ¶ 5:60).

This approach also ensures the buyer will not be "left holding a contaminated bag" in the event the actual clean-up expense far exceeds the amount originally estimated (¶ 5:188).

(b) [5:191] Disadvantages: Unfortunately, this option often is not a practical solution for buyers. Clean-up of even a minor toxic problem on a property can take months; a serious toxic problem might require years to resolve to the satisfaction of appropriate governmental entities. Thus, unless the environmental concern is truly minimal and well-contained, it frequently will not be feasible for the parties to delay the purchase transaction pending full remediation.

(3) [5:192] Restructure transaction pending remediation: If the environmental condition can adequately be remedied, but the buyer cannot delay taking possession pending full remediation, the parties might consider altering the purchase and sale transaction in certain ways.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

For example, the transaction could be restructured as a lease with an option to purchase at such time as the environmental condition has been remediated to the buyer's satisfaction.

(a) [5:193] Advantages: Such a restructuring keeps the buyer out of the chain of title, thus ensuring against "owner" liability under CERCLA and the California Superfund; at the same time, it permits the buyer to take possession while the seller continues its clean-up effort and incurs the additional cost and liability risks associated therewith.

(b) [5:194] Disadvantages: By the same token, this approach is not without its attendant risks: The buyer may still be a PRP as an "operator" of the property. And even though not incurring the clean-up expense, the buyer will have to cope with other environmental issues—such as disclosure of the hazardous substance condition to employees and contractors under California's Proposition 65 (¶ 5:43) and the Asbestos Notification Law (¶ 5:44).

(4) [5:195] Buyer-seller contractual allocation of risks: CERCLA and the California Superfund allow private parties to contractually allocate the risks of hazardous materials liability (see ¶ 5:220 ff.). This is frequently accomplished through environmental indemnifications, releases and "as is" clauses, as well as by more tailormade provisions that specifically set forth the parties' intentions with respect to a known environmental hazard (see ¶ 5:223 ff.).

Whether or not it is known prior to closing that the subject property contains an environmental hazard, it may be advisable for the parties to identify in their transactional documents the party who will bear the risks of any after-discovered contamination on the property, and to back up their risk allocation with appropriate indemnifications and releases. However, this approach is not without considerable problems:

(a) [5:196] No protection against liability to government or third parties: Such contractual risk allocations are binding and effective only between the contracting parties. No private contractual arrangement will affect the ability of the government or a third party to seek recovery from the contractually-protected PRP. (See ¶ 5:221.)

(b) [5:197] No guarantees on indemnitor's financial stability: In addition, an indemnification is only of value to the extent the indemnifying party continues in existence and remains financially able to respond. Neither party, of course, can forecast with certainty what might transpire in the future.

e. [5:198] "Prospective purchaser agreements": "Prospective purchaser agreements" (PPAs) between the buyer and applicable environmental agencies are another avenue through which buyers may be able to acquire contaminated property with little or no risk of future environmental liability to the government.

PPAs have been entered into with the federal government (pursuant to 42 USC § 9622) and the State of California (pursuant to Health & Saf.C. §§ 25187, 70955 (recodified & added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257, oper. 1/1/24)) and 79055 (recodified & added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257, oper. 1/1/24). Under a PPA, the buyer basically agrees to pay for or perform a site clean-up and the government agrees to otherwise not proceed against the buyer.

➪ [5:198.1] PRACTICE POINTER: While theoretically a promising option, the burdens and expense of the PPA process are likely to outweigh its benefits. Buyers typically must be prepared for lengthy negotiations with the governmental agencies; and ultimately will end up incurring hefty clean-up burdens and steep financial obligations. The process is often quite time-consuming and thus, depending on the buyer's goals, may interfere with the ability to timely close the purchase and sale transaction.

Also, entering into a voluntary PPA, thus avoiding any subsequent civil suit or administrative action by the government, might preclude a post-clean-up contribution action against other PRPs (see discussion at ¶ 5:125.6 ff.).

[5:199] Reserved.

2. [5:200] Sellers' Concerns: The development of environmental regulations has changed the nature of purchase and sale transactions far more dramatically for sellers than for buyers. A buyer has always been motivated to determine if the physical condition of the property is satisfactory and in compliance with applicable laws. On the other hand, sellers historically had relatively few concerns regarding the condition of the property being sold. It was largely up to the prospective buyer to discover unacceptable conditions affecting the property and, once the deed was recorded, the seller could generally walk away from the property with impunity.

California statutory and common law has largely eroded this traditional "caveat emptor" seller's protection in connection with defective conditions generally (see ¶ 4:353 ff. re seller's duties of disclosure). More particularly, sellers now have significant disclosure obligations and liability exposure under environmental laws.

a. [5:201] Disclosure requirements: CERCLA, the California Superfund and the entire body of state and federal regulations have eliminated the notion of "caveat emptor" as it affects the sale of a contaminated property. Sellers have affirmative obligations to disclose to their buyers the presence of known hazardous waste on the property.

Indeed, a seller's failure to disclose to a buyer relevant information concerning hazardous substances which the seller knows, or has reason to believe, have been released on the property, leaves the seller forever vulnerable to liability for the contamination—not only to the buyer, but also to the government and third parties. (See ¶ 5:66 ff.)

(1) [5:202] Failure to disclose waives CERCLA defense: A seller who does not disclose to the buyer known hazardous substance conditions on the property forfeits its right to assert any statutory defenses to CERCLA and California Superfund liability. [42 USC § 9601(35)(C); ¶ 5:67, 5:119]

(2) [5:203] Statutory damages and civil penalties: Further, under the California Superfund, a seller of nonresidential real property who fails to disclose to the buyer the presence of any hazardous substance (which the seller knows or has reasonable cause to believe has been released on or under the property) is liable for the buyer's actual damages resulting from the nondisclosure. In the case of a seller's intentional failure to disclose a known, material environmental hazard, civil penalties of up to $5,000 for each violation may be assessed. [Health & Saf.C. § 78700 (recodified & added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257, oper. 1/1/24); see also ¶ 5:29 & 5:68]

➪ [5:204] PRACTICE POINTER: Some practitioners suggest a seller might take one or two further steps in an effort to limit the possibility of continuing environmental hazards liability to subsequent buyers:

• One possibility is to disclose the existence of the environmental contamination in the grant deed (or other conveyancing instrument). Because the grant deed is recorded, this would put subsequent buyers on notice of the existing conditions.

• A second approach is to record a covenant running with the land that restricts use of the property so as not to cause a release of hazardous substances. Environmental restrictions limiting the permissible use of contaminated property are expressly recognized by statute as recordable covenants running with the land. [Civ.C. § 1471; see ¶ 5:218]

If such a covenant were properly created and recorded, a seller who is sued by a remote buyer might be able to seek indemnification from successive intervening owners.

b. Liability after closing

(1) [5:205] PRP liability despite transfer of title: Following the transfer of title, a seller remains a PRP under CERCLA and the California Superfund in two situations: (1) when the contaminated condition of the property was created, in whole or in part, during the time the seller owned the property (42 USC § 9607(a)(2)); or (2) when the seller knew of the contaminated condition of the property (whether or not the contamination occurred during the time the seller owned the property) and failed to disclose the presence of the hazardous substances to the buyer (42 USC § 9601(35)(C)).

(a) [5:206] Disclosure to avoid additional penalties: Although disclosure does not limit a seller's PRP liability if the seller owned the property at the time the hazardous substances were released, it will enable the seller to avoid additional penalties under other sections of the California Superfund and other laws requiring disclosure of hazardous waste.

(2) [5:207] Compare—conditions negating PRP status: On the other hand, a seller is not a PRP under CERCLA or the California Superfund, and thus should be free from environmental hazards liability, once title passes if the seller can prove that:

• The hazardous substances on the property were not released during the time the seller owned or operated the property; and

• Either (i) the seller disclosed to the buyer all knowledge that the seller had concerning the contaminated condition of the property, or (ii) the seller never had any knowledge or reason to know of the presence of the hazardous substances on the property. [42 USC § 9601(35); see ¶ 5:110 ff. re conditions to "innocent landowner defense"]

[5:208 - 5:209] Reserved.

c. [5:210] Structuring transaction around environmental hazards: Sellers often know, or learn during the course of a purchase and sale transaction, of the presence of hazardous substances on the property. Sometimes, sellers first acquire such knowledge after the purchase agreement is signed, but prior to the closing. Under those circumstances, the seller will be deemed to have knowledge of the contaminated condition of the property and will be bound by all reporting, notification and disclosure requirements. In the event the seller is unable to consummate its pending sale with the buyer, the seller will then have to disclose the presence of the hazardous substances to any succeeding prospective buyers of the property.

(If the seller thereafter fails to disclose the environmental condition, it will be subject to enormous risks associated with (1) violating the CERCLA and California Superfund disclosure provisions; (2) indefinite PRP status with respect to the property; and (3) having forfeited the CERCLA and California Superfund defenses to liability.)

There are, however, various options for structuring the purchase and sale transaction to take into account the contaminated condition of the property from a seller's perspective.

➪ [5:211] PRACTICE POINTER: Once the presence of hazardous substances on the property is known by both buyer and seller, the seller's goal will be to structure the transaction in such a way as to relieve the seller of liability for the condition to the greatest extent possible.

If the seller is confident that it can prove the hazardous substances were not released onto the property during the time the seller owned the property, simple disclosure of the condition may be sufficient to insulate the seller from ongoing liability.

On the other hand, if the hazardous substance release occurred during the time the seller owned the property (or if there is a concern the seller may not be able to prove the release did not occur during the seller's ownership of the property), the seller may wish to take steps toward remediation in the hope of minimizing its future liability.

(1) [5:212] Delay closing pending remediation: If, as part of the purchase and sale transaction, the seller is to take responsibility for cleaning up the contamination, one option is to delay the closing until the remediation has been completed.

(a) [5:213] Advantage: This approach may be particularly attractive to sellers because it ensures the seller will retain control of the clean-up operation. If the clean-up work is being performed by a company of the seller's choosing and at the seller's direction, the seller will be in a much better position to control both the quality of the remediation and the cost to complete it.

(b) [5:214] Disadvantages: Of course, even minor hazardous waste problems may require substantial remediation time and expense; and clean-up of serious contamination can take several years. As a practical matter, a substantial delay may effectively kill the purchase and sale transaction.

In addition, remediation costs typically are not easy to estimate until the work is under way; often, the actual expense far exceeds the original estimate. For this reason, a seller who decides to clean up any contamination prior to closing may wish to consider entering into an agreement with the buyer allocating between the parties the cost to complete the work.

(2) [5:215] Close transaction and remediate pursuant to agreement: Another option is for the seller and buyer to consummate the transfer of title and remediate the contamination postclosing pursuant to an agreement entered into prior to the closing.

(a) [5:216] Advantages: This approach has the advantage of (i) avoiding the substantial closing delays that could be occasioned by a preclosing clean-up; and (ii) providing a motivation to the buyer to make certain the remediation is completed thoroughly and in accordance with law (since the buyer automatically becomes a PRP upon taking title to the property).

(b) [5:217] Disadvantages: However, this approach also carries significant disadvantages for the seller:

- The seller loses control over the clean-up process since it no longer owns and (in most cases) will no longer have free access to the property. It will therefore be far more difficult for the seller to oversee satisfactory completion of the remediation. This is of concern to the seller because the seller still remains a PRP with respect to the property following the sale.

- Even if the buyer agrees to accept responsibility for the contamination and releases the seller from further liability, such agreements are not binding on the state or federal governments or third parties (¶ 5:221), any of whom could still assert claims against the seller if the buyer fails to correctly remediate the environmental condition. Accordingly, the seller will want to remain somewhat involved in the clean-up process.

➪ [5:217.1] PRACTICE POINTER: Because it is usually difficult to predict the extent of the contamination, much less the cost to remediate, any such agreement between seller and buyer relating to postclosing clean-up should specifically address (i) the scope of work to be completed; (ii) the standards of compliance; and (iii) the parties' respective monetary obligations for the clean-up.

(3) [5:218] Record environmental restriction based on government-approved risk management plan assessment: Some contaminated conditions are so pervasive as to make full remediation prohibitively expensive and unfeasible. Were a complete clean-up required, the property might, for all practical purposes, be unsalable. In these cases, after conducting a risk assessment, applicable governmental authorities might be willing to agree to something less than full eradication of the contamination for so long as use of the property is not changed in a manner that would cause a disturbance or release of the hazardous substance or further endanger human safety and the environment (e.g., limiting use of industrial property to industrial purposes and precluding future development or use as a school, health care facility, etc.). (See also ¶ 5:198 re "prospective purchaser agreements" between buyer and governmental agencies.)

By statute, sellers may obtain from their buyers covenants restricting use of the subject property for the purpose of protecting human health/safety or the environment and record the instrument to create enforceable covenants running with the land. When properly created and expressly labeled "environmental restrictions," the recorded covenants are binding on all successors in interest to the burdened parcel even though the seller/covenantee owns no adjacent property that would be benefited by the restrictions (thus excepting these types of covenants from the normal requirements for enforceable covenants running with the land). [Civ.C. § 1471; see discussion at ¶ 4:66.5]

This approach gives the seller some measure of control over the property no matter how many times it thereafter changes hands; and also may provide a basis for recourse against successors in the chain of title should they violate the recorded restrictions in a manner that exposes the seller (original covenantee) to clean-up liability.

➪ [5:218.1] PRACTICE POINTER: Nothing in the law prevents the seller/covenantee from also including in the recorded instrument the seller's (or other PRP's) remedies against successors who breach the environmental restrictions —including damages, an injunction requiring removal or abatement of the condition that breaches the restrictions, etc.

[5:219] Reserved.

3. [5:220] Buyer-Seller Contractual Risk Allocation: Because the statutes create a broad and inclusive class of PRPs (¶ 5:60 ff.) and the defenses to liability are very narrow and difficult to assert (¶ 5:100 ff.), counsel for buyer and seller can do their clients a great service by negotiating for a clear and detailed allocation of the risks associated with hazardous materials in the transactional documents.

a. [5:221] Contractual apportionment of risks allowed under CERCLA and state law: PRPs may not, by private agreement, contract away or limit their CERCLA liability to the government or to third parties. However, CERCLA preserves the right of private parties to contractually apportion environmental risks as between themselves. [42 USC § 9607(e); see Mardan Corp. v. C.G.C. Music, Ltd. (9th Cir. 1986) 804 F2d 1454, 1461-1463; Teleflex Inc. v. Collins & Aikman Products Co., Inc. (D CT 1996) 961 F.Supp. 368, 372, aff'd (2nd Cir. 1997) 125 F3d 845]

California state law likewise recognizes the right of private parties to allocate hazardous materials release liability as between themselves (see ¶ 5:138.125).

b. [5:222] Allocation approaches: The possible approaches to apportioning environmental risks in a purchase and sale context theoretically are as endless as counsel's imagination. A few of the more common approaches are discussed at ¶ 5:223 ff.

(1) [5:223] "As is" clauses: The apportionment of environmental risks may be accomplished by including a so-called "as is" clause in the purchase and sale agreement. An "as is" clause typically provides that the buyer is accepting the property in its current condition, subject to any defects, without any representation by the seller as to the condition of the property and without any obligation of the seller to repair/remediate any defects. (See ¶ 4:351 ff. for discussion of "as is" sales generally.)

The enforceability of such a clause with respect to a seller's environmental hazards liability is unsettled.

(a) [5:224] Traditional environmental conditions exclusion: Cases have held that an "as is" clause operates only as a disclaimer of warranties and will not preclude a buyer's suit against the seller with respect to environmental issues.

[See Wiegmann & Rose Int'l Corp. v. N.L. Indus. (ND CA 1990) 735 F.Supp. 957, 961-962; International Clinical Laboratories, Inc. v. Stevens (ED NY 1989) 710 F.Supp. 466, 469-470]

An important factor in Wiegmann, supra, was that it was unclear from the standard "boilerplate" language of the "as is" clause whether the parties specifically contemplated environmental hazards. The court was also persuaded by the fact the purchase and sale transaction was consummated five years before the enactment of CERCLA … so that CERCLA liability, in particular, could not have been anticipated when the "as is" provision was agreed to. [See Wiegmann & Rose Int'l Corp. v. N.L. Indus., supra, 735 F.Supp. at 961]

(b) [5:225] Emerging trend favoring application to specifically-contemplated environmental conditions: However, a growing trend of authority holds "as is" clauses to be enforceable in effectively releasing sellers from environmental hazards liability to their buyers where the provision specifically references that actual or potential environmental hazards are among the conditions as to which the buyer is taking the property "as is" and without warranty. [See Niecko v. Emro Marketing Co. (6th Cir. 1992) 973 F2d 1296, 1300, 1303—"as is" provision expressly stating buyers "assume all responsibility for any damages caused by the conditions on the property upon transfer of title" held to evidence that parties' specifically contemplated seller be released from liability for gasoline leakage soils contamination (more than a mere warranty disclaimer); see also La Placita Partners v. Northwestern Mut. Life Ins. Co. (ND OH 1990) 766 F.Supp. 1454, 1458-1459—"as is" clause effectively released seller from liability for asbestos contaminates where buyer's inspection had disclosed possible presence of asbestos; Holly Hill Holdings v. Lowman (1993 CT) 226 Conn. 748, 756-757, 628 A2d 1298, 1302-1303]

On the other hand, courts are reluctant to hold buyers to the consequences of a broadly-worded, generic "as is" clause with respect to environmental liabilities where there is no evidence the particular condition was known to the buyer at the time the transaction closed. [See Car Wash Enterprises, Inc. v. Kampanos (Wash. App. 1994) 74 Wash.App. 537, 547, 874 P2d 868, 874—"as is" clause ineffective to allocate environmental hazards liability to buyer where buyer unaware of contamination until after title had passed; and Amland Properties Corp. v. Aluminum Co. of America (D NJ 1989) 711 F.Supp. 784, 803, fn. 20—party ignorant of presence of abnormally dangerous condition cannot "be held to have contractually assumed the risk posed by that condition merely by signing an 'as is' purchase contract"]

➪ [5:226] PRACTICE POINTER: The law in this area is not yet settled, and the results have largely been fact-specific. Therefore, where the parties intend that the buyer assume responsibility for environmental hazards, the most prudent approach is to combine an "as is" clause with an environmental release (¶ 5:227) and an environmental indemnity (¶ 5:230).

Further, the "as is" clause should recite the parties' intent that it be effective specifically with respect to the environmental condition of the property; and should also state the parties have contemplated the consequences of the presence of environmental hazards on the property in agreeing to the "as is" provision.

(2) [5:227] Environmental liability releases: Once the parties have determined how they will apportion the environmental risks, they may wish to release one another from liability for certain hazards.

While federal law governs the validity of a release of federal causes of action, the breadth of a purported release and the parties' intent to release particular causes of action is interpreted under state law. [Olin Corp. v. Consolidated Aluminum Corp. (2nd Cir. 1993) 5 F3d 10, 15; see Teleflex Inc. v. Collins & Aikman Products Co., Inc. (D CT 1996) 961 F.Supp. 368, 372, aff'd (2nd Cir. 1997) 125 F3d 845]

(a) [5:228] Specific reference to environmental contamination required: Releases of liability for environmental hazards have been upheld. [See Village of Fox River Grove, Ill. v. Grayhill, Inc. (ND IL 1992) 806 F.Supp. 785, 795—release may effectively bar CERCLA contribution claim even though executed before enactment of CERCLA] However, as with "as is" provisions, it is important that the language of the release specifically state the parties intend it to be effective with respect to any potential claims relating to environmental contamination. [See Mardan Corp. v. C.G.C. Music, Ltd. (9th Cir. 1986) 804 F2d 1454, 1461-1463]

(b) [5:228.1] Compare—viable fraud claim despite "environmental" and "common law" claims release: A release of "environmental claims" or, more broadly, federal and state "common law claims," will not necessarily waive a claim for fraud in the inducement—i.e., a cause of action premised on fraud in the procurement of the release (or the underlying agreement containing the release). Whether the language of the release in fact waives such a fraud claim is a question of state law. [Teleflex Inc. v. Collins & Aikman Products Co., Inc. (D CT 1996) 961 F.Supp. 368, 371-372, aff'd (2nd Cir. 1997) 125 F3d 845]

1) [5:228.2] Application: An environmental claims release between Buyers and Sellers in a purchase agreement clearly allocated the risk of CERCLA liability to Buyers, precluding Buyers' CERCLA cost recovery action against Sellers. But, applying New York law, the court also determined that neither the environmental release nor an additional release of related common law causes of action barred Buyers' fraud claim premised on Sellers' alleged misrepresentations concerning the environmental condition of the property that induced Buyers to sign the purchase agreement and assume environmental liabilities. [Teleflex Inc. v. Collins & Aikman Products Co., Inc. (D CT 1996) 961 F.Supp. 368, 371-372, 373—but also holding Sellers' alleged fraud does not vitiate otherwise valid waiver of CERCLA claims]

2) [5:228.3] Compare—election to rescind for fraud: Pursuit of a damages claim based on fraud, of course, is an election to affirm the underlying agreement, thereby binding the plaintiff buyer to the contractual terms (including the otherwise valid waivers of rights and causes of action against the seller) (see ¶ 11:10 ff., 11:351 ff.). To avoid this result, plaintiff may instead seek to rescind the contract based on fraud (see ¶ 11:460 ff.). [Teleflex Inc. v. Collins & Aikman Products Co., Inc. (D CT 1996) 961 F.Supp. 368, 372, 373; see also Keywell Corp. v. Weinstein (2nd Cir. 1994) 33 F3d 159, 165]

(c) [5:229] Caveat re "unknown" risks: Pursuant to Civ.C. § 1542, "[a] general release does not extend to claims that the creditor or releasing party does not know or suspect to exist in his or her favor at the time of executing the release and that, if known by him or her, would have materially affected his settlement with the debtor or released party." This provision could be a serious trap for the party counting on a release agreement to provide complete insulation from hazardous substance liability vis a vis the other party to the transaction.

In the environmental context, the unknown risks are usually of more concern than the known risks. Therefore, in a California transaction, it is especially critical that the party receiving the release have the releasing party waive the effect of Civ.C. § 1542 to ensure its application to all environmental risks—whether known or unknown.

(3) [5:230] Environmental indemnities: Another method for allocating environmental risks is an indemnity agreement relating specifically to costs incurred in responding to and remediating environmental contamination. Under such an indemnification, one party agrees to indemnify (reimburse) the other party for all costs, losses, damages, etc. incurred by the indemnified party as a result of the presence of hazardous substances on the property.

Such indemnities are particularly important because contractual risk allocations are binding only on the contracting parties; i.e., even if one party is released from liability to the other party, the released party still has potential liability to state and federal governments as well as to third parties (¶ 5:221). By obtaining an indemnity, the released party (indemnitee)—at least as between buyer and seller—can effectively shift its liability to the indemnitor.

➪ [5:231] PRACTICE POINTER: Like any other kind of indemnity, an environmental liability indemnity agreement is only as valuable as the financial condition of the indemnitor. This is of particular concern in the environmental context: Even if the indemnitor's financial worthiness appears strong at the time the indemnity is given, it may be many years before a hazardous substance condition is discovered and the indemnitee seeks to enforce the indemnification agreement. At that time, the indemnitor's financial condition may have drastically changed for the worse.

Accordingly, although an environmental indemnity is prudent, it should not be considered a substitute for careful environmental investigation prior to closing of the purchase and sale transaction.

[5:232 - 5:234] Reserved.

4. [5:235] Buyer's Environmental Due Diligence: Prospective buyers should conduct thorough due diligence regarding the environmental condition of the property prior to closing of the transaction. Careful due diligence may significantly impact the buyer's decision to proceed with the transaction. It also positions the buyer to qualify for the "contiguous property owner" exemption (¶ 5:85 ff.) or the "bona fide prospective purchaser" exemption (¶ 5:86 ff.), or to assert the "innocent landowner defense" (¶ 5:110 ff.).

a. [5:236] General approaches: A buyer's due diligence typically commences with hiring an environmental consultant to perform a site assessment. This may be supplemented by reviewing the seller's records and recorded documents with respect to the real property and obtaining a completed environmental questionnaire from the seller.

The scope of a proper environmental due diligence generally is defined by the past use of the property. For example, property known to have been used as a gas station (a particularly environmentally-risky acquisition) should require a far more penetrating environmental investigation than would property that has been undeveloped and has no industrial history. In the mid-range between these two types of properties, an office building, though not an industrial site, should minimally be surveyed for the presence of asbestos-related materials.

➪ [5:237] PRACTICE POINTER FOR SELLERS: Obtaining an environmental site assessment prior to consummation of the purchase and sale transaction will allow the seller and buyer to create a record of the environmental condition of the property existing at the time of the sale. In so doing, the seller risks learning of a previously unknown environmental hazard on the property, in turn imposing upon the seller the full panoply of federal and state reporting, notification and disclosure obligations.

As a general rule, however, in the environmental context, early knowledge is always better than ignorance. If contamination is found or suspected, a seller is ordinarily far better off being in a position to quantify the contamination and to formulate a remediation plan before the sale than if the condition were first revealed after the closing (at a time when the seller will most likely learn of the contamination as defendant in a lawsuit brought by the government, a third party or the buyer).

In addition, if the buyer further contaminates the property, the condition may be far worse by the time the seller learns of it; and without a "baseline" environmental assessment describing the condition of the property at the time of the sale, the seller will have a hard time proving it is responsible for only a portion of the contamination. (See ¶ 5:72 ff. re joint and several CERCLA liability.)

b. [5:238] Environmental site assessments: It is recommended that prospective buyers of real property obtain an environmental site assessment prior to closing.

Different levels of site assessments can be obtained, varying in price and scope of invasiveness to the property. The least expensive and least invasive is generally referred to as a "Phase I" site assessment, with a "Phase II" assessment being the next level of investigation, and so on.

Each type of site assessment should culminate in a written report that describes the scope of work performed, the information learned, and any recommendations for remediation and/or further investigation. Prospective buyers seeking to qualify for the "contiguous property owner" or "bona fide prospective purchaser" exemptions, or to assert the "innocent landowner defense," should verify that the site investigation, assessment and report comply with federal regulations governing an "appropriate inquiry" (see ¶ 5:85.6 ff., 5:86.5, 5:114).

➪ [5:239] PRACTICE POINTER: The precise work done under the umbrella of "Phase I," "Phase II," etc. varies within the industry and among consultants. Accordingly, to ensure the investigation will meet your client's needs, do not simply rely on a consultant's "labels" to define the scope of work to be performed.

(1) [5:240] "Phase I" assessment: A prospective buyer typically begins the environmental investigation of a property by obtaining a "Phase I" site assessment performed by an environmental consultant. The California Superfund defines it as a preliminary assessment of the property to determine whether there has been, or may have been, a hazardous substance release based on reasonably available information about the property and general vicinity. [Health & Saf.C. § 78090 (recodified & added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257, oper. 1/1/24)]

➪ [5:240.1] PRACTICE POINTER: Prospective buyers of property known to be contaminated traditionally have not obtained Phase I assessments. However, in order to qualify for the "bona fide prospective purchaser" exemption, such an assessment may be essential. See ¶ 5:86.6.

(a) [5:241] General scope of work: A Phase I environmental assessment customarily involves (but is not limited to) a review of documentary information concerning the property (private and public records) and current and historical land uses on the property and in the vicinity; and visual and other surveys and inspections of the property and general vicinity (often including interviews with current and previous owners, operators and on-site maintenance personnel). [See Health & Saf.C. § 78090 (recodified & added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257, oper. 1/1/24)]

In addition, a Phase I assessment may or may not include an inspection of the property improvements for asbestos and/or radon gas. But it typically does not include actual sampling or testing of soil or ground water (see Health & Saf.C. § 78090 (recodified & added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257, oper. 1/1/24)). It is therefore the least invasive of the site assessments.

➪ [5:241.1] PRACTICE POINTER: It is usually preferable for the consultant's site visit to occur after the consultant has had an opportunity to review the documentary information. This will enable the consultant to focus the survey and inspection in particular on any "red flags" that may have been raised in the documents reviewed.

(b) [5:242] Chain of title review: The documents reviewed by the consultant in a Phase I investigation should include a 40-to-50-year title history of the property. The chain of title history will assist the consultant in identifying the past owners and uses of the subject property.

A history of prior ownership is important in two respects:

- It gives the consultant guidance as to what types of problems require particular attention. For example, if the history of title reveals that the property was owned by (or leased to) the operator of a car wash or gasoline station, the consultant will have particular concerns relating to the types of contamination commonly associated with those uses (gasoline leakage from underground storage tanks, etc.).

- Also, to be in a position to qualify for the "contiguous property owner" or "bona fide prospective purchaser" exemption, or to assert the "innocent landowner defense," a buyer must be able to show that it made "all appropriate inquiry" regarding the property (see ¶ 5:85.6 ff., 5:86.6, 5:113 ff.).

The history of title in the Phase I report will thus assist the buyer in evidencing that it made an inquiry as to prior ownership and uses of the property. (Environmental consultants often supplement the information contained in the title history with old aerial photographs of the subject site obtained from governmental mapping and survey agencies.)

(c) [5:243] Associated governmental records: The documentary information reviewed by the Phase I consultant should also include governmental records relating to the subject property. Certain federal, state and local agencies maintain various lists of properties with known environmental problems. The Phase I written report should state whether the subject property, as well as other properties in the adjoining area, are on any of these governmental lists.

In addition, certain governmental agencies are granted the authority under CERCLA and certain state Superfund laws to impose liens on contaminated properties to provide a means for the government to recoup its costs in remediating the condition if PRPs with respect to the property either cannot or will not reimburse the government. The Phase I report should state whether any state or federal liens relating to environmental remediation affect the subject property.

(d) [5:244] Seller's environmental questionnaire responses: Finally, the Phase I report may include the seller's responses to an environmental questionnaire designed to help the consultant learn whether any activities have taken place on the property that might cause it to be contaminated.

➪ [5:245] PRACTICE POINTER FOR BUYERS: Some sellers may be reluctant to cooperate in responding to such a questionnaire. Buyers may therefore find it prudent to make the seller's completion of an environmental questionnaire (and buyer's acceptance of the contents thereof) a condition to the buyer's obligation to close the transaction. Moreover, the contents of any questionnaire completed by a seller should be included as part of the seller's representations and warranties.

(2) [5:246] "Phase II" assessments: A "Phase II" site assessment is usually obtained only when there is a known or suspected environmental impairment of the property that needs to be analyzed and quantified. Typically, a Phase II investigation is conducted on recommendation of the environmental consultant who prepares the Phase I report (¶ 5:240 ff.).

Phase II usually involves actual testing of materials known or suspected to contain contamination—soil, groundwater, the building structure (for asbestos) or air (for radon gas or other emissions). The scope of work to be performed will be specifically tailored to respond to concerns noted in the Phase I report.

➪ [5:247] PRACTICE POINTER: Because a Phase II investigation involves actual sampling and testing in, on and around the property, it can be costly and may take several weeks to complete. As a result, buyers and sellers are often reluctant to invest the necessary time and money. Bear in mind, however, that the time and expense required to obtain a Phase II audit is only a fraction of the time and cost that will be incurred if the property is actually environmentally impaired.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

➪ [5:247.1] FURTHER POINTER FOR SELLERS: Since a Phase II audit usually includes some invasive testing of the property, the seller may want to include in the purchase and sale agreement a covenant that (i) following the testing, the property will be returned to the same condition it was in before the testing (at the buyer's expense); and (ii) the buyer will indemnify the seller for any damage to the property or injury to persons resulting from the testing.

(3) [5:248] Providing "legally required notices" of discovered contamination: A prospective buyer of contaminated property who seeks to qualify for the "contiguous property owner" or "bona fide prospective purchaser" exemption must give all "legally required notices" upon discovery of a hazardous substance release at the property (¶ 5:85.1, 5:86.1). According to the EPA, such notices may include those required under federal, state and local laws. Because the reporting requirements are numerous, complex and often ambiguous, buyers should begin immediately to evaluate them so that any necessary notices can be timely given.

5. Insurance for Environmental Hazards

Cross-refer: The sections at ¶ 5:250 ff. overview the applicable law concerning environmental hazards insurance coverage. For a detailed treatment of this subject, see Croskey, Heeseman, Ehrlich & Klee, Cal. Prac. Guide: Insurance Litigation (TRG).

a. [5:250] Coverage under commercial (comprehensive) general liability (CGL) policies: A standard commercial general liability (CGL) insurance policy (formerly called a comprehensive general liability policy) provides insurance for liability to third parties. (This is distinct from a "first party policy," such as fire, theft and casualty insurance, which provides coverage for loss or damage sustained directly by the insured.)

Third party CGL policies typically cover sums the insured becomes "legally obligated to pay as damages" because of bodily injury or property damage (covered by the policy) caused by an "occurrence"; and "occurrence" is typically defined as an "accident" or "loss" (including "continuous or repeated exposure to conditions") that results in bodily injury or property damage neither expected nor intended from the insured's standpoint. [See generally, Montrose Chemical Corp. of Calif. v. Admiral Ins. Co. (1995) 10 C4th 645, 663-664, 42 CR2d 324, 332-333; Aerojet-General Corp. v. Transport Indem. Co. (1997) 17 C4th 38, 56, 70 CR2d 118, 128; Westoil Terminals Co., Inc. v. Industrial Indemnity Co. (2003) 110 CA4th 139, 147, 1 CR3d 516, 521-522]

Whether and to what extent a CGL policy covers the insured's third party liabilities—including clean-up expense and governmental response costs—arising from an environmentally impaired property has been the subject of much litigation. Fundamentally, the coverage issues turn on the specific policy language and, in particular, the policy's specific exclusions from coverage.

(1) [5:251] Response costs awarded by judgment to government as covered "damages": Response costs awarded to the government in its suit against the insured for amounts the government incurred in cleaning up contamination caused by the insured are "damages" the insured has become "legally obligated to pay … because of property damage" within the meaning of a CGL policy. [AIU Ins. Co. v. Sup.Ct. (FMC Corp.) (1990) 51 C3d 807, 843, 274 CR 820, 846-847; Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., Inc. v. Pintlar Corp. (9th Cir. 1991) 948 F2d 1507, 1513-1515 (decided under Idaho law)]

(a) [5:251a] Legal or equitable proceedings: So long as the insured's response costs liability was determined by court judgment or order, it is immaterial whether the government's suit was in equity or an action at law. The term "legally obligated" in a CGL policy covers equitable as well as legal proceedings. [AIU Ins. Co. v. Sup.Ct. (FMC Corp.) (1990) 51 C3d 807, 824-825, 274 CR 820, 833-834; see Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's of London v. Sup.Ct. (Powerine Oil Co., Inc.) (2001) 24 C4th 945, 966, 103 CR2d 672, 686]

1) [5:251b] Compare—clean-up costs incurred pursuant to administrative order: The insurer's promise in a CGL policy to indemnify the insured for sums it becomes "legally obligated" to pay "as damages" because of "property damage" from covered acts refers exclusively to an obligation established by judgment or order in a court of law. The duty to indemnify under the policy does not extend to costs the insured incurs pursuant to a compulsory coercive clean-up order issued by an environmental agency without a court order. [Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's of London v. Sup.Ct. (Powerine Oil Co., Inc.) (2001) 24 C4th 945, 951, 103 CR2d 672, 675 (expenses ordered by Regional

Water Boards pursuant to the Porter-Cologne Act); CDM Investors v. Travelers Cas. & Sur. Co. (2006) 139 CA4th 1251, 1259, 43 CR3d 669, 674]

The same result obtains under a "nonstandard" excess liability policy requiring the insurer to indemnify the insured for all sums the insured becomes obligated to pay by reason of liability imposed by law for "damages": The insuring clause does not cover expenses associated with responding to administrative clean-up orders outside the context of a government-initiated lawsuit. [County of San Diego v. Ace Prop. & Cas. Ins. Co. (2005) 37 C4th 406, 421, 33 CR3d 583, 593-594]

Distinguish—broader insuring clause: But the result is otherwise (agency-ordered response costs are covered) where the central insuring agreement also extends to the total sum the insured becomes obligated to pay "either through adjudication or compromise," including "settlement, adjustment and investigation of claims …" [Powerine Oil Co., Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Central Nat'l Ins. Co. of Omaha) (2005) 37 C4th 377, 395-398, 33 CR3d 562, 576-577 (excess/umbrella policies)]

➪ [5:251c] PRACTICE POINTER: Under a CGL-type policy (limiting indemnification to court-ordered money judgments), possible recourse for the insured short of litigation is to invoke the insurer's obligation to settle claims rather than its duty to indemnify:

"If the carrier agrees to 'settle' the 'claim' by authorizing the policyholder to comply with the administrative order, then it appears that the carrier would be obligated to pay the cost of this 'settlement,' subject to policy provisions regarding deductible amounts, coverage limits, and so forth. If the carrier declines to 'settle' the 'claim' by providing the policyholder with the funds needed to comply with agency demands, the policyholder … may comply with the agency directive by using its own funds and then seek to recover these costs by bringing suit against the insurer, not for breach of the duty to indemnify, but for breach of the duty to accept a reasonable settlement." Concededly, however, the "bad faith" case may be difficult to prove. [See Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's of London v. Sup.Ct. (Powerine Oil Co., Inc.) (2001) 24 C4th 945, 981, 103 CR2d 672, 697 (J. Kennard dissent.opn.)]

(b) [5:251.1] Response costs incurred under consent decree: At least one federal court has extended AIU, supra, 51 C3d 807, 274 CR 820, to costs incurred by the insured in cleaning up toxic waste pursuant to a consent decree (settlement) with the government. According to this court, although AIU involved injunctive and reimbursement relief in a contested action in equity, the same reasoning would be applied by the California Supreme Court to consent decrees. [Intel Corp. v. Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. (9th Cir. 1991) 952 F2d 1551, 1563-1565—clean-up expenses incurred pursuant to consent decree are covered "damages" under CGL policy]

➪ [5:251.1a] CAUTION: The Intel reasoning may be correct on the theory a consent decree (at least arguably) results in a judicial order that might qualify the procedure as a "suit" resulting in a "legal obligation to pay as damages" even though arrived at by settlement. Practitioners should bear in mind, however, that the Cal. Supreme Court has not ruled on the issue.

(c) [5:251.2] Site investigation expenses as response costs and defense costs: Site investigation expenses—i.e., expenses for determining the existence, nature, extent, effect, etc. of the discharge of hazardous substances at a location —may be included within "response costs" under CERCLA. Such expenses can also be defense costs that a CGL insurer must incur in satisfying its duty to defend. [Aerojet-General Corp. v. Transport Indem. Co. (1997) 17 C4th 38, 60-65, 70 CR2d 118, 131-135; see also ¶ 5:268 ff. re duty to defend]

"[I]f and to the extent that the insured's site investigation is conducted within the temporal limits of the insurer's duty to defend [i.e., between tender of the defense and conclusion of the action] and amounts to a reasonable and necessary effort to avoid or at least minimize liability, the related site investigation expenses may possibly be defense costs that the insurer must incur in fulfilling its duty to defend." [Aerojet-General Corp. v. Transport Indem. Co., supra, 17 C4th at 61, 70 CR2d at 131]

(d) [5:251.3] Compare—reduction in property value based on future remediation expense: An insurer is not obligated to defend a claim brought by an insured for the reduction in market value of contaminated property based on estimated future clean-up costs. Any such reduction in value is not the equivalent of the actual expenditure of money to compensate a government agency for loss or detriment suffered by it, and does not amount to a "constructive expenditure" or a defensible "set-off claim." [Block v. Golden Eagle Ins. Corp. (2004) 121 CA4th 186, 193-200, 17

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

CR3d 13, 19-25—insurers had no duty to defend insured in eminent domain action where amount offered for property reduced by estimated costs to remediate property]

(2) [5:252] Exclusion issues: Insurance companies have relied primarily on two policy exclusions in an attempt to deny CGL coverage for environmental hazards: the pollution exclusion and the "owned property" exclusion.

(a) [5:253] Pollution exclusion; "sudden and accidental" occurrence exception: The pollution exclusion typically is written to exclude from coverage property damage arising from the release of hazardous materials (e.g., "This insurance does not apply to bodily injury or property damage arising out of the discharge, dispersal, release or escape of … [toxic waste materials] into or upon the land, air or water."). However many such exclusions also contain an exception for a "sudden and accidental" dispersal of hazardous substances (e.g., "… but this exclusion does not apply if such discharge, dispersal, release or escape is sudden and accidental …"). [See Aydin Corp. v. First State Ins. Co. (1998) 18 C4th 1183, 1186-1187, 77 CR2d 537, 538; Westoil Terminals Co., Inc. v. Industrial Indemnity Co. (2003) 110 CA4th 139, 148, 1 CR3d 516, 522; Venoco, Inc. v. Gulf Underwriters Ins. Co. (2009) 175 CA4th 750, 757-758, 96 CR3d 409, 414-415—pollution exclusion "buy-back" provision conditioned on, among other things, 60-day reporting requirement and occurrence being "accidental" and "neither expected nor intended"]

1) [5:253a] Burden of proof: Because it negates the pollution exclusion (effectively reinstating coverage where it otherwise would not exist), the "sudden and accidental" occurrence exception is properly construed as a coverage provision when allocating the burden of proof.

Thus, in an action seeking indemnity under a standard CGL policy, once the insurer carries its burden of proving the pollution exclusion applies, the insured bears the burden of proving the insured's claim comes within the "sudden and accidental" exception (i.e., the insured must demonstrate that the damage is not the result of gradual or incremental contamination; see ¶ 5:254). [Aydin Corp. v. First State Ins. Co. (1998) 18 C4th 1183, 1191-1192, 77 CR2d 537, 541-542, 543; Aeroquip Corp. v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co., Inc. (9th Cir. 1994) 26 F3d 893, 895 (per curiam)]

2) [5:253.1] Relevant "discharge": The pollution exclusion focuses on a discharge of pollutants into or upon the land, air or water—not on the environmental damage caused by the discharge. Thus, the fact consequential damage may be unexpected or unintended is irrelevant to application of the "sudden and accidental" occurrence exception. [Standun, Inc. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1998) 62 CA4th 882, 890, 73 CR2d 116, 121]

a) [5:253.2] Application to waste disposal in landfills: Where the coverage dispute concerns contamination caused by escaping pollutants from a landfill, the relevant "discharge" for purposes of the pollution exclusion is the initial disposal of waste into the landfill—not the subsequent release of hazardous materials from the landfill into the surrounding environment. [Standun, Inc. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1998) 62 CA4th 882, 890-891, 73 CR2d 116, 121]

Thus, notwithstanding a "sudden and accidental" occurrence exception in the CGL policy, the pollution exclusion bars coverage where the insured purposefully deposited its waste products into a landfill, or purposefully gave its waste products to transporters who, as expected, brought it to the landfill where it was released directly into the land. The fact the waste thereafter escaped the landfill unexpectedly, contaminating the environment, does not trigger the exclusion's "sudden and accidental" occurrence exception; rather, that event constitutes the damages arising out of the discharge of pollutants onto the land. [Standun, Inc. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co., supra, 62 CA4th at 891-892, 73 CR2d at 121-122]

b) [5:253.3] Compare—tank storage of hazardous waste: On the other hand, where hazardous waste is deposited into storage containers and subsequently released into the environment, the relevant "discharge" is the release from the storage containers … because the original disposal of waste into the containers is not a discharge into or upon the land, air or water. [St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. v. Warwick Dyeing Corp. (1st Cir. 1994) 26 F3d 1195, 1205; see Standun, Inc. v. Fireman's Fund Ins. Co. (1998) 62 CA4th 882, 891, 73 CR2d 116, 121 (distinguishing waste dumping in landfills)—"A landfill is not a similar containment vessel, because the landfill vessel is itself land"]

3) [5:254] Exception inapplicable to gradual pollution occurrences: Though there has been much debate and extensive litigation over the meaning of the phrase "sudden and accidental," California courts find the phrase unambiguous: The exception triggers potential coverage only if the pollution occurrence (the "discharge," ¶ 5:253.1) is both "sudden" and "accidental." It must be an "unexpected and unintended" event and "abrupt and immediate" (temporal) in nature. The exception does not apply to gradual pollution. [American States Ins. Co. v. Sacramento Plating, Inc. (ED CA 1994) 861 F.Supp. 964, 969-970, aff'd (9th Cir. 1995) 99 F3d 1145; Shell Oil Co. v. Winterthur Swiss Ins. Co. (1993) 12 CA4th 715, 755, 15 CR2d 815, 841; see Truck Ins. Exchange v. Pozzuoli (1993) 17 CA4th 856, 860-861, 21 CR2d 650, 652—exception inapplicable where pollution process was both continuous and long-term; ACL Technologies, Inc. v. Northbrook Prop. & Cas. Ins. Co. (1993) 17 CA4th 1773, 1787-1789, 22 CR2d 206, 214-216—exception inapplicable where pollutants escaped from underground tank through leaks caused by corrosion that occurred gradually over extended period]

A growing trend of other federal circuits and states are in accord—i.e., the "sudden and accidental" exception is triggered only by a temporal occurrence that happens quickly, abruptly and without warning. [See, e.g., United States Fid. & Guar. Co. v. Star Fire Coals, Inc. (6th Cir. 1988) 856 F2d 31, 34-35; State of New York v. Amro Realty Corp. (ND NY 1988) 697 F.Supp. 99, 110, aff'd in part (2nd Cir. 1991) 936 F2d 1420, 1426-1429; Technicon Electronics Corp. v. American Home Assur. Co. (2nd Dept. 1988) 141 AD2d 124, 137, 143, 533 NYS2d 91, 99, 103, aff'd (1989) 74 NY2d 66, 74, 542 NE2d 1048, 1051]

a) [5:254.1] Unexpected *and unintended: As stated, the discharge is not "accidental" unless both unexpected and unintended. An "unexpected" event is one that the insured did not know or believe to be substantially certain or highly likely to occur. [A-H Plating, Inc. v. American Nat'l Fire Ins. Co. (1997) 57 CA4th 427, 439, 67 CR2d 113, 119]

The exception is not triggered by an unintended discharge of pollutants if the discharge was nonetheless expected. [Shell Oil Co. v. Winterthur Swiss Ins. Co. (1993) 12 CA4th 715, 755, 15 CR2d 815, 841]

b) [5:254.2] Exception not automatically negated by insured's precautionary measures: On the other hand, the mere fact the insured took precautionary safety measures—whether mandated or voluntarily adopted—to prevent the possible escape of pollutants or to respond quickly to a potential environmental hazard does not automatically rule out the occurrence of "accidents." Such safety measures do not necessarily mean the insured knows or believes a particular incident is substantially certain or highly likely to occur. [A-H Plating, Inc. v. American Nat'l Fire Ins. Co. (1997) 57 CA4th 427, 439-440, 67 CR2d 113, 119-120—"By taking precautionary measures to protect the environment, a company does not eliminate the possibility of 'accidents'"; but see American States Ins. Co. v. Sacramento Plating, Inc. (ED CA 1994) 861 F.Supp. 964, 969-971, aff'd (9th Cir. 1995) 99 F3d 1145]

To hold otherwise, in the extreme, would render all accident-based insurance policies worthless. "A company typically purchases a commercial general liability policy to provide some means of protection against injury-producing events. Naturally, the company would not have obtained insurance in the first place unless it had 'expected' such an event. An 'expected' event cannot constitute an 'accident.' Thus, the insurance would provide no coverage at all. Plainly, we cannot accept this interpretation of 'expect' since it would lead to absurd consequences." [A-H Plating, Inc. v. American Nat'l Fire Ins. Co., supra, 57 CA4th at 439-440, 67 CR2d at 119-120]

1/ [5:254.3] Application—electroplating facility spills; fact-specific inquiry required: An electroplating company does not necessarily "expect" a particular spill into the environment just because it has adopted procedures to prevent, contain and clean up spills in general. The company does not ipso facto eliminate the possibility of "accidents" simply by taking precautionary steps to protect the environment. [A-H Plating, Inc. v. American Nat'l Fire Ins. Co. (1997) 57 CA4th 427, 440, 67 CR2d 113, 120]

The circumstances surrounding a particular spill—such as its cause, its likelihood, its similarity to other spills, and the frequency of similar spills—must be examined to determine whether the insured knew or believed the subject spill was "expected" (substantially certain or highly likely to occur). [A-H Plating, Inc. v. American Nat'l Fire Ins. Co., supra, 57 CA4th at 440, 67 CR2d at 120; but see American States Ins. Co. v. Sacramento Plating, Inc. (ED CA 1994) 861 F.Supp. 964, 969-971 (contra)—"sudden and accidental" exception held inapplicable based on district court's finding that leaks at electroplating facility were "expected" because insureds had taken precautions to contain such discharges]

4) [5:255] Compare—"sudden and accidental" discharge despite gradual contamination in routine business operations: The fact the insured's regular business practices involve the disposal of hazardous materials does not eliminate the possibility that at least some of the environmental damage might have resulted from a "sudden and accidental" cause (such as an explosion or fire). [Montrose Chemical Corp. of Calif. v. Sup.Ct. (Canadian Universal Ins. Co., Inc.) (1993) 6 C4th 287, 304-305, 24 CR2d 467, 478; Staefa Control-System, Inc. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (ND CA 1994) 847 F.Supp. 1460, 1469-1470, amended on other grounds (ND CA 1994) 875 F.Supp. 656; see Reese v. Travelers Ins. Co. (9th Cir. 1997) 129 F3d 1056, 1062]

Similarly, the fact the discharge of pollutants occurred over a lengthy period "does not automatically mean that the suddenness element cannot be met …" [Vann v. Travelers Cos. (1995) 39 CA4th 1610, 1617, 46 CR2d 617, 621 (alleged groundwater contamination from insured's pollutants disposal in operation of auto body repair business); see also Shell Oil Co. v. Winterthur Swiss Ins. Co. (1993) 12 CA4th 715, 756, 15 CR2d 815, 841—"'sudden' refers to the pollution's commencement and does not require that the polluting event terminate quickly or have only a brief duration"]

5) [5:255.5] Requiring discharge and resulting damage during policy period permissible: A "sudden and accidental" occurrence exception to a pollution exclusion that applies only if the release of contaminants and the resulting damage both occur during the relevant policy period is valid and enforceable. [Westoil Terminals Co., Inc. v. Industrial Indemnity Co. (2003) 110 CA4th 139, 149, 1 CR3d 516, 523—also holding policy was not ambiguous because exclusion did not conflict with policy's definition of "occurrence"]

(b) [5:256] Absolute ("total") pollution exclusion: Most CGL policies issued after 1985 contain an absolute (or "total") pollution exclusion with no exception for "sudden and accidental" occurrences. [See MacKinnon v. Truck Ins. Exchange (2003) 31 C4th 635, 639, 644, 3 CR3d 228, 231, 235 & fn. 3—but noting that pre-1985 "qualified pollution" (¶ 5:253 ff.) and post-1985 "absolute pollution" exclusions are never designated as such in policies; Foster-Gardner, Inc. v. National Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, Pa. (1998) 18 C4th 857, 865, 77 CR2d 107, 111, fn. 3; see also Griffin Dewatering Corp. v. Northern Ins. Co. (2009) 176 CA4th 172, 97 CR3d 568, fn. 3—to degree there is any difference between "total" and "absolute" pollution exclusion, "total" apparently excludes a "little more"]

These exclusions are enforced according to their terms, generally relieving the insurer of any obligation to defend against or indemnify for governmentally-imposed clean-up or monitoring costs or other third party toxic contamination claims. [See Legarra v. Federated Mut. Ins. Co. (1995) 35 CA4th 1472, 1480-1482, 42 CR2d 101, 105-107—absolute pollution exclusion barred coverage for government-ordered response costs to remediate groundwater contamination caused by discharge of fuel pollutants from insured's property; CDM Investors v. Travelers Cas. & Sur. Co. (2006) 139 CA4th 1251, 1261-1262, 43 CR3d 669, 675-676—no coverage for costs incurred by insured to test property for pollutants as ordered by Water Quality Control Board because language of absolute pollution exclusion was "non-specific and all-encompassing"]

1) [5:256.1] Purpose: Absolute pollution exclusion clauses were promulgated to eliminate insurance coverage for gradual environmental degradation and government-mandated cleanups under the Superfund legislation. They were never intended to (nor do they) bar coverage for ordinary acts of negligence involving toxic substances not commonly thought of as environmental pollution. [See MacKinnon v. Truck Ins. Exchange (2003) 31 C4th 635, 645, 653, 3 CR3d 228, 236, 242; and discussion at ¶ 5:258 ff.]

2) [5:257] Coverage in concurrent cause cases—"efficient proximate cause" analysis: In a narrow class of cases, there may be CGL policy coverage for toxic contamination damage notwithstanding an unambiguous absolute pollution exclusion. This occurs where the damage is caused by both covered and noncovered occurrences:

"When a loss is caused by a combination of a covered and specifically excluded risks, the loss is covered if the covered risk was the efficient proximate cause of the loss." The "efficient proximate cause" is the cause that sets the other cause in motion. [State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. v. Von Der Lieth (1991) 54 C3d 1123, 1131-1132, 2 CR2d 183, 189 (emphasis added)]

• [5:257.1] For example, plaintiff had a business premises liability policy that included earthquake coverage but also contained an absolute pollution exclusion. The release of contaminants on plaintiff's property came from a leaking underground storage tank that cracked as a result of an earthquake. The court concluded the case involved two distinct causes (earthquake and leaking tank) as to which an "efficient proximate cause" analysis applied; and that if the earthquake was the efficient cause of the cracking and subsequent leaking, plaintiff's clean-up expense would be covered notwithstanding the absolute pollution exclusion. [Brian Chuchua's Jeep, Inc. v. Farmers Ins. Group (1992) 10 CA4th 1579, 1582-1583, 13 CR2d 444, 445-446]

3) [5:258] Applies only to "traditional" environmental pollution: The standard absolute pollution exclusion is targeted at, and limited to, "traditional" or "conventional" environmental industrial pollution—i.e., events "commonly thought of" as environmental pollution. [MacKinnon v. Truck Ins. Exchange (2003) 31 C4th 635, 641, 653-654, 3 CR3d 228, 233, 242-243 & fn. 1; American Cas. Co. of Reading, Penn. v. Miller (2008) 159 CA4th 501, 508, 71 CR3d 571, 575]

a) Examples

• [5:258.1] Groundwater contamination from industrial operations and sewage-borne bacteria are classic examples of "traditional" environmental pollution. An insured's liability for injuries arising from these kinds of pollution is excluded from coverage under a standard absolute pollution exclusion clause. [See MacKinnon v. Truck Ins. Exchange, supra (collecting cases)]

• [5:258.2] Widespread dissemination of silica dust as an incidental byproduct of industrial sandblasting operations also is considered "traditional" environmental pollution and therefore excluded from coverage under a standard absolute pollution exclusion clause. [Garamendi v. Golden Eagle Ins. Co. (2005) 127 CA4th 480, 485-486, 25 CR3d 642, 645-646]

• [5:258.3] Similarly, an absolute pollution exclusion clause bars coverage for injuries arising from the widespread dissemination of dust and offensive odors as a persistent byproduct of a compost facility's operations: "Odors in general, and compost odors in particular, are recognized as pollutants under California law [Health & Saf.C. §§ 39013 & 41705(a)(2)]." [Cold Creek Compost, Inc. v. State Farm Fire & Casualty Co. (2007) 156 CA4th 1469, 1483-1486, 63 CR3d 216, 227-229]

• [5:258.4] The release of methylene chloride into a public sewer by a furniture stripping company is an event "commonly thought of as environmental pollution," and thus excluded from coverage under an absolute pollution exclusion clause. [See American Cas. Co. of Reading, Penn. v. Miller (2008) 159 CA4th 501, 516, 71 CR3d 571, 581-582]

• [5:258.5] Placing rocks and dirt along a washed out access road constitutes "environmental pollution" within the meaning of a standard absolute pollution exclusion clause if the placement results in a damaging discharge of fill material into nearby waterways. [Ortega Rock Quarry v. Golden Eagle Ins. Corp. (2006) 141 CA4th 969, 990, 46 CR3d 517, 532]

• [5:258.6] The release and airborne dissemination of asbestos fibers from scraping and removing acoustical "popcorn" ceilings is considered "traditional" environmental pollution, precluding coverage under a standard pollution exclusion clause. [See Villa Los Alamos Homeowners Ass'n v. State Farm Gen. Ins. Co. (2011) 198 CA4th 522, 533, 130 CR3d 374, 381 (applying general principles re pollution exclusion clauses in standard thirdparty liability CGL policies to comparable clauses in first party property insurance policies; ¶ 5:259)]

b) [5:258.10] Compare—injuries from "ordinary acts of negligence": Giving effect to the insured's "reasonable expectations," the standard absolute pollution exclusion clause in a CGL policy does not exclude coverage for injury arising from ordinary acts of negligence involving toxic chemicals—i.e., from negligent acts not "commonly thought of as pollution" or "environmental pollution." [MacKinnon v. Truck Ins. Exchange (2003) 31 C4th 635, 649-654, 3 CR3d 228, 239-244—exclusion inapplicable to injury from negligent spraying of pesticides around apartment to kill yellow jackets (unlikely "reasonable" policyholder would equate such spraying with environmental pollution); compare American Cas. Co. of Reading, Penn. v. Miller (2008) 159 CA4th 501, 504, 71 CR3d 571, 572—exclusion applicable to injury from negligent release of methylene chloride into public sewer (ordinary insureds would "reasonably" expect such release to constitute environmental pollution); see also Cold Creek Compost, Inc. v. State Farm Fire & Casualty Co. (2007) 156 CA4th 1469, 1479, 63 CR3d 216, 223]

In fact, extending the exclusion to all acts of negligence would lead to "absurd results" because "[v]irtually any substance can act under the proper circumstances as an irritant or contaminant." [MacKinnon v. Truck Ins.

Exchange, supra, 31 C4th at 650, 3 CR3d at 240 (internal quotes omitted); American Cas. Co. of Reading, Penn. v. Miller, supra, 159 CA4th at 510, 71 CR3d at 576]

4) [5:258.11] Exclusion not limited to catastrophic events or extensive injuries: Application of the absolute pollution exclusion is not limited to large scale environmental pollution: "[T]here need not be wholesale environmental degradation, such as occurred at, for example, Love Canal, or the Stringfellow Acid Pits to constitute pollution" for exclusion purposes. [American Cas. Co. of Reading, Penn. v. Miller (2008) 159 CA4th 501, 516, 71 CR3d 571, 581 (original emphasis and internal quotes omitted)]

Likewise, the extent of environmental damage or injury does not determine whether the absolute pollution exclusion applies. Rather, the "type of pollutant and how it is released into the environment" is controlling. [American Cas. Co. of Reading, Penn. v. Miller, supra]

5) [5:259] Effect of separate endorsement excluding asbestos claims: In addition to the "total" pollution exclusion, some policies contain a separate endorsement excluding claims based on exposure to asbestos. Inclusion of that endorsement "cannot reasonably be understood to mean that the pollution exclusion is inapplicable to other pollutants not specifically designated in a separate endorsement." [Garamendi v. Golden Eagle Ins. Co. (2005) 127 CA4th 480, 488, 25 CR3d 642, 648 (emphasis added)—asbestos endorsement did not make "total" pollution exclusion inapplicable to claims based on exposure to natural product similar to asbestos, silica dust]

Similarly, failure to include a separate asbestos exclusion endorsement does not restrict the scope of a generalized "total" pollution exclusion clause. Indeed, notwithstanding the fact an asbestos endorsement is available but not incorporated into a policy, the scope of a generalized "total" pollution exclusion encompasses claims based on exposure to asbestos. [See Villa Los Alamos Homeowners Ass'n v. State Farm Gen. Ins. Co. (2011) 198 CA4th 522, 541, 130 CR3d 374, 388—release of asbestos constituted environmental pollution within meaning of generalized pollution exclusion clause contained in first party property insurance policy, precluding coverage for remediation clean-up work]

(c) [5:260] "Owned property" exclusion: The "owned property" exclusion in a CGL policy operates independently of the pollution exclusion. It typically excludes coverage for damage to property (i) owned, occupied or rented by the insured, (ii) used by the insured, or (iii) in the care, custody or control of the insured. [See A-H Plating, Inc. v. American Nat'l Fire Ins. Co. (1997) 57 CA4th 427, 441-442, 67 CR2d 113, 121; Vann v. Travelers Cos. (1995) 39 CA4th 1610, 1618, 46 CR2d 617, 622]

1) [5:260.1] Application: The owned property exclusion precludes coverage for clean-up costs incurred solely to remediate property belonging to or leased by the insured. [See Shell Oil Co. v. Winterthur Swiss Ins. Co. (1993) 12 CA4th 715, 758, 15 CR2d 815, 843]

The exclusion likewise eliminates coverage for costs of removing solid wastes stored on the insured's property and which pose no risk to the property of others. [Titan Corp. v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. (1994) 22 CA4th 457, 474, 27 CR2d 476, 484; see also State of New Jersey, Dept. of Environmental Protection v. Signo Trading Int'l, Inc. (App.Div. 1989) 235 NJ Super. 321, 330-336, 562 A2d 251, 256-260]

2) [5:261] Coverage where pollution threatens adjoining property or groundwater: On the other hand, the owned property exclusion does not defeat CGL coverage for environmental hazards remediation simply because the contamination originates on the insured's property. There is at least potential coverage (thus triggering the insurer's duty to defend) if the contamination threatens the surrounding environment or public or private water supplies. [Vann v. Travelers Cos. (1995) 39 CA4th 1610, 1618-1619, 46 CR2d 617, 622; see A-H Plating, Inc. v. American Nat'l Fire Ins. Co. (1997) 57 CA4th 427, 442, 67 CR2d 113, 121 (groundwater pollution from insured's business operations potentially covered despite owned property exclusion)—state and federal governments, not the insured, own groundwater; Reese v. Travelers Ins. Co. (9th Cir. 1997) 129 F3d 1056, 1061 (same)]

"Allegations of potential groundwater contamination may reasonably be read to include concerns for off-site contamination and such allegations are thus not necessarily limited to property occupied or controlled by [the insured]. Even if off-site migration has not yet occurred …, we do not believe that the standard 'owned property' exclusion should automatically defeat coverage in suits seeking 'cleanup' costs designed to prevent damage to third parties …" [Vann v. Travelers Cos., supra, 39 CA4th at 1618-1619, 46 CR2d at 622 (emphasis added); see also Shell Oil Co. v. Winterthur Swiss Ins. Co. (1993) 12 CA4th 715, 758-759, 15 CR2d 815, 843-844—"remedial measures on [insured's] property to prevent imminent danger to others could be covered"; Intel Corp. v. Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. (9th Cir. 1991) 952 F2d 1551, 1565-1566]

[5:261.1 - 5:261.4] Reserved.

3) [5:261.5] Coverage where State-insured's operation of toxic waste facility contaminates groundwater? There is no definitive answer whether the owned property exclusion eliminates coverage where the insured is the State of California whose maintenance or operation of a toxic waste facility has contaminated the groundwater. While the State "owns" the groundwater in its natural condition, that is not "ownership" as the term is commonly understood; the State has the power to control and regulate use of the groundwater, but does not have a proprietary interest in it or the right to exercise physical dominion over it. [State of Calif. v. Sup.Ct. (Underwriters at Lloyd's of London) (2000) 78 CA4th 1019, 1027-1032, 93 CR2d 276, 283-287; see discussion at ¶ 4:56 ff.]

Whether this type of "hybrid" ownership triggers the owned property exclusion is a question of policy interpretation, to be decided under well-settled principles of insurance policy construction. [See State of Calif. v. Sup.Ct. (Underwriters at Lloyd's of London), supra, 78 CA4th at 1033-1034, 93 CR2d at 287-288 (remanded on this issue)—holding only that State does not "own" the groundwater so as to make the exclusion applicable as a matter of law]

➪ [5:262] PRACTICE POINTER FOR INSUREDS: Under California law, ambiguities in an insurance policy generally are to be construed against the insurer (i.e., in favor of coverage) regardless of the insured's sophistication. [See AIU Ins. Co. v. Sup.Ct. (FMC Corp.) (1990) 51 C3d 807, 822-824, 274 CR 820, 831-833] This rule may give insureds a basis for arguing environmental hazards coverage even if there is a pollution exclusion or an owned property exclusion in the policy. (But see ¶ 5:254 for cases concluding "sudden and accidental" occurrence exception to pollution exclusion is not ambiguous.)

[5:263] Reserved.

(3) [5:264] Coverage under personal injury endorsement despite pollution exclusion? Many CGL policies contain a "personal injury endorsement," providing separate coverage for "personal injury" liability; "personal injury" is defined by the policy to include "wrongful entry or eviction or other invasion of the right of private occupancy." [See Legarra v. Federated Mut. Ins. Co. (1995) 35 CA4th 1472, 1482, 42 CR2d 101, 107; Martin Marietta Corp. v. Insurance Co. of No. America (1995) 40 CA4th 1113, 1118, 47 CR2d 670, 672]

Cases are split on the application of personal injury coverage to pollution claims (the argument being that migrating pollution is a "wrongful entry" notwithstanding the absence of intent to dispossess another of their land):

• [5:264.1] View that pollution exclusion defeats coverage: At least where the policy contains an unambiguous pollution exclusion, most courts conclude an additional personal injury endorsement does not provide coverage for environmental damage clean-up costs. To hold otherwise would render the pollution exclusion meaningless. [Lakeside Non-Ferrous Metals, Inc. v. Hanover Ins. Co. (9th Cir. 1999) 172 F3d 702, 705-706 (applying Calif. law); Legarra v. Federated Mut. Ins. Co. (1995) 35 CA4th 1472, 1485-1486, 42 CR2d 101, 109; Titan Corp. v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. (1994) 22 CA4th 457, 474-476, 27 CR2d 476, 485-487; Union Oil Co. of Calif. v. International Ins. Co. (1995) 37 CA4th 930, 940, 44 CR2d 4, 10]

• [5:264.2] View finding potential coverage: A contrary line of authority takes a more expansive view of "wrongful entry," holding that contamination of neighboring property can fall within "personal injury" coverage. But in most of these cases the policy either contained no conflicting pollution exclusion or contained ambiguous exclusion language, leading the court to conclude the insured might reasonably have expected coverage under the circumstances. [See Martin Marietta Corp. v. In-surance Co. of No. America (1995) 40 CA4th 1113, 1136, 47 CR2d 670, 684 (collecting cases); Block v. Golden Eagle Ins. Corp. (2004) 121 CA4th 186, 200-201, 17 CR3d 13, 25-26—insured's claim not covered because it did not involve "wrongful entry" claims brought by adjacent landowners]

(a) [5:264.3] Effect of policy definition of "property damage": Where the policy defines "property damage" to include "loss of use," actions involving the diminished use and enjoyment of the property (e.g., nuisance, trespass, disturbance of quiet enjoyment, etc.) fall "squarely within the definition" of property damage and therefore do not constitute "personal injury." [Lakeside Non-Ferrous Metals, Inc. v. Hanover Ins. Co. (9th Cir. 1999) 172 F3d 702, 706—

no coverage where underlying nuisance claim (insured's contamination interfered with plaintiff's ability to "use, develop, sell, let or encumber") fit squarely within definition of "property damage" and was expressly excluded by pollution exclusion]

(4) [5:265] Trigger of coverage issues—progressively deteriorating losses: Another coverage problem arises where the damage caused by pollution, though otherwise a covered peril under the CGL policy, continues undiscovered over a long period of time involving several policy periods and several different insurers on the risk.

The issue is one of "trigger of coverage." In the third party liability insurance (CGL) context, "trigger of coverage" refers to the circumstances that activate the insurer's defense and indemnity obligations under the policy—i.e., it is "a term of convenience used to describe that which, under the specific terms of an insurance policy, must happen in the policy period in order for the potential of coverage to arise. The issue is largely one of time—what must take place within the policy's effective dates for the potential of coverage to be 'triggered'?" [Montrose Chemical Corp. of Calif. v. Admiral Ins. Co. (1995) 10 C4th 645, 655, 42 CR2d 324, 326, fn. 5 (emphasis in original)]

(a) [5:266] Continuous injury trigger of coverage approach: As an "occurrence-based" type of policy, standard CGL coverage does not restrict the period during which a claim may be made; it covers losses for which the insured is liable so long as the damage "occurs" during the policy period, irrespective of when the insured's allegedly wrongful conduct may have taken place. (This is distinguished from a "claims-made" policy, which covers third party claims "asserted" against the insured during the policy period regardless of when the underlying damage occurred.) [Montrose Chemical Corp. of Calif. v. Admiral Ins. Co. (1995) 10 C4th 645, 668-669 675 688, 42 CR2d 324, 336, 340, 349; see A.C. Label Co., Inc. v. Transamerica Ins. Co. (1996) 48 CA4th 1188, 1192, 56 CR2d 207, 209]

With regard to standard occurrence-based CGL coverage, the Cal. Supreme Court has adopted a "continuous injury trigger of coverage" approach in these continuing loss cases; i.e., bodily injury or property damage that is continuous or progressively deteriorating throughout successive policy periods is potentially covered (up to the policy limits) by all policies in effect during those periods. It is immaterial that the loss from the contamination commenced before the particular policy took effect. [Montrose Chemical Corp. of Calif. v. Admiral Ins. Co., supra, 10 C4th at 689, 42 CR2d at 350; see also County of San Bernardino v. Pacific Indem. Co. (1997) 56 CA4th 666, 681-682, 65 CR2d 657, 666]

• [5:266.1] This approach is supported by standard CGL policy language. The insuring clause does not impose, as a condition of coverage, a requirement that the damage or injury be discovered at any particular point in time. Rather, it provides coverage for injury or damage caused by an "occurrence," and typically defines "occurrence" as an "accident," including "a continuous or repeated exposure to conditions," which results in bodily injury or property damage during the policy period.

Pursuant to this language, it is a third party's injury or property damage, alleged to have been continuous or progressively deteriorating through the insurer's policy period(s), and which allegedly resulted from the continuous and repeated exposure to pollution for which the insured is allegedly responsible, that triggers potential coverage under the policy. [Montrose Chemical Corp. of Calif. v. Admiral Ins. Co. (1995) 10 C4th 645, 668-669, 42 CR2d 324, 335-336; see County of San Bernardino v. Pacific Indem. Co. (1997) 56 CA4th 666, 681, 65 CR2d 657, 666]

1) [5:266.2] Coverage where contaminated property acquired after policy period? Although the California Supreme Court has not yet addressed the issue, several cases hold there is no coverage under a CGL policy that expired before the insured acquired the contaminated property; it is immaterial that the pollution on the subject property occurred during the policy period. CGL coverage is not triggered during the policy period because the insured "had no connection to or nexus with the damage caused by contamination that occurred on the subsequently acquired property during the policy period." [A.C. Label Co., Inc. v. Transamerica Ins. Co. (1996) 48 CA4th 1188, 1193-1194, 56 CR2d 207, 210 (emphasis added) (distinguishing Montrose, supra); Tosco Corp. v. General Ins. Co. of America (2000) 85 CA4th 1016, 1023, 102 CR2d 657, 662; FMC Corp. v. Plaisted & Cos. (1998) 61 CA4th 1132, 1150, 72 CR2d 467, 477 (disapproved on other grounds by State of Calif. v. Continental Ins. Co. (2012) 55 C4th 186, 201, 145 CR3d 1, 11)]

However, a Ninth Circuit case reached the opposite conclusion, predicting that the California Supreme Court will hold a CGL policy covers property damage occurring during the policy period caused by property the insured acquired after the policy expired. Rationale: Damage to the claimant is the event that triggers coverage. [In re K.F. Dairies, Inc. & Affiliates (9th Cir. 2000) 224 F3d 922, 925 (applying Calif. law)—policy covered damage to state-owned groundwater occurring within policy period even though insured purchased property after policy period]

2) [5:266.3] Application to successor liability: A successor corporation's contractual assumption of its predecessor's liabilities does not automatically (by operation of law) also entitle the successor to defense and indemnity coverage under the predecessor's CGL occurrence-based policies for injury or damage arising out of the predecessor's business during those policy periods. If the policy contains a consent-to-assignment provision and liability has already been determined for the loss in question, the party who agreed to assume the insured's liabilities without the insurer's consent to an assignment of policy rights has no coverage under that policy (Ins.C. § 520). However, if the insured's liability has not yet been determined, the insurer's consent to assignment is not required. [See Fluor Corp. v. Sup.Ct. (Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co.) (2015) 61 C4th 1175, 1219, 1224, 191 CR3d 498, 532, 536 (overruling Henkel Corp. v. Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. (2003) 29 C4th 934, 129 CR2d 828); see also Croskey, Heeseman, Ehrlich & Klee, Cal. Prac. Guide: Insurance Litigation (TRG), ¶ 7:430.5 ff.]

a) [5:266.4] Result where successor liability imposed by operation of law? In a few limited situations, successor liability for the predecessor's torts is imposed involuntarily by operation of law (e.g., CERCLA imposes liability upon successor corporations without regard to contract; see SmithKline Beecham Corp. v. Rohm & Haas Co. (3rd Cir. 1996) 89 F3d 154, 163). Whether, in such cases, the predecessor's applicable policy benefits should likewise pass to the successor by operation of law has not yet been decided by the Cal. Supreme Court. [See Henkel Corp. v. Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co. (2003) 29 C4th 934, 941, 129 CR2d 828, 833 (overruled on other grounds by Fluor Corp. v. Sup.Ct. (Hartford Acc. & Indem. Co.) (2015) 61 C4th 1175, 1219, 1224, 191 CR3d 498, 532, 536) (raising but not deciding issue because successor's liability did not arise by operation of law but was assumed by contract)]

(b) [5:267] Compare—first party insurance (manifestation of loss approach): In first party property insurance cases (coverage for loss or damage sustained directly by the insured, as distinguished from a CGL third party liability policy), a "manifestation of loss" rule applies: The insurer insuring the property at the time appreciable property damage becomes manifest is solely responsible for indemnifying the insured once coverage is established. [Prudential-LMI Commercial Ins. v. Sup.Ct. (Lundberg) (1990) 51 C3d 674, 699, 274 CR 387, 403-404; see Montrose Chemical Corp. of Calif. v. Admiral Ins. Co. (1995) 10 C4th 645, 663-665, 42 CR2d 324, 332-334]

Thus, there is no first party coverage where damage caused by environmental contamination first becomes manifest after the policy in question has expired. [Stanton Road Assocs. v. Pacific Employers Ins. Co. (1995) 36 CA4th 333, 341, 43 CR2d 1, 5—no first party coverage for progressive environmental contamination to insured's property from adjoining dry cleaning plant because contamination not manifested until after expiration of policy periods]

(5) Duty to defend issues

(a) [5:268] No duty to defend prelawsuit proceedings: Although a CGL insurer owes a duty to defend "suits," it has no duty to defend "claims" that have not yet become "suits." Instead, the insurer has discretion to investigate and settle "claims" as it deems expedient (¶ 5:268.2). [Foster-Gardner, Inc. v. National Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, Pa. (1998) 18 C4th 857, 885, 77 CR2d 107, 126]

1) [5:268.1] Includes proceedings before environmental protection agencies: Environmental claims usually begin when an oversight agency notifies a landowner (or former landowner) that it is a PRP for designated hazardous wastes and orders a clean-up. [See generally Health & Saf.C. § 78650 (recodified & added Stats. 2022, Ch. 257, oper. 1/1/24)]

Such orders may have the "functional effect" of a judgment because facts determined therein may be given collateral estoppel effect in subsequent judicial proceedings.

Even so, a liability insurer owes no duty to investigate or defend the insured against an administrative pollution clean-up order. Until the agency files a "suit" within the meaning of a CGL policy—i.e., an adversarial proceeding commenced in a court of law—a CGL insurer is not obligated to defend. [Foster-Gardner, Inc. v. National Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, Pa. (1998) 18 C4th 857, 885, 77 CR2d 107, 126 (decided under predecessor statute); Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's of London v. Sup.Ct. (Powerine Oil Co., Inc.) (2001) 24 C4th 945, 959-960, 103 CR2d 672, 681-682 (decided under predecessor statute); Lockheed Martin Corp. v. Continental Ins. Co. (2005) 134 CA4th 187, 194, 35 CR3d 799, 803 (disapproved on other grounds by State of Calif. v. Allstate Ins. Co. (2009) 45 C4th 1008, 1036, 90 CR3d 1, 25, fn. 11)]

a) [5:268.1a] Compare—Ninth Circuit treats EPA's PRP notice as "functional equivalent of a suit": Applying Oregon law, the Ninth Circuit has determined receipt of two letters from the EPA seeking to hold a property owner liable for environmental contamination triggered its insurer's duty to provide a legal defense for activities covered under its CGL policies. Reason: Nonsettling PRPs may be held jointly and severally liable for the entire amount of response costs minus the amount of the settlement, and they may not file a contribution action against settling PRPs regarding matters addressed in the settlement (¶ 5:136). [See Anderson Bros., Inc. v. St. Paul Fire & Marine Ins. Co. (9th Cir. 2013) 729 F3d 923, 930 (noting "huge majority" of U.S. courts have held policyholder's receipt of EPA's PRP notice constitutes "functional equivalent" of a "suit")]

2) [5:268.1b] Compare—quasi-judicial *adjudicative proceedings: A federal adjudicative administrative agency proceeding held to resolve government demands against insured parties is a "suit" for purposes of triggering an insurer's duty to defend. In contrast to mere claims, remedial orders or threats to take legal action that do not obligate the insurer (¶ 5:268 ff.), quasi-judicial administrative proceedings require the filing of a complaint, are heard and determined by administrative law judges, and may involve days of trial, numerous witnesses and substantial evidence. In short, "[a] reasonable policyholder would recognize such proceedings as a suit and would expect to be defended and, if necessary, indemnified by its insurer." [See Ameron Int'l Corp. v. Insurance Co. of State of Penn. (2010) 50 C4th 1370, 1374-1375, 1386-1387, 118 CR3d 95, 97, 107 (decided under predecessor statute)]

Moreover, "[g]iven insurers' reliance on a 'complaint' for coverage determinations, and [the Supreme Court's] policy of emphasizing substance over form in characterizing pleadings, it is reasonable for all parties to a liability insurance policy that does not define the term 'suit' to expect a federal adjudicative administrative agency board proceeding to trigger the defense and indemnity provisions in the policy." [See Ameron Int'l Corp. v. Insurance Co. of State of Penn., supra, 50 C4th at 1386, 118 CR3d at 107 (upholding Foster-Gardner decision as it applies to "actions involving pollution remediation orders, or any matters that involve threats to take legal action only, rather than to 'suits'" (emphasis added))]

3) [5:268.2] Distinguish—broader insuring clauses: The principles set forth at ¶ 5:268 ff. apply under a standard comprehensive general liability policy. The result may be different, however, in the event the insuring clause more broadly defines "suit" to include administrative clean-up orders. [See Ortega Rock Quarry v. Golden Eagle Ins. Corp. (2006) 141 CA4th 969, 979, 46 CR3d 517, 524—even assuming negotiations and letter exchange with EPA constituted a "suit" within meaning of policies that defined "suit" to include alternative dispute resolution proceedings, insurers had no duty to defend insured in EPA administrative proceedings because insurers did not consent to submit to such proceedings as required by policies' unambiguous definition of "alternative dispute resolution proceedings"]

4) [5:268.3] Compare—affirmative defense asserted as setoff: Under ordinary, duty-to-defend policy language, an insurer has no duty to defend against affirmative defenses raised in response to a lawsuit brought by its insured. However, an affirmative defense asserted as a setoff claim may constitute the functional equivalent of a suit seeking damages triggering a duty to defend under a CGL policy if the affirmative defense (i) would "unquestionably have been a suit for damages if asserted in a court of law" and (ii) fell within the scope of the policy's insuring clause. [CDM Investors v. Travelers Cas. & Sur. Co. (2006) 139 CA4th 1251, 1268-1269, 43 CR3d 669, 680-681—where property owner sued its tenants for indemnification of response costs incurred pursuant to Water Quality Control Board order and tenants asserted affirmative defense of setoff against owner, tenants' claim was "purely defensive" and not "functional equivalent" of suit for damages that would trigger duty to defend]

5) [5:268.4] Compare—insurer's option to intervene before "suit": Even though there is no duty to defend, insurers have discretion to investigate and settle prelawsuit claims. Insurers often find it in their interest to assist their insureds in administrative proceedings that could lead to an award of damages in subsequent civil proceedings that they will ultimately have to indemnify. [Foster-Gardner, Inc. v. National Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh, Pa. (1998) 18 C4th 857, 883-884, 77 CR2d 107, 125]

[5:268.4a] Reserved.

(b) [5:268.4b] Triggered by *potential coverage: The insurer's duty to defend is broader than its duty to indemnify. An insurer may have a duty to defend under a CGL policy even when it ultimately has no obligation to indemnify (either because no damages are awarded in the underlying action against the insured or because the judgment is for damages not covered by the policy). [Montrose Chemical Corp. of Calif. v. Sup.Ct. (Canadian Universal Ins. Co., Inc.) (1993) 6 C4th 287, 295, 24 CR2d 467, 471; Scottsdale Ins. Co. v. MV Transp. (2005) 36 C4th 643, 654, 31 CR3d 147, 153]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

The insurer's duty to defend is triggered when a third party suit alleges a claim that potentially or even possibly could subject the insured to liability for covered damages. In such cases, the insurer must defend "unless and until the insurer can demonstrate, by reference to 'undisputed facts' that the claim cannot be covered." [Vann v. Travelers Cos. (1995) 39 CA4th 1610, 1614, 46 CR2d 617, 619 (emphasis added); see Montrose Chemical Corp. of Calif. v. Sup.Ct. (Canadian Universal Ins. Co., Inc.), supra, 6 C4th at 295, 24 CR2d at 471—duty to defend "may exist even where coverage is in doubt and ultimately does not develop"; Scottsdale Ins. Co. v. MV Transp., supra, 36 C4th at 655, 31 CR3d at 154]

To defeat the insurer's duty to defend, the evidence (whether based on facts alleged in the underlying third party complaint or on undisputed extrinsic facts known to the insurer at the time of tender) must "conclusively eliminate a potential for [covered] liability." [Wausau Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Unigard Security Ins. Co. (1998) 68 CA4th 1030, 1037, 80 CR2d 688, 692 (emphasis and brackets in original; internal quotes omitted); see Scottsdale Ins. Co. v. MV Transp., supra, 36 C4th at 655, 31 CR3d at 154]

1) [5:268.4c] Burden of proof? It is not clear who bears the burden of proof on the issue. Most courts place the initial burden on the insured to establish the existence of potential coverage; the burden then shifts to the insurer to establish that the underlying claim cannot fall within policy coverage. [Montrose Chemical Corp. of Calif. v. Sup.Ct. (Canadian Universal Ins. Co., Inc.) (1993) 6 C4th 287, 300, 24 CR2d 467, 475; Wausau Underwriters Ins. Co. v. Unigard Security Ins. Co. (1998) 68 CA4th 1030, 1037, 80 CR2d 688, 692; but see also Aydin Corp. v. First State Ins. Co. (1998) 18 C4th 1183, 1194, 77 CR2d 537, 543, fn. 6—expressly declining to express opinion on which party should bear burden of proof]

(c) [5:268.5] "Mixed claim" cases: In "mixed claim" cases where one or some of the claims are potentially covered and others are not, the insurer nevertheless has a duty to defend the entire action—including those claims for which there is no potential policy coverage. [Buss v. Sup.Ct. (Transamerica Ins. Co.) (1997) 16 C4th 35, 48, 65 CR2d 366, 375]

It is enough that a single claim is potentially covered; the insurer owes a duty to defend even if all other claims against the insured clearly are not covered. This is not a contractual duty (because the insured has not paid premiums for a defense of claims not even potentially covered) but an obligation implied by law in support of the policy (a "prophylactic rule") … because "to defend meaningfully, [the insurer] must defend immediately, and to defend immediately, it must defend entirely." [Buss v. Sup.Ct. (Transamerica Ins. Co.), supra, 16 C4th at 48, 65 CR2d at 375; see also Aerojet-General Corp. v. Transport Indem. Co. (1997) 17 C4th 38, 59-60, 70 CR2d 118, 130-131]

1) [5:268.6] Costs of defending noncovered claim reimbursable from insured: Because it has no contractual duty to defend noncovered claims (as distinct from its "prophylactic" duty "implied in law," ¶ 5:268.5), the insurer's defense costs attributable exclusively to claims not even potentially covered by the policy properly can be allocated to the insured (provided the insurer "reserved its rights" when it accepted defense of the third party claim). But the burden of proof is on the insurer to show (by a preponderance of the evidence) that the specific defense costs sought to be reimbursed can be allocated solely to the claims that are not even potentially covered. [Buss v. Sup.Ct. (Transamerica Ins. Co.) (1997) 16 C4th 35, 50-53, 65 CR2d 366, 376-378; Aerojet-General Corp. v. Transport Indem. Co. (1997) 17 C4th 38, 69, 70 CR2d 118, 137]

Cross-refer: The scope of an insurer's duty to defend, along with the rights and obligations incident thereto, is an exceedingly complex area of the law. For a comprehensive treatment of the subject, see Croskey, Heeseman, Ehrlich & Klee, Cal. Prac. Guide: Insurance Litigation (TRG), Ch. 7B.

b. [5:270] Limited title insurance coverage: Title insurance companies will not insure against the existence of hazardous materials. However, a buyer can obtain an endorsement to its title policy, insuring that there are no liens or notices of record that disclose the existence of hazardous materials (or that disclose claims or violations regarding environmental conditions). (See ¶ 3:89 ff.)

Nonetheless, such an endorsement provides little protection for buyers because it simply insures the state of title, not the physical environmental condition of the property.

[5:271 - 5:279] Reserved.

c. [5:280] Other types of coverage: New forms of environmental insurance are becoming increasingly available. For example:

- Property transfer liability insurance provides coverage for the cost of cleaning up existing hazardous substances not discovered by the consultant who conducted the environmental site assessment.

- Pollution legal liability insurance provides coverage for third party bodily injury or property damage caused by environmental conditions created from ongoing business operations.

- Other forms of environmental insurance include asbestos abatement coverage; above ground storage tank coverage; underground storage tank liability and cleanup coverage; directors and officers environmental liability coverage; and environmental professional liability coverage.

Chapter 6. Financing and Appraisals

A. Introduction and Role of Counsel in Financing Transactions

- 1. [6:1] Scope Overview
  - a. [6:3] Financing despite “all-cash” transaction
  - b. [6:4] Seller-related financing issues
- 2. Counsel's Role
  - a. [6:5] Factors affecting counsel's role
    - (1) [6:6] Type of property
    - (2) [6:7] Seller financing
  - b. [6:8] Procuring financing
  - c. [6:9] Overseeing loan application and processing of loan approval
  - d. [6:10] Negotiating terms of loan and reviewing loan documents
  - e. [6:11] Resolving title insurance matters
  - f. [6:12] Borrower's counsel's opinion letter
  - g. [6:13] Mortgage broker's fees

1. [6:1] Scope Overview: Buyers rarely purchase real property without concurrently procuring a loan, secured by the acquired property, to fund most of the purchase price. The structure, negotiation and documentation of a real property secured loan is therefore an integral part of the purchase and sale process.

➪ [6:2] PRACTICE POINTER: This Chapter discusses real property secured financing from the perspective of counsel's role in negotiating, reviewing and documenting various instruments evidencing loans obtained in purchase and sale transactions. The subject of secured real property financing is vast and includes a broad range of issues not covered in this Practice Guide. General practitioners new to the subject are well-advised to associate or consult with appropriate experts before launching too deeply into financing transactions.

a. [6:3] Financing despite “all-cash” transaction: Many purchase and sale matters are commonly referred to as “all-cash” transactions; but this does not necessarily mean the buyer is not procuring a loan. The term “all cash” is used generically to refer to the fact the seller will be “cashed out.” In other words, “all cash” often simply means the total purchase price will be paid to the seller in cash at the closing (as opposed to the seller taking back a promissory note for part of the purchase price).

b. [6:4] Seller-related financing issues: Buyer's counsel typically deals with financing issues; however, seller's counsel often has an agenda of financing issues as well. For example:

- The seller usually must make arrangements to pay off its existing loan concurrent with the closing. This entails such things as arranging for reconveyance of the deed of trust, return of the original promissory note and deed of trust to the seller and, sometimes, payment to the lender of a prepayment charge (¶ 6:250 ff.).

- In addition, if the seller accepts a portion of the purchase price in the form of a loan to the buyer (i.e., seller financing), seller's counsel will usually be responsible for documenting that loan.

- Other seller-related financing issues arise if the buyer wants to take over the seller's existing financing (see ¶ 6:310 ff.).

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

2. Counsel's Role

a. [6:5] Factors affecting counsel's role: As with other aspects of a purchase and sale transaction, counsel's role in connection with financing will be determined by such things as the client's level of sophistication, the complexity and type of loan, cost considerations, timing issues, etc.

(1) [6:6] Type of property: Perhaps the most important factor in determining counsel's involvement with financing is the kind of property involved. For example, in single family residence transactions financed by institutional lenders, the loan application process is fairly straightforward, and the loan documentation is standard and generally nonnegotiable. Consequently, in such transactions, counsel will at best be only minimally involved in the financing process.

By contrast, counsel's role tends to broaden in multifamily or commercial loan transactions and as the financing becomes more complex.

(2) [6:7] Seller financing: The role of counsel (for both buyer and seller) is most intensive in a seller-financed transaction. Here, the parties have relatively equal bargaining strength, more issues are susceptible to negotiation, and the documentation is not precast in the lender's standard, nonnegotiable, preprinted form.

b. [6:8] Procuring financing: Procuring financing—and certainly procuring the "best" financing—is a time-consuming process. It is rarely a process that should be handled by counsel.

If an attorney billing at an hourly rate handles this task, obtaining a loan becomes inordinately expensive. Equally important, however, is the fact lawyers are generally not the most qualified people to procure loans. Lawyers generally do not keep current on rapidly-changing interest rate fluctuations; they do not necessarily maintain strong, ongoing relationships with lenders; and they are usually not up to date on the latest changes in lending practices.

In most cases, the buyer either procures financing itself, uses the services of its real estate broker, or employs a professional loan broker (see ¶ 6:160 ff.).

c. [6:9] Overseeing loan application and processing of loan approval: Counsel frequently needs to assist the borrower in garnering and organizing appropriate information for the loan application (appraisals, financial information, purchase agreements, title documents, leases, estoppel certificates, escrow instructions, etc.). Thereafter, counsel may need to review the loan commitment (if one is to be issued); assist the buyer in satisfying prefunding conditions of the loan; review title and negotiate title endorsements; and coordinate with the lender and the escrow officer so that the loan is funded concurrently with the closing of the purchase and sale.

d. [6:10] Negotiating terms of loan and reviewing loan documents: Once a prospective lender is designated, counsel might become involved in negotiating economic and other material terms of the loan and reviewing and negotiating the loan documents. As a practical matter, however, the role of borrower's counsel in negotiating loan documentation is often quite limited; this is chiefly because institutional lenders are extremely reluctant to modify their standard form loan documents.

➪ [6:10.1] PRACTICE POINTER: While there is little room to negotiate residential loan documents, lenders often will negotiate certain provisions in commercial loan documents (e.g., financial covenants).

e. [6:11] Resolving title insurance matters: Because lenders invariably require a lender's policy of title insurance (see Ch. 3), title issues need to be addressed by the buyer.

Although the condition of title to the property might be acceptable to the buyer, it might not be acceptable to a third party lender. Institutional lenders in particular are quite conservative about title matters; buyer's counsel is therefore cautioned to consider a lender's concerns when reviewing the state of title.

(For example, a buyer might not be concerned about an easement over the property running in favor of an adjoining landowner; but the easement may be the stumbling block to a lender's willingness to finance the purchase.)

f. [6:12] Borrower's counsel's opinion letter: In certain commercial property loan transactions, borrower's counsel is called upon to render a formal legal opinion concerning various matters pertaining to the borrower, the property, the loan transaction and the loan documents. This subject is covered in detail in Ch. 9. By way of summary, borrower's counsel's opinion letter may cover such issues as:

• the lawful existence and good standing of the borrowing entity;

- the authority of the parties signing the loan documents to bind the borrower;
- the absence of any legal proceedings involving the borrower which might adversely affect the property or the borrower's ability to pay the loan;
- the absence of any contract, law or regulation by which the borrower is bound that would preclude the borrower from entering into or satisfying the loan;
- the validity and enforceability of the loan documents;
- the loan not being usurious; and
- the property's compliance with various environmental, zoning and other pertinent land use laws.

g. [6:13] Mortgage broker's fees: In the more sophisticated and sizable loan transactions, a buyer might retain the services of a professional loan broker. The loan broker is usually paid a fee based on a percentage of the amount of the loan. The relationship between the property owner and the loan broker is—or at least should be—reflected in a written agreement. The negotiation, preparation or revision of the loan broker's contract might therefore be one of the functions of buyer's counsel. (See ¶ 6:160 ff.; and Form 6:E.)

1. [6:20] General Financing Sources: Financing may be obtained in any of the following ways:

a. [6:21] Third-party financing: In a third-party financing transaction, the buyer procures its loan from a third party (typically, but not necessarily, an institutional lender).

(1) [6:22] "Institutional" vs. "private" lenders: The term "institutional lender" refers to an entity such as a bank, savings and loan association, insurance company, large pension fund, real estate investment trust, or the like which regularly engages in the business of making real property secured loans. These lenders are distinguished from "private lenders" who are not regularly in the lending business.

(2) [6:22.1] Government loans and grants: Occasionally, real property purchases are funded by government loans and grants. Given the gravity and persistence of California's affordable housing crisis, legislation seeking to direct both federal and state aid to affordable housing providers has been and continues to be enacted. While a full treatment of all current housing support laws is beyond the scope of this Practice Guide, a few examples follow:

(a) [6:22.2] Cal-Vet Program: California veterans are eligible for low-interest, long-term loans through the Department of Veterans Affairs' "Cal-Vet" program. [See Mil. & Vet.C. § 987.50 et seq.; and ¶ 6:337.4 ff.]

(b) [6:22.3] California Homebuyer's Downpayment Assistance Program: Low-income, first-time homebuyers are eligible for downpayment assistance in the form of deferred-payment, low-interest, junior mortgage loans. [See Health & Saf.C. § 51500 et seq.]

(c) [6:22.4] Department of Housing and Community Development programs: The 2012 reorganization of state government created the Department of Housing and Community Development (HCD) as part of the Business Consumer Services and Housing Agency (Health & Saf.C. § 50400 (added Stats. 2012, Ch. 147). HCD has broad powers to administer both federal and state housing programs that provide loans and grants to create rental and homeownership opportunities. [Health & Saf.C. § 56406; see also the HCD website at hcd.ca.gov (listing active programs and available funding opportunities)]

The 2022 legislative session enhanced HCD's powers and responsibilities in order to accelerate funding of affordable housing programs (¶ 6:22.5 ff.).

1) [6:22.5] Facilitating access to federal grants: Among HCD's responsibilities is the administration of federal grants for purposes of funding the acquisition of property to develop or preserve affordable housing. In order to accelerate the process, HCD has the power to publish notice of funding opportunities and application deadlines ahead of, and contingent upon, the availability of funding. [Health & Saf.C. § 50406.9]

HCD may disburse awards up-front, rather than as reimbursements, so long as the recipients meet federal standards for financial administration and HCD provides ongoing monitoring. Moreover, HCD may furnish technical assistance to applicants in meeting program requirements. [See Health & Saf.C. § 50406.9]

2) [6:22.6] Online tracking: HCD's website (hcd.ca.gov) is required to feature a tracking system for all programs it administers that shows the deadlines for each step of a program application. [Health & Saf.C. § 50461; see also Gov.C. §§ 7061.1-7061.2 (1/1/33 "sunset" date)]

3) [6:22.7] Encouraging "adaptive reuse" of property: Retrofitting and repurposing existing buildings to create new residential units (so-called "adaptive reuse") is an activity eligible for state loan programs that fund development of affordable multi-family homes for rent or ownership. [Health & Saf.C. § 50467]

4) [6:22.8] CalHome Program: First introduced in 2000, the CalHome Program supports existing programs aimed at lower and very low income households. Its purpose is to increase home ownership, encourage neighborhood revitalization and sustainable development, and maximize use of existing homes (Health & Saf.C. § 50650 et seq.). Under the CalHome Program, HCD makes grants and loans to local public agencies and nonprofit corporations for specified purposes, including the construction of home ownership units. [Health & Saf.C. § 50650.3]

Commencing January 1, 2024, units within home ownership development projects that are receiving CalHome funds must be initially sold to and occupied by lower income households. In addition, the units must be subjected to a recorded covenant with a term of at least 30 years' duration that includes one or more resale restrictions (e.g., recapture of the CalHome funds or equity sharing upon resale). [Health & Saf.C. § 50650.3(c)(3) (amended Stats. 2023, Ch. 746; eff. 1/1/24)]

(d) [6:22.16] Local Tenant Preferences to Prevent Displacement Act: The Legislature has articulated a state policy of providing affordable housing opportunities to lower income individuals residing in areas facing displacement pressures and gentrification. This statutory declaration enables recipients of federal low-income housing tax credits and tax-exempt bonds to favor local tenants at risk of displacement, without jeopardizing the recipients' favorable tax treatment. [Gov.C. § 7061 et seq. (2033 "sunset" date)]

The above Act requires disclosure of local tenant preference policies, coordinated through the HCD (¶ 6:22.4). Thus, local governments adopting a tenant preference policy must, no later than 90 days after the ordinance's operational date, post the ordinance and supporting materials on its website. And every year the local government must provide HCD with a current link to that website. In turn, HCD must post a list of jurisdictions with tenant preference policies on its website. [Gov.C. §§ 7061.1, 7061.2 (1/1/33 "sunset" date)]

b. [6:23] Seller financing: "Seller financing" occurs when the seller takes a portion (or, conceivably, all) of the purchase price in the form of a loan to the buyer, which is secured by the property being sold. Seller financing is sometimes called "purchase money financing" (see ¶ 6:564).

(1) [6:24] Secured note or land sale contract: Seller financing typically takes the form of a promissory note secured by a deed of trust encumbering the property sold. But a "land sale contract" is also a form of seller financing (see ¶ 4:112 ff.).

c. [6:25] Existing financing: The buyer may elect to take over an existing loan encumbering the property by either (1) purchasing the property "subject to" the existing loan; or (2) specifically "assuming" the existing loan.

(1) [6:26] "Assumption" vs. taking "subject to": There is a significant distinction between the concepts of taking "subject to" an existing loan and "assuming" an existing loan:

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(a) [6:27] "Assumption" of existing loan: Assumption of an existing loan occurs when the buyer executes a specific written agreement with the lender pursuant to which the buyer "assumes" the original borrower's obligation under the loan and becomes directly and contractually obligated to the lender.

(b) [6:28] Taking "subject to" existing loan: If the buyer does not execute such an assumption agreement but simply acquires title to the property, the buyer is said to have taken the property "subject to" the existing loan. Although the buyer continues to make payments on the loan, the buyer is not, and does not become, legally obligated to make payments on that loan.

(2) [6:29] Different rights and obligations: The rights and obligations of the lender, the original borrower and the new buyer vary greatly depending upon whether the buyer assumes or takes subject to the existing loan. Indeed, sometimes a buyer's purchase of property without specifically assuming an existing loan constitutes a default under the loan, permitting the lender to accelerate the loan and foreclose. (See ¶ 6:388 ff. regarding "due-on-sale" provisions.)

d. [6:30] Combination financing: Some financing transactions are a combination of the alternatives set forth at ¶ 6:20 ff.; e.g., a portion of the purchase price comes from a third party loan and another portion is supplied by seller financing.

➪ [6:31] PRACTICE POINTER: Given the cost of California real estate, home buyers often rely on family assistance when purchasing property. As a result, the potential tax consequences of such arrangements should be taken into account. For example, if a family lender accepts below-market interest on a loan, there may be gift or imputed interest implications. In fact, when a related-party loan is part of the transaction, prudence dictates obtaining tax advice from an expert, documenting the loan and setting an "arms-length" interest rate.

[6:32 - 6:34] Reserved.

2. [6:35] Types of Real Property Secured Loans: Buyers can choose from many kinds of secured real property loans. (Indeed, creativity in real property financing is virtually unlimited.) The structure of financing varies dramatically from lender to lender. The process is further complicated by the fact that a variety of names are used in the industry to describe similar, if not identical, loans.

The sections set forth at ¶ 6:36 ff. discuss the general features of standard real property loans, reflecting the popular terminology and salient terms.

a. [6:36] Short-term vs. long-term loans: Real property secured loans generally are said to be either "short-term" or "long-term," depending on the duration of the term. However, "short-term" and "long-term" are not legal words of art (such terminology is almost never used in loan documentation) and lenders often disagree as to whether a particular term is considered "short-term" or "long-term."

(1) [6:37] Short-term loans: Short-term loans generally mature and become due within approximately three years. They are usually for a specified purpose, such as a construction loan.

Short-term loans made for a specific purpose preclude the borrower from using the loan proceeds for anything other than the stated purpose. The lender usually retains control over when, and for what purpose, the loan proceeds are to be disbursed.

(2) [6:38] Long-term loans: A long-term loan (sometimes called a "permanent loan") usually involves a term of 15 years or longer. Nevertheless, some lenders refer to a seven-year term as a long-term (permanent) loan.

(3) [6:39] Mini-perm loans: Loans having a term somewhere between a short term and long term are sometimes called "mini-permanent" (or "mini-perm") loans. Mini-perm loans are often construction loans combined with fairly short-term "permanent" financing. Under this arrangement, once the construction phase of the loan is completed, the interest rate might be adjusted and the borrower might then be required to make periodic payments of principal and interest. The loan would then mature somewhere in the range of, perhaps, five years later.

b. [6:40] "Take-out" financing: "Take-out" financing is a colloquial term used to refer to a loan that pays off and, to that extent, replaces an existing loan. The second loan is thus said to "take-out" the prior loan. Short-term loans are therefore taken out (and replaced by) longer-term loans.

Sometimes, take-out financing is arranged concurrent with a short-term loan. This most often occurs in connection with construction loans. Under this arrangement, a lender makes a short-term construction loan and either the same or a different lender concurrently agrees to provide a longer-term take-out loan that will pay off the construction loan after completion of construction.

(1) [6:41] Excess amount: Take-out financing is sometimes in an amount in excess of the prior loan, so that the owner is both able to pay off the existing loan and to pull out some of its equity in the property.

c. [6:42] "Gap" and "bridge" loans: These are popular (nonlegal) terms commonly used to describe certain kinds of short-term loans. The purpose of a "bridge" or "gap" loan is to provide financing in the interim period during which one loan becomes due and long-term, permanent financing becomes available. Thus, bridge or gap loans might be used to take-out a construction loan during the time the borrower seeks permanent financing.

d. [6:43] Development and construction loans: Development and construction loans are typically obtained by developers at the time (or shortly after) they acquire title to property. The purpose of the loan is to finance the cost of developing the property and constructing improvements.

(1) [6:44] "Development" vs. "construction" loan: Although development and construction loans are discussed at ¶ 6:44.1 ff. as if they were one loan, they are sometimes broken into two entirely different loans.

• [6:44.1] A "development loan" (or that portion of a "development and construction loan" allocated to development costs, but not construction costs) funds the cost of such things as subdivision of the property and obtaining various other zoning permits and so-called "entitlements." A developer who does not intend to construct improvements, but merely plans to sell the property after obtaining such development permits and entitlements, would only obtain a development loan.

• [6:44.2] On the other hand, a developer who wants to improve the property will obtain a construction loan (sometimes called a "building loan") to fund the actual cost of constructing improvements. Developers sometimes purchase property with permits and entitlements already in place (or which requires little in the way of permits and entitlements), in which case only a pure construction loan is necessary.

• [6:44.3] If both development and construction is intended, the loan is usually a combination development and construction loan.

FORM: Construction Loan Agreement, see Form 6:A.

(2) [6:45] Acquisition portion of development and construction loan: A developer sometimes combines its development and construction loan with an "acquisition" loan at the time it purchases the property. The "acquisition" portion of the loan funds a portion of the purchase price and the balance of the loan funds development and construction costs.

(3) [6:46] Take-out financing: A development and construction loan sometimes is tied to take-out financing (either from the same or a different lender). Under this arrangement, a lender agrees to provide long-term financing that pays off and "takes out" the development and construction loan (see ¶ 6:40 ff.).

➪ [6:47] PRACTICE POINTER: Many lenders require, as a condition to making a development and construction loan, that the borrower obtain a commitment for take-out financing. The reason is that the borrower will not necessarily have any income from the property upon completion of construction and the lender wants to make certain a source of financing is in place to pay off the construction loan.

(4) [6:48] Term: The term of a development and construction loan is tied to the amount of time anticipated to complete the development and construction work. The loan term is thus determined by the magnitude of the project.

(5) [6:49] Development costs: A development loan (or the development portion of a development and construction loan) finances the cost of subdividing the property and obtaining zoning permits and other "entitlements" for property development. It therefore funds such things as engineering and other professional fees, governmental permit application fees, and the cost of certain physical development of the property.

(For example, as a condition to obtaining entitlements and permits, governmental entities may require that the developer perform certain on-site (and sometimes off-site) work on the property. Such work might include grading of the property, construction of sewers, sidewalks and streets, making various utility services available to the property, installing street lights and landscaping, etc.)

(6) [6:50] Construction costs: A construction loan (or the construction portion of a development and construction loan) funds the costs of actually completing the improvements. However, there are two different kinds of construction costs: so-called "soft costs" and "hard costs." (Neither of these is a legal term because their definitions vary somewhat among members of the lending community.)

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(a) [6:51] “Hard costs”: “Hard costs” generally refer to that portion of construction costs involving the physical building of the structures—i.e., labor and materials (such as lumber, bricks, windows, etc.).

(b) [6:52] “Soft costs”: “Soft costs” generally refer to the cost of such things as building permit fees, architect fees, designer fees, legal fees, loan fees, interest, certain overhead and administration costs allocable to the project, etc.

(7) [6:53] Borrower's budget: One of the prerequisites to obtaining a development and construction loan is the lender's approval of the borrower's budget for development and construction costs. On the approved budget, each portion of the development and construction work is assigned a specific amount (e.g., so many dollars for grading, so much for permit fees, so much for drywalling, carpeting, etc.).

Each so-called “line item” of work has a corresponding maximum amount allocable to it and the lender generally will not fund any one line item in excess of its stated maximum amount. (Sometimes, a lender will permit the borrower to apply a savings in one line item to a cost overrun in another line item. Additionally, there is typically a line item amount allocable to a “contingency,” which may be applied toward unanticipated expenses and cost overruns.)

Budgets frequently contain a line item allocable to the borrower's own overhead and so-called project supervision costs. The developer is thereby able to borrow money to pay itself (or perhaps a related entity) a fee for development and construction of the project.

(8) [6:54] Periodic disbursements: A development and construction loan is disbursed by the lender periodically in varying amounts as and when the borrower needs the funds (but in accordance with the preapproved budget, ¶ 6:53).

(a) [6:55] Conditions: Various conditions must be satisfied before the lender makes each disbursement of loan proceeds. For example:

- The lender must be satisfied that the work to which the disbursement applies has actually been completed;
- Development of the project must be proceeding on schedule;
- The lender must receive mechanic's lien releases and appropriate endorsements to its lender's title insurance policy (insuring that the lien of its deed of trust remains senior to any mechanic's lien claimants); and
- The borrower must not be in default under the loan.

Typically, lenders require borrowers to submit a borrowing certificate attesting to the satisfaction of these conditions as a prerequisite to disbursement.

(9) [6:56] Interest reserve: Development and construction loan borrowers have no income from the property until after improvements have been constructed and the property is leased or sold; consequently, during the term of the loan, the borrower has no source of income from the property with which to make periodic interest payments. Development and construction loans are therefore structured to create an “interest reserve.” From this interest reserve, the lender pays itself interest by disbursing loan funds for the borrower's account.

(a) [6:57] Example: Assume a borrower's intended actual construction cost—for both hard and soft costs, but exclusive of interest—is $1,000,000. The loan will have a term of one year at a fixed 10% interest rate. Because interest will accrue on the loan during its term, the borrower (unless it is willing to make interest payments out of its own pocket) will need to borrow a loan amount in excess of the $1,000,000 in construction costs. However, determining the precise amount of interest that will actually accrue during the term of the construction loan is not easy, because the loan will be disbursed in periodic installments (usually monthly) in varying amounts.

Some lenders determine the amount of interest reserve simply by assuming an average outstanding balance during the loan term equal to a certain percentage (such as 60%) of the total estimated construction costs. Therefore, under the foregoing example, the interest reserve would be based upon 10% (the interest rate) multiplied by $600,000 (60% of the $1,000,000 construction costs), for a total interest reserve of $60,000. (That $60,000 would be added to the $1,000,000 construction costs, for a total loan amount of $1,060,000.)

However, remember that an interest reserve is simply an estimate of the interest charges; the actual amount of accrued interest will almost certainly be different from the estimate.

(10) [6:58] Land draws: If the developer already owns the land and has equity in it, a lender may be willing to lend an amount in excess of the development and construction costs. In those situations, the loan includes a line item for a so-called

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

"land draw." (Conceptually, this is no different than if the borrower obtains an acquisition, development and construction loan at the time it purchases the property. Under those circumstances, the acquisition portion of the loan is, in essence, the land draw.)

(11) [6:59] Lender's security for development and construction loans: In addition to the usual real property security that a lender requires for a long-term loan, a construction lender will also require a security interest in such things as the borrower's construction contract with the general contractor, the architect's agreement, any contracts with engineers, and all drawings, plans and specifications for the project. Therefore, if the lender is compelled to foreclose on the real property, it can also foreclose on the borrower's rights under the other secured instruments (which constitute personal property). (See ¶ 6:490 ff. re personal property security agreements.)

e. [6:60] Participation/contingent interest loans: In certain financing transactions, a lender might require (in addition to interest on the principal amount of the loan) a participating (or "contingent") interest in the property or its income. Such loans go by a variety of names, including "participation loans," "contingent interest loans," "shared appreciation loans" or "additional interest loans." The "additional" interest to be paid to the lender (above and beyond a per annum percentage interest rate due on the principal amount of the loan) is contingent because there may or may not be profits from the property in which the lender can share. [See River Bank America v. Diller (1995) 38 CA4th 1400, 1407, 45 CR2d 790, 792, fn. 3]

Under these loans, the lender is typically entitled to interest on the principal amount at a given percentage rate irrespective of the borrower's profits from the property. Thus, the lender does not share in any losses concerning the property.

(1) [6:61] Generally, two forms: The lender's so-called participating/additional/contingent interest usually takes one or both of the following forms:

(a) [6:62] Interest in income stream: Under this form of contingent interest loan, the lender is entitled to a percentage of the income generated from the property (calculated on either a net or gross income basis). Sometimes, this is a percentage of the rental income and sometimes it is a percentage of the profits generated from the business conducted by the borrower on the property (e.g., the operation of a hotel, a nursing home, etc.).

Under some contingent interest loans, the borrower must reach a threshold level of profitability and the lender can only participate in a portion of the profits above that threshold amount. For example, the lender might only be entitled to share in a percentage of the income that exceeds a specific designated amount; or the lender might only be entitled to share in a percentage of annual profits that exceed the amount of annual profits the borrower generated for a base (comparison) year. (Under the latter arrangement, the year prior to the making of the loan is usually the comparison year.)

(b) [6:63] Interest in profits upon sale of property: Under this arrangement, the lender is entitled to a portion of the profits the borrower receives upon a sale (or leasing) of the property. This is sometimes called an "equity participation loan" because the lender participates in the borrower's equity in the project (as distinguished from an interest in the income stream from the property). [See River Bank America v. Diller (1995) 38 CA4th 1400, 1407, 45 CR2d 790, 792, fn. 3 ("participating construction loans")]

Here again, there might be a threshold level of profitability that the borrower must reach before the lender is entitled to participate in anything above the stipulated threshold amount. For example, if a borrower purchases the property for $1,000,000, the lender might be entitled to 20% of the net sale proceeds which exceed $1,100,000. (The formula might change periodically during the term of the loan so that, e.g., the lender is entitled to receive a different percentage the later in time the property is sold; or, the lender's percentage of the profits might vary as the amount of net proceeds increases.)

Also, the borrower is sometimes required to obtain the lender's approval of any proposed sale of the property.

1) [6:63.1] Effect of property rapidly appreciating in value: Arguably, a "shared appreciation loan" made to finance the purchase of property that rapidly appreciates in value immediately after the loan is made is a "sham" because the lender's receipt of the "contingent interest" is in effect guaranteed. However, because such a loan typically does not allow the lender to force an immediate sale in order to lock in the contingent interest before the property value declines, the lender's contingent interest is always at risk. [See Jones v. Wells Fargo Bank (2003) 112 CA4th 1527, 1538-1539, 5 CR3d 835, 843-844]

(2) Statutory provisions regarding "shared appreciation loans"

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(a) [6:64] Defined: Contingent interest loans discussed at ¶ 6:60 ff. fall within the statutory definition of "shared appreciation loans" (Civ.C. § 1917(b)). However, a "shared appreciation loan" does not include a loan secured by property containing one to four residential units (at least one of which is, or is to be, occupied by the borrower at the time the loan is made). [Civ.C. § 1917(b)]

(b) [6:65] Special rules: "Shared appreciation loans" are subject to special rules contained in Civ.C. § 1917 et seq. … including:

1) [6:66] Variable interest rate exemption: Shared appreciation loans are exempt from variable interest rate rules and limitations. [Civ.C. § 1917.002]

2) [6:67] Usury exemption: Such loans are also exempt from California usury laws. [Civ.C. § 1917.005; see ¶ 6:280 ff. for detailed discussion of California usury laws]

3) [6:68] Debtor-creditor relationship: The relationship of borrower and lender under a shared appreciation loan is that of debtor and creditor—not that of a joint venture partner (or any other kind of partner) or any other type of relationship. [Civ.C. § 1917.001]

4) [6:69] Notation on deed of trust: Any deed of trust securing a shared appreciation loan must expressly state it secures a shared appreciation loan. [Civ.C. § 1917.004(b)]

(3) [6:70] "Loan participation agreements" distinguished: Participation loans (¶ 6:60 ff.) are different from "loan participation agreements." A loan participation agreement is entirely unrelated to a contingent (or "participating") interest loan and, indeed, is not a loan.

(a) [6:71] Contractual funding relationship among several lenders ("syndicated lending"): Loan participation agreements are contracts between two or more lenders pursuant to which the "participant" purchases an interest in a loan from another lender. The selling lender is often a member of a group of financial institutions that originally funded the loan in what is commonly referred to as "syndicated lending" or a "syndication."

Syndicate members frequently engage in secondary sales of their loan interests (¶ 6:71.1).

1) [6:71.1] Participations/assignments: Participation and assignment are the usual forms employed by syndicate members to sell their loan interests. In a participation, the selling lender remains the official holder of the loan commitment. The participant is not in direct contractual privity with the borrower and does not have a direct claim on the loan. Participations usually do not require the consent of the borrower or the "lead lender" or "agent" (¶ 6:72).

In an assignment, the purchasing lender takes over the selling lender's position and obtains ownership of the loan commitment. Assignments usually require the consent of the "lead lender" or "agent" (¶ 6:72).

(b) [6:72] "Lead lender" or "agent" and "administrative agent": A syndication (¶ 6:71) usually is structured so that all members hold partial interests in the loan and are in direct contractual privity with the borrower, while only one of the committed lenders (the "lead lender" or "agent") represents the syndicate when dealing with the borrower. All members, however, have consent rights as to material changes in the loan documentation or material actions (e.g., exercising remedies). The lender who services the loan, by monitoring its performance and collecting payments, is referred to as the "administrative agent."

f. [6:73] All-inclusive ("wrap-around") loans: An all-inclusive (or "wrap-around") loan includes within it (and therefore "wraps around") existing financing encumbering the property. This kind of loan is usually (but not always) seller financed; it is used when the buyer desires to purchase the property subject to existing financing and the seller is going to take back part of the purchase price in the form of a loan secured by a junior deed of trust.

FORMS

- All-Inclusive Promissory Note, see Form 6:B.

- All-Inclusive Deed of Trust, see Form 6:C.

(1) [6:74] Not an "assumption" of existing financing: Under such an arrangement, the buyer does not actually assume the existing ("underlying") loan. Instead, the all-inclusive/wrap-around loan is drafted to reflect the total amount due on the underlying loan as well as the total amount due in respect of seller financing. The buyer makes periodic payments to the seller, who thereupon retains a portion of each such payment for the seller's own account and disburses the balance of the payment in respect of the underlying loan.

(2) [6:75] Example: Assume Seller owns property encumbered by a first trust deed loan with an outstanding principal balance of $200,000. The purchase price is $400,000, of which Buyer is willing to pay $100,000 in cash at the closing, but wishes to finance the remaining $300,000. Buyer finances the remaining $300,000 by having Seller take back an "all-inclusive promissory note" in the face amount of $300,000, secured by an "all-inclusive deed of trust" (encumbering the property sold).

The $300,000 "loan" is comprised of (a) the existing first trust deed loan in the amount of $200,000 (the "underlying loan"); plus (b) the principal amount of the new $100,000 loan actually provided by Seller. After the closing, Buyer makes periodic installment payments to Seller on the $300,000 all-inclusive promissory note and Seller in turn makes payments due on the underlying $200,000 loan.

➪ [6:76] PRACTICE POINTER: The following are significant features of all-inclusive financing:

• An all-inclusive loan can be made by anyone, not just the seller. (However, it is unusual to find a third party lender interested in making an all-inclusive loan.)

• Because the buyer does not "assume" the existing underlying loan encumbering the property (but, rather, takes the property "subject to" the underlying loan), the buyer has no contractual privity with the underlying lender.

• An all-inclusive loan can include (or "wrap") within it more than one underlying loan.

• An all-inclusive loan can include within it a prior, junior all-inclusive loan (i.e., an all-inclusive loan is sometimes put on top of another existing all-inclusive loan).

(3) [6:77] Pros and cons of all-inclusive financing: Buyers and sellers considering all-inclusive financing should evaluate the relative advantages and disadvantages:

(a) Advantages

1) [6:78] Interest rate spread: From the lender's perspective, the chief advantage of an all-inclusive loan is that the lender typically charges an interest rate in excess of the rate on the underlying loan.

[6:79] Example: Continuing the example at ¶ 6:75, if the underlying first trust deed loan (in the amount of $200,000) is at a 10% interest rate, the all-inclusive lender might charge interest at a rate of 12% on the entire face amount of the $300,000 all-inclusive loan. Therefore, the all-inclusive lender will receive 12% interest on the amount actually loaned by it ($100,000), plus an extra 2% on the underlying financing (principal amount of $200,000) (i.e., a 2% "override" or "spread" on the underlying loan rate of 10%).

During the first year of the loan, the all-inclusive lender will thus receive a total of $36,000 in interest payments on the $300,000, of which $20,000 will be paid to the underlying lender (in respect of the $200,000 underlying loan that accrues interest at 10%). The total net interest payment to the lender will be $16,000 (in respect of the lender's $100,000 loan).

Compare: If the all-inclusive lender had structured its $100,000 loan (at its 12% interest rate) as a standard second trust deed loan and allowed the buyer to pay the underlying loan directly (at an interest rate of 10% per annum), the same lender would have received only $12,000 in interest payments. However, by structuring the loan as all-inclusive financing, the lender obtains a $4,000 override/spread in the first year alone.

2) [6:80] Assurance of timely payment on underlying loan: A second advantage to the all-inclusive lender is that it can be certain payments on the underlying loan will be timely and properly made (since it makes the payment out of the buyer's payment).

a) [6:81] Compare—recorded request for notice of default or notice of delinquencies: If the all-inclusive lender simply made a standard junior trust deed loan, it could conceivably keep track of whether the borrower is current on the senior loan by recording a "request for notice of default," which requires that a senior lender notify a junior lender upon recordation of a notice of default by the senior lender. [Civ.C. § 2924b; see ¶ 6:527]

However, a lender is not required to record a notice of default at any particular time following a borrower's default. Therefore, a senior loan could be in default for several months—conceivably even years—before the senior lender actually records a notice of default. By then, the defaulted amount could be substantial.

(Some junior lenders may have a more effective remedy pursuant to Civ.C. § 2924e. That statute provides a mechanism whereby a junior lienholder can compel a senior lienholder to provide written notice of delinquencies of four months or more in connection with certain kinds of residential real estate loans.)

3) [6:82] Avoiding prepayment charges: A third (ostensible) advantage to all-inclusive financing is the avoidance of a prepayment charge on the underlying loan (or circumvention of any prohibition against prepayment of an underlying loan). (See ¶ 6:250 ff.)

However, this same goal can be reached by having the buyer purchase the property subject to the existing financing and having the seller take back a note secured by a junior deed of trust.

4) [6:83] Camouflaging violation of "due-on-sale clause": Because the seller (who is usually the original borrower on the underlying loan) continues to make the payments due on the underlying loan, an all-inclusive loan may be viewed as advantageous because it prevents the underlying lender from becoming aware the property has been sold in violation of a due-on-sale clause in the senior lender's trust deed. Under a due-on-sale clause, the underlying lender can call the loan due upon a sale of the property (see ¶ 6:388 ff.).

➪ [6:84] PRACTICE POINTER: Although the theory that all-inclusive financing disguises an impermissible sale may hold true with respect to private lenders, institutional lenders typically do not keep track of (or care) who actually makes the loan payments. Indeed, lenders typically discover property has been sold upon issuance of the new owner's hazard insurance certificate (which names the lender as a beneficiary under the policy). That insurance certificate will identify the new owner of the property. Providers of tax service contracts will also pick up a change in ownership by reason of the new owner's name appearing on a property tax bill. (A tax service contract provides the lender with notice if the borrower fails to pay real property taxes for the encumbered property.)

Thus, it is risky to assume an all-inclusive loan will effectively camouflage violation of a due-on-sale clause.

(b) Disadvantages

1) [6:85] Default on underlying loans: From the borrower's perspective, the major disadvantage of an all-inclusive loan is that the borrower bears the risk the all-inclusive lender will fail to make payments on the underlying loan. Just as a junior lender may not be aware of a default under a senior loan (¶ 6:81), a borrower will not necessarily know if the all-inclusive lender has actually made payments on the underlying loan.

If the all-inclusive lender defaults on the underlying loan and the underlying lender does not commence a foreclosure until the underlying loan has been in default for quite some time, the borrower may discover at a late date (and to its great surprise and even greater economic loss), that the underlying loan is substantially in arrears.

2) [6:86] Complications: Unless the loan documents are very carefully drafted (and, sometimes, notwithstanding careful drafting), an all-inclusive loan can be complicated for the lender, the borrower, the trustee under the all-inclusive deed of trust (who has to handle any foreclosure of the all-inclusive trust deed) and a judge. Thus, the following issues should be considered and addressed:

• [6:87] The nature and extent of the all-inclusive lender's interest in an all-inclusive loan once its equity in the loan has been paid off, which is frequently difficult to determine.

(For instance, in the example at ¶ 6:75, the loan documents should specify whether the all-inclusive lender would still be entitled to the interest spread after its $100,000 loan has been paid off.)

• [6:88] Which party is obligated to pay any prepayment penalty on the underlying loan.

• [6:89] What happens if the underlying loan is accelerated on account of violation of a due-on-sale clause.

• [6:90] What the all-inclusive lender is entitled to credit bid at a foreclosure sale.

• [6:91] How the borrower can be certain the all-inclusive lender will make payments on the underlying loan.

a) [6:92] Comment: The problems posed by these issues are intensified when all-inclusive financing is added on top of junior all-inclusive financing. In sum, straightforward junior financing (which is not all-inclusive financing) offers the tremendous advantage of simplicity in both accounting, allocation of payments and the foreclosure process. See ¶ 6:95.

(4) [6:93] Collection accounts: A collection account can be established by the all-inclusive lender and borrower so that the borrower's payments are made to an independent collection agent who thereupon disburses payments to various lenders

(i.e., the senior lender and the all-inclusive lender). In this fashion, the parties can be assured an independent party will remit the loan payments to all lenders in the respective amounts to which they are entitled.

➪ [6:94] PRACTICE POINTER: Although banks and title insurance companies historically provided this service, they have become increasingly reluctant to serve as collection agents. Attorneys should avoid providing this service since it requires continuing attention to receipt and allocation of payments, and such a role is fraught with potential liability as well as conflicts of interest. (Conflict of interest issues arise because the collection agent is agent of both parties to the collection account agreement.)

(5) [6:95] Comment—junior trust deed loan preferable: Because of the disadvantages set forth at ¶ 6:85 ff., it is the author's view that all-inclusive financing is generally not advisable and it is almost always easier and better simply to create a junior trust deed loan.

To the extent the junior lender wants to obtain the benefit of the interest spread/override, it can simply adjust the interest rate on its junior loan to a rate that will give it the same effective return as if it had provided all-inclusive financing and received an override. To the extent the junior lender is concerned the borrower will not make payments on the senior loan, it could make some arrangement to receive verification that the borrower is promptly making payments (such as receiving copies of the borrower's cancelled checks; or periodically requesting a beneficiary statement from the senior lender, see ¶ 6:418).

[6:96] Reserved.

g. [6:97] Reverse mortgage loan; statutory regulation: "Reverse mortgage loans" are not commonly used in purchase and sale transactions. Rather, this type of financing is most often extended to residential property owners (typically, elderly homeowners) looking for a way to obtain an income stream out of the equity or built-up value of their homes. A reverse mortgage loan relies principally on the value of the borrower's home (the secured property) for repayment (the borrower does not make monthly payments but instead receives monthly payments from the lender). Thus, at some point down the line (usually when the home is sold, the borrower moves away or the borrower dies), the "payoff" on the loan is likely to be a transfer of title to the lender. [See Black v. Financial Freedom Senior Funding Corp. (2001) 92 CA4th 917, 921-922, 112 CR2d 445, 449]

Reverse mortgage loans on a borrower-occupied principal residence, executed on or after January 1, 1998, are subject to California statutory regulation. [Civ.C. § 1923 et seq.; see Civ.C. § 1923.10 (statutory scheme inapplicable to pre-1998 loans)]

(Reverse mortgage loans are also regulated by federal law, mandating various disclosures to assist consumers in evaluating the cost of this type of financing. The federal regulations, not addressed at ¶ 6:97.1 ff., are part of the Truth in Lending Act (15 USC § 1601 et seq.), as implemented by Regulation Z (12 CFR Part 226). The disclosure requirements can be found at 15 USC § 1648 and 12 CFR § 226.33.)

(1) [6:97.1] "Reverse mortgages" subject to statutory regulation: For purposes of Civ.C. § 1923 et seq., a "reverse mortgage" is a nonrecourse loan secured by real property (¶ 6:402) that meets all of the following criteria (Civ.C. § 1923):

- The loan provides cash advances to the borrower based on the equity or value in the borrower's owner-occupied principal residence (Civ.C. § 1923(a));

- The loan requires no payment of principal or interest until the entire loan becomes due and payable (Civ.C. § 1923(b)); and

- The loan is made by a lender "licensed or chartered" pursuant to California or federal law (Civ.C. § 1923(c)).

(a) [6:97.2] "Owner-occupied" where title held in trust: A property is deemed "owner-occupied" within the meaning of Civ.C. § 1923 et seq. even though title is held in trust, so long as the occupant is a beneficiary of the trust. [Civ.C. § 1923.4]

(2) [6:98] Statutory requirements concerning reverse mortgage loans: A reverse mortgage loan (as defined at ¶ 6:97 ff.) must comply with all of the following requirements (Civ.C. § 1923.2):

(a) [6:98.1] No prepayment penalty: The borrower must be allowed to prepay the loan, in whole or in part, without penalty any time during the term of the loan. [Civ.C. § 1923.2(a)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

But the borrower remains liable for fees, payments or other charges that otherwise would have been due upon the reverse mortgage being due and payable; i.e., these amounts are not a "prepayment penalty" within the meaning of § 1923.2(a). [Civ.C. § 1923.2(a)]

(b) [6:98.2] Fixed or adjustable interest: A reverse mortgage loan may provide for a fixed or adjustable interest rate, or combination thereof, including compound interest; and may also provide for interest contingent on the value of the property upon execution of the loan or at maturity, or on changes in value between closing and maturity. [Civ.C. § 1923.2(b)]

(c) [6:98.3] Lender's fees/costs: A reverse mortgage loan may include costs and fees charged by the lender (or lender's "designee, originator, or servicer"), including costs and fees charged upon execution of the loan, on a periodic basis, or upon maturity. [Civ.C. § 1923.2(c)]

(d) [6:98.4] Periodic advances not affected by interest adjustments: Periodic advances to the borrower under the loan cannot be reduced in amount or number based on interest rate adjustments. [Civ.C. § 1923.2(d)]

(e) [6:98.5] Lender's treble damages liability: A lender who fails to make loan advances as required by the loan documents, and fails to cure an actual default after notice as specified in the loan documents, "shall forfeit to the borrower treble the amount wrongfully withheld plus interest at the legal rate." [Civ.C. § 1923.2(e)]

(f) [6:98.6] Events triggering maturity: A reverse mortgage loan may become due and payable upon the occurrence of any of the following events (Civ.C. § 1923.2(f)):

- A sale of or other transfer of title to the home securing the loan (Civ.C. § 1923.2(f)(1));
- All borrowers cease occupying the home as a principal residence, except as provided in Civ.C. § 1923.2(g) (¶ 6:98.8) (Civ.C. § 1923.2(f)(2));
- The occurrence of any fixed maturity date agreed to by lender and borrower (Civ.C. § 1923.2(f)(3)); or
- The occurrence of any event specified in the loan documents that jeopardizes the lender's security (Civ.C. § 1923.2(f)(4)).

(g) [6:98.7] Repayment—additional conditions: Repayment of a reverse mortgage loan is subject to the following additional conditions (Civ.C. § 1923.2(g)):

1) [6:98.8] Maturity not triggered by certain borrower temporary absences: The borrower's temporary absences from the home not exceeding 60 consecutive days "shall not cause the mortgage to become due and payable." [Civ.C. § 1923.2(g)(1)]

Nor may the mortgage become due and payable on account of the borrower's extended absences from the home exceeding 60 consecutive days but less than one year, if the borrower has taken prior action that "secures and protects the home in a manner satisfactory to the lender" as specified in the loan documents. [Civ.C. § 1923.2(g)(2)]

2) [6:98.9] Statute of limitations on collection of loan proceeds: The statute of limitations for written loan contracts governs the lender's right to collect reverse mortgage loan proceeds. The limitations period commences to run on the date the loan becomes due and payable as provided in the loan agreement. [Civ.C. § 1923.2(g)(3)]

3) [6:98.10] Disclosure of interest and fees payable at maturity: The lender must "prominently disclose" in the loan agreement any interest rate or other fees that will be charged during the period commencing on the date the reverse mortgage loan becomes due and payable and ending when full repayment is made. [Civ.C. § 1923.2(g)(4)]

(h) [6:98.11] Notice of nature of loan in deed of trust: The first page of the deed of trust securing a reverse mortgage loan must state in 10-point bold type: "This deed of trust secures a reverse mortgage loan." [Civ.C. § 1923.2(h)]

(i) [6:98.12] Borrower may not be required to purchase annuity or other financial/insurance products: A reverse mortgage lender and any other person participating in the origination of a reverse mortgage may not require the borrower to purchase an annuity as a condition for obtaining the mortgage. [Civ.C. § 1923.2(i)]

Moreover, neither the lender nor any other person participating in the origination of a reverse mortgage may:

— participate in, associate with or employ any party that participates in or is associated with any other financial or insurance activity, except as statutorily specified; or

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

— refer the borrower to anyone for the purchase of an annuity or other financial or insurance product prior to the closing of the reverse mortgage or before expiration of the borrower's right to rescind the mortgage agreement. [See Civ.C. § 1923.2(i)(1)]

1) [6:98.13] Title and peril insurance offers/referrals distinguished: Reverse mortgage lenders may offer or refer borrowers for title insurance, hazard, flood or other peril insurance, and any similar products that are "customary and normal" under a reverse mortgage loan. [Civ.C. § 1923.2(i)(2)]

[6:98.14] Reserved.

(3) [6:98.15] Extent and priority of lien: A reverse mortgage constitutes a lien against the secured property to the extent of all advances made pursuant to the mortgage and all interest accrued thereon. [Civ.C. § 1923.3; Black v. Financial Freedom Senior Funding Corp. (2001) 92 CA4th 917, 922, 112 CR2d 445, 449]

The lien has priority over any lien filed or recorded after recordation of the reverse mortgage loan. [Civ.C. § 1923.3]

(4) [6:98.16] Mandatory referral to professional counseling: No reverse mortgage loan application may be taken by a lender unless the loan applicant, prior to receiving counseling, obtains from the lender a statutorily-prescribed "plain language statement in conspicuous 16-point type or larger" advising the applicant that (a) they are required to obtain reverse mortgage counseling from a HUD-approved agency and will be provided a list of approved counselors by the lender (below); and (b) senior citizen advocacy groups advise against using the proceeds of a reverse mortgage to purchase an annuity or related financial products. [Civ.C. § 1923.5(a)]

The counselor list provided by the lender must contain at least 10 HUD-approved nonprofit counseling agencies, none of which may receive any compensation, directly or indirectly, from the lender or any other party involved in originating or servicing the reverse mortgage or the sale of annuities, investments, long-term care insurance, etc., except as specified. [See Civ.C. § 1923.2(j)]

In addition, the lender may not accept the application or assess fees until seven days after the applicant receives in person counseling, as evidenced by the counseling certification. This is so unless the certification indicates the applicant elected to receive counseling in another manner. Moreover, the certification must be signed by the applicant and the counselor, and it must include the date(s) of counseling and the name, address and telephone number of both the applicant and counselor. [Civ.C. § 1923.2(k)]

A reverse mortgage lender "shall be presumed to have satisfied any disclosure duty imposed by [Civ.C. § 1923 et seq.] if the lender provides a disclosure statement in the same form as provided in [Civ.C. § 1923 et seq.]." [Civ.C. § 1923.6]

(a) [6:98.17] Mandatory worksheet guide: In addition to providing the loan applicant with a statutorily-prescribed "plain language" statement (¶ 6:98.16), a reverse mortgage lender must give the applicant a "reverse mortgage worksheet guide" that details "five essential questions" to consider before purchasing the mortgage. The worksheet guide is given to the applicant before they meet with a reverse mortgage counselor. If, however, the applicant seeks counseling before applying for the mortgage, a worksheet guide in minimum 14-point type must be provided to them by the counseling agency. [See Civ.C. § 1923.5(b)(1)]

Approval of a reverse mortgage loan is contingent upon the worksheet guide first being signed by the counselor (if the counseling is done in person) and by the loan applicant, with a copy provided to the applicant. The loan application may not be approved until the signed worksheet guide is provided to the lender, along with the counseling certificate. [Civ.C. § 1923.5(b)(2)]

(5) [6:98.18] Effect of lender's noncompliance: No "arrangement, transfer, or lien" subject to Civ.C. § 1923 et seq. will be invalidated solely because of the lender's failure to comply with any provision of § 1923 et seq. By the same token, the statutory scheme does not preclude the application of other civil remedies provided by law. [Civ.C. § 1923.7]

3. Legislative Protection for Homeowners

a. [6:99] Regulation of nontraditional and subprime mortgage products: In 2006-07, various federal financial regulatory agencies and other related entities issued guidance documents and statements containing important risk management and consumer protection principles in response to the rise in nontraditional and subprime residential mortgage products (e.g., mortgage loans allowing homeowners to defer repayment of principal or interest; adjustable-rate mortgage products typically offered to subprime borrowers and having the potential for "payment shock"). [See Stats. 2007, Ch. 301, § 1 (legislative findings)]

The Commissioner of Real Estate is (1) charged with applying these guidance documents and statements to real estate brokers; and (2) authorized to adopt emergency and final regulations for clarification purposes as soon as possible. In turn, real estate brokers must "adopt and adhere" to any "policies and procedures that are reasonably intended to achieve the objectives" outlined in the guidance documents and statements. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10240.3]

b. Truth in lending laws and regulations

(1) [6:99.1] Housing and Economic Recovery Act of 2008 (HERA): HERA revised the truth in lending laws affecting extensions of credit secured by a consumer's "dwelling." Among other changes, covered loans may not close until seven business days after the borrower's application; early disclosures must be given at the time of application; and final disclosures, if different from early disclosures, must be provided at least three business days before the loan closing (absent a bona fide, documented personal emergency). [15 USC § 1638(b)(2); see also Holbert v. Fremont Investment & Loan (2009) 179 CA4th 1067, 1074-1075, 102 CR3d 370, 374-375 (discussing various required disclosures under TILA)]

The borrower may seek damages for the lender's violation of TILA's disclosure requirements by filing an action within one year of the transaction (or within three years for disclosures generally required for residential mortgages; see 15 USC §§ 1639, 1639b & 1639c). [15 USC § 1640(e); Ivanoff v. Bank of America, N.A. (2017) 9 CA5th 719, 730, 215 CR3d 442, 451—equitable tolling may extend three-year period within which borrower seeking damages for § 1639 violation must bring action; see also Struiksma v. Ocwen Loan Servicing, LLC (2021) 66 CA5th 546, 558, 280 CR3d 881, 889-890 (citing 15 USC §§ 1602(g), 1641(a))—TILA's disclosure obligations apply only to loan transaction's original creditor or, if violation is apparent on face of loan documents, to original creditor's assignee]

In addition, the borrower may notify the lender of the borrower's intention to rescind the loan transaction within three business days following its consummation or delivery of the required disclosures and rescission forms, whichever is later. Should the lender completely fail to deliver the required disclosures and rescission forms, the borrower's right to rescind expires three years after the transaction is consummated or the property is sold, whichever occurs first. [15 USC § 1635(a) & (f); Jesinoski v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. (2015) 574 US 259, 261-262, 135 S.Ct. 790, 792—borrowers have unconditional right to rescind for 3 days, after which they may rescind only if lender fails to satisfy TILA's disclosure requirements; see also U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n v. Naifeh (2016) 1 CA5th 767, 775-776, 205 CR3d 120, 128-129 (discussing TILA's purpose and provisions)]

TILA sets forth a three-step process for pursuing rescission (notice of intent to rescind, return of security interest, and tender of loan's value) that must be followed unless otherwise ordered by a court. [15 USC § 1635(a) & (b); see also Vien-Phuong Thi Ho v. ReconTrust Co., N.A. (9th Cir. 2016) 858 F3d 568, 577—obligors may state rescission claims without pleading ability to tender loan's value; Merritt v. Countrywide Fin'l Corp. (9th Cir. 2014) 759 F3d 1023, 1030-1033 (discussing TILA's three-step rescission process and court's equitable power to modify same)]

(a) [6:99.1a] Timely notice rather than filing lawsuit effects rescission: So long as the borrower notifies the creditor of the borrower's intention to rescind within three years after the loan transaction is consummated, the borrower's rescission is timely. The borrower does not also have to file a lawsuit before the three-year period elapses. [15 USC § 1635(f); see Jesinoski v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. (2015) 574 US 259, 264, 135 S.Ct. 790, 793—error to dismiss complaint filed 4 years and 1 day after loan's consummation where borrower sent lender written notice of rescission exactly 3 years after refinancing home mortgage; see also U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n v. Naifeh (2016) 1 CA5th 767, 780, 205 CR3d 120, 132—timely rescission notice automatically voids lender's security interest unless lender contests notice; Beach v. Ocwen Fed. Bank (1998) 523 US 410, 419, 118 S.Ct. 1408, 1413—no federal right to rescind after 3-year period runs]

(b) [6:99.1b] Rescission lawsuit; statute of limitations: Congress has established a one-year statute of limitations for seeking legal damages based on TILA violations (see 15 USC § 1640(e)). Nothing in 15 USC § 1635, however, explicitly establishes a time limit for bringing an action for equitable relief in the event the lender fails to comply with a rescission request. Moreover, the Supreme Court was silent on the subject in Jesinoski, supra. Nonetheless, if a federal law contains no express statute of limitations, "the general rule is that a state limitations period for an analogous cause of action is borrowed and applied to the federal claim." [See Hoang v. Bank of America, N.A. (9th. Cir. 2018) 910 F3d

1096, 1101 (citations omitted)—Washington state's six-year statute of limitations under general contract law applied to borrower's TILA rescission action]

➪ [6:99.1c] PRACTICE POINTER: Notwithstanding Hoang, supra, until Congress and/or the Federal Reserve Board provides further statutory and/or regulatory guidance, consider filing suit no later than four years and one day after the loan transaction is consummated (¶ 6:99.1a).

(2) [6:99.1d] Helping Families Save Their Homes Act of 2009: In 2009, Congress again revised the truth in lending laws affecting extensions of credit secured by a consumer's "dwelling." Among other changes, a loan servicer who acquires actual ownership of a loan obligation by assignment or purchase must, within 30 days, furnish the borrower with the servicer's name, address, date of transfer and other relevant information. [See 15 USC § 1641(g); Logan v. U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n (9th Cir. 2013) 722 F3d 1163, 1172; see also Gale v. First Franklin Loan Services (9th Cir. 2012) 701 F3d 1240, 1241-1242, 1245-1246 (noting servicer who assigned ownership of loan solely for "administrative convenience" escapes liability but must still respond to borrower's inquiries re loan's true owner); Jenkins v. JP Morgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2013) 216 CA4th 497, 516-517, 156 CR3d 912, 928-929 (disapproved on other grounds by Yvanova v. New Century Mortg. Corp. (2016) 62 C4th 919, 939, 199 CR3d 66, 82, fn. 13)—statutory obligation to notify borrowers only applies to creditors who are "new owners or assignees" of loans, not transferors (emphasis added)]

Cross-refer: The Helping Families Save Their Homes Act of 2009 is discussed further at ¶ 6:511.11.

(3) [6:99.2] Home Ownership and Equity Protection Act (HOEPA): HOEPA was enacted in 1994 as an amendment to the truth in lending laws. It applies to a special class of regulated loans that are made at higher interest rates or with excessive costs and fees. In addition to requiring specific disclosures that must be made at least three days before consummating a transaction, HOEPA generally precludes any prepayment penalty provisions in a loan, prohibits increases in the interest rate charged following any default, and bars negative amortization and prepaid monthly payments. A creditor's failure to comply with any of the foregoing requirements is treated as a failure to deliver material disclosures, thereby triggering the debtor's right to rescind. [See 15 USC § 1639(b), (c), (d), (f), (g), (j); Holbert v. Fremont Investment & Loan (2009) 179 CA4th 1067, 1076, 102 CR3d 370, 375]

(4) [6:99.3] Regulation Z: Regulation Z implements the federal Truth in Lending Act via parallel provisions promulgated by the Bureau of Consumer Financial Protection (12 CFR § 1026.1 et seq.) and the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System (12 CFR § 226.1 et seq.). Both sets of regulations require disclosures in connection with consumer credit and protect against abusive practices in the general mortgage market.

A comprehensive treatment of Regulation Z is beyond the scope of this Practice Guide.

c. [6:99.4] Loan modification/refinance programs: See discussion at ¶ 6:511.1 ff.

d. California residential mortgage loan modification laws

(1) [6:99.5] Preperformance compensation, etc. (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10085.6): It is illegal for any licensee (e.g., real estate broker, finance lender, residential mortgage lender or servicer, etc.) to (a) demand or receive advance fees or any other type of preperformance compensation; (b) require security as collateral for compensation; or (c) take a power of attorney from the borrower for any purpose in connection with a residential mortgage loan modification or other form of residential mortgage loan forbearance. A licensee who violates these prohibitions can be fined and, if a natural person, imprisoned for up to one year. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10085.6; see also Civ.C. §§ 2944.7 & 2944.8 (authorizing state and local government officials to commence civil actions to recover up to $20,000 for each such violation, as well as additional penalties up to $2,500 for every violation perpetrated against a senior citizen or disabled person); Matter of Taylor (Rev.Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct.Rptr. 221, 226]

(2) [6:99.6] Preliminary written disclosure requirement (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10147.6): Before entering into any fee agreement with a borrower, any licensee who renders compensable services in connection with a residential mortgage loan modification or other form of residential mortgage loan forbearance must provide their client with a statutorily-prescribed written disclosure in minimum 14-point boldface type, as follows (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10147.6(a) & Civ.C. § 2944.6(a)):

> "It is not necessary to pay a third party to arrange for a loan modification or other form of forbearance from your mortgage lender or servicer. You may call your lender directly to ask for a change in your loan terms. Nonprofit housing counseling agencies also offer these and other forms of borrower assistance free of charge. A list of nonprofit housing counseling agencies approved by the United States Department of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) is available from your local HUD office or by visiting www.hud.gov."

A licensee who violates the above written disclosure requirement can be fined and, if a natural person, can be imprisoned for up to one year. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10147.6(c); Civ.C. § 2944.6(c); see also Matter of Taylor (Rev.Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct.Rptr. 221, 226]

(a) [6:99.7] Translated copies: If loan modification services are offered or negotiated in one of the languages specified in Civ.C. § 1632 (i.e., Spanish, Chinese, Tagalog, Vietnamese or Korean), a translated copy of the requisite written disclosure must be provided to the client in that language. A licensee that violates this requirement can be fined and, if a natural person, can be imprisoned for up to one year. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10147.6(b), (c) & Civ.C. § 2944.6(b), (c)]

(3) [6:99.8] Attorney violators: Attorneys who violate the Civ.C. § 2944.6 preliminary written disclosure requirement (¶ 6:99.6 ff.) in connection with residential loan modifications or forbearances are subject to discipline. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 6106.3; see also Matter of Taylor (Rev.Dept. 2012) 5 Cal. State Bar Ct.Rptr. 221, 225, 231—attorney suspended and thereafter placed on probation for violating statutory written disclosure requirement and collecting illegal preperformance fees]

(4) [6:99.9] Compare—federal law: Under the Federal Trade Commission's Mortgage Assistance Relief Services Rule, mortgage modification and foreclosure relief services generally are prohibited from charging or collecting any advance fees. [See 12 CFR § 1015.1 et seq. ("Regulation O")]

Indeed, these services cannot receive payment until they secure a modification—i.e., until the homeowner has a written offer from their lender or servicer that the homeowner decides is acceptable. [12 CFR § 1015.5(a); see also Consumer Fin'l Protection Bureau v. Gordon (9th Cir. 2016) 819 F3d 1179, 1194-1195—attorney violated Regulation O by falsely claiming upfront fees charged for loan modification services were payments for "custom legal products" and that mortgage relief assistance was provided "free" as part of "pro bono program"]

(a) [6:99.10] Attorney exemption: Attorneys who provide mortgage assistance relief services as part of their practice to consumers who reside (or whose dwellings are located) in states where the attorneys are licensed are completely exempt from the federal ban on advance fees provided they (i) comply with state laws and regulations covering the same type of conduct; (ii) keep the fees in client trust accounts; and (iii) comply with all state laws and regulations applicable to client trust accounts. [See 12 CFR § 1015.7]

However, California lawyers apparently cannot take advantage of this exemption because of the federal provision requiring them to comply "with state laws and regulations that cover the same type of conduct." [See Civ.C. § 2944.7 (prohibiting any licensee from collecting advance fees until the licensee has "fully performed each and every service … contracted to perform," ¶ 6:99.5); see also Consumer Fin'l Protection Bureau v. Gordon (9th Cir. 2016) 819 F3d 1179, 1194-1195 (¶ 6:99.9)]

[6:99.11 - 6:99.14] Reserved.

4. [6:99.15] Criminal Prosecution for Mortgage Fraud: In response to the rising tide of mortgage fraud in California, the Legislature enacted Pen.C. § 532f. Under this statute, any "person" (i.e., individual, partnership, firm, association, corporation, limited liability company or other legal entity) who, among other things, deliberately makes any misstatement, misrepresentation or omission during the mortgage lending process, with the intention that it be relied on by a "mortgage lender, borrower or any other party to the mortgage lending process," is guilty of mortgage fraud. [See Pen.C. § 532f(a), (i) & (j)—mortgage fraud may only be prosecuted when the alleged fraud's value meets the Pen.C. § 487 threshold for grand theft (generally, $950)]

A peace officer having reasonable grounds to believe records are "relevant and material to an ongoing investigation of a felony fraud violation" may apply ex parte for an order to produce any and all such records, regardless of their form or method of storage, that are in the possession of a "real estate recordholder" (i.e., title insurer, broker, salesperson, etc.). 4. [6:150] Loan Escrow

1. [6:100] General Nature of Process: The process of applying for a loan and bringing it to actual funding (i.e., "closing" the loan) varies considerably depending on the kind and complexity of the loan and the particular lender's practice and policy. Generally, the process breaks down into four fundamental stages:

• loan application (¶ 6:105 ff.);

• lender's acceptance of the application and offer to make the loan (the "loan commitment," ¶ 6:130 ff.);

• preparation and finalization of the loan documentation (promissory note, deed of trust and various other security instruments, ¶ 6:190 ff.); and

• loan closing (funding).

a. [6:101] Variations: Not all of the foregoing phases of loan processing apply to all kinds of loans; for example:

(1) [6:102] Seller financing: No loan application or commitment occurs in connection with seller financing. Instead, the loan approval process is contained within the purchase and sale agreement. (The purchase contract usually states that the seller's obligation to provide seller financing is conditioned upon its review and approval of the buyer's financial statement.)

(2) [6:102.1] Private third party lenders: When the lender is a private third party (rather than an institutional lender), the loan application, commitment and funding process is much less formal.

(3) [6:103] Single family residence transactions: The process for obtaining a single family residential loan from an institutional lender tends to be much more streamlined than for multifamily or commercial loans.

b. [6:104] Commitment bypass: In certain instances, there is no commitment stage and the parties simply move from loan application to documenting the loan and immediate funding. Often, even when there is a commitment phase, the commitment may be abbreviated and informal.

2. [6:105] Loan Applications: Institutional lenders almost always require some form of formal written loan application. The application is designed to elicit information about the borrower and the property.

a. [6:106] Application for single family residential loans: Single family residential loan applications are relatively simple; they generally consist of the following parts:

(1) [6:107] Application form and financial statements: Institutional lenders provide the borrower with a fairly simple loan application form that requires information concerning the applicant's financial condition and work history. (Several other documents and additional information are typically required as well, including tax returns, verification of the source of the down payment, authorizations for the lender to verify the applicant's salary and bank account balances, etc.)

The lender's efforts to determine the borrower's creditworthiness and ability to repay are for the lender's protection, not the borrower's. Indeed, "absent special circumstances … a loan transaction is at arm's length and there is no fiduciary relationship between the borrower and lender." [See Perlas v. GMAC Mortg., LLC (2010) 187 CA4th 429, 436, 113

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

CR3d 790, 796 (brackets omitted)—borrowers not entitled to rely on lender's "loan qualification" determination in deciding whether they could afford loans]

(2) [6:108] Appraisal: Although it need not be submitted at the time of the loan application, the lender will require an appraisal by one of its in-house appraisal staff or an outside appraiser. The borrower is required to pay for the appraisal. Upon the borrower's request to the lender, the borrower is entitled to receive a copy of the appraisal report. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 11423]

The appraised value of the property must be sufficient to satisfy the lender's minimum "loan to value ratio."

Cross-refer: Appraisals are discussed in detail at ¶ 6:650 ff.

(a) [6:109] "Loan to value ratio": A "loan to value ratio" is a comparison between the amount to be loaned and the appraised value of the property. This ratio is expressed as a percentage.

For example, if the amount to be loaned is $400,000 and the property is appraised at $500,000, the loan to value ratio is 80% ($400,000 divided by $500,000).

The purchase price is disregarded in determining loan to value ratio. Indeed, the purchase price is germane only if less than the property's appraised value. This is because the lender will generally only loan the lesser of (i) the loan to value ratio, or (ii) that same percentage of the purchase price.

(b) [6:110] Significance: Lenders are concerned about loan to value ratios because they want to loan only a portion of the total value of the property. The difference between the amount of the loan and the appraised value provides the lender with an equity cushion so that, in the event the lender forecloses and takes back the property, there is sufficient equity to cover expenses—such as costs of foreclosure, lost interest on the loan, the lender's carrying charges while the property is being marketed (taxes, maintenance and insurance, etc.), and the cost of reselling the property (broker commissions and escrow charges).

This equity cushion also provides the lender with some comfort that, even if the property should decrease in value, the loan amount will not exceed the value of the property.

(3) [6:111] Escrow instructions: Lenders do not want to bother processing loan applications unless the borrower can demonstrate it already has a binding purchase and sale agreement. Therefore, a copy of the escrow instructions for the purchase (or other form of purchase agreement) must be submitted to the lender as part of the loan application.

(4) [6:112] Title report: The lender will require a current preliminary title report on the property in order to determine whether the condition of title to be acquired by the buyer is acceptable to the lender or whether exceptions to title will have to be removed prior to funding of the loan. (See ¶ 3:200 ff. for detailed discussion of preliminary title reports.)

(5) [6:113] Fee: A relatively minimal application fee (usually only a few hundred dollars) is also required. Typically, this fee is nonrefundable and is not applied to loan fees or any other loan closing costs.

b. [6:114] Applications for multifamily and commercial property loans: Applications for multifamily and commercial property loans are more complex. This is partly because the borrower's ability to repay such loans is often dependent upon the property's income stream. Therefore, lenders more carefully scrutinize the property.

In addition to the items required upon application for a single family residential loan (¶ 6:107 ff.), an application for a multifamily or commercial property loan will require the applicant's delivery of some or all of the items noted at ¶ 6:115 ff.

• [6:114.1] Comment: Some of these items might be procured by the buyer/borrower from the seller as part of the purchase and sale transaction—e.g., estoppel certificates, copies of leases, surveys, soil and environmental reports, etc.

Also, bear in mind that some of the following items are not necessarily required at the time the loan application is made, but may be submitted at a later date. Finally, the documents listed at ¶ 6:115 ff. must be approved by the lender as a condition to making the loan.

(1) [6:115] Rent roll/income and expense report: The lender will require a schedule of current rents for the property (and perhaps a schedule of future increases in rents), together with a summary of expenses for operation of the property.

(2) [6:116] Copies of leases: The applicant will also have to submit a copy of each lease of the property.

(3) [6:117] Management contract: If the borrower intends to engage an outside property manager, the lender may want to see a copy of the property management contract. (See Ch. 10 re real property management and management agreements.)

(4) [6:118] Real property tax bills: Copies of recent tax bills for the property are sometimes required (even though current real property taxes due will be reflected on the title report).

(5) [6:119] Survey: A lender usually requires a survey of the property.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(6) [6:120] Tenant estoppel certificates: For commercial properties (but not residential projects), the lender often requires an estoppel certificate from each tenant (see ¶ 4:418 ff.; and Form 4:J).

(7) [6:121] Subordination agreement: If the leases do not specifically provide they are subordinate to future deeds of trust, the lender may require that the tenants execute a subordination, nondisturbance and attornment agreement (see ¶ 6:472 and 7:273 ff. in connection with ground leaseholds).

(8) [6:122] Soils reports/environmental audits: Depending on the kind of property involved, the lender will require certain reports concerning geological and environmental conditions. Soils reports and Phase I environmental audits (¶ 5:238 ff.) are commonly required.

(9) [6:123] Evidence of compliance with zoning and other laws: The lender might require evidence that improvements built on the property, and operation of the business on the property, are all in compliance with building codes, and zoning, land use and other applicable laws.

(10) [6:124] Evidence of insurance: As part of the loan closing, the borrower must provide the lender with evidence the borrower holds hazard and liability insurance, with liability limits in amounts required by the lender and under a policy that designates the lender as either a named or additional insured.

(11) [6:125] Additional requirements for construction loan: Application for a construction loan requires additional documents and information, including:

• copies of construction contracts;

• copies of all plans and specifications;

• copy of the agreement with the architect;

• in certain circumstances, a construction performance and payment bond;

• a list of all major subcontractors who will be performing work for a fee exceeding a specified amount;

• copies of certain building, zoning and other permits;

• letters from utility companies confirming that utility services will be available to the project;

• a construction budget; and

• perhaps a take-out commitment for a permanent loan (¶ 6:40 ff., 6:46 ff.).

c. [6:126] Letter of lender's preliminary interest: In certain kinds of multifamily and commercial property loan transactions, the lender might have preliminary communications with a prospective borrower before the borrower makes a formal and complete loan application. Those communications might include the borrower's submission of certain information about the property and the contemplated loan.

Unlike single family residential loan transactions (where borrowers generally can predict with relative accuracy the likelihood of their qualifying for a loan, as well as the interest rate and terms), the ability to obtain multifamily and commercial loans is not so predictable. Therefore, the applicant may want to learn whether the lender is predisposed to make the contemplated loan.

In these instances, either as part of the initial application process or shortly thereafter (but before a commitment is issued), the lender might issue a preliminary letter of interest. Such a letter does not obligate the lender to make the loan or otherwise issue a loan commitment, but it nonetheless serves a practical purpose for both parties:

• [6:126.1] The borrower gains some degree of assurance the lender is willing to make loans of the kind being contemplated and that the lender has at least some preliminary interest in making the loan to the borrower.

• [6:126.2] The lender (who usually requires an application fee for issuance of the letter of preliminary interest) also gains something by making the borrower more committed to borrowing money from it than a competing lender. Although the borrower's “commitment” may only be psychological and financially minimal (in the amount of the application fee), that is usually sufficient to dissuade the borrower from submitting loan applications to competing lenders.

3. Loan Commitments

a. [6:130] Nature of loan commitment: Once the lender approves the borrower's application, it will typically (but not necessarily) send the borrower some form of written “commitment” to make the loan. A written commitment sets forth the fundamental terms and conditions upon which the lender will make the loan and provides that the lender will hold its commitment open for a certain period of time.

So long as it contains the minimum essential terms (identity of lender and borrower, amount of the loan and repayment terms, see ¶ 6:136), a written loan commitment is binding on the lender, subject to any conditions precedent stated in the commitment. [Fischer v. First Int'l Bank (2003) 109 CA4th 1433, 1447-1448, 1 CR3d 162, 172]

• FORM: Loan Commitment, see Form 6:D.

(1) [6:131] Fee: Sometimes the commitment is free and sometimes it must be purchased by the borrower. In the latter instance, the lender sends a commitment letter stating if the borrower accepts the commitment and pays a “commitment fee,” the lender's commitment becomes valid and binding (see ¶ 6:139 ff.).

In single family residential loan transactions, the commitment is abbreviated and informal, and there is no commitment fee.

(2) [6:132] Documents: The loan commitment does not typically include a draft of the form loan documents. Instead, the lender's commitment simply states the loan documents will be those that are acceptable to the lender.

This obviously is risky for a prospective borrower because, although the interest rate and other economic terms are set forth in the commitment letter, other material, substantive terms will be set forth in loan documents that the borrower has not yet seen (but which the borrower arguably is consenting to when it accepts the commitment). See further discussion at ¶ 6:147 ff.

(3) [6:133] Conditions: Loan commitments describe various conditions which must be satisfied by the borrower before the lender is obligated to make the loan. Thus, even after issuance of a commitment, the borrower still needs to submit (and the lender still needs to approve) various information and documents. The commitment typically provides that the lender's approval of such information and documents may be given or withheld in the lender's sole and absolute discretion. See further discussion at ¶ 6:142 ff.

b. [6:134] Contents of commitments: Loan commitments range from simple to complex. In single family residential transactions, the commitment is often in the form of an abbreviated letter that simply advises the borrower of approval of the loan (including the loan amount, term of the loan, interest rate, loan fees, etc.), the duration of the commitment, and perhaps a few other matters.

More complex loans require greater thoroughness in the commitment (see Form 6:D). Therefore, the following items are usually included in multifamily and commercial loan commitments:

• Borrower's name;

• Loan amount;

• Interest rate and basis of computation (generally using a 360-day year for commercial loans);

• Term of loan;

• Loan fee;

• Term of the commitment;

• Loan prepayment charges;

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

• Commitment fee (if any, and whether the commitment fee will apply to the loan fee);

• Guarantors (if any);

• Whether tax and insurance impound payments will be required (see ¶ 6:373 ff.);

• Identification of security for the loan;

• Description of the title insurance policy the lender will require (including any special endorsements);

• Specification of hazard and liability insurance that will be required;

• Inspections and reports required by the lender (structural, environmental, etc.);

• Conditions regarding borrower's financial condition on the day of closing;

• Requirement that there be no material, adverse change in the property's use, operation or income prior to the loan closing;

• In certain instances, the requirement of an opinion of borrower's counsel (see Ch. 9);

• Requirement that the property be in compliance with law as of the closing;

• Requirement that the borrower pay the lender's attorney fees, loan escrow and other closing fees and charges; and

• Any other matters idiosyncratic to the particular loan involved (e.g., construction loan commitments require a host of additional lender approvals—including approval of the construction contract, the general contractor, the architect, etc.).

c. [6:135] Writing requirement—statute of frauds: In certain instances, an enforceable loan commitment must be in writing:

A "commitment to loan money or to grant or extend credit in an amount greater than … $100,000, not primarily for personal, family, or household purposes, made by a person engaged in the business of funding or arranging for the business of lending of money or extending of credit" must be in writing. [Civ.C. § 1624(a)(7) (emphasis added)]

For this purpose, a loan "secured solely by residential property consisting of one to four dwellings shall be deemed to be for personal, family, or household purposes" (i.e., such a loan commitment need not be in writing). [Civ.C. § 1624(a)(7)]

Cross-refer: For a detailed discussion of the statute of frauds in connection with real property purchase and sale transactions, see ¶ 4:263 ff.

(1) [6:136] Sufficiency of writing: A commitment subject to the statute of frauds must sufficiently state the material terms of the loan. At a minimum, the following must be clearly stated in writing: borrower, loan amount, interest rate, maturity date, security for the loan, payment schedule, and lender's remedies for default. [See Grimes v. New Century Mortg. Corp. (9th Cir. 2003) 340 F3d 1007, 1010 (interest rate not determinable); Peterson Develop. Co., Inc. v. Torrey Pines Bank (1991) 233 CA3d 103, 115, 284 CR 367, 374 (commitment letter did not sufficiently name borrower, amount to be loaned or specific terms of repayment); Laks v. Coast Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1976) 60 CA3d 885, 891, 131 CR 836, 839 (commitment letter did not contain payment schedule, clear identity of borrower, security, prepayment conditions, terms for interest calculations, method for loan disbursements, lenders' rights and remedies upon default)]

(2) [6:137] Estoppel, etc. exceptions: Prospective borrowers attempting to enforce a loan commitment that does not satisfy the statute of frauds have sometimes resorted to claims of estoppel, misrepresentation, detrimental reliance, duress, breach of fiduciary duty, negligence and fraud against the lender. However, these theories generally have been unsuccessful. [See Kruse v. Bank of America (1988) 202 CA3d 38, 52-57, 248 CR 217, 225-228; Mitsui Manufacturers Bank v. Sup.Ct. (Squidco Corp. of America, Inc.) (1989) 212 CA3d 726, 732-733, 260 CR 793, 797 (unsuccessful breach of covenant of good faith and fair dealing claim)]

d. Commitment acceptance and fees

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(1) [6:138] Acceptance of commitment: Some (but not all) commitments are conditioned on the borrower's "acceptance." The borrower accepts the commitment by executing the commitment agreement and the commitment is then held open for its stated term.

(2) [6:139] Commitment fees: In multifamily and commercial loan transactions, the lender often requires that a fee be paid as a condition to the borrower's acceptance of the commitment. The commitment fee is distinct from the loan fee; but the lender often permits the commitment fee to be applied to various loan fees and costs when the loan is closed. In any event, the commitment fee is nonrefundable—i.e., if the loan does not close, the lender retains the fee.

(a) [6:140] Purpose: A commitment fee serves a three-fold purpose:

• It covers the lender's administrative and processing costs incurred in connection with the loan.

• It compensates the lender for reserving the loan amount (and refraining from loaning that amount to other prospective borrowers) during the term of the loan commitment.

• It motivates the borrower to close the loan as and when required by the commitment.

(b) [6:141] Akin to liquidated damages: Conceptually, a commitment fee is similar to liquidated damages, compensating the lender for the loss it will incur should the borrower elect not to close the loan. The forfeiture of commitment fees (in the event the borrower backs out of the loan commitment) has been upheld. [Lowe v. Massachusetts Mut. Life Ins. Co. (1976) 54 CA3d 718, 738, 127 CR 23, 35; Regional Enterprises, Inc. v. Teachers Ins. & Annuity Ass'n of America (9th Cir. 1965) 352 F2d 768, 775]

e. [6:142] Satisfaction of conditions to closing: Loan commitments require that certain conditions be satisfied before expiration of the term of the commitment.

(1) [6:143] Typical conditions: For example, some of the conditions to the lender's obligation to fund the loan might be the lender's approval of an environmental assessment of the property, tenant estoppel certificates, and the condition of title to the property; the lender's satisfaction there have been no material, adverse changes in the borrower's financial condition between the time of the borrower's loan application and the loan closing; and the lender's satisfaction there have been no material, adverse changes in the property's income stream between the time of the borrower's application and the loan closing.

(2) [6:144] "Satisfaction clauses": Standards for determining whether the conditions have been satisfied are often not stated with specificity.

Notably, commitment letters frequently provide that the specified conditions are subject to the "lender's satisfaction, in the lender's sole and absolute discretion." These so-called "satisfaction clauses" are fraught with the potential for dispute. Nonetheless, they are not necessarily illusory. Courts have enunciated two general theories to protect prospective borrowers:

(a) [6:145] Implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing: As discussed in Ch. 4, every contract carries with it an implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. [Seaman's Direct Buying Service, Inc. v. Standard Oil Co. of Calif. (1984) 36 C3d 752, 768, 206 CR 354, 362 (overruled on other grounds by Freeman & Mills, Inc. v. Belcher Oil Co. (1995) 11 C4th 85, 88, 44 CR2d 420, 421; and disapproved on other grounds by Della Penna v. Toyota Motor Sales, U.S.A., Inc. (1995) 11 C4th 376, 393, 45 CR2d 436, 447, fn. 5); see ¶ 4:275.5]

Consequently, a lender's "satisfaction clause," though stated as being subject to the lender's absolute discretion, will be interpreted consistent with the lender's obligation not to do anything that will defeat the borrower's right to receive the benefits of its "bargain." In other words, the lender must act in "good faith" when it determines the borrower's performance of a specified condition is not "satisfactory" (¶ 6:148). [See Grimes v. New Century Mortg. Corp. (9th Cir. 2003) 340 F3d 1007, 1012-1013 (J. McKeown dissent. opn.)]

(b) [6:146] Objectively reasonable standard: The lender's "dissatisfaction must be genuine and not arbitrary, and … an objective criterion, good faith controls the exercise of the right to determine satisfaction." [Rodriguez v. Barnett (1959) 52 C2d 154, 160, 338 P2d 907, 911; see also Mattei v. Hopper (1958) 51 C2d 119, 123, 330 P2d 625, 626-627]

(3) [6:147] Documentation conditions: The requisite loan documentation (promissory note, deed of trust, etc.) may also be an area of potential dispute. Although the commitment letter may set forth the material economic and substantive terms of the loan, commitments ordinarily make only a general reference to the loan documentation. However, loan documents are extensive and often require negotiation.

(a) [6:148] Subject to duty of good faith and fair dealing: As with the exercise of lender "satisfaction clauses," lenders are subject to a duty of good faith and fair dealing in negotiating the loan documents. [See 999 v. C.I.T. Corp. (9th Cir. 1985) 776 F2d 866, 868-871—lender breached duty of good faith and fair dealing in requiring prepayment penalty provision in loan documents where commitment letter was silent on subject]

➪ [6:149] PRACTICE POINTER: Because borrowers do not want to be surprised by loan documents containing terms and conditions they did not contemplate, borrower's counsel should, if possible, obtain and review the lender's proposed form loan documents before the borrower executes the commitment letter. This step will position the borrower either to negotiate the loan documents before executing the commitment or at least to determine whether there will be substantial issues over the terms of the loan documentation.

4. [6:150] Loan Escrow: A separate escrow (requiring loan escrow instructions to be signed by the lender and borrower) is usually set up to close (fund) the loan. Typically, this escrow takes place at the same escrow that will be consummating the purchase and sale (see ¶ 4:560 ff.).

Only the lender and borrower are parties to the loan escrow. The loan escrow instructions direct the escrow holder as to disbursement of the loan funds, recordation of the deed of trust, issuance of the lender's title insurance policy and a variety of issues pertaining to the mechanics of closing the loan.

   - d. [6:173] Loan broker's duties and standards of conduct
   - e. [6:174] Form of mortgage loan broker agreements

1. [6:160] Function of Loan Broker: A loan broker (or "mortgage loan broker") is sometimes used by borrowers to procure a loan. A loan broker can be an agent of the lender, the borrower, or both. When acting as the borrower's agent, a loan broker's services involve such things as:

• Counseling the borrower on the most beneficial method of financing;

• Shopping among various lenders to determine what loans are available and identifying prospective lenders;

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

• Helping the borrower prepare the loan application (including procurement of requisite appraisal, tenant estoppel certificates, etc.);

• Negotiating the loan terms and helping obtain the loan commitment; and

• Assisting in closing the loan (finalizing the transaction and funding the loan).

a. [6:161] Akin to real estate broker: For these services, the loan broker is paid a fee that is almost always based on a percentage of the loan amount. A loan broker therefore functions much like a real estate broker (Ch. 2), but on the financing side of the transaction.

[6:162] Reserved.

b. [6:163] "Mortgage bankers" distinguished: Mortgage loan brokers are different from "mortgage bankers."

A mortgage banker is a party who actually makes or holds loans. Unlike a mortgage loan broker, a mortgage banker does not act as an intermediary who procures loans for borrowers. Instead, a mortgage banker acts as a lender itself. A mortgage banker sometimes "pools" groups of loans and holds them for a period of time ("warehousing" of loans) and then sells them off. After the sale, the mortgage banker might continue to "service" the loan for a fee. Servicing the loan involves collecting payments from the borrower and disbursing them to the owner of the loan; monitoring the borrower's performance under the loan (including verifying that the borrower timely pays real property taxes and maintains required insurance); and handling a foreclosure or the enforcement of certain other rights of the lender.

2. Loan Broker Fees

a. [6:164] Timing of payment: The loan broker's commission is usually paid at the loan closing, when the loan is funded (although it occasionally is paid, in whole or in part, at the time the loan commitment is issued).

b. [6:165] How paid: Where the borrower is responsible for the loan broker's commission, it is usually paid out of the loan proceeds.

Where the lender is responsible for the loan broker's commission, it is usually paid out of the lender's loan fees ("points") charged to the borrower. Thus, regardless of whether the broker is the borrower's or lender's agent, the borrower effectively pays the broker's entire fee. (When a lender is compelled to pay a loan brokerage fee, the points charged to the borrower for the loan might be correspondingly higher than if no loan broker had been involved.)

c. [6:165.1] Rebates paid by lender ("yield spread premiums") related to services rendered permissible: A "yield spread premium" (YSP) is a bonus paid by a lender to a mortgage broker when they originate a loan at an interest rate higher than the minimum interest rate approved by the lender for the loan. The YSP is paid to the broker at closing, and the borrower pays a higher interest rate over the life of the loan to compensate for the payment. [Wolski v. Fremont Invest. & Loan (2005) 127 CA4th 347, 351, 25 CR3d 500, 503]

YSPs paid in connection with certain federally-insured residential property loans do not violate RESPA (¶ 4:639 ff.) so long as they represent payment for services actually performed by the brokers. [Geraci v. Homestreet Bank (9th Cir. 2003) 347 F3d 749, 751; and see Maganellez v. Hilltop Lending Corp. (ND CA 2007) 505 F.Supp.2d 594, 603—YSP's legality also depends on whether bonus received is reasonably related to value of services performed (¶ 4:642.6); Byars v. SCME Mortg. Bankers, Inc. (2003) 109 CA4th 1134, 1144-1145, 135 CR2d 796, 803—broker's statement may describe YSP in lump-sum terms in lieu of setting forth itemized list of services and fees]

3. [6:166] Licensing and Regulation of Loan Brokers: Anyone who "[s]olicits borrowers or lenders for or negotiates loans or collects payments or performs services for borrowers or lenders or note owners in connection with loans secured directly or collaterally by liens on real property" must hold a real estate broker's license. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131(d); see also Onofrio v. Rice (1997) 55 CA4th 413, 420, 64 CR2d 74, 77 (citing text); Smith v. Home Loan Funding, Inc. (2011) 192 CA4th 1331, 1335, 121 CR3d 857, 860—broker acts as borrower's agent; Salazar v. Interland, Inc. (2007) 152 CA4th 1031, 1036, 62 CR3d 24, 27—licensing requirement helps protect public from incompetent and untrustworthy practitioners]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Therefore, like real estate brokers who earn commissions on the sale of real property, loan brokers ordinarily must hold a license as a condition to earning a loan brokerage fee. (See detailed discussion of real estate broker licensing requirements at ¶ 2:60 ff.)

a. [6:167] Exemptions from licensing requirement: Various statutory provisions exempt certain parties and certain kinds of transactions from the Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131(d) licensing requirement. [See Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10133 & 10133.1]

For example, exemptions are granted to:

- Attorneys when "rendering legal services to a client." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133(a)(3); ¶ 2:91]

- "Any person licensed to practice law in this state, not actively and principally engaged in the business of negotiating loans secured by real property, when that person renders services in the course of their practice as an attorney at law …" [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133.1(a)(5); ¶ 2:101]

- Employees of a real estate broker who, on the broker's behalf, assist the broker in meeting the broker's obligations to customers in residential mortgage loan transactions (as defined in Fin.C. § 50003), where the lender is an institutional lender (as defined in Fin.C. § 50003), provided those employees do not participate in negotiations between the principals. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133.1(c)(1); see ¶ 2:103.1]

Cross-refer: For a detailed discussion of the statutory exemptions, see ¶ 2:86 ff.

[6:167.1 - 6:167.4] Reserved.

b. [6:167.5] Authority to provide loan brokerage services under residential mortgage lender license: Notwithstanding Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131(d), a residential mortgage lender (licensed under the California Residential Mortgage Lending Act, Fin.C. § 50000 et seq.), or a mortgage loan originator (¶ 6:167.8 ff.) employed by a residential mortgage lender, may provide brokerage services under the authority of the lender's license, provided the lender first enters into a written brokerage agreement with the borrower pursuant to Fin.C. § 50701 (¶ 6:167.7). [Fin.C. § 50700(c)]

However, when a residential mortgage lender is acting solely under the authority of its residential mortgage lender's license, it is empowered to render only those brokerage services authorized by Fin.C. § 50700 et seq., and cannot engage in other activities that are subject to the Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131 real estate broker licensing requirement. [Fin.C. § 50700(d)(5); see also Smith v. Home Loan Funding, Inc. (2011) 192 CA4th 1331, 1335, 121 CR3d 857, 860 (explaining distinction between mortgage lenders and brokers)]

(1) [6:167.6] Residential mortgage loans only: Brokerage services within the scope of a residential mortgage lender's license are limited to obtaining (or attempting to obtain), on behalf of a borrower, a residential mortgage loan (as defined in Fin.C. § 50003(p)) secured by residential real estate (as defined in Fin.C. § 50003(v)), made with the funds of another institutional lender (as defined in Fin.C. 50003(k)(1), (2) and (4)) and closed in that lender's name or the name of the licensee, for a fee paid by the borrower or institutional lender. [See Fin.C. § 50700(b)(1) & (2)]

(2) [6:167.7] Written brokerage agreement required: Before performing brokerage services for the borrower, the residential mortgage lender-licensee and borrower must enter into a written loan brokerage agreement that satisfies all of the requirements of Fin.C. § 50701. [Fin.C. § 50701(a)]

Among other things, the agreement must:

- Be signed and dated by the borrower and licensee's authorized representative, who must be a licensed mortgage loan originator (¶ 6:167.8 ff.);

- Include the mortgage loan originator's unique identifier (¶ 6:167.12);

- Contain an explicit statement that the licensee (i) is acting as the borrower's agent in providing the brokerage services; and (ii) in that capacity, owes the borrower a fiduciary duty of "utmost care, honesty, and loyalty in the transaction, including the duty of full disclosure of all material facts" (emphasis added);

- If applicable, disclose the licensee's authority to act as agent for any other person in the transaction, and identify that person;

• Describe in detail the services to be performed for the borrower and provide a good faith estimate of the licensee's fees for those services;

• Contain a "clear and conspicuous statement" of the conditions under which the borrower is obligated to pay the licensee for the agreed-upon brokerage services; and

• Set forth statutorily-prescribed remedies available to the borrower in the event the licensee makes a "materially false or misleading statement or omission" in inducing or implementing the loan brokerage agreement. [See Fin.C. § 50701(b)-(k)]

(3) [6:167.8] Mortgage loan originators: A "mortgage loan originator" means an individual who, for compensation or gain, or in the expectation of compensation or gain, takes a residential mortgage loan application or offers or negotiates terms of a residential mortgage loan. [Fin.C. § 50003.5]

A mortgage loan originator may only provide brokerage services as an employee of a licensed residential mortgage lender (¶ 6:167.5). [See Fin.C. § 50700(e)]

(a) [6:167.9] License and registration requirement: Mortgage loan originators must be licensed and registered through the Nationwide Mortgage Licensing System and Registry. [See Fin.C. §§ 50002.5 & 50140]

(b) [6:167.10] Background information; educational requirements; written examination: Applicants for a mortgage loan originator license must, at a minimum, furnish the Nationwide Mortgage Licensing System and Registry with prescribed information concerning their identity (e.g., fingerprints, personal history, experience, etc.). [Fin.C. § 50140(e); see also Fin.C. § 50146 (Commissioner's authority to establish requirements for furnishing identity information)]

Applicants also must complete at least 20 hours of education courses, as specified, and pass a qualified written test. Once licensed, they must complete annually at least eight hours of continuing education requirements. [See Fin.C. §§ 50142, 50143, 50145]

(c) [6:167.11] Lender's minimum net worth; condition reports: Residential mortgage lenders that employ mortgage loan originators must maintain a minimum net worth of $250,000. In addition, the Commissioner may require these lenders to submit "condition reports" to the Nationwide Mortgage Licensing System and Registry. [See Fin.C. §§ 50201(a) & 50307.2]

The Commissioner also may require a lender who engages in Fin.C. § 50003(m)(2) activities (processing or underwriting residential mortgage loans) to continuously maintain a minimum tangible net worth in excess of $250,000.00, but that does not exceed the net worth required of an approved lender under the Federal Housing Administration. [See Fin.C. § 50201(a)]

(d) [6:167.12] Disclosure of unique identifier on loan applications, advertisements and solicitations: The "unique identifier" of any licensed mortgage loan originator, provided by the Nationwide Mortgage Licensing System and Registry, must be clearly disclosed on all residential mortgage loan applications, advertisements and solicitations. [Fin.C. § 50209]

(e) [6:167.13] Compare—government employees, etc.: Under certain statutorily specified conditions, government and nonprofit organization employees who originate loans exclusively in their capacity as employees are not considered mortgage loan originators under the California Finance Lenders Law or Residential Mortgage Lending Act. [See Fin.C. § 50003.5(b)(5), (6)]

Also generally excluded are (i) individuals who perform purely administrative/clerical tasks on behalf of mortgage loan originators; (ii) individuals who solely renegotiate terms for existing mortgage loans held/serviced by their employer; (iii) individuals solely involved in credit extensions relating to time share plans; and (iv) individuals licensed as mortgage loan originators pursuant to the Business and Professions Code and the SAFE Act. [Fin.C. § 50003.5(b)(1)-(4)]

c. [6:168] Disclosure requirements: Every broker performing services subject to the Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131(d) licensing requirement "who negotiates a loan to be secured directly or collaterally by a lien on real property shall, within three business days after receipt of a completed written loan application or before the borrower becomes obligated on the note, whichever is earlier …" deliver a written disclosure statement to the borrower as prescribed by Bus. & Prof.C. § 10241. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10240(a)]

For purposes of the disclosure requirement, brokers are deemed to perform services subject to Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131(d) if they solicit borrowers, or cause borrowers to be solicited, "through express or implied representations that the broker will act as an agent in arranging a loan, but in fact [make] the loan to the borrower from funds belonging to the broker." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10240(b); see Engstrom v. Kallins (1996) 49 CA4th 773, 780, 56 CR2d 842, 847—§ 10240(b) broadens coverage of Bus. & Prof.C. § 10240 "to include not only situations where a real estate broker acts as mortgage broker … but also where a real estate broker initially offers himself as a mortgage broker but in fact ends up the lender …"]

(1) [6:169] Contents of disclosure statement: The contents of the requisite disclosure statement are prescribed by Bus. & Prof.C. § 10241.

The required items include the estimated maximum costs to be paid by the borrower (including, but not limited to, appraisal fee, escrow fee, title charges, notary fee, recording fee, credit investigation fees), the loan brokerage commission, terms of the loan and maturity date of the loan. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10241]

(a) [6:170] Mandatory: The items prescribed by Bus. & Prof.C. § 10241 are mandatory: "No real estate licensee shall permit the statement to be signed by a borrower if any information required by Section 10241 is omitted." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10240(a)]

(2) [6:171] Official disclosure form: The broker's disclosure statement must be made on a form approved by the Real Estate Commissioner. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10241] The approved "Mortgage Loan Disclosure Statement" is published by the California Department of Real Estate. [See 10 CCR § 2840 et seq. (also containing other restrictions and requirements concerning disclosures and loan brokerage matters)]

(3) [6:171.1] Copy to be retained: A "true and correct copy" of the Bus. & Prof.C. § 10241 disclosure statement signed by the borrower must be retained by the broker for three years. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10240(a)]

(4) [6:171.2] Alternative form of compliance in federally-regulated residential mortgage loan transactions: Real estate brokers negotiating a federally-regulated residential mortgage loan may satisfy the Bus. & Prof.C. § 10240 disclosure requirements (¶ 6:168 ff.) by providing the borrower with (a) a "good faith estimate" that satisfies the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act (12 USC § 2601 et seq., ¶ 4:639 ff.), (b) all applicable disclosures required by the federal Truth in Lending Act (15 USC § 1601 et seq.), and (c) an additional statutorily-specified disclosure if the loan contains a balloon payment provision. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10240(c); see further discussion at ¶ 2:215.3]

Before becoming obligated on the loan, the borrower must acknowledge in writing receipt of the "good faith estimate" and all applicable Truth in Lending disclosures. The broker must retain for three years a copy of the signed acknowledgment along with the acknowledged "good faith estimate" and disclosures. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10240(c)]

[6:171.3 - 6:171.4] Reserved.

(5) [6:171.5] Additional cosigner disclosure—consumer credit contracts: If the loan constitutes a "consumer credit contract" (i.e., loan made primarily for personal, family or household purposes, see Civ.C. § 1799.90(a)(5)), cosigners who do not in fact receive any of the loan proceeds or services that are the subject matter of the contract must be given notice as prescribed by Civ.C. § 1799.91 before the cosigners become obligated on the contract. The notice essentially explains a cosigner's liability as guarantor on the obligation. [See Civ.C. § 1799.91; Engstrom v. Kallins (1996) 49 CA4th 773, 778-781, 56 CR2d 842, 845-847]

No action may be brought or security interest enforced against the cosigner if the requisite notice is not given. [Civ.C. § 1799.95]

(6) [6:172] Other statutory disclosures: The Civil Code requires additional statutory disclosures by an "arranger of credit" of a purchase money lien on residential property. [See Civ.C. §§ 2956-2967]

d. [6:173] Loan broker's duties and standards of conduct: A loan broker is generally held to the same duties and standards of conduct as a real estate broker (see ¶ 2:155 ff.).

General agency principles, combined with the statutory duties created by the real estate law, impose on mortgage loan brokers an obligation to make full and accurate disclosures of the terms of a loan and to always act in utmost good faith as a fiduciary toward their principals. [Wyatt v. Union Mortgage Co. (1979) 24 C3d 773, 782, 157 CR 392, 397; see also Montoya v. McLeod (1985) 176 CA3d 57, 63, 221 CR 353, 357-358; *UMET Trust v. Santa Monica Med. Inv.    f. [6:187] Loan closing mechanics

3. [6:188] Default Under Trust Deed by Breach of Loan Agreement

1. [6:180] Nature and Utilization of Loan Agreement: Borrowers and lenders sometimes enter into a loan agreement as part of the loan documentation. A loan agreement is usually executed just prior to or at the loan closing (at the same time the promissory note, deed of trust and other loan documents are executed and delivered to the lender).

Loan agreements vary in scope and purpose, depending on the kind of loan involved. They typically are not used in simple loan transactions (such as single family residential loans). However, in larger, more complex loan transactions, the lender may require a loan agreement in addition to its other standard loan documentation. (For example, construction loans almost always involve a separate loan agreement.) The loan agreement typically defines and explains the terms of the contemplated loans; and, in some cases, may operate as a binding "loan commitment" (¶ 6:130 ff.). [See Fischer v. First Int'l Bank (2003) 109 CA4th 1433, 1447-1448, 1 CR3d 162, 172]

Many provisions of a loan agreement commonly are duplicated in other loan documents, making the agreement appear in some cases redundant and perhaps even unnecessary. On the other hand, a loan agreement can occasionally have a profound effect in defining the operative and controlling terms of an overall loan transaction, as where it is incorporated by reference into the deed of trust. [See Fischer v. First Int'l Bank, supra, 109 CA4th at 1447-1448, 1 CR3d at 172—loan agreement incorporated as "related document" into deed of trust was critical to dispute over enforceability of "dragnet clause" permitting cross-collateralization of two loans]

• FORM: Construction Loan Agreement, see Form 6:A.

2. [6:181] Terms: Loan agreements generally cover the following subjects:

a. [6:182] Loan terms: The interest rate, maturity date and other economic terms of the loan.

b. [6:183] Loan fees: The various loan fees and expenses to be paid by the borrower.

c. [6:184] Borrower's representations, warranties and ongoing covenants: Various representations by, and covenants of, the borrower.

These typically include certain ongoing covenants concerning the borrower's operation of the property; the borrower's required continued minimum net worth; the borrower's obligation to maintain capital reserves, etc.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

d. [6:185] Conditions to funding: Conditions precedent to funding of the loan (e.g., receipt of lender's title insurance policy, borrower's counsel's opinion letter, hazard insurance certificates, etc.).

e. [6:186] Disbursements and use of loan proceeds: In certain kinds of special purpose loans (such as construction loans), loan funds will only be disbursed for specific purposes in accordance with a disbursement schedule. The terms and conditions of disbursement are covered in the loan agreement. [See Storek & Storek, Inc. v. Citicorp Real Estate, Inc. (2002) 100 CA4th 44, 48-50, 122 CR2d 267, 271-272]

f. [6:187] Loan closing mechanics: Loan agreements also often describe the mechanics of closing and funding of the loan —e.g., whether a loan escrow will be used, to whom funds will be disbursed at closing, etc.

3. [6:188] Default Under Trust Deed by Breach of Loan Agreement: Because loan agreements include ongoing obligations of the borrower during the loan term (which obligations might not be stated in the deed of trust), the deed of trust will usually provide that a default under the loan agreement constitutes a default under the deed of trust.

1. [6:190] Significance in Loan Transactions: Although a borrower might execute several documents that together embody the terms of the loan, the promissory note evidences the borrower's basic monetary obligation to the lender. [See State of Calif. ex rel. Bowen v. Bank of America Corp. (2005) 126 CA4th 225, 231, 23 CR3d 746, 750]

Promissory notes range from simple to complex. The sections at ¶ 6:192 ff. analyze those provisions typically found in more complex promissory notes.

FORMS

- Promissory Note Secured by Deed of Trust (Simple), see Form 6:F.
- Promissory Note Secured by Deed of Trust (Complex), see Form 6:G.

➪ [6:191] PRACTICE POINTER: Be aware that the titles placed at the top of various form promissory notes published by title insurance companies (e.g., "straight note" or "installment—interest included") can be misleading.

It is the author's opinion, and the apparent consensus of the real estate bar, that such titles serve no useful purpose and, indeed, only create confusion. Promissory note titles used by title insurance companies have no legal definition; consequently, the better practice is to avoid incomplete or misleading titles and let the body of the note itself describe how interest and principal are to be paid.

By the same token, also keep in mind that certain capitalized headings are statutorily required for variable interest rate loans (see ¶ 6:205).

2. [6:192] Principal Amount: The "face" (i.e., "principal") amount of the loan is stated on the note.

Even if only a portion of the principal is initially disbursed at the time the note is executed (as under a construction loan), the note nevertheless should reflect a face amount equal to the total amount of principal the lender can be required to disburse under the loan. (See ¶ 6:54 ff. re periodic disbursement of construction loans.)

3. [6:193] Payor ("Maker" or "Obligor"): If there is more than one payor ("maker" or "obligor") of the note, the note should state the obligations of the makers or obligors are joint and several.

4. [6:194] Payee ("Holder"): The payee ("holder" of the note) should be identified by name, followed by the words "or order" (or other words indicating the payee's assignee will be entitled to payment). (See ¶ 6:196 ff. re negotiability of notes.)

In addition, the payee's address (or any other address at which payments are to be made) should be stated with specificity.

a. [6:195] Multiple payees: Borrowers typically are not concerned with how the payment proceeds will be allocated among multiple payees. Multiple payees, however, may wish to set up a collection account or otherwise create a mechanism for allocating the borrower's payments (see ¶ 6:93 ff.).

5. [6:196] Negotiability: Every payee under a note wants the note to be "negotiable" so that, in the event the payee assigns its interest in the note, the assignee will be a "holder in due course." [See Creative Ventures, LLC v. Jim Ward & Assocs. (2011) 195 CA4th 1430, 1447, 126 CR3d 564, 577—negotiation transfers instrument itself, allowing it to function as money substitute (transfer absent negotiation merely vests in transferee any rights transferor may have had to enforce instrument)]

a. [6:197] "Holder in due course" protections: A "holder in due course" is one who takes a negotiable instrument for value, in good faith and without notice it is overdue, has been dishonored or that there is any defense against the note. [Comm'l C. § 3302(a)(2); see also Creative Ventures, LLC v. Jim Ward & Assocs. (2011) 195 CA4th 1430, 1446, 126 CR3d 564, 576—"holder" is person in possession of negotiable instrument that is "payable either to bearer or, to an identified person that is the person in possession"; ¶ 6:198]

Thus, an assignee who is a holder in due course takes the note free of most defenses that could be raised by the borrower (except for defenses of illegality of the transaction, minority of the obligor, discharge in bankruptcy, and certain other limited defenses recognized by Comm'l C. § 3305(b)). [See Creative Ventures, LLC v. Jim Ward & Assocs., supra, 195 CA4th at 1445, 126 CR3d at 575—"holder in due course" takes their interest free of many defenses, including usury defense]

The defenses of a borrower which a holder in due course takes subject to are sometimes called "real" defenses. [Comm'l C. § 3305(a)(1)] Those defenses of a borrower which are cut off by a holder in due course (but which would otherwise be available to the borrower against the original payee) are sometimes called "personal" defenses.

b. [6:198] Mechanics: The specific requirements for making a note negotiable are set forth in Comm'l C. § 3104. In particular, the instrument must be "payable to bearer or to order at the time it is issued or first comes into possession of a holder." [Comm'l C. § 3104(a)(1); see also Creative Ventures, LLC v. Jim Ward & Assocs. (2011) 195 CA4th 1430, 1446-1447, 126 CR3d 564, 576-577—investors to whom corporation merely assigned fractional interests in various promissory notes were not "holders in due course" (negotiation does not occur, and transferee does not acquire holder's rights, unless entire instrument is endorsed and transferred)]

Generally, therefore, the note will be negotiable if made payable to a payee "or order" (or "other holder").

6. [6:199] Date of Accrual of Interest: The date of the note (and/or the date of borrower's execution of the note) may not coincide with actual funding of the loan; in that event, the date of the note (and/or date of borrower's execution) may be immaterial and will simply operate to identify the note. Therefore, if the date of funding is different from the actual date of the note, the note should state interest accrues from the date of funding.

➪ [6:200] PRACTICE POINTER: In many transactions, the buyer executes the note and other loan documents prior to the closing date of the loan. In those instances, it may be necessary for the buyer to authorize the escrow officer to fill in the date of the note (or the date for commencement of interest accrual).

7. [6:201] Interest Rate and Calculation: The interest rate must be clearly stated. Interest on a loan can accrue and be computed in an infinite number of ways. The most commonly used methods of calculating interest are as follows:

a. [6:202] Fixed rate: Under a fixed rate loan, the predetermined interest rate applies over the term of the loan (although there might be periodic fixed increases (or decreases) during the term).

(1) [6:203] May be nonassumable: Fixed rate loans (particularly those for single family residential transactions) are often not "assumable" (see ¶ 6:313 ff.). This is because lenders want to ensure new buyers will not be able to take advantage of an outdated fixed interest rate that might be lower than current rates.

b. [6:204] Variable rate: Under a variable rate loan (as its name implies), the interest rate may fluctuate over time. It might be fixed for an initial specified period, or it may have a minimum "floor" and maximum "ceiling," but the interest rate is tied to some index.

For example, the interest rate might be a certain number of percentage points above the so-called "prime" (or "reference") rate charged by the lender; or it might be tied to some other index, such as the weekly average yield on U.S. Treasury securities.

(1) [6:205] Statutory limitations on validity: Variable interest rate loans are subject to several statutory requirements (see Civ.C. § 1916.5).

In particular, a seller-financed loan must contain the following statement on the note in at least 10-point bold type (Civ.C. § 1916.5(a)(6)):

> "NOTICE TO BORROWER: THIS DOCUMENT CONTAINS PROVISIONS FOR A VARIABLE INTEREST RATE."

(2) [6:205.1] Adjustment date: The note should clearly specify the date upon which the initial rate may be adjusted and, thereafter, each date upon which the rate may again be adjusted.

When the adjustment date on a variable rate note is ambiguously drafted, general rules of contract interpretation apply. Where both parties offer "reasonable interpretations" and there is no evidence they specifically agreed one way or the other, the parties' conduct in performance under the note will be considered in determining the appropriate adjustment date. [See Oceanside 84, Ltd. v. Fidelity Fed. Bank (1997) 56 CA4th 1441, 1449-1451, 66 CR2d 487, 492-494 (dispute over what was meant by term "applicable month" in note providing that "all adjusted interest rates shall be established on the 26th day of the applicable month …")—borrower acquiesced to lender's determination of adjustment date for at least 5 years]

c. [6:206] Contingent interest: Lenders are sometimes entitled to additional or "contingent" interest (¶ 6:60 ff.). In such cases, the amount of the additional interest (or the specific method for calculating same) should be clearly stated in the note.

(Although such promissory notes need not contain any special title, the deed of trust for a shared appreciation loan must state on its face that it secures a shared appreciation loan. See Civ.C. § 1917.004(b), ¶ 6:69.)

d. [6:207] Pay rate vs. accrual rate: Sometimes, the interest rate on a loan ("accrual rate") is greater than the so-called "pay rate" (rate borrower actually pays on an ongoing basis).

For example, assume the interest rate on the principal amount accrues at 11% per annum ("accrual rate"), although the borrower is only required to pay installments of interest at the rate of 9% per annum ("pay rate"). The 2% differential between the pay rate and accrual rate would be paid by the borrower at a later date—usually at loan maturity.

➪ [6:208] PRACTICE POINTER: A note containing a pay rate different than the accrual rates can generate problems if it fails to state whether the deferred interest is to be added to principal (with interest to accrue thereon). The note should specifically state how the deferred interest is to be treated and, therefore, whether accrued but unpaid interest is also to accrue interest.

e. [6:209] Interest in arrears: Interest is paid in arrears and, therefore, the first installment of interest due on a loan is due after the loan is funded. However, because many lenders want payments made on the first or 15th day of each month (and because the loan might not close on the first or 15th day of the month), the first payment for a partial month must often be adjusted. In those situations, at the loan closing, either (1) the first partial month payment is paid in advance; or (2) the first partial month payment is added to the first full monthly payment.

f. [6:209.1] Simple vs. compound interest: Interest is said to be "compound" when it is added to principal and accrues interest itself (essentially, "interest on interest"). By statute, interest "shall not be compounded" and interest may not be construed to bear interest "unless an agreement to that effect is clearly expressed in writing and signed by the party to be charged therewith" (the borrower). [Civ.C. § 1916-2 (emphasis added); Curry v. Moody (1995) 40 CA4th 1547, 1553, 48 CR2d 627, 630-631]

Extrinsic evidence of the parties' intent is not admissible to show that a loan bears compound interest. Absent a written agreement expressly providing for compound interest, the principal obligation accrues only simple interest (meaning the interest rate is applied to the principal unpaid balance without regard to interest that has already accrued). [McConnell v. Merrill Lynch, Pierce, Fenner & Smith, Inc. (1983) 33 C3d 816, 822-823, 191 CR 458, 462-463; see Curry v. Moody, supra, 40 CA4th at 1555-1556, 48 CR2d at 632—note providing for 13% per annum interest "payable at time of sale of the house" and stating "should interest not be so paid it shall thereafter bear like interest as the principal" authorized compound interest only from date of sale (not from inception of note)]

g. [6:209.5] Commencement of interest accrual—"one day rule" in secured residential property transactions: When the security is a mortgage or deed of trust on real property improved with one-to-four dwelling units, the borrower "shall not" be required to pay interest …

— for a period of more than one day before the loan proceeds are disbursed from escrow (Civ.C. § 2948.5(a)(1));

— if there is no escrow and a request for recordation of the mortgage or deed of trust is made, for a period of more than one day before the loan proceeds are disbursed to the borrower, a third party on the borrower's behalf, or the lender to satisfy an existing obligation of the borrower (Civ.C. § 2948.5(a)(2)); or

— in all other circumstances where there is no escrow and no request for recordation is made, for any period before the loan proceeds are disbursed to the borrower, a third party on the borrower's behalf, or the lender to satisfy an existing obligation of the borrower (Civ.C. § 2948.5(a)(3)). [Civ.C. § 2948.5(a); see also Fin.C. § 50204(o); Wells Fargo Bank N.A. v. Boutris (9th Cir. 2005) 419 F3d 949, 969—Civ.C. § 2948.5(a) not preempted by § 501(a)(1) of Depository Institutions Deregulation & Monetary Control Act (12 USC § 1735f-7a); and Quicken Loans, Inc. v. Wood (9th Cir. 2006) 449 F3d 944, 950-951—also holding Civ.C. § 2948.5(a) not preempted by Alternative Mortgage Transaction Parity Act (12 USC § 3801 et seq.) as applied to alternative mortgage transactions]

Interest on loans described in Civ.C. § 2948.5(a)(1) and (2) (¶ 6:209.5) may begin accruing on the business day immediately preceding the day of disbursement if both:

— the borrower requests and the lender agrees the recording will occur on Monday or a day immediately following a bank holiday; and

— the lender discloses to the borrower in writing the amount of the additional per diem interest that will accrue and that the borrower may be able to avoid the additional interest by recording on a day immediately following a business day (the borrower must sign a copy of the disclosure document before the funds are placed in escrow). [See Civ.C. § 2948.5(b); see also Fin.C. § 50204(o)]

Exception: Civ.C. § 2948.5 does not apply to loans subject to Bus. & Prof.C. § 10242(c) (loans secured by a dwelling), which states "No interest may be charged with respect to any period prior to the date that the proceeds of the loan are made available to the borrower or are deposited in escrow." [Civ.C. § 2948.5(c)]

8. [6:210] Principal Payments: Like interest, principal may be required to be paid in an infinite variety of ways. Principal is usually paid either on an amortized basis (¶ 6:215 ff.); on fixed, periodic dates (e.g., so many dollars every so many months, etc.); or in a so-called "balloon payment" at maturity (¶ 6:211 ff.).

a. [6:211] Statutory limitations on residential balloon payment loans: Certain statutory requirements apply to "balloon payment loans" with terms in excess of one year that are secured by a deed of trust on real property containing one to four residential units, at least one of which at the time the loan is made is (or is to be) occupied by the borrower. [Civ.C. § 2924i]

(1) [6:212] "Balloon payment loans": A Civ.C. § 2924i loan is a "balloon payment loan" if it either:

- provides for a final payment, as originally scheduled, that is more than twice the amount of the immediately preceding six regularly scheduled payments; or

- contains a "call provision." [Civ.C. § 2924i(d)(1)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

A "call provision" permits the holder to call the loan due and payable at any time after a specified period has elapsed. [Civ.C. § 2924i(d)(2)]

(2) [6:213] Required notice to borrower before final balloon payment: Among other requirements imposed by Civ.C. § 2924i, at least 90 days (but not more than 150 days) prior to the due date of the final balloon payment, the holder of the loan must deliver to the borrower (or borrower's successor) a written notice (via first class mail) stating:

• the name and address of the person to whom final payment is required to be made;

• the date on or before which the final payment is to be made; and

• the amount of the final payment (or if the exact amount is unknown, a good faith estimate of the amount). [Civ.C. § 2924i(c)(1), (2) & (3)]

(a) [6:214] Effect of noncompliance: Failure to provide the notice set forth at ¶ 6:213 does not exonerate the borrower from its obligation to pay the loan, but the maturity date will be extended until such time as proper notice has been given. [Civ.C. § 2924i(e)]

b. Amortization

(1) [6:215] Self-amortization: A "self-amortizing" loan is payable in equal installments during the term of the loan. Each installment represents an aggregate of principal and interest, although that portion of the payment allocable to principal and that portion allocable to interest varies over time.

(a) [6:216] Amortization schedule: The amortization period might be longer than the term of the loan. For example, a loan with a seven-year maturity date might have an amortization schedule based on a 25-year loan. The installment payments would thus be based on a 25-year amortized loan, but a large balloon payment would be due in the seventh year.

(2) [6:217] Negative amortization: A "negative amortization" loan requires monthly (or other periodic installment) payments which do not cover the interest due. As a result, the principal balance due on a negative amortization loan increases over time.

9. [6:218] Maturity Date: A clear and specific maturity date, "at which time all accrued, but unpaid interest and all outstanding principal shall become due and payable," should be stated in the note.

10. [6:219] Application of Payments: Generally, where the parties fail to designate the order of application of the borrower's payments, payments are to be applied first to "interest due at the time of the performance" and then to the "principal due at that time." [See Civ.C. § 1479]

a. [6:219.1] Comment: Customarily, the note (or deed of trust) specifies how payments are to be applied. From the lender's perspective, it is beneficial to provide that each payment shall be applied first to costs and attorney fees on account of collection (if any); second, to the borrower's fees, expenses and obligations advanced by the lender pursuant to the security documents; third, to late charges (if any); fourth, to interest then accrued and due; and lastly, to principal.

11. [6:220] Form of Payment: Many notes state all sums due are payable "in lawful money of the United States of America."

12. [6:221] Reference to Security: In secured financing transactions, it is advisable that the note state it is secured by a deed of trust from the borrower, as trustor, in favor of lender, as beneficiary; and it should identify the real property pledged as security.

13. [6:222] Events of Default: Events of default under the note should be defined, identifying any cure (or so-called "grace") periods.

14. [6:223] Acceleration Upon Default: An "acceleration provision" is essential for lenders. It permits the lender to accelerate all sums due under the loan upon a default by the borrower. Without a right of acceleration, the lender would have to sue on each defaulted installment as and when it became due—an unacceptably cumbersome procedure.

15. [6:224] Late Payment Charges: Any late payment charges which can be imposed by the lender should be clearly identified, including whether the borrower must be given prior notice before the late charge is incurred.

Limitations: Late charges are subject to several statutory restrictions:

a. [6:224.1] Prior notice requirement: As a condition to the collection of a late payment charge, the borrower must be given prior written notice of the payment due date and of the amount of the late charge. Such notification can be included with the billing. [See Civ.C. § 2954.5]

If notification is given after the payment becomes due, the borrower must be given at least 10 days from mailing of the notice in which to cure the delinquency before a late charge may be imposed. [See Civ.C. § 2954.5]

b. [6:225] Additional requirements re single family residence loans: Late charges in connection with loans secured by real property containing a single-family, owner-occupied dwelling are subject to the following restrictions (Civ.C. §§ 2954.4 & 2954.5):

• [6:226] The charge for a late payment may not exceed the greater of (i) 6% of the installment due, or (ii) $5. [Civ.C. § 2954.4(a)]

• [6:227] No charge may be imposed more than once for late payment of the same installment. [Civ.C. § 2954.4(a)]

• [6:228] A payment may not be deemed late for purposes of incurring late payment charges until at least 10 days after the due date has passed. [Civ.C. § 2954.4(a)]

(1) [6:229] "Property inspection fees" distinguished: Deeds of trust commonly give the lender the right to take reasonably necessary steps to protect the value of the security should the borrower default; this may include the right to conduct and charge the defaulted borrower for a property inspection and repairs. [See Walker v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. (2002) 98 CA4th 1158, 1165, 121 CR2d 79, 83]

Such "property inspection fees" are not "late charges" subject to the limitations of Civ.C. § 2954.4. Unlike a "late charge," which is designed to encourage timely payment or to compensate the lender for loss of interest on late payments, the "property inspection fee" reflects the actual cost the lender incurs to protect its security. [Walker v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., supra, 98 CA4th at 1171-1172, 121 CR2d at 88-89]

c. [6:230] Liquidated damages limitations: A late payment charge is essentially a form of liquidated damages. Therefore, even when a late charge is not otherwise regulated by specific statute (see Civ.C. § 2954.4, ¶ 6:225, re single family residence loans), its validity is subject to the restrictions on liquidated damages (Civ.C. § 1671). [Civ.C. § 1671; Ridgley v. Topa Thrift & Loan Ass'n (1998) 17 C4th 970, 978, 73 CR2d 378, 382]

(1) [6:231] "Reasonableness" issue: Broadly, the validity of a liquidated damages clause is tested by its "reasonableness": "[A] provision in a contract liquidating the damages for the breach of the contract is valid unless the party seeking to invalidate the provision establishes that the provision was unreasonable under the circumstances existing at the time the contract was made." [Civ.C. § 1671(b) (emphasis added); Ridgley v. Topa Thrift & Loan Ass'n (1998) 17 C4th 970, 977, 73 CR2d 378, 381; Purcell v. Schweitzer (2014) 224 CA4th 969, 974, 169 CR3d 90, 94 (¶ 6:233.3); see also Krechuniak v. Noorzoy (2017) 11 CA5th 713, 722, 217 CR3d 740, 748—liquidated damages provision may be invalid if estimate of damages resulting from breach is outside range of reasonableness known to parties at time of estimate; ¶ 4:315 ff.]

Compare: While liquidated damages clauses in non-consumer contracts such as mortgages are presumed valid, liquidated damages clauses are presumed void in consumer contracts involving the "retail purchase, or rental … of personal property or services, primarily for … personal, family or household purposes," or "a lease of real property for use as a dwelling." [See Civ.C. § 1671(b), (c); Honchariw v. FJM Private Mortgage Fund, LLC (2022) 83 CA5th 893, 905, 299 CR3d 819, 828—validity presumption re non-consumer mortgage contracts did not preclude finding liquidated damages provision violated public policy (¶ 6:233)]

[6:232] Application: Case law provides some guidance for counsel in determining standards of "reasonableness" for this purpose.

• [6:233] A late charge will be deemed invalid as "unreasonable" (an invalid "penalty") if assessed against the entire unpaid principal balance of an unmatured loan. [Garrett v. Coast & Southern Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1973) 9 C3d 731, 740, 108 CR 845, 851—"It is an attempt to coerce timely payment by a forfeiture which is not reasonably calculated to merely compensate the injured lender"; see also Honchariw v. FJM Private Mortgage Fund, LLC (2022) 83 CA5th

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

893, 904-905, 299 CR3d 819, 827-828—"liquidated damages in the form of a penalty assessed during the lifetime of a partially matured note against the entire outstanding loan amount are unlawful penalties"]

• [6:233.1] A "prepayment charge" (despite its label as such) will be invalidated as an unenforceable penalty where it is triggered only by a late monthly payment entirely unrelated to the borrower's subsequent election to prepay the loan. [Ridgley v. Topa Thrift & Loan Ass'n (1998) 17 C4th 970, 981-982, 73 CR2d 378, 384-385—"prepayment charge" of 6 months' interest on principal unenforceable as invalid liquidated damages; see further discussion at ¶ 6:259.5 ff.]

• [6:233.2] A promissory note's clause requiring the obligor to pay 10% of any installment tendered late is an unenforceable penalty provision if applied to the final balloon payment. "[W]e can state as a matter of law a late charge provision covering administrative expenses that amounts to $614.67 for one late payment and $77,614.67 for another is not a reasonable attempt to estimate actual administrative costs incurred …" [Poseidon Develop., Inc. v. Woodland Lane Estates, LLC (2007) 152 CA4th 1106, 1115-1116, 62 CR3d 59, 65-66 (noting provision expressly indicated late charge was to compensate for administrative expenses)]

• [6:233.3] A provision in a settlement agreement reinstating the full, original amount owed if the borrower makes one late payment constitutes an unenforceable penalty because the provision bears no reasonable relationship to the damages the lender may be expected to actually suffer as a result of the borrower's breach. [See Purcell v. Schweitzer (2014) 224 CA4th 969, 975-976, 169 CR3d 90, 95—stipulation allowing entry of judgment for almost $60,000 deemed unenforceable penalty because underlying settlement was for $38,000]

• [6:234] On the other hand, late charges on a monthly (or other periodic) installment are not per se unreasonable; indeed, if the late charge is deemed to be an alternative method for performance, it will not be considered an invalid penalty. (In other words, if the borrower has the choice of making a timely payment or making a late payment with an additional charge, the note will be deemed to provide for an alternative method of performance.) [Garrett v. Coast & Southern Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1973) 9 C3d 731, 735-738, 108 CR 845, 847-849]

Nonetheless, a late charge must bear some reasonable relation to the actual damages suffered by the lender for the delay in payment. [Garrett v. Coast & Southern Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, supra, 9 C3d at 739-740, 108 CR at 850-851; Ridgley v. Topa Thrift & Loan Ass'n (1998) 17 C4th 970, 978, 73 CR2d 378, 382; see also Greentree Fin'l Group, Inc. v. Execute Sports, Inc. (2008) 163 CA4th 495, 500, 78 CR3d 24, 28—late charges encourage borrowers to make timely payments and compensate lenders for lost use of money and reasonable costs in pursuing payment; compare Honchariw v. FJM Private Mortgage Fund, LLC (2022) 83 CA5th 893, 904, 299 CR3d 819, 826-827—loan agreement indicating default would impose specified loan servicing expenses, lost use of money and frustration to lender in meeting other financial commitments, coupled with one-word testimony averring late charges were fair and reasonable cost estimate, was insufficient to demonstrate reasonable relationship between actual and anticipated damages from breach]

➪ [6:235] PRACTICE POINTER: Following the guidelines noted at ¶ 6:232 ff., it may help to include language in a late payment charge provision indicating that, in fixing the specified charge, the parties considered the actual damages that would likely be suffered by the lender should the borrower default on timely payment of an installment. Some lenders specifically identify in the note various items of damage they will suffer—e.g., loss of use of the funds, cost of administering a default, etc. However, in view of Honchariw (¶ 6:234), lender's counsel should be prepared to buttress any language in the late payment charge provision with specific evidence should the provision be challenged.

d. [6:236] Risk of violating usury laws: Provisions for late charges must also be worded so as not to be the equivalent of additional interest that might run afoul of usury laws. See ¶ 6:286.

16. [6:237] Default Interest Rates: Some promissory notes provide that, upon the borrower's default, the interest rate on the overdue amount will automatically increase by a specified percentage. This increased charge might be in addition to, or in lieu of, a late payment charge.

➪ [6:238] PRACTICE POINTERS: Viewed as a charge in respect of a borrower's default, default interest rates undoubtedly should be subject to the limitations on enforceability of late payment charges (including restrictions on the validity of liquidated damages). Therefore, when drafting a default interest rate provision, it is advisable to include the same recitations utilized in connection with late payment charges (see ¶ 6:235; see also ¶ 6:286 re usury issues).

In addition, if the lender's intent is to charge default interest following any monetary default, lender's counsel should ensure the promissory note's default interest rate provision applies not only after acceleration, but also when the loan matures and no payment is made. [See JCC Develop. Corp. v. Levy (2012) 208 CA4th 1522, 1524, 1535, 146 CR3d 635, 636, 645—borrower's failure to make payment upon loan's maturity did not trigger promissory note's default interest rate provision made expressly applicable to "circumstances of acceleration" only]

17. [6:239] Due-On-Sale/Due-On-Encumbrance Clause: A "due-on-sale" clause permits the lender to accelerate all sums due under the loan upon sale of the property by the original borrower. Similarly, a "due-on-encumbrance" clause permits the lender to accelerate all sums due under the loan if the borrower pledges the property as security for another obligation.

Cross-refer: Both types of acceleration clauses are discussed in detail at ¶ 6:388 ff. in connection with deeds of trust.

a. [6:240] Parallel deed of trust/promissory note provisions required for certain residential secured financing transactions: Such acceleration provisions are commonly incorporated into a deed of trust. However, if a due-on-sale clause is set forth in a deed of trust encumbering property containing four or fewer residential units (or on which four or fewer residential units are to be constructed), it must also be set forth in the promissory note (or other document evidencing the secured obligation). Noncompliance renders the due-on-sale clause invalid. [Civ.C. § 2924.5; see ¶ 6:396]

18. [6:241] Attorney Fees and Costs of Collection: Most promissory notes contain a provision requiring the borrower to pay the lender's attorney fees and other costs of collection upon the borrower's default. (A similar attorney fees provision may be included in the deed of trust, or other security instrument. See Chase Manhattan Mortg. Corp. v. Lessel (1997) 55 CA4th 10, 11-12, 64 CR2d 113, 114; and ¶ 6:417.5.)

Limitations: Such fees and costs provisions are subject to two important statutory restrictions:

a. [6:242] Reciprocal "prevailing party" entitlement: By law, contracts (including promissory notes) expressly providing that attorney fees and costs incurred in an action to enforce the contract shall be awarded either to one of the parties or to the prevailing party, will be interpreted as authorizing a fees and costs recovery in favor of whichever party is determined to be the party prevailing on the contract—whether or not they are the party specified in the contract. [Civ.C. § 1717(a); see ¶ 11:136 ff.]

Moreover, a contractual fee provision in one section of the contract applies to the entire contract unless the agreement specifies each party was represented by counsel in the agreement's negotiation and execution and that fact is stated in the contract. [Civ.C. § 1717(a); see Andrade v. Western Riverside Council of Governments (2024) 99 CA5th 1020, 1026-1027, 318 CR3d 396, 401-402 (finding Civ.C. § 1717's goal is to avoid "lopsided arrangements" where one party can limit the other's attorney fee recovery to particular types of claims)—error to deny § 1717 fees to homeowner seeking rescission of loan agreements that impermissibly limited fee provisions to judicial foreclosure actions]

In fact, the right to § 1717 reciprocal recovery of fees and costs is available even if the party seeking reimbursement "prevails on grounds the contract is inapplicable, invalid, unenforceable or nonexistent, if the other party would have been entitled to attorney's fees had it prevailed." [See Andrade v. Western Riverside Council of Governments, supra, 99 CA5th at 1025-1026, 318 CR3d at 400 (internal quotes and citation omitted)—homeowner fraudulently enrolled in a Property Assessed Clean Energy (PACE) program could recover attorney fees in action to rescind PACE loan documents because they provided for lender's recovery of fees and enforcement costs (above)]

(1) [6:242.1] Recovery by or against nonsignatories: Civ.C. § 1717 provides a reciprocal "prevailing party" right to attorney fees in favor of a nonsignatory defendant sued on the note if the plaintiff would have been entitled to Civ.C. § 1717 fees in the event they prevailed in enforcing the note against the defendant nonsignatory. [Reynolds Metals Co. v. Alperson (1979) 25 C3d 124, 128, 158 CR 1, 3; compare Curry v. Moody (1995) 40 CA4th 1547, 1557, 48 CR2d 627, 633—nonsignatories not entitled to § 1717 fees where opposing party ineligible for § 1717 fees against nonsignatories]

Similarly, a defendant who has signed the note providing for attorney fees generally is entitled to fees if it prevails against a nonsignatory plaintiff in an action on the note, so long as the nonsignatory plaintiff would have been entitled to recover their fees had they prevailed in the action. [Real Property Services Corp. v. City of Pasadena (1994) 25 CA4th 375, 380-382, 30 CR2d 536, 539-541; Abdallah v. United Sav. Bank (1996) 43 CA4th 1101, 1111, 51 CR2d 286, 293; see also Cargill, Inc. v. Souza (2011) 201 CA4th 962, 964-965, 134 CR3d 39, 40-41—nonsignatory plaintiff liable for attorney fees in action it commenced on contract previously entered into between signatory defendants and nonsignatory plaintiff's debtors (¶ 11:139.28d)]

(2) [6:242.2] Limited to actions on note: There is an entitlement to Civ.C. § 1717 attorney fees only in litigation on the contract providing for a prevailing party's attorney fees recovery (Civ.C. § 1717(a)). Thus, despite a fee recovery provision in the promissory note, § 1717 fees are not awardable where the cause of action pleaded, and on which either party prevails, is not an action on the note. [Curry v. Moody (1995) 40 CA4th 1547, 1557, 48 CR2d 627, 633—no entitlement to § 1717 fees pursuant to attorney fees provision in promissory note where complaint pled only causes of action for declaratory relief and to quiet title based on forged reconveyance; Walker v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. (2002) 98 CA4th 1158, 1180-1181, 121 CR2d 79, 95—no entitlement to § 1717 fees pursuant to attorney fees provision in promissory note where action was "principally one to enjoin an unfair business practice"; compare Andrade v. Western Riverside Council of Governments (2024) 99 CA5th 1020, 1025-1026, 318 CR3d 396, 400-401—suit to rescind fraudulent loan documents deemed "action on the contract" justifying § 1717 fee award (¶ 6:241); Yoon v. Cam IX Trust (2021) 60 CA5th 388, 392-393, 274 CR3d 506, 510-511 (affirming § 1717 fee award against borrower who unsuccessfully challenged foreclosure sale based on tort theories)—suit's gravamen was to avoid enforcement of note and deed of trust and therefore was "based on a contract" regardless of relief sought; see also Kachlon v. Markowitz (2008) 168 CA4th 316, 347-348, 85 CR3d 532, 556-557 (concluding § 1717 fees warranted even though remedies sought were equitable)—action for declaratory relief, to enjoin nonjudicial foreclosure sale, and to quiet title that arose out of promissory note and trust deed containing attorney fee clauses deemed "on the contract" because said action essentially sought to enforce note and trust deed's terms]

By the same token, mere joinder of noncontract causes of action does not dilute the right to attorney fees incurred in a successful action on the note (the contract cause of action). Moreover, attorney fees need not be apportioned between the various causes of action to the extent incurred on issues common to both the contract and noncontract causes of action. [Reynolds Metals Co. v. Alperson (1979) 25 C3d 124, 129-130, 158 CR 1, 4; see Webber v. Inland Empire Investments, Inc. (1999) 74 CA4th 884, 919, 88 CR2d 594, 617-618]

(a) [6:242.3] Interim attorney fee awards distinguished: Absent specific statutory authorization, attorney fee awards on contract claims are not available until final disposition of an entire case. [Chen v. Valstock Ventures, LLC (2022) 81 CA5th 957, 983, 295 CR3d 666, 685 (reversing interim attorney fee award to party who won summary adjudication of all contractual claims under lease while non-contractual claims had yet to be tried); compare Civ.C. § 2924.12(h) (special, HBOR provision permitting interim fee awards (¶ 6:524.20))]

b. [6:243] Ceiling on trustee's/attorney's fees chargeable on secured loan reinstatement: Also, there is a statutory limit on the maximum amount of trustee's fees or attorney's fees that may be charged in connection with reinstating a loan secured by real property (upon the borrower's default). [Civ.C. § 2924c(d)]

The statutory formula for calculating the maximum fee amount is based on the unpaid principal obligation secured by the real property. The fee is a flat $350 for obligations of $50,000 or less. If the principal balance is greater than $50,000 but no more than $150,000, the $350 fee is increased by 1/2% of the difference between the unpaid principal and $50,000. If the unpaid principal exceeds $150,000 but is no more than $500,000, the base drops to $300, and is increased by 1/2% of the difference between $50,000 and $150,000, plus 1/4% of the difference between the unpaid principal and $150,000. If the obligation exceeds $500,000, the base is $300, and is increased by 1/2% of the difference between $50,000 and $150,000, plus 1/4% of the difference between the unpaid principal and $500,000, plus 1/8% of the difference between the unpaid principal and $500,000. [See Civ.C. § 2924c(d)—"unpaid principal sum secured" is determined as of notice of default's recordation date]

Example 1: Assume the unpaid principal on a note secured by real property is $140,000 on the date a notice of default is recorded. The maximum allowable fee would be the $350 base amount plus 1/2% of the unpaid principal in excess of $50,000, or ($140,000 − $50,000 = $90,000 x 1/2% = $450), for a total fee of $800 ($350 + 450).

Example 2: Assume the unpaid principal on a note secured by real property is $750,000 on the date a notice of default is recorded. The maximum allowable fee would be the $300 base amount, plus 1/2% of the amount between $50,000 and $150,000 ($150,000 − $50,000 = $100,000 x 1/2% = $500), plus 1/4% of the amount between $150,000 and $500,000 ($500,000 − $150,000 = $350,000 x 1/4% = $875), plus 1/8% of the excess of the unpaid principal over $500,000 ($750,000 − $500,000 = $250,000 x 1/8% = $312.50) for a total fee of $1,987.50 ($300 + $500 + $875 + $312.50).

(1) [6:244] Application to lender's litigation attorney fees: Civ.C. § 2924c(d) is itself ambiguous regarding the extent to which the specified limit applies when a lender seeks to obtain its attorney fees for litigation in addition to the trustee's fees incurred in connection with a foreclosure. Although the law is not entirely settled, some general guidelines are apparent from two leading cases in this area:

(a) [6:245] Statutory limit inapplicable to fees "collateral" to foreclosure: One case holds the lender's litigation attorney fees may exceed the Civ.C. § 2924c(d) limit where the deed of trust expressly authorizes the lender (beneficiary) to protect its security and, in doing so, to employ counsel and pay counsel's reasonable fees. Here, the claimed attorney fees are essentially in the nature of a "collateral advance" recoverable because the deed of trust permits that sum to be added to the secured debt. [Buck v. Barb (1983) 147 CA3d 920, 925, 195 CR 461, 463-464—creditor can add attorney fees incurred in protecting security as authorized by deed of trust]

(b) [6:246] Statutory limit applies to fees incurred to commence and prosecute foreclosure action: However, case law also makes clear that, at least as to attorney fees incurred with respect to a judicial foreclosure action, the Civ.C. § 2924c(d) limitation will apply where the debtor seeks to cure the default and reinstate the loan prior to the issuance of a decree of foreclosure. [Bruntz v. Alfaro (1989) 212 CA3d 411, 419-422, 260 CR 488, 492-494]

(c) [6:247] Comment: In reading Buck and Bruntz together, it seems the lender is not precluded from recovering attorney fees in excess of the statutory limit to the extent those fees are incurred for something other than the ordinary prosecution of a judicial foreclosure action prior to the entry of a decree of foreclosure.

Civ.C. § 2924c(d) provides the maximum fees that may be claimed as expenses of foreclosing on the property. "But aside from the expenses of foreclosure, there are other costs, including legal fees, which may be incurred by a creditor in protecting the security. Under appropriate contract provisions, such expenses may be treated as collateral advances and added to the amount of the debt. Whether a particular expense may be treated as an advance, or is subject to the limitations in Civil Code section 2924c, will depend upon the purpose for which the expense was incurred and the particular contractual terms involved." [Bruntz v. Alfaro (1989) 212 CA3d 411, 421, 260 CR 488, 494; see also Passanisi v. Merit-McBride Realtors, Inc. (1987) 190 CA3d 1496, 1512, 236 CR 59, 69, fn. 10]

(2) [6:248] Compare—recoverable fees in connection with judicial decree of foreclosure: Civ.C. § 2924c(d) does not apply where the debtor does not seek to cure the default and a lender's foreclosure action proceeds to a decree of judicial foreclosure. Upon issuing a judgment of foreclosure, the court has discretion to award "reasonable" attorney fees, costs and expenses if provided for in the note, deed of trust or mortgage, pursuant to CCP § 580c. [See Civ.C. § 2924d(e); Bruntz v. Alfaro (1989) 212 CA3d 411, 420, 260 CR 488, 493]

Similarly, CCP § 730 empowers the court in a judicial foreclosure proceeding to fix awardable attorney fees. But the statute does not create an entitlement to fees nor independently authorize the court to award fees. Rather, the power to determine awardable fees under CCP § 730 is triggered only if either party is entitled to fees pursuant to an attorney fees clause in the security instrument (or, presumably, the promissory note) and thus only if there is a prevailing party entitled to fees under Civ.C. § 1717. [See Chase Manhattan Mortg. Corp. v. Lessel (1997) 55 CA4th 10, 13-14, 64 CR2d 113, 115—per Civ.C. § 1717(b)(2), voluntary dismissal of judicial foreclosure action precluded borrower's claim to prevailing party fees under clause in deed of trust]

c. [6:249] Attorney fees recovery under nonrecourse loan: Under a nonrecourse loan, the borrower ordinarily has no personal liability for defaults and the lender's sole recourse is against the security for the loan (see ¶ 6:402). The lender must likewise look solely to the security for payment of its attorney fees in pursuing its default remedies. [See Aozora Bank, Ltd. v. 1333 North Calif. Blvd. (2004) 119 CA4th 1291, 1294-1295, 15 CR3d 340, 341-342]

A nonrecourse loan may provide for certain exceptions (or "carve-outs") to the personal liability limitation (see ¶ 6:403). Even so, the lender may recover from the borrower its attorney fees incurred to enforce such an exception only if the language of the exception so provides. [Aozora Bank, Ltd. v. 1333 North Calif. Blvd., supra, 119 CA4th at 1295-1297, 15 CR3d at 342-343 (observing it would rarely, if ever, be appropriate to imply carve-out for attorney fee liability)]

19. Prepayment Charges

a. [6:250] Types of prepayment charges: There are two basic types of prepayment charges:

(1) [6:251] "Nonoption" payment under lock-in loan: Some lenders do not want certain kinds of loans prepaid prior to the scheduled maturity date. Provided they are clearly stated, such "lock-in" provisions prohibiting prepayment generally are enforceable. [Gutzi Associates v. Switzer (1989) 215 CA3d 1636, 1645, 264 CR 538, 542-543—not a per se "unreasonable" restraint on alienation]

Under a lock-in loan, if the borrower requests prepayment permission, the lender can negotiate the charge it will accept in return for consenting to the prepayment; "[i]nasmuch as prepayment of the loan is a privilege, the lender may extract a payment or 'penalty' for exercise of the privilege." [Williams v. Fassler (1980) 110 CA3d 7, 10, 167 CR 545, 547]

(a) [6:251.1] Exception—certain residential property loans: Except as otherwise provided by statute, borrowers under a loan secured by residential property of four units or less "shall be entitled" to prepay the loan (or any part of it) at any time; in effect, the lender cannot lock in these loans. [Civ.C. §§ 2954.9(a)(1), 2954.11(b)(1)]

However, a prepayment charge generally may be imposed pursuant to written agreement with the borrower. But there are limits on the amount that can be charged and circumstances under which no charge may be imposed (see ¶ 6:254 ff.). [Civ.C. §§ 2954.9(a)(2), (b), 2954.11(b)(2)]

(2) [6:252] "Option" payment—prepayment conditioned on stipulated fee: Other lenders may permit prepayment but conditioned on the borrower's paying a prepayment charge. This is known as an "option type" of prepayment charge, which effectively allows the borrower an "alternative method of performance" under the loan obligation; i.e., the borrower may either pay the loan off at its maturity date (paying only the principal and interest) or elect to repay the loan in advance of the maturity date and pay a prearranged fee for the privilege. (Some lenders, however, may allow prepayment without charge or fee; see Dieckmeyer v. Redevelopment Agency of City of Huntington Beach (2005) 127 CA4th 248, 253, 24 CR3d 895, 899.)

"Payment before maturity is not a breach of the contract, but simply an additional mode of performance on the borrower's part; the prepayment charge is not a penalty imposed for default, but an agreed form of compensation to the lender for interest lost through prepayment, additional tax liability or other disadvantage." [Ridgley v. Topa Thrift & Loan Ass'n (1998) 17 C4th 970, 978, 73 CR2d 378, 383; see also Williams v. Fassler (1980) 110 CA3d 7, 11, 167 CR 545, 547—"in effect, the borrower is paying a fee for the 'nonuse' of the money"]

Prepayment, alternatively, may be conditioned on payment of something other than a prearranged flat fee, such as an amount representing the borrower's "equity share" in the subject property at the time of prepayment. [See Dieckmeyer v. Redevelopment Agency of City of Huntington Beach, supra, 127 CA4th at 253-254, 24 CR3d at 899-900]

(a) [6:252.1] Application where debt acceleration triggered by default or due-on-sale clause: A prepayment triggering an agreed-upon charge is not necessarily limited to the obligor's voluntary prepayment. The result turns upon the terms of the note: If the note is properly worded (i.e., not limited to obligor's exercise of prepayment privilege), the lender may become entitled to a stipulated prepayment charge after accelerating the principal obligation upon the buyer's default or pursuant to a due-on-sale clause. [Ridgley v. Topa Thrift & Loan Ass'n (1998) 17 C4th 970, 979, 73 CR2d 378, 383, fn. 3; Biancalana v. Fleming (1996) 45 CA4th 698, 702-704, 53 CR2d 47, 49-50; compare Tan v. California Fed'l Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1983) 140 CA3d 800, 809-810, 189 CR 775, 782—under terms of note, prepayment charge applied only when obligor voluntarily exercised prepayment option and thus was not triggered by lender's exercise of due-on-sale clause]

(b) [6:252.2] Repayment distinguished: Prepayment of a loan and repayment of a loan on the maturity date stated in the loan agreement (which necessarily includes all unpaid interest and principal, see ¶ 6:218) are not the same, and invoke different consequences. For instance, prepayment does not extinguish all of the parties' rights and obligations under the loan (¶ 6:253 ff.), while repayment does. [See Dieckmeyer v. Redevelopment Agency of City of Huntington Beach (2005) 127 CA4th 248, 255-257, 24 CR3d 895, 900-902—prepayment did not trigger borrower's obligation to pay lender equity share in secured property due upon repayment of loan]

b. [6:253] Limits on amount of prepayment charge: Prepayment charges are not inherently invalid; they are neither open to challenge as usurious, susceptible to attack as an invalid liquidated damage (because they do not penalize for the "breach of an obligation," see ¶ 6:252), nor per se unenforceable as a "forfeiture" or "unreasonable restraint on alienation." [Ridgley v. Topa Thrift & Loan Ass'n (1998) 17 C4th 970, 978, 73 CR2d 378, 382-383; see Williams v. Fassler (1980) 110 CA3d

7, 11, 167 CR 545, 547, and cases cited therein; see also Sacramento Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Sup.Ct. (MacLaughlin) (1982) 137 CA3d 142, 147, 186 CR 823, 826—prepayment charge not unlawful restraint on alienation where reasonably related to protecting lender's legitimate interests]

Nonetheless, there are certain restrictions on the assessment or collection of a prepayment charge:

(1) [6:254] Certain residential loan transactions: With regard to a loan secured by residential property of four units or less, the borrower's obligation under a written agreement to pay a prepayment charge is limited as discussed at ¶ 6:254.1 ff. [Civ.C. § 2954.9 (residential loans generally), Civ.C. § 2954.11 (applicable to "installment loans" as defined by Civ.C. § 2954.11(a), ¶ 6:260.6); see Garver v. Brace (1996) 47 CA4th 995, 1001-1002, 55 CR2d 220, 224-225—§ 2954.9 limitations apply to agricultural property which, by prior agreement with lender, becomes owner-occupied residence after loan is executed and before prepayment fee is due; compare Scalese v. Wong (2000) 84 CA4th 863, 867, 101 CR2d 40, 42—§ 2954.9 inapplicable where five-unit apartment building at inception of loan subsequently converted to single-family residence]

(a) [6:254.1] No prepayment charge after five years: No prepayment charge may be imposed on prepayments made after five years from the date of execution of the mortgage or deed of trust; or, with regard to "installment loans" (¶ 6:260.6), after five years from the date the installment loan is made. [Civ.C. §§ 2954.9(b) (owner-occupied residential property), 2954.11(b)(2) (installment loans)]

When the deed of trust secures more than one "installment loan," each is deemed to have been separately made on the date the proceeds of the loan are advanced. [Civ.C. § 2954.11(c)]

(b) [6:255] Up to 20%/year free of prepayment charge: Within the first five years, up to 20% of the original principal amount may be prepaid in any 12-month period without incurring a prepayment charge. [Civ.C. §§ 2954.9(b) (owner-occupied residential property), 2954.11(b)(2) (installment loans)]

(c) [6:256] Cap on charge for prepayments exceeding 20%/year: The maximum charge on prepayments in excess of 20% of the original principal amount in any 12-month period is an amount equal to six months' advance interest on that amount. [Civ.C. §§ 2954.9(b) (owner-occupied residential property), 2954.11(b)(2) (installment loans)]

(d) [6:257] Circumstances precluding prepayment charge: Notwithstanding the prepayment charge limits (¶ 6:253 ff.), no prepayment charge may be imposed in the following circumstances:

• [6:257.1] When the residential structure securing the loan has been damaged to such an extent by a natural disaster for which a state of emergency has been declared by the Governor (pursuant to Gov.C. § 8550 et seq.) that the structure "cannot be occupied and the prepayment is causally related thereto." [Civ.C. §§ 2954.9(c), 2954.11(d)(1)]

• [6:258] When the residential property loan is accelerated under a due-on-sale or due-on-encumbrance clause. [Civ.C. § 2954.10; see also ¶ 6:259.4]

• [6:258.1] With regard to an "installment loan" (¶ 6:260.6), when the prepayment is made in conjunction with a "bona fide sale" of the residential property securing the loan. [Civ.C. § 2954.11(d)(2)]

• [6:258.2] With regard to an "installment loan" (¶ 6:260.6), when the lender does not comply with the Civ.C. § 2954.11(e) disclosure requirements (¶ 6:260.5 ff.). [Civ.C. § 2954.11(d)(3)]

• [6:258.3] With regard to an "installment loan" (¶ 6:260.6), when the term of the loan does not exceed five years and the original principal amount is less than $5,000. [Civ.C. § 2954.11(e)(4)]

(2) [6:258.4] High-cost loans secured by borrower's principal dwelling: In response to abusive practices in the mortgage loan markets, the Federal Reserve Board has expanded existing restrictions on prepayment penalties for high-cost loans secured by the borrower's principal dwelling. [See 12 CFR § 226.35 (Reg. Z), discussed at ¶ 6:99.3]

[6:258.5 - 6:258.9] Reserved.

(3) [6:258.10] Reverse mortgage loans (borrower-occupied homes): Prepayment charges cannot be imposed under a reverse mortgage loan secured by the borrower's owner-occupied principal residence. [Civ.C. § 1923.2(a)—prepayment "shall be permitted without penalty at any time during the term of the reverse mortgage loan"; see ¶ 6:98.1]

(4) Other loan transactions

(a) [6:259] "Reasonableness"/"unconscionability" limit: There are no fixed statutory limits on the amount of a prepayment charge in connection with loans on commercial properties or residential properties in excess of four units

(unless a "reverse mortgage loan," ¶ 6:258.10). Indeed, such charges will generally be upheld so long as "reasonably related" to protection of the lender's legitimate interests. [See Williams v. Fassler (1980) 110 CA3d 7, 11-13, 167 CR 545, 547-549—50% option-type prepayment charge valid if "reasonably related to the obligee's anticipated risk of incurring increased tax liability upon the occurrence of the prepayment"; Sacramento Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Sup.Ct. (MacLaughlin) (1982) 137 CA3d 142, 147, 186 CR 823, 826 (¶ 6:253); Lazzareschi Invest. Co. v. San Francisco Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1971) 22 CA3d 303, 311, 99 CR 417, 422]

Even so, dictum in several cases suggests courts may nonetheless strike down exceptionally high prepayment charges as "unconscionable" (an invalid penalty) if "so exorbitant as to shock the judicial conscience and entirely incompatible with customs of the trade." [See Williams v. Fassler, supra, 110 CA3d at 11-12, 167 CR at 547-548; Lazzareschi Invest. Co. v. San Francisco Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n, supra, 22 CA3d at 308, 99 CR at 420]

➪ [6:259.1] PRACTICE POINTER: The availability of a prepayment fee upon acceleration must be stated in clear and explicit terms in the loan documentation; otherwise, the creditor may be unable to collect the prepayment fee as of the date of acceleration.

For example, a promissory note provided for a prepayment fee upon payment after acceleration, but the trust deed provided for a fee upon acceleration. The loan documents stated in the event of a conflict the note governed. As a result, the creditor was required to calculate its fee from the date of payment by credit bid at a foreclosure sale. [U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n v. Yashouafar (2014) 232 CA4th 639, 648, 181 CR3d 615, 621—under "clear and explicit" terms of note and trust deed no prepayment fee was due until guarantors actually prepaid note's indebtedness]

[6:259.2 - 6:259.3] Reserved.

(b) [6:259.4] Acceleration upon enforcement of due-on-sale/due-on-encumbrance clause: By statute, no prepayment charge may be assessed or collected upon acceleration of the loan under a due-on-sale or due-on-encumbrance clause … unless (i) the obligor has waived in writing the right to prepay without penalty (or has expressly agreed in writing to a specific prepayment charge upon acceleration); and (ii) the waiver is separately signed or initialed by the obligor. [Civ.C. § 2954.10]

In addition, enforcement of the obligor's waiver or agreement must "be supported by evidence of a course of conduct by the obligee of individual weight to the consideration in that transaction for the waiver or agreement." [Civ.C. § 2954.10]

Compare: There is an absolute prohibition on prepayment charges in connection with acceleration under a loan on residential property containing four units or less (Civ.C. § 2954.10). See ¶ 6:258.

(c) [6:259.5] Invalid late charge disguised as prepayment charge—substance over form: A charge contingent on both the borrower's prepayment of principal and late payment of an interest installment (or other borrower default) is, in effect, both a "prepayment charge" and a "late payment charge." Therefore, even though labeled by the contract as a "prepayment charge," it cannot be validated simply as providing the borrower an option to elect an alternative mode of performance; rather, courts must look to the substance of the arrangement. [Ridgley v. Topa Thrift & Loan Ass'n (1998) 17 C4th 970, 979, 73 CR2d 378, 383]

Where the "prepayment charge" is triggered only when the borrower, during the period of the loan, has made a late payment or otherwise was in contractual default, its purpose, from the lender's perspective, is clearly to coerce the borrower's timely payment of interest under the loan, not to compensate the lender for interest payments lost through prepayment of principal or extra administrative expenses associated with relending the money. As such, the validity of the charge must be determined strictly as if it were a late payment charge: i.e., it will be invalidated as an unreasonable penalty unless the preset charge constitutes a reasonable attempt to estimate the lender's potential losses from late payment (¶ 6:230 ff.). [Ridgley v. Topa Thrift & Loan Ass'n, supra, 17 C4th at 980-981, 73 CR2d at 384-385]

1) [6:259.6] Notwithstanding validity of unconditional prepayment charge: The fact the prepayment charge might validly have been imposed without condition does not mean it may validly be imposed on the condition of the borrower's late payment of interest. "A forfeiture or unreasonable penalty, imposed only upon the other party's default, is unenforceable even though the same money, property or other consideration might have validly been bargained for as a form of contractual performance." [Ridgley v. Topa Thrift & Loan Ass'n (1998) 17 C4th 970, 981, 73 CR2d 378, 384-385]

2) [6:259.7] Example: A promissory note on a $2.3 million loan called for monthly interest payments, at a variable rate, on the 21st day of each month. One provision of the note gave Borrowers the option to prepay the outstanding principal balance (in whole or in part), conditioned on Borrowers' paying Lender a "prepayment charge" of six months' interest at the rate in effect at the time of prepayment on the amount prepaid. The note further stated, however, that no prepayment charge would be assessed if (i) all scheduled payments have been received by Lender not more than 15 days after their scheduled due date, and (ii) there have been no other defaults under the note.

When Borrowers sold the property, Lender demanded accelerated payment under a due-on-sale clause, which in turn triggered the prepayment charge because Borrowers had been late with a prior interest payment. Looking to the substance of the charge, the court ruled it to be a penalty for delinquency in meeting the contractual interest payments; it was an unenforceable liquidation of damages because a charge of six months' interest on the entire principal bore no relationship to the potential damages Lender would incur from a late interest payment. [Ridgley v. Topa Thrift & Loan Ass'n (1998) 17 C4th 970, 982, 73 CR2d 378, 385]

c. [6:260.5] Written disclosure required in connection with prepayment charges on residential property "installment loans": A lender receiving a borrower's written agreement to pay an authorized prepayment charge on an "installment loan" secured by residential real property of four units or less (¶ 6:254 ff.) must furnish the borrower with a written disclosure describing the existence of the prepayment charge obligation and the method by which the amount of the prepayment charge will be determined. [Civ.C. § 2954.11(e)(1)]

If the borrower has a right to rescind the loan transaction because of the lender's delay in making the disclosure (¶ 6:260.8), the disclosure must also advise the borrower of the right to rescind, how and when to exercise the right, and where to mail or deliver a notice of rescission. [Civ.C. § 2954.11(e)(1)]

(1) [6:260.6] "Installment loan": Civ.C. § 2954.11 applies to any installment loan secured by a deed of trust, mortgage or other lien on residential property of four units or less (unless the loan is subject to Bus. & Prof.C. § 10242.6) and which is (a) extended under an "installment loan feature" (i.e., a feature of an "open-end credit plan" under Regulation Z of the Federal Reserve System, 12 CFR § 226.2(a)(20)), and (b) to be repaid in substantially equal installments over a specified period without regard to the amount outstanding. [See Civ.C. § 2954.11(a) & (h)]

(2) [6:260.7] Timing: The Civ.C. § 2954.11(e)(1) disclosure may be separately furnished or included in the agreement or other loan documentation (provided the borrower is given a copy to retain). [Civ.C. § 2954.11(f)(3)]

In any event, the disclosure must be provided when or up to 30 days before the borrower signs the agreement or other installment loan documents, or no earlier than 30 days before nor later than 10 days after the installment loan is made if it is made without the borrower having to sign an agreement or other loan documentation. [Civ.C. § 2954.11(f)(1)]

If the disclosure is included in the prepayment charge agreement or other loan document signed by the borrower, it "shall be deemed given at that time." In other cases, the disclosure "shall be deemed furnished" when personally delivered to the borrower or three days after it is mailed to the borrower, by postage prepaid first-class mail, at the address to which billing statements for the open-end credit plan (Civ.C. § 2954.11(a)(1)) are being sent. [Civ.C. § 2954.11(f)(2)]

Where there is more than one borrower, a disclosure properly given to any one of them is deemed given to all of them. [Civ.C. § 2954.11(f)(5)]

(3) [6:260.8] Borrower's right to rescind where disclosure delayed: If the installment loan is made before the required disclosure, the borrower has a right to rescind the loan and the related obligation to pay a prepayment charge. The right of rescission is effected by personally delivering or mailing notice to that effect to the lender, by postage prepaid first-class mail, within 10 days after the disclosure is furnished. [Civ.C. § 2954.11(f)(1)]

Upon rescission, the loan must be repaid according to the terms of the agreement as if the installment loan had never been made. [See Civ.C. § 2954.11(g)]

(4) [6:260.9] Noncompliance negates prepayment fee obligation: See ¶ 6:258.2.

[6:260.10 - 6:260.14] Reserved.

d. [6:260.15] Accrual of cause of action challenging prepayment fee: A cause of action challenging the validity of a prepayment charge does not accrue, and hence the applicable statute of limitations does not commence to run, until either the prepayment fee is paid or the creditor (lender) demands its payment. [Garver v. Brace (1996) 47 CA4th 995, 1000-1001, 55 CR2d 220, 224 (rejecting argument that limitations period commences when borrower signs note containing prepayment fee clause)]

e. [6:260.16] Effect of prepayment: Prepayment of a loan secured by a deed of trust does not trigger a reconveyance clause in the trust deed (i.e., the right to a release of the lender's lien on the real property security, ¶ 6:406 ff.) unless all of the obligations under the loan agreement have been satisfied at the time of prepayment. [See Dieckmeyer v. Redevelopment Agency of City of Huntington Beach (2005) 127 CA4th 248, 258-259, 24 CR3d 895, 902-903—where trust deed secured loan, plus borrower's payment to lender of equity share in property upon sale and borrower's obligations under CC&Rs executed with loan documents, prepayment constituted only partial performance of secured obligations and did not entitle borrower to reconveyance]

20. [6:261] Severability Provisions and Usury Savings Clauses: "Severability" and "usury savings" provisions in the note are important from the lender's perspective.

a. [6:262] Severability: A "severability clause" essentially states that if any provision of the note is unenforceable, the remaining provisions will nevertheless remain enforceable. Thus, it generally ensures the entire note will not be invalidated simply because certain provisions therein are unenforceable.

b. [6:263] Usury savings: A companion "usury savings provision" states that any payments deemed to be interest (or which are otherwise paid in respect of the forbearance of money) that would exceed the usury limit, shall only be required to be paid to the extent such payments would not violate the usury laws. Usury savings provisions typically also provide that any such amount in excess of the usury limit will be automatically applied to principal. In effect, such language preserves the validity of payment provisions that might otherwise be stricken as violating the usury laws. (See ¶ 6:280 ff. for discussion of usury issues.)

21. [6:264] Borrower's Waivers: Many promissory notes contain various waivers by the borrower—e.g., waivers of presentment, notice of dishonor, protest, notice of demand or nonpayment, etc.

a. [6:265] Caveat—statute of limitations waiver: Arguably, waivers of presentment, notice of dishonor, and the like are not of serious consequences to borrowers. But that is not so with regard to any statute of limitations waiver. An agreement to waive an applicable statute of limitations defense significantly impacts the borrower's substantive rights and should be carefully considered by the borrower.

b. [6:266] Jury trial waiver; waiver exclusively pursuant to statute: The California Constitution vests the Legislature with the exclusive power to prescribe the rules under which parties may waive a jury trial (Cal.Const. Art. 1, § 16); and pursuant thereto, the Legislature has determined that trial by jury in a civil case may be waived only in the manner designated by statute. [Grafton Partners L.P. v. Sup.Ct. (PriceWaterhouseCoopers L.L.P.) (2005) 36 C4th 944, 956, 32 CR3d 5, 11-12; see CCP § 631]

[6:268 - 6:269] Reserved.

22. [6:270] Extensions and Acceptance of Partial Payments: Notes usually provide that the lender's failure to promptly enforce its rights, or its acceptance of a partial or tardy payment, will not constitute a waiver of any of the lender's rights or remedies or an extension of time for payments. (Absent such provision, a defaulting borrower might successfully argue the lender waived the right to insist on timely payments in the future (and its consequent default remedies) by reason of the lender's acceptance of partial or late payments on prior occasions.)

23. [6:271] Successors and Assigns: A "successors and assigns provision" effectively makes the note binding on the parties' assignees or successors in interest. Such a provision customarily is (and should be) included in the note.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

24. [6:272] Governing Law and Venue: Like any contract, the note should set forth which state's laws will govern interpretation and enforcement of the note. It should also specify the jurisdictional situs in the event of litigation arising under the note (an advance "mutual consent" to jurisdiction at the selected venue is commonplace).

➪ [6:272.1] PRACTICE POINTER—CONSIDER HOW OUT-OF-STATE LAW AFFECTS PARTIES' RIGHTS AND OBLIGATIONS*: Consider carefully the effect on your client's rights and obligations before agreeing to a particular choice of law provision. Complications may arise if the note is to be governed by state law differing from California law normally applicable to the deed of trust or other loan documents. Your client effectively may be waiving important protections extended by California law. [See, e.g., Guardian Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. MD Assocs. (1998) 64 CA4th 309, 323, 75 CR2d 151, 160—promissory note's choice of law provision invoked Texas law, under which borrowers had no antideficiency judgment protection, thus permitting payee to seek deficiency judgment after foreclosure sale]

a. [6:273] Enforceability of choice of law provisions: In determining the enforceability of arm's length contractual choice of law provisions, California courts apply the principles set forth in Rest.2d Conflict of Laws § 187, "which reflect a strong policy favoring enforcement." [Nedlloyd Lines B.V. v. Sup.Ct. (Seawinds Ltd.) (1992) 3 C4th 459, 464-465, 11 CR2d 330, 333; see also Washington Mut. Bank, FA v. Sup.Ct. (Briseno) (2001) 24 C4th 906, 916, 103 CR2d 320, 328; Gramercy Investment Trust v. Lakemont Homes Nevada, Inc. (2011) 198 CA4th 903, 909, 130 CR3d 496, 501]

(1) [6:273.1] Restatement approach: Under the Restatement approach, the court first must determine whether (1) the chosen state has a "substantial relationship" to the parties or their transaction or (2) there is any other "reasonable basis" for the parties' choice of law. If neither of these tests is met, the inquiry ends; and the court need not enforce the parties' choice of law. [Nedlloyd Lines B.V. v. Sup.Ct. (Seawinds Ltd.) (1992) 3 C4th 459, 466, 11 CR2d 330, 334; Washington Mut. Bank, FA v. Sup.Ct. (Briseno) (2001) 24 C4th 906, 916, 103 CR2d 320, 328]

If, however, either test is met, the court must next determine whether the chosen state's law is contrary to a "fundamental policy" of California. Absent such conflict, the court must enforce the parties' choice of law. Conversely, if there is such a conflict, the court must determine whether California has a "materially greater interest" than the chosen state in determining the particular issues. If California has a materially greater interest, the parties' choice of law will not be enforced; but otherwise, the chosen state's law will be applied. [Nedlloyd Lines B.V. v. Sup.Ct. (Seawinds Ltd.), supra; Washington Mut. Bank, FA v. Sup.Ct. (Briseno), supra, 24 C4th at 916, 103 CR2d at 328; Brack v. Omni Loan Co., Ltd. (2008) 164 CA4th 1312, 1321-1322, 80 CR3d 275, 281]

• [6:273.1a] The Restatement approach warranted enforcement of a Texas choice of law provision in a promissory note, effectively eliminating CCP § 580b antideficiency judgment protection "under the peculiar facts … [before the court]: a series of complex security interests on a large commercial property, negotiated between sophisticated Texas domiciliaries." [Guardian Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. MD Assocs. (1998) 64 CA4th 309, 323, 75 CR2d 151, 160; compare Brack v. Omni Loan Co., Ltd. (2008) 164 CA4th 1312, 1327-1330, 80 CR3d 275, 285-287—Nevada choice of law provision in loan agreements with California consumers not enforceable because application of Nevada law would conflict with fundamental California policy manifested in California Finance Lenders Law and California had greater interest in parties' transaction than did Nevada]

• [6:273.1b] On the other hand, the Restatement approach did not warrant enforcement of a New York choice of law provision in loan agreements and a guaranty contract that would have compelled application of New York's antideficiency law to a foreclosure proceeding involving California property. Although contractual provisions adopting New York law may be applied to foreclosures involving out-of-state property when New York has sufficient contacts, in this case the only contact with New York was the plaintiff's place of business (i.e., the contract was executed, the debt was created and the default occurred in California). Thus, "lacking sufficient contacts," New York's antideficiency statute was deemed inapplicable. [See Gramercy Investment Trust v. Lakemont Homes Nevada, Inc. (2011) 198 CA4th 903, 909-912, 130 CR3d 496, 501-503 (also finding guarantor expressly waived California's antideficiency protections and defenses; ¶ 6:601.3)]

(2) [6:273.2] Enforcement despite contract of adhesion: The same analysis applies even though the choice of law clause is contained in a contract of adhesion. The Restatement approach "contains safeguards to protect contracting parties, including consumers, against choice of law agreements that are unreasonable or in contravention of a fundamental California policy.” [Washington Mut. Bank, FA v. Sup.Ct. (Briseno) (2001) 24 C4th 906, 917, 103 CR2d 320, 329 (provision in institutional lender's standard nonnegotiable deed of trust)]

25. [6:275] Nonrecourse: If the lender is permitted to look only to the secured property to satisfy the loan, the note should state it is “nonrecourse,” that the borrower has no personal liability, and that the lender is limited to its security as its sole recourse for any default under the loan.

• [6:276] Comment: Lenders are usually reluctant to limit their recourse solely to the secured property where there is any concern the borrower has committed fraud or waste or permitted environmentally hazardous materials to be placed upon the property. (See further discussion at ¶ 6:401 ff.)

[6:277 - 6:279] Reserved.

26. [6:280] Usury Issues: California law limits the amount of interest that may be charged for any “loan or forbearance of money.” [Cal.Const. Art. XV, § 1; Stoneridge Parkway Partners v. MW Housing Partners III (2007) 153 CA4th 1373, 1379, 64 CR3d 61, 65]

Indeed, inclusion of the usury law in the California Constitution, coupled with the fact it cannot be waived, reflects its importance as a fundamental public policy. [G Companies Management, LLC v. LREP Arizona LLC (2023) 88 CA5th 342, 352-353, 304 CR3d 651, 658 (declining to enforce contractual provision designating Arizona as forum because it would deprive commercial borrower of California's anti-usury protections); see also Bisno v. Kahn (2014) 225 CA4th 1087, 1097, 170 CR3d 709, 715—usury law's purpose is to protect “necessitous, impecunious borrower” who cannot acquire credit from usual sources and is forced to resort to excessively costly funds to meet their financial needs]

Charging usurious interest risks forfeiting the right to collect any interest, plus treble damages exposure (¶ 6:296); and also may draw criminal penalties (¶ 6:297). [See Development Acquisition Group, LLC v. EA Consulting, Inc. (ED CA 2011) 776 F.Supp.2d 1161, 1164-1166—lenders who negotiate loans at usurious rates absent qualified exemptions have no “action at law to recover any interest” and may be liable for treble the interest amount in court's discretion]

a. [6:281] Usury framework: “Usury” is the charging of interest for “any loan or forbearance of money” in excess of the statutory maximum. [Ghirardo v. Antonioli (1994) 8 C4th 791, 798, 35 CR2d 418, 423; Hall v. Beneficial Finance Co. (1981) 118 CA3d 652, 654, 173 CR 450, 451]

The essential elements of usury are:

• the transaction must be a “loan or forbearance” (¶ 6:283);

• the interest to be paid must exceed the statutory maximum (¶ 6:282);

• the loan and interest must be absolutely repayable by the borrower (¶ 6:282.4); and

• the lender must have a “willful intent” to enter into a usurious transaction (¶ 6:282.5). [Ghirardo v. Antonioli, supra, 8 C4th at 798, 35 CR2d at 423; Jones v. Wells Fargo Bank (2003) 112 CA4th 1527, 1537, 5 CR3d 835, 843; see also Creative Ventures, LLC v. Jim Ward & Assocs. (2011) 195 CA4th 1430, 1449, 126 CR3d 564, 579—in usury, element of intent is “narrow”]

(1) [6:281.1] Borrower's burden of proof: The lender has the benefit of a rebuttable presumption that a transaction is not usurious. Thus, a borrower claiming usury bears the burden of proving all of the essential elements (¶ 6:281). [Ghirardo v. Antonioli (1994) 8 C4th 791, 798-799, 35 CR2d 418, 423; De Guere v. Universal City Studios, Inc. (1997) 56 CA4th 482, 509, 65 CR2d 438, 456]

b. [6:282] Maximum nonusurious interest: For nonconsumer loans (i.e., loans not made primarily for personal, family or household purposes), the maximum interest rate that can be charged is the greater of (1) 10% per annum; or (2) 5% over the

San Francisco Federal Reserve Bank's rate for advances made to member banks under Sections 13 and 13a of the Federal Reserve Act prevailing on the 25th day of the month prior to the earlier of the date of the loan contract or the date the loan was made. [Cal.Const. Art. XV, § 1(2); Stoneridge Parkway Partners v. MW Housing Partners III (2007) 153 CA4th 1373, 1379, 64 CR3d 61, 65]

(The maximum interest rate for consumer loans is 10% per annum. Cal.Const. Art. XV, § 1(1).)

➪ [6:282.1] PRACTICE POINTER: The current rate on advances to member banks can be ascertained by phoning the San Francisco Federal Reserve Bank at (415) 974-2000. In addition, if requested, the San Francisco Federal Reserve Bank will put your name on a mailing list for periodic notices of changes in the rate for advances to member banks.

(1) [6:282.2] Extent of unlawful interest and borrower's sophistication immaterial: If the transaction is a type subject to the usury laws, the margin by which the maximum interest rate is exceeded is immaterial. "There is no such thing as a little usury." [Ghirardo v. Antonioli (1994) 8 C4th 791, 807, 35 CR2d 418, 429]

Likewise, there is no exemption in the usury law for sophisticated borrowers. [G Companies Management, LLC v. LREP Arizona, LLC (2023) 88 CA5th 342, 353, 304 CR3d 651, 659]

(2) [6:282.3] Limitation—federal law preemption re national bank maximum interest: Federal law preempts state usury law concerning interest charged by national banks:

The maximum interest rate that can be charged on a loan made by a bank chartered under the National Bank Act is prescribed by § 85 of the Act (see 12 USC § 85); and § 86 of the Act in turn sets forth the exclusive usury cause of action and remedies against a national bank for charging excessive interest (see 12 USC § 86). Together, §§ 85 and 86 of the Act "supersede both the substantive and the remedial provisions of state usury laws and create a federal remedy for overcharges that is exclusive …" [Beneficial Nat'l Bank v. Anderson (2003) 539 US 1, 11, 123 S.Ct. 2058, 2064—there is "no such thing as a state-law claim of usury against a national bank"; see also ¶ 6:297.5]

(3) [6:282.3a] Limitation—maximum interest rate during military service: See discussion at ¶ 6:512.1 ff.

c. [6:282.4] Absolute repayment requirement: A transaction cannot be usurious under California law unless the loan and interest are "absolutely repayable." Thus, there cannot be a usury violation when the note makes the borrower's repayment obligation subject to a contingency. [See D-Beam Ltd. Partnership v. Roller Derby Skates, Inc. (9th Cir. 2004) 366 F3d 972, 975 (applying Calif. law)—loan not absolutely repayable where notes limited repayment to borrower's share of possible royalty payments]

d. [6:282.5] Lender's "willful intent": The lender need not have purposely intended to evade the usury laws. The requisite "willful intent" to support a usury judgment simply requires that the lender consciously and voluntarily take more than the maximum allowable rate of interest on a loan or forbearance of money. [Ghirardo v. Antonioli (1994) 8 C4th 791, 798, 35 CR2d 418, 423; Creative Ventures, LLC v. Jim Ward & Assocs. (2011) 195 CA4th 1430, 1449-1450, 126 CR3d 564, 579]

However, intent becomes relevant on the issue of the true purpose of the underlying transaction—i.e., "whether the intent of the contracting parties was that disclosed by the form adopted, or whether such form was a mere sham and subterfuge to cover up a usurious transaction" (i.e., whether the parties actually intended a loan or forbearance rather than a sale). [Ghirardo v. Antonioli, supra, 8 C4th at 798, 35 CR2d at 423 (internal quotes omitted); see also Creative Ventures, LLC v. Jim Ward & Assocs., supra, 195 CA4th at 1449-1450, 126 CR3d at 579—intent takes on greater significance when question is whether transaction is one to which usury law applies; compare Jones v. Wells Fargo Bank (2003) 112 CA4th 1527, 1538, 5 CR3d 835, 843—intent generally irrelevant when lender admits transaction is a loan; and see ¶ 6:284 re "substance over form"]

e. [6:283] What constitutes "loan" or "forbearance of money": The usury limits apply only with respect to interest on a "loan" or "forbearance of money" (¶ 6:280); if neither of these transactions is involved, usury cannot exist. [Ghirardo v. Antonioli (1994) 8 C4th 791, 801-802, 35 CR2d 418, 425; Southwest Concrete Products v. Gosh Const. Corp. (1990) 51 C3d 701, 705, 274 CR 404, 406; see De Guere v. Universal City Studios, Inc. (1997) 56 CA4th 482, 509, 65 CR2d 438, 456]

For usury purposes, a "loan" is the delivery of a sum of money under a contract to return an equivalent amount at some future time; and a "forbearance of money" is the giving of further time for payment of a debt or an agreement not to enforce a claim at its due date. [Southwest Concrete Products v. Gosh Const. Corp., supra, 51 C3d at 705, 274 CR at 406; Ghirardo v. Antonioli, supra, 8 C4th at 802, 35 CR2d at 426; see also In re Moon (9th Cir. BAP 2023) 648 BR 73, 82-83—settlement agreement providing two-year maturity extension deemed forbearance despite agreement stating otherwise; DCM Partners

v. Smith (1991) 228 CA3d 729, 735, 278 CR 778, 781—"forbearance" within meaning of usury law is "an agreement to extend the time for payment of the obligation due either before or after the obligation's due date" (emphasis in original)]

(1) [6:284] Substance over form: As noted earlier, a borrower often pays the lender various fees and charges that are not denominated as "interest" (e.g., loan fees, commitment fees, prepayment fees and late charges). Nonetheless, after examining the nature of the transaction, those additional charges may sometimes be deemed to constitute interest upon a loan or forbearance of money and thus subject to the usury laws.

On the question whether a transaction constitutes a "loan" or "forbearance of money," trial courts look beyond the form of the transaction to ascertain its substance. [Ghirardo v. Antonioli (1994) 8 C4th 791, 798, 35 CR2d 418, 423; Roodenburg v. Pavestone Co., L.P. (2009) 171 CA4th 185, 193, 89 CR3d 558, 564; see also In re Moon (9th Cir. BAP 2023) 648 BR 73, 83 (citing Ghirardo with approval)—substance of agreement controls over its form]

"In all such cases the issue is whether or not the bargain of the parties, assessed in light of all the circumstances and with a view to substance rather than form, has as its true object the hire of money at an excessive rate of interest." [Boerner v. Colwell Co. (1978) 21 C3d 37, 44, 145 CR 380, 384; see also Roodenburg v. Pavestone Co., L.P., supra]

(2) [6:284.1] Mixed question of law and fact: The true nature of the transaction, assessed in light of the parties' intent, presents a question of fact (see Boerner v. Colwell Co. (1978) 21 C3d 37, 44, 145 CR 380, 384-385—"existence of the requisite intent [to hire money at an excessive rate of interest] is always a question of fact"). However, once that factual issue is decided, the issue whether the particular transaction is subject to the usury proscription is a question of law. [Ghirardo v. Antonioli (1994) 8 C4th 791, 799-801, 35 CR2d 418, 424-425]

(3) Application

(a) [6:285] Loan fees: Loan fees generally are not considered "interest" subject to the usury laws so long as the fees relate to the lender's cost in processing the loan application and making or servicing the loan. [Forte v. Nolfi (1972) 25 CA3d 656, 681, 102 CR 455, 471]

"A lender is not prohibited from charging an extra and reasonable amount for incidental services, expenses or risk additional to the lawful interest, other than for the loan of money. He may make a reasonable charge for investigating, arranging, negotiating, brokering, making, servicing, collecting and enforcing his obligation. [Par] Such items, however, must be confined to specific service or expense incidental to the loan incurred in such a way as to preclude it being a device through which additional interest or profit on the loan may be exacted." [Klett v. Security Accept. Co. (1952) 38 C2d 770, 787-788, 242 P2d 873, 884]

(b) [6:286] Late charges and default interest rate: Nor are late payment/default interest rate charges generally considered "interest" within the meaning of the usury laws because it is the borrower's conduct that created the additional charge. Late charges do not involve payment for a "loan" or a "forbearance of money"; and "a transaction that was not usurious at its inception cannot become usurious by virtue of the debtor's voluntary default." [Southwest Concrete Products v. Gosh Const. Corp. (1990) 51 C3d 701, 706-709, 274 CR 404, 407-409—where excessive interest caused by contingency under debtor's control, transaction will not be deemed usurious; see also Roodenburg v. Pavestone Co., L.P. (2009) 171 CA4th 185, 194, 89 CR3d 558, 565—operating agreement's 18% prejudgment interest provision in event of default not a "forbearance" and therefore not subject to usury limits]

(c) [6:287] Prepayment penalties: Prepayment penalties do not enter into the usury calculus so long as the option to prepay is within the borrower's discretion. [French v. Mortgage Guar. Co. (1940) 16 C2d 26, 31, 104 P2d 655, 657]

(d) [6:288] Loan broker commissions: A broker's commission charged to the borrower by the lender's agent can render the transaction usurious if exaction of the commission is known to and authorized or ratified by the lender. [Forte v. Nolfi (1972) 25 CA3d 656, 681-682, 102 CR 455, 472]

But the mere fact the lender knows a broker's commission is being charged is not fatal if it is paid with the borrower's consent to an agent employed by the borrower to seek a loan or to a broker whose services were rendered to both parties and who does not rebate any part of the commission to the lender. [Forte v. Nolfi, supra, 25 CA3d at 682, 102 CR at 472]

(e) [6:289] Compound interest: Compounding of interest (adding interest to principal which itself accrues interest—or interest on interest) can be usurious if the compounding occurs on more than an annual basis and results in exceeding the statutory usury limit. [Heald v. Friis-Hansen (1959) 52 C2d 834, 839, 345 P2d 457, 461-462]

(f) [6:289.1] Forbearance fees collected by judgment creditors: The usury law does not prohibit a judgment creditor from accepting a forbearance fee in addition to the statutory interest automatically applied by a court to a judgment. "Usury liability is wholly a creature of statute. Because the usury law does not expressly prohibit a party from entering into an agreement to forbear collecting on a judgment, usury liability does not extend to judgment creditors who receive remuneration beyond the statutory 10 percent interest rate in exchange for a delay in enforcing a judgment." [Bisno v. Kahn (2014) 225 CA4th 1087, 1093, 170 CR3d 709, 712]

Nonetheless, any forbearance fee does not become part of the judgment and is not an amount that must be paid to satisfy the judgment. "Rather, a forbearance agreement is a contract between the judgment creditor and the judgment debtor that is separate from the judgment to which it applies. Consequently, a forbearance agreement must be enforced in a separate contract action and is subject to standard contractual defenses such as duress and unconscionability." [Bisno v. Kahn, supra, 225 CA4th at 1093, 170 CR3d at 712]

f. [6:290] Usury exemptions: There are several exemptions from the California usury laws, broadly categorized as federal statutory exemptions, California constitutional, statutory and case law exemptions, and a "time-price exemption" (¶ 6:294). If any one exemption applies, the loan is not subject to a maximum interest rate.

(1) [6:291] Federal exemption for "federally-related" secured residential property loans: Federal law generally exempts from state usury laws any "federally-related" loan secured by a first position lien on residential property. [See 12 USC § 1735f-7a]

(a) [6:291.1] "Federally-related" loans: "Federally-related" loans are those:

- made by any lender whose deposits or accounts are insured by any federal agency (e.g., Federal Deposit Insurance Corp. (FDIC) or the Federal Savings Loan Insurance Corp. (FSLIC));

- made by any lender regulated by any federal agency (e.g., the Federal Reserve System Board of Governors);

- made by any lender approved by the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development (HUD) for participation in any mortgage insurance program under the national Housing Act;

- made in whole or in part by HUD; or

- eligible for purchase by the Federal National Mortgage Association, Government National Mortgage Association or Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp. [12 CFR § 590.2]

(b) [6:291.2] States may opt out: The same federal law providing for the exemption also gives states the option of explicitly opting out of the exemption; opt-out states may reassert their usury limitations: The exemption does not apply in a state that "adopts a law or certifies" that its voters have voted in favor of any provision that "states explicitly and by its terms that such State does not want" the exemption to apply. [12 USC § 1735f-7a(b)(2); see Brown v. Investors Mortg. Co. (9th Cir. 1997) 121 F3d 472, 476 (decided under Wash. law)—no effective opt-out under state's general usury statute which did not state "explicitly and by its terms" that state did not want exemption to apply to loans made within its borders]

(2) [6:292] California constitutional and statutory exemptions: The California Constitution and various California statutes exempt several classes of lenders as well as certain types of loans from the usury laws. (Certain kinds of lenders and certain kinds of loans are not restricted by any interest rate ceilings, while others are subject to at least some interest rate ceiling.)

These exemptions are scattered throughout Cal.Const. Art. XV, § 1 and various provisions of the Financial Code, Corporations Code, Insurance Code, Government Code and Civil Code. [Jones v. Wells Fargo Bank (2003) 112 CA4th 1527, 1531, 5 CR3d 835, 841; see also Ghirardo v. Antonioli (1994) 8 C4th 791, 807, 35 CR2d 418, 429—"the usury law … is riddled with so many exceptions that the law's application itself seems to be the exception rather than the rule"]

(a) [6:293] Broker-arranged loans or forbearances on secured real property: Significantly, in connection with real property purchase and sale transactions, there is a usury exemption for loans or forbearances "made or arranged" by a licensed real estate broker and secured by a lien on real property. [Cal.Const. Art. XV, § 1; Civ.C. § 1916.1; Creative Ventures, LLC v. Jim Ward & Assocs. (2011) 195 CA4th 1430, 1442, 126 CR3d 564, 573—licensed real estate brokers may be either individuals or corporations through designated officers (discussed further at ¶ 6:293e); Stoneridge

Parkway Partners v. MW Housing Partners III (2007) 153 CA4th 1373, 1379, 64 CR3d 61, 65—§ 1916.1 implements Constitution's licensed broker exemption and defines when secured loan is "arranged" by licensed broker; see also In re Moon (9th Cir. BAP 2023) 648 BR 73, 86-87—broker exemption did not exclude forbearance from usury proscription where licensed real estate broker arranged original loan but not forbearance]

1) [6:293a] "Arranging" for loan or forbearance: A broker "arranges" for a loan or forbearance within the meaning of the exemption if the broker "acts for another and receives or expects to receive compensation for it." [Park Terrace Ltd. v. Teasdale (2002) 100 CA4th 802, 806, 122 CR2d 797, 799; Stoneridge Parkway Partners v. MW Housing Partners III (2007) 153 CA4th 1373, 1379, 64 CR3d 61, 65]

In other words, a loan is exempt under Civ.C. § 1916.1 if it was negotiated for compensation by a licensed real estate broker acting as an intermediary for the benefit of another. [Park Terrace Ltd. v. Teasdale, supra, 100 CA4th at 806-807, 122 CR2d at 799-800—exemption inapplicable to brokers acting merely for their own benefit]

The usury exemption for a broker arranged loan does not, however, extend to the loan's modification unless a broker arranges the modification. [See In re Moon (9th Cir. BAP 2023) 648 BR 73, 83, 86—settlement agreement extending mortgage's maturity, made without broker's involvement, deemed forbearance subject to usury laws]

a) Application

• [6:293b] The exemption applied to a loan negotiated by a broker/general partner on behalf of various limited partnerships, where the broker/general partner was compensated with a share of the partnerships' profits. [Park Terrace Ltd. v. Teasdale (2002) 100 CA4th 802, 806-807, 122 CR2d 797, 799-800; see also Stickel v. Harris (1987) 196 CA3d 575, 582, 585, 242 CR 88, 92, 94—exemption applied to loan negotiated by broker for joint venture and partnerships in which broker was a member (compensation was broker's anticipated profits from property's development)]

• [6:293c] The exemption also applied where a broker, although an employee of the lender's affiliate, acted as a third party intermediary for the benefit of the lender and was compensated for his efforts. "It is of no moment that [the broker] indirectly benefited from the transaction. As long as [he] was not negotiating solely on his own behalf, he fits squarely within the statutory exemption of a licensed broker who negotiated and arranged a loan for another." [Stoneridge Parkway Partners v. MW Housing Partners III (2007) 153 CA4th 1373, 1381, 64 CR3d 61, 66-67]

• [6:293d] A secured loan made by a licensed real estate broker's wholly-owned corporation to a third party was a loan "arranged" by the broker and therefore exempt even though the broker did not take a commission. Reason: In arranging the loan for his corporation, the broker did so "for another" and "in expectation of compensation" since he expected to reap the benefits of the interest his corporation was supposed to earn. [See Bock v. California Capital Loans, Inc. (2013) 216 CA4th 264, 266-267, 273, 156 CR3d 874, 875, 880 (noting it "makes no difference" whether broker took compensation by drawing corporate dividend or receiving commission)]

• [6:293e] Compare: Loans arranged by an unlicensed mortgage lender and loan processing corporation were not exempt from the usury prohibition even though the corporation's primary officer/director was personally licensed as a real estate broker. Reason: Only a designated officer may conduct licensed activities on a corporation's behalf (¶ 2:108). [Creative Ventures, LLC v. Jim Ward & Assocs. (2011) 195 CA4th 1430, 1442, 126 CR3d 564, 573]

• [6:293f] A loan was not exempt from the usury prohibition where the only broker involved in the transaction was the borrower himself, who signed the promissory note and used the money to pay personal expenses. [Winnett v. Roberts (1986) 179 CA3d 909, 915, 920, 225 CR 82, 83-84, 87; see also Green v. Future Two (1986) 179 CA3d 738, 742-743, 225 CR 3, 4-5—partnership loan negotiated by general partner/broker not exempt (general partner/broker did not expect or receive compensation and was deemed to be acting for herself alone in her capacity as borrower)]

1/ [6:293g] Comment: It is somewhat difficult to reconcile the holding in Green, supra, with the Park Terrace and Stickel decisions (¶ 6:293b). In fact, the Stoneridge Parkway court (¶ 6:293c) expressly declined to follow Green, noting the "Green court reached its conclusion ipse dixit, without analyzing the broker's efforts on behalf of the partnership." [See Stoneridge Parkway Partners v. MW Housing Partners III (2007) 153 CA4th 1373, 1380, 64 CR3d 61, 66 (finding Park Terrace and Stickel holdings "instructive")]

b) [6:293h] Includes structuring loan, etc.: Civ.C. § 1916.1 "arranging" includes "structuring the loan as the agent for the lender, setting the interest rate and points to be paid, setting the terms of the forbearance agreement, reviewing the loan and forbearance documents, conducting title searches, or drafting the terms of the loan." [Creative Ventures, LLC v. Jim Ward & Assocs. (2011) 195 CA4th 1430, 1442, 126 CR3d 564, 573; see also Gibbo v. Berger (2004) 123 CA4th 396, 402-403, 19 CR3d 829, 833-834 (noting broker who, for fee, acted as escrow officer and merely inserted terms agreed upon by parties in form loan documents, photocopied and collated document pages, ordered title insurance and dispersed funds, not an "arranger")]

[6:293i - 6:293j] Reserved.

2) [6:293k] Acting in licensed capacity *not required: The Civ.C. § 1916.1 exemption applies even if the broker, in making or arranging the loan, was not acting within the course and scope of the broker's real estate license. [Park Terrace Ltd. v. Teasdale (2002) 100 CA4th 802, 808-809, 122 CR2d 797, 801-802—exemption applied where broker arranged loans in nonlicensed capacity as general partner of limited partnerships]

(b) [6:293.1] Exemption for ERISA plan loans *preempted: Civ.C. § 1917.220 purports to exempt from the California usury law loans made by an ERISA-governed pension plan. However, this statute, and hence the exemption, is preempted by ERISA. [See Varr v. Olimpia (1996) 45 CA4th 675, 680-681, 53 CR2d 106, 109]

On the other hand, ERISA does not preempt California's general usury law—i.e., loans from an ERISA-governed pension plan are subject to the Cal.Const. Art. XV, § 1 interest rate limits. (Unlike the Civ.C. § 1917.220 exemption, which singles out ERISA plans for special treatment, California's usury law is a law of general application which has only a tenuous or peripheral connection with ERISA plans.) [Varr v. Olimpia, supra, 45 CA4th at 685-687, 53 CR2d at 112-113]

[6:293.2 - 6:293.4] Reserved.

(c) [6:293.5] Commercial loans based on "preexisting personal or business relationship": Certain commercial transactions (¶ 6:293.6 ff.) between a lender and the issuer or guarantor of a debt are exempt from the California usury laws so long as (i) the lender and issuer or guarantor (or any of their respective officers, directors, controlling persons, or managers of limited liability companies) have a "preexisting personal or business relationship" (as defined in Corps.C. § 25118(g)); or (ii) the lender and issuer or guarantor, by reason of their own respective business and financial experience or that of their professional advisors, could reasonably be assumed to have the capacity to protect their own interests in connection with the transaction. [Corps.C. § 25118(f); see also Development Acquisition Group, LLC v. EA Consulting, Inc. (ED CA 2011) 776 F.Supp.2d 1161, 1164—California law provides usury law exemptions for "sophisticated parties" engaged in commercial transactions, not "where there is any evidence" debt was issued/guaranteed by individual]

If either of the above criteria are met, the following transactions are exempt from the usury laws:

1) [6:293.6] Note issued or guaranteed by borrower's "affiliate": An evidence of indebtedness issued by or guaranteed by the borrower's "affiliate" (as defined in Corps.C. § 150) that on the date the evidence of indebtedness is made or guaranteed has total assets of at least $2,000,000, according to its then most recent financial statements. [See Corps.C. § 25118(a), (c)]

The financial statements must be both: (i) made as of a date not more than 90 days before the date the evidence of indebtedness is made or guaranteed; and (ii) prepared according to generally accepted accounting principles or Securities and Exchange Commission rules. [Corps.C. § 25118(a)]

2) [6:293.7] Notes aggregating at least $300,000: Any one or more evidences of indebtedness that aggregate at least $300,000, or are issued pursuant to a bona fide written commitment or line of credit in the amount of at least $300,000. [Corps.C. § 25118(b), (c)]

This exemption is not affected by an event beyond the lender's control, including the issuer's default, that relieves the lender from its commitment. [Corps.C. § 25118(b)]

(d) [6:293.10] Loans by banks engaged in trust business and acting in fiduciary capacity (Fin.C. § 1504): The constitutional interest rate restrictions do not apply to loans made by a California bank, or any national or foreign bank with an office in California, "authorized to engage in the trust business" and "acting in its fiduciary capacity." [Fin.C. § 1504; Jones v. Wells Fargo Bank (2003) 112 CA4th 1527, 1536-1537, 5 CR3d 835, 842-843—application of exemption to national bank not preempted by National Bank Act (¶ 6:282.3) or ERISA]

[6:293.11 - 6:293.12] Reserved.

(e) [6:293.13] "Shared appreciation loans": See ¶ 6:67.

[6:293.14 - 6:293.19] Reserved.

(3) [6:293.20] California case law exemption (joint ventures and partnerships): Where the relationship between parties is a bona fide joint venture or partnership, the advance by the partners or joint venturers is deemed an investment rather than a loan. As such, the profit or return earned by the investors is not subject to California usury laws. [See Junkin v. Golden West Foreclosure Service, Inc. (2010) 180 CA4th 1150, 1155-1158, 103 CR3d 582, 586-588 (delineating factors considered in determining whether bona fide joint venture exists)—usury law inapplicable to foreclosure of office building by one joint venturer under allegedly usurious promissory note and trust deed]

(4) [6:294] "Time-price exemption": When a seller finances the purchase of real or personal property by extending payment of the price over time and charging a higher price for carrying the financing, California usury laws do not apply (so-called "time-price doctrine"). This type of transaction is considered a bona fide credit sale, not a "loan" or "forbearance of money." [Verbeck v. Clymer (1927) 202 C 557, 563, 261 P 1017, 1019; see Ghirardo v. Antonioli (1994) 8 C4th 791, 802-803, 35 CR2d 418, 426; Southwest Concrete Products v. Gosh Const. Corp. (1990) 51 C3d 701, 705, 274 CR 404, 407; In re Moon (9th Cir. BAP 2023) 648 BR 73, 77, 85-86]

(a) [6:294.1] Rationale: "[T]he owner of property … has a perfect right to name the price on which he is willing to sell, and to refuse to accede to any other. He may offer to sell at a designated price for cash or at a much higher price on credit, and a credit sale will not constitute usury however great the difference between the two prices, unless the buying and selling was a mere pretense …" [Verbeck v. Clymer (1927) 202 C 557, 563, 261 P 1017, 1019; see also Ghirardo v. Antonioli (1994) 8 C4th 791, 804, 35 CR2d 418, 427; In re Moon (9th Cir. 2023) 648 BR 73, 83-84]

(b) [6:294.2] Applies to subsequent debt restructuring in lieu of foreclosure: An original seller-financed loan exempt under the "time price doctrine" remains exempt when the seller subsequently agrees (at the borrower's request or otherwise to accommodate a borrower in default) to substitute a new note that extends the time for payment and/or to modify the secured obligation at an increased interest rate, which transaction, but for the exemption, would be usurious. [Ghirardo v. Antonioli (1994) 8 C4th 791, 804, 35 CR2d 418, 426-427; DCM Partners v. Smith (1991) 228 CA3d 729, 735, 278 CR 778, 781—usury law inapplicable to seller's modification of secured purchase money note, increasing interest rate in consideration for extending note's maturity date]

1) [6:294.3] Rationale: There is no practical reason why the underlying policy of the time-price exemption (¶ 6:294.1) should not apply as well when the seller has already transferred title and is about to foreclose on the purchase money note. "Just as he had an initial right to sell the property on any price terms he wished, he has the right to foreclose and to resell the property as he sees fit, at any interest rate, including reselling to the initial buyer. Precluding him from renegotiating with the buyer would elevate form over substance." [Ghirardo v. Antonioli (1994) 8 C4th 791, 804, 35 CR2d 418, 427; DCM Partners v. Smith (1991) 228 CA3d 729, 736, 278 CR 778, 782]

Applying the original time-price exemption to the modification (or debt restructuring) is also supported by the following theories:

• [6:294.4] Since the note was initially created in an exempt transaction, the trustor (borrower) would be "unjustly enriched" if it had the benefit of an interest-free loan upon its subsequent modification. [DCM Partners v. Smith (1991) 228 CA3d 729, 735, 278 CR 778, 781]

• [6:294.5] A modification of the note at the trustor's (borrower's) request triggers the rule that a debtor cannot, by their voluntary act, render an otherwise nonusurious transaction usurious (see ¶ 6:286). [DCM Partners v. Smith (1991) 228 CA3d 729, 736, 278 CR 778, 782]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

• [6:294.6] The usury laws should not be applied to "remake" privately-negotiated bargains. "To declare a privately negotiated bargain as illegal where the original bargain was not, will only chill the willingness of non-exempt lenders to extend credit in private transactions where there is no apparent unlawfulness in so doing." [DCM Partners v. Smith (1991) 228 CA3d 729, 737, 278 CR 778, 782-783]

2) [6:294.7] Nonusurious despite increased interest: The original time-price exemption applies to a subsequent extension of the secured loan even though the interest rate for the extension is increased. [Ghirardo v. Antonioli (1994) 8 C4th 791, 805, 35 CR2d 418, 428]

It would be unfair to both sides of the debt restructuring transaction to require that the interest rate be the same as or lower than the original rate. "The only alternative to foreclosure for a seller who has suffered a default should not be an extension on more favorable terms to the buyer. That is unfair and impractical. Indeed, for that reason, it also prejudices the buyer who wishes to renegotiate because a seller who has two choices—foreclosure or extension on new terms favorable only to the buyer—will plainly be more likely to foreclose." [Ghirardo v. Antonioli, supra, 8 C4th at 805-806, 35 CR2d at 428]

g. [6:295] Usury savings clauses: A "usury savings clause" in loan documents protects lenders against the consequences of an inadvertent violation of the usury laws. It provides that, in the event the loan exceeds the maximum allowable interest rate, the interest will automatically be reduced to the maximum rate permissible under the law. Such "savings" provisions are enforceable according to their terms. [In re Dominguez (9th Cir. 1993) 995 F2d 883, 886-887—unambiguous "savings clause" may preclude finding that loan agreement is usurious "on its face"; see also Arneill Ranch v. Petit (1976) 64 CA3d 277, 293-296, 134 CR 456, 466-468—extrinsic evidence admissible to resolve ambiguity over scope and effect of savings clause]

h. Penalties for violation of usury laws

(1) [6:296] Civil penalties: If a loan is found to be usurious, the lender may be precluded from recovering any interest. [Gibbo v. Berger (2004) 123 CA4th 396, 403, 19 CR3d 829, 834; see also Hardwick v. Wilcox (2017) 11 CA5th 975, 978-979, 217 CR3d 883, 885-886—no error in finding usurious interest payments made on series of loans offset principal debt and awarding borrower $227,236 for payments made during two years prior to filing suit; Development Acquisition Group, LLC v. EA Consulting, Inc. (ED CA 2011) 776 F.Supp.2d 1161, 1164—lenders who negotiate loans at usurious rates absent qualified exemptions have "no action at law to recover any interest"; Creative Ventures, LLC v. Jim Ward & Assocs. (2011) 195 CA4th 1430, 1448, 126 CR3d 564, 578—investors holding fractional interests in various promissory notes had no right to interest in any amount because interest terms were deemed usurious and therefore "null and void"; but see ¶ 6:295]

Additionally, the trial court may, in its discretion, assess treble damages against the lender (i.e., three times the amount paid in violation of the usury limit). [Civ.C. § 1916-3(a); Burr v. Capital Reserve Corp. (1969) 71 C2d 983, 994, 80 CR 345, 352; see also Development Acquisition Group, LLC v. EA Consulting, Inc., supra, 776 F.Supp.2d at 1165-1166—borrower may recover treble the interest amount paid so long as action is brought within one year after payment; Creative Ventures, LLC v. Jim Ward & Assocs., supra, 195 CA4th at 1450, 126 CR3d at 579 (declining to award civil penalties where defendants' misconduct deemed merely "careless" or "mistaken")]

(2) [6:297] Criminal penalties: Charging a usurious interest rate is also a criminal offense, punishable by a maximum five years' imprisonment. [Civ.C. § 1916-3(b)]

(3) [6:297.5] Limitation—federal law preemption re usury claims against national banks: As discussed earlier, federal law preempts state law usury claims and remedies against national banks. The usury cause of action and remedies against a bank charted under the National Bank Act are exclusively as prescribed by § 86 of the Act. [12 USC § 86; Beneficial Nat'l Bank v. Anderson (2003) 539 US 1, 11, 123 S.Ct. 2058, 2064; see ¶ 6:282.3]

i. [6:298] Standing to challenge limited to borrower or borrower's representative: Usury protection is for the benefit of, and personal to, the borrower. Thus, only the borrower or borrower's personal representative has standing to raise a usury challenge. [Roes v. Wong (1999) 69 CA4th 375, 378, 81 CR2d 596, 598; see Matthews v. Ormerd (1903) 140 C 578, 582, 74 P 136, 138—"one not a party to an usurious contract, may not … invalidate it [on usury grounds]"]

(1) [6:298.1] Receivers: A receiver for an insolvent borrower acts as the borrower's legal representative in connection with the borrower's assets and liabilities (including usurious loans) and thus may assert a usury claim on the borrower's behalf. [See Roes v. Wong (1999) 69 CA4th 375, 378, 81 CR2d 596, 598]

(2) [6:298.2] Executors: The executor of a deceased borrower's estate likewise has standing to assert usury. [See Roes v. Wong (1999) 69 CA4th 375, 378-379, 81 CR2d 596, 598]

(3) [6:298.3] Corporate alter ego: Similarly, a borrower's corporate alter ego may raise a usury defense in a lender's action on a usurious note. [Western States Acceptance Corp. v. F.D.Tuttle, Inc. (1930) 210 C 51, 53, 290 P 574, 575]

(4) [6:298.4] Compare—"nonassuming" purchasers: A purchaser who acquires property "subject to" an existing loan but who does not assume the loan may not raise a claim of usury (i.e., the nonassuming purchaser is bound by whatever interest rates and charges are specified in the loan). [Ames v. Occidental Life Ins. Co. (1930) 210 C 271, 273, 291 P 182, 183; Roes v. Wong (1999) 69 CA4th 375, 378-379, 81 CR2d 596, 598]

Rationale: Where property is purchased subject to a usurious loan, the law presumes that the usurious interest was factored in as part of the purchase price. "In this context, recognizing a claim for usury would give the purchaser a better deal than the one he made." [Roes v. Wong, supra, 69 CA4th at 378-379, 81 CR2d at 598]

(5) [6:298.5] Compare—junior lienholders: A junior lienholder who pays off the senior lien in order to prevent foreclosure cannot assert a usury claim. The junior lienholder is neither directly liable for the senior loan nor acting in a representative capacity on behalf of the borrower. [Roes v. Wong (1999) 69 CA4th 375, 380, 81 CR2d 596, 599; Barnes v. Hartman (1966) 246 CA2d 215, 223, 54 CR 514, 520; but see Roesch v. De Mota (1944) 24 C2d 563, 574, 150 P2d 422—allowing junior lienholder to enjoin foreclosure on basis of usurious senior loan (but issue of junior's standing to assert usury was neither raised nor addressed)]

➪ PRACTICE POINTERS

• [6:299] For lenders: Except in seller-financed transactions (where the "time-price exemption" insulates the seller from usury claims, ¶ 6:294), lenders are cautioned to carefully review those charges that might conceivably be considered interest on a "loan" or "forbearance of money" to ensure the amounts do not exceed the applicable maximum rate. Since the consequences of a usurious loan can be significant, a "savings clause" (¶ 6:295) should routinely be included in the loan documents.

• [6:300] For borrower's counsel: As a practical matter, the "time-price exemption" (protecting sellers from usury claims, ¶ 6:294) will usually make usury issues of little concern for attorneys involved in purchase and sale transactions. However, borrower's counsel is sometimes required to issue a usury opinion to the effect that the loan is not usurious. In that event, borrower's counsel must carefully scrutinize the transaction to determine whether any charge or provision might be under the usury umbrella.

Cross-refer: Attorney opinion letters in purchase and sale transactions are discussed in detail in Ch. 9.

G. Assuming Existing Financing or Purchasing Subject to Existing Financing

- 1. [6:310] General Considerations
  - a. [6:311] Distinctions
  - b. [6:312] Advantages over outright payoff of existing loan
- 2. [6:313] Assumption of Existing Financing

    - (1) From buyer's perspective
      - (a) [6:314] Advantages for buyer
        - 1) [6:315] Avoiding default under due-on-sale clause

      - (b) [6:317] Disadvantages for buyer
        - 1) [6:318] Fee
        - 2) [6:319] Qualification
        - 3) [6:320] Personal liability exposure under full recourse loan
    - (2) [6:321] From seller's perspective
  - b. [6:323] Formalities—writing requirement
  - c. [6:324] Compare—assumption/indemnity in favor of seller only
- 3. Purchasing Subject to Existing Financing
  - a. [6:325] Advantages for buyer
    - (1) [6:326] No fee or qualification
    - (2) [6:327] No personal liability to lender
  - b. [6:328] Disadvantages for buyer
    - (1) [6:329] Acceleration under due-on-sale clause
    - (2) [6:330] No usury protection
  - c. [6:331] Disadvantages for seller

1. [6:310] General Considerations: A buyer looking to acquire property that is encumbered by a loan has three choices—either:

- Pay off the existing loan;
- Specifically assume the existing loan pursuant to an agreement with the lender (or seller) (¶ 6:313 ff.); or
- Simply purchase the property "subject to" the existing loan, but not assume the loan (such a buyer is said to be a "nonassuming grantee") (¶ 6:325 ff.).

a. [6:311] Distinctions: Whether the buyer takes "subject to" an existing loan or "assumes" the loan has different consequences for the lender, the original borrower (seller) and the buyer.

Fundamentally, an assuming grantee becomes contractually bound to the lender; by contrast, a nonassuming grantee is not contractually (or otherwise) bound to pay the existing debt.

b. [6:312] Advantages over outright payoff of existing loan: There are several advantages to buyers who either assume or take subject to existing financing (rather than paying off the existing loan at the outset). Both alternatives obviate the need to obtain a new loan.

Additionally, buyer and seller might benefit by the following:

- Prepayment penalties on existing financing are avoided.
- The interest rate on the existing loan may be more favorable than current market rates.
- New loan fees and charges can be avoided (although lenders typically charge a fee for the buyer's assumption of an existing loan).
- A buyer who takes subject to an existing loan will not have to qualify for the financing.
- A financing condition to closing of the purchase and sale will be unnecessary if the buyer is taking subject to the existing loan. In turn, the parties may be able to more expeditiously consummate the purchase and sale.

2. [6:313] Assumption of Existing Financing: An assumption of existing financing is typically effected by the buyer's execution of a written assumption agreement with the existing lender. The assuming buyer is usually required to pay an assumption fee and meet the lender's financial qualification requirements.

a. Practical considerations

(1) From buyer's perspective

(a) [6:314] Advantages for buyer: An assumption may offer any or all of the following advantages for the buyer:

1) [6:315] Avoiding default under due-on-sale clause: If there is a due-on-sale clause in the deed of trust (¶ 6:388 ff.), the buyer's assumption of existing financing will prevent the sale from triggering a default under the deed of trust.

2) [6:316] Preserving antideficiency protection: If the existing loan originally was purchase money financing, an assumption will enable the buyer to retain the protection of antideficiency laws (CCP § 580b; see ¶ 6:563 ff.).

(b) [6:317] Disadvantages for buyer: On the other hand, buyers should also consider these potential disadvantages to an assumption:

1) [6:318] Fee: Lenders usually require assuming buyers to pay an assumption fee.

(In single-family residential transactions, this fee is often 1% of the outstanding principal balance due, plus certain administrative and other costs.)

2) [6:319] Qualification: The buyer may have to meet the lender's creditworthiness standards.

3) [6:320] Personal liability exposure under full recourse loan: If the existing loan was not purchase money, the assuming buyer will not have the benefit of CCP § 580b (purchase money antideficiency protection, ¶ 6:563 ff.) and may be assuming a full recourse loan. [See Paramount Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Barber (1968) 263 CA2d 166, 169, 69 CR 390, 392]

(2) [6:321] From seller's perspective: The buyer's assumption of existing financing exonerates the seller from any future liability on the loan. This is most important to sellers when the loan is nonpurchase money or otherwise a recourse loan (for which the seller would not have the benefit of antideficiency law protection).

➪ [6:322] PRACTICE POINTER: In an assumption transaction, the seller should make certain the lender specifically releases the seller pursuant to either the buyer's assumption agreement or a separate instrument. In this manner, there can be no subsequent claim by the lender that the buyer's assumption simply created an additional, second obligor, but that the seller was never exonerated.

b. [6:323] Formalities—writing requirement: Assumption agreements in the lender's favor are subject to the statute of frauds: An assumption agreement is ineffective to make the buyer personally liable on the existing loan unless it is (1) reduced to a writing signed by the buyer or (2) specifically provided for in the conveyance of the property. [Civ.C. § 1624(a)(6); Cornelison v. Kornbluth (1975) 15 C3d 590, 597, 125 CR 557, 561]

c. [6:324] Compare—assumption/indemnity in favor of seller only: Sometimes the buyer does not assume the loan pursuant to an agreement with the lender, but simply agrees (in its contract with the seller) to assume the seller's obligations to pay the loan and to indemnify the seller in the event the buyer fails to pay the loan.

Under such circumstances, the lender may have a third party claim against the buyer based on the principle of equitable subrogation. [Birkhofer v. Krumm (1935) 4 CA2d 43, 48, 40 P2d 553, 556]

3. Purchasing Subject to Existing Financing

a. [6:325] Advantages for buyer: A buyer who takes "subject to" existing financing may realize the following benefits:

(1) [6:326] No fee or qualification: The buyer avoids payment of any assumption fee and the necessity of meeting the lender's creditworthiness standards.

(2) [6:327] No personal liability to lender: The buyer has no contractual obligation to the lender on the preexisting loan. Consequently, the buyer will not be liable to the lender for a default under that loan even if the loan is nonpurchase money (and is otherwise recourse). [See Cornelison v. Kornbluth (1975) 15 C3d 590, 597-598, 125 CR 557, 561-562—nonassuming grantee not personally liable]

b. [6:328] Disadvantages for buyer: On the other hand, the following considerations may make it less desirable for buyers to take subject to existing financing:

(1) [6:329] Acceleration under due-on-sale clause: If there is a due-on-sale provision in the existing loan, the lender will have the right to call a default and accelerate the loan by reason of the sale. (See ¶ 6:388 ff.)

(2) [6:330] No usury protection: A purchaser of property that is subject to an existing usurious loan may not raise a claim of usury because the purchaser has not assumed the loan and is therefore not privy to the usurious transaction. [Ames v. Occidental Life Ins. Co. (1930) 210 C 271, 273, 291 P 182, 183; see ¶ 6:298.4]

c. [6:331] Disadvantages for seller: Sellers may be reluctant to agree to a sale subject to existing financing because, without an assumption, the seller is not exonerated from the debt; and, if the loan is nonpurchase money (and is otherwise recourse), the seller will remain personally liable for the loan obligation notwithstanding the sale.

[6:335] The borrower's obligations under the promissory note are almost always secured by the property purchased with the loan proceeds.

(Even if the note is secured by property other than (or in addition to) the purchased real property, legal issues pertaining to the lender's security interest will generally be the same.)

1. [6:336] Deed of Trust: In California, the instrument that is used to secure a promissory note given for a real property loan is almost invariably a deed of trust. It effectively gives the creditor (lender) a lien on the secured property (also referred to as the collateral) to satisfy the obligation under the note if it is not paid. [Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 1235, 44 CR2d 352, 357]

FORMS

- Deed of Trust (Simple), see Form 6:H.

- Deed of Trust (Complex), see Form 6:I.

a. [6:337] Mortgage compared: A promissory note also can be secured by a “mortgage” on the property that, like a deed of trust, gives the creditor a lien on the security (the real property collateral) to satisfy the borrower's obligation. [See Civ.C. §§ 2920, 2947—any interest in real property capable of being transferred may be mortgaged; Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 1235, 44 CR2d 352, 357]

Technically, mortgages operate by placing a lien on real property, while deeds of trust operate by passing title from the trustor to the trustee until the debt is paid or the property is sold following default. In practical effect, however, the instruments function the same. [See Bailey v. Citibank, N.A. (2021) 66 CA5th 335, 352-353, 280 CR3d 546, 560—title conveyed by trust deed is for security purposes only and confers no possessory interest in property; Robin v. Crowell (2020) 55 CA5th 727, 742-744, 270 CR3d 25, 34-36—because trust deeds function as lien on property, Civ.C. § 2911 lien extinguishment (¶ 3:299 ff.) applies and therefore bars beneficiaries from bringing judicial foreclosure action once statute of limitations expires (¶ 6:515.2); Jenkins v. JP Morgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2013) 216 CA4th 497, 518, 156 CR3d 912,

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

929-930, fn. 2 (disapproved on other grounds by Yvanova v. New Century Mortg. Corp. (2016) 62 C4th 919, 939, 199 CR3d 66, 82, fn. 13)—there is "little practical difference" between mortgages and trust deeds since they perform same basic function and trust deeds are "only a mortgage with power of sale"]

(1) [6:337.1] Remedies: Deeds of trust traditionally have been the preferred security instrument in real property loan transactions because, among other things, they are thought to provide the lender with broader remedies upon the borrower's default. Under a deed of trust, the lender has the remedy of nonjudicial foreclosure, by way of a "private power of sale" (see ¶ 6:514 ff.). According to dictum in at least one case, that remedy is not available under a mortgage (but see ¶ 6:337.2). [Ung v. Koehler (2005) 135 CA4th 186, 192, 37 CR3d 311, 314—aside from availability of nonjudicial foreclosure remedy, trust deeds have same legal effect as traditional mortgages and thus are often characterized as "mortgages with power of sale"]

(a) [6:337.2] Comment: Notwithstanding the Ung decision (¶ 6:337.1), it is clear mortgagees as well as trust deed beneficiaries may have at their disposal the remedy of nonjudicial foreclosure by way of a "private power of sale." The main distinction is that a mortgagee's assignee must record the assignment prior to exercising a power of sale. [See Civ.C. §§ 2932 (power of sale may be conferred by mortgage on mortgagee), 2932.5 (power of sale may be exercised by mortgagee's assignee if assignment is duly acknowledged and recorded) & 2924 (power of sale foreclosure provision explicitly references mortgages); Rossberg v. Bank of America, N.A. (2013) 219 CA4th 1481, 1498, 162 CR3d 525, 538 (noting § 2932.5 recordation requirement re assignments applies only to mortgages, not trust deeds); Orcilla v. Big Sur, Inc. (2016) 244 CA4th 982, 1003, 198 CR3d 715, 732 (same)]

(2) [6:337.3] Parties: One significant difference between the two security devices endures: Because a trustee conducts the private nonjudicial foreclosure sale, there are three parties to a deed of trust (¶ 6:338 ff.), whereas a mortgage involves only two parties (the lender and borrower). [See Robin v. Crowell (2020) 55 CA5th 727, 742, 270 CR3d 25, 34; Jenkins v. JP Morgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2013) 216 CA4th 497, 518, 156 CR3d 912, 930 (disapproved on other grounds by Yvanova v. New Century Mortg. Corp. (2016) 62 C4th 919, 939, 199 CR3d 66, 82, fn. 13)]

(3) [6:337.4] "Cal-Vet" mortgages: Under the "Cal-Vet" program (Mil. & Vet.C. § 987.50 et seq.), eligible California veterans can purchase a home with a special low-interest loan from the Department of Veterans Affairs. The Department takes title to the home the veteran seeks to buy, and the veteran enters into a long-term installment contract with the Department. [See Department of Veterans Affairs v. Duerksen (1982) 138 CA3d 149, 151-152, 187 CR 832, 833-834; Fountain Valley Chateau Blanc Homeowner's Ass'n v. Department of Veterans Affairs (1998) 67 CA4th 743, 756-757, 79 CR2d 248, 257-258]

(a) [6:337.5] Forfeiture upon default: Cal-Vet loans are enforced by forfeiture rather than foreclosure: If the buyer fails to comply with any of the contract terms, the Department may cancel the contract and take possession of the property. The buyer's payments made up to that time are "deemed to be rental paid for occupancy." [See Mil. & Vet.C. § 987.77; Fountain Valley Chateau Blanc Homeowner's Ass'n v. Department of Veterans Affairs (1998) 67 CA4th 743, 757, 79 CR2d 248, 257]

(b) [6:337.6] Department treated as lender: Although the Department holds title to the home until the purchase price is fully paid, a Cal-Vet sales contract is essentially a mortgage (see Civ.C. § 2920—any security device other than a deed of trust that confers a power of sale is a mortgage for purposes of default). The Department "clearly acts as a lender, as distinct from owner … The veteran retains control and actual possession of the property; [they have] all the indicia of ownership except legal title." [Fountain Valley Chateau Blanc Homeowner's Ass'n v. Department of Veterans Affairs (1998) 67 CA4th 743, 757, 79 CR2d 248, 257 (emphasis added)—as lender (not an owner), Department of Veterans Affairs not bound by CC&Rs nor liable for borrower's CC&R violations]

b. [6:338] Parties to deed of trust: A deed of trust creates a triparty relationship between the trustor, trustee and beneficiary. [See Yvanova v. New Century Mortg. Corp. (2016) 62 C4th 919, 926, 199 CR3d 66, 72; Vien-Phuong Thi Ho v. ReconTrust Co., N.A. (9th Cir. 2016) 858 F3d 568, 570; Aviel v. Ng (2008) 161 CA4th 809, 816, 74 CR3d 200, 205]

(1) [6:339] Trustor: The "trustor" is the owner of the real property estate that is pledged.

(a) [6:340] Not necessarily borrower: The trustor is not necessarily the borrower under the promissory note. If another party pledges property as security for the borrower's obligations, that third party is the trustor.

(b) [6:341] Transfer of title: A trustor under a deed of trust technically conveys title to its interest in the secured property to the trustee. But the transfer is for security purposes only; the trustor still retains all the rights and benefits of ownership and, indeed, can convey title to the property subject to the lien of the deed of trust. [Lupertino v. Carbahal

(1973) 35 CA3d 742, 748, 111 CR 112, 115-116; Aviel v. Ng (2008) 161 CA4th 809, 816, 74 CR3d 200, 205; see also Bailey v. Citibank, N.A. (2021) 66 CA5th 335, 356, 280 CR3d 546, 563—party claiming adverse possession of property encumbered by pre-existing trust deed could, at most, acquire title subject to prior trust deed]

➪ [6:341.1] PRACTICE POINTER: Lender's counsel should make sure the trustor holds a fee simple estate in the real property security. Otherwise, holders of competing interests may impede the lender's efforts to realize on its security. For example, a bank that loaned against a widow's life estate had no interest in the underlying property following her death, making it impossible for the bank to foreclose and collect its loan. [See Peterson v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2015) 236 CA4th 844, 186 CR3d 842 (discussed further at ¶ 4:92.7)]

(2) Trustee

(a) [6:342] Limited function and powers: The trustee holds legal title to the secured real property interest, but only so far as necessary to carry out the trustee's duties—i.e., to the extent necessary to conduct a nonjudicial foreclosure sale and convey title to the successful bidder in the event of the borrower's default. [Lupertino v. Carbahal (1973) 35 CA3d 742, 748, 111 CR 112, 115; see also Shuster v. BAC Home Loans Servicing, LP (2012) 211 CA4th 505, 511, 149 CR3d 749, 753—trustee carries no incidents of property ownership other than right to convey upon default; Heritage Oaks Partners v. First American Title Ins. Co. (2007) 155 CA4th 339, 345, 66 CR3d 510, 514-515—trustee's duties do not extend beyond those specified in trust deed and statutes]

The trustee under a deed of trust is not a true "trustee" and owes no fiduciary obligations. The trustee has no functions other than (i) upon a default, to enforce the lender's nonjudicial (private power of sale) foreclosure rights; or (ii) upon satisfaction of the secured obligation, to execute and record a reconveyance (¶ 6:406 ff.). [Yvanova v. New Century Mortg. Corp. (2016) 62 C4th 919, 927, 199 CR3d 66, 72; see also Citrus El Dorado, LLC v. Chicago Title Co. (2019) 32 CA5th 943, 948, 244 CR3d 372, 376-377—trustee has no fiduciary duty to trustor or beneficiary; Kalnoki v. First American Trustee Servicing Solutions, LLC (2017) 8 CA5th 23, 40, 214 CR3d 292, 305 (same); In re Cedano (9th Cir. BAP 2012) 470 BR 522, 534-535 (applying Calif. law)—debtor's professional negligence claim against trustee properly dismissed because trustee fully satisfied its duties by taking all steps necessary to foreclose on trust deed]

Thus, the trustee's powers and duties under a deed of trust are far different from those conferred by law upon trustees under an express trust.

(b) [6:343] Dual agent: The trustee acts at the direction of the beneficiary when the beneficiary elects to commence a nonjudicial foreclosure. Nonetheless, within the scope of its functions, the trustee is a common agent for both the trustor and beneficiary. [Lupertino v. Carbahal (1973) 35 CA3d 742, 747, 111 CR 112, 115; Heritage Oaks Partners v. First American Title Ins. Co. (2007) 155 CA4th 339, 345, 66 CR3d 510, 514; Vournas v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1999) 73 CA4th 668, 677, 86 CR2d 490, 496-497; see also Citrus El Dorado, LLC v. Chicago Title Co. (2019) 32 CA5th 943, 948, 244 CR3d 372, 376—trustee "acts merely" as trustor's/beneficiary's common, passive agent for limited purpose of foreclosing after default or reconveying property upon satisfaction of debt]

(c) [6:344] Substitution of trustees: Even though a party to the deed of trust, the trustee is not required to execute or otherwise accept the deed of trust. However, if the trustee refuses to act, or cannot act due to resignation, incapacity, disability, absence or death, the beneficiaries or their authorized agents must appoint a new or successor trustee. [See Civ.C. § 2934a(d)(2)(C); and ¶ 6:405 ff.]

(d) [6:344.1] Failure to initially designate trustee no bar to enforcement of deed of trust: Because of the trustee's limited role (¶ 6:342), it is unnecessary to name any particular entity as trustee when a deed of trust is created. Indeed, the naming of the trustee is irrelevant to the creation of a deed of trust so long as a trustee is named prior to foreclosure: "Although an issue of first impression in California, the weight of authority from other jurisdictions supports the … conclusion that the omission of a trustee does not prevent enforcement of the deed of trust." [Shuster v. BAC Home Loans Servicing, LP (2012) 211 CA4th 505, 507-508, 510-511, 149 CR3d 749, 751, 753-754—failure to designate trustee does not transform instrument into mortgage; see also Civ.C. § 2934a(d)(2)(C)—if trust deed does not designate trustee, beneficiaries or their agents must appoint one]

(3) [6:345] Beneficiary: The beneficiary is the obligee of the obligation secured by the deed of trust—i.e., the lender. (Although the trustor might be different from the obligor of the secured obligation (¶ 6:340), the beneficiary is always the obligee of the secured obligation.)

(a) [6:346] Signature: The beneficiary typically does not sign the deed of trust. However, if the beneficiary has specific obligations under a deed of trust, the trustor may find it advisable to require the beneficiary's signature (as where, e.g., the beneficiary is obligated to subordinate its lien (¶ 6:450 ff.) or to partially reconvey the deed of trust (¶ 6:409 ff.), or where the beneficiary has obligations under an all-inclusive deed of trust (¶ 6:73 ff.)).

Comment: The beneficiary's acceptance of the deed of trust should be sufficient to bind the beneficiary to its obligations thereunder regardless of whether it actually executes the document.

c. [6:350] Required formalities; recordation: Like any other conveyancing instrument (see Ch. 4), the validity of a deed of trust turns on compliance with certain minimum requirements: A deed of trust may be created, renewed or extended only by a writing "executed with the formalities required in the case of a grant of real property." [Civ.C. § 2922; see Granadino v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2015) 236 CA4th 411, 416, 186 CR3d 408, 412; Jones v. Wachovia Bank (2014) 230 CA4th 935, 943, 179 CR3d 21, 27]

Thus, the trustor must execute the trust deed instrument and deliver it to the beneficiary. Moreover, the instrument must adequately describe the parties and the encumbered property. [See MTC Fin'l Inc. v. California Dept. of Tax & Fee Admin. (2019) 41 CA5th 742, 745, 747, 751-752, 254 CR3d 485, 488-489, 493—trust deed that excluded property's city and county and contained inaccurate lot and page book numbers did not describe encumbered land sufficiently to enforce lien priority]

The deed of trust also must be recorded in order to perfect the priority of the beneficiary's lien, etc. [See RNT Holdings, LLC v. United Gen. Title Ins. Co. (2014) 230 CA4th 1289, 1296, 179 CR3d 175, 181—although not usually required for proving trust deed's validity, recordation affects deed's potential efficacy re subsequent BFPs; Azadozy v. Nikoghosian (2005) 128 CA4th 1369, 1374-1375, 27 CR3d 811, 815—priority given only to bona fide purchaser or encumbrancer who first duly records instrument creating interest; compare First Bank v. East West Bank (2011) 199 CA4th 1309, 1311, 132 CR3d 267, 269 (distinguishing recordation, which establishes priority, from indexing, which provides constructive notice) —lenders' trust deeds secured by same property, executed on same day and "simultaneously time-stamped for recording" pursuant to standard practice given equal priority even though indexed at different times (¶ 6:408.4a); MTC Fin'l, Inc. v. Nationstar Mortgage, LLC (2018) 19 CA5th 811, 815-816, 228 CR3d 238, 240-241—parties' intent, not recorder's random act of indexing, controlled lien priority of 2 trust deeds created and submitted for recordation simultaneously, but indexed in reverse order]

d. [6:351] Title insurance company/commercial trustee form deeds of trust: Most major title insurance companies, as well as other commercial trustee enterprises, publish form deeds of trust naming the title insurance company/commercial trustee entity (or an affiliated entity) as trustee. (The motivation, of course, is to position the company for additional business through the handling of foreclosures and reconveyances.)

Although necessarily generic, these form deeds of trust are usually more than adequate for simple secured real estate transactions; indeed their use offers two principal advantages:

• [6:352] Court tested: The forms are court-tested security instruments which sufficiently cover the most important aspects of simple financing transactions (and many complex transactions as well).

• [6:353] Cost-saving: The client will save attorney fees by using an acceptable, preprinted form.

e. Basic provisions of deed of trust

(1) [6:354] Grant: The deed of trust must contain a grant to the trustee, in trust, with a power of sale (i.e., right to conduct a nonjudicial foreclosure sale).

(a) [6:355] Not necessarily fee interest: A deed of trust can pledge almost any estate in real property. Therefore, the trustor might be granting something other than a fee interest—such as a leasehold estate. (See ¶ 7:390 ff. re financing of ground leases.)

(b) [6:355.1] After-acquired property: The secured interest might be described broadly enough to extend to interests in the underlying property acquired by the trustor after execution of the deed of trust. Indeed, "it is well settled that a trust deed creates a valid lien on real property to secure a debt for which it is executed, even though the trustor has no title to the property at the time of the execution of the instrument, provided he subsequently acquires title thereto during the life of the deed of trust. Title to real property acquired after it is mortgaged is deemed to be covered by the lien on the theory that the mortgagor is estopped from denying title under such circumstances." [RNT Holdings, LLC v. United Gen. Title Ins. Co. (2014) 230 CA4th 1289, 1296, 179 CR3d 175, 181—trustor who executed trust deed before closing estopped from denying lien's validity]

For example, a deed of trust expressly stating that it includes, together with the legal description of the property, "all the improvements now or hereafter erected on the property, and all easements, rights, appurtenances … and all fixtures now or hereafter a part of the property …" operates automatically to add easements, fixtures and additions to the secured property obtained after the deed was provided to the lender; it is immaterial whether those additions are recorded. [Hellweg v. Cassidy (1998) 61 CA4th 806, 809-810, 71 CR2d 798, 800—trust deed encumbered property subsequently added by lot line adjustment]

(2) [6:356] Obligations secured: There must be a clear description of the obligations secured by the deed of trust.

The obligation most often secured in connection with a real property sales transaction is payment of a promissory note. However, the lender may additionally want security for the performance of a contract, such as a loan agreement (¶ 6:180 ff.); in that event, the deed of trust usually secures both the promissory note and the borrower's obligations under the contract. [See Dieckmeyer v. Redevelopment Agency of City of Huntington Beach (2005) 127 CA4th 248, 258, 24 CR3d 895, 903—deed of trust secured promissory note as well as borrower's performance of CC&Rs recorded against secured property and loan agreement]

(a) [6:357] Description by reference to secured document(s) suffices: A detailed description of the terms and conditions of the secured obligations is not required; identification of the nature and character of the debt suffices. [See W.P. Fuller & Co. v. McClure (1920) 48 CA 185, 193-194, 191 P 1027, 1031]

Thus, e.g., the deed of trust may simply identify the document(s) evidencing the secured obligation—preferably, including the date thereof and the parties thereto. (However, a deed of trust can also secure an oral agreement.)

(b) [6:358] Future/additional advances: Many deeds of trust include a provision stating any future, additional loan or advance made to the trustor (or borrower) by the lender will be secured by the deed of trust ("future (or additional) advance" clauses).

1) [6:359] Validity: California law permits the granting of security for performance of obligations not then in existence (Civ.C. § 2884); however, such provision may be held unenforceable if overly broad or ambiguous or if the obligor was not made reasonably aware of the provision. An important consideration is whether the future/additional obligations are reasonably related to the primary obligation. [See Bear Creek Master Ass'n v. Southern California Investors, Inc. (2018) 28 CA5th 809, 819-821, 239 CR3d 547, 555-557—recorded instrument that created "inchoate claim of lien" to secure future advances for golf course maintenance did not impart constructive notice of actual, immediately effective lien and thus did not relate back to recorded instrument's date; compare Wong v. Beneficial Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1976) 56 CA3d 286, 294-296, 128 CR 338, 343-344 (dealing with "dragnet clauses," ¶ 6:360 ff.)]

(c) [6:360] "Dragnet clauses": A "dragnet" (or "anaconda") clause is similar in effect to a future/additional advance clause. It purports to include within the secured debt any and all obligations of the borrower to the lender, whether then existing or arising in the future, and whether a loan, an advance or a nonmonetary obligation. [Fischer v. First Int'l Bank (2003) 109 CA4th 1433, 1444, 1 CR3d 162, 168-169]

1) [6:361] Narrowly construed: Dragnet clauses generally are upheld. However, because of the breadth of their apparent coverage and because the trustor (borrower) often is unaware of their implications, courts tend to narrowly construe them against the lender. [See Fischer v. First Int'l Bank (2003) 109 CA4th 1433, 1444, 1 CR3d 162, 169; Wong v. Beneficial Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1976) 56 CA3d 286, 294-296, 128 CR 338, 343-344]

2) [6:361.1] Varying approaches to application and validity: Courts in different jurisdictions have adopted widely divergent approaches in considering the application and validity of broadly-worded dragnet clauses. [See Fischer v. First Int'l Bank (2003) 109 CA4th 1433, 1444-1445, 1 CR3d 162, 169 (surveying jurisdictional approaches and collecting cases)]

At one extreme, dragnet clauses will be applied to other debts only if those debts are explicitly described in the security agreement. [See Wong v. Beneficial Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1976) 56 CA3d 286, 293-294, 128 CR 338, 342-343 (citing out-of-state cases)]

At the other extreme, generally-worded dragnet clauses are viewed literally as conclusive evidence of the parties' intent that the clause encompass all other debts. These courts reason that the parties could have limited the scope of the clause had they truly intended to do so. [See Fischer v. First Int'l Bank, supra, 109 CA4th at 1444-1445, 1 CR3d at 169 (citing out-of-state cases)]

3) [6:361.2] California approach—parties' actual expectations control: California courts take an intermediate position, looking more to "the actual expectations of the parties … than the literal wording of the boilerplate clause." [Fischer v. First Int'l Bank (2003) 109 CA4th 1433, 1445, 1 CR3d 162, 170 (emphasis added; internal quotes omitted)]

The parties' actual expectations are tested objectively. [Fischer v. First Int'l Bank, supra, 109 CA4th at 1445, 1 CR3d at 170]

a) [6:361.3] Impact of trust deed being contract of adhesion: Dragnet clauses are commonly contained in preprinted (boilerplate) standard bank form deeds of trust and as such are deemed part of a contract of adhesion. [Lomanto v. Bank of America (1972) 22 CA3d 663, 668, 99 CR 442, 444]

The California approach to the application of dragnet clauses (looking to the parties' actual expectations) is consistent with the law regarding the enforceability of adhesion contracts generally: A provision contained in a contract of adhesion is not enforceable if it does not fall within the reasonable expectations of the weaker or "adhering" party (in this case, the borrower). [See Fischer v. First Int'l Bank (2003) 109 CA4th 1433, 1445-1446, 1 CR3d 162, 170]

b) [6:361.4] Proponent's burden: The proponent of a dragnet clause bears the burden of establishing that the parties intended all of the subject loans to be within its scope. [Fischer v. First Int'l Bank (2003) 109 CA4th 1433, 1445, 1 CR3d 162, 170]

c) [6:361.5] Relevant factors: California courts have examined several factors in determining whether a broadly-worded dragnet clause was mutually intended to cover preexisting, contemporaneous and/or after-acquired debts. [See Fischer v. First Int'l Bank (2003) 109 CA4th 1433, 1446, 1 CR3d 162, 170-171]

Of all the relevant factors, however, two (¶ 6:361.6 ff.) are commonly given the greatest weight when the instrument does not expressly set forth the parties' intent. [See Wong v. Beneficial Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1976) 56 CA3d 286, 295-297, 128 CR 338, 343-345]

1/ [6:361.6] "Relationship of the loans" test: This approach examines the relationship between the subject loans. If there is little or no connection between the loans, or they are entirely different in nature, it can fairly be concluded that the parties did not intend the other loan to be covered by the security (trust deed) given for the primary loan. [Wong v. Beneficial Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1976) 56 CA3d 286, 295-296, 128 CR 338, 343-344]

2/ [6:361.7] "Reliance on the security" test: This test (or factor) considers whether the lender relied upon the dragnet clause as security for the other loan.

When different security is taken for the other loan, it cannot be inferred that the parties relied on the security for the primary loan, creating a strong inference the parties did not mutually intend cross-collateralization. [Wong v. Beneficial Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1976) 56 CA3d 286, 296, 128 CR 338, 344; Fischer v. First Int'l Bank (2003) 109 CA4th 1433, 1448-1449, 1 CR3d 162, 172-173—triable issue of fact whether dragnet clause brought separately-secured take-out loan within second deed of trust on borrowers' residence securing equipment loan]

d) [6:361.8] Effect of conflicting provisions in related documents: At least where the trust deed incorporates by reference related loan documents (promissory note, loan agreement, loan commitment, etc.), courts will also look to those additional documents in determining the scope and application of a dragnet clause. [See Fischer v. First Int'l Bank (2003) 109 CA4th 1433, 1447-1448, 1 CR3d 162, 172]

Any ambiguity between the dragnet provision in the trust deed itself and another provision in the related documents covering the same subject matter will be construed against application of the dragnet clause absent other evidence of the parties' intent. [Fischer v. First Int'l Bank, supra, 109 CA4th at 1448, 1 CR3d at 172—related loan agreement specifically addressed subject of collateral but did not mention cross-collateralization, suggesting trust deed's dragnet clause did not operate to bring separately-secured loan within its scope]

[6:361.9 - 6:361.14] Reserved.

4) [6:361.15] Compare—dragnet clause expressly conditioned on specified events: It is not necessary to resort to extrinsic evidence or objective "tests" when the terms of the dragnet clause expressly state how or when it will apply (or become "activated").

For example, a dragnet clause in a 1983 trust deed "simply [had] no application" to cause a merger with a subsequent (1988) trust deed given for a 1988 additional loan where the clause explicitly stated (i) in order for it to apply, a subsequent note must expressly recite that it is secured by the 1983 trust deed (which did not occur in this case); and (ii) additional indebtedness would be included under the dragnet clause only at the lender's (beneficiary's) option evidenced by a notice in writing to the borrower (trustor) (no such notice was ever given in this case). [See Ostayan v. Serrano Reconveyance Co. (2000) 77 CA4th 1411, 1421, 92 CR2d 577, 585 (disapproved on other grounds by Black Sky Capital, LLC v. Cobb (2019) 7 C5th 156, 165, 246 CR3d 583, 591)—dragnet clause did not cause merger of 1983 and 1988 deeds of trust so as to wipe out bank's senior lien when it foreclosed its junior lien; see also National Enterprises, Inc. v. Woods (2001) 94 CA4th 1217, 1228, 115 CR2d 37, 44—no merger of first and second deeds of trust under dragnet clause because contrary to language of loan documents, and lender failed to exercise option to include second debt under first deed of trust]

(d) [6:362] "Other obligations": In an effort to buttress the lender's argument that any future obligation of the borrower to the lender is secured by the deed of trust, some deeds of trust include a provision stating the deed of trust will be deemed to secure any "other obligation" of the borrower to the lender whenever such other obligation specifically provides it is secured by the deed of trust. [See Ostayan v. Serrano Reconveyance Co. (2000) 77 CA4th 1411, 1414, 92 CR2d 577, 579, fn. 2 (disapproved on other grounds by Black Sky Capital, LLC v. Cobb (2019) 7 C5th 156, 165, 246 CR3d 583, 591)]

1) [6:363] Lien priority issues: Though such a provision might be enforceable as between trustor and beneficiary, the lender may have problems with the priority of its lien (vis-à-vis junior lienholders) in respect to such "other obligations" which are not specifically described in the deed of trust.

(e) [6:364] Nonmonetary obligations—foreclosure problems: A deed of trust can secure nonmonetary obligations; however, there are several practical problems in foreclosing such a deed of trust:

• [6:365] It is often difficult to convince an institutional trustee (such as a title insurance company) to conduct a nonjudicial foreclosure when the obligation in default is not a definitive monetary amount.

• [6:366] Also, it is difficult to determine the amount the beneficiary may credit bid at the foreclosure sale. (See ¶ 6:535 re credit bids.)

[6:367 - 6:369] Reserved.

f. Additional provisions

(1) [6:370] Trustor's standard covenants: Deeds of trust typically include extensive covenants by the trustor with respect to the encumbered property. The nature and scope of the trustor's covenants are negotiable and will vary with the particular transaction; however, the following covenants are contained in almost every deed of trust (see Form 6:H):

(a) [6:371] Property maintenance: Trustor must maintain the property in good condition and repair, and neither remove or demolish structures nor commit or suffer waste thereon. [See Civ.C. § 2929]

("Bad faith waste" is actionable following a foreclosure notwithstanding the protections afforded some debtors under the antideficiency statutes; see ¶ 6:561.5a ff.)

(b) [6:372] Compliance with law: Trustor must at all times keep the property in compliance with the law.

(c) [6:373] Taxes/assessments: Trustor must timely pay all property taxes and assessments before delinquency (including any senior encumbrances, charges and other liens).

1) [6:374] Impounds and limitations: Lenders sometimes require that the borrower pay the lender a monthly "impound" to cover annual property taxes and insurance premiums (usually paid in equal monthly installments). Impound accounts are, however, subject to statutory limitations:

a) [6:374.1] No mandatory impounds in residential loan transactions: Generally, a loan secured by a "single-family, owner-occupied dwelling" (see Civ.C. § 2954(c)) cannot be conditioned on a mandatory impound account for taxes, insurance or other purposes related to the property. Such impounds are strictly voluntary absent the borrower's written waiver and, therefore, are also terminable by the borrower at any time unless the borrower signed a written consent to a mandatory, permanent impound account. [See Civ.C. § 2954(a); Kirk v. Source One Mortg. Services Corp. (1996) 46 CA4th 483, 489-490, 54 CR2d 358, 362]

A borrower's consent to impounds is not effective unless the lender first provided the borrower with a written disclosure (in the loan application or otherwise) stating that the establishment of an impound account shall not be required as a condition to execution of the loan agreement and whether interest will be paid on the impounded funds. [Civ.C. § 2954(a)]

1/ [6:374.2] Exceptions: Mandatory impounds on a single-family, owner-occupied dwelling secured loan are permitted (i) if required by a state or federal regulatory authority; (ii) if the loan is made, guaranteed or insured by the state or federal government; (iii) upon the borrower's failure to pay two consecutive tax installments before the delinquency date; (iv) where the original principal amount of the loan is 90% or more of the purchase price (or appraised value of the underlying security); (v) whenever the combined principal amount of all loans secured by the property exceeds 80% of the appraised value; (vi) where the loan is made in compliance with Regulation Z requirements for higher priced mortgage loans (regardless of whether it is a higher priced mortgage loan); or (vii) where the loan is refinanced or modified under a lender's homeownership preservation program or by the lender's participation in such a program sponsored by a nonprofit organization or the federal, state or local government. [See Civ.C. § 2954(a) (defining “Regulation Z” for purposes of this statute)]

b) [6:374.3] Investment of impounded funds: There are statutory restrictions on where a trust deed beneficiary may invest funds held as impounds for taxes, assessments or insurance premiums. [See Civ.C. § 2955]

c) [6:374.4] Interest credit to borrower (residential loans): The borrower must be credited for a minimum amount of interest on property taxes, assessments and insurance impounds for residential loans. [See Civ.C. § 2954.8—minimum 2% simple interest per annum]

The credited interest requirement (above) is equally binding on state and federally chartered banks. [See Lusnak v. Bank of America, N.A. (9th Cir. 2018) 883 F3d 1185, 1197-1198 (finding National Banking Act does not preempt Civ.C. § 2954.8)—borrower could bring state law action against national bank for refusing to pay interest on impound accounts]

1/ [6:374.5] Hazard insurance proceeds distinguished: Section 2954.8 (¶ 6:374.4) does not require the lender to pay interest on hazard insurance proceeds that are held in escrow (e.g., to allow rebuilding following destruction of the mortgagor's residence). [See Gray v. Quicken Loans, Inc. (2021) 61 CA5th 524, 528-529, 275 CR3d 787, 790—Civ.C. § 2954.8 mandates interest payments on impounds collected by mortgage lenders in advance, but not on insurance proceeds paid in arrears for past losses]

(d) [6:375] Defense of legal proceedings: Trustor must appear in and defend actions or proceedings purporting to affect the secured property or the deed of trust.

(e) [6:376] Liens: Trustor must keep the property free from mechanic's and other liens. (Sometimes the lender will prohibit junior financing; see ¶ 6:397 ff. re “due-on-encumbrance” provisions.)

(f) [6:377] Hazard insurance: Trustor must provide hazard insurance (with loss payable to beneficiary) in an amount and on coverage and other terms satisfactory to the beneficiary.

1) [6:377.1] Impounds for insurance premiums: See ¶ 6:374 ff.

2) [6:378] Replacement value coverage: Lenders typically require coverage for the full replacement value of the improvements.

a) [6:378.1] Statutory replacement value limit: Civ.C. § 2955.5 prohibits lenders from requiring borrowers, as a condition of receiving or maintaining a loan secured by real property, to provide hazard insurance coverage “in an amount exceeding the replacement value of the improvements of the property.” [Civ.C. § 2955.5(a)]

Lenders must disclose this limitation, in writing, to borrowers “as soon as practicable” but, in any event, before execution of any note or security documents. [Civ.C. § 2955.5(b)]

Anyone harmed by a violation of Civ.C. § 2955.5 is entitled to obtain injunctive relief and “may recover” damages and reasonable attorney fees and costs. [Civ.C. § 2955.5(c)] But a violation of the statute does not affect the validity of the secured loan. [Civ.C. § 2955.5(d)]

3) [6:379] Noncancelable: The required insurance policies usually must be noncancelable, except upon prior written notice to the lender.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

4) [6:380] Insurance proceeds: In addition, the lender will require strict controls over use of insurance proceeds: e.g., how insurance proceeds are to be used to rebuild the property; how insurance claims can be compromised and adjusted; and how insurance proceeds will be impounded during the period of reconstruction.

a) [6:381] Lender's right to control disbursement of insurance proceeds: Generally, provisions in a deed of trust authorizing the lender to receive and control disbursement of hazard insurance proceeds are enforceable "whether or not impairment of the security interest in the property has resulted from the event that caused the proceeds of the insurance policy to become payable." [Civ.C. § 2924.7; see JEM Enterprises v. Washington Mut. Bank (2002) 99 CA4th 638, 644-646, 121 CR2d 458, 462-474—under assignment provision in deed of trust, lender entitled to use earthquake damage insurance proceeds to repair secured property, apply funds to secured debt, or release funds to owner]

1/ [6:381.1] Effect of conditional promise to name lender as loss payee: The same result obtains where the deed of trust (or other loan documents) does not mandate the procurement of hazard insurance for the lender's benefit but simply states that if the borrower obtains it the lender will be named as loss payee and have the right to control disbursement of the proceeds. [Martin v. World Sav. & Loan Ass'n (2001) 92 CA4th 803, 809, 112 CR2d 225, 229-230—trustor's conditional promise to assign right to earthquake insurance proceeds to lender did not require consideration separate from loan itself]

2/ [6:381.2] Compare—where loan documents neither require insurance nor give lender rights in proceeds: On the other hand, the lender has no right to collect or control the insurance proceeds where the loan documents neither require the borrower to obtain the coverage for which the proceeds are paid nor give the lender an interest in or authority over policy proceeds if the borrower elects to obtain that (or any other) coverage. [Foothill Village Homeowners Ass'n v. Bishop (1999) 68 CA4th 1364, 1377-1378, 81 CR2d 195, 204; Ziello v. Sup.Ct. (First Fed'l Bank of Calif.) (1995) 36 CA4th 321, 324, 42 CR2d 251, 252-253—lender had no interest in earthquake insurance proceeds since deed of trust did not require insurance against earthquake damage as condition for loan, did not assign proceeds to lender and did not give lender right to share, control or direct proceeds]

3/ [6:381.3] Effect of loss payable endorsement: As between lender and borrower, the lender's rights in and to hazard insurance proceeds are defined by the loan documents (or any assignments thereunder). The lender has no greater rights even if it is mistakenly named by the insurer as loss payee on the policy. The policy's loss payable endorsement defines only the insurer's obligation; it does not conclusively determine the lender's entitlement to the proceeds. [Ziello v. Sup.Ct. (First Fed'l Bank of Calif.) (1995) 36 CA4th 321, 329-330, 42 CR2d 251, 256; compare Home Sav. of America, F.S.B. v. Continental Ins. Co. (2001) 87 CA4th 835, 854, 104 CR2d 790, 803—where lender did not require borrower to obtain loss payable insurance but borrower voluntarily obtained policy containing "standard" mortgagee loss payable clause, lender entitled to loss proceeds since subject clause created separate, independent contract between insurer and lender]

[6:381.4] Reserved.

4/ [6:381.5] Compare—lender's rights after full credit bid foreclosure: A lender who acquires the secured property by "full credit bid" (¶ 6:535.1*) ordinarily is not entitled to insurance proceeds payable for prepurchase damage to the security. Rationale: The lender's only interest in the property (repayment of its loan) is deemed satisfied and any further payment would result in a double recovery. [Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 1238-1239, 44 CR2d 352, 359; see also Washington Mut. Bank v. Jacoby (2009) 180 CA4th 639, 646, 103 CR3d 245, 250]

But in narrow circumstances, the lender may have a right to share in common fund insurance proceeds in its capacity as unit owner in a common interest development; see ¶ 6:535.6a.

b) [6:382] Limitations on application of proceeds toward loan: Although the deed of trust often authorizes the lender to apply insurance proceeds toward reduction of amounts due under the loan, the lender's right to do so is subject to the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing. [Schoolcraft v. Ross (1978) 81 CA3d 75, 80, 146 CR 57, 59]

1/ [6:383] Not allowed if security unimpaired: The implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing obliges the lender to allow the borrower to use insurance proceeds to rebuild any damaged improvements "unless [the lender] can show that his security is impaired" (i.e., borrower is unwilling or unable to continue making the loan payments and the market value of the secured property does not adequately secure the borrower's obligation). [Schoolcraft v. Ross (1978) 81 CA3d 75, 80-81, 146 CR 57, 59-60]

2/ [6:384] Compare—defaults: However, if the borrower is in default, the lender may apply all insurance proceeds to the loan. [Ford v. Manufacturers Hanover Mortgage Corp. (9th Cir. 1987) 831 F2d 1520, 1524-1525]

Here, it is immaterial whether the market value of the trust deed property still adequately secures the borrower's obligation. Regardless of the value of the property, the purpose of the deed of trust would be defeated if the borrower were allowed to rely on the insured casualty loss to cure the borrower's default and deprive the lender of its contractual right to foreclose at any time; the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing will not be applied to significantly prejudice the lender's express contractual rights under the trust deed. [Ford v. Manufacturers Hanover Mortgage Corp., supra, 831 F2d at 1524-1525—where borrower in default, lender's security deemed impaired "as a matter of law"]

(g) [6:385] Payment of advances: Trustor must pay all sums advanced by beneficiary or trustee pursuant to the deed of trust or the obligations secured.

(h) [6:386] Other covenants: Various additional covenants might appear in other loan documents secured by the deed of trust. For example, a loan agreement might require the borrower to maintain a certain minimum net worth or liquidity, or to periodically deliver certain financial and other information to the lender.

(2) [6:387] Disposition of condemnation proceeds: The beneficiary of a deed of trust has a sufficient ownership interest in the secured property to be entitled to a portion of any condemnation proceeds in an amount equivalent to the impairment of its security interest. [See CCP § 1265.225—lienholder may share in condemnation award "only to the extent determined by the court to be necessary to prevent an impairment of the security"; D & M Fin'l Corp. v. City of Long Beach (2006) 136 CA4th 165, 176-177, 38 CR3d 562, 568-569 (inverse condemnation action)]

The beneficiary's disposition of any condemnation proceeds is at its discretion, subject to limitations similar to those relating to the use of insurance proceeds—including the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing (¶ 6:380 ff.). [See Milstein v. Security Pac. Nat'l Bank (1972) 27 CA3d 482, 486-487, 103 CR 16, 18-19—implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing requires beneficiary to exercise its discretion with respect to condemnation proceeds "in such fashion that it distribute to … borrowers all proceeds in excess of those necessary to recoup any impairment in security caused by the eminent domain proceeding"] Thus, after applying any condemnation proceeds to reduce the amount of its secured indebtedness, as with insurance proceeds, the beneficiary must permit the borrower to use the balance of the proceeds to rebuild.

(a) [6:387.1] Damaged security; equitable conversion theory: When a beneficiary's security is damaged (e.g., by flood or fire), the lender is entitled to recover, on an equitable conversion theory, the amount by which its security was damaged from the borrower's tort damages fund (i.e., based on the borrower's recovery of inverse condemnation damages from the third party tortfeasor(s) responsible for the damage). This theory rests on the idea that money awarded by the court as damages to the realty must be treated, in equity, as the land itself. [See American Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Leeds (1968) 68 C2d 611, 614-615, 68 CR 453, 456, fn. 2; Thoryk v. San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. (2014) 225 CA4th 386, 407, 170 CR3d 309, 323]

A typical form trust deed grants the lender the right to obtain the borrower's eminent domain or inverse condemnation damages. But, again, such contract rights are limited by statute to the amount necessary to prevent impairment of the lienholder's security (¶ 6:387). Moreover, to show entitlement to this "substitute" form of security, the lender must retain a proportional security interest in the real property that is still in force at the relevant times. [See Thoryk v. San Diego Gas & Elec. Co., supra, 225 CA4th at 407-408, 170 CR3d at 323-324—lender who opted to take damaged security through foreclosure under power of sale had no basis to seek proportional equitable conversion damages against borrower's future tort damages fund (¶ 6:561.2)]

(3) [6:388] Due-on-sale provisions: By a "due-on-sale clause," lenders often reserve the right to accelerate all amounts due under the loan if the trustor transfers all or any portion of its interest in the encumbered property.

A due-on-sale clause does not ipso facto make the loan immediately due and payable upon occurrence of the triggering event (sale of the security). It simply gives the lender the option of accelerating the debt (in the manner and within the time specified in the trust deed) and demanding immediate payment of the balance; the right to accelerate can be waived. [Fischer v. First Int'l Bank (2003) 109 CA4th 1433, 1450, 1 CR3d 162, 173, fn. 3]

(a) [6:389] Purpose: A due-on-sale clause protects two important concerns of the lender:

1) [6:390] New buyer's creditworthiness: The lender originally qualified the borrower based on that borrower's financial condition and the lender is concerned about a new buyer's creditworthiness.

2) [6:391] Fiscal incentive: Lenders are in the business of making new loans. Each time a loan is paid off, a lender might receive a prepayment fee; and each time a new loan is made, the lender generates a profit from loan fees and other charges. Thus, it behooves the lender to require the seller to pay off its loan, positioning the lender to make a new loan to the buyer.

Moreover, when the prior loan is accelerated by a sale, the lender may also be in a position to reap the benefit of higher interest rates (either by a new loan to the subsequent buyer or simply by repayment of the outstanding obligation, the proceeds of which will then be available to loan to others perhaps at a more advantageous interest rate).

3) [6:392] Compare—residential variable rate loans: Residential variable interest rate loans from institutional lenders usually permit assumption by new buyers. The lender does not necessarily need the protection of a due-on-sale clause to reap the benefit of higher interest rates because the new buyer will be subject to a variable rate that generally moves with the market rate over time.

(Nevertheless, any new buyer will probably be required to meet certain creditworthiness standards and pay a loan assumption fee.)

(b) [6:393] Validity—federal preemption: At one time, due-on-sale clauses were deemed unenforceable as an unreasonable restraint on alienation unless the lender could demonstrate enforcement was reasonably necessary to protect against impairment to its security or the risk of default. [Wellenkamp v. Bank of America (1978) 21 C3d 943, 953, 148 CR 379, 385-386 (superseded by regulation as stated in Fidelity Federal Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. de la Cuesta (1982) 458 US 141, 170, 102 S.Ct. 3014, 3031, fn. 24)—opinion limited to institutional lenders; Dawn Invest. Co. v. Sup.Ct. (Beck) (1982) 30 C3d 695, 702, 180 CR 332, 335—same rule applicable to noninstitutional, private lenders]

However, this authority is now preempted by federal law. [12 USC § 1701j-3 (Garn-St. Germain Depository Institutions Act of 1982, or "Garn Act")—Federal Home Loan Bank Board's regulations regarding due-on-sale clauses supersede state law] Under this preemptive federal law, due-on-sale clauses are valid except in limited circumstances. [See 12 CFR § 591.5(b)(1)]

1) [6:394] Limited exceptions to validity: The federal exceptions to enforceable due-on-sales provisions parallel state statutory exceptions (Civ.C. § 2924.6).

A lender may not accelerate the principal and accrued interest on a loan secured by a deed of trust on residential real property (containing at least one but no more than four housing units) solely by reason of any of the following transfers (Civ.C. § 2924.6):

- a transfer resulting from the obligor's death to the obligor's spouse (or registered domestic partner, see Fam.C. § 297.5(c)) who is also an obligor (Civ.C. § 2924.6(a)(1));

- a transfer by an obligor to their spouse (or registered domestic partner, see Fam.C. § 297.5(a)) as co-owner of the property (Civ.C. § 2924.6(a)(2));

- a transfer resulting from judgment of dissolution or legal separation or from a property settlement incident to such judgment that requires the obligor to continue making the loan payments by which a spouse (or registered domestic partner, see Fam.C. §§ 297.5(b), 299(d)) who is an obligor becomes sole owner of the property (Civ.C. § 2924.6(a)(3));

- a transfer by the obligor(s) into an inter vivos trust in which the obligor(s) are beneficiaries (Civ.C. § 2924.6(a)(4)); or

- the secured property (or any part of it) is made subject to a junior encumbrance or lien (Civ.C. § 2924.6(a)(5)).

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

a) [6:395] Nonwaivable: These exceptions to a lender's right of acceleration are nonwaivable; and any purported waiver is void and unenforceable (contrary to public policy). [Civ.C. § 2924.6(b)]

2) [6:396] Formalities—residential secured loans: Further, no due-on-sale-clause under a secured loan on property containing four or fewer residential units (or on property for which four or fewer residential units are to be constructed) is valid unless the clause is set forth in its entirety in both the body of the deed of trust and the promissory note (or other document evidencing the secured obligation). [Civ.C. § 2924.5]

(4) [6:397] Due-on-encumbrance provisions: A "due-on-encumbrance provision" addresses the lender's concern that the borrower might saddle the secured property with too much debt and thereby be unable to pay the loan obligation. Such provision permits the lender to call (accelerate) the loan if the borrower further encumbers the property.

(a) [6:398] Generally valid: Like due-on-sale clauses, due-on-encumbrance provisions generally are enforceable, pursuant to the preemptive Garn Act (¶ 6:393).

(b) [6:399] Exception re loans secured by single-family/owner-occupied dwelling: However, both the Garn Act and California law prohibit the enforcement of a due-on-encumbrance clause under a loan secured by a single-family, owner-occupied dwelling (Civ.C. § 2949):

No deed of trust on real property containing only a single-family, owner-occupied dwelling may be declared in default, nor may the maturity date of the loan secured thereby be accelerated, solely by reason of the owner further encumbering the secured property (or any portion thereof) with a junior loan. [Civ.C. § 2949(a)]

A "single-family, owner-occupied dwelling" for this purpose is a dwelling that will be owned and occupied by a signatory to the deed of trust secured by such dwelling within 90 days of executing the deed of trust. [Civ.C. § 2949(b)]

(5) [6:400] Inspections: The deed of trust usually reserves to the beneficiary (lender) the right to enter upon and inspect the property from time to time—in particular, if the borrower defaults on the loan. The lender's right of inspection may even include the right to charge a delinquent borrower reasonable "property inspection fees" (see ¶ 6:229).

(See also ¶ 6:629 ff. re statutory right of entry/inspection for hazardous substances.)

(6) [6:401] Recourse vs. nonrecourse: A deed of trust (and/or promissory note) sometimes indicates the loan is "nonrecourse." "Recourse" or "nonrecourse" bears on the scope of the lender's remedies should the borrower default on the loan:

(a) [6:402] "Nonrecourse"—foreclosure as exclusive remedy: Under a "nonrecourse" loan, the lender's sole remedy in the event of a default is to foreclose on its collateral; the borrower will not be liable for any deficiency between the value of the collateral and the amount of the unpaid secured obligation. [Aozora Bank, Ltd. v. 1333 North Calif. Blvd. (2004) 119 CA4th 1291, 1295, 15 CR3d 340, 342]

1) [6:403] Comment: As a practical matter, commercial nonrecourse loans rarely leave the borrower completely insulated from personal liability. Lenders often exempt or "carve out" claims they may have against the trustor for such things as fraud, waste, environmental liability, or misapplication of insurance or condemnation proceeds. [See Aozora Bank, Ltd. v. 1333 North Calif. Blvd. (2004) 119 CA4th 1291, 1295, 15 CR3d 340, 342—fraud, material misrepresentation, and waste claims excepted from nonrecourse loan but no implied carve-out for lender's attorney fees in enforcing nonrecourse exceptions (¶ 6:249)]

(Generally, any post-nonjudicial foreclosure act or omission by the borrower that would give rise to a claim by the lender should be a nonrecourse "carve out.")

(b) [6:404] "Recourse"—borrower open to deficiency judgment: Conversely, a "recourse" loan generally means the borrower remains liable for such a deficiency—i.e., the lender is not limited to what it can recoup through foreclosure. (But see ¶ 6:560 ff. re antideficiency laws.)

(7) [6:405] Substitution of trustee: The beneficiary (lender) almost always reserves the right, in its sole discretion, to substitute trustees. This is essential for a lender because if the trustee (for any reason) refuses to proceed with a nonjudicial foreclosure, the beneficiary will need to find another trustee who will so act.

(Once the borrower satisfies the loan, the beneficiary also has a right to substitute the title company conducting the escrow for the trustee of record, pursuant to Civ.C. § 2934a (¶ 6:405a ff.). This is so if necessary to complete the reconveyance process. See Civ.C. § 2941(b)(7); and ¶ 6:408.16.)

(a) [6:405a] Statutory substitution procedures: There are two statutory procedures to effect a trust deed trustee substitution, both accomplished by recording prescribed documents evidencing the substitution (Civ.C. § 2934a(a); Dimock v. Emerald Properties LLC (2000) 81 CA4th 868, 871, 97 CR2d 255, 257):

1) [6:405.1] Single loan transactions—recording acknowledgment signed by all beneficiaries: Notwithstanding any contrary provision in a trust deed executed on or after January 1, 1968, a trustee substitution may be effected by recording in the county where the property is located a substitution executed and acknowledged by all beneficiaries under a trust deed (or their successors in interest). [Civ.C. § 2934a(a)(1)(A)]

2) [6:405.2] Series loans with same security—recording acknowledgment signed by majority interest holders: Where there are a series of notes secured by the same real property or undivided interests in a note secured by real property equivalent to a series transaction, a trustee substitution may be effected by recording in the county where the property is located a substitution executed and acknowledged by the holders of more than 50% of the record beneficial interest (exclusive of notes or interests issued or serviced and held by a licensed real estate broker or affiliate of the broker), to which is attached a separate written document signed under penalty of perjury by all parties who signed the substitution and containing the statements prescribed by Civ.C. § 2934a(a)(2). [Civ.C. § 2934a(a)(1)(B), (2); see also Civ.C. § 2941.9 (establishing procedure by which all trust deed beneficiaries may agree to be governed by holders of more than 50% interest in series loans secured by same property)]

3) [6:405.3] Typographical errors; nonstatutory procedures: Minor typographical errors do not invalidate a trustee substitution, nor will the court interpret a trust deed's provisions to add to the statutory procedures. [See Kalnoki v. First American Trustee Servicing Solutions, LLC (2017) 8 CA5th 23, 37-41, 214 CR3d 294, 302-304—omission of "Inc." in signature block and absence of power of attorney establishing attorney-in-fact's authority to execute substitution for beneficiary did not invalidate substitution]

4) [6:405.4] Waiver of statutory procedures: The parties to a trust deed may waive the Civ.C. § 2934a statutory substitution of trustee procedures. Rationale: Public policy would not be compromised by allowing the waiver, parties to a trust deed may agree to a form of substitution other than that provided by § 2934a, and no statute expressly prohibits a waiver of § 2934a. [Jones v. First American Title Ins. Co. (2003) 107 CA4th 381, 390, 131 CR2d 859, 865; see also Ram v. OneWest Bank, FSB (2015) 234 CA4th 1, 16, 183 CR3d 638, 648—"It is well settled that parties to a deed of trust may agree to a form of substitution of trustee other than that provided in Civil Code section 2934a"]

(b) [6:405.5] Mailed notice of substitution: If the substitution is executed, but not recorded, before or concurrently with recordation of a notice of default (¶ 6:524), the beneficiary "shall mail" notice of the substitution, before or concurrently with the recordation, in the manner prescribed by Civ.C. § 2924b, to all persons entitled to mailed notice of default under § 2924b (see ¶ 6:527). [Civ.C. § 2934a(b) (affidavit of notice given must be attached to substitution)]

If the substitution is effected after recording of a notice of default but before recording of the notice of sale (¶ 6:530), the beneficiary "shall mail a copy" of the substitution before or concurrently with the recordation, as prescribed by Civ.C. § 2924b, to the trustee then of record and all persons entitled to mailed notice of default under § 2924b. [Civ.C. § 2934a(c) (affidavit of notice given must be attached to substitution)]

(c) [6:405.6] Trustee's right to resign or refuse appointment: A trustee named in a recorded substitution of trustee may resign or decline the appointment as trustee without the consent of the beneficiaries or their agents. [Civ.C. § 2934a(d)(2)(A)]

In doing so, the trustee must (Civ.C. § 2934a(d)(2)(A)):

- Give prompt written notice of their resignation or refusal to accept appointment to all beneficiaries (or their authorized agents) by registered or certified mail, postage prepaid, at the address shown on the last-recorded substitution of trustee for the real property in that county, and

- Record the notice of resignation or refusal to accept appointment in all counties where the substitution of trustee appointing the withdrawing trustee was recorded, accompanied by an affidavit affirming the trustee has mailed the notice to all beneficiaries (or their authorized agents).

1) [6:405.7] Resignation or refusal to accept appointment effective upon recordation; duty to maintain records: The trustee's resignation or refusal to accept appointment is effective upon recordation of the notice of resignation or refusal to accept appointment in each county where the substitution of trustee appointing the withdrawing trustee was recorded. [Civ.C. § 2934a(d)(2)(B)]

Notwithstanding the above, the trustee (or their successor in interest) must maintain all records relating to the trust deed for five years after mailing and recording the notice of resignation or refusal to accept appointment. [Civ.C. § 2934a(d)(2)(F)]

2) [6:405.8] Impact on enforcement of trust deed: The trustee's withdrawal does not affect the validity of the mortgage or trust deed. Nonetheless, until the beneficiaries (or their authorized agents) appoint a subsequent trustee as prescribed under Civ.C. § 2934a, no action required to be performed by the trustee, either by the statutes governing mortgages (Civ.C. § 2920 et seq.) or the trust deed itself, may be taken. [Civ.C. § 2934a(d)(2)(C)]

[6:405.9] Reserved.

(d) [6:405.10] Effect of recorded substitution on new (substituted) trustee's authority: Once the substitution is recorded properly, the new (substituted) trustee succeeds to "all the powers, duties, authority, and title" granted the prior trustee and is deemed authorized to act as trustee under the deed of trust for all purposes from the date it is executed by the beneficiaries (or their authorized agents). [Civ.C. § 2934a(a)(4), (d); Jones v. First American Title Ins. Co. (2003) 107 CA4th 381, 383, 131 CR2d 859, 860; see also Civ.C. § 2941(b)(7)—title company substituted as trustee for reconveyance purposes assumes trustee's statutory obligation to effect reconveyance as prescribed by Civ.C. § 2941(b)]

1) [6:405.11] Conclusive evidence of substituted trustee's authority to act: A recorded substitution constitutes "conclusive evidence" of the authority of the substituted trustee or their authorized agents to act pursuant to Civ.C. § 2934a, unless prompt written notice of the trustee's resignation is given as statutorily prescribed. [Civ.C. § 2934a(d)(4) (emphasis added); see also Ram v. OneWest Bank, FSB (2015) 234 CA4th 1, 16, 183 CR3d 638, 648; In re Turner (9th Cir. 2017) 859 F3d 1145, 1150 (applying Calif. law) (same)]

2) [6:405.12] Prior trustee divested of power: The recorded substitution effectively ousts the prior trustee of its powers as trustee under the deed of trust, and only the new (substituted) trustee has the power to conduct a nonjudicial (trustee's) foreclosure sale of the trustor's property; a sale by the prior trustee is void and of no force and effect. [Dimock v. Emerald Properties LLC (2000) 81 CA4th 868, 871, 874-875, 97 CR2d 255, 257, 259-260—recorded substitution transfers to successor trustee "exclusive power to conduct a trustee's sale"; compare In re Cedano (9th Cir. BAP 2012) 470 BR 522, 532 (applying Calif. law)—for purposes of instituting nonjudicial (trustee's) foreclosure sale, "there is no requirement that the Substitution of Trustee be recorded, only that it be executed" (¶ 6:524a)]

3) [6:405.13] Restoration of prior trustee's power; reformation: Other than by recording a further substitution of trustee, there are no statutory means by which the effect of a recorded substitution can be avoided. [Dimock v. Emerald Properties LLC (2000) 81 CA4th 868, 871, 97 CR2d 255, 257]

However, in an appropriate case, general contract law and remedies may be applied to permit reformation (¶ 11:410 ff.) of the controlling documents in order to validate a foreclosure sale conducted by a former trustee. [See Jones v. First American Title Ins. Co. (2003) 107 CA4th 381, 389-390, 131 CR2d 859, 864-865—reformation validated sale by trustee whose resubstitution had not been recorded; but see also Dimock v. Emerald Properties LLC, supra, 81 CA4th at 871, 97 CR2d at 257—on record presented, court not "disposed to create any nonstatutory means" to avoid effect of recorded substitution]

(8) [6:406] Release and reconveyance provisions: A deed of trust is released—and the real property security is released from its lien—by means of a "reconveyance." [Ricketts v. McCormack (2009) 177 CA4th 1324, 1327, 99 CR3d 817, 819, fn. 1—reconveyance is an instrument that clears title to property subject to a recorded trust deed]

The trustor has a statutory right to full reconveyance when the obligation secured by the deed of trust has been satisfied (Civ.C. § 2941(b)(1)).

(a) [6:407] Reconveyance process initiated by trust deed beneficiary: The beneficiary has the duty to initiate the reconveyance process when the secured obligation is satisfied. (A deed of trust customarily provides that the beneficiary will cause the trustee to reconvey the lien of the deed of trust upon satisfaction of the obligations secured.) [Trustors Security Service v. Title Recon Tracking Service (1996) 49 CA4th 592, 600-601, 56 CR2d 793, 798 (superseded by statute on other grounds as stated in Ricketts v. McCormack (2009) 177 CA4th 1324, 1327, 99 CR3d 817, 819, fn. 1, and in Markowitz v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Co. (2006) 142 CA4th 508, 524, 48 CR3d 217, 228); Ricketts v. McCormack, supra—lender/beneficiary initiates process of reconveying title to debtor/trustor by delivering to trustee original note, trust deed and full reconveyance request; see also State of Calif. ex rel. Bowen v. Bank of America Corp. (2005) 126 CA4th 225, 232-233, 23 CR3d 746, 750-752 (describing statutory scheme for reconveyance process)]

1) [6:407.1] 30 days to deliver request for reconveyance, etc.: Within 30 calendar days after satisfaction of the secured obligation, the beneficiary (or its assignee) must execute and deliver to the trustee the original note, deed of trust, request for reconveyance, and other documents necessary to reconvey the deed of trust. [Civ.C. § 2941(b)(1); see also Civ.C. § 2941(a)—mortgagee required to execute and record certificate of discharge within 30 days after mortgage has been satisfied]

a) [6:407.2] Alternative deadline for delivery of original note and trust deed: So long as the beneficiary delivers the request for reconveyance to the trustee within the 30-day limit (¶ 6:407.1), the beneficiary has 120 days after satisfaction of the obligation to deliver the original note and deed of trust to either the trustee or trustor. Following such delivery, the note and deed of trust "shall be" altered to show that the obligation is paid in full. [Civ.C. § 2941(b)(8)]

b) [6:407.2a] No duties imposed on escrow holder facilitating document exchange: The obligations under Civ.C. § 2941(b) regarding execution and delivery of the original documents to the trustee rest at all times with the beneficiary and do not "shift" to any escrow holder (¶ 4:604.1) used to facilitate exchange of the documents; the statute "only speaks to the duties and obligations of trustees and beneficiaries." [Markowitz v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Co. (2006) 142 CA4th 508, 523-524, 48 CR3d 217, 228; see also ¶ 6:408.10]

2) [6:407.3] Disposition of electronic versions of note and deed of trust: When the note or deed of trust, or any copy thereof, is electronic, upon satisfaction of the secured obligation, any electronic original, or electronic copy that has not been previously marked solely for use as a copy, must be altered to show that the obligation has been paid in full. [Civ.C. § 2941(b)(1)(D)]

3) [6:407.4] Allowable reconveyance fees: See discussion at ¶ 6:408.30 ff.

(b) Effecting reconveyance

1) [6:408] Trustee's primary obligation: The trustee, being the one who holds legal title to the property under a deed of trust (¶ 6:342), has the primary obligation (and right) to reconvey the deed of trust pursuant to the beneficiary's request (¶ 6:407 ff.) by recording a full (or partial, ¶ 6:409) reconveyance. [Civ.C. § 2941(b)(1)(A); see also State of Calif. ex rel. Bowen v. Bank of America Corp. (2005) 126 CA4th 225, 232-233, 23 CR3d 746, 750-752 (describing statutory scheme for reconveyance process)]

a) [6:408.1] No duty to verify satisfaction of underlying debt: Upon receipt of the request for reconveyance from the beneficiary, the trustee's duty to timely record the reconveyance is absolute. The trustee has no duty to confirm that the underlying debt has been repaid before reconveying. [Vournas v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1999) 73 CA4th 668, 677, 86 CR2d 490, 497]

b) [6:408.2] 21-day deadline to record: The trustee must record or "cause" to be recorded (in the office of the county recorder where the deed of trust is recorded) the executed reconveyance within 21 calendar days after receipt of the original note, deed of trust, request for reconveyance, authorized reconveyance fees (¶ 6:408.30 ff.), recorder's fees "and other documents as may be necessary to reconvey, or cause to be reconveyed, the deed of trust." [Civ.C. § 2941(b)(1)(A); Vournas v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Ins. Co. (1999) 73 CA4th 668, 677, 86 CR2d 490, 497]

c) [6:408.3] "Causing" reconveyance to be recorded: The trustee may "cause" the reconveyance to be recorded by sending it in a recordable form along with all required fees by way of certified mail with the U.S. Postal Service or an independent courier that has a tracking service to provide documentation of receipt and delivery (including the recipient's signature), in an envelope addressed to the recorder's office of the county where the deed of trust is recorded. [Civ.C. § 2941(c)]

Thereafter, within two days of receipt, so long as received in recordable form with all required fees, the county recorder "shall" stamp and record the reconveyance. [Civ.C. § 2941(c)]

1/ [6:408.4] Presumption of receipt in due course: The § 2941(c) procedure is not the exclusive way to "cause" a reconveyance to be recorded (see Civ.C. § 2941(c)—"cause it to be recorded" includes, but is not limited to …).

However, compliance with that procedure entitles the trustee to the benefit of the Ev.C. § 641 presumption (letter correctly addressed and mailed presumed to have been received in ordinary course of mail). [Civ.C. § 2941(c)]

Comment: Given the 21-day deadline (¶ 6:408.2) and potential penalties (¶ 6:408.40), this presumption can become important for trustees relying on the mail or a courier service to record the reconveyance.

2/ [6:408.4a] Indexing distinguished: The recorder is required to do nothing more than "stamp and record" reconveyances. Thus, indexing—a separate and distinct function—is not part of the Civ.C. § 2941(c) "stamp and record" requirement. [Ricketts v. McCormack (2009) 177 CA4th 1324, 1332-1334, 99 CR3d 817, 823-824—county recorder's § 2941(c) obligation to process reconveyances within two business days of receipt does not include additional, separate obligation to index documents in appropriate databases; see also First Bank v. East West Bank (2011) 199 CA4th 1309, 1316, 132 CR3d 267, 273 (lien priority case)—although courts may conflate the two duties, recording and indexing are "two distinct functions" (¶ 6:350)]

d) [6:408.4b] Delivering copy of reconveyance; returning recorded reconveyance instrument: The trustee must deliver a copy of the reconveyance to the beneficiary, its successor in interest, or its servicing agent, if known. [Civ.C. § 2041(b)(1)(B)]

Once recorded, the reconveyance instrument will be returned by the recorder. For that purpose, the reconveyance instrument must specify either of the following options: (i) the trustor, or successor in interest, and their last known address, as the person to whom the recorder will return the recorded instrument pursuant to Gov.C. § 27321; or (ii) that the recorder must deliver the recorded instrument to the trustee's address (in which event, the trustee has the obligation to mail the recorded instrument to the trustor or successor in interest at its last known address). [Civ.C. § 2941(b)(1)(B)(i) & (ii)]

The recorder has no duty to validate the addresses specified on the reconveyance instrument. [Civ.C. § 2941(b)(1)(B)]

e) [6:408.5] Return of original note and trust deed: Following execution and recordation of the reconveyance, upon receipt of written request, the trustee must deliver (or cause to be delivered) the original note and deed of trust to the trustor (or trustor's heirs, successors or assignees). [Civ.C. § 2941(b)(1)(C)]

1/ [6:408.6] Disposition of note/trust deed in electronic form: See ¶ 6:407.3.

[6:408.7 - 6:408.9] Reserved.

f) [6:408.10] No duties imposed on escrow holder: The duties described at ¶ 6:408 ff. are imposed solely on the trustee and do not "shift" at any time to an intermediary company conducting the escrow through which the debt is satisfied; the statute "only speaks to the duties and obligations of trustees and beneficiaries." [Markowitz v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Co. (2006) 142 CA4th 508, 524-525, 48 CR3d 217, 228-229—title company, acting as sub-escrow to hold trustor's loan proceeds and pay off note upon beneficiary's demand and request for reconveyance, owed no duty to trustor to record reconveyance; see also ¶ 6:407.2a]

[6:408.11 - 6:408.14] Reserved.

2) [6:408.15] Substitution of trustees to effect reconveyance after 60-day delay: If the trustee does not execute and record a reconveyance within 60 calendar days of satisfaction of the secured obligation, the beneficiary, upon receipt of written request from the trustor (or trustor's heirs, successor, agent or assignee), must substitute itself or another as trustee pursuant to Civ.C. § 2934a (¶ 6:405 ff.) and issue the reconveyance. [Civ.C. § 2941(b)(2); State of Calif. ex rel. Bowen v. Bank of America Corp. (2005) 126 CA4th 225, 245, 23 CR3d 746, 761]

a) [6:408.16] Title company as substituted trustee: At its discretion, the beneficiary may (in accordance with Civ.C. § 2934a procedures) substitute the title company conducting the escrow through which the obligation is satisfied as trustee; in that event, the title company assumes the Civ.C. § 2941(b) obligation to effect the reconveyance and may collect the authorized reconveyance fee (¶ 6:408.30 ff.). [Civ.C. § 2941(b)(7)]

3) [6:408.20] Release by title insurer after 75-day delay: As a final fall-back remedy, if a reconveyance has not been executed and recorded by the trustee or substitute trustee pursuant to Civ.C. § 2941(b)(1) or (2) (¶ 6:408 ff.) within 75 calendar days of satisfaction of the secured obligation, a title insurance company may prepare and record a release of the obligation. [Civ.C. § 2941(b)(3); State of Calif. ex rel. Bowen v. Bank of America Corp. (2005) 126 CA4th 225, 243, 23 CR3d 746, 759-760—§ 2941(b)(3) remedy authorized only if trustee or substitute trustee both failed to issue reconveyance despite opportunity to do so]

a) [6:408.21] Advance notice: But at least 10 days before issuing and recording a release, the title insurer must mail notice of its intent to do so to the trustee, trustor and trust deed beneficiary. [Civ.C. § 2941(b)(3)—notice to be given by postage prepaid first-class mail at each party's last known address; Trustors Security Service v. Title Recon Tracking Service (1996) 49 CA4th 592, 602, 56 CR2d 793, 799 (superseded by statute on other grounds as stated in Ricketts v. McCormack (2009) 177 CA4th 1324, 1327, 99 CR3d 817, 819, fn. 1, and in Markowitz v. Fidelity Nat'l Title Co. (2006) 142 CA4th 508, 524, 48 CR3d 217, 228)]

The 10-day notice requirement permits the lender/beneficiary/trustee one last chance to issue and record a reconveyance. [Trustors Security Service v. Title Recon Tracking Service, supra, 49 CA4th at 602, 56 CR2d at 799-800]

b) [6:408.22] Effective as reconveyance: Provided the procedure is properly employed (see ¶ 6:408.23), a release in the form prescribed by Civ.C. § 2941(b)(3)(A) is entitled to recordation and, when recorded, is deemed the equivalent of a trust deed reconveyance. [Civ.C. § 2941(b)(3)(B); State of Calif. ex rel. Bowen v. Bank of America Corp. (2005) 126 CA4th 225, 233, 23 CR3d 746, 752 & fn. 3]

Courts thus have no authority thereafter to compel the lender to execute and record a full reconveyance. [Prudential Home Mortg. Co. v. Sup.Ct. (Diaz) (1998) 66 CA4th 1236, 1248, 78 CR2d 566, 572]

c) [6:408.23] Compare—premature/improper title insurer's release ineffective: Civ.C. § 2941 creates a hierarchical system for issuing reconveyances, permitting title insurers to issue and record releases of obligations for clearing title only as a last resort where neither the trustee nor the beneficiary performs its statutory obligations. Until the 75-day period expires (after the giving of 10-day notice, ¶ 6:408.20 ff.) without a reconveyance by the trustee or beneficiary, a title insurer's recordation of a release is ineffective to clear title. [Trustors Security Service v. Title Recon Tracking Service (1996) 49 CA4th 592, 602-607, 56 CR2d 793, 799-802—§ 2941 does not create "co-equal method" for title insurers to compete with trustees and beneficiaries to clear title]

Moreover, a title insurer cannot be positioned in the hierarchical system to effectively clear title unless the trustee has first been given the opportunity and means—i.e., possession and control of the reconveyance documents and fees—to perform its statutory obligations. [Trustors Security Service v. Title Recon Tracking Service, supra, 49 CA4th at 607-608, 56 CR2d at 803]

[6:408.24 - 6:408.29] Reserved.

(c) [6:408.30] Authorized "reasonable fees" for reconveyance services: The beneficiary or trustee may charge the trustor a "reasonable fee" for all services involved in preparation, execution and recordation of the reconveyance. A fee not exceeding $45 is conclusively presumed reasonable. [Civ.C. § 2941(e)(1) & (2)]

1) [6:408.31] Payoff demand prerequisite: A reconveyance fee may not be charged unless demand for the fee was included in the Civ.C. § 2943 payoff demand statement provided by the lender (¶ 4:304.1 ff.). [Civ.C. § 2941(e)(3)]

2) [6:408.32] No nonstatutory fees: No reconveyance fee or charge may be imposed on the trustor other than as expressly authorized by Civ.C. § 2941. [Civ.C. § 2941(g)]

3) [6:408.33] Time for payment: The reconveyance fee may be made payable no earlier than opening of a bona fide escrow or no more than 60 days before satisfaction of the secured obligation. [Civ.C. § 2941(e)(1)]

4) [6:408.34] Beneficiary's duty to refund if no recorded reconveyance: When the beneficiary collects a reconveyance fee and thereafter has or should have knowledge that no reconveyance has been recorded, the beneficiary must either cause the reconveyance to be recorded or, if a title company release has been earlier and timely recorded (¶ 6:408.20), refund to the trustor the fee charged to perform the reconveyance. [Civ.C. § 2941(j)]

Evidence of knowledge includes, but is not limited to, notice of release pursuant to Civ.C. § 2941(b)(3) (¶ 6:408.21). [Civ.C. § 2941(j)]

(d) [6:408.40] Penalties for § 2941 violations: Noncompliance with Civ.C. § 2941 subjects the violator (trustees and trust deed beneficiaries) to a $500 civil penalty, plus all consequential damages suffered by the affected person. Additionally, a willful violation of any provision of § 2941 is a misdemeanor, punishable by a minimum $50, maximum $400 fine and/or up to six months' imprisonment. [Civ.C. §§ 2941(d), 2941.5; see SMS Fin'l XXIII, LLC v. Cornerstone Title Co. (2018) 19 CA5th 1092, 1097-1098, 228 CR3d 562, 565-566—purchaser of secured obligation could sue title company for § 2941 damages for erroneously releasing trust deed prior to trustee's sale; State of Calif. ex rel. Bowen v. Bank of America Corp. (2005) 126 CA4th 225, 234, 23 CR3d 746, 752—injured party's recovery measured by general rule of tort damages (i.e., all detriment proximately caused by breach of legal duty, including emotional distress damages)]

Trustees and beneficiaries remain liable for failing to perform their statutory reconveyance obligations even though a title insurer ultimately steps in as a last resort to clear title by recording a release of the obligation. [See Civ.C. § 2941(b)(5); Trustors Security Service v. Title Recon Tracking Service, supra, 49 CA4th at 603, 56 CR2d at 800]

1) [6:408.41] Causation limitation on consequential damages recovery: Consequential damages are recoverable under Civ.C. § 2941(e) only to the extent caused by the error in not timely or properly reconveying the deed of trust. Otherwise, recovery is limited to the statutory $500 penalty. [Panagotacos v. Bank of America (1998) 60 CA4th 851, 856-857, 70 CR2d 595, 598—because prospective buyers did not have binding purchase contract with sellers, they suffered no consequential damages as a result of bank's delayed reconveyance of trust deed on property they wished to use as security for loan]

2) [6:408.42] One-year statute of limitations: Because Civ.C. § 2941 imposes a statutory penalty for violations, it is subject to the CCP § 340(a) one-year limitations period governing actions based on a "statute for a penalty or forfeiture." [Prudential Home Mortg. Co. v. Sup.Ct. (Diaz) (1998) 66 CA4th 1236, 1242, 78 CR2d 566, 568]

a) [6:408.43] Tolling under "delayed discovery rule": Generally, the cause of action accrues upon commission of the wrongful act (failure to reconvey). However, the borrower is entitled to assume the lender performed its statutory duty and, therefore, has the benefit of the "delayed discovery rule": Commencement of the limitations period is tolled until the borrower discovers or, through the exercise of reasonable diligence, should have discovered, all facts essential to their cause of action. [Prudential Home Mortg. Co. v. Sup.Ct. (Diaz) (1998) 66 CA4th 1236, 1248-1249, 78 CR2d 566, 572-573—borrowers not deemed on "inquiry notice" through public records that reconveyance had not been made because they were "entitled to expect" lenders would perform their statutory reconveyance duty]

(e) [6:409] Compare—"partial" release/reconveyance: A "full" release and reconveyance occurs when the secured obligation is completely paid off. However, a release/reconveyance may also be "partial" … where only a portion of the secured property is released from the lien of the deed of trust.

1) [6:410] Development/construction loans: Development and construction loans often contain partial release provisions, requiring the lender to release (reconvey) portions of the secured property incrementally as the debt is paid off. Under such loans, a "release price" is assigned to each portion of the property (typically, each lot). Provided certain conditions are met, the lender will release each lot upon payment of the corresponding release price. [See, e.g., Resolution Trust Corp. v. Bayside Developers (ND CA 1993) 817 F.Supp. 822, 823, aff'd (9th Cir. 1994) 43 F3d 1230—pursuant to developer's "price release" agreement with lender, as each lot was sold it was released from deed of trust and a portion of sales proceeds paid to lender]

However, in addition to payment of the release price, the lender usually requires that the remaining portions of the encumbered property have access to utilities and public streets; that they be in compliance with zoning and other laws; that the borrower not be in default under the loan; and that the borrower provide the lender with an endorsement to the lender's title insurance policy insuring the continuing priority of the lien of the deed of trust on the portion of the property that remains encumbered by the deed of trust.

2) [6:411] Right to partial release solely contractual: Unlike the beneficiary's and trustee's duty to effect a full release and reconveyance (Civ.C. § 2941, ¶ 6:406 ff.), there is no statutory obligation to issue a partial reconveyance. [See Civ.C. § 2912—“partial performance of an act secured by a lien does not extinguish the lien upon any part of the property subject thereto, even if it is divisible”]

Rather, partial reconveyance obligations are strictly a creature of contract; and, absent an applicable contract provision, the beneficiary has no obligation to issue partial releases. [Karlsen v. American Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1971) 15 CA3d 112, 118, 92 CR 851, 854; see Dieckmeyer v. Redevelopment Agency of City of Huntington Beach (2005) 127 CA4th 248, 258-259, 24 CR3d 895, 903—where trust deed secured promissory note as well as borrower's performance of CC&Rs recorded against secured property and loan agreement, loan prepayment by itself did not entitle borrower to reconveyance of trust deed]

a) [6:412] Certainty of terms: Further, contractual provisions for a partial release and reconveyance are unenforceable unless clear and unambiguous. [White Point Co. v. Herrington (1968) 268 CA2d 458, 468, 73 CR 885, 890-891—release clause is “material and substantial term” of parties' agreement, ambiguity as to which cannot be resolved by judicial standards of fairness; see Lawrence v. Shutt (1969) 269 CA2d 749, 763, 75 CR 533, 541—clause requiring partial release of property “contiguous” to that previously released deemed too uncertain and unreasonable for specific performance]

3) [6:413] Map Act limitations: Partial releases should not be given unless the released parcels are lawfully and properly subdivided. Otherwise, issuance of a partial reconveyance will violate the Subdivision Map Act (Gov.C. § 66410 et seq.). [See Gov.C. § 66499.30]

[6:413.1 - 6:413.4] Reserved.

(f) [6:413.5] Subsequent encumbrancer's rights upon *erroneous reconveyance: Recordation of a reconveyance removes the lien of the reconveyed trust deed from the public records even if the reconveyance was in error. A subsequent “good faith encumbrancer for value,” upon recordation, takes its interest free and clear of all unrecorded interests—including the mistakenly reconveyed senior trust deed. [First Fidelity Thrift & Loan Ass'n v. Alliance Bank (1998) 60 CA4th 1433, 1440-1441, 71 CR2d 295, 300]

1) [6:413.6] “Good faith” status: A subsequent encumbrancer is in “good faith” if it acts without knowledge or notice of competing liens on the same property. Lacking knowledge that a first-in-time trust deed was erroneously reconveyed, a subsequent encumbrancer is entitled to rely on the status of record title, as shown in a title report, to ensure its lien will have the desired priority. [First Fidelity Thrift & Loan Ass'n v. Alliance Bank (1998) 60 CA4th 1433, 1441, 71 CR2d 295, 300; Triple A Mgmt. Co., Inc. v. Frisone (1999) 69 CA4th 520, 530, 81 CR2d 669, 675-676]

2) [6:413.7] Exception—void reconveyance: A senior trust deed's priority position is not displaced by a void (forged) reconveyance. [See WFG Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2020) 51 CA5th 881, 885-886, 890, 264 CR3d 717, 721, 725—lender (subsequent encumbrancer) did not obtain valid interest in property where third party recorded forged trustee's deed upon sale and purportedly sold property to lender's borrower as part of sham transaction (¶ 6:413.8)]

On the other hand, a fraudulently-induced reconveyance is simply voidable (not void), and subsequent encumbrancers/purchasers thus take free of the erroneously released trust deed lien. [Schiavon v. Arnaudo Brothers (2000) 84 CA4th 374, 376-378, 100 CR2d 801, 802-804—where request for reconveyance was forged, but reconveyance itself was executed by trustee with full awareness of effect of doing so, reconveyance was voidable and subsequent purchaser took title free and clear]

a) [6:413.8] No duty to monitor for fraudulent/erroneous reconveyances: A property owner (or beneficiary of an interest in property) has no ongoing duty to monitor public records in order to find and correct fraudulent or erroneous recordings. Thus, an encumbrancer is neither negligent, nor do they lose their priority, if they fail to detect a forged deed and take immediate action to prevent others from relying on it. [See WFG Nat'l Title Ins. Co. v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2020) 51 CA5th 881, 885-886, 892-894, 264 CR3d 717, 721, 726-728—where third party recorded forged deed upon sale and sold underlying property to subsequent encumbrancer's borrower, who defaulted on loan, beneficiary/lender of “indisputably” valid trust deed, recorded well before forged deed upon sale, was not estopped from quieting title to property despite failing to monitor and correct public records]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

3) [6:413.9] Compare—actual knowledge of unrecorded senior lien: By contrast, a junior encumbrancer, although shown first in time in the public records, takes subject to prior unrecorded liens of which it has notice. [See generally, Civ.C. § 1217] This includes prior liens that had been recorded but were mistakenly reconveyed, where the junior lender had notice of the erroneous reconveyance. (But again, knowledge there had been a first-in-time senior lien that does not now appear of record does not impart constructive notice that the prior trust deed may have been erroneously reconveyed.) [First Fidelity Thrift & Loan Ass'n v. Alliance Bank (1998) 60 CA4th 1433, 1443, 71 CR2d 295, 301]

4) [6:413.10] Compare—*constructive knowledge; information triggering duty of inquiry: A subsequent encumbrancer is not entitled to ignore reasonable warning signs appearing in recorded documents or information coming from sources outside the recorded chain of title. [Triple A Mgmt. Co. v. Frisone (1999) 69 CA4th 520, 531, 81 CR2d 669, 676; see OC Interior Services, LLC v. Nationstar Mortg., LLC (2017) 7 CA5th 1318, 1332, 1336, 213 CR3d 395, 406, 410—third party who purchased property with knowledge of prior mortgage lien vacated by default judgment took subject to said lien when judgment later voided]

Thus, information that reasonably brings into question the state of the title triggers "a limited duty of inquiry." [Triple A Mgmt. Co. v. Frisone, supra, 69 CA4th at 531, 81 CR2d at 676 (emphasis added); First Fidelity Thrift & Loan Ass'n v. Alliance Bank (1998) 60 CA4th 1433, 1444-1445 71 CR2d 295, 303]

Moreover, a subsequent encumbrancer is charged with constructive knowledge of what a reasonable investigation would have revealed. [Triple A Mgmt. Co. v. Frisone, supra, 69 CA4th at 532, 81 CR2d at 677]

a) [6:413.11] No duty to inquire based solely on knowledge of reconveyance: Nonetheless, "good faith" status is not negated simply by the fact the subsequent encumbrancer was aware of the former existence of a senior trust deed lien and that it had been reconveyed. That itself does not impart any "constructive knowledge" or "duty of inquiry" regarding a possible mistaken reconveyance. "[T]here is no authority for the proposition that a prospective lender, learning that a prior deed of trust had been reconveyed, has a duty to investigate further to determine whether that reconveyance was in error." [First Fidelity Thrift & Loan Ass'n v. Alliance Bank (1998) 60 CA4th 1433, 1444-1445, 71 CR2d 295, 303—subsequent lender's knowledge of preexisting trust deed lien gives rise only to a duty of "reasonable inquiry, not an exhaustive one"]

b) [6:413.12] Example: Senior Lender's trust deed lien was mistakenly reconveyed and removed from the public records. In the meantime, Borrower had applied for a loan from Junior Lender and disclosed the prior lien on its loan application. Junior Lender then asked for clarification from Borrower and another encumbrancer, both of whom indicated the prior trust deed lien had been released by reconveyance; Junior Lender also consulted a title report, which no longer showed a senior lien in the public records. Junior Lender then recorded its trust deed lien, before former Senior Lender could obtain a judgment reinstating its lien.

Although second in time to Senior Lender's lien, Junior Lender's lien was now first of record and had priority. Having inquired as to the status of the former senior trust deed lien, Junior Lender had no further duty to inquire whether the reconveyance might have been mistaken. "In view of the fact that most parcels of real estate have likely been subject to a lien that has been reconveyed, a broad rule would seriously complicate the lending process far beyond anything which seems contemplated by the statutes by creating a duty to investigate beyond the state of record title in virtually all cases." [First Fidelity Thrift & Loan Ass'n v. Alliance Bank (1998) 60 CA4th 1433, 1445, 71 CR2d 295, 303]

(9) [6:414] Lender's subordination of deed of trust to subdivision documents (construction loans): Lenders under development and construction loans are often required to subordinate the lien of their deed of trust to a new subdivision map, legally-required easements and covenants, conditions and restrictions, and a host of other instruments required by governmental entities to be recorded as conditions precedent to subdivision of the property. [Gov.C. § 66436]

Cross-refer: Trust deed subordination may also occur at the borrower's urging in connection with any real property financing transaction. See discussion at ¶ 6:450 ff. re subordination agreements.

(10) [6:415] Remedies available upon default: The deed of trust will set forth the beneficiary's various remedies available upon the borrower's default. The two most important remedies are the right to collect rents, income and profits from the secured property (¶ 6:430 ff.) and the right to proceed with a nonjudicial ("private power of sale") foreclosure (¶ 6:514 ff.).

(a) [6:416] Nonjudicial foreclosure: Nonjudicial foreclosure is not an inherent remedy under a deed of trust. The deed of trust must expressly grant a "private power of sale." [See Ung v. Koehler (2005) 135 CA4th 186, 192, 37 CR3d 311, 314]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Most deeds of trust invariably contain the basic "private power of sale" procedures, including a broad "enabling" provision permitting the trustee to conduct the nonjudicial foreclosure sale. However, nonjudicial foreclosures are subject to extensive legislative and case law regulation. See detailed discussion at ¶ 6:514 ff.

(b) [6:417] Compare—judicial foreclosure: By contrast, "judicial foreclosure" involves a lawsuit where the court supervises the foreclosure sale (see ¶ 6:540 ff.). Consequently, the deed of trust need not address the procedures for a judicial foreclosure.

[6:417.1 - 6:417.4] Reserved.

(11) [6:417.5] Attorney fees and costs of collection: Like the underlying promissory note, the trust deed often contains an attorney fees clause giving the lender the right to collect its expenses and reasonable attorney fees incurred in pursuing foreclosure or other remedies upon the borrower's default. (See ¶ 6:241 ff.)

(a) [6:417.6] Civ.C. § 1717 "prevailing party on the contract" rules apply: Pursuant to Civ.C. § 1717, the attorney fees clause will be construed as creating a reciprocal right to recover fees in favor of whichever party prevails in the action to enforce the secured obligation; and therefore, the Civ.C. § 1717 rules for identifying the "party prevailing on the contract" apply. [Chase Manhattan Mortg. Corp. v. Lessel (1997) 55 CA4th 10, 13, 64 CR2d 113, 115—per Civ.C. § 1717(b)(2), no "prevailing party" in lender's judicial foreclosure action that was voluntarily dismissed; see also Andrade v. Western Riverside Council of Governments (2024) 99 CA5th 1020, 1029-1030, 318 CR3d 396, 403-404 (distinguishing between § 1717 fees available to party who recovered greater relief in contract action (i.e., party "prevailing on the contract") and CCP § 1032 fees available to party who received net monetary recovery (i.e., "prevailing party")]

(b) [6:417.7] CCP § 730 not an independent basis for fee award: CCP § 730 directs the court, in a judicial foreclosure action, to fix attorney fees. However, that statute does not provide an independent basis for awarding attorney fees; rather, it simply authorizes the court to settle or determine the amount of fees in a foreclosure action provided fees are awardable pursuant to a provision in the security instrument (or, presumably, the promissory note or other contract between the parties). (As stated by one court, "section 730 is somewhat like a person's appendix; it's not necessary.") [Chase Manhattan Mortg. Corp. v. Lessel (1997) 55 CA4th 10, 13-14, 64 CR2d 113, 115]

(c) [6:417.8] Collateral protection provision not an independent basis for fee award: Trust deeds customarily permit lenders to take steps, including legal action, to protect their interest in collateral, and then to add those costs to the secured debt. Lenders may not, however, parlay the typical collateral protection provision into an independent attorney fee award. [See Chacker v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2018) 27 CA5th 351, 356-357, 237 CR3d 921, 925-926 (unsuccessful action to prevent foreclosure filed against lender's assignee)—trust deed's collateral protection provision permitted assignee to add legal fees to secured indebtedness, not to sue for fees independently; Hart v. Clear Recon Corp. (2018) 27 CA5th 322, 327, 237 CR3d 907, 911 (unsuccessful action to prevent foreclosure filed by borrower's nonsignatory family members based on intra-family title dispute)—lender could not recover attorney fees against borrower's family members by invoking trust deed's collateral protection provision since said provision fell outside Civ.C. § 1717's ambit]

(12) [6:418] Beneficiary statements: The trustor has a statutory right to compel the beneficiary (lender), upon request, to issue periodic written "beneficiary statements" concerning basic information about the loan—e.g., balance due, interest rate, maturity date, etc. (This is distinct from the lender's "payoff demand statement" upon which the borrower may rely as establishing the full amount necessary to satisfy the secured obligation; see ¶ 6:561.10.) [Civ.C. § 2943; Venhaus v. Shultz (2007) 155 CA4th 1072, 1080, 66 CR3d 432, 437—trust deed holder's failure to submit beneficiary statement upon request deemed "sufficiently wrongful" to support property owner's negligent interference with prospective economic relations claim]

The parameters of beneficiary statement obligations (e.g., contents thereof) are sometimes included in the trust deed; but Civ.C. § 2943 sets forth the time limits for the beneficiary's response.

Cross-refer: Beneficiary statements and payoff demand statements are discussed in greater detail at ¶ 4:301 ff. See also ¶ 6:561.10.

(13) [6:419] Assignment of rents and profits: The income stream from a property is an important asset. Therefore, the lender will require that all rents, profits and other income produced by the secured property be pledged as additional security for the loan. Concomitantly therewith, the trust deed will specify that, upon a default, the lender may collect all such rents and profits (and, if necessary, have a receiver appointed for that purpose). See further discussion at ¶ 6:430 ff.

(14) [6:420] Securitization; assignability of note and deed of trust provisions: A common practice in the mortgage banking industry involves lenders pooling a variety of residential loans that are then securitized and sold to investors. Securitization allows the lender to monetize a long-term asset (the mortgage) and make other loans with the proceeds. The pooled mortgages usually are combined into trusts "created to receive the stream of interest and principal payments from the mortgage borrowers. The right to receive trust income is parceled into certificates and sold to investors, called certificateholders. The trustee hires a mortgage servicer to administer the mortgages by enforcing the mortgage terms and administering the payments." [Yvanova v. New Century Mortg. Corp. (2016) 62 C4th 919, 930, 199 CR3d 66, 74, fn. 5]

To facilitate the securitization process, most banks have a provision in their standard residential deed of trust allowing the lender to assign its loan or change the loan servicer without the borrower's consent. Indeed, even absent consent, "a borrower can generally raise no objection to assignment of the note and deed of trust. A promissory note is a negotiable instrument the lender may sell without notice to the borrower … The deed of trust, moreover, is inseparable from the note it secures, and follows it even without a separate assignment." [Yvanova v. New Century Mortg. Corp., supra, 62 C4th at 927, 199 CR3d at 72 (internal citation omitted); see also Fontenot v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2011) 198 CA4th 256, 267, 129 CR3d 467, 476-477 (disapproved on other grounds by Yvanova v. New Century Mortg. Corp., supra, 62 C4th at 939, 199 CR3d at 82, fn. 13)—banking industry established Mortgage Electronic Registration System (MERS) to assist securitization process (i.e., members may assign limited interests in real property to MERS as grantee of record while retaining right to transfer notes absent recordation)]

(15) [6:421] Miscellaneous provisions: Like any contract, deeds of trust contain a variety of miscellaneous and "boilerplate" provisions (governing law, manner of giving notices, "time of the essence," severability provisions, etc.). (See Forms 6:H & 6:I.)

(a) [6:422] Incorporated reference to "fictitious" deed of trust: In lieu of reciting the many routine "boilerplate" provisions, many preprinted deeds of trust refer to designated provisions in a previously recorded "fictitious deed of trust" and incorporate and adopt same by reference as though fully set forth in the borrower's trust deed. (See Form 6:H.)

[6:423 - 6:424] Reserved.

2. [6:425] Option to Purchase: In addition to taking a security interest in the property by deed of trust, the lender may be granted an option to purchase the real property collateral as security for the loan. There are, however, some statutory provisions to protect unsophisticated borrowers from unknowingly impairing their rights of redemption upon default under the security agreement. [Wachovia Bank v. Lifetime Indus., Inc. (2006) 145 CA4th 1039, 1057-1058, 52 CR3d 168, 181-182]

The concern is that a lender whose right to exercise the option is dependent on the borrower's default will then have an avenue to acquire the real property collateral outright from the borrower, without providing the borrower an opportunity to cure the loan default (pay the sums due) and redeem the property before foreclosure (Civ.C. §§ 2903, 2924c(e), ¶ 6:532 ff.). Under a common law rule against "clogging" or impairing a borrower's "equity of redemption," the secured lender's purchase option in such circumstances might be declared invalid. [See Wachovia Bank v. Lifetime Indus., Inc., supra, 145 CA4th at 1057-1058, 52 CR3d at 182; see also Civ.C. § 2889—all contracts in restraint of the right of redemption from a lien are void]

a. [6:425.1] "Safe harbor" in financing transactions *not involving residential property of four or fewer units: Lenders in commercial real property financing transactions have a statutory "safe harbor" against the risk an option to purchase the real property collateral given as additional security for the loan will be invalidated as impairing the borrower's equity of redemption: So long as the option concerns real property collateral other than residential property of four units or less and its exercise is not dependent upon the borrower's default under the security agreement, the option will not thereafter be declared void as a restraint on the borrower's right to redeem the property, and the lender's priority (as against subsequent encumbrancers and purchasers) will relate back to the date the option was recorded. [Civ.C. § 2906; Wachovia Bank v. Lifetime Indus., Inc. (2006) 145 CA4th 1039, 1058, 52 CR3d 168, 182-183]

But note: This "safe harbor" does not ipso facto validate an otherwise unlawful option. [See Civ.C. § 2906]

(1) [6:425.2] Default as one of several bases for exercising option? To come under the § 2906 umbrella, the right to exercise the option must not be "dependent upon the occurrence of a default with respect to the security agreement" (Civ.C. § 2906). It is unclear whether this statutory language means that, for the safe harbor to apply, a default cannot trigger the lender's right to exercise the option or whether a default cannot be the only basis for triggering the right to exercise the option. [See Wachovia Bank v. Lifetime Indus., Inc. (2006) 145 CA4th 1039, 1060, 52 CR3d 168, 184, fn. 5—"We need not, and do not, decide this issue"]

b. [6:425.3] Validity if exercise of option dependent on default: A purchase option given by a borrower to the secured lender is not necessarily invalid simply because it lies outside the purview of Civ.C. § 2906, as where its exercise is dependent upon the borrower's default. The facts and circumstances surrounding the transaction and the parties' intent may nevertheless reveal that the option should be enforceable according to its terms. Moreover, courts may simply treat the instrument as a mortgage, requiring the lender-optionee to use judicial foreclosure procedures to obtain the property, thereby allowing the borrower-optionor an opportunity to cure the default and redeem the property (¶ 6:543). [Wachovia Bank v. Lifetime Indus., Inc. (2006) 145 CA4th 1039, 1058-1059, 52 CR3d 168, 183]

3. Assignment of Rents and Profits

a. [6:430] Necessity for: To maximize their security, lenders usually want the right to collect the rents and profits from the secured property during the term of the loan. However, a secured lien on the property does not itself assign the rents and profits therefrom. Absent a specific agreement between trustor and beneficiary, the beneficiary is not entitled to possession of the secured property or to the collection of its rents or profits. [Snyder v. Western Loan & Building Co. (1934) 1 C2d 697, 701-702, 37 P2d 86, 88; see also Bailey v. Citibank, N.A. (2021) 66 CA5th 335, 353, 280 CR3d 546, 560—trust deed does not entitle trustee or beneficiary to possession of property, only right to convey same upon default]

b. [6:431] Assignment formalities: The trustor's assignment of rents and profits to the beneficiary may be included in the deed of trust or be made by separate assignment document. [See Civ.C. § 2938(b)]

➪ [6:431.1] PRACTICE POINTER: Either approach is of equal force and effect to create an enforceable assignment. However, including the assignment in the trust deed will circumvent potential lien priority subordination vis à vis subsequent junior creditors: i.e., problems relating to priority of the assignment of rents can arise if a separate assignment of rents document is not recorded immediately after the deed of trust.

c. [6:432] Transitional rules: The rules governing assignments of interest in leases, rents, issues or profits were substantially overhauled effective 1997, resulting in two separate bodies of applicable law depending upon when the assignment was created. [Stats. 1996, Ch. 49 (repealing and adding Civ.C. § 2938, repealing Civ.C. § 2938.1, and amending CCP § 564)]

The version of Civ.C. § 2938 that took effect January 1, 1997 governs contracts entered into on and after January 1, 1997 (¶ 6:433 ff.). Conversely, former Civ.C. §§ 2938 and 2938.1, in effect before January 1, 1997, govern contracts entered into before January 1, 1997 and actions and proceedings initiated on the basis of those contracts (¶ 6:434 ff.). [Civ.C. § 2938(i); see Federal Nat'l Mortg. Ass'n v. Bugna (1997) 57 CA4th 529, 537, 67 CR2d 233, 238 (applying former law to dispute concerning assignment of rents under 1986 trust deed)]

The sections at ¶ 6:433 ff. separately address significant aspects of pre-1997 and post-1996 applicable law. (Note, however, that the present statutory scheme is quite comprehensive and addresses many issues that are beyond the scope of this Practice Guide.)

d. [6:433] Post-1996 assignments—"absolute" notwithstanding label used: The former distinction in types of assignments of rents/profits (¶ 6:434 ff.) is abolished with regard to assignments granted on or after January 1, 1997. Any post-1996 written assignment of an interest in rents, issues or profits in real property creates a present security interest in existing and future rents, issues or profits, regardless of how the assignment is denoted (i.e., whether it is labeled "absolute," "absolute conditioned upon default," "additional security" or otherwise). [Civ.C. § 2938(a)]

(1) [6:433.1] Perfection upon recordation: The assignment is fully perfected (entitling the lender to collect the assigned rents and profits and imparting constructive notice thereof) once the instrument creating the assignment is duly recorded in the office of the county recorder where the underlying real property is located. [Civ.C. § 2938(b); see Federal Nat'l Mortg. Ass'n v. Bugna (1997) 57 CA4th 529, 538, 67 CR2d 233, 239, fn. 6]

Perfection occurs upon recordation notwithstanding any other provision of the assignment or of law that would otherwise preclude or defer its enforcement until the occurrence of a subsequent event (including, but not limited to, a subsequent default by the assignor or the assignee's obtaining possession of the real property or the appointment of a receiver). [Civ.C. § 2938(b)]

(2) [6:433.2] Enforcement upon default: There are four possible methods by which the lender-assignee may enforce the assignment upon the borrower-assignor's default (Civ.C. § 2938(c)):

- Appointment of a receiver. [Civ.C. § 2938(c)(1); CCP § 564(b)(11) & (12); see also ¶ 6:441]

- Obtaining possession of the rents, issues or profits. [Civ.C. § 2938(c)(2)]

- Delivering to one or more of the tenants a written demand to turn over rents, issues and profits (in the form prescribed by Civ.C. § 2938(k), "Demand to Pay Rent to Party Other Than Landlord"), with a copy delivered to the assignor-borrower and another copy mailed to all other assignees of record of the rents, issues and profits of the property. [Civ.C. § 2938(c)(3), (d)]

- Delivering a written demand for rents, issues or profits to the assignor-borrower, with a copy mailed to all other assignees of record of the rents, issues and profits of the property. [Civ.C. § 2938(c)(4)]

(a) [6:433.3] Not an "action" triggering "one action rule" or barring deficiency judgment: An enforcement action taken under Civ.C. § 2938(c) is not an "action" violating the CCP § 726 one-action rule (¶ 6:551, 6:554 ff.) or barring a deficiency judgment; nor does it otherwise limit any rights available to the assignee with respect to its security. [Civ.C. § 2938(e)(2) & (3)]

(b) [6:433.4] Postenforcement collection: Once it takes one or more of the enforcement steps set forth at ¶ 6:433.2, the assignee is entitled to collect and receive all rents, issues and profits that have accrued but remain unpaid and uncollected by the assignor (or for the assignor's benefit) as of the enforcement date, and all rents, issue and profits that accrue thereafter. [Civ.C. § 2938(c)]

(c) [6:433.5] Compare—assignee not entitled to preenforcement rents: The assignee's right to collect the assigned rents is conditioned on its taking one of the statutory enforcement steps (¶ 6:433.2). Notwithstanding "perfection" of the assignment, postdefault rents collected before the assignee (lender) takes one of the enforcement steps belong to the borrower (assignor). [Federal Nat'l Mortg. Ass'n v. Bugna (1997) 57 CA4th 529, 538, 67 CR2d 233, 239, fn. 6—"the new statute clearly provides that a creditor holding an absolute assignment is not entitled to rents collected prior to the date it takes one of the enforcement steps"]

(d) [6:433.6] Assignor's rights in lease extinguished by foreclosure: Upon assignment, the rights in a lease belong to the lender; the assignor's rights are extinguished, although their liabilities may remain. [See Gietzen v. Covenant RE Mgmt., Inc. (2019) 40 CA5th 331, 339-340, 253 CR3d 97, 101-103—following foreclosure, assignor's third-party beneficiary could not invoke non-recourse provision in lease to defend against liability to lessee]

e. [6:434] Pre-1997 assignments—distinction among types: Assignments of interest in rents, issues and profits granted before 1997 remain subject to prior law (¶ 6:432), under which there were three distinct kinds of assignments:

(1) [6:435] Absolute assignment: An absolute assignment grants the beneficiary the immediate right to collect rents on the secured property. It is a present transfer of the assignor's interest in existing and future rents, issues and profits effective upon the assignor's execution and delivery of the assignment. [Former Civ.C. § 2938(a)]

(a) [6:436] Optional recordation to perfect assigned interest: As between trustor and beneficiary, the absolute assignment takes immediate effect even if not recorded (¶ 6:435). However, recordation (in the county where the secured property is located) is prudent because:

- It gives constructive notice of the content and effect of the assignment "with the same force and effect as any other duly recorded conveyance of an interest in real property"; and

- As a matter of law, it perfects the interest granted by the assignment as of the recordation date, "notwithstanding any provision of the assignment or of any other provision of law that would otherwise preclude or defer enforcement of the rights granted the assignee under the assignment until the occurrence of a subsequent event, including, but not limited to, a subsequent default of the assignor" (see ¶ 6:437). [Former Civ.C. § 2938(b)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(2) [6:437] Absolute assignment conditional on default: This form of assignment also effects an immediate and present transfer of the trustor's interest in rents and profits but conditions the beneficiary's right to collect the assigned rights and profits on the borrower's default. [Former Civ.C. § 2938(b)]

Like an unconditional absolute assignment, the conditional assignment should be recorded to perfect the beneficiary's interest in the assigned rents and profits as against subsequent transferees/encumbrancers (¶ 6:436).

(a) [6:437.1] Postdefault enforcement step required: "Perfection" of the assignment does not itself entitle the assignee to collect postdefault rents. The assignee must take an additional enforcement step (e.g., making a written demand for the rents) to begin collecting the assigned rents; until then, the borrower (assignor) remains entitled to the collected rents notwithstanding the default. [Federal Nat'l Mortg. Ass'n v. Bugna (1997) 57 CA4th 529, 539-541, 67 CR2d 233, 239-240 (decided under prior law and noting same result obtains under present law, ¶ 6:433.5); see also In re GOCO Realty Fund I (BC ND CA 1993) 151 BR 241, 248]

(3) [6:438] Assignment of rents as additional security: By contrast, an assignment of rents/profits "as additional security" does not effect a present assignment. Rather, it grants the lender an inchoate lien on rents and profits. [See former Civ.C. § 2938.1(b)—beneficiary "shall not exercise any rights to collect the (assigned) rents, issues, and profits" until trustor is in default]

(a) [6:439] Recordation essential: An assignment "as additional security" may be perfected only by recordation of the instrument granting the assignment in the county where the secured property is located. [See former Civ.C. § 2938.1(a)—recordation perfects assignment without necessity of beneficiary obtaining possession of secured property, appointing a receiver or taking any other action; but see also former Civ.C. § 2938.1(d)—recordation prerequisite applicable only to assignments as additional security executed on and after 1/1/93]

(b) [6:440] Distinguished from absolute assignment conditioned on default: Insofar as they affect the beneficiary's right to collect the assigned rents and profits, there is no practical difference between an absolute assignment conditioned on default and an assignment as additional security.

Nevertheless, perfection issues and the lender's rights upon the borrower's bankruptcy might be impacted by the kind of assignment used. [See former Civ.C. §§ 2938 & 2938.1 (¶ 6:436, 6:439); In re Ventura-Louise Properties (9th Cir. 1974) 490 F2d 1141, 1143, 1145, fn. 1]

f. [6:441] Appointment of receiver to enforce assignment: As noted, a lender-assignee may enforce its right to collect rents, issues and profits in an action to appoint a receiver. [Civ.C. § 2938(c)(1); CCP § 564(b)(11) & (12); see, e.g., Resolution Trust Corp. v. Bayside Developers (ND CA 1993) 817 F.Supp. 822, 828, fn. 4, aff'd (9th Cir. 1994) 43 F3d 1230]

(1) [6:441.1] Continuation of receivership pending nonjudicial foreclosure: The receivership appointment may be continued after entry of a judgment for specific performance in the action, when appropriate to protect, operate or maintain the secured real property or to collect the rents therefrom while a pending nonjudicial foreclosure sale under the deed of trust is being completed. [CCP § 564(b)(11)]

(2) [6:442] Receivership without assignment: Even if the trustor has not granted an assignment of rents and profits, the beneficiary (lender) can still seek appointment of a receiver if it has commenced a judicial foreclosure action. [CCP § 564(b)(2)]

Cross-refer: Receiverships are discussed in detail in Weil & Brown et al., Cal. Prac. Guide: Civ. Pro. Before Trial (TRG), Ch. 9 Part II; and Ahart, Cal. Prac. Guide: Enforcing Judgments & Debts (TRG), Ch. 4. (See also ¶ 6:633 re receiverships to facilitate lender's statutory right of entry/inspection concerning environmental impairment.)

[6:443 - 6:449] Reserved.

4. [6:450] Subordination: For various reasons, a buyer sometimes wants the lender to subordinate the lien of its deed of trust to a future secured loan from a third party. This often occurs when the buyer intends to develop the property and anticipates a future construction loan but does not plan to pay off its existing loan with construction loan proceeds. [See Swiss Property Management Co., Inc. v. Southern Calif. IBEW-NECA Pension Plan (1997) 60 CA4th 839, 841, 70 CR2d 587, 588—under rider to deeds of trust given in seller-financed transaction, sellers agreed "to subordinate this Deed of Trust for construction and development financing required for the development of the property …" (subject to specified conditions)]

Subordination agreements may accompany any financing transaction. As a practical matter, however, they typically occur only in connection with seller-financed loans … because institutional lenders rarely are amenable to a subordination of their liens to additional financing.

a. [6:451] Seller's motivation to subordinate: The seller might be willing to subordinate its deed of trust for two reasons:

• Subordination may be a necessary inducement to procure a buyer (especially if the property is raw land and the buyer will need a subsequent construction loan).

• So long as the proceeds of the new loan are being used to further improve the property, the value of the seller's security is enhanced. (A seller who has subordinated its lien will, nevertheless, still bear the risk of having to cure any default under the new, senior loan.)

b. Nature and effect of subordination

(1) [6:452] Moves original lender's (seller's) lien to junior position: Priorities between encumbrances on the same parcel of property usually are determined by the "first in time, first in priority" rule (Civ.C. § 2897) or the rule giving purchase money deeds of trust priority over other liens, subject to operation of the recording laws (Civ.C. § 2898(a)). [See MTC Fin'l Inc. v. California Dept. of Tax & Fee Admin. (2019) 41 CA5th 742, 747, 254 CR3d 485, 489—under "first in time, first in right" system, priorities among "competing enforceable interests" are based on "time of their creation"]

"Subordination" refers to the establishment of priorities among encumbrancers whose priorities otherwise would be fixed under these two statutory rules. [Middlebrook-Anderson Co. v. Southwest Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1971) 18 CA3d 1023, 1029-1030, 96 CR 338, 341; Bratcher v. Buckner (2001) 90 CA4th 1177, 1185, 109 CR2d 534, 539—exception to "first in time, first in priority" rule is when one party agrees to subordinate priority of its lien to another; see also Bear Creek Master Ass'n v. Southern California Investors, Inc. (2018) 28 CA5th 809, 812, 239 CR3d 547, 549-550—HOA's assessment lien against golf course for maintenance costs had priority over lender's previously-recorded third trust deed pursuant to priority/subordination provisions in developer's recorded CC DMC, Inc. v. Downey Sav. & Loan Ass'n (2002) 99 CA4th 190, 196, 120 CR2d 761, 765—different types of liens are not on equal footing (purchase money mortgage has priority over all other liens)]

By subordinating its lien to a new secured loan, the lender's (original) loan becomes "junior" (lower in priority) to the new loan. Thus, e.g., in a seller-financed transaction, the seller-financed first position deed of trust loan will be subordinated to a second position at the time the buyer obtains its construction loan.

The reordering of lien priorities pursuant to a subordination agreement may, however, be subject to conditions; see ¶ 6:457.

(2) [6:453] May affect purchase money antideficiency protection: Seller-financed subordination may also have serious implications for borrowers seeking "antideficiency" protection: Although a seller-financed loan is subject to California's purchase money antideficiency laws (CCP § 580b, see ¶ 6:563 ff.), the borrower risks losing its antideficiency protection if the purchase money loan is subsequently subordinated to a construction loan. [DeBerard Properties, Ltd. v. Lim (1999) 20 C4th 659, 665-666, 85 CR2d 292, 296; Spangler v. Memel (1972) 7 C3d 605, 614, 102 CR 807, 814; see ¶ 6:568.3]

[6:453.1 - 6:453.9] Reserved.

c. [6:453.10] How subordination effected: Subordination is most commonly effected by either (1) express subordination agreement (¶ 6:454 ff.) or (2) "automatic subordination"—i.e., recording the third party trust deed before the seller's (original lender's) purchase money deed of trust. [Brown v. Boren (1999) 74 CA4th 1303, 1314, 88 CR2d 758, 765]

(1) [6:453.11] Automatic subordination through escrow: Automatic subordination typically occurs through escrow—i.e., when, without express agreement to subordinate on specified conditions, the escrow instructions provide that a third party loan is to be recorded before the seller's (original lender's) purchase money deed of trust, the seller effectively taking back a second trust deed. [Brown v. Boren (1999) 74 CA4th 1303, 1314, 88 CR2d 758, 765]

(2) Subordination agreements vs. agreements to subordinate

(a) [6:454] Subordination agreement—effects subordination: A subordination agreement is the instrument by which the existing senior deed of trust is actually subordinated (made junior) to the new deed of trust. The subordination agreement typically is recorded concurrent with recordation of the new deed of trust.

A subordination agreement need not contain the terms and conditions of the new loan because it simply effectuates the change in priority of the two liens.

• FORM: Subordination Agreement, see Form 6:J.

1) [6:454a] May be conditional: See ¶ 6:457 ff.

(b) [6:455] Agreement to subordinate—executory contract for future subordination: An agreement to subordinate is an executory contract by which the holder of the existing (senior) deed of trust agrees to subordinate its lien in the future. Unlike a subordination agreement (¶ 6:450 ff.), it does not effectuate the subordination but simply contemplates a future subordination.

An agreement to subordinate should be set forth in the deed of trust.

1) [6:455a] May be conditional: See ¶ 6:457 ff.

2) [6:456] Limitations on enforceability: Both subordination agreements and agreements to subordinate are subject to mandatory disclosure requirements (¶ 6:461 ff.). In addition, enforceability of an agreement to subordinate (by way of specific performance) turns on compliance with the following requirements:

a) [6:456.1] "Just and reasonable": An agreement to subordinate must be "just and reasonable" as to the subordinating lender (Civ.C. § 3391(2)). [Handy v. Gordon (1967) 65 C2d 578, 582, 55 CR 769, 771-772]

b) [6:456.2] Certainty of terms: It must be certain and unambiguous. [Handy v. Gordon (1967) 65 C2d 578, 581, 55 CR 769, 771; Magna Develop. Co. v. Reed (1964) 228 CA2d 230, 238, 39 CR 284, 290]

c) [6:456.3] Essential terms: The agreement should state the maximum interest rate, maximum term, and terms of payment of the new loan. [Gould v. Callan (1954) 127 CA2d 1, 6, 273 P2d 93, 96]

It must also state the maximum amount of the contemplated new loan. [Roven v. Miller (1959) 168 CA2d 391, 398, 335 P2d 1035, 1040]

And the agreement should state the purpose of the contemplated new loan. For example, the subordinating lender will want the proceeds of the new loan to be used to either pay down its existing loan or improve the property (thereby increasing the value of the security). [See Ruth v. Lytton Sav. & Loan Ass'n of Northern Calif. (1968) 266 CA2d 831, 840, 72 CR 521, 527 (corrected on other grounds by Ruth v. Lytton Sav. & Loan Ass'n of Northern Calif. (1969) 272 CA2d 24, 25-26, 76 CR 926, 927, and disapproved on other grounds by Hatch v. Collins (1990) 225 CA3d 1104, 1112, 275 CR 476, 480, fn. 4)]

[6:456.4 - 6:456.9] Reserved.

(c) [6:456.10] Agreement ordering recording sequence: Technically, an agreement to record one instrument before another is not a true "subordination agreement" (¶ 6:454) because the rank of the liens is not altered by agreement but, instead, results from normal operation of the recording statutes (Civ.C. § 2897—first in time, first in priority).

Courts, however, have characterized this scenario as subordination and applied subordination rules to determine the rights and obligations of the parties. [Brown v. Boren (1999) 74 CA4th 1303, 1314, 88 CR2d 758, 765]

(3) [6:457] Conditional subordination agreements: The reordering of lien priorities pursuant to a subordination agreement or agreement to subordinate is limited strictly by the express terms and conditions of the agreement. [Gluskin v. Atlantic Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1973) 32 CA3d 307, 313, 108 CR 318, 322; Miller v. Citizens Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1967) 248 CA2d 655, 663, 56 CR 844, 851; see also Bratcher v. Buckner (2001) 90 CA4th 1177, 1186, 109 CR2d 534, 540—subordination agreements (like contracts generally) interpreted to enforce parties' objective intent]

Thus, e.g., where a seller's subordination agreement specifies the buyer's new loan may be used only for construction purposes, the seller's lien is not subordinated to a subsequent loan obtained and used for a different purpose; i.e., a subordination agreement breached by the buyer is unenforceable by the subsequent lender. [See Protective Equity Trust #83, Ltd. v. Bybee (1991) 2 CA4th 139, 150-151, 2 CR2d 864, 870-871—buyer breached seller-financed subordination agreement (specifying subordination limited to construction loan) by applying part of new loan toward underlying (original) purchase obligation]

Therefore, where a subsequent lender's lien priority derives solely through the original lender's subordination agreement, upon failure of that agreement the seller's (original lender's) trust deed will be deemed senior to the subsequent lender's trust deed. [Protective Equity Trust #83, Ltd. v. Bybee, supra, 2 CA4th at 151, 2 CR2d at 871]

(a) [6:457.1] Contract principles apply: A claim of loss of priority resulting from unfulfilled conditions in a subordination agreement is based on principles of contract law. This is so whether the third party lender's claim to priority derives from a formal subordination agreement where the seller records first and then agrees their lien will be junior to a third party loan, or from an agreement by the seller to record after the third party lender. [Brown v. Boren (1999) 74 CA4th 1303, 1315-1316, 88 CR2d 758, 766-767—claim that senior lender failed to comply with conditions of subordination must be supported by contractual theory, which plaintiff failed to plead]

(b) [6:457.2] Subject to seller's waiver by agreeing to subsequent unconditional subordination: A subordinating seller cannot invoke conditions in its subordination agreement to protect its priority as against a subsequent lender where it consents to a subsequent unconditional subordination agreement that makes no reference to the prior conditional subordination.

By executing the subsequent unconditional subordination, the seller effectively removes the former restrictions on subordination; having been superseded, there no longer remain any conditions of subordination to be breached. [Swiss Property Management Co., Inc. v. Southern Calif. IBEWNECA Pension Plan (1997) 60 CA4th 839, 849-850, 70 CR2d 587, 593-594—new lender's lien entitled to first position priority even though buyer's deed of trust in favor of seller provided specific conditions to subordination, where seller consented to subsequent unconditional subordination in favor of new lender]

(4) [6:458] Implied good faith duty owed to subordinating seller/lender: Public policy considerations warrant protecting the rights of a subordinating seller (or other first-in-time lender) who willingly agrees to take a junior position in reliance on the fact the proceeds of the subsequent loan (to which it has agreed to subordinate) will be used to enhance the value of the property. For that reason, the subsequent lender is held to a good faith duty implied in the subordination agreement not to do anything that will defeat the subordinating seller's security interest. [Gluskin v. Atlantic Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1973) 32 CA3d 307, 313-314, 108 CR 318, 322]

For the same policy reasons, a buyer/borrower and new lender may not bilaterally make a material modification of the loan to which the seller has subordinated without the seller's knowledge and consent. The buyer/borrower and new lender may be liable to the subordinating seller if, without the latter's consent, they agree to a modification that materially increases the risk the new loan will become a subject of default. [Gluskin v. Atlantic Sav. & Loan Ass'n, supra, 32 CA3d at 314-315, 108 CR at 323-324; see Citizens Business Bank v. Gevorgian (2013) 218 CA4th 602, 626, 160 CR3d 49, 67 (applying Gluskin)—agreement subordinating seller's purchase money security interest to lien of subsequent construction loan unenforceable where buyer and new lender materially modified construction loan without seller's knowledge and consent; Resolution Trust Corp. v. BVS Develop., Inc. (9th Cir. 1994) 42 F3d 1206, 1214—Gluskin rule aims to protect subordinated sellers from secret agreements between buyers and lenders against subordinated seller's interest]

(a) [6:458.1] Compare—no comparable duty owed to *nonsubordinating junior lienholders: Absent facts giving rise to a "special relationship" between junior and senior lienholders, no comparable rule protects a nonsubordinating junior lienholder against a risk that the senior loan might be modified in a manner that materially affects the security of the junior lien. [Friery v. Sutter Buttes Sav. Bank (1998) 61 CA4th 869, 877-878, 72 CR2d 32, 37-38]

Thus, e.g., a senior lender owed no implied duty to a junior lienholder (seller who took back a second trust deed) in renegotiating the terms of its loan with a new buyer; and, therefore, the junior could not prevail on its claim that by renegotiating without the junior's consent, the senior lender subordinated its lien to the junior lien. "Renegotiation of the senior loan upon transfer of ownership without the lender's consent was precisely one of the hazards which [seller] accepted when she sold the property and took back a second deed of trust. We see no public policy reasons to saddle [senior lender] with a duty of care to protect her security when its own superior lien was jeopardized by a sale of the property to a less solvent owner." [Friery v. Sutter Buttes Sav. Bank, supra, 61 CA4th at 879, 72 CR2d at 38-39]

[6:459] Reserved.

➪ [6:460] PRACTICE POINTER FOR SUBORDINATING SELLERS: Subordinating lenders in a seller-financed transaction are principally concerned with keeping the permissible terms for the new loan as restrictive as possible. For example, the seller does not want to have its lien junior to a new excessively-large senior deed of trust that accrues interest at a high rate.

In addition, the seller should require that all proceeds from the new loan be used to either pay down the seller's loan or finance construction of improvements on the property (thereby enhancing the value of the seller's security). (Problems usually arise when the buyer wants to allocate a portion of the new loan proceeds to pay so-called "soft" costs, such as the buyer's overhead expenses and legal, accounting, engineering and architectural fees, while the seller wants the new loan proceeds to be used only for "hard" construction costs. See ¶ 6:50 ff. re "hard" vs. "soft" construction costs.)

In all events, remember that conditions to subordination must be spelled out in the subordination agreement. [See Swiss Property Management Co., Inc. v. Southern Calif. IBEW-NECA Pension Plan (1997) 60 CA4th 839, 849-850, 70 CR2d 587, 593-594—sellers' conditional subordination agreement superseded by subsequent unconditional subordination agreement to which sellers consented; and ¶ 6:457.2]

d. [6:461] Statutory disclosure requirements re small secured loans: By statute, certain disclosures must be included in both subordination agreements and instruments containing executory subordination agreements. [Civ.C. §§ 2953.1-2953.5; see Civ.C. § 2953.1(b) & (c), defining "subordination clause" and "subordination agreement"]

(1) [6:462] Exception if loan exceeds $25,000: The disclosure and voidability provisions discussed at ¶ 6:463 ff. do not apply to:

- Any subordination clause or subordination agreement that expressly states the subordinating loan shall exceed $25,000 (Civ.C. § 2953.5(a)); or

- Any subordination clause or subordination agreement executed in connection with a loan exceeding $25,000 (Civ.C. § 2953.5(b)).

(2) Mandatory notices

(a) Subordination agreements

1) [6:463] Legend: If the document is a subordination agreement, the words "Subordination Agreement" must appear in at least 10-point bold type (or, if typewritten, in capital letters and underlined) at the top of the agreement. [Civ.C. § 2953.3(a)]

2) [6:464] Impact on lien priority: Further, the following notice must appear immediately below the legend (¶ 6:463) in at least eight-point bold type (or, if typewritten, in capital letters):

"Notice: This subordination agreement ('may result' or 'results,' as appropriate) in your security interest in the property becoming subject to and of lower priority than the lien of some other or later security instrument." [Civ.C. § 2953.3(b)]

3) [6:465] Use of new loan proceeds: If the terms of the agreement permit the obligor to use the new loan proceeds for a purpose other than defraying contract costs for improvement of the secured property, the agreement must contain the following additional notice in at least eight-point bold type (or, if typewritten, in capital letters) directly above the space reserved for the subordinating lender's signature:

"Notice: This subordination agreement contains a provision which ('allows' or 'may allow,' as appropriate) the person obligated on your real property security to obtain a loan a portion of which may be expended for other purposes than improvement of the land." [Civ.C. § 2953.3(c)]

(b) Security instruments containing subordination clause

WESTLAW © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

1) [6:466] Legend: If the security instrument (deed of trust) contains or has attached a subordination clause, the word "Subordinated" must appear in at least 10-point bold type (or, if typewritten, in capital letters and underlined) at the top of the instrument, followed by a description of the type of security instrument. [Civ.C. § 2953.2(a)]

2) [6:467] Impact on lien priority: Further, the following notice must appear immediately below the Civ.C. § 2953.2(a) legend (¶ 6:466) in at least eight-point bold type (or, if typewritten, in capital letters):

"Notice: This … (insert description of real property security instrument) contains a subordination clause which may result in your security interest in the property becoming subject to and of lower priority than the lien of some other or later security instrument." [Civ.C. § 2953.2(b)]

3) [6:468] Use of new loan proceeds: And, if the subordination clause allows the obligor to use the new loan proceeds for a purpose other than defraying the costs for improvements on the secured property, the following additional notice must appear in at least eight-point bold type (or, if typewritten, in capital letters) directly above the space reserved for the subordinating lender's signature:

"Notice: This … (insert description of real property security instrument) contains a subordination clause which allows the person obligated on your real property security instrument to obtain a loan a portion of which may be expended for other purposes than improvement of the land." [Civ.C. § 2953.2(c)]

(3) [6:469] Consequences of noncompliance—subordinated lender's avoidance power: A subordination clause or subordination agreement that does not "substantially comply" with the disclosure requirements set forth at ¶ 6:461 ff. is voidable at the subordinating lender's (or its successor in interest's) election exercised within two years of the date on which the deed of trust is executed ... unless it had "actual knowledge" of the existence and terms of the subordination clause or agreement. [Civ.C. § 2953.4]

(a) [6:470] Mechanics for avoidance: An election to void the subordination clause or agreement must be exercised by recording a notice stating that the Civ.C. §§ 2953.2/2953.3 requirements have not been complied with; that the person making the election is the holder of the security instrument which is or was to become subordinated; and that they elect to avoid the effect of the subordination clause or agreement. [Civ.C. § 2953.4(b)]

(b) [6:471] Waiver: The right to void the noncomplying subordination may be waived by the secured lender's subsequent execution and recordation of a statement that it knows of the existence of the subordination clause or agreement and of its terms, and that it waives the Civ.C. § 2953.4 voidability provisions and the Civ.C. §§ 2953.1-2953.3 requirements. [Civ.C. § 2953.4(c)]

e. [6:472] Subordination of deeds of trust to leases: Foreclosures can wipe out leases that are subordinate to deeds of trust. [Aviel v. Ng (2008) 161 CA4th 809, 816, 74 CR3d 200, 205-206; see also Dr. Leevil, LLC v. Westlake Health Care Ctr. (2017) 9 CA5th 450, 454-455, 215 CR3d 127, 130-131 (reversed on other grounds by Dr. Leevil, LLC v. Westlake Health Care Center (2018) 6 C5th 474, 484-485, 241 CR3d 12, 20)—foreclosure sale under deed of trust extinguished lease pursuant to its automatic subordination provision; and ¶ 6:534.2]

Consequently, tenants are concerned about preserving their leaseholds after foreclosure. And, lenders generally are willing to accommodate tenants' concerns because lenders do not want to foreclose-out paying tenants. Therefore, tenants and lenders often enter into "nondisturbance and attornment agreements" (or "subordination, nondisturbance and attornment agreements"), governing how foreclosure will affect their respective rights. Such agreements generally have the following principal components:

• [6:472.1] Attornment: The tenant agrees to "attorn" to the successful bidder at the foreclosure sale (i.e., agrees to become the tenant of the new owner). [See Miscione v. Barton Development Co. (1997) 52 CA4th 1320, 1327-1328, 61 CR2d 280, 285]

• [6:472.2] Nondisturbance: The lender agrees that, in the event of a foreclosure, the tenant's right of possession will not be "disturbed"—i.e., the tenant retains the right to remain on the leased premises so long as the tenant is not in default under the lease. [Miscione v. Barton Develop. Co. (1997) 52 CA4th 1320, 1327-1332, 61 CR2d 280, 285-288]

• [6:472.3] Subordination: The tenant agrees that its lease will become subordinate to any liens or encumbrances on the landlord's property that attach after the lease is executed. [Dover Mobile Estates v. Fiber Form Products, Inc. (1990) 220 CA3d 1494, 1498, 270 CR 183, 185; see also Civ.C. § 2934]

Cross-refer: Nondisturbance and attornment agreements are discussed in detail in Ch. 7 in connection with ground leases; see ¶ 7:273 ff.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

f. [6:473] Subordination to liens subject to intervening lien: When a first priority lien is subordinated to a later lien that is subject to an intervening lien, the liens subject to the subordination agreement "switch places" in priority, but only to the extent of the total amount of the subordinated lien (the former first priority lien). This result is "most logical and fair" because it does not affect the intervening lienholder's rights and its original position in the chain of priorities. [Bratcher v. Buckner (2001) 90 CA4th 1177, 1187, 109 CR2d 534, 540; see also Wells Fargo Bank v. Neilsen (2009) 178 CA4th 602, 611-612, 100 CR3d 547, 552-553 (applying Bratcher reasoning to nonjudicial foreclosure proceeding)—per subordination agreement, third lienholder was superior to first but still junior to second, whereas first was junior to third but still senior to second (discussed further at ¶ 6:535.14g)]

• [6:473.1] Example: Defendant executes a deed of trust encumbering his property in the amount of $200,000 (L1). A $100,000 judgment lien (L2) is then recorded against the property. Defendant executes a third deed of trust against the property in the amount of $50,000 (L3). Thereafter, written agreements are executed subordinating L1 to L3, with no mention of L2.

Bratcher determines the priority of the liens as follows: L3's $50,000 lien now takes the L1 first priority position. After subtracting L3's $50,000 lien, L1 retains priority over L2 in the amount of $150,000 (the $50,000 balance is now junior to L2's judgment lien). [See Bratcher v. Buckner (2001) 90 CA4th 1177, 1188, 109 CR2d 534, 542]

g. [6:474] Multiple loans secured by single deed of trust; subordination's effect on lien priority: Several loans on real property may be secured by a single deed of trust and cross-defaulted—i.e., a default on one will be a default on all. Unless the parties otherwise agree, however, the priority of the loans does not change. Thus, a lender's agreement to subordinate its loan to one of several loans secured by the same deed of trust does not subordinate the lender's loan to any of the other loans. [See R.E. Loans, LLC v. Investors Warranty of America, Inc. (2013) 212 CA4th 1432, 1433, 151 CR3d 799, 800—lender did not breach subordination agreement when new loans secured by same trust deed exceeded amount specified in the agreement]

• [6:475] Example: Lender 1 agrees to subordinate its existing trust deed to a new loan from Lender 2 in the approximate amount of $4,000,000, secured by a new first deed of trust in favor of Lender 2. Lender 2's trust deed secures the $4,000,000 loan, plus two other loans for a total of $21,000,000. The loans are cross-defaulted and cross-collateralized. To the extent Lender 2's trust deed secures a note in the amount of $4,000,000, it is senior to Lender 1's trust deed. To the extent Lender 2's trust deed secures the other loans, it is junior to Lender 1's trust deed. [See R.E. Loans, LLC v. Investors Warranty of America, Inc. (2013) 212 CA4th 1432, 1437, 151 CR3d 799, 803]

[6:476 - 6:479] Reserved.

5. Fixtures and Fixture Filings

a. [6:480] "Fixtures" defined: A "fixture" is essentially anything that becomes so attached to real property as to become a permanent part of it. [Civ.C. § 660; see also Comm'l C. § 9102(a)(41)—fixtures are "goods that have become so related to particular real property that an interest in them arises under real property law"; People v. Acosta (2014) 226 CA4th 108, 119, 171 CR3d 774, 782—something is deemed affixed to land when it is attached by roots (e.g., trees), embedded in it (e.g., walls), permanently resting upon it (e.g., buildings) or permanently attached to what is already permanent (e.g., by cement, plaster, nails, bolts, or screws); and further discussion at ¶ 4:42 ff.]

b. [6:481] Necessity of fixture filing: A secured creditor may take an interest in fixtures only by completing a "fixture filing" (Comm'l C. §§ 9102(a)(40) & 9502(a) & (b)). Usually, the deed of trust will suffice as a fixture filing (see ¶ 6:484 ff.).

➪ [6:482] PRACTICE POINTER FOR LENDERS: There are at least two reasons why the trust deed beneficiary (lender) wants to make certain it is secured as to fixtures:

• A completed fixture filing ensures that the beneficiary will retain a perfected security interest in the fixtures even if they are removed.

• Before they are built into the real estate, fixtures constitute personal property which could be subject to another creditor's prior claims. If the fixture filing is properly made, the beneficiary will be a secured creditor from the instant the personal property becomes so incorporated into the real estate as to become a fixture.

c. [6:483] Place of filing: A fixture filing must be filed in the office of the county recorder where a mortgage (or deed of trust) on the real estate would be recorded (i.e., in the county where the subject real property is located; see generally, Civ.C. § 1169). [Comm'l C. §§ 9102(a)(37) & 9501(a)(1)(B)]
d. [6:484] Deed of trust as fixture filing: A deed of trust can constitute a fixture filing provided all of the following conditions are met (Comm'l C. § 9502(c)):

• The deed of trust indicates the goods that it covers;

• The goods are or are to become fixtures related to the real property described in the deed of trust;

• The deed of trust complies with the requirements for a financing statement set forth in Comm'l C. § 9502 other than an indication that it is to be filed in the real property records; and

• The deed of trust is duly recorded. [Comm'l C. § 9502(c)]
(1) [6:485] "Fixture filing" legend not essential: Most deeds of trust will satisfy the requirements set forth at ¶ 6:484. The deed of trust need not expressly bear a "fixture filing" legend, although some include such legend (usually on the title page).
(2) [6:486] Alternative UCC financing statement; distinction in duration: Alternatively, a trust deed beneficiary may make a fixture filing by recording a separate UCC financing statement (see ¶ 4:36). However, whereas a deed of trust operates as fixture filing until actually released by the beneficiary, a separate financing statement must be renewed every five years (otherwise, it automatically expires by law). [Comm'l C. § 9515(a), (g)]

6. Personal Property Security Agreements

a. Lender's concerns

(1) [6:490] Maximizing security interest: A fixture filing (¶ 6:481 ff.) does not give the lender any security interest in movable (nonfixture) personal property relating to the secured real property. Yet, institutional lenders often want to maximize the security of their loans by taking a security interest in all personal property relating to ownership or operation of the real property for which the loan is being made. Therefore, in loan transactions involving properties other than single family residences or small apartment buildings, lenders often require the buyer to grant the lender a security interest in all tangible and intangible personal property relating to the real property.
(2) [6:491] Resolving "personal" vs. "real" property issues: Many office buildings and apartment projects include few items of personal property (e.g., only a small amount of maintenance equipment, washers and dryers, drapes/blinds in the units). Nevertheless, a personal property security agreement will be desirable from the lender's perspective because it circumvents possible future dispute over the scope of secured property embraced in the trust deed or a fixture filing—e.g., lighting fixtures, power panels, boilers, commercial kitchen equipment (such as large freezers or ovens), etc. are not necessarily easily categorized as "personal property" (which would not be covered by the trust deed or fixture filing) as opposed to "real property" (which would be covered by the trust deed or fixture filing).
So long as the lender has a perfected first position security interest in the subject property, it is immaterial whether the property is real or personal.
b. [6:492] Necessity for security agreement: A security agreement is the document by which the borrower grants a security interest to the lender. [See Comm'l C. § 9102(a)(74)—defining "security agreement" as an agreement that "creates or provides for a security interest"]

• FORM: Personal Property Security Agreement, see Form 6:K.
(1) [6:493] Deed of trust as security agreement: A personal property security agreement is incorporated into many deeds of trust. In those instances, it may be unnecessary for the lender to require a separate security agreement (so long as the minimum essential terms are set forth in the trust deed; see ¶ 6:494 ff.). In either case, however, the lender will need to perfect its security interest in personal property (see ¶ 6:503).

c. Creation of effective security agreement

(1) [6:494] Formalities; minimum terms: To create a valid security interest in personal property, the agreement must, at a minimum, satisfy the following requirements:

(a) [6:495] Signed record: Security agreements must be signed by the debtor (borrower). [See Comm'l C. § 9203(b)(3)(A) (amended Stats. 2023, Ch. 210; eff. 1/1/24); Comm'l C. § 1201(b)(37) (amended Stats. 2023, Ch. 210; eff. 1/1/24)—"sign" means to execute or adopt a tangible symbol, or attach an electronic symbol, to a record with present intent to authenticate or adopt the record]

(b) [6:496] Security interest in fact: Whether an agreement creates a security interest depends not on whether the parties intend that the law characterize the transaction as a security interest but rather on whether the transaction falls within the statutory definition of "security interest"—i.e., an interest in personal property or fixtures that secures payment or performance of an obligation (Comm'l C. § 1201(b)(35)). [See Comm'l C. § 9102, Assemb. Comm. Comment No. 3 (1999 Addition) and Unif. Comm'l C. Comment No. 3]

[6:497] Reserved.

(c) [6:498] Description of collateral or collateral in creditor's possession: In addition to the security agreement (¶ 6:490 ff.), enforceability requires compliance with the evidentiary standard established for the type of collateral taken. [See Comm'l Code § 9203's Uniform Comm'l Code Comment-2022 Update, Comments 3 & 4]

For most types of personal property, the security agreement must sufficiently describe the collateral (Comm'l C. §§ 9108 & 9203(b)(3)(A)). If the security agreement does not, the collateral (other than a certificated security) must be in the secured party's possession or control under Comm'l C. § 7106 (electronic documents of title), § 9104 (deposit accounts), § 9105.1 (electronic money), § 9106 (investment property), § 9107 (letter of credit rights), § 9107.1 (controllable electronic records, accounts or payments intangible), § 9313 (uncertificated securities), or § 9314.1 (chattel paper). [Comm'l C. § 9203(b)(3)(B)-(E)]

(d) [6:499] Statement of secured obligation: The agreement must recite the obligation(s) secured. [Needle v. Lasco Industries, Inc. (1970) 10 CA3d 1105, 1108, 89 CR 593, 596]

However, a broad reference to "all obligations" or future advances is not fatal to the security agreement. So long as the agreement evidences the parties' intent to create a security interest (¶ 6:494 ff.), the gap left by an imprecise or general description of the secured obligation may be filled by reference to the parties' "reasonable expectations"; and their reasonable expectations may be ascertained by testimony concerning the parties' course of dealing, usage of trade, course of performance and other relevant circumstances. [See New West Fruit Corp. v. Coastal Berry Corp. (1991) 1 CA4th 92, 98-100, 1 CR2d 664, 667-669—delineation of precise obligation secured by agreement between lender and strawberry growers satisfied by testimony on industry custom and parties' course of dealing]

(2) [6:500] Additional terms: Though not essential to create a valid security interest, the following additional provisions generally should be included in the security agreement (see Form 6:K):

(a) [6:501] Debtor's agreements: The debtor should represent it owns the collateral and (among other things) should agree to:

• allow the secured party access to the collateral;

• refrain from moving the collateral (except as otherwise agreed);

• maintain the collateral in good condition and repair;

• not sell the collateral or permit any subsequent lien to encumber it;

• deliver the collateral to the secured party upon the debtor's default.

(b) [6:502] Events of default; remedies: The agreement should also specify what constitutes a default by the debtor and set forth the secured party's remedies upon default—typically, to take possession of the collateral and sell it at either a public or private sale pursuant to applicable California Commercial Code provisions. [See Comm'l C. § 9601 et seq.]

d. [6:503] Perfection of security interest: Even though a security interest is validly created (¶ 6:494 ff.), the secured party must still perfect its interest in the collateral so as to ensure the priority of its lien over other creditors. A security interest in personal property ordinarily is perfected in California by filing a UCC-1 financing statement with the Secretary of State of California. [See Comm'l C. § 9301 et seq.]

c. [6:579.10] Enforcing deficiency judgment; time limit

[6:510] Although a detailed treatment of debtor-creditor issues is beyond the scope of this Practice Guide, the sections at ¶ 6:511 ff. provide an overview of the general procedural framework for foreclosures and the basic rules concerning California's antideficiency laws.

➪ [6:510.1] CAVEAT: The rights and remedies of lenders and borrowers in secured real property transactions are the subject of a substantial body of statutory and case law, and include some of the most complicated—and, in many respects, unsettled —legal issues in California. General practitioners are cautioned not to tread too deeply into these waters without consulting appropriate experts and/or specialized treatises on the subject.

1. [6:511] Residential Foreclosure Prevention Laws and Programs: In 2008-2009, Congress enacted an exhaustive body of consumer protective legislation meant to reduce the rise in residential foreclosures and stabilize property values. The Federal Reserve Board has issued related consumer protection regulations (¶ 6:99.1) and, in 2009, the U.S. Treasury Department instituted residential mortgage modification and refinancing programs to assist distressed homeowners. State law too was revised to help stave off the mounting foreclosure crisis in California.

A comprehensive treatment of these developments is beyond the scope of this Practice Guide. However, a summary of the most relevant programs is set forth at ¶ 6:511.1 ff.:

a. [6:511.1] California Homeowner Bill of Rights: Effective January 1, 2013, the Homeowner Bill of Rights (HBOR) modified the nonjudicial foreclosure process by ensuring that specified borrowers who may qualify for a foreclosure alternative "are considered for, and have a meaningful opportunity to obtain, available loss mitigation options …" [See Civ.C. § 2923.4; Morris v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2022) 78 CA5th 279, 296, 293 CR3d 417, 442—"[a]t the heart of the HBOR are mandated procedures designed to promote good faith negotiation of some form of foreclosure alternative …, typically modification of the borrower's loan terms"]

Key provisions of the law include:

• [6:511.2] Notice requirements: Prior to recording a notice of default, lenders, mortgage servicers, mortgagees, trustees, beneficiaries and their authorized agents must contact the defaulting borrower to provide specified information regarding options for avoiding foreclosure. See¶ 6:524.3 and 6:524.9.

• [6:511.3] Single point of contact for "high volume" foreclosures: Mortgage servicers conducting a large volume of residential foreclosures must assign each borrower a single point of contact to handle the process. See¶ 6:524.13.

• [6:511.4] No "dual-tracking" of foreclosure and loan modification processes: Nonjudicial foreclosures may not proceed while borrowers have complete applications for foreclosure prevention alternatives pending, or while borrowers are in compliance with approved modifications. See¶ 6:524.6 ff. and 6:524.16 ff.

• [6:511.5] Private right of action: Borrowers may bring suit against mortgage servicers to enforce the statute before a foreclosure sale takes place, or to seek damages for violations after the sale. See¶ 6:524.8 and 6:524.20.

• [6:511.6] Application to residential property: Most of the statutory provisions apply to owner-occupied residential real property of not more than four units that serves as the owner's principal residence and secures a first lien mortgage or deed of trust obtained for personal, family or household purposes. See¶ 6:524.1.

ALERT*—extended application due to COVID-19 pandemic: In response to the COVID-19 pandemic, California extended the HBOR protections to any property owned by a small landlord (one or more individuals who owned no more than three residential properties) and occupied as a principal residence by a tenant pursuant to an arm's length lease entered into before, and in effect on, March 4, 2020. The inclusion of such rental properties under the HBOR ended on January 1, 2023, unless the borrower had been approved or submitted a completed application for foreclosure prevention before January 1, 2023. [See Civ.C. § 2924.15; discussed further at¶ 6:524.1a]

• [6:511.7] "Sunset" and current provisions; large and small volume services: From its effective date until January 1, 2018, HBOR prescribed a bifurcated system of preforeclosure requirements depending on the volume of residential foreclosures the lender or servicer conducted in the prior year. Low volume servicers (defined as certain chartered and licensed entities that foreclosed on 175 or fewer homes in the prior year) were subject to slightly less onerous foreclosure prevention procedures (see¶ 6:524.3 ff.). From January 1, 2018 to December 31, 2018, there was only one set of requirements applicable to all lenders or servicers, with very few exemptions for low volume servicers (¶ 6:524.21 ff.). Commencing January 1, 2019, however, the Legislature re-enacted HBOR in nearly identical form to the original 2012 statute, but without the "sunset" provisions (see Stats. 2018, Ch. 404). And in response to the COVID-19 pandemic, the Legislature again amended HBOR to extend its protections to certain residential properties only until January 1, 2023, unless the borrower had been approved or submitted a completed application for foreclosure prevention before January 1, 2023. [See Civ.C. § 2924.15; and¶ 6:524.1]

Caution: As a result of the foregoing, HBOR contains some provisions that expired on 1/1/18 but were reinstated effective 1/1/19 (e.g., Civ.C. §§ 2923.55, 2924.9, 2924.10, 2924.17, 2924.18, 2924.19), and others that have one version that expired on 1/1/18 but reverted substantially to the 2012 form effective 1/1/19, and another version that was effective only during calendar year 2018 (see, e.g., 2018 operative versions of Civ.C. §§ 2923.5, 2923.6, 2924.11, 2924.12, 2924.15). Thus, practitioners must always exercise care in ascertaining which HBOR provisions apply given the particular circumstances at hand.

[6:511.8] No abatement due to "sunsetting": The 2018 HBOR amendments (¶ 6:511.7) did not alter any liability for violations of the statute in its previous forms. [See Stats. 2018, Ch. 404, §§ 25, 26 (disavowing statutory repeal of prior law unless expressly provided); Morris v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2022) 78 CA5th 279, 307-308, 293 CR3d 417, 451-452—plaintiff's claim for violating HBOR's dual-tracking prohibition not abated when original HBOR "sunsetted" because prohibition was moved to another code section and reenacted in substantially identical form; Schmidt v. Citibank, N.A. (2019) 28 CA5th 1109, 1117, 239 CR3d 648, 653-654 (decided prior to reinstatement of pre-2018 HBOR scheme) —statutory repeal doctrine did not prevent homeowners from suing for pre-2018 HBOR violations because Legislature re-enacted most of said statute's protections, eff. 1/1/18]

b. [6:511.9] California residential mortgage loan modification laws: See ¶ 6:99.5 ff.

c. [6:511.10] Housing and Economic Recovery Act of 2008 (HERA): The Housing and Economic Recovery Act of 2008 (HERA, Pub.L. 110-289, 122 Stat. 2654) was signed into law July 30, 2008. Among other things, HERA enhanced the statutory foreclosure protections afforded servicemembers. See ¶ 6:512.1.

➪ [6:511.10a] PRACTICE POINTER: HERA (¶ 6:511.10) empowered the Federal Housing Finance Agency (FHFA) to place the Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corporation (Freddie Mac) and the Federal National Mortgage Association (Fannie Mae) into conservatorship to protect the U.S. housing market. This legislation shields the conservatorship assets from certain taxes, penalties, fines and collection actions, including foreclosures conducted without FHFA's consent (generally referred to as the "Federal Foreclosure Bar"). [12 USC § 4617(j); Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp. v. SFR Investments Pool 1, LLC (9th Cir. 2018) 893 F3d 1136, 1142-1143; Berezovsky v. Moniz (9th Cir. 2017) 869 F3d 923, 926-928; see also Collins v. Yellen (2021) _ US _, _, 141 S.Ct. 1761, 1700 (outlining history of Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac, and FHFA)]

The Federal Foreclosure Bar (above) restricts foreclosures by private entities as well as state and local tax foreclosures. It also preempts conflicting state laws. [See Nationstar Mortg. LLC v. Saticoy Bay LLC, Series 9229 Millikan Ave. (9th Cir. 2021) 996 F3d 950, 958 (Nevada statute establishing HOA's superior lien preempted)—foreclosure sale conducted by HOA without FHFA's consent did not extinguish Freddie Mac's mortgage lien; Berezovsky v. Moniz, supra, 869 F3d at 926-930 (same)]

Freddie Mac and Fannie Mae account for a substantial portion of residential mortgage financing, and their conservatorship continues in 2018 (see Federal Home Loan Mortgage Corp. v. SFR Investments Pool 1, LLC, supra, 893 F3d at 1140-1141). Accordingly, practitioners should always evaluate whether the Federal Foreclosure Bar applies to their client's circumstances.

d. [6:511.11] Helping Families Save Their Homes Act of 2009: The Helping Families Save Their Homes Act was signed into law May 20, 2009. Its purpose is to prevent mortgage foreclosures and enhance mortgage credit availability. Among other things, the Act authorizes mortgage loan servicers to modify loans and engage in other loss mitigation activities consistent with guidelines issued by the Secretary of the Treasury. It also provides a servicer "safe harbor" for mortgage loan modifications. [See 15 USC § 1639a; compare Civ.C. § 2923.6—California's "safe harbor" provision for mortgage servicers considering mortgage loan modifications]

e. [6:511.12] Making Home Affordable Program (MHA): The Making Home Affordable Program (MHA) was developed by the U.S. Treasury Department and the Department of Housing and Urban Development as a broad strategy to help avoid foreclosure on residential properties, stabilize the country's housing market and improve the U.S. economy. The program, which provided loan modification guidelines for the mortgage industry, ended December 31, 2016, except with respect to certain loan modification applications made prior thereto. [See Pub.L. 114-113, Div. O, Title VII, § 709(a), (b); Supplemental Directive 16-02, "Making Home Affordable Program - MHA Program Termination and Borrower Application Sunset"]

A variety of component programs designed to address mortgage distress situations included:

— Home Affordable Modification Program (HAMP and HAMP Tier II) (¶ 6:511.13);

— Principal Reduction Alternative SM;

— Second Lien Modification Program;

— FHA Home Affordable Modification Program;

— USDA's Special Loan Servicing;

— Veteran's Affairs Home Affordable Modification;

— Second Lien Modification Program for Federal Housing Administration Loans; — Home Affordable Refinance Program (HARP) (¶ 6:511.28);

— FHA Refinance for Borrowers with Negative Equity;

— Home Affordable Unemployment Program;

— Housing Finance Agency Innovation Fund for the Hardest Hit Housing Markets;

— Home Affordable Foreclosure Alternatives Programs (HAFA) (¶ 6:511.29).

f. [6:511.13] Home Affordable Modification Program (HAMP and HAMP Tier II): The Home Affordable Modification Program (HAMP) was developed by the U.S. Treasury Department as part of the MHA (¶ 6:511.12). HAMP allowed homeowners who are behind on their mortgage payments to modify the terms of their first mortgage by lowering monthly payments to 31% of their gross income. This level was achieved by reducing the interest rate to as low as 2% and extending the term of the loan or deferring payment on part of the principal. The program included the use of short sales and deeds in lieu of foreclosure if a borrower could not complete the modification process.

A critical eligibility requirement was that the borrower's default be reasonably foreseeable. Servicer participation in HAMP was voluntary; however, Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac and financial institutions receiving assistance under the Financial Stability Plan were required to implement the plan. HAMP ended December 31, 2016, except for certain loan modification applications made prior thereto. [See Supplemental Directive 16-02, "Making Home Affordable Program - MHA Program Termination and Borrower Application Sunset"]

Effective June 1, 2012, the U.S. Treasury created a second class of HAMP modifications known as HAMP Tier II. This program was available to homeowners who were not eligible, or were previously rejected, for a regular HAMP modification. Homeowners who obtained, but failed, a regular HAMP modification could apply under HAMP Tier II if at least 12 months had elapsed from the effective date of the previous modification or if their circumstances changed. The Tier II program allowed borrowers to reduce their monthly payment to between 25% and 45% of their income. It also provided for principal forbearance on the lesser of (1) 30% of the principal balance; or (2) the excess of the principal balance over the balance that would yield a loan to value of 115%. In either case, principal balance included capitalization of arrears. HAMP TIER II ended December 31, 2016, except for certain loan modification applications made prior thereto. [See Supplemental Directive 16-02, "Making Home Affordable Program - MHA Program Termination and Borrower Application Sunset"]

(1) [6:511.14] Participating servicers who fail to provide HAMP loan modifications to eligible homeowners; damages liability and possible defense to foreclosure: Servicers participating in HAMP are required to review a borrower's eligibility for the program and cannot conduct a foreclosure sale absent such a review. In fact, HAMP servicers are not even supposed to initiate foreclosure proceedings until a borrower has been evaluated and determined ineligible for the program, or if the borrower fails to respond to the servicer's Trial Period Plan (TPP) offer. [See Pub.L. 111-22, § 401]

The HAMP guidelines—explicitly adopted by Congress in the Helping Families Save Their Homes Act (¶ 6:511.11) —are directly analogous to FHA rules requiring servicers to engage in loss mitigation. As with the FHA program, participating servicers must sign a contract with the Treasury financial agent agreeing to review all eligible borrowers according to a Net Present Value (NPV) analysis before proceeding with a foreclosure sale. A servicer's failure to comply with the HAMP NPV analysis arguably constitutes "unclean hands" and therefore should preclude foreclosure.

Moreover, if the NPV analysis determines that the mortgage's value, as modified, exceeds the expected return from foreclosure, the HAMP supplemental guidelines obligate the servicer to offer the borrower a TPP with modified loan repayment terms. After the borrower's compliance, the servicer is compelled to offer a permanent modification of the loan. Indeed, the servicer's failure to do so exposes it to liability on a variety of contract and tort theories. [See Corvello v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (9th Cir. 2013) 728 F3d 878, 884 (applying Calif. law)—"Where … borrowers allege … that they have fulfilled all of their obligations under the TPP, and the loan servicer has failed to offer a permanent modification, the borrowers have valid claims for breach of the TPP agreement"; West v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2013) 214 CA4th 780, 154 CR3d 285—TPP interpreted to include HAMP requirements, including obligation to offer permanent modification upon borrower's compliance]

(a) Application

• [6:511.15] A lender who initiated a loan modification review while simultaneously proceeding to foreclose on the borrower's property ("dual tracking") violated California's Unfair Competition Law (UCL, Bus. & Prof.C. § 17200 et seq.). [Majd v. Bank of America, N.A. (2015) 243 CA4th 1293, 1302-1304, 197 CR3d 151, 158-159—although lender's actions predated "dual tracking" statute (¶ 6:524.16), practice still considered "unfair" in HAMP context and for UCL purposes; see also Oskoui v. J.P. Morgan Chase Bank, N.A. (9th Cir. 2017) 851 F3d 851, 857-858—lender who falsely promised to initiate loan modification to entice borrower into making payments and simultaneously proceeded to foreclose on borrower's property subject to UCL claim]

• [6:511.16] Borrowers whose pleadings did not sufficiently clarify the terms of a servicer's alleged agreement to modify their loan were entitled to amend the contract claim to assert that HAMP guidelines applied. [Daniels v. Select Portfolio Servicing, Inc. (2016) 246 CA4th 1150, 1177, 201 CR3d 390, 415 (disapproved on other grounds by Sheen v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2022) 12 C5th 905, 948, 290 CR3d 834, 864, fn. 12); see also Rufini v. CitiMortgage, Inc. (2014) 227 CA4th 299, 305-306, 173 CR3d 422, 427-428—borrower entitled to amend complaint for breach of contract, negligent misrepresentation and unfair business practices to allege planned home loan modification was pursuant to written TPP under HAMP]

• [6:511.17] Causes of action for breach of contract, promissory estoppel and fraud based on false promise will lie against a lender who fails to modify a loan despite the borrower having fully complied with the borrower's TPP. [Bushell v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2013) 220 CA4th 915, 918-919, 163 CR3d 539, 541-542; see also Oskoui v. J.P. Morgan Chase Bank, N.A. (9th Cir. 2017) 851 F3d 851, 858—borrower stated breach of contract claim against lender who offered permanent modification agreement but withdrew same after borrower complied with terms; Fleet v. Bank of America, N.A. (2014) 229 CA4th 1403, 1410-1412, 178 CR3d 18, 24-26—borrowers stated claims for breach of contract/covenant of good faith and fair dealing, promissory estoppel and fraud where lender foreclosed while borrowers were complying with TPP]

[6:511.18] Reserved.

• [6:511.19] A homeowner's breach of contract and wrongful foreclosure claims can survive the lender's demurrer when the homeowner has fully complied with the homeowner's TPP and modification agreement. [Chavez v. Indymac Mortg. Services (2013) 219 CA4th 1052, 1059, 162 CR3d 382, 387]

• [6:511.20] Compare: Mere submission of a HAMP application did not provide adequate consideration for a lender's subsequent unsolicited promise to delay foreclosure. Consequently, the borrowers' breach of oral contract claim was barred. Moreover, the borrowers' cause of action for promissory estoppel failed because they did not allege reliance on the lender's promise. [Orcilla v. Big Sur, Inc. (2016) 244 CA4th 982, 1006-1007, 198 CR3d 715, 734-735]

[6:511.21 - 6:511.25] Reserved.

(b) [6:511.26] Application of statute of frauds to HAMP modifications: As with promissory notes and deeds of trust, agreements to modify real property loans must be memorialized by writings that satisfy the statute of frauds (Civ.C. § 1624; see detailed discussion at ¶ 4:263 ff.). [Rossberg v. Bank of America, N.A. (2013) 219 CA4th 1481, 1503, 162 CR3d 525, 543]

Nonetheless, a lender who offers a HAMP modification to a performing borrower but fails to return the signed documentation cannot assert the statute of frauds as a defense to the borrower's action for breach of the HAMP modification contract. [See Daniels v. Select Portfolio Servicing, Inc. (2016) 246 CA4th 1150, 1176, 201 CR3d 390, 414 (disapproved on other grounds by Sheen v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2022) 12 C5th 905, 948, 290 CR3d 834, 864, fn. 12)—complaint alleging oral agreement to modify loan terms not barred by statute of frauds where borrowers included allegations reflecting their “full performance”; Corvello v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (9th Cir. 2013) 728 F3d 878, 885 (applying Calif. law)—borrower's breach of contract claim alleging full performance under TPP survived statute of frauds defense; Chavez v. Indymac Mortg. Services (2013) 219 CA4th 1052, 1061, 162 CR3d 382, 388—lender equitably estopped from asserting statute of frauds defense where borrower complied fully with TPP and modification agreement]

(2) [6:511.27] Application of HAMP principles to other foreclosure avoidance programs: A lender's obligation under the HAMP program to modify troubled mortgages once the borrower has complied with the TPP requirements may be applicable to other foreclosure avoidance programs. [See Lueras v. BAC Home Loans Servicing, LP (2013) 221 CA4th 49, 73-76, 163 CR3d 804, 824-827 (Fannie Mae HomeSaver Forbearance Program)—forbearance agreement interpreted to incorporate Fannie Mae's HAMP-like policy that lenders should work with borrowers in “good faith” to identify and implement modifications provided borrower with basis for asserting breach of contract claim against lender]

g. [6:511.28] Making Home Affordable Refinance Program (HARP): The Making Home Affordable Refinance Program (HARP) was developed by the U.S. Treasury Department and implemented in March 2009. It assists homeowners who are current on their mortgage (and those unable to refinance because of declining property values) to refinance into more affordable loans. The end date for obtaining HARP refinance was December 31, 2018.

To qualify, a homeowner must, among other things, be the owner occupant of a one-to-four-unit property, current on their mortgage and the loan must be owned or securitized by Fannie Mae or Freddie Mac.

(Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac each have toll free telephone numbers and websites to provide information on loans they own or securitize.)

h. [6:511.29] Home Affordable Foreclosure Alternatives (HAFA): Effective April 5, 2010, the U.S. Treasury Department introduced the Home Affordable Foreclosure Alternatives program (HAFA), which contained viable options for homeowners who were unable to keep their homes through HAMP (¶ 6:511.13). Specifically, HAFA provided servicers with incentives to allow short sales or deeds in lieu of foreclosure for eligible homeowners who wished to avoid foreclosure. While participation in HAFA could not save a homeowner from losing their property, it could eliminate the effects of a foreclosure on the homeowner's credit. Servicers participating in HAMP were required to comply with HAFA. HAFA ended December 31, 2016.

2. Other Legislative Protections From Foreclosure and Other Enforcement Remedies

a. [6:512] Residential care facility residents: People who live in residential care facilities for the elderly (RCFEs) are entitled to notice and protection whenever the facility is subject to foreclosure or any other event indicating significant financial distress. Licensees of such facilities are required to provide written notice, as statutorily prescribed, to the residents and their legal representatives, if applicable, as well as to the State Department of Social Services and Long-Term Care Ombudsman, when a notice of default, notice of trustee's sale or any other indication of foreclosure is issued on the land or building in which the RCFE is located. Thereafter, the Department of Social Services is charged with initiating a “compliance plan, noncompliance conference, or other appropriate action.” [See Health & Saf.C. § 1569.686(a), (b), (e) (exempting licensees holding certificates of authority as defined)]

A licensee who fails to comply with the statutory notification procedure may be liable for civil penalties up to $2,000. If a resident is relocated without such notice and suffers transfer trauma or other harm, the licensee's license may be suspended or revoked. [Health & Saf.C. § 1569.686(c)]

b. Military service personnel

(1) [6:512.1] Federal law: Under the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act, an action to foreclose on a servicemember's secured real property that is filed during, or within one year after, the servicemember's military service period may be stayed, as defined, for a period of time “as justice and equity require.” Moreover, any sale, foreclosure or seizure of the real property is invalid if made during, or within one year after, the servicemember's service period except upon court order or if made by agreement, as specified. [50 USC § 3953(b), (c)]

Servicemembers may sue for equitable/declaratory relief, or to recover monetary damages, from lenders who violate the above provision. [50 USC § 4042(a); see also McGreevey v. PHH Mortg. Corp. (9th Cir. 2018) 897 F3d 1037, 1040-1041 (acknowledging in "case of first impression" servicemember's right of action but finding his suit barred by four-year limitations period applicable to private actions alleging § 3953(c) violations)]

In addition, a trust deed (or other security in the nature of a mortgage) taken by a servicemember alone or jointly with their spouse, before the servicemember enters military service, may not bear interest in excess of 6% per year during the servicemember's service period and for one year thereafter. [50 USC § 3937(a)]

(2) [6:512.2] State law: Unless otherwise agreed by the parties following nonpayment or a breach, or unless previously court-ordered, state law prohibits any sale, foreclosure or seizure of a servicemember's secured real property during their military service and for one year thereafter. [Mil. & Vet.C. § 408(c)]

Moreover, an action to enforce a servicemember's real property obligation payable in installments under a purchase contract or secured by a mortgage (or other security) may be deferred for a period equal to the period of military service, as statutorily specified. During the deferment period, the lender may not assess penalties or charge or accumulate interest on the principal and interest deferred, nor foreclose or repossess the collateral for the obligation. The deferral period terminates, however, upon sale or further encumbrance of the property or upon maturity of the obligation, as extended by the deferral period. [See Mil. & Vet.C. § 409.3(d)(1), (e)(1), (f)]

The interest rate for a real property obligation (i.e., mortgage, trust deed or other security) incurred by the servicemember before their current period of military service may not exceed 6% per annum during any part of such service and for one year thereafter, unless the member's ability to pay in excess of 6% is not materially affected while on active duty. [See Mil. & Vet.C. § 405(a)(1)]

c. [6:512.3] Coronavirus Economic Stabilization Act of 2020 ("CARES Act"): In response to the COVID-19 pandemic, Congress enacted a loan payment forbearance program and temporary foreclosure moratorium on federally backed mortgages. The application requirements and relief available depend on whether the mortgage encumbers a property designed principally for 1-4 family occupancy ("consumer mortgages"), or properties comprising 5 or more units ("multifamily mortgages"). [15 USC §§ 9056, 9057]

CAUTION: The CARES Act measures were temporary and some have expired despite several extensions by the federal agencies regulating residential mortgages and servicers. Thus, practitioners are advised to check for any changes and determine whether and to what extent the statutory measures, as well as their implementing regulations, remain extant.

(1) [6:512.4] Federally backed consumer mortgages: Federally backed consumer mortgages include loans made, insured or guaranteed by one of the federal agencies or programs listed in the statute, or purchased or securitized by Freddie Mac or Fannie Mae. [See 15 USC § 9056(a)(2)]

(a) [6:512.5] Loan forbearance: Borrowers with federally backed consumer mortgages may defer their mortgage payments due to financial difficulties during the "covered period." This is so even if they have not contracted the virus and regardless of whether the loan is delinquent. Indeed, a borrower need only submit a request for forbearance to the servicer "affirming that the borrower is experiencing a financial hardship during the COVID-19 emergency" (15 USC § 9056(b)(1)). The servicer may not demand additional documentation or impose any fees, penalties or interest (beyond regularly scheduled payments), and must forbear for up to 180 days, extendable for another 180 days at the borrower's request. [See 15 USC § 9056(b)(2)-(3), (c)]

(b) [6:512.6] Foreclosure moratorium: Unless secured property is abandoned or vacant, the servicer of a federally backed consumer mortgage may not initiate any judicial or non-judicial foreclosure process, nor execute a foreclosure sale or foreclosure-related eviction, for a specified period (originally not less than a 60-day period beginning on March 18, 2020). [15 USC § 9056(c)]

Comment: The original 60-day foreclosure moratorium was set to expire on June 17, 2020 (see 15 USC § 9056(c)), but the relevant federal agencies extended it multiple times. At the time we went to press, the moratoria had expired for any loans where foreclosure had not been initiated before January 1, 2022.

(2) [6:512.7] Federally backed multifamily mortgages: Federally backed multifamily mortgages include loans made in whole or in part, or insured, guaranteed, supplemented or assisted in any way, by a federal officer or agency; under or in connection with a housing or urban development program; or purchased or securitized by Freddie Mac or Fannie Mae. [15 USC § 9057(f)(2)(B)]

(a) [6:512.8] Loan forbearance: Borrowers with federally backed multifamily mortgages may request forbearances due to COVID-19 related financial difficulties if their loans were current on February 1, 2020. The request may be oral or written, but must be submitted during the "covered period." [See 15 USC § 9057(a), (b), (f)(5) (defining "covered period" as that which began on 3/27/20 and will end on either 12/31/20 or termination date of national COVID-19 emergency, as declared by the President on 3/13/20, whichever is sooner)]

Upon receiving a request, servicers must document the financial hardship and forbear for up to 30 days. Borrowers may obtain 2 additional 30-day forbearance periods by requesting an extension during the "covered period," and at least 15 days before the end of the previous forbearance period. [15 USC § 9057(c)(1)]

(b) [6:512.9] Eviction moratorium: A multifamily borrower who receives a forbearance may not evict any tenants solely for nonpayment of rent or other fees, nor assess any late fees, penalties or other charges for late payment of rent, during the forbearance period. [15 USC § 9057(d)]

Moreover, during the forbearance period, the borrower may not issue a notice to vacate to any nonpaying tenant, or require a tenant to vacate on less than 30 days' notice. [15 USC § 9057(e)]

d. [6:512.10] COVID-19 Small Landlord and Homeowner Relief Act of 2020 ("Homeowner Act"): Enacted in response to the COVID-19 pandemic, the Homeowner Act (Civ.C. § 3273.01 et seq.) includes new foreclosure prevention measures applicable to (i) loans secured by residential property with no more than four dwelling units (including individual units of condominiums or cooperatives), (ii) depository institutions chartered under state or federal law, and (iii) any person licensed under Fin.C. § 22000 et seq. (consumer and commercial finance lenders and brokers), Fin.C. § 50000 et seq. (residential mortgage lenders) or Bus. & Prof.C. § 10000 et seq. (real estate professionals). Each of the foregoing must comply with federal guidance on options to be afforded borrowers following a COVID-19-related forbearance. [See Civ.C. §§ 3273.2 & 3273.11(a)]

(1) [6:512.11] Pre-foreclosure requirements: The Homeowner Act (¶ 6:512.10) imposes new pre-foreclosure steps with respect to forbearance requests made during the period between the Act's operational date and December 1, 2021 (the "effective time period," Civ.C. § 3273.1(b)). If a mortgage servicer denies a forbearance application by a borrower who was (i) current on payments as of February 1, 2020, and (ii) experiencing a financial hardship due, directly or indirectly, to the COVID-19 emergency, then the servicer is required to provide written notice to the borrower explaining the specific reason (or reasons) for the denial. If the servicer denies the borrower's application because of a curable defect, the servicer must identify the defect in the written notice and allow the borrower to cure the defect within 21 days (from the written notice's mailing date). [See Civ.C. §§ 3273.1(c) (defining "mortgage servicer") & 3273.10]

Mortgage servicers also have to comply with applicable federal guidance regarding borrower options following a COVID-19-related forbearance. [See Civ.C. § 3273.11; and¶ 6:512.10]

(2) [6:512.12] Private right of action: A borrower may bring an action for injunctive relief, damages, restitution, and any other remedy to redress a material violation of the Homeowner Act (¶ 6:512.10). If the borrower prevails, the court may award the borrower reasonable attorney fees and costs. [See Civ.C. § 3273.15(a), (b)]

3. [6:513] Foreclosure Remedies: While enforcement of an assignment of rents provision is one of the lender's most important remedies upon a borrower's default (see¶ 6:430 ff.), foreclosure is the principal (and sometimes only) remedy of a secured real property lender.

A California foreclosure may be accomplished in one of two ways: by a nonjudicial "private power" (or "trustee's") sale (¶ 6:514 ff.); or by a judicial foreclosure (¶ 6:540 ff.). [Ung v. Koehler (2005) 135 CA4th 186, 192, 37 CR3d 311, 314; Garretson v. Post (2007) 156 CA4th 1508, 1515, 68 CR3d 230, 235; see also Coker v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2016) 62 C4th 667, 672-673, 197 CR3d 131, 134—lender actually has third route to recovery by permitting "short sale" and agreeing to release its lien so borrower can sell property to third party]

a. [6:513.1] Election of foreclosure remedies:Commencement* of a judicial or nonjudicial foreclosure does not itself result in an election of remedies. A beneficiary under a deed of trust may initiate either remedy or institute both concurrently without consequence. [See Oxford Street Properties, LLC v. Rehabilitation Assocs., Inc. (2012) 206 CA4th 296, 304, 141 CR3d 704, 709, fn. 3; Vlahovich v. Cruz (1989) 213 CA3d 317, 322, 261 CR 565, 567]

However, once the beneficiary takes a judicial foreclosure to judgment or completes a nonjudicial foreclosure by trustee's sale, the beneficiary effectively elects its remedy, thereby forfeiting the other. [Flack v. Boland (1938) 11 C2d 103, 107, 77

P2d 1090, 1092; see also Oxford Street Properties, LLC v. Rehabilitation Assocs., Inc., supra, 206 CA4th at 304, 141 CR3d at 709, fn. 3—beneficiary precluded from claiming deficiency judgment in judicial foreclosure proceeding once subject property was sold at trustee's sale; California Golf, L.L.C. v. Cooper (2008) 163 CA4th 1053, 1065, 78 CR3d 153, 164—election of remedies doctrine prevents multiple suits between parties and prejudice to defendants]

(1) [6:513.2] Trustor/debtor defense: The election of remedies defense may be raised in a subsequent foreclosure proceeding only by the trustor or debtor from the original foreclosure action. Nonparties are “in no position to complain about the manner or means of actual foreclosure.” [California Golf, L.L.C. v. Cooper (2008) 163 CA4th 1053, 1065, 78 CR3d 153, 163-164—bidders at nonjudicial foreclosure sale who reneged on their bid could not use election of remedies defense to avoid liability to foreclosing beneficiary (beneficiary's predecessor in interest obtained judicial foreclosure judgment prior to transferring subject property)]

[6:513.3 - 6:513.4] Reserved.

(2) [6:513.5] Compare—deed in lieu of foreclosure: To avoid the inconvenience that often accompanies a formal foreclosure, the beneficiary may agree to accept a “deed in lieu of foreclosure” from the trustor. This can be advantageous to both parties—i.e., the beneficiary can avoid the delays and costs of foreclosure and the trustor, to some extent, may be spared the embarrassment and impaired credit rating a public foreclosure sale produces. [See Decon Group, Inc. v. Prudential Mortg. Capital Co., LLC (2014) 227 CA4th 665, 670, 174 CR3d 205, 208]

(a) [6:513.6] Potential risks associated with junior encumbrances: There may be risks attendant to taking a deed in lieu of foreclosure if the subject property is encumbered by junior liens. This is so because a conveyance through a deed in lieu of foreclosure passes title to the transferee subject to all existing liens. Thus, if the title is encumbered by two deeds of trust, the grantee takes subject to both (e.g., if the grantee is the beneficiary under the junior deed of trust, its junior lien may be eliminated by merger and it takes subject to the senior deed of trust). [Decon Group, Inc. v. Prudential Mortg. Capital Co., LLC (2014) 227 CA4th 665, 670, 174 CR3d 205, 207]

By the same token, if the grantee is the beneficiary under the senior deed of trust, under traditional merger concepts its lien would normally merge into its title and be destroyed (but see¶ 6:513.7). [Decon Group, Inc. v. Prudential Mortg. Capital Co., LLC, supra, 227 CA4th at 671, 174 CR3d at 208]

1) [6:513.7] Presumption favoring senior lienholders: Allowing traditional merger concepts to prevail when a senior lienholder accepts a deed in lieu of foreclosure would make its title subject to the (former) junior deed of trust … a result clearly at odds with what the senior lienholder and trustor intended. Thus, California courts have long held “when a senior lienholder accepts a deed in lieu of foreclosure the senior lien and title do not merge, so the senior lienholder retains the power to foreclose, and thereby eliminate the junior liens.” [See Decon Group, Inc. v. Prudential Mortg. Capital Co., LLC (2014) 227 CA4th 665, 671, 174 CR3d 205, 208—senior lienholder presumed to have intended no merger when it accepted deed in lieu of foreclosure, rendering its subsequent foreclosure on subject property and elimination of junior mechanic's lien valid; see also Sheldon v. La Brea Materials Co. (1932) 216 C 686, 691-692, 15 P2d 1098, 1100-1101 (applying “no-merger” rule to deeds of trust); Hines v. Ward (1898) 121 C 115, 117, 53 P 427, 428—presumptively, there is no merger if grantee is senior lienholder]

b. [6:514] Nonjudicial trustee's sale: Provided the deed of trust includes appropriate enabling language (see¶ 6:415), upon the borrower's default, the beneficiary can compel the trustee to conduct a private power of sale foreclosure. [Garfinkle v. Sup.Ct. (Wells Fargo Bank) (1978) 21 C3d 268, 277, 146 CR 208, 214—trustee's power to sell upon default “is a right authorized solely by the contract between the lender and the trustor as embodied in the deed of trust”; Bank of America, N.A. v. La Jolla Group II (2005) 129 CA4th 706, 712, 28 CR3d 825, 828—power of sale in trust deed is “creature of contract” that exists only if expressly granted by trustor in security documents]

(1) [6:514.1] Constitutionality: This kind of foreclosure sale does not involve any court proceeding, nor any judicial supervision whatsoever. Although it is subject to statutes restricting and regulating exercise of the power of sale (¶ 6:520 ff.), a nonjudicial foreclosure remedy is a right authorized solely by contract between the lender and trustor (embodied in the deed of trust) and thus is exempt from procedural due process challenge under the federal and state Constitutions. [Garfinkle v. Sup.Ct. (Wells Fargo Bank) (1978) 21 C3d 268, 272, 281-282, 146 CR 208, 210-211, 217—nonjudicial foreclosure involves private (not state) action authorized by contract and thus is immune from 14th Amendment and state constitutional procedural due process requirements; Morris v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2022) 78 CA5th 279, 294,

293 CR3d 417, 440—nonjudicial foreclosure system presupposes adequate, and thus constitutionally valid, presale notice to borrower; see also Lyons v. Santa Barbara County Sheriff's Office (2014) 231 CA4th 1499, 1504, 181 CR3d 186, 190—state's statutory regulation of nonjudicial foreclosures does not convert foreclosing lender's conduct into state action]

(2) [6:514.2] Legislative purpose: The comprehensive statutory scheme governing nonjudicial foreclosures (Civ.C. § 2924 et seq.) has three purposes: "(1) to provide the creditor/beneficiary with a quick, inexpensive and efficient remedy against a defaulting debtor/trustor; (2) to protect the debtor/trustor from wrongful loss of the property; and (3) to ensure that a properly conducted sale is final between the parties and conclusive as to a bona fide purchaser." [Biancalana v. T.D. Service Co. (2013) 56 C4th 807, 814, 156 CR3d 437, 441; Gomes v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. (2011) 192 CA4th 1149, 1154, 121 CR3d 819, 823-824—state's nonjudicial foreclosure provisions are so "exhaustive" appellate courts refuse to read in any additional requirements; Banc of America Leasing & Capital, LLC v. 3 Arch Trustee Services, Inc. (2009) 180 CA4th 1090, 1095-1096, 103 CR3d 397, 399-400—"comprehensive statutory scheme" governing nonjudicial foreclosures delineates trustee's limited role and duties in nonjudicial foreclosure sales]

(3) Pros and cons from lender's perspective

(a) [6:515] Advantages: Nonjudicial foreclosure offers the following advantages for lenders:

1) [6:515.1] Nonadversarial, time-saving/cost-saving final adjudication: A properly conducted trustee's sale does not require judicial oversight and constitutes a final adjudication of the borrower's and lender's rights. [Dreyfuss v. Union Bank of Calif. (2000) 24 C4th 400, 411, 101 CR2d 29, 37; Nguyen v. Calhoun (2003) 105 CA4th 428, 440-441, 129 CR2d 436, 446-447; Garretson v. Post (2007) 156 CA4th 1508, 1516, 68 CR3d 230, 235—nonjudicial foreclosure constitutes "final adjudication" notwithstanding transaction's "private" nature]

Because judicial proceedings are not involved, a trustee's sale is relatively fast, inexpensive and not per se adversarial. Indeed, there is minimal (if any) need for legal counsel (¶ 6:522). [Alliance Mortg. Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 1236, 44 CR2d 352, 358; see also Coker v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2016) 62 C4th 667, 673, 197 CR3d 131, 134—nonjudicial foreclosures are "overwhelmingly preferred by lenders" and far more common than judicial foreclosures; Gomes v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. (2011) 192 CA4th 1149, 1155, 121 CR3d 819, 824—nonjudicial foreclosure is less expensive and concludes more quickly than judicial foreclosure because no court oversight is involved, no appraisal or judicial fair value determination is required and debtor has no postsale redemption rights (¶ 6:515.3)]

2) [6:515.2] Remedy available when judicial foreclosure time-barred: A nonjudicial trustee's sale may be available to enforce a trust deed even though a judicial action to foreclose the deed is time-barred. [See Nicolopulos v. Sup.Ct. (Bourgeois) (2003) 106 CA4th 304, 309-310, 130 CR2d 626, 630, discussed at ¶ 3:299 ff.; compare Robin v. Crowell (2020) 55 CA5th 727, 751, 270 CR3d 25, 42—once judicial foreclosure sale is complete and time for seeking deficiency judgment has lapsed, borrower has no further obligations under trust deed and there can be no subsequent default (senior lienholder could not pursue nonjudicial foreclosure against junior lienholder omitted from prior judicial foreclosure)]

3) [6:515.3] No postsale redemption rights: Generally, there is no right of redemption once the trustee's sale is completed. Indeed, a properly conducted nonjudicial foreclosure sale constitutes a final adjudication of the borrower's and lender's rights. The purchaser ordinarily receives title under the trustee's deed free and clear of any right, title or interest of the trustor (¶ 6:532.1). [Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 1236, 44 CR2d 352, 358; compare Multani v. Witkin & Neal (2013) 215 CA4th 1428, 1445, 155 CR3d 892, 904—homeowner in common interest development has statutory right to redeem within 90 days following nonjudicial foreclosure sale to collect delinquent assessments (¶ 6:532.1a)]

(b) [6:516] Disadvantages: By the same token, two significant considerations may make judicial foreclosure the lender's more desirable remedy:

1) [6:517] Deficiency judgment forfeited: By electing to pursue a trustee's sale, the lender loses the right to recover any "deficiency" judgment against the borrower—i.e., if the property has declined in value and thus is worth less than the secured debt at the time of foreclosure, the lender forfeits any claim against the borrower for the difference (deficiency). [CCP § 580d; see Black Sky Capital, LLC v. Cobb (2019) 7 C5th 156, 158, 246 CR3d 583, 585; Coker

v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2016) 62 C4th 667, 673, 197 CR3d 131, 135; Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 1236, 44 CR2d 352, 358]

a) [6:517.1] Compare—sold-out junior lienholders:CCP § 580d does not bar junior lienholders from suing the obligor directly after the security is extinguished by nonjudicial foreclosure of the senior lien. [Cadlerock Joint Venture, L.P. v. Lobel (2012) 206 CA4th 1531, 1541-1542, 143 CR3d 96, 104-105; Bank of America Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n v. Graves (1996) 51 CA4th 607, 611-613, 59 CR2d 288, 290-292]

CCP § 580a, however, limits a junior lienholder's deficiency judgment to the difference between the fair market value of the property and the debt. [Coker v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2016) 62 C4th 667, 673, 197 CR3d 131, 135]

2) [6:518] All junior encumbrances released: A foreclosure by trustee's sale wipes out all junior encumbrances (see¶ 6:534). (But certain tax liens survive; see¶ 6:529.2, 6:534.1.)

On the other hand, by electing judicial foreclosure, the lender can choose which junior encumbrances it wishes to eliminate through foreclosure and which ones it wants to preserve.

For example, the lender will probably not want to wipe out junior leases which are favorable to the owner. In those instances (absent applicable nondisturbance and attornment agreements, ¶ 6:472), the only way to preserve such leases would be to conduct a judicial foreclosure.

➪ [6:519] PRACTICE POINTER: Where the continued viability of junior encumbrances is important to the lender, or where it appears the property is likely to bring less in foreclosure proceeds than the amount due on the secured obligation, the remedy of judicial foreclosure will almost always be preferable to a trustee's sale.

[6:519.1 - 6:519.4] Reserved.

(4) [6:520] Mechanics of trustee's sale: Despite comprehensive statutory regulation (¶ 6:520.1 ff.), the entire private foreclosure sale process usually can be completed in a relatively short period of time (approximately three months plus three weeks from the time of filing the notice of default; Civ.C. § 2924). [See generally, Kachlon v. Markowitz (2008) 168 CA4th 316, 334-335, 85 CR3d 532, 546 (summarizing nonjudicial foreclosure process); Garretson v. Post (2007) 156 CA4th 1508, 1516, 68 CR3d 230, 235 (same)]

➪ [6:520a] PRACTICE POINTER: The Homeowner Bill of Rights (¶ 6:524.1 ff.), applicable to certain residential real property, imposes specific notice requirements before the lender may proceed with foreclosure and suspends the foreclosure process while a loan modification application is pending. These procedural requisites may result in significant delays to what traditionally has been an expeditious foreclosure process.

(a) [6:520.1] Strictly regulated by statute and deed of trust: Every trustee's sale is subject to compliance with strict statutory requirements (Civ.C. § 2924 et seq.). [Miller v. Cote (1982) 127 CA3d 888, 894, 179 CR 753, 756-757; see also Banc of America Leasing & Capital, LLC v. 3 Arch Trustee Services, Inc. (2009) 180 CA4th 1090, 1097, 103 CR3d 397, 401—trustee's rights and powers strictly limited and defined by statute and parties' contract]

This comprehensive statutory scheme is intended to provide the lender with a “quick, inexpensive and efficient” remedy against a defaulting borrower, to protect the borrower from wrongful loss of the subject property, and to ensure that a properly conducted trustee's sale is final between the parties and conclusive as to a bona fide purchaser (see¶ 6:536 ff.). [Knapp v. Doherty (2004) 123 CA4th 76, 87, 20 CR3d 1, 9]

But the Civ.C. § 2924 provisions establish only minimum standards for conducting nonjudicial foreclosures. [Garfinkle v. Sup.Ct. (Wells Fargo Bank) (1978) 21 C3d 268, 278, 146 CR 208, 215; Homestead Savings v. Darmiento (1991) 230 CA3d 424, 433, 281 CR 367, 372]

Provisions concerning the substance and procedure of a nonjudicial foreclosure sale also commonly are contained in deeds of trust. For example, if a deed of trust imposes certain conditions precedent to exercising the power of sale, a lender's failure to comply with those conditions may be invoked as a defense to foreclosure. [See Pfeifer v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. (2012) 211 CA4th 1250, 1255, 150 CR3d 673, 677—nonjudicial foreclosure proceeding subject to injunction based on lender's failure to first perform HUD servicing requirements incorporated by reference in trust deed]

(b) [6:520.2] Foreclosure procedure privileged: Mailing, publication, delivery and recordation of documents pursuant to the Civ.C. § 2924 procedures are privileged communications. [Civ.C. § 2924(d); Schep v. Capital One, N.A. (2017)

12 CA5th 1331, 1336, 220 CR3d 408, 412—trustees' acts in recording notice of default, notice of sale and trustee's deed upon sale deemed privileged communications; and see ¶ 6:524c, 6:528.1 ff.]

(c) [6:521] Conducted by trustee: A nonjudicial foreclosure sale is conducted by the trustee under the deed of trust's power of sale. [Nguyen v. Calhoun (2003) 105 CA4th 428, 440, 129 CR2d 436, 446]

Alternatively, the trustee's attorney or any duly authorized agent, as “auctioneer for the trustee,” may conduct it. [See Civ.C. § 2924a]

1) [6:521.1] Effect of substitution of trustees: The recording of a substitution of trustee (¶ 6:405 ff.) divests the prior trustee of all powers, duties, authority and title granted to it by the deed of trust. Thereafter, the substituted trustee has the exclusive power to conduct a nonjudicial foreclosure sale. “[T]here simply cannot be at any given time more than one person with the power to conduct a sale under a deed of trust.” [Dimock v. Emerald Properties LLC (2000) 81 CA4th 868, 871, 876, 97 CR2d 255, 257, 259-260; but see also Jones v. First American Title Ins. Co. (2003) 107 CA4th 381, 389-390, 131 CR2d 859, 864-865—reformation validated sale by former trustee whose resubstitution had not been recorded; and¶ 6:405.12]

2) [6:521.2] Exempt from state FDCPA: A trustee performing the statutory acts required to conduct a nonjudicial foreclosure pursuant to Civ.C. § 2924 et seq. is expressly exempt from the limitations of the Rosenthal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (Civ.C. § 1788 et seq.). [Civ.C. § 2924(b)]

A loan servicer's conduct in connection with a nonjudicial foreclosure, however, can fall within the ambit of the Rosenthal Act if the loan servicer does not comply with the above statutorily prescribed procedures. [Best v. Ocwen Loan Servicing, LLC (2021) 64 CA5th 568, _, 279 CR3d 69, 77 (acknowledging debt collection activities “beyond the scope of the ordinary foreclosure process” can violate Rosenthal Act)—lender and loan servicer could be liable under Rosenthal Act for alleged unethical mismanagement of loan escrow account and refusal to correct accounting errors; compare Davidson v. Seterus, Inc. (2018) 21 CA5th 283, 299-300, 230 CR3d 441, 451-452 (distinguishing between foreclosing trustees who are expressly exempt from state FDCPA and loan servicers who could be liable for violating said Act)]

3) [6:521.3] Exempt from federal FDCPA: A trustee conducting nonjudicial foreclosure proceedings is not a debt collector under the federal FDCPA (15 USC § 1692 et seq.). Thus, they are exempt from “the lion's share” of its prohibitions. “[T]he debt-collector-related prohibitions of the FDCPA (with the exception of 15 USC § 1692f(6)) do not apply to those who … are engaged in no more than security-interest enforcement.” [Obduskey v. McCarthy & Holthus LLP (2019) _ US _, _, _, 139 S.Ct. 1029, 1037, 1040 (parentheses and emphasis in original) (resolving split of authority among Circuits); see also Vien-Phuong Thi Ho v. ReconTrust Co., N.A. (9th Cir. 2016) 858 F3d 568, 574, fn. 7 (trustee exempt even though trustee's notice of sale stated it was “debt collector attempting to collect a debt”); Schlegel v. Wells Fargo Bank, NA (9th Cir. 2013) 720 F3d 1204, 1206 (mortgagee/assignee exempt); In re Nordeen (9th Cir. BAP 2013) 495 BR 468, 488-489 (trustee and mortgage servicer exempt)]

Comment: As noted in Obduskey, supra, the federal FDCPA contains limited restrictions on entities whose principal purpose is enforcing security interests (e.g., a foreclosing trustee). [See 15 USC §§ 1692a(6) (definitions), 1692f(6) (proscribing certain collection practices by those seeking to enforce security interests); Vien-Phuong Thi Ho v. ReconTrust Co., N.A., supra, 858 F3d at 574, fn. 6]

Cross-refer: For a detailed treatment of the state and federal FDCPAs, see Ahart, Cal. Prac. Guide: Enforcing Judgments & Debts (TRG), Ch. 2.

(d) [6:522] Attorney involvement: Attorneys are neither legally nor ethically barred from acting as trustees under deeds of trust and conducting nonjudicial foreclosure sales. In practice, however, lender's counsel generally plays no role in a nonjudicial foreclosure other than monitoring the trustee's prosecution of the foreclosure.

➪ [6:523] PRACTICE POINTER—LENDER'S COUNSEL AS TRUSTEE*: It is a risky practice for attorneys to act as trustees in foreclosure proceedings because the process is fraught with potential liability (e.g., a mistake in the foreclosure steps—such as failing to properly notify all junior encumbrancers—can subject the attorney acting as trustee to liability for wrongful foreclosure, negligence and perhaps other causes of action).

Also, because a trustee is considered an agent of both the beneficiary and trustor (¶ 6:343), an attorney who acts as the trustee might be in a conflict of interest position.

In any event, counsel are best advised to defer to the expertise of an institutional trustee (such as a title insurance company or other entity specializing in trustee foreclosure sales), who can conduct a trustee's sale more efficiently and less expensively than an attorney.

(e) [6:524] Recordation of "notice of default"; exceptions: A nonjudicial foreclosure is commenced by the "trustee, mortgagee, or beneficiary, or any of their authorized agents" recording a "notice of default" in the office of the county recorder for each county where the secured real property (or any part thereof) is located. [Civ.C. § 2924(a)(1)—power of sale may not be exercised until notice of default is recorded; see also Knapp v. Doherty (2004) 123 CA4th 76, 99, 20 CR3d 1, 18—"One of the signal purposes of the notice of default is to advise the trustor of the amount required to cure the default"]

Narrow exceptions to the notice of default procedure include mortgages or transfers made pursuant to an order, judgment or decree of a court of record. [See Civ.C. § 2924(a); Lyons v. Santa Barbara County Sheriff's Office (2014) 231 CA4th 1499, 1505, 181 CR3d 186, 190—exceptions include equitable mortgages or mortgages without a power of sale, which can only be foreclosed by judicial action]

1) [6:524a] Entities entitled to record notice of default: Besides the trustee, mortgagee, beneficiary or any of their authorized agents (¶ 6:524), other entities entitled to record notices of default include those designated in an executed substitution of trustee (¶ 6:405 ff.) or their agents. This is so even if the substitution of trustee is not recorded. [Civ.C. § 2924b(b)(4); see also Civ.C. § 2934a(d)(1)—trustee named in recorded substitution of trustee is authorized to act as trustee from date substitution is executed; In re Turner (9th Cir. 2017) 859 F3d 1145, 1150 (applying Calif. Law)—successor trustee authorized to initiate foreclosure proceedings by executing and recording notice of default even though substitution of trustee was recorded after notice of default issued; In re Cedano (9th Cir. BAP 2012) 470 BR 522, 532 (applying Calif. law)—substitute trustee appointed by lender's nominee (MERS) entitled to initiate foreclosure proceedings by filing notice of default even though executed substitution of trustee not recorded; Rossberg v. Bank of America, N.A. (2013) 219 CA4th 1481, 1495, 162 CR3d 525, 536-537—successor trustee authorized to record notice of default before substitution of trustee notarized or recorded]

The only entities entitled to initiate the foreclosure process are (a) the holder of the beneficial interest under a mortgage/trust deed or its designated agent; and (b) the original or substituted trustee under a trust deed. In addition, the holder's designated agent and the original or substituted trustee may only commence the foreclosure process when acting within the scope of the authority designated by the holder of the beneficial interest. [Civ.C. § 2924(a)(6); see also Yvanova v. New Century Mortg. Corp. (2016) 62 C4th 919, 927-928, 199 CR3d 66, 72-73]

a) [6:524b] Interest in promissory note unnecessary: The party initiating foreclosure proceedings is not required to have a beneficial or economic interest in, or possession of, the underlying promissory note. [See In re Cedano (9th Cir. BAP 2012) 470 BR 522, 530 (applying Calif. law); Kalnoki v. First American Trustee Servicing Solutions, LLC (2017) 8 CA5th 23, 42, 214 CR3d 292, 306; Orcilla v. Big Sur, Inc. (2016) 244 CA4th 982, 1004, 198 CR3d 715, 733; see also ¶ 6:524h re authority of lender's nominee]

2) [6:524c] Mailing, publication and delivery: Mailing, publication and delivery of the notice of default pursuant to Civ.C. § 2924 constitutes a privileged publication under Civ.C. § 47. [Civ.C. § 2924(d)(1)] However, courts disagree whether the privilege is absolute or qualified (see¶ 6:528.2).

3) [6:524d] Prerecordation review of "competent and reliable evidence": Under the Homeowner Bill of Rights (¶ 6:524.1 ff.), mortgage servicers must, prior to recording a notice of default, review "competent and reliable evidence" to substantiate the borrower's default and the right to foreclose, and must ensure that the recorded document is accurate, complete and supported by reliable evidence. [Civ.C. § 2924.17(a), (b)]

This prerecordation requirement also applies to any other foreclosure-related documents filed by mortgage servicers, including:

— declarations required under Civ.C. § 2923.5 (¶ 6:524.4) and Civ.C. § 2923.55 (¶ 6:524.10);

— notices of sale;

— trust deed assignments;

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

— trustee substitutions;

— any declaration/affidavit filed in any court relative to foreclosure proceedings. [See Civ.C. § 2924.17(a); compare Billesbach v. Specialized Loan Servicing LLC (2021) 63 CA5th 830, 846-847, 278 CR3d 213, 222-223—default notice erroneously stating loan servicer met HBOR's foreclosure prevention requirements not void and did not need to be re-recorded after loan servicer remedied violations]

Mortgage servicers who repeatedly violate Civ.C. § 2924.17 are liable for civil penalties up to $7,500 per mortgage or trust deed in proceedings brought by their licensing agency. [Civ.C. § 2924.17(c); see also Saterbak v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2016) 245 CA4th 808, 818, 199 CR3d 790, 798—§ 2924.17 does not apply retroactively or confer standing on borrower to challenge allegedly ineffective deed of trust assignment (¶ 6:524e, 6:535.15d)]

[6:524e - 6:524g] Reserved.

4) [6:524h] Authority of lender's (beneficiary's) nominee to initiate foreclosure proceedings may not be challenged: The authority of the lender's (beneficiary's) nominee to initiate nonjudicial foreclosure proceedings is beyond judicial challenge notwithstanding the fact the nominee merely holds legal title to the subject property and is not the owner of the underlying promissory note. [See Gomes v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. (2011) 192 CA4th 1149, 1154, 121 CR3d 819, 823; see also Saterbak v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2016) 245 CA4th 808, 814, 199 CR3d 790, 795—borrower lacked standing to bring preemptive action to forestall foreclosure]

"[N]owhere does [Civ.C. § 2924(a)] provide for a judicial action to determine whether the person initiating the foreclosure process is indeed authorized, and we see no ground for implying such an action … The recognition of the right to bring a lawsuit to determine a nominee's authorization to proceed with foreclosure on behalf of the noteholder would fundamentally undermine the nonjudicial nature of the process and introduce the possibility of lawsuits filed solely for the purpose of delaying valid foreclosures." [Gomes v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., supra, 192 CA4th at 1155, 121 CR3d at 824 (underscoring debtor's attempt, absent any legal authority, to interject courts into comprehensive nonjudicial scheme); Perez v. Mortgage Electronic Registration Systems, Inc. (9th Cir. 2020) 959 F3d 334, 340 (applying Calif. law)—borrower may not bring preemptive action to challenge party's authority to pursue foreclosure before foreclosure has taken place; In re Cedano (9th Cir. BAP 2012) 470 BR 522, 531 (applying Calif. law)—Civ.C. § 2924 does not provide for judicial action when issue is "not whether the wrong entity initiated foreclosure but whether the entity was merely authorized to do so by the owner of the note"]

a) [6:524i] Compare—*postforeclosure actions: While a borrower may not be able to bring a preemptive action assailing the right of the beneficiary's nominee to foreclose (¶ 6:524h), the borrower does have standing to sue for wrongful foreclosure after the trustee's sale if the purported assignment of the note and deed of trust bore defects rendering the assignment void. [See Yvanova v. New Century Mortg. Corp. (2016) 62 C4th 919, 923-924, 199 CR3d 66, 69-70 (¶ 6:535.15 ff.)]

5) [6:524.1] Requirements for certain residential loans; "owner-occupied" property: The Homeowners Bill of Rights (HBOR) affords homeowners certain safeguards for "owner-occupied" residential real property containing no more than four dwellings that secures a first lien mortgage or deed of trust. [See Sheen v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2022) 12 C5th 905, 921, 290 CR3d 834, 841-842 (finding HBOR "by its plain terms" applies only to first lien mortgages) —HBOR did not impose statutory duty of care on beneficiary of second and third lien mortgages (¶ 6:539.16)]

The borrower does not have to own the property for it to be "owner-occupied." [See Civ.C. § 2924.15—"owner-occupied" means property that is "the principal residence of the borrower and is security for a loan made for personal, family or household purposes"; Adams v. Bank of America, N.A. (2020) 51 CA5th 666, 672-673, 265 CR3d 415, 419-420]

CAUTION—HBOR's different forms: As previously stated (¶ 6:511.7), HBOR has existed in three different forms since its enactment in 2012 (below):

• Effective 1/1/13, the initial HBOR consisted of two identical bills (A.B. 278 and S.B. 900) that established a bifurcated system depending on the volume of residential foreclosures the lender or servicer conducted. The majority of the provisions applicable to large volume foreclosure lenders and servicers (more than 175 foreclosures in the prior reporting year) had a 1/1/18 "sunset" date. [2012 Stats., Chs. 86 (A.B. 278) & 87 (S.B. 900); see also¶ 6:524.21 ff.]

• Effective 1/1/19, the Legislature reenacted the lapsed 2012 HBOR provisions in nearly identical form, but without the "sunset" provisions (see 2018 Stats., Ch. 404 (the "2019" HBOR)). This legislation repealed A.B. 278's unexpired duplicate sections and made the following two notable changes:

— If the borrower requests in writing that the servicer cease communication pertaining to the borrower's loan account, the servicer has satisfied the preforeclosure "contact" requirement (see Civ.C. § 2923.5(e)(2)(C)(ii), applicable to low volume foreclosure lenders and servicers, ¶ 6:524.3; Civ.C. § 2923.55(f)(2)(C)(ii), applicable to large volume foreclosure lenders and servicers, ¶ 6:524.9).

— The borrower's ability to suspend the foreclosure process by submitting a complete application for a first lien loan modification offered by the lender ends five business days before the scheduled foreclosure sale (see Civ.C. § 2923.6(c), applicable to large volume foreclosure lender's and servicers, ¶ 6:524.16); Civ.C. § 2924.18(a)(1) (applicable to low volume foreclosure lenders and servicers, ¶ 6:524.6).

a) [6:524.1a] Temporary extension of HBOR safeguards to rental property due to COVID-19 pandemic: For the period from August 31, 2020 until January 1, 2023, HBOR's protections also extended to rental property securing a first lien mortgage or deed of trust that was:

• Owned by a small landlord (i.e, one or more individuals who own no more than three residential properties);

• Occupied as a principal residence by a tenant pursuant to an arm's length lease entered into before, and in effect on, March 4, 2020; and

• Occupied by a tenant who was unable to pay rent due to a reduction in income resulting from COVID-19. [See former Civ.C. § 2924.15(a)(2)(A), (B); Civ.C. § 2924.15(a)(2)(A)(ii) (defining "arm's length transaction" as "a lease entered into in good faith and for valuable consideration that reflects the fair market value in the open market between informed and willing parties")]

HBOR's protections were only available for tenant-occupied properties for so long as the property remained occupied by a tenant pursuant to a lease entered in an arm's length transaction. [See former Civ.C. § 2924.15(a)(2)(C)]

Caution—1/1/23 "sunset" date; exception: The inclusion of rental properties under the HBOR umbrella due to the COVID-19 pandemic ended on January 1, 2023. However, borrowers who made sufficient progress on a foreclosure prevention alternative by January 1, 2023, remain eligible for relief after that date. [See Civ.C. § 2924.15]

To qualify for this "grandfather" provision, a first lien mortgage or deed of trust must satisfy one of the following conditions (Civ.C. § 2924.15(a)(2)(C)):

— borrower received written approval for a loan modification before January 1, 2021; or — borrower submitted a completed application for a loan modification before January 1, 2023, but as of that date servicer had not determined borrower's eligibility or appeal period for servicer's denial had not expired.

Otherwise, on or after January 1, 2023, HBOR once again embraces only "owner-occupied" residential real property (¶ 6:524.1). [Civ.C. § 2924.15]

b) [6:524.2] Affected entities: The HBOR foreclosure avoidance measures apply not only to mortgagees, trustees, beneficiaries, and their authorized agents, but also extend to "mortgage servicers" (e.g., persons/entities who directly service loans or are responsible for interacting with borrowers, managing loan accounts daily, managing escrow accounts or enforcing notes/security instruments, either as current owners or their agents). [See Civ.C. § 2920.5(a)—trustees and their authorized agents acting under trust deed's power of sale are not "mortgage servicers"]

From January 1, 2013 until January 1, 2018, HBOR distinguished—and commencing January 1, 2019 it continues to distinguish—between entities having an annual foreclosure volume of 175 residential properties or fewer (¶ 6:524.3 ff.), and entities that handled a higher volume of residential foreclosures, with more stringent requirements imposed upon the latter (¶ 6:524.9 ff.). Entities subject to the low volume foreclosure duties included any depository institution chartered under state or federal law, or any person licensed under Fin.C. §§ 22000 et seq. (consumer and commercial finance lenders and brokers) and 50000 et seq. (residential mortgage lenders), or under Bus. & Prof.C. § 10000 et seq. (real estate professionals), that during the previous annual reporting period foreclosed on 175 or fewer California residential real properties containing no more than four dwelling units. [Civ.C. § 2924.18(b)]

From January 1, 2018 until January 1, 2019, the requisite foreclosure avoidance steps for all lenders and servicers tracked the pre-1/1/18 procedures applicable to low-volume foreclosures (see ¶ 6:524.21 ff.).

Compare—title companies: Unless acting as trustees, licensed or underwritten title companies are exempt from liability under the HBOR foreclosure avoidance requirements. [See Civ.C. § 2924.26]

c) Low volume foreclosures (175 or fewer annually) from January 1, 2013 until January 1, 2018, and as of January 1, 2019 (see ¶ 6:524.1)

1/ [6:524.3] "Contact" requirement: Mortgage servicers, mortgagees, trustees, beneficiaries and their authorized agents may not record a notice of default until (i) 30 days after the mortgage servicer makes or attempts with due diligence (as defined) to make initial contact, as statutorily specified, with the borrower to assess the borrower's financial situation and explore options to avoid foreclosure; and (ii) if the borrower has submitted a complete (as defined) first lien loan modification application that is pending, the mortgage servicer complies with Civ.C. § 2924.18(a)(1) (Civ.C. § 2924.11(a) for calendar year 2018). [See Civ.C. §§ 2923.5(a)(1) & 2924.18—notice of default may not be recorded until borrower is provided with written determination regarding eligibility for requested modification]

During the initial contact, the borrower must be advised of their right to request a subsequent meeting and, if requested, the servicer must schedule the meeting within 14 days. [See Civ.C. § 2923.5(a)(2)—servicer may make initial contact in person or by phone, and must provide borrower with HUD's toll-free telephone number for purpose of finding HUD-certified housing counseling agency; see also Mabry v. Sup.Ct. (Aurora Loan Services) (2010) 185 CA4th 208, 214, 110 CR3d 201, 204 (decided under predecessor statute)]

Whether a lender has complied with the contact requirement is a question of fact. [Skov v. U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n (2012) 207 CA4th 690, 694-697, 143 CR3d 694, 697-699 (decided under predecessor statute)—unlawful business practices cause of action alleging lender's failure to explore options for avoiding foreclosure sufficiently pled Civ.C. § 2923.5 violations to withstand demurrer; compare Rossberg v. Bank of America, N.A. (2013) 219 CA4th 1481, 1494, 162 CR3d 525, 536 (decided under predecessor statute)—cause of action against lender for failing to comply with contact requirement properly dismissed where borrowers alleged no contact occurred "in the 30-days leading up to" recordation (statute requires contact occur more than 30 days before recordation)]

The borrower's only remedy for violation of the "contact" requirement is postponement of the foreclosure sale. [In re Turner (9th Cir. 2017) 859 F3d 1145, 1150 (applying Calif. law)—no remedy available to borrowers after foreclosure sale has occurred; Lueras v. BAC Home Loans Servicing, LP (2013) 221 CA4th 49, 77, 163 CR3d 804, 828 (decided under predecessor statute)—cause of action against lender and trustee for failure to initiate foreclosure alternatives properly dismissed where borrower did not seek postponement of sale and alleged sale already occurred (§ 2923.5 's only remedy is "one-time" postponement of foreclosure sale); see also Stebley v. Litton Loan Servicing, LLP (2011) 202 CA4th 522, 526, 134 CR3d 604, 607 (decided under predecessor statute)—wrongful foreclosure claim seeking damages and other relief based on defendants' alleged failure to fully explore alternatives before abruptly foreclosing properly dismissed (§ 2923.5 's sole remedy is "more time" before foreclosure occurs; it does not provide relief once sale takes place; but see¶ 6:524.8 re post-2012 law)]

2/ [6:524.4] Mandatory declaration: Every notice of default must include a declaration that the mortgage servicer has contacted or tried with due diligence (as defined) to contact the borrower, or that contact was not required because the individual did not meet the statutory definition of "borrower" (below). [Civ.C. § 2923.5(b); see also Mabry v. Sup.Ct. (Aurora Loan Services) (2010) 185 CA4th 208, 232-235, 110 CR3d 201, 219-221 (decided under predecessor statute)—declaration need not be made under penalty of perjury and is sufficient if it simply tracks statutory language (stating precisely which of three categories applies is unnecessary); In re Cedano (9th Cir. BAP 2012) 470 BR 522, 533 (same)]

"Borrowers" entitled to statutory protection are defined as natural persons, potentially eligible for foreclosure prevention programs, who (i) have not surrendered their property in writing or by delivery of keys, (ii) have not contracted with entities whose business is extending the foreclosure process and avoiding contractual obligations; or (iii) have an active Chapter 7, 11, 12 or 13 bankruptcy case. [Civ.C. § 2920.5(c); see also Morris v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2022) 78 CA5th 279, 298-299, 293 CR3d 417, 443-444—borrower entitled to claim HBOR relief where alleged violation occurred before bankruptcy and remained unremedied at time of foreclosure, following bankruptcy's termination]

3/ [6:524.5] Borrower's advisor: A borrower may designate, with consent given in writing, a HUD-certified housing counseling agency, attorney or other advisor to discuss with the mortgage servicer the borrower's financial situation and options for avoiding foreclosure. [Civ.C. § 2923.5(d)]

4/ [6:524.6] Suspension of foreclosure process while loan modification application pending: Once the borrower submits a complete application for a first lien loan modification offered by or through the borrower's mortgage servicer, a mortgage servicer, trustee, mortgagee, beneficiary or authorized agent must suspend the foreclosure process until the servicer provides the borrower with a written determination whether the modification is approved. [See Civ.C. §§ 2923.5(a)(1)(B), 2924.18(a)(1), (d)]

Caution: Commencing January 1, 2019, borrowers must submit complete applications for a first lien loan modification at least five business days before a scheduled trustee's sale in order to suspend the foreclosure process. [Civ.C. § 2924.18(a)(1)]

5/ [6:524.7] Suspension of foreclosure process when foreclosure alternative approved: If a written foreclosure prevention alternative is approved, a mortgage servicer, trustee, beneficiary or authorized agent may not record a notice of default provided (i) the borrower is in compliance with the terms of the modification, forbearance or repayment plan; or (ii) all parties to the foreclosure prevention alternative have approved it in writing and the mortgage servicer has received proof of funds. [See Civ.C. § 2924.18(a)(2), (e)—subsequent mortgage servicer must honor previously approved first lien loan modification or other foreclosure prevention alternative]

6/ [6:524.8] Private right of action/remedies: Borrowers enjoy a private right of action to enforce compliance with Civ.C. §§ 2923.5 ("contact" requirement), 2924.17 ("competent and reliable" evidence requirement) and 2924.18 (foreclosure suspension pending loan modification requirement). [Civ.C. § 2924.19; see also Lucioni v. Bank of America, N.A. (2016) 3 CA5th 150, 155, 207 CR3d 418, 419—Civ.C. § 2924.19(a)(1) injunctive relief unavailable for violations of Civ.C. § 2924(a)(6), which requires entity initiating foreclosure be legally entitled to do so; Intengan v. BAC Home Loans Servicing LP (2013) 214 CA4th 1047, 1054, 154 CR3d 727, 732—borrower entitled to maintain private action without first tendering full amount of mortgage indebtedness where beneficiary's agent allegedly failed to comply with § 2923.5 "contact" requirement; Mabry v. Sup.Ct. (Aurora Loan Services) (2010) 185 CA4th 208, 225, 110 CR3d 201, 213 (decided under predecessor statute)—§ 2923.5 "contact" requirement may be enforced by private right of action that is not dependent on borrower first tendering full amount of mortgage indebtedness]

The servicer, mortgagee, beneficiary or agent, however, is not liable for a violation that they or a third party acting on their behalf corrected and remedied before the trustee's deed upon sale was recorded. [See Civ.C. § 2924.19(c)]

There is no liability for a violation unless it is material and results in actual economic damages to the borrower. [Civ.C. § 2924.19(a)(1), (b); see also Morris v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A.(2022) 78 CA5th 279, 303-304, 293 CR3d 417, 448-449 (analyzing Civ.C. § 2924.12(b)'s similar language applicable to high volume foreclosures) (¶ 6:524.20)]

Significant departure from pre-2013 law: HBOR permits borrowers to sue mortgage servicers, mortgagees, beneficiaries or their authorized agents for damages after the trustee's sale deed has been recorded. [See Civ.C. § 2924.19(b)—court may award actual damages where material violation not corrected prior to recordation of sale deed; greater of treble damages or $50,000 available if material violation was intentional, reckless or resulted from willful misconduct]

Compare: Pre-2013 case law interpreted the remedial provisions of the predecessor statute more restrictively. [See Mabry v. Sup.Ct. (Aurora Loan Services) (2010) 185 CA4th 208, 226, 231, 110 CR3d 201, 213, 218 (decided under predecessor statute)—private right of action relief limited to postponing impending foreclosure; Skov v. U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n (2012) 207 CA4th 690, 699-702, 143 CR3d 694, 701-703 (decided under predecessor statute) (finding Mabry analysis both "persuasive" and "convincing"); see also In re Cedano (9th Cir. BAP 2012) 470 BR 522, 533 (applying pre-2013 Calif. law)—even when debtor sufficiently establishes claim for violation of § 2923.5, sole remedy is postponement of impending foreclosure; Hamilton v. Greenwich Investors XXVI, LLC (2011) 195 CA4th 1602, 1616-1617, 126 CR3d 174, 185-186 (same)]

d) High volume foreclosures (over 175 annually) from January 1, 2013 until January 1, 2018, and as of January 1, 2019 (see ¶ 6:524.1)

1/ [6:524.9] "Contact" requirement: In addition to all the restrictions placed on entities that conduct low volume foreclosures (see¶ 6:524.3 ff.), a mortgage servicer, mortgagee, trustee, beneficiary or authorized agent conducting high volume foreclosures may not record a notice of default until the borrower is informed in writing that (i) if they are a servicemember (or the servicemember's dependent), they may be entitled to certain protections under the Servicemembers Civil Relief Act; and (ii) they may obtain copies of the note, trust deed and any assignment, if applicable, and their payment history, as specified. [See Civ.C. § 2923.55]

A lender fulfills the above "contact" requirement if it can show that the required contacts occurred and covered the items specified in the statute. The lender need not be the party who initiated the contacts. [Schmidt v. Citibank, N.A. (2019) 28 CA5th 1109, 1122, 239 CR3d 648, 658]

2/ [6:524.10] Mandatory declaration: As with "low volume" foreclosures (¶ 6:524.4), every notice of default must include a declaration that the mortgage servicer has contacted or tried with due diligence (as defined) to contact the borrower, or that contact was not required because the individual did not meet the statutory definition of "borrower." [Civ.C. § 2923.55(c); see also Civ.C. § 2920.5(c) (defining borrowers entitled to statutory protection); Mabry v. Sup.Ct. (Aurora Loan Services) (2010) 185 CA4th 208, 232-235, 110 CR3d 201, 219-221 (decided under predecessor statute)—declaration need not be made under penalty of perjury and is sufficient if it simply tracks statutory language (stating precisely which of three categories applies is unnecessary); In re Cedano (9th Cir. BAP 2012) 470 BR 522, 533 (same)]

3/ [6:524.11] Disclosures after notice of default recordation: Within five business days after recording a notice of default, high volume mortgage servicers offering foreclosure prevention alternatives must inform borrowers in writing of the availability and process for requesting such alternatives, as specified. (Mortgage servicers need not provide this information if a borrower previously exhausted the loan modification process.) [See Civ.C. § 2924.9]

4/ [6:524.12] Borrower's advisor: As with low volume foreclosures (¶ 6:524.5), borrowers may designate, with consent given in writing, a HUD-certified housing counseling agency, attorney or other advisor to discuss with the lender the borrower's financial situation and options for avoiding foreclosure. [Civ.C. § 2923.55(e)]

5/ [6:524.13] Single point of contact: If requested, the mortgage servicer must promptly provide a borrower who has requested a foreclosure alternative with a single point of contact (SPOC) to assist the borrower in navigating the servicer's procedures, as specified. [See Morris v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2022) 78 CA5th 279, 296, 293 CR3d 417, 442—SPOC requirement applies only to "mortgage servicer," not mortgagee, trustee, beneficiary or authorized agent; Gillies v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2017) 7 CA5th 907, 912, 213 CR3d 210, 214-215 & fn. 3 (dictum)—lender complied with SPOC requirement by assigning customer service representative to process loan modification application even though borrower ignored lender's direction to send all communications to its counsel]

The borrower need not specifically request a SPOC. A general request for a foreclosure prevention alternative is sufficient to trigger the servicer's obligation to provide one. [Morris v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A., supra, 78 CA5th at 301-302, 293 CR3d at 446-447 (concluding statutory language in effect until 2019, requiring assignment of SPOC "[u]pon request from a borrower," indicated only timing of required appointment)]

Among other things, the SPOC must remain assigned to the borrower until all loss mitigation options are exhausted or the borrower's account is current. [See Civ.C. § 2923.7; Jolley v. Chase Home Finance, LLC (2013) 213 CA4th 872, 905, 153 CR3d 546, 573—SPOC requirement helps prevent borrowers from being "given the run-around, being told one thing by one bank employee while something entirely different is being pursued by another"]

6/ [6:524.14] Acknowledgment of receipt of first lien modification application and related documents: Within five business days, a mortgage servicer must provide written acknowledgment of receipt of a complete first lien modification application or any documents submitted by the borrower in support of the application. In its initial acknowledgment of the modification application, the mortgage servicer must include a description of the loan modification process, timing and any deficiencies in the application. [Civ.C. § 2924.10(a)]

7/ [6:524.15] Prohibited fees: Mortgage servicers may not charge borrowers any application, processing or other fee for a first lien loan modification or other foreclosure prevention alternative. [Civ.C. § 2924.11(e)]

Late fees also are prohibited for periods during which the borrower's complete first lien loan modification is under consideration or on appeal, while the borrower is making timely modification payments or while a foreclosure prevention alternative is being evaluated or exercised. [Civ.C. § 2924.11(f)]

8/ [6:524.16] Suspension of foreclosure process while loan modification application is pending (no "dual tracking"): Once a borrower has submitted a complete first lien loan modification application by or through the borrower's mortgage servicer, a mortgage servicer, mortgagee, trustee, beneficiary or authorized agent may not advance the foreclosure process while the application is pending. [Civ.C. § 2923.6(c); see also Jolley v. Chase Home Finance, LLC (2013) 213 CA4th 872, 904, 153 CR3d 546, 572 (noting mortgage lenders refer to prohibited practice as "dual tracking" while homeowners struggling to avoid foreclosure know it as "the double cross")]

If the borrower receives a verbal notice denying the loan modification application, or the notice of denial fails to include required information, the borrower's request for a loan modification is considered still pending for HBOR purposes. [See Morris v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2022) 78 CA5th 279, 310-312, 293 CR3d 417, 454-455—borrower who alleged servicer completed foreclosure sale without providing her with written denial of her timely, complete loan modification request stated claim for material violation of Civ.C. § 2923.6; see also Valbuena v. Ocwen Loan Servicing, LLC (2015) 237 CA4th 1267, 1273-1275, 188 CR3d 668, 672-674 (failure to tender loan balance did not defeat § 2923.6 claim)—by alleging submission of loan modification application three days after receipt of Offer Letter, and transmittal of additional documents requested by lender on date of request, borrowers sufficiently pled complete loan modification application was pending when lender foreclosed on their home in violation of § 2923.6]

Moreover, lenders may not record a notice of default (or notice of sale) and may not conduct a trustee's sale until (i) the mortgage servicer makes a written determination that the borrower is not eligible for a first lien modification and the 30-day appeal period has expired (¶ 6:524.18); (ii) the borrower does not accept a modification offered by the lender within 14 days of the offer; or (iii) the borrower accepts the modification but breaches their obligations thereunder. [Civ.C. § 2923.6(c); compare Billesbach v. Specialized Loan Servicing LLC (2021) 63 CA5th 830, 849-851, 278 CR3d 213, 225-226—mortgage servicer did not violate dual-tracking prohibition by foreclosing after homeowner failed to accept servicer's offer of trial-period modification plan before stated expiration date; Gillies v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2017) 7 CA5th 907, 912, 213 CR3d 210, 214-215 & fn. 3 (dictum)—lender's resumption of sale process four months after sending modification offer did not violate dual tracking prohibition where borrower requested additional time to review offer but never accepted same]

9/ [6:524.17] Suspension of foreclosure process when foreclosure alternative approved; rescission of notice of default: If a foreclosure prevention alternative is approved in writing, a mortgage servicer, mortgagee, trustee, beneficiary or other authorized agent may not proceed with foreclosure provided (i) the borrower is in compliance with the modification terms, forbearance or repayment plan; or (ii) all parties to the foreclosure prevention alternative approved it in writing and the mortgage servicer received proof of funds. [See Civ.C. § 2924.11(a), (b), (g)—subsequent mortgage servicer must honor previously approved first lien loan modification or other foreclosure prevention alternative]

Once the borrower executes a permanent foreclosure prevention alternative, the mortgagee, beneficiary or authorized agent must record a rescission of the notice of default or cancel the trustee's sale, if applicable. In the case of a short sale, the cancellation of the pending trustee's sale must occur when all parties approve the short sale and the beneficiary, mortgagee or authorized agent receive proof of funds or financing. [See Civ.C. § 2924.11(d)]

10/ [6:524.18] Denial of modification; right to appeal: Lenders must send written notice when they deny a borrower's application for a first lien loan modification. The notice must, among other things, identify the reasons for the denial, the amount of time the borrower has to appeal and any other available foreclosure prevention alternatives. [See Civ.C. § 2923.6(f)]

The borrower has "at least" 30 days from the date of the written denial to appeal and provide evidence that the mortgage servicer's determination was in error. If the borrower does not appeal within 30 days after written notice of the denial, the servicer may proceed with the foreclosure on the 31st day. [Civ.C. § 2923.6(d)-(f); Berman v. HSBC Bank USA, N.A. (2017) 11 CA5th 465, 473, 217 CR3d 674, 680—denial letter purporting to give borrower only 15 days to appeal deemed material violation supporting injunctive relief]

If the borrower timely appeals, however, the mortgage servicer may not proceed with foreclosure until the later of (i) 15 days after the appeal is denied; (ii) 14 days after the borrower declines a modification offered following the appeal; or (iii) if the lender offers a modification after the appeal and the borrower accepts, the date on which the borrower fails to timely submit the first payment or otherwise breaches the offer's terms. [See Civ.C. § 2923.6(e)(2)]

11/ [6:524.19] Protection against multiple applications (dilatory tactics): To protect lenders against borrowers who submit multiple first lien loan applications for the purpose of delay, HBOR excuses servicers from evaluating applications from borrowers who have already been evaluated or were afforded a fair opportunity to be evaluated prior to January 1, 2013, or who have been evaluated or afforded a fair opportunity to be evaluated consistent with the statute's requirements. [See Civ.C. § 2923.6(g)]

Compare: The above exceptions do not apply if the borrower provides the servicer with documentation evidencing a "material change" in the borrower's financial circumstances since the previous application. [Civ.C. § 2923.6(g)]

12/ [6:524.20] Private right of action/remedies: As with low volume foreclosures (¶ 6:524.8), borrowers enjoy a private right of action. Thus, borrowers may seek to enforce compliance with Civ.C. §§ 2923.55 ("contact" requirement), 2923.6 (foreclosure suspension requirement), 2923.7 (single point of contact requirement), 2924.9 (disclosure requirements after recording notice of default), 2924.10 (notice and disclosure requirements after borrower submits modification application), 2924.11 (foreclosure suspension requirement after written approval of foreclosure prevention alternative), or 2924.17 ("competent and reliable" evidence requirement). [Civ.C. § 2924.12(a); see also Lucioni v. Bank of America, N.A. (2016) 3 CA5th 150, 155, 207 CR3d 418, 419—Civ.C. § 2924.12(a)(1) injunctive relief unavailable for violations of Civ.C. § 2924(a)(6), which requires entity initiating foreclosure be legally entitled to do so]

The servicer, mortgagee, beneficiary or agent is not liable for a violation they or a third party working on their behalf corrected and remedied before the trustee's deed upon sale was recorded. This "safe harbor" shields the lender and its agent from liability for mere technical violations that do not (i) affect the borrower's loan obligations, (ii) disrupt the loan modification process, or (iii) otherwise harm the borrower's efforts to avoid foreclosure. [See Civ.C. § 2924.12(c); Billesbach v. Specialized Loan Servicing LLC (2021) 63 CA5th 830, 836, 845-846, 278 CR3d 213, 215, 221-222—borrower could not sue loan servicer for failing to comply with

HBOR's single point of contact (¶ 6:524.13), pre-default notice contact (¶ 6:524.3) and compliance declaration (¶ 6:524d) requirements because servicer corrected those defects prior to foreclosure]

Following foreclosure, the borrower may sue the mortgage servicer, mortgagee, trustee, beneficiary or authorized agent to recover actual economic damages resulting from a material violation of the HBOR. [Civ.C. § 2924.12(b); see Morris v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2022) 78 CA5th 279, 303-305, 293 CR3d 417, 448-449 (prescribing three-step process for evaluating successful claim for relief)—borrower's claim must allege actual economic damages that arise from an HBOR violation that is deemed material]

Moreover, borrowers may recover reasonable attorney fees and costs if they "prevail" in their enforcement action by obtaining injunctive relief or damages. [Civ.C. § 2924.12(h); see Bustos v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2019) 39 CA5th 369, 374, 380, 252 CR3d 172, 174, 179—borrower who obtained temporary restraining order (TRO) enjoining foreclosure sale pending lender's compliance with HBOR rules may recover attorney fees and costs even if TRO later vacated; Hardie v. Nationstar Mortg. LLC (2019) 32 CA5th 714, 723, 243 CR3d 911, 916—homeowners who obtained temporary restraining order enjoining trustee's sale held in violation of Civ.C. §§ 2923.55 & 2923.6 "prevailed," entitling them to seek fees and costs; Monterossa v. Sup.Ct. (PNC Bank) (2015) 237 CA4th 747, 749, 188 CR3d 453, 454—borrowers who obtain either preliminary or permanent injunction enjoining trustee's sale in violation of § 2923.6 's foreclosure suspension requirement "prevail" for purposes of Civ.C. § 2924.12 attorney fee awards; compare Chen v. Valstock Ventures, LLC (2022) 81 CA5th 957, 980, 297 CR3d 666, 682-683 (distinguishing HBOR's "unique, statutory scheme" re interim fee awards from Civ.C § 1717, which generally applies in "civil litigation concerning contracts"), discussed at ¶ 6:242.3]

Significant departure from pre-2013 law: As with low volume foreclosures (¶ 6:524.8), HBOR permits borrowers to sue high volume mortgage servicers, mortgagees, trustees, beneficiaries or their authorized agents for damages after the trustee's sale deed has been recorded. [Civ.C. § 2924.12(b)—court may award actual damages where material violation not corrected prior to recordation of sale deed; greater of treble damages or $50,000 available if material violation was intentional, reckless or resulted from willful misconduct; compare Civ.C. § 2924.19(b) (applicable to low volume foreclosures)—parties liable to borrower include mortgage servicer, mortgagee, beneficiary or authorized agent, but not trustee (¶ 6:524.8)]

Compare: Pre-2013 case law interpreted the remedial provisions of the predecessor statute in a much more restrictive fashion. See¶ 6:524.8.

e) Mandatory foreclosure prevention procedures for calendar year 2018 only (applicable to all lenders and servicers regardless of foreclosure volume) (see ¶ 6:524.1)

1/ [6:524.21] "Contact" requirement: During 2018, mortgage servicers, mortgagees, trustees, beneficiaries and their authorized agents were not permitted to record a notice of default until (i) 30 days after the mortgage servicer made or attempted with due diligence (as defined) to make initial contact, as statutorily specified, with the borrower to assess the borrower's financial situation and explore options to avoid foreclosure; and (ii) if the borrower had submitted a complete (as defined) first lien loan modification application that was pending, the mortgage servicer had complied with former Civ.C. § 2924.11(a). [See former Civ.C. § 2923.5(a)(1)—notice of default may not be recorded until either 30 days after initial contact or 30 days after satisfying due diligence requirements, as defined, and borrower is provided with written determination regarding eligibility for requested modification under former Civ.C. § 2924.11(a)]

During the initial contact, the borrower must have been advised of their right to request a subsequent meeting and, if requested, the servicer must have scheduled the meeting within 14 days. [See former Civ.C. § 2923.5(a)(2)—servicer may make initial contact in person or by phone, and must provide borrower with HUD's toll-free telephone number for purpose of finding HUD-certified housing counseling agency; see also ¶ 6:524.3]

2/ [6:524.22] Mandatory declaration: Every notice of default must have included a declaration that the mortgage servicer had contacted or tried with due diligence (as defined) to contact the borrower, or that contact was not required because the individual did not meet the statutory definition of "borrower." [Former Civ.C. § 2923.5(b); see also former Civ.C. § 2920.5(c) (defining borrowers entitled to statutory protection as natural persons, potentially eligible for foreclosure prevention programs, who have not surrendered their property in writing or by delivery of keys, contracted with entities whose business is extending the foreclosure process and avoiding contractual obligations, or filed for bankruptcy and the bankruptcy court has not entered an order closing or dismissing the case or granting relief from foreclosure); see also ¶ 6:524.4]

3/ [6:524.23] Borrower's advisor: During 2018, a borrower was permitted to designate, with consent given in writing, a HUD-certified housing counseling agency, attorney or other advisor to discuss with the mortgage servicer the borrower's financial situation and options for avoiding foreclosure. [Former Civ.C. § 2923.5(d)]

4/ [6:524.24] Suspension of foreclosure process while loan modification application pending: Once the borrower had submitted a complete application for a first lien loan modification offered by or through the borrower's mortgage servicer, a mortgage servicer, trustee, mortgagee, beneficiary or authorized agent was required to suspend the foreclosure process until the servicer provided the borrower with a written determination whether the modification is approved. [See former Civ.C. §§ 2923.5(a)(1)(B), 2924.11(a)]

5/ [6:524.25] Suspension of foreclosure process when foreclosure alternative approved: If a written foreclosure prevention alternative was approved, a mortgage servicer, mortgagee, trustee, beneficiary or authorized agent was not permitted to record a notice of default, notice of sale or conduct a trustee's sale provided (i) the borrower was in compliance with the terms of the modification, forbearance or repayment plan; or (ii) all parties to the foreclosure prevention alternative had approved it in writing and the mortgage servicer had received proof of funds or financing. [See former Civ.C. § 2924.11(c), (d)]

6/ [6:524.26] Private right of action/remedies: Borrowers enjoyed a private right of action to enforce compliance with former Civ.C. §§ 2923.5 (“contract” requirement), 2923.7 (“single point of contact” requirement —only applicable to large volume foreclosure servicers, even after 1/1/18), 2924.11 (foreclosure suspension pending loan modification requirement) and 2924.17 (“competent and reliable evidence” requirement); see also ¶ 6:524.8.

Significant departure from pre-2013 law: During 2018, HBOR permitted borrowers to sue mortgage servicers, mortgagees, trustees, beneficiaries or their authorized agents for damages after the trustee's sale deed had been recorded. [See former Civ.C. § 2924.12(b)—court may award actual damages where material violation not corrected prior to recordation of sale deed; greater of treble damages or $50,000 available if material violation was intentional, reckless or resulted from willful misconduct]

Compare: Pre-2013 case law interpreted the remedial provisions of the predecessor statute more restrictively; see also ¶ 6:524.8.

6) [6:525] Preliminary “declaration of default” from lender: Most trustees require, as a condition to their filing a notice of default, that the beneficiary (lender) first execute and deliver to the trustee a “declaration of default.” The declaration of default describes the loan documents and the nature of the default. The trustee will also require delivery of the original note (or other evidence of the secured obligation), as well as the original deed of trust.

7) [6:526] Content of notice: The notice of default must contain certain basic information: trustor's name; book and page, or instrument number (if applicable), where deed of trust is recorded or a description of the secured real property; statement that the secured obligation is in default and nature of each default (¶ 6:526.1), and election of foreclosure remedy to satisfy the defaulted obligation. [Civ.C. § 2924(a)(1)]

In addition, where the default is “curable” (see Civ.C. § 2924c(a)(1)), the notice must contain the statement prescribed by Civ.C. § 2924c(b)(1) (basically advising trustor of the right to avoid foreclosure by paying all overdue amounts plus permitted costs/expenses within the time allowed by law for reinstatement; see¶ 6:532). [Civ.C. § 2924c(b)(1)]

If the borrower cures the default, the beneficiary must deliver, and the trustee must record, a notice of rescission. [Civ.C. § 2924c(a)(2); Orcilla v. Big Sur, Inc. (2016) 244 CA4th 982, 1000-1001, 198 CR3d 715, 730-731 & fn. 6—borrowers who did not make required loan modification payments did not cure default and therefore could not claim lender violated Civ.C. § 2924c]

a) [6:526.1] Statement of default: To be valid, a notice of default must contain “a correct statement of some breach or breaches sufficiently substantial in their nature to authorize the trustee or beneficiary to declare a default and proceed with a foreclosure.” [Knapp v. Doherty (2004) 123 CA4th 76, 99, 20 CR3d 1, 18 (emphasis added)]

By the same token, so long as the above requirements are met, erroneous statements in the notice about other breaches may be treated as immaterial and will not invalidate the notice. [Knapp v. Doherty, supra, 123 CA4th at 98-99, 20 CR3d at 18-19—incorrect statement in notice of date of breach immaterial; see also¶ 6:535.15 ff.]

1/ [6:526.2] Limited to "actually known" defaults; qualified default description ineffective:Civ.C. § 2924(a)(1)(C) requires the notice to set forth the nature of each breach actually known to the beneficiary. A notice of default that qualifies an assertion of one or more breaches with the words "if any" does not satisfy this requirement. [Anderson v. Heart Fed'l Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1989) 208 CA3d 202, 213, 256 CR 180, 186—qualification "if any" indicates party claiming default has no knowledge of truth or falsity of the assertion]

Compare—effect of omitting "known defaults": The beneficiary is rebuttably presumed to know of all payment defaults on the secured obligation owed to the beneficiary subject to the notice of default; but the beneficiary's failure to include any of the actually known defaults does not itself invalidate the notice of sale and those omitted defaults may be asserted in a separate notice of default. [See Civ.C. § 2924(e)]

b) [6:526.9] "Contact" declaration required for "*owner-occupied" residential property (HBOR provisions for low and high volume foreclosures):See¶ 6:524.4 and 6:524.10.

c) [6:526.10] Statutory statement required for residential properties (four units or less): For residential properties containing no more than four dwelling units, the following statement must appear in English, Spanish, Chinese, Tagalog, Vietnamese and Korean at the beginning of the notice of default: "NOTE: THERE IS A SUMMARY OF THE INFORMATION IN THIS DOCUMENT ATTACHED." [See Civ.C. § 2923.3(c)(1); see also¶ 6:527.3 re attached summary requirement]

d) [6:526.11] Trustee's immunity from liability for "good faith error" in nature/amount of default: In recording the notice of default pursuant to Civ.C. § 2924, the trustee incurs no liability for any "good faith error resulting from reliance on information provided in good faith by the beneficiary" regarding the nature and amount of the default under the deed of trust. [Civ.C. § 2924(b); but see Civ.C. § 2924.12(b) (applicable to high volume foreclosures)—trustees who violate Civ.C. § 2924.17 by failing to review "competent and reliable evidence" before recording notice of default may be liable for damages after deed of sale recorded]

8) [6:527] Copies of notice mailed to trustor and certain interested parties: The trustee also must mail a copy of the recorded notice of default to the trustor (at the trustor's "last known address" if different from that specified in the deed of trust, see ¶ 6:527a), parties holding an interest of record in the secured property who would be affected by the foreclosure, and all parties who have duly recorded a request for a copy of the notice and notice of sale (pursuant to Civ.C. § 2924b(a)). [Civ.C. § 2924b(b)(1), (c) & (e); see also Banc of America Leasing & Capital, LLC v. 3 Arch Trustee Services, Inc. (2009) 180 CA4th 1090, 1097, 103 CR3d 397, 401—trustee has no duty to give notice to anyone except as specifically provided for by statute or in trust deed; Estate of Yates (1994) 25 CA4th 511, 521-522, 32 CR2d 53, 57-58—executor/administrator for deceased trustor's estate also must be mailed notice of default when trustee has actual knowledge trustor is dead and estate is in probate]

The trustee will purchase a "trustee's sale guarantee" from a title insurance company to determine which parties of record are entitled to a copy of the notice of default. See¶ 3:37.

a) [6:527a] "Last known address": The trustor's "last known address" to which the copy of the recorded notice must be mailed is the trustor's physical address—not an email or other form of electronic address. [Civ.C. § 2924b(b)(3)]

Moreover, the notice must be sent to the "last known address" that is "actually known" by the trustee or other person authorized to record the notice. An address is considered "actually known" if it is contained in the original trust deed, or in any subsequent written notification of a changeof physical address provided by the trustor. [Civ.C. § 2924b(b)(3) (emphasis added)]

b) [6:527.1] Actual receipt not required: On the other hand, nothing in the statutory scheme requires that the trustor actually receive the mailed notice of default. [Lupertino v. Carbahal (1973) 35 CA3d 742, 746-747, 111 CR 112, 115; see also Knapp v. Doherty (2004) 123 CA4th 76, 89, 20 CR3d 1, 10]

c) [6:527.2] Compare—easement holders: Trustees are not required to give a copy of the notice of default to easement holders absent the holder's specific request pursuant to Civ.C. § 2924b(b)(2). [Perez v. 222 Sutter St. Partners (1990) 222 CA3d 938, 943, 948-949, 272 CR 119, 121, 125; see Diamond Benefits Life Ins. Co. v. Troll (1998) 66 CA4th 1, 6, 77 CR2d 581, 585]

d) [6:527.3] Attachment summarizing notice of default information required for residential properties (four units or less): For residential properties containing no more than four dwelling units, a separate, statutorily-prescribed summary of the notice of default information must be attached to the copy of the recorded notice of default mailed to the trustor. The summary must be in English, Spanish, Chinese, Tagalog, Vietnamese and Korean, but need not be recorded or published. [See Civ.C. §§ 2923.3(a), (b)(1), (c)(2) & 2924(f)]

(f) [6:528] Notice of trustee's sale; timing: Except as otherwise provided by statute (below), if the trustor does not "reinstate" the secured obligation (i.e., cure the default) within three months after the date of recordation of the notice of default, the trustee may proceed to give a "notice of sale" as prescribed in Civ.C. § 2924f. [See Civ.C. § 2924(a)(2), (3); Knapp v. Doherty (2004) 123 CA4th 76, 90-92, 20 CR3d 1, 11-13—trustee must wait three calendar months before proceeding with sale, but sale not invalidated by slightly premature notice of sale that was served on borrowers more than requisite 20 days before initial sale date (¶ 6:529)]

The trustee has the option of recording the "notice of sale" up to five days before the three-month period lapses provided the sale date is no earlier than three months and 20 days after the notice of default was recorded. [Civ.C. § 2924(a)(4)]

These statutory notice requirements "ensure a fair sale." [Residential Capital, LLC v. Cal-Western Reconveyance Corp. (2003) 108 CA4th 807, 823, 134 CR2d 162, 174]

1) [6:528.1] Privileged publication: Mailing, publication and delivery of a notice of sale pursuant to Civ.C. § 2924 constitute a privileged publication under Civ.C. § 47. [Civ.C. § 2924(d)(1); see also Schep v. Capital One, N.A. (2017) 12 CA5th 1331, 1336, 220 CR3d 408, 412—privilege protects both trustee performing statutory foreclosure procedures and principal (i.e., beneficiary) who directs trustee to do so]

a) [6:528.2] Absolute vs. qualified privilege: Courts disagree whether the privilege accorded nonjudicial foreclosure proceedings is "absolute" (Civ.C. § 47(b) litigation privilege) or "qualified" (Civ.C. § 47(c) common interest privilege). [See Garretson v. Post (2007) 156 CA4th 1508, 1518, 68 CR3d 230, 237—Legislature extended litigation (absolute) privilege to nonjudicial foreclosures to protect trustees performing their contractual/statutory duties; Kachlon v. Markowitz (2008) 168 CA4th 316, 339-341, 85 CR3d 532, 550-551—common interest (qualified) privilege applies to nonjudicial foreclosures because it is consistent with nonjudicial foreclosure process, which bears none of the "attributes essential for absolute privilege"; compare Schep v. Capital One, N.A. (2017) 12 CA5th 1331, 1337, 220 CR3d 408, 413 (recognizing both a Civ.C. § 47(b) "absolute" privilege that applies irrespective of speaker's motive and a Civ.C. § 47(c) "qualified" privilege applicable to communications made without malice)]

b) [6:528.3] Compare—no protection under anti-SLAPP statute: On the other hand, nonjudicial foreclosure proceedings, including the notice of foreclosure, are purely private commercial transactions—not constitutionally-protected speech or petitioning activity within the meaning of CCP § 425.16 ("anti-SLAPP statute"—a procedural device for screening out meritless claims brought to chill the valid exercise of the constitutional rights of free speech and petition). [Garretson v. Post (2007) 156 CA4th 1508, 1517-1524, 68 CR3d 230, 236-242—defendant's § 425.16 motion to strike wrongful foreclosure cause of action dismissed (Civ.C. § 47(b) and CCP § 425.16 "are not coextensive or congruent in scope as applied"); compare Crossroads Investors, L.P. v. Federal Nat'l Mortgage Ass'n (2017) 13 CA5th 757, 778-785, 222 CR3d 1, 20-25—although defendant's actions would not be protected by anti-SLAPP statute in nonjudicial foreclosure proceeding, they were protected during pendency of plaintiff's bankruptcy since they related to issues in that case; Trapp v. Naiman (2013) 218 CA4th 113, 120-121, 159 CR3d 462, 467-468—error to dismiss defendant's § 425.16 motion to strike complaint arising out of prior foreclosure sale and subsequent unlawful detainer (UD) actions (plaintiffs impermissibly sought to "bootstrap" foreclosure proceeding to defendant's "protected" UD actions to avoid application of anti-SLAPP statute)]

c) [6:528.4] Compare—trustee's immunity from liability for "good faith error" in nature/amount of default: In giving the notice of sale pursuant to Civ.C. § 2924, the trustee incurs no liability for any "good faith error resulting from reliance on information provided in good faith by the beneficiary" regarding the nature and amount of the default under the deed of trust. [Civ.C. § 2924(b); but see Civ.C. § 2924.12(b) (applicable to high volume foreclosures)—trustees who violate Civ.C. § 2924.17 by failing to review "competent and reliable evidence" before recording notice of sale may be liable for damages after deed of sale recorded; see also¶ 6:531.1]

2) [6:529] To whom notice given; 20-day presale deadline: The trustee's notice of sale must be sent by registered or certified mail, postage prepaid, at least 20 days before the date of sale, to the trustor, all other parties to whom the notice of default was required to be given (¶ 6:527), plus any state taxing agency that has recorded a notice of tax lien on the property. [Civ.C. § 2924b(b)(2), (c)(3) & (e)]

a) [6:529a] Actual receipt not required: So long as the notice of sale is properly and timely mailed, the fact that the trustor does not actually receive it will not invalidate a subsequent sale. [Knapp v. Doherty (2004) 123 CA4th 76, 88-89, 20 CR3d 1, 10]

b) [6:529.1] 25-day notice to IRS: Additionally, when a "Notice of Federal Tax Lien under Internal Revenue Laws" has been recorded against the property, a copy of the trustee's notice of sale must be given to the IRS by registered or certified mail or personal service not less than 25 days before the sale. [Civ.C. § 2924b(c)(4); IRC § 7425(c)(1)]

1/ [6:529.2] Federal tax lien survives absent notice: Federal law does not mandate notice to the IRS as a prerequisite to a valid trustee's sale. But if 25-day presale notice is not given to the IRS, any federal tax lien that was properly recorded more than 30 days before the trustee's sale will survive the sale (IRC § 7425(b)(1)). "The decision to give notice and risk intervention by the IRS or not give notice and risk the IRS coming after the property at a later time is left to the trustee …" [Diediker v. Peelle Fin'l Corp. (1997) 60 CA4th 288, 293-294, 70 CR2d 442, 445-446—Congress' "obvious intent" was to put IRS "in a better position than other junior lienholders"]

2/ [6:529.3] Option to rescind sale if IRS notice not given: Failure to give the IRS notice as prescribed by Civ.C. § 2924b(c)(4) is itself sufficient ground to rescind the trustee's sale and invalidate the deed at the option of either the successful bidder or the trustee and with the beneficiary's consent. But the option to rescind must be exercised before the successful bidder transfers the property to a BFP (see¶ 6:536 ff.). [Civ.C. § 2924b(c)(4)]

3/ [6:529.4] Trustee liability for failure to give IRS notice? Under the current statutory scheme, however, it is not clear whether (if the sale is not rescinded, ¶ 6:529.3), the trustee may be held liable to the purchaser (or purchaser's title insurer) who ends up being responsible for the federal tax lien because the IRS notice was not given.

One case, decided under the prior version of Civ.C. § 2924b(c), when neither state nor federal law "required" notice of the same to the IRS, held the trustee could not incur such liability absent actual deceit by the trustee. [See Diediker v. Peelle Fin'l Corp. (1997) 60 CA4th 288, 297-298, 70 CR2d 442, 447-448] But no reported case has addressed the issue since notice to the IRS has been made a state law requirement (¶ 6:529.1).

4/ [6:529.5] IRS right of redemption: Even when the IRS is given notice of the sale, it retains the right to redeem property subject to a tax lien for 120 days after the trustee's sale. [Vardanega v. I.R.S. (9th Cir. 1999) 170 F3d 1184, 1186—IRS could redeem entire property even though it had tax lien on only part of property held in joint tenancy]

c) [6:529.6] Attachment summarizing notice of sale information required for residential properties (four units or less): For residential properties containing no more than four dwelling units, a separate, statutorily-prescribed summary of the notice of sale information must be attached to the copy of the recorded notice of sale mailed to the trustor. The summary must be in English, Spanish, Chinese, Tagalog, Vietnamese and Korean, but need not be recorded or published. [See Civ.C. §§ 2923.3(a), (b)(2), (d)(2) & 2924f(d)]

d) [6:530] Posting, publication and recordation also required: In addition to the requisite mailed notice, written notice of the sale must be (i) posted (at least 20 days before the date of sale) in a public place in the city (or county seat) where the property is to be sold and in a "conspicuous place" on the property to be sold; (ii) published once a week for three consecutive calendar weeks (the first publication to be at least 20 days before the date of sale) in a newspaper of general circulation in the public notice district or county where the property is located; and (iii) recorded with the county recorder of the county where the property (or any part thereof) is located at least 20 days before the date of sale. [Civ.C. § 2924f(b)(1)-(4); see also Gov.C. §§ 6000 & 6006 (defining "newspaper of general circulation" and its narrow exception respectively); In re Establishment of the Press-Enterprise as a Newspaper of General Circulation (2015) 236 CA4th 757, 760, 186 CR3d 768, 770]

3) [6:531] Content of notice of sale: The notice of sale must set forth the time and place of the trustee's foreclosure sale (street address and specific place at that address where the sale will be held). [Civ.C. § 2924f(b)(1)]

It must also (i) describe the property to be sold (street address or other common designation, plus county assessor's parcel number); (ii) identify the trustee by name, California address (which may reflect the trustee's agent), and either a toll-free phone number or California phone number; (iii) identify the original trustor; (iv) state the total amount of the unpaid principal obligation and reasonably estimated costs, expenses and advances; and (v) contain a statutorily-prescribed default warning notice to the trustor (see Civ.C. § 2924f(c)(3)). [See Civ.C. § 2924f(b)(1), (5), (7)]

Additionally, if the foreclosure is to be a "unified sale" of the secured real property as well as secured fixtures/ personal property, the notice must describe the personal property or fixtures to be sold. [Civ.C. § 2924f(b)(9)]

a) [6:531.1] No trustee liability for "good faith" erroneous statement of amount: The trustee incurs no liability for a "good faith error" in stating the proper amount of the principal balance, including any amount provided in good faith by or on behalf of the beneficiary. [Civ.C. § 2924f(b)(7); but see Civ.C. § 2924.12(b) (applicable to high volume foreclosures)—trustees who violate Civ.C. § 2924.17 by failing to review "competent and reliable evidence" before recording notice of sale may be liable for damages after deed of sale recorded; see also ¶ 6:528.4]

b) [6:531.2] Additional requirements (properties containing one-to-four single-family residences): On and after April 1, 2012, a notice of sale given pursuant to a deed of trust secured by real property containing from one-to-four single-family residences also must include (i) language notifying potential bidders of specified risks involved in bidding on property at a trustee's sale; and (ii) notice to the property owner about how to obtain information regarding any postponement of the sale. The mortgagee, beneficiary, trustee, or authorized agent must also make a "good faith effort" to provide current information regarding sale dates and postponements via an internet website, telephone recording, or "any other means that allows 24 hours a day, seven days a week, no-cost access to updated information." [See Civ.C. § 2924f(b)(8)(A), (B) (specifying language sale notice must "substantially" follow)]

In addition, the following statement must appear in English, Spanish, Chinese, Tagalog, Vietnamese and Korean at the beginning of the notice of sale: "NOTE: THERE IS A SUMMARY OF THE INFORMATION IN THIS DOCUMENT ATTACHED." [See Civ.C. § 2923.3(d)(1); see also ¶ 6:529.6 re attached summary requirement]

1/ [6:531.3] Notice to tenants: From January 1, 2021 to December 31, 2030, the trustee's notice of sale (¶ 6:528 ff.) must also include a notice to the property's tenants. The notice to tenants must explain: (i) an "eligible tenant buyer" (¶ 6:535.10h) can buy the property by matching the last and highest bid placed at the trustee's auction; (ii) an "eligible bidder" (¶ 6:535.10i) may be able to buy the property by exceeding the last and highest bid placed at the trustee's auction; and (iii) the three steps required to exercise these purchase rights. [See Civ.C. § 2924f(b)(8)(A) (1/1/31 "sunset" date) (specifying language notice to tenant must "substantially" follow); compare Civ.C. § 2924f(b)(8)(A) (oper. 1/1/31) (eliminating notice to tenant); see also Civ.C. § 2924m(a)(2), (3) (1/1/31 "sunset" date) (defining "eligible tenant buyer" and "eligible bidder"); and ¶ 6:535.10 ff.]

The trustee (or an authorized agent) must maintain an internet website and telephone number to provide, among other things, information on the sale date, amount of the last and highest bid, and the trustee's address. The information must be available 24 hours a day, seven days a week, free of charge, and accessible using the file number assigned to the case and listed on the notice to tenant. [See Civ.C. § 2924f(b)(8)(E) (1/1/31 "sunset" date)]

(g) [6:532] Trustor's interim right of reinstatement; five-day presale deadline: Notwithstanding the trustee's recordation of a notice of default and notice of sale, the trustor has the right to reinstate the secured obligation by paying all amounts in default (plus the trustee's costs and expenses, see Civ.C. § 2924c(c) & (d), ¶ 6:243 ff.) no later than five business days before the date of sale set forth in the initial recorded notice of sale. [Civ.C. § 2924c(e)—"Nothing contained herein shall give rise to a right of reinstatement during the period of five business days prior to the date of sale"; see Hicks v. E.T. Legg & Assocs. (2001) 89 CA4th 496, 504, 108 CR2d 10, 16] Moreover, the lender must provide the trustor with a written itemization of the amounts due if requested. [Civ.C. § 2924c(b)(1)]

Thus, even though the lender has accelerated the loan and declared all sums due by the recorded notice of default, the statutory right of reinstatement enables the trustor to avoid foreclosure by paying only the nonaccelerated amounts actually in default (plus trustee's fees). Moreover, the borrower cannot waive its right to reinstate the loan "at the time of or in connection with the making of or renewing of any loan secured by a deed of trust" (Civ.C. § 2953). And, if the defaulted loan has been amended to defer pre-modification arrears, the lender may not be able to demand that the borrower pay the earlier, deferred amounts to exercise its Civ.C. § 2924c right of reinstatement. [See Taniguchi v. Restoration Homes LLC (2019) 43 CA5th 478, 490, 256 CR3d 679, 688—lender's demand for both missed payments under modified terms plus deferred amounts under original terms impermissibly deprived borrowers of right to reinstate because post-default loan modification that adjusted principal balance and reduced interest rate and monthly payment was "the making or renewal of a loan … subject to the anti-waiver provisions of [Civ.C. § 2953]"]

If the lender refuses the borrower's tender of the statutory reinstatement amount and proceeds to foreclosure, the trustee's sale is void and may give rise to tort liability for wrongful foreclosure. [Turner v. Seterus, Inc. (2018) 27 CA5th 516, 530-531, 238 CR3d 528, 540-541 (¶ 6:539.12)] A cause of action under California's Unfair Competition Law (Bus. & Prof.C. § 17200) also may lie. [See Taniguchi v. Restoration Homes, LLC, supra, 43 CA5th at 490-491, 256 CR3d at 688—lender that insisted borrower cure both pre-modification and post-modification loan defaults to reinstate restructured loan may have violated Civ.C. § 2924c, giving rise to unlawful business practices claim]

After the reinstatement period has passed, the trustor still has an equitable right of redemption any time before the foreclosure sale occurs. [See Civ.C. §§ 2903, 2905]

1) [6:532a] Trustor's successor in interest: The reinstatement right is available not only to the trustor, but also to "their successor in interest in the mortgaged or trust property or any part thereof" (Civ.C. § 2924(c)(a)(1)). Purchasers of property at foreclosure sales are successors in interest because they follow the mortgagor in ownership and control of the foreclosed property. Thus, one who purchases property at a foreclosure sale subject to a senior mortgage has a statutory right to reinstate the senior mortgage despite not being the original borrower. [Shetty v. HSBC Bank USA, N.A. (2023) 91 CA5th 796, 801-802, 308 CR3d 625, 629—condominium purchaser at HOA foreclosure sale had standing to seek mortgage's reinstatement after mortgagor defaulted]

2) [6:532b] Comment: The default amount changes daily as interest on the obligation accrues. Moreover, if the note has a yield maintenance (prepayment) feature, that amount may increase or decrease as interest rates fluctuate. To complicate matters, if the lender decides to update the statement of indebtedness contained in the notice of default or notice of sale, it can be difficult for a borrower or its counsel to determine the exact amount needed to reinstate the obligation. Thus, under these circumstances, the borrower must tender, at a minimum, a specific amount based on the information in its possession (e.g., the amount stated in the notice of sale) in order to stop the foreclosure or, if the lender proceeds, to retain a claim for wrongful foreclosure. [See Crossroads Investors, L.P. v. Federal Nat'l Mortgage Ass'n (2017) 13 CA5th 757, 791, 222 CR3d 1, 30-31 (noting beneficiary bears burden of informing trustor of correct amount then due on obligation and his/her failure to do so entitles trustor to "prevail" on the merits when it claims proper tender)]

3) [6:532c] Effect of sale postponement: If the foreclosure sale is postponed (¶ 6:532.10 ff.), the right to reinstate is extended to five business days before the new foreclosure sale date. [Civ.C. § 2924c(e)]

Because of the five-day presale deadline, there is no revival of the trustor's right of reinstatement where the sale is postponed for no more than five business days. [See Hicks v. E.T. Legg & Assocs. (2001) 89 CA4th 496, 504-508, 108 CR2d 10, 16-19 (25 postponements over 5 months)—reinstatement period not revived by serial postponements for successive periods of five or fewer business days during bankruptcy and injunction stays]

4) [6:532d] Waiver of five-day deadline by agreement: The trustor and beneficiary may override (or effectively waive) the Civ.C. § 2924c(e) five-day presale reinstatement deadline by agreement providing for cure of the default and reinstatement of the loan within the five-day period. [Bank of America, N.A. v. La Jolla Group II (2005) 129 CA4th 706, 712, 28 CR3d 825, 829]

5) [6:532e] Compare—no waiver of borrower's redemption right: While the lender may waive the five-day deadline for reinstatement, the borrower cannot waive its right to reinstate the loan prior to the five-day deadline. [See Civ.C. § 2953]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

6) [6:532.1] Compare—no postsale redemption rights: The trustor has no rights of reinstatement or redemption once the trustee's sale is completed. A properly-conducted nonjudicial foreclosure sale constitutes a final adjudication of the borrower's and lender's rights; and the purchaser ordinarily receives title under the trustee's deed free and clear of any right, title or interest of the trustor. [Moeller v. Lien (1994) 25 CA4th 822, 831, 30 CR2d 777, 783; Melendrez v. D & I Investment, Inc. (2005) 127 CA4th 1238, 1250, 26 CR3d 413, 423; see also¶ 6:536 ff.]

a) [6:532.1a] Common interest development unit sales distinguished: A nonjudicial foreclosure by a common interest development association to collect delinquent assessments is subject to a right of redemption. [See CCP § 729.035; Civ.C. § 5715(b); Barry v. OC Residential Properties, LLC (2011) 194 CA4th 861, 866, 123 CR3d 727, 731-732; see also Multani v. Witkin & Neal (2013) 215 CA4th 1428, 1445, 155 CR3d 892, 904—homeowner in common interest development has statutory right to redeem within 90 days following foreclosure sale]

7) [6:532.2] Compare—reinstatement and termination of pending foreclosure by estoppel: In some circumstances, the beneficiary (lender) may be estopped to proceed with a pending nonjudicial foreclosure if it accepts payments from the trustor (albeit less than the full amount in default) without objection and misleads the trustor into believing the default has been cured and the foreclosure proceedings terminated. Such an estoppel may arise from a loan repayment agreement between the lender and borrower. [See Tully v. World Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1997) 56 CA4th 654, 659-660, 65 CR2d 545, 547-548—triable issues of fact re terms of alleged repayment agreement]

a) [6:532.3] Tender of payment prerequisite: But no estoppel can arise if the trustor made no viable tender of payment of the obligation owing (belated or otherwise). [MCA, Inc. v. Universal Diversified Enterprises Corp. (1972) 27 CA3d 170, 177, 103 CR 522, 526; Karlsen v. American Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1971) 15 CA3d 112, 117, 92 CR 851, 854; compare Pfeifer v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. (2012) 211 CA4th 1250, 1280, 150 CR3d 673, 696-697—no tender required when seeking to enjoin pending foreclosure based on lender's alleged failure to comply with HBOR provisions; see also¶ 6:535.15f re additional exceptions to tender rule]

8) [6:532.4] Limitations on lender charges to reinstate loan: A lender is limited in the fees it may charge a borrower to reinstate or redeem a defaulted loan secured by a deed of trust. [Civ.C. §§ 2924c, 2924d; Walker v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. (2002) 98 CA4th 1158, 1173, 121 CR2d 79, 89]

However, Civ.C. §§ 2924c and 2924d do not apply to charges incurred before notices of default and sale have been recorded. [Walker v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc., supra, 98 CA4th at 1174, 121 CR2d at 90—§§ 2924c and 2924d do not prohibit lender from charging borrower property inspection fees after borrower defaults on loan but before foreclosure sale noticed]

[6:532.5 - 6:532.9] Reserved.

(h) Postponement of sale

1) [6:532.10] Discretionary vs. mandatory postponement: A nonjudicial foreclosure sale may be postponed at any time prior to completion of the sale (¶ 6:535.10 ff.) at the trustee's discretion or upon instruction by the beneficiary. [Civ.C. § 2924g(c)(1) & (1)(D); Hicks v. E.T. Legg & Assocs. (2001) 89 CA4th 496, 507, 108 CR2d 10, 18]

However, the trustee must postpone a sale upon court order (injunction or restraining order), where a stay is required by operation of law (e.g., bankruptcy automatic stay under 11 USC § 362 or automatic stay effected under CCP § 916(a) by filing notice of appeal), or pursuant to mutual agreement (oral or written) between trustor and beneficiary. [Civ.C. § 2924g(c)(1)(A), (B) & (C); Residential Capital, LLC v. Cal-Western Reconveyance Corp. (2003) 108 CA4th 807, 814, 823, 134 CR2d 162, 167, 174, & fn. 2—“the postponement right prevents a sale when there may be no default by a trustor”; see also Royal Thrift & Loan Co. v. County Escrow, Inc. (2004) 123 CA4th 24, 34-38, 20 CR3d 37, 44-47—beneficiary's postponement of sale proper where no showing that exception to appellate automatic stay applied]

(The trustee is required to keep records of each postponement and its reasons. Civ.C. § 2924g(d).)

a) [6:532.11] No restriction on number of postponements; 365-day limitation: Technically, there is no limit on the number of postponements allowed under Civ.C. § 2924g. However, if the sale proceedings are postponed for a period or periods totaling more than 365 days from the date set forth in the notice of sale, the scheduling of any further sale proceedings must be preceded by giving a new notice of sale as prescribed by Civ.C. § 2924f (requirements for original notice of trustee's sale, ¶ 6:528 ff.). [Civ.C. § 2924g(c)(1), (2)]

b) [6:532.11a] Oral postponements: Although Civ.C. § 2924g allows for oral postponement of a foreclosure sale, any agreement between the lender and borrower to delay the sale constitutes a loan modification subject to the statute of frauds. [See Granadino v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2015) 236 CA4th 411, 413, 186 CR3d 408, 416; Jones v. Wachovia Bank (2014) 230 CA4th 935, 943-944, 179 CR3d 21, 27 & fn. 5; and further discussion at ¶ 4:272.3 ff.]

2) [6:532.12] Notice of postponement: The trustee must give public notice of each postponement and the reason therefor at the time and place of the last publicized sale (¶ 6:531). The notice must state the new date, time and place of sale (the same place originally fixed by the trustee for the sale). [Civ.C. § 2924g(a) & (d); but see also¶ 6:532.11 (new notice of sale required after 365 days from original date)]

In addition, if the trustee postponed the sale for 10 business days or longer, the mortgagee, beneficiary or authorized agent has to provide written notice to the borrower of the new time and date of sale within five business days following the postponement. [Civ.C. § 2924(a)(5)] This written notice, however, does not satisfy the Civ.C. § 2924g*public* notice requirement (above).

a) [6:532.13] Notice not itself violative of bankruptcy automatic stay: While the foreclosure sale itself cannot proceed during the period of an automatic stay against the debtor in bankruptcy (11 USC § 362), mere publication of a notice of postponement of sale does not violate the stay. [Hicks v. E.T. Legg & Assocs. (2001) 89 CA4th 496, 512-513, 108 CR2d 10, 22-23—notice published one day after inception of automatic stay did not violate stay]

3) [6:532.14] Effect on debtor's right of reinstatement:See discussion at¶ 6:532b*.

4) [6:532.15] Seven-day hold on sale after postponement on account of injunction or stay: A trustee's foreclosure sale postponed by reason of an injunction or stay by operation of law may be conducted no sooner than the seventh day after the earlier of dismissal of the action, or expiration or termination of the injunction or stay … unless a court order expressly directs the sale to occur within that seven-day period. [Civ.C. § 2924g(d); Hicks v. E.T. Legg & Assocs. (2001) 89 CA4th 496, 504, 108 CR2d 10, 16; see also Ragland v. U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n (2012) 209 CA4th 182, 202, 147 CR3d 41, 59—purpose of seven-day waiting period is to provide trustors sufficient time to determine sale date so they can attend and protect their interests]

If a sale had been scheduled to occur during the seven-day period, a new notice of postponement must be given. [Civ.C. § 2924g(d)]

a) [6:532.16] Special rule for sales postponed by bankruptcy: The seven-day "waiting period" does not apply if the postponement was occasioned by the bankruptcy automatic stay (11 USC § 362). Here, the postponed sale may occur as soon as the stay expires and the seven-day hold (¶ 6:532.15) does not apply. [Civ.C. § 2924g(e)]

Moreover, so long as the creditor properly postponed the sale during the bankruptcy, the sale can occur on the new date with no further notice to the borrower. [In re Nghiem (9th Cir. BAP 2001) 264 BR 557, 561, aff'd (9th Cir. 2002) 53 Fed.Appx. 489—creditor's oral postponements of trustee's sale during bankruptcy allowed sale to proceed immediately upon dismissal of bankruptcy case; Tully v. World Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1997) 56 CA4th 654, 664, 65 CR2d 545, 550]

5) [6:532.17] Private right of action: Although not expressly authorized by statute, the trustor may bring a private cause of action to enforce compliance with the Civ.C. § 2924g(d) foreclosure postponement requirements. This is so because no administrative mechanism to implement § 2924g(d) exists, making a private remedy necessary to its effectiveness. [See Ragland v. U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n (2012) 209 CA4th 182, 201, 147 CR3d 41, 57-58 (also noting § 2924g(d) is part of foreclosure process and therefore not subject to federal preemption)]

(i) [6:533] Foreclosure sale by public auction: The trustee's foreclosure sale is conducted by public auction in the county where the property (or any part thereof) is located. [Civ.C. § 2924g(a)]

The sale is held basically like any other auction: The trustee announces the property is for sale and potential purchasers make their bids (provided that same day the potential purchasers demonstrate they have the ability to pay by cash, cashier's check, check drawn by a credit union, savings and loan association or other financial institution, or with a "cash equivalent" designated in the notice of sale as acceptable to the trustee). [See Civ.C. § 2924h(b); California Golf, L.L.C. v. Cooper (2008) 163 CA4th 1053, 1068, 1071, 78 CR3d 153, 166, 168—"cash equivalent" is term of art, referring to "something different from" cash, cashier's check or bank drawn check (e.g., a personal check)]

1) [6:533a] Temporary prohibition on bundling properties: From January 1, 2021 to December 31, 2030, trustees must allow a separate bid on each property offered at a foreclosure sale. Bundling properties for sale is not permitted unless the mortgage or trust deed requires otherwise. [Civ.C. § 2924g(a)(4) (1/1/31 "sunset" date)]

2) [6:533.1] Who may bid: Anyone, including the beneficiary (lender, ¶ 6:535 ff.), may bid at a trustee's foreclosure sale. [Dreyfuss v. Union Bank of Calif. (2000) 24 C4th 400, 410, 101 CR2d 29, 36; see Jones v. Wagner (2001) 90 CA4th 466, 473-474, 108 CR2d 669, 674-675—bidder may include former partner of partnership formed to purchase property or tenant in common]

a) [6:533.2] Bidding rights of prospective owner-occupants, eligible tenant buyers and eligible bidders (until 1/1/31): In response to the COVID-19 pandemic, the Legislature granted "eligible tenant buyers" (¶ 6:535.10h) and "eligible bidders" (¶ 6:535.10i) the right to bid on property containing one to four residential units after the trustee's sale. If a "prospective owner occupant" is not the last and highest bidder at the trustee's sale, an "eligible tenant buyer" can purchase the property by matching the last and highest bid placed at the trustee's auction, and an "eligible bidder" may be able to purchase the property by exceeding the last and highest bid placed at the trustee's auction. [See Civ.C. § 2924f(b)(8)(A) (1/1/31 "sunset" date); compare Civ.C. § 2924f(b)(8)(A) (oper. 1/1/31) (eliminating bidding rights for tenant buyers); see also Civ.C. § 2924m(a)(1)-(3) (1/1/31 "sunset" date) (defining "prospective owner-occupant," "eligible tenant buyer" and "eligible bidder"); and¶ 6:535.10 ff.]

3) [6:534] Title to highest bidder: A bid at a trustee's sale is considered the bidder's irrevocable offer to purchase the property for that amount. The trustee's sale is deemed final when the last and highest bid is accepted. [Civ.C. § 2924h(a) & (c); see also Millennium Rock Mortgage, Inc. v. T.D. Service Co. (2009) 179 CA4th 804, 809, 102 CR3d 544, 548—sale normally is complete when auctioneer accepts final bid, even though trustee's deed not given to purchaser until subsequent date]

Caution: From January 1, 2021 through December 31, 2030, certain parties have rights to match or exceed the last and highest bid after a trustee's sale of residential property containing one to four units, unless the last and final bidder at the trustee's sale is a "prospective owner-occupant." [See Civ.C. §§ 2924h(c) (1/1/31 "sunset" date), 2924m(c) (1/1/31 "sunset" date); and¶ 6:535.10a ff.]

a) [6:534a] Relation back: Assuming the foreclosure sale was properly conducted, free of substantial defects in procedure (see¶ 6:535.15 ff.), the highest bidder receives title to the property by means of a trustee's deed that "relates back" to the date when the deed of trust was recorded. [Bailey v. Citibank, N.A. (2021) 66 CA5th 335, 356, 280 CR3d 546, 563; United States v. Real Property at 2659 Roundhill Dr., Alamo, Calif. (9th Cir. 1999) 194 F3d 1020, 1026, 1028 (applying Calif. law)—foreclosure purchaser's interest related back to date trust deed was recorded, thereby extinguishing government's subsequently recorded forfeiture claim against property]

b) [6:534b] Termination of subordinate liens: As a result of the trustee's deed "relating back" (¶ 6:534a), all liens and encumbrances that attached to the property after the deed of trust was recorded and before the foreclosure sale are extinguished, unless the successful bid exceeds the amount necessary to pay off the senior lien. [South Bay Bldg. Enterprises, Inc. v. Riviera Lend-Lease, Inc. (1999) 72 CA4th 1111, 1120, 85 CR2d 647, 652; see also Bailey v. Citibank, N.A. (2021) 66 CA5th 335, 356-357, 280 CR3d 546, 563—foreclosure extinguished adverse possession claim commenced after trust deed's execution; Zieve, Brodnax & Steele, LLP v. Dhindsa (2020) 49 CA5th 27, 36, 262 CR3d 567, 573—successful purchaser takes title free of all rights of trustor or anyone claiming through trustor, including rights under liens that attached after foreclosed trust deed; Vallely Investments, L.P. v. BancAmerica Comm'l Corp. (2001) 88 CA4th 816, 824, 106 CR2d 689, 695—valid foreclosure terminates all interests junior to mortgage but not senior interests]

c) [6:534.1] Exception for certain tax liens: Federal tax liens recorded more than 30 days before the trustee's sale survive the sale unless notice of the sale was properly given to the IRS pursuant to federal law (see¶ 6:529.1 ff.).

Certain state tax liens also survive a nonjudicial foreclosure sale regardless of the time of their creation. [See Rev. & Tax.C. §§ 2187, 2192.1; Barer v. County of Riverside (1997) 57 CA4th 558, 566-571, 67 CR2d 241, 246-249—ad valorem tax liens on possessory interest in tax-exempt land not extinguished by senior lienholder's nonjudicial foreclosure sale of possessory interest]

d) [6:534.2] Compare—subordinate leaseholds: Subordinate leasehold interests also are extinguished by a nonjudicial foreclosure absent an effective "nondisturbance and attornment agreement" preserving the junior leaseholds (¶ 6:472 ff.). [Dover Mobile Estates v. Fiber Form Products, Inc. (1990) 220 CA3d 1494, 1498, 270 CR 183, 185; see also Dr. Leevil, LLC v. Westlake Health Care Ctr. (2017) 9 CA5th 450, 455, 215 CR3d 127, 131 (reversed on other grounds by Dr. Leevil, LLC v. Westlake Health Care Center (2018) 6 C5th 474, 484-485, 241 CR3d 12, 20); Aviel v. Ng (2008) 161 CA4th 809, 813, 74 CR3d 200, 203—trustee sale under trust deed extinguished commercial lease made subject to future mortgages only by subordination clause (mortgages and trust deeds are functionally and legally equivalent); see also ¶ 7:273 ff.]

e) [6:534.3] Sale of common interest development units: A homeowner's association may request a copy of the trustee's deed upon sale of any of the separate interests it governs. The association's request must be recorded before the notice of default (¶ 6:524) is filed, and the trustee must mail the trustee's deed to the association within 15 business days of the trustee's sale. [Civ.C. § 2924b(f)(1)]

The request does not, for purposes of Gov.C. § 27288.1 (re content requirements for real property instruments), constitute a document that (i) effects or evidences a transfer or encumbrance of a real property interest; or (ii) releases or terminates a real property interest, right or encumbrance. [Civ.C. § 2924b(f)(2)]

4) [6:535] "Credit bidding" by beneficiary: Unlike other purchasers at a nonjudicial foreclosure sale, the lender (beneficiary) is not required to pay cash, but may credit bid up to the amount of the outstanding indebtedness (including trustee's fees and expenses). [Civ.C. § 2924h(b); Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 1238, 44 CR2d 352, 359; Dreyfuss v. Union Bank of Calif. (2000) 24 C4th 400, 410, 101 CR2d 29, 36; Kalnoki v. First American Trustee Servicing Solutions, LLC (2017) 8 CA5th 23, 45, 214 CR3d 292, 308-309]

The reason is that it would be pointless to require the lender to tender cash to itself. [Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell, supra, 10 C4th at 1238, 44 CR2d at 359; Kolodge v. Boyd (2001) 88 CA4th 349, 356, 105 CR2d 749, 754-755]

a) [6:535.1] Debt and security interest extinguished by full credit bid: By making a successful "full credit bid" (an amount equal to the unpaid principal and interest of the secured debt, together with costs, fees and other expenses of the foreclosure), the lender effectively pays the full outstanding balance of the debt and foreclosure costs to itself and takes title to the secured property. In turn, the borrower is released from further obligations under the defaulted note; both the underlying debt and lender's lien to secure the debt are extinguished, and the lender cannot thereafter pursue any other remedies even if the property is actually worth less than the amount of its bid. [Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 1238, 44 CR2d 352, 359; see also Najah v. Scottsdale Ins. Co. (2014) 230 CA4th 125, 133-134, 178 CR3d 400, 407-408—full credit bid rule prevents double recovery by lender whose only interest in property is repayment of debt and protects integrity of foreclosure auction by ensuring competitive bidding; National Enterprises, Inc. v. Woods (2001) 94 CA4th 1217, 1230, 115 CR2d 37, 45—lien extinguished by merger when lienholder acquires ownership of property]

The same holds true for a foreclosing junior lienholder who acquires the property by full credit bid: The debt secured by the junior lien is satisfied and the lien is extinguished, although the junior lienholder (like any other successful bidder) takes the property subject to the senior lien. [Kolodge v. Boyd (2001) 88 CA4th 349, 356, 105 CR2d 749, 755]

A full credit bid conclusively establishes the value of the property, extinguishes the lien and precludes the lender from pursuing any other remedy based on diminution of the value of the property. [See Bank of America, N.T. & S.A. v. Quackenbush (1997) 56 CA4th 1167, 1171, 66 CR2d 81, 83; Najah v. Scottsdale Ins. Co., supra, 230 CA4th at 142, 178 CR3d at 415 (¶ 6:535.6); see also Alliance Mortg. Co. v. Rothwell, supra, 10 C4th at 1236-1237, 44 CR2d at 358—price obtained at foreclosure sale is not same as FMV because property sold within strictures of state-prescribed foreclosure laws is worth less than property sold pursuant to normal marketing techniques; Washington Mut. Bank v. Jacoby (2009) 180 CA4th 639, 646, 103 CR3d 245, 250—trustee/mortgagee not entitled to insurance proceeds for prepurchase damage to subject property once trustee forecloses and makes successful full credit bid (¶ 6:535.6)]

1/ [6:535.2] Amounts properly included in "full credit bid": The amount of a full credit bid is the full amount of the outstanding indebtedness at the time of the foreclosure sale. Generally, that includes the unpaid principal and interest, plus costs, fees and other expenses of the foreclosure. In an appropriate case, it may also include any money the lender has advanced for real estate taxes unpaid by the debtor. [Nippon Credit Bank, Ltd. v. 1333 North Calif. Boulevard (2001) 86 CA4th 486, 500, 103 CR2d 421, 430]

However, fees and expenses of the foreclosure may not exceed statutorily-prescribed amounts. [See Civ.C. §§ 2924c(c), 2924d(b)(1) & (2); Jones v. Union Bank of Calif. (2005) 127 CA4th 542, 548, 25 CR3d 783, 788—legal fees incurred in foreclosure proceedings not limited by Civ.C. §§ 2924c or 2924d]

*Alert:*Civ.C. § 2924d(b)(2) (above), which authorizes limited additional trustee fees for responding to a bid or notice of intent to bid by an eligible bidder or eligible tenant bidder, has a 1/1/31 "sunset" date.

b) [6:535.3] Tort claims based on impairment of security barred by full credit bid: The lender's purchase of the secured property by full credit bid "establishes the value of the security as being equal to the outstanding indebtedness and ipso facto the nonexistence of any impairment of the security." Consequently, the lender's acquisition of the property by full credit bid effectively estops it from pursuing tort claims based on alleged impairment of its security (e.g., based on "bad faith waste"; see¶ 6:561.5d). [Cornelison v. Kornbluth (1975) 15 C3d 590, 606-608, 125 CR 557, 568-570; Kolodge v. Boyd (2001) 88 CA4th 349, 357, 105 CR2d 749, 755—lender who makes full credit bid irrevocably warrants value of security foreclosed upon is equal to outstanding indebtedness and not impaired (a "legal fiction")]

1/ [6:535.4] Third party fraud exception: A full credit bid does not bar the lender from pursuing a fraud cause of action against a third party nonborrower when the lender can establish: (i) it was induced to enter into the loan by the third party's false representation (i.e., lender was "intentionally and materially misled" by the third party "as to the value of the property prior to even making the loan"); and (ii) it still believed that the representation was true at the time it made the full credit bid. [Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 1245, 44 CR2d 352, 364-365 (emphasis added); Michelson v. Camp (1999) 72 CA4th 955, 969, 85 CR2d 539, 548; In re King Street Investments, Inc. (9th Cir. BAP 1998) 219 BR 848, 855—applicable to constructive fraud claim]

This exception does not apply, however, if the lender's reliance on a prior fraudulent misrepresentation was manifestly unreasonable. [Michelson v. Camp, supra, 72 CA4th at 969, 85 CR2d at 548—manifestly unreasonable to rely on prior misrepresentation where lender obtained new appraisal "expressly to resolve the issue of value at the time of foreclosure"; see Kolodge v. Boyd (2001) 88 CA4th 349, 373-374, 105 CR2d 749, 768—requisite factual inquiry whether plaintiff was justified in believing appraiser representation in light of "own knowledge and experience" not made]

2/ [6:535.4a] Exception for other third party tort claims:Alliance*, supra, did not expressly limit the exception to third party fraud; and other courts have since extended the exception to cover negligence claims against third parties. [Kolodge v. Boyd (2001) 88 CA4th 349, 364-365, 105 CR2d 749, 761—"everything the Alliance court said about fraud can also be said about … negligence claims"; see also First Comm'l Mortgage Co. v. Reece (2001) 89 CA4th 731, 743-745, 108 CR2d 23, 32-34 (fraud, negligent misrepresentation and breach of contract claims upheld; ¶ 6:535.5)]

Contra authority: One case held otherwise, concluding that the Alliance exception applies only to fraud claims. [Pacific Inland Bank v. Ainsworth (1995) 41 CA4th 277, 283, 48 CR2d 489, 492—full credit bid barred lender from suing appraiser for undervaluation of foreclosed-upon properties]

But Pacific Inland Bank has not been followed by any other court and, in fact, has been criticized as "wrongly decided." The purpose of the full credit bid bar, "which is to insure the integrity of foreclosure sales in situations covered by the antideficiency statues, relates only to the debtor-creditor relationship. The bar of the rule was not designed to relieve third parties of the consequences of tortious conduct … Application of the rule to bar claims against tortfeasors not party to the note goes far beyond the purpose of the rule and is simply irrational." [See Kolodge v. Boyd, supra, 88 CA4th at 370-372, 105 CR2d at 765-767 (emphasis added); see also In re King Street Investments, Inc. (9th Cir. BAP 1998) 219 BR 848, 855 (construing Calif. law) (dictum rejecting Pacific Inland Bank)]

3/ [6:535.5] Exception applies to claim arising from originating lender's compelled repurchase after servicing lender's full credit bid: The Alliance exception also applies where an originating lender justifiably relied on third party misrepresentations in making the loan and selling it to another lender (the "servicing lender") and then, after the foreclosing servicing lender's successful full credit bid, suffered damages when it was compelled (by its contract with the servicing lender or by federal regulations) to repurchase the foreclosed property only to sell it at a loss. [Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 1248-1249, 44 CR2d 352, 366; First Comm'l Mortgage Co. v. Reece (2001) 89 CA4th 731, 742, 108 CR2d 23, 31]

Although a full credit bid is deemed an admission of the property's value (¶ 6:535.3), a repurchasing lender does not control the amount the servicing (successor) lender bids at the foreclosure sale. Therefore, the rationale for holding the foreclosing lender to its full credit bid is inapplicable in this situation. [First Comm'l Mortgage Co. v. Reece, supra, 89 CA4th at 742, 108 CR2d at 31, fn. 4]

c) [6:535.6] Right to insurance proceeds for prepurchase damage: Since acquisition of the property by full credit bid satisfies the secured lender's only interest in the property (repayment of its debt), it also wipes out any entitlement the lender may have had to insurance proceeds for prepurchase damage to the property. When the debt is extinguished, so is the lender's insurable interest. [Cornelison v. Kornbluth (1975) 15 C3d 590, 606-607, 125 CR 557, 568-569; Washington Mut. Bank v. Jacoby (2009) 180 CA4th 639, 646, 103 CR3d 245, 250; see also Najah v. Scottsdale Ins. Co. (2014) 230 CA4th 125, 142, 178 CR3d 400, 415—full credit bid at foreclosure sale under second trust deed precluded lienholder from making claim on insurance proceeds for preforeclosure damage]

1/ [6:535.6a] Compare—lender's rights in common fund insurance proceeds as property owner: Where insurance proceeds for prepurchase damage are held by a homeowners' association for the benefit of the common owners, a full-credit bid foreclosing lender is entitled to share in the proceeds in its capacity as owner and association member (rather than as a lender). [Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. v. Tutungi (1998) 66 CA4th 727, 731-732, 78 CR2d 203, 205]

d) [6:535.7] Distinguish—*partial credit bids: Nothing in the law requires a secured lender involved in a trustee's sale to make a full credit bid. The lender may bid whatever they believe the property is worth (although the secured lender is most often tempted to make a full credit bid because CCP § 580d prohibits a deficiency judgment after nonjudicial foreclosure in any event, ¶ 6:570). [See Dreyfuss v. Union Bank of Calif. (2000) 24 C4th 400, 413-414, 101 CR2d 29, 38-39—foreclosing lender entitled to credit bid in whatever amount it thinks property is worth; Kolodge v. Boyd (2001) 88 CA4th 349, 357, 105 CR2d 749, 755—many creditors enter low bids to provide access to additional security]

1/ [6:535.7a] Recoverable damages for prepurchase property damage: A partial-credit-bid foreclosing lender is not barred from pursuing claims against a third party for alleged impairment of its security. However, the lender's recovery is limited generally to the unpaid balance of the debt. [Track Mortg. Group, Inc. v. Crusader Ins. Co. (2002) 98 CA4th 857, 865, 120 CR2d 228, 234—partial-credit-bid foreclosing lender's compensatory damages for property insurer's breach of contract and bad faith in failing to repair property reduced by amount of lender's partial bid]

Damages exceeding the unpaid portion of the debt are recoverable only when the lender shows that the third party's conduct caused the lender's bid to be higher than the actual value of the property. [Track Mortg. Group, Inc. v. Crusader Ins. Co., supra, 98 CA4th at 866, 120 CR2d at 234; see also¶ 6:535.4]

e) [6:535.8] Application of full credit bid rule where multiple notes secured by single property: Where a lender has made several loans secured by the same piece of property, a full credit bid in the amount of the junior obligation satisfies the total indebtedness under all the notes held by that creditor, even if the creditor forecloses on the junior lien alone. This rule is premised on the property's value being equivalent to the value of the total debt held by the junior lienholder at the time of sale. [See Najah v. Scottsdale Ins. Co. (2014) 230 CA4th 125, 141-143, 178 CR3d 400, 414-415; Romo v. Stewart Title of Calif. (1995) 35 CA4th 1609, 1617-1618, 42 CR2d 414, 420-421; but see also Kolodge v. Boyd (2001) 88 CA4th 349, 361-362, 105 CR2d 749, 759-760—where lender made several loans secured by same property it is question of fact whether amounts due under all notes should be considered collectively in determining whether lender made full credit bid (courts generally focus on whether notes or writings between parties reflect their express intent that liens would merge with security's title and, if not, full credit bid rule does not apply)]

➪ [6:535.9] Comment: In Kolodge, supra, the lender held three trust deeds secured by two properties. When the owner defaulted on all three loans, the lender held a foreclosure sale on the third trust deed, bidding only the amount of principal due thereunder based upon appraisals supporting inflated values for the underlying properties. The lender then pursued claims for fraud and negligence against the appraiser whose evaluations allegedly induced him to make the loans, and the court concluded such claims were not precluded by the full credit bid rule.

In distinguishing Kolodge, the Najah court observed, "Kolodge stand[s] for nothing more than that the full credit bid rule is inapplicable where the lender is fraudulently or negligently induced to make the bid." [Najah v. Scottsdale Ins. Co. (2014) 230 CA4th 125, 141, 178 CR3d 400, 413 (brackets in original; internal quotes omitted)]

5) [6:535.10] Completion of sale: A nonjudicial foreclosure sale is deemed final when the trustee accepts the last and highest bid. [Civ.C. § 2924h(c); Nguyen v. Calhoun (2003) 105 CA4th 428, 441, 129 CR2d 436, 447; see also Matson v. S.B.S. Trust Deed Network (2020) 46 CA5th 33, 41-42, 259 CR3d 526, 533—because sale is complete upon final bid's acceptance, trustee's ministerial act of recording sale deed over purchaser's objection does not justify overturning sale; *Millennium Rock Mortgage, Inc. v. T.D. a) [6:535.10a] Special post-sale bidding rules for residential properties with 1-4 units in 2021-2030: In order to forestall evictions during the COVID-19 pandemic, the Legislature temporarily changed the nonjudicial foreclosure process to afford qualifying tenants and certain nonprofits and governmental agencies an opportunity to bid after a trustee's sale of residential properties containing one to four residential units. This is so unless the successful bidder at the trustee's sale is a "prospective owner-occupant" (¶ 6:535.10c). [See Civ.C. § 2924m(c) (1/1/31 "sunset" date) —date trustee's sale is deemed final varies according to purchaser's status]

Once the COVID-19 pandemic subsided, the Legislature extended the above program's duration and introduced an affordable housing restriction as a means of addressing California's continuing housing crisis (¶ 6:535.10k).

Caution: After introducing the special bidding rules in 2020, the Legislature amended the operative statutes in 2021, and again in 2022 (see Stats. 2020, Ch. 202, eff. 1/1/21; Stats 2021, Ch. 255, oper. 1/1/22; Stats. 2022, Ch. 642, eff. 1/1/23). Each amendment made substantial changes to the definitions for potential bidders and to the procedures and requirements involved. Thus, practitioners should exercise caution in determining which rules apply to a given situation.

1/ [6:535.10b] "Prospective owner-occupant" is successful bidder: Prospective owner-occupants (¶ 6:535.10c) have priority rights to purchase residential property from foreclosure. If a prospective owner-occupant is the last and highest bidder at a trustee's sale of a one-to four-unit residential property, the sale is deemed final when the trustee accepts the prospective owner-occupant's bid. [Civ.C. § 2924m(c)(1) (1/1/31 "sunset" date); see also Civ.C. § 2924h (outlining procedures and conditions for trustee to accept bid)]

2/ [6:535.10c] "Prospective owner-occupant" defined; mandatory affidavit or declaration: A "prospective owner-occupant" is a natural person who presents to the trustee an affidavit or declaration under penalty of perjury certifying that they will occupy the property as their primary residence within 60 days of the trustee's deed being recorded and will maintain their occupancy for at least one year. [Civ.C. § 2924m(a)(1)(A), (B) (1/1/31 "sunset" date)]

The above affidavit or declaration also must aver that the prospective owner-occupant is (i) not the mortgagor/trustor or the child, spouse, parent, employee, officer, or member of the mortgagor/trustor; (ii) not the grantor of a living trust named in the property title when the notice of default was recorded; (iii) not a person with an ownership interest in the mortgagor (unless the mortgager is a publicly traded company); and (iv) not purchasing the property as the agent of any other person or entity. (Civ.C. § 2924m(a)(1)(C)-(D) (1/1/31 "sunset" date)). No later than 5 p.m. on the next business day following the trustee's sale, the prospective owner-occupant must submit the affidavit or declaration affirming that they fulfill the prospective owner-occupant requirements. [Civ.C. § 2924m(c)(1) (1/1/31 "sunset" date)]

Note: An "eligible tenant buyer" (¶ 6:535.10h) also may qualify as a prospective owner-occupant. [Civ.C. § 2924m(b) (1/1/31 "sunset" date)]

3/ [6:535.10d] Prospective owner-occupant not successful bidder; notice to potential bidders: If a prospective owner-occupant (¶ 6:535.10c) is not the last and highest bidder, an "eligible tenant buyer" (¶

6:535.10h) or "eligible bidder" (¶ 6:535.10i) may bid on the residential property after the trustee's sale and must "be deemed the last and highest bidder pursuant to the power of sale." This is so provided the statutory requirements are met (¶ 6:535.10g ff.). [See Civ.C. § 2924m(c)(2), (3), (4) (1/1/31 "sunset" date)]

Within 48 hours after the trustee's sale to a party other than a prospective owner-occupant, the trustee (or an authorized agent) must post on its internet website, and make available by calling the telephone number set forth in the notice of sale (¶ 6:531.2 ff.), only the following information: (i) the date the trustee's sale took place; (ii) the amount of the last and highest bid; and (iii) an address at which the trustee can receive documents sent by U.S. mail and overnight delivery. This information must remain available for at least 45 days after the property sale, and must be accessible using the file number assigned to the case that is set forth on the notice of sale. [Civ.C. § 2024m(e) (1/1/31 "sunset" date)]

4/ [6:535.10e] 15-day deadline to deliver notice of intent to bid or sale is final: If a prospective owner-occupant (¶ 6:535.10c) is not the last and highest bidder, then eligible tenant buyers (¶ 6:535.10h) and eligible bidders (¶ 6:535.10i) have 15 days to deliver either a bid or a nonbinding notice of intent to bid to the trustee. The notice of intent to bid must (i) be sent by certified mail, overnight delivery or other method that allows verification of the delivery date; (ii) be accompanied by an affidavit or sworn declaration identifying the specific category of eligible bidder (¶ 6:535.10i) in which that person or entity claims membership and affirming that the person meets the applicable criteria for that category; (iii) be received by the trustee no later than 5 p.m. on the 15th day following the trustee's sale (or the next business day thereafter if the 15th day is a weekend or holiday); and (iv) include the bidder's current telephone number and return address. [Civ.C. § 2924m(c)(1), (2) (1/1/31 "sunset" date)]

If no eligible tenant buyer or eligible bidder submits a bid or a notice of intent to bid, the trustee's sale is deemed final 15 days after the trustee's sale. [Civ.C. § 2924m(c)(2) (1/1/31 "sunset" date)]

5/ [6:535.10f] Notice of intent to bid timely delivered; maximum 45 days to deliver bid: If a trustee receives timely notice of an intent to bid (¶ 6:535.10e), eligible tenant buyers (¶ 6:535.10h) and eligible bidders (¶ 6:535.10i) have up to 45 days after the trustee's sale to submit a bid on the property. The bidding party must send the bid to the trustee by certified mail, overnight delivery, or other method that allows verification of the delivery date, and the bid must be in the form of cash or a cashier's check, accompanied by an affidavit or sworn declaration, along with the bidder's current telephone number and return address. If the bidder submitted a timely notice of intent to bid, the trustee must receive the bid no later than 5 p.m. on the 45th day following the trustee's sale (or the next business day thereafter if the 45th day is a weekend or holiday). On the other hand, if the bidder did not submit a timely notice of intent to bid, the trustee must receive the bid no later than the 15th day following the trustee's sale (or the next business day thereafter if the 15th day is a weekend or holiday). [See Civ.C. § 2924m(c)(3), (4) (1/1/31 "sunset" date)]

6/ [6:535.10g] Priority for eligible tenant buyers; bid requirements: If the trustee receives a timely bid from the representative of all eligible tenant buyers (¶ 6:535.10h) and the bid equals the full amount of the last and highest bid at the trustee's sale, then the eligible tenant buyers "shall be deemed the last and highest bidder pursuant to the power of sale" and the sale will be deemed final as of the date the representative submitted the bid to the trustee. The bid must be accompanied by an affidavit or declaration under penalty of perjury stating that the persons represented meet the statutory criteria of eligible tenant buyers and constitute all of the eligible tenant buyers. The bid must be limited to a single amount and cannot contain instructions for successive bid amounts. [Civ.C. § 2924m(c)(3) (1/1/31 "sunset" date)]

7/ [6:535.10h] "Eligible tenant buyer" defined: For calendar year 2022, an "eligible tenant buyer" was defined as a natural person who at the time of the trustee's sale was (i) occupying the property as their primary residence; (ii) under a rental or lease agreement entered into as the result of an arm's length transaction with the mortgagor/ trustor on a date prior to the recording of the notice of default against the property; and (iii) not the mortgagor/ trustor, or the child, spouse, or parent of the mortgagor/trustor. [Civ.C. § 2924m(a)(2) (amended Stats. 2021, Ch. 255; oper. 1/1/22) (1/1/26 "sunset" date); see also Civ.C. § 2924m(n) & (o) (added Stats. 2022, Ch. 642) (specifying 2021 amendments became oper. 1/1/22-1/1/23) (1/1/31 "sunset" date)]

Commencing January 1, 2023, an "eligible tenant buyer" is defined as a natural person who at the time of the trustee's sale is (i) occupying the property as their primary residence; (ii) under a rental or lease agreement entered as the result of an arm's-length transaction with the mortgagor/trustor or their predecessor in interest on a date prior to the recording of the notice of default against the property; (iii) not the mortgagor/trustor, or the child, spouse, or parent of the mortgagor/trustor; (iv) not acting as an agent of another (except when submitting a bid on behalf of all eligible tenant buyers under Civ.C. § 2924m(c)(3)); and (v) not the debtor in a Chapter 7, 11, 12 or 13 bankruptcy case filed during the period starting on the date of the trustee's sale and ending on the 45th day after the sale (or the next business day thereafter if the 45th day is a weekend or holiday). [Civ.C. § 2924m(a)(2) (amended Stats. 2022, Ch. 642; eff. 1/1/23) (1/1/31 "sunset" date)]

To demonstrate eligibility, the tenant buyer must submit a declaration or affidavit under penalty of perjury with the bid, attaching a copy of the signed and dated rental or lease agreement or, if unavailable, evidence of six months' rent or utility payments made by the tenant prior to recordation of the notice of default. [Civ.C. § 2924m(a)(2)(B), (4) (1/1/31 "sunset" date); see also Civ.C. § 2924m(o) (subd. added Stats. 2022, Ch. 642; eff. 1/1/23) (expanding "eligible tenant buyer" definition) (1/1/31 "sunset" date)]

8/ [6:535.10i] "Eligible bidder" defined: For calendar year 2022, an "eligible bidder" was defined as (i) an eligible tenant buyer (¶ 6:535.10h); (ii) a "prospective owner-occupant" (¶ 6:535.10c); (iii) a nonprofit association, nonprofit corporation, or cooperative corporation in which an eligible tenant buyer or a prospective owner-occupant is a voting member or director; (iv) an eligible nonprofit corporation based in California whose primary activity is the development and preservation of affordable rental housing; (v) a limited partnership or limited liability company in which the managing general partner or managing member is an eligible nonprofit corporation based in California whose primary activity is the development and preservation of affordable housing; (vi) a community land trust (see Rev. & Tax.C. § 402.1(a)(11)(C)(ii); (vii) a limited-equity housing cooperative (see Civ.C. § 817); or (viii) the state, the Regents of the University of California, a county, city, district, public authority, or public agency, and any other political subdivision or public corporation in the state. [Civ.C. § 2924m(a)(3) (amended Stats. 2021, Ch. 255, oper. 1/1/22) (1/1/26 "sunset" date); see also Civ.C. § 2924m(n) & (o) (added Stats. 2022, Ch. 642) (specifying 2021 amendments became oper. 1/1/22-1/1/23) (1/1/31 "sunset" date)]

Commencing January 1, 2023, an "eligible bidder" is (i) an eligible tenant buyer (¶ 6:535.10h); (ii) a prospective owner-occupant (¶ 6:535.10c); (iii) a nonprofit association, nonprofit corporation, or cooperative corporation in which an eligible tenant buyer is a voting member or director; (iv) an eligible non profit corporation that is certified by the IRS as being tax-exempt, is not a private foundation, is in good standing with the Attorney General's Registry of Charities and Fundraisers, is based in California with all of its board members having their primary residences in California, and whose primary activities include the development and preservation of affordable rental or homeownership housing; (v) a limited liability company wholly owned by one or more eligible nonprofit corporations as described in (iii) and (iv) above; (vi) a community land trust (see Rev. & Tax.C. § 402.1(a)(11)(C)(ii); (vii) a limited-equity housing cooperative (see Civ.C. § 817); or (viii) the state, the Regents of the University of California, a county, city, district, public authority, or public agency, and any other political subdivision or public corporation in the state. [See Civ.C. § 2924m(a)(3) (amended Stats. 2022, Ch. 642; eff. 1/1/23, and further amended by Stats. 2023, Ch. 478; eff. 1/1/24 to reflect name change from Registry of Charitable Trusts to Registry of Charities and Fundraisers) (1/1/31 "sunset" date)]

9/ [6:535.10j] Eligible bidders; bid requirements: If the trustee receives timely bids from one or more eligible bidders (¶ 6:535.10i), and the bids exceed the full amount of the last and highest bid at the trustee's sale, then the eligible bidder who submitted the highest bid "shall be deemed the last and highest bidder pursuant to the power of sale" and the sale will be deemed final at 5 p.m. on the 45th day after the trustee's sale. Eligible bidders must submit an affidavit or sworn declaration that identifies which category of eligible bidder (¶ 6:535.10i) they fall into, and must attest that they meet the applicable statutory criteria for that category. [Civ.C. § 2924m(c)(4) (1/1/31 "sunset" date)]

10/ [6:535.10k] Affordable housing restriction for certain eligible bidders: Commencing January 1, 2023, any entity eligible to bid post-sale on a foreclosure property—other than (i) a "prospective owner-occupant" (¶

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

6:535.10c), (ii) an "eligible tenant buyer" (¶ 6:535.10h), or (iii) the State, the Regents of the University of California, a county, city, district, public authority, agency or corporation, or any other political subdivision in the state—must encumber the subject property with a recorded covenant ensuring the property will be sold or rented at an affordable rate for lower income households (as defined in Health & Saf.C. §§ 50052.5, 50053, 50079.5) for at least 30 years from the date of the trustee's deed. [Civ.C. § 2924o (1/1/31 "sunset" date)]

Tenants of the subject property have a right of action to enforce this restriction, either by bringing suit at law or in equity, or to defend against an unlawful detainer action. [Civ.C. § 2924o(b) (1/1/31 "sunset" date)]

11/ [6:535.10l] Trustee's post-sale duties: The trustee may reasonably rely on the eligibility affidavit or declaration submitted by the bidders (¶ 6:535.10j) and must attach the affidavit or declaration regarding bidder eligibility as an exhibit to the recorded trustee's deed. [Civ.C. § 2924m(d) (1/1/31 "sunset" date)]

In addition, if an eligible bidder (¶ 6:535.10i) is the successor buyer, the trustee must electronically transmit to the State Attorney General, within 15 days of the sale's deemed finality, all of the following (Civ.C. § 2924m(i)) (1/1/31 "sunset" date):

— dates when trustee's sale took place and when it was deemed final;

— winning bidder's name;

— property's street address and assessor's parcel number;

— copy of recorded trustee's deed and winning bidder's attached affidavit/declaration;

— category to which eligible bidder belongs.

12/ [6:535.10m] Property title and insurance during post-sale bidding procedure: Until the sale of a residential property containing one to four residential units is deemed final under Civ.C. § 2924m's special bidding rules, title to the property remains with the trustor. The fact the finality of the trustee's sale is pending during this period does not operate to terminate hazard insurance coverage in effect at the time of the trustee's sale. [Civ.C. § 2924m(f), (l) (1/1/31 "sunset" date)]

b) [6:535.11] Recording deadline to trigger "relation-back" effect: Except for the ten-year period between January 1, 2021 and December 31, 2030 (¶ 6:535.11a), a trustee's sale will be deemed perfected as of 8 a.m. on the date of the sale provided the trustee's deed is recorded within 15 calendar days after the sale (or the next business day thereafter if the county recorder in which the property is located is closed on the 15th day). [Civ.C. § 2924h(c) (amended Stats. 2022, Ch. 642; eff. 1/1/23, oper. 1/1/31)]

1/ [6:535.11a] Special rules in 2021 and 2022-2030: From January 1, 2021 to December 31, 2021, a trustee's sale was deemed perfected as of 8 a.m. on the date of the sale, provided the trustee's deed was recorded within 18 calendar days after the sale (or the next business day following the 18th day if the county recorder in which the property is located was closed on the 18th day). This was so unless an eligible bidder submitted written notice of an intent to bid (¶ 6:535.10e). In that case, the trustee's sale was deemed perfected as of 8 a.m. on the date of the sale, provided the trustee's deed was recorded within 48 calendar days after the sale (or the next business day following the 48th day if the county recorder in which the property is located was closed on the 48th day). [See Stats. 2020, Ch. 202, adding Civ.C. § 2924m(a)(3) (defining "eligible" bidder), and amending Civ.C. § 2924h(c)]

The Legislature lengthened the above recording deadlines in 2021 (see Stats. 2021, Ch. 255, amending Civ.C. § 2924h(c) (oper. 1/1/22)) (allowing 21 days to record if there was no eligible bidder and 60 days if there was). Thereafter, in 2022, the special bidding procedure was again extended, this time through 2030. [See Civ.C. §§ 2924h(h), 2924m(m) (Stats. 2022, Ch. 642; eff. 1/1/23) (1/1/31 "sunset" date)]

Beginning January 1, 2031, the special bidding rights in Civ.C. § 2924m expire and the 15-day recording deadline (¶ 6:535.11) will be reinstated. [See Civ.C. § 2924m(m) (1/1/31 "sunset" date for special bidding rights) and Civ.C. § 2924h(c), (h) (amended Stats. 2022, Ch. 642, § 8, oper. 1/1/31) (reinstating 15-day deadline)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

2/ [6:535.11b] “Relation-back” protection: The relation-back provision (¶ 6:535.11) protects all parties to the sale. The trustee and mortgagee benefit because the statute allows time for the successful bidder's check to clear. [See Dr. Leevil, LLC v. Westlake Health Care Center (2018) 6 C5th 474, 481-482, 241 CR3d 12, 18]

The relation-back provision (¶ 6:535.11) also shields the foreclosure purchaser from the risk that the debtor (trustor) will sell to someone else after the trustee's sale, who might record its deed before the foreclosure purchaser records the trustee's deed. So long as the foreclosure purchaser records within 15 calendar days of the trustee's sale, they will prevail over intervening purchasers and encumbrances. [In re Bebensee-Wong (9th Cir. BAP 2000) 248 BR 820, 822; but see special rules for calendar years 2021-2030 (¶ 6:535.11a)]

➪ [6:535.11c] PRACTICE POINTER: The relation-back benefit (¶ 6:535.11) does not accrue until the trustee's sale deed is recorded. Thus, counsel should ensure that recording actually has occurred before advising the client it may exercise the rights of an owner with perfected title. On this point, Dr. Leevil, supra, is instructive. In that case, the successful bidder on a commercial property sent an unlawful detainer notice to a tenant whose leasehold was extinguished by foreclosure one day following the sale. The new owner, however, did not record the trustee's sale deed until six days after the sale. Since the deed had not been recorded, and the deemed perfection had not yet been triggered, the new owner's unlawful detainer notice was void.

3/ [6:535.11d] Compare—30-day recording deadline for common interest development units: “Notwithstanding any other law,” the transfer of property in a common interest development pursuant to a nonjudicial foreclosure sale must be recorded within 30 days after the sale date. [Civ.C. § 2924.1]

c) [6:535.12] Effect of intervening bankruptcy: The Civ.C. § 2924h(c) relation-back provision also protects foreclosure purchasers from the risk the sale will be avoided in bankruptcy should the debtor file a bankruptcy petition after the sale but before the trustee's deed is recorded. The sale survives the debtor's postforeclosure bankruptcy filing provided the trustee's deed is recorded by the deadlines established in § 2924h(c) (see discussion at ¶ 6:535.11 to 6:535.11a) because, pursuant to § 2924h(c), the transfer of title will then relate back prepetition). [In re Bebensee-Wong (9th Cir. BAP 2000) 248 BR 820, 823; see also In re Perl (9th Cir. BAP 2016) 811 F3d 1120, 1127-1129—no violation of automatic stay where prebankruptcy foreclosure sale and subsequent issuance of adverse unlawful detainer judgment extinguished legal and equitable interests claimed by Chapter 13 debtor]

On the other hand, a foreclosure sale conducted after the debtor files a bankruptcy petition is void as violating the automatic stay in bankruptcy (11 USC § 362), regardless of when the trustee's deed is recorded. [In re Bebensee-Wong, supra, 248 BR at 822; see In re Sanders (BC SD CA 1996) 198 BR 326, 329—§ 2924h(c) relation-back may only be invoked upon a valid foreclosure sale that occurs prepetition]

6) [6:535.13] Distribution of sale proceeds: Proceeds from the trustee's foreclosure sale are applied (i) first, to pay the trustee's fees and expenses in exercising the power of sale and conducting the sale; (ii) next, to satisfy the debt to the beneficiary (lender); (iii) next, to the payment of junior creditors in the order of their priority; and (iv) the balance, if any, to the trustor (or its successor in interest). [Civ.C. § 2924k(a); Caito v. United Calif. Bank (1978) 20 C3d 694, 701, 144 CR 751, 754; MTC Fin'l, Inc. v. Nationstar Mortgage, LLC (2018) 19 CA5th 811, 814, 228 CR3d 238, 240]

a) Application

1/ [6:535.13a] The holder of a junior lien encumbering a cotenant's 75% undivided interest in foreclosed property was entitled to 75% of the surplus proceeds. The cotenant owner of the remaining 25% undivided interest in property was entitled to 25% of the surplus. [Zieve, Brodnax & Steele, LLP v. Dhindsa (2020) 49 CA5th 27, 40-41, 262 CR3d 567, 576-577]

2/ [6:535.13b] An interpleader action to determine the distribution of funds between a trustor and purchaser at a trustee's sale was unnecessary even though the borrower filed a wrongful foreclosure action challenging the sale. Reason: Civ.C. § 2924k(a) dictates payment of surplus funds to parties who recorded their interests before the trustee's sale. [Placer Foreclosure, Inc. v. Aflalo (2018) 23 CA5th 1109, 1114, 233 CR3d 694, 698]

3/ [6:535.13c] A county that recorded a lis pendens, but failed to follow the statutory procedures for seizing property in satisfaction of its criminal restitution claim, had no rights in the foreclosed property or surplus proceeds. [Integrated Lender Services, Inc. v. County of Los Angeles (2018) 22 CA5th 867, 877-878, 231 CR3d 902, 910]

4/ [6:535.13d] A Fam.C. § 290 order for distribution of surplus proceeds to a wife to satisfy her husband's obligation for a community property equalizing payment was unenforceable because no valid lien secured the order. Reason: Civ.C. § 2924k(a) authorizes distribution of sale proceeds only to satisfy secured obligations. [Cal-Western Reconveyance Corp. v. Reed (2007) 152 CA4th 1308, 1317-1318, 62 CR3d 244, 250-251]

b) [6:535.14] Additional notice to potential claimants: When proceeds remain after the beneficiary's debt is satisfied and all of the trustee's fees and expenses have been paid, unless an interpleader action has been filed within 30 days of execution of the deed after the foreclosure sale, the trustee is required to send written notice to those persons with recorded interests in the property who would have been entitled to receive a copy of the "notice of default" pursuant to Civ.C. § 2924b(b) & (c) (see¶ 6:527). [Civ.C. § 2924j(a); see also Banc of America Leasing & Capital, LLC v. 3 Arch Trustee Services, Inc. (2009) 180 CA4th 1090, 1102-1106, 103 CR3d 397, 405-408 (citing text)—trustee has no duty to search for judgment lien holders who fail to request special notice; Cal-Western Reconveyance Corp. v. Reed (2007) 152 CA4th 1308, 1322-1323, 62 CR3d 244, 254-255—trustor's former attorney not entitled to Civ.C. § 2924j notice despite having filed notice of fee lien against trustor's eventual surplus recovery (lawyer not a party to action and "not among those persons with recorded interests" immediately prior to trustee's sale; moreover, lien on prospective recovery must be enforced in separate action)]

The notice must inform each such person that there has been a trustee's sale; they may have a claim to all or a portion of the remaining proceeds; they may contact the trustee to pursue any possible claim; and before the trustee may act on any such claim, they must provide the trustee with certain written information regarding the claim. [See Civ.C. § 2924j(a); Banc of America Leasing & Capital, LLC v. 3 Arch Trustee Services, Inc., supra, 180 CA4th at 1102, 103 CR3d at 405]

c) [6:535.14a] Determination of claims to surplus proceeds: The trustee must exercise "due diligence" in determining the priority of written claims received from those persons to whom the notice set forth at ¶ 6:535.14 was sent. If there is no dispute as to the priority of written claims to the surplus proceeds, the trustee shall pay the proceeds within 30 days after conclusion of said notice period. But if the trustee has failed to determine the priority of the claims within 90 days following the 30-day notice period, within 10 days thereafter the trustee must either deposit the funds with the court clerk or file an interpleader action. [Civ.C. § 2924j(b); Banc of America Leasing & Capital, LLC v. 3 Arch Trustee Services, Inc. (2009) 180 CA4th 1090, 1102, 103 CR3d 397, 405 (citing text); Cal-Western Reconveyance Corp. v. Reed (2007) 152 CA4th 1308, 1322-1323, 62 CR3d 244, 254, fn. 8]

The Civ.C. § 2924j disputed claims procedures apply to those persons making claims before the foreclosure sale (e.g., lienholders), not purchasers at the sale. [See Placer Foreclosure, Inc. v. Aflalo (2018) 23 CA5th 1109, 1114, 233 CR3d 694, 698—interpleader action to determine allocation of surplus proceeds between trustor who filed wrongful foreclosure suit challenging trustee's sale and purchaser at sale deemed improper (¶ 6:535.13)]

If the trustee decides to deposit the funds with the court clerk, the trustee must first send written notice to all interested persons, as defined, informing them of the trustee's intention to deposit the funds and that their claims must be filed within 30 days from the date of the notice. The trustee also files a "declaration of the unresolved claims" at this time (below) (see Civ.C. § 2924j(c), (d)). Each claimant has the burden of proving the priority of their claim to surplus proceeds. [MTC Fin'l Inc. v. California Dept. of Tax & Fee Admin. (2019) 41 CA5th 742, 749, 254 CR3d 485, 491]

FORM: Judicial Council form CIV-170 (Petition and Declaration Regarding Unresolved Claims and Deposit of Undistributed Surplus Proceeds of Trustee's Sale) must be used to commence the proceeding, available on the California Courts website (www.courts.ca.gov).

1/ [6:535.14b] Compare—federal tax liens: The United States is not required to file a claim to surplus proceeds within 30 days from the date of a trustee's Civ.C. § 2924j(d) notice of intent to deposit funds (¶ 6:535.14a). Instead, federal law provides the government with a 60-day period to respond to any state law interpleader-type action and preempts state law to the extent the latter is inconsistent. [See Quality Loan Service Corp. v. 24702 Pallas Way, Mission Viejo, CA 92691 (9th Cir. 2011) 635 F3d 1128, 1133 (interpreting Civ.C. § 2924j deposit procedure as "functionally equivalent" to interpleader action)]

Moreover, "the priority of a federal tax lien does not depend on the vagaries of when the United States files a claim in state court relative to a competing claimant … Federal law governs the relative priority of federal tax liens and state-created liens … As a general rule, a lien in favor of the United States is not disturbed by a nonjudicial sale of the property." [See Quality Loan Service Corp. v. 24702 Pallas Way, Mission Viejo, CA 92691, supra, 635 F3d at 1134 (emphasis in original; internal quotes and brackets omitted)—federal tax liens filed first in time had priority over individual's judgment lien notwithstanding government's failure to file surplus proceeds claim within 30 days from date of Civ.C. § 2924j(d) notice]

[6:535.14c - 6:535.14f] Reserved.

2/ [6:535.14g] Determining claims where partial subordination agreement creates inconsistent priority among multiple lienholders: Sometimes a superior trust deed is subordinated to another trust deed that is subject to intervening liens to which the subordinated trust deed is otherwise paramount. When this occurs and the trustee is unable to determine lien priority for the purpose of distributing surplus funds, the matter passes to the court to decide. [See Wells Fargo Bank v. Neilsen (2009) 178 CA4th 602, 614-615, 100 CR3d 547, 554-555 (applying precedent under judicial foreclosure statutes (CCP § 704.760 et seq.) to determine lienholders' priority absent any such direction under nonjudicial foreclosure statutes (Civ.C. § 2924 et seq.) (discussed further at¶ 6:473))]

7) [6:535.14h] Remedies against defaulting bidders: There are statutory civil and criminal remedies, as well as common law tort remedies, against bidders who fail to honor their accepted final bids:

a) [6:535.14i] Statutory civil and criminal remedies: A last and highest bidder who fails to deliver to the trustee, upon demand, the amount of the final bid is liable to the trustee for all damages the trustee may sustain, including court costs and reasonable attorney fees. Moreover, for a willful default, the bidder is guilty of a misdemeanor, punishable by a fine of up to $2,500. [Civ.C. § 2924h(d)]

If the last and highest bidder cancels a "cash equivalent" instrument (e.g., a personal check) submitted to the trustee as payment, the trustee will renotice the sale and is entitled to recover its attendant costs. [Civ.C. § 2924h(d)]

b) [6:535.14j] Common law tort remedies: The statutory remedies (¶ 6:535.14i) are not exclusive. A creditor/ beneficiary may pursue additional, common law tort remedies against a bidder for misconduct arising out of a nonjudicial foreclosure sale, provided those remedies are not inconsistent with the nonjudicial foreclosure statutes' underlying policies and purpose (¶ 6:514.2). [See Banc of America Leasing & Capital, LLC v. 3 Arch Trustee Services, Inc. (2009) 180 CA4th 1090, 1103, 103 CR3d 397, 405-406 (citing text); California Golf, L.L.C. v. Cooper (2008) 163 CA4th 1053, 1067, 1069-1071, 78 CR3d 153, 165, 167-168—foreclosing beneficiary not limited to statutory remedies where bidders fraudulently and apparently feloniously stopped payment on 13 cashier's checks (upholding beneficiary's suit against bidders for fraud and breach of warranty); compare Matson v. S.B.S. Trust Deed Network (2020) 46 CA5th 33, 45, 259 CR3d 526, 536—purchaser who paid excessive price could not overturn properly conducted trustee's sale due to their own unilateral mistake of fact]

(j) [6:535.14k] Owner's duty to maintain vacant residential property following foreclosure: Legal owners must maintain the vacant residential property they purchase at foreclosure sales (or acquire through foreclosure) once the sale is deemed final. Failure to do so may result in fines and penalties of up to $2,000 per day for the first 30 days, and up to $5,000 per day thereafter, provided the owners are given statutorily-prescribed notice and an opportunity to correct. [See Civ.C. § 2929.3(a); Civ.C. § 2924h(c)—sale is "deemed final upon the acceptance of the last and highest bid"; and ¶ 6:534 ff., 6:535.10 ff.]

"Failure to maintain" vacant residential property means failing to (i) care for the property's exterior; (ii) take action to prevent trespassers or squatters; (iii) take action to prevent mosquito larvae from growing in standing water; and (iv) prevent other conditions that may create a public nuisance. [Civ.C. § 2929.3(b)]

(k) [6:535.14*l*] Preeviction notice to tenants of foreclosed residential housing unit: Residential property tenants in possession of foreclosed property under a month-to-month lease or periodic tenancy must be given 90 days' written notice to quit before they can be evicted. Tenants holding possession under a fixed term residential lease entered into before title transferred at the foreclosure sale have the right to remain in possession until the lease term's end, except in specified circumstances. [See CCP § 1161b]

1) [6:535.14m] Pre-foreclosure procedures during COVID-19 pandemic: In response to the COVID-19 pandemic, the Legislature created special notice and bidding rights for tenants of properties containing one to four residential units that are in foreclosure. These notice requirements and bidding rights are in effect from January 1, 2021 to December 31, 2030. See discussion at ¶ 6:535.10 ff.

A purchaser of property at a foreclosure sale is not exempt from complying with applicable law regarding the eviction or displacement of tenants. [See Civ.C. § 2924n]

(5) [6:535.15] Challenging finality or validity of trustee's sale: A borrower may challenge a trustee's foreclosure sale before the trustee's deed is delivered to the successful bidder (¶ 6:535.16 ff.) or afterward (¶ 6:535.35 ff.). Threshold questions in all foreclosure avoidance actions, however, include standing and whether the borrower must plead tender of payment to reinstate the loan or redeem their equity in the property (¶ 6:535.15a ff.).

(a) [6:535.15a] Standing to challenge sale: Generally, only parties with an interest in the secured loan or in the real property security itself have standing to challenge or attempt to set aside a nonjudicial foreclosure sale. [See Banc of America Leasing & Capital, LLC v. 3 Arch Trustee Services, Inc. (2009) 180 CA4th 1090, 1103, 103 CR3d 397, 406 (citing text); Royal Thrift & Loan Co. v. County Escrow, Inc. (2004) 123 CA4th 24, 33, 20 CR3d 37, 44; Turner v. Seterus, Inc. (2018) 27 CA5th 516, 524-525, 238 CR3d 528, 535-536—although he did not sign note and trust deed, Husband had standing to challenge foreclosure sale as "member of the community" that paid loan from community property earnings]

1) [6:535.15b] Mandatory joinder: By the same token, all parties to the sale transaction (i.e., those individuals with a "stake in the outcome") are deemed indispensable and must be joined in the set-aside action. Failure to do so renders any judgment against the omitted parties ineffective and subject to collateral attack. [See Banc of America Leasing & Capital, LLC v. 3 Arch Trustee Services, Inc., supra (citing text); Washington Mut. Bank v. Blechman (2007) 157 CA4th 662, 665-668, 69 CR3d 87, 89-91—lender and trustee deemed indispensable parties to set-aside action even though they were voluntarily dismissed in response to having demurred to complaint]

2) Loans assigned to securitized trusts

a) [6:535.15c] Void assignments: The common practice of securitizing residential loans (¶ 6:420) has given rise to numerous cases challenging foreclosure sales on the theory that the lender's assignment of the underlying loan is void. The borrower's standing to challenge the assignment and sale derives from their interest in ensuring that the beneficiary had legal authority to foreclose. Indeed, "[t]he borrower owes money not to the world at large but to a particular person or institution, and only the person or institution entitled to payment may enforce the debt by foreclosing on the security." [Yvanova v. New Century Mortg. Corp. (2016) 62 C4th 919, 924, 938, 199 CR3d 66, 69-70, 79]

Thus, "[i]f a purported assignment necessary to the chain by which the foreclosing entity claims [the power to commence and complete a nonjudicial foreclosure sale] is absolutely void … the foreclosing entity has acted without legal authority by pursuing a trustee's sale, and such an unauthorized sale constitutes a wrongful foreclosure." [See Yvanova v. New Century Mortg. Corp., supra, 62 C4th at 924, 938, 199 CR3d at 69-70, 79 (emphasis added)]

b) [6:535.15d] Voidable assignments: When the assignment of a loan is merely voidable, only the parties to the assignment have the power to ratify or avoid the contract. In other words, the transaction is not void unless and until one of those parties takes steps to make it so. [Yvanova v. New Century Mortg. Corp. (2016) 62 C4th 919, 936, 199 CR3d 66, 80]

"A borrower who challenges a foreclosure on the ground that an assignment to the foreclosing party bore defects rendering it voidable could thus be said to assert an interest belonging solely to the parties to the assignment." As a result, the borrower lacks standing to challenge the foreclosure. [See Yvanova v. New Century Mortg. Corp., supra, 62 C4th at 931, 936-939, 199 CR3d at 76, 80-83 (expressing no opinion on whether subject assignment, securitized after investment trust's closing date, was void or voidable under New York law)]

After Yvanova (above), the majority of courts have concluded that an improper transfer to an investment trust is voidable rather than void, and thus does not confer standing on the borrower to sue for wrongful foreclosure. [See Kalnoki v. First American Trustee Servicing Solutions, LLC (2017) 8 CA5th 23, 43, 214 CR3d 292, 307-308 (applying New York law)—borrower lacked standing to sue for wrongful foreclosure because assignment of loan to investment trust after its closing date, although purportedly violative of trust's terms, rendered assignment merely voidable; Mendoza v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2016) 6 CA5th 802, 817, 212 CR3d 1, 12 (same); Saterbak v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2016) 245 CA4th 808, 815, 199 CR3d 790, 796 (same); In re Turner (9th Cir. 2017) 859 F3d 1145, 1149 (same)—homeowners also lacked standing to assert breach of contract claims because they were not third party beneficiaries to investment trust agreements; but see also Glaski v. Bank of America, N.A. (2013) 218 CA4th 1079, 1083, 1097-1099, 160 CR3d 449, 452, 463-465 (apply New York precedent)—borrower had standing to sue for damages from wrongful foreclosure because attempted transfer of loan to securitized trust occurred after Trust's closing date, rendering transfer void]

Comment: Glaski (above) was decided pre-Yvanova and the "decision upon which [it] relied for its understanding of New York law has not only been reversed, but soundly and overwhelmingly rejected …" [Yhudai v. Impac Funding Corp. (2016) 1 CA4th 1252, 1259, 205 CR3d 680, 685]

(b) [6:535.15e] Tender of payment prerequisite: After a nonjudicial foreclosure sale, the traditional method by which a borrower in default may challenge the proceeding is to bring a suit in equity to set aside the trustee's sale and have title restored. Because the action lies in equity, however, the borrower is required to do equity—i.e., by offering to pay the delinquencies and costs due for redemption—before the court will exercise its equitable powers. "The rationale behind the rule is that if [the borrower] could not have redeemed the property had the sale procedures been proper, any irregularities in the sale did not result in damages to the [borrower]." [Lona v. Citibank, N.A. (2011) 202 CA4th 89, 103, 112, 134 CR3d 622, 632, 640 (brackets in original; internal quotes omitted); see also Kalnoki v. First American Trustee Servicing Solutions, LLC (2017) 8 CA5th 23, 48, 214 CR3d 292, 311—full tender allegation required when borrower seeks to set aside sale as voidable; West v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2013) 214 CA4th 780, 801-802, 154 CR3d 285, 302 (same); Stebley v. Litton Loan Servicing, LLP (2011) 202 CA4th 522, 526, 134 CR3d 604, 607—full tender must be made to set aside foreclosure sale based on equitable principles]

In addition to the traditional method for challenging an improper foreclosure sale (above), borrowers have at their disposal the common law tort of wrongful foreclosure (see¶ 6:539.8 ff.).

1) [6:535.15f] Exception—action to forestall foreclosure: If the borrower seeks to prevent the foreclosure sale, tender is not required. [See Intengan v. BAC Home Loans Servicing LP (2013) 214 CA4th 1047, 1053-1054, 154 CR3d 727, 731-732—no tender required to pursue injunctions against foreclosure sales when lenders fail to comply with Civ.C. § 2923.5 "contact" requirement; see also Stebley v. Litton Loan Servicing, LLP (2011) 202 CA4th 522, 526, 134 CR3d 604, 607—tender not required to delay foreclosure sales; Pfeifer v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. (2012) 211 CA4th 1250, 1280-1281, 150 CR3d 673, 696-698—failure to allege tender of full amount no bar to suit seeking to enjoin pending foreclosure sale where lenders allegedly failed to comply with servicing regulations that were conditions precedent to foreclosure]

2) [6:535.15g] Equitable exceptions under Lona: After the foreclosure sale has occurred, there are at least four additional exceptions to the tender requirement: "First, if the borrower's action attacks the validity of the underlying debt, a tender is not required since it would constitute an affirmation of the debt … Second, a tender will not be required when the person who seeks to set aside the trustee's sale has a counterclaim or setoff against the beneficiary … Third, a tender may not be required where it would be inequitable to impose such a condition on the party challenging the sale … Fourth, no tender will be required when the trustor is not required to rely on equity to attack the deed because the trustee's deed is void on its face." [Lona v. Citibank, N.A. (2011) 202 CA4th 89, 112-113, 134 CR3d 622, 640-641 (internal citations omitted) (action alleging, among other things, invalidity of underlying debt); see also In re Mortgage Electronic Registration Systems, Inc. (9th Cir. 2014) 754 F3d 772, 784-785—wrongful foreclosure claims failed because, among other things, homeowners could not show any excuse from compliance with tender requirement; Ram v. OneWest Bank, FSB (2015) 234 CA4th 1, 11, 183 CR3d 638, 644—trustors attacking void deeds are not required to meet any of the burdens generally imposed as a matter of equity, including tender; Alvarez v. BAC Home Loans Servicing, L.P. (2014) 228 CA4th 941, 951, 176 CR3d 304, 312 (disapproved on other grounds by Sheen v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2022) 12 C5th 905, 948, 290 CR3d 834, 864, fn. 12)—tender of unpaid debt "not necessarily required" to set aside trustee's sale in action for fraud/unlawful business practices re loan marketing]

3) [6:535.15h] Exception—trustee's sale void because foreclosing party has no interest in note: Several courts have declined to impose a tender requirement on borrowers who allege the foreclosing beneficiary had no interest in the promissory note. [See Sciarratta v. U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n (2016) 247 CA4th 552, 565, 202 CR3d 219, 229, fn.

10—no need to allege tender where borrower claimed note was previously assigned to different lender who was not foreclosing entity; Glaski v. Bank of America, N.A. (2013) 218 CA4th 1079, 1100, 160 CR3d 449, 466—no tender allegation required where borrower pled foreclosure sale void because party who initiated sale allegedly held no interest in underlying note]

4) [6:535.15i] Exception—lender breaches loan contract by foreclosing: Lenders who breach their contractual obligations, whether those obligations are incorporated by statute or in a loan modification agreement, may not insist that the borrower tender full repayment as a condition to overturning the sale. [See Fonteno v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2014) 228 CA4th 1358, 1374, 176 CR3d 676, 689—homeowners not required to tender delinquent amount before suing for equitable cancellation of trustee's deed where, prior to foreclosure, lender failed to fulfill HUD requirements expressly incorporated into trust deed (¶ 6:535.43); Chavez v. Indymac Mortg. Services (2013) 219 CA4th 1052, 1062-1063, 162 CR3d 382, 390—no tender allegation required where borrower pled lender refused to accept payment per loan modification terms; Multani v. Witkin & Neal (2013) 215 CA4th 1428, 1454-1456, 155 CR3d 892, 911-913—foreclosed owner in common interest development excused from tender requirement where trustee failed to furnish statutorily mandated notice of owner's redemption right; Barroso v. Ocwen Loan Servicing, LLC (2012) 208 CA4th 1001, 1017, 146 CR3d 90, 103—borrower not required to allege tender where lender foreclosed on loan after valid modification agreement cured defaults]

5) [6:535.15j] Compare—partial tender sufficient to support wrongful foreclosure action based on right to reinstate: Borrowers who offer to cure monetary defaults on their loans more than five days before a foreclosure sale need only plead tender of the reinstatement amount to maintain a wrongful foreclosure action against their lender for denying them their statutory right to reinstate the loan. [Turner v. Seterus, Inc. (2018) 27 CA5th 516, 527, 530-531, 238 CR3d 528, 537, 540-541 (finding full tender requirement applies in cases where borrowers seek to redeem property, not reinstate their loans (¶ 6:539.12)]

• [6:535.15k] Requiring tender was deemed inequitable where the lender wrongfully refused to grant a loan modification that would have provided an alternative to foreclosure. [Majd v. Bank of America, N.A. (2015) 243 CA4th 1293, 1305-1306, 197 CR3d 151, 161-162]

• [6:535.15l] Homeowners were not required to tender the delinquent amount before bringing an action for equitable cancellation of the trustee's deed where, prior to foreclosure, the lender failed to fulfill HUD requirements expressly incorporated into the trust deed, rendering the sale either void or voidable (¶ 6:535.43). [Fonteno v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2014) 228 CA4th 1358, 1374, 176 CR3d 676, 689]

• [6:535.15m] Tender of the unpaid debt is not necessarily required to set aside a foreclosure sale in an action based on fraudulent and unlawful business practices relating to the marketing of a loan. [See Alvarez v. BAC Home Loans Servicing, L.P. (2014) 228 CA4th 941, 951, 176 CR3d 304, 312 (disapproved on other grounds by Sheen v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2022) 12 C5th 905, 948, 290 CR3d 834, 864, fn. 12)]

• [6:535.15n] A foreclosed owner in a common interest development was excused from the tender requirement where the trustee failed to furnish the statutorily-mandated notice of the owner's redemption right. [Multani v. Witkin & Neal (2013) 215 CA4th 1428, 1454-1456, 155 CR3d 892, 911-913]

• [6:535.15o] A borrower was not required to allege tender where the lender foreclosed on his loan after a valid modification agreement cured the defaults. [Barroso v. Ocwen Loan Servicing, LLC (2012) 208 CA4th 1001, 1017, 146 CR3d 90, 103]

(c) Before trustee's deed delivered to successful bidder

1) [6:535.16] In general—rebuttable presumption of validity: There is a common law presumption that foreclosure sales are conducted regularly and fairly. [See Biancalana v. T.D. Service Co. (2013) 56 C4th 807, 814, 156 CR3d 437, 442; 6 Angels, Inc. v. Stuart-Wright Mortg., Inc. (2001) 85 CA4th 1279, 1284, 102 CR2d 711, 714; and Millennium Rock Mortgage, Inc. v. T.D. Service Co. (2009) 179 CA4th 804, 809, 102 CR3d 544, 548]

But the presumption is rebuttable (permitting an otherwise completed trustee's sale to be set aside before the trustee's deed is delivered to the high bidder). Successful rebuttal of the presumption requires substantial evidence of a failure to comply with the procedural requirements (¶ 6:524 ff.) to the challenging party's prejudice. [6 Angels, Inc. v. Stuart-Wright Mortgage, Inc., supra, 85 CA4th at 1284, 102 CR2d at 714; Knapp v. Doherty (2004) 123

CA4th 76, 86, 20 CR3d 1, 8, fn. 4; see Residential Capital, LLC v. Cal-Western Reconveyance Corp. (2003) 108 CA4th 807, 822, 134 CR2d 162, 173—"Only a properly conducted foreclosure sale, free of substantial defects in procedure, creates rights in the high bidder at the sale"]

2) [6:535.16a] Circumstances supporting avoidance of sale: Various circumstances occurring before a trustee's deed is delivered to the high bidder may warrant the avoidance of an otherwise completed trustee's sale (i.e., in these circumstances, the trustee may refuse to issue a trustee's deed to the successful bidder):

a) [6:535.17] Irregularity in foreclosure notice procedures: A trustee's sale may be aborted upon the trustee's discovery of a material and prejudicial irregularity in the foreclosure notice procedures (deficient notice of default/notice of sale) before delivery of the deed. [See Angell v. Sup.Ct. (Verdugo Trustee Service Corp.) (1999) 73 CA4th 691, 699-701, 86 CR2d 657, 662-663—notice of default and notice of sale grossly understated amount owed based on one note when in fact trust deed secured two notes; compare Gillies v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2017) 7 CA5th 907, 913, 213 CR3d 210, 215 & fn. 3 (dictum)—minor misspelling of homeowner's first name in notice of sale that correctly set forth his last name and property address would not confuse reasonable person; Hicks v. E.T. Legg & Assocs. (2001) 89 CA4th 496, 512-513, 108 CR2d 10, 22-23—sale not invalidated by publication of notice of postponement of sale during automatic bankruptcy stay (¶ 6:532.13); see also ¶ 6:535.19 (irregularity in sale postponement)]

b) [6:535.18] Inadequate sale price: Mere inadequacy of the sale price generally is not the sort of material mistake that will warrant aborting the sale. [6 Angels, Inc. v. Stuart-Wright Mortg., Inc. (2001) 85 CA4th 1279, 1284-1285, 102 CR2d 711, 714-715—clerical error in instructing trustee re opening bid ($10,000 rather than $100,000) not ground for aborting sale; Knapp v. Doherty (2004) 123 CA4th 76, 93, 20 CR3d 1, 14]

However, a foreclosure sale may be avoided where an inadequate sale price is coupled with a procedural irregularity (¶ 6:535.17) that contributed to the inadequate price or otherwise injured the trustor. Indeed, gross inadequacy of price coupled with even slight unfairness or irregularity is a sufficient basis for setting aside the sale. [See Biancalana v. T.D. Service Co. (2013) 56 C4th 807, 810, 156 CR3d 437, 439—sale voidable where, before delivering deed to highest bidder, trustee discovered it mistakenly gave auctioneer opening bid that was less than 10% of beneficiary's actual bid (gross inadequacy of price and irregularity in sale process established); Millennium Rock Mortgage, Inc. v. T.D. Service Co. (2009) 179 CA4th 804, 810-811, 102 CR3d 544, 548-550—sale voidable at trustee's option where auctioneer mistakenly opened bidding with credit bid from different foreclosure that was only fraction of what was actually owed (irregularity, gross inadequacy of price and unfairness "all abundantly present"); Angell v. Sup.Ct. (Verdugo Trustee Service Corp.) (1999) 73 CA4th 691, 700, 86 CR2d 657, 663—trustee justified in aborting sale for slight irregularity when coupled with grossly inadequate sale price; compare Matson v. S.B.S. Trust Deed Network (2020) 46 CA5th 33, 41, 43, 259 CR3d 526, 533-534—successful bidder whose unilateral mistake caused it to pay excessive price could not rescind trustee's sale without showing irregularity, fraud or unfairness in foreclosure proceedings]

c) Sale postponements

1/ [6:535.19] Irregularity in postponement procedure: A trustee's sale may be avoided for noncompliance with the statutory sale postponement requirements (¶ 6:532.10 ff.). [Residential Capital, LLC v. Cal-Western Reconveyance Corp. (2003) 108 CA4th 807, 823, 134 CR2d 162, 174]

However, the postponement irregularity must arise from the foreclosure proceeding itself—e.g., in connection with any statutorily-required notices or the bidding process at the sale. [Nguyen v. Calhoun (2003) 105 CA4th 428, 445, 129 CR2d 436, 450—alleged nonreceipt of fax regarding sale postponement did not constitute irregularity in foreclosure proceeding itself]

2/ [6:535.20] Breach of lender's promise to postpone sale: A trustee's sale may be aborted where the foreclosure sale is conducted in violation of the lender's oral promise to postpone it, so long as the promise is supported by "good consideration." [Raedeke v. Gibraltar Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1974) 10 C3d 665, 673, 111 CR 693, 697-698—borrowers had cognizable cause of action to avoid sale where they procured responsible prospective purchaser in reliance on lender's promise to postpone sale; compare Nguyen v. Calhoun (2003) 105

CA4th 428, 444-445, 129 CR2d 436, 450—borrowers had no basis for avoiding sale where they failed to notify lender in timely and accurate manner that prospective purchaser had funding to pay off their defaulted loan]

In the absence of "good consideration," a promissory estoppel claim may lie against a lender who breaches its promise to postpone a foreclosure sale. For example, borrowers who, in reliance on their lender's promise to delay foreclosure, procured a high cost, high interest loan by using other property they owned as security, presented sufficient evidence of their detrimental reliance on the lender's promise to support a promissory estoppel claim (however, the loan proceeds were received too late to invalidate the foreclosure sale). [See Garcia v. World Savings, FSB (2010) 183 CA4th 1031, 1040-1047, 107 CR3d 683, 691-697; compare Granadino v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2015) 236 CA4th 411, 416, 186 CR3d 408, 413—suit to set aside foreclosure properly dismissed where borrowers failed to establish elements of promissory estoppel (i.e., clear promise, reasonable reliance and injury); Jones v. Wachovia Bank (2014) 230 CA4th 935, 946-952, 179 CR3d 21, 29-34—suit to set aside foreclosure properly dismissed where homeowners failed to show any change in position based on lender's oral agreement to postpone sale by 10 days (homeowners merely claimed they could have brought loan current had lender honored agreement)]

3/ [6:535.21] Compare—no trustee liability for failure to discover mandatory postponement: A trustee has a general duty to conduct a nonjudicial foreclosure sale in a fair and proper manner (¶ 6:539.21). However, that duty does not give rise to an unsuccessful bidder's claim against the trustee for not discovering, before conducting the sale, that the trustor and beneficiary had agreed to postpone the sale. [Residential Capital, LLC v. Cal-Western Reconveyance Corp. (2003) 108 CA4th 807, 827, 134 CR2d 162, 177-178—unsuccessful bidder had no claim against trustee who failed to read email advising of trustor/beneficiary postponement agreement]

d) [6:535.25] Lack of consideration: A trustee's sale may be avoided for "failure of consideration" when the trustee accepts a check drawn by a credit union or savings and loan association or cash equivalent but the funds are not "available for withdrawal" under Ins.C. § 12413.1. [Civ.C. § 2924h(c); Nguyen v. Calhoun (2003) 105 CA4th 428, 441, 129 CR2d 436, 447]

e) [6:535.26] Underlying debt satisfied: A foreclosure sale may be avoided on adequate proof that payment of the secured obligation was properly made prior to the sale. [Nguyen v. Calhoun (2003) 105 CA4th 428, 440, 443, 129 CR2d 436, 446, 448-449—foreclosure sale could not be challenged on ground debt paid where payment not received by lender until 3 days after sale (borrower's deposit of payment in mail before sale did not constitute satisfaction of debt absent express direction from lender that mailing payment was adequate)]

[6:535.27 - 6:535.29] Reserved.

3) Circumstances not supporting avoidance of sale

a) [6:535.30] Lender's failure to follow internal procedures: A lender's failure to follow its own internal procedures, where the failure does not constitute a breach of its contractual or statutory obligations to the borrower, is not a procedural irregularity rendering a trustee's sale voidable or void. [Melendrez v. D & I Investment, Inc. (2005) 127 CA4th 1238, 1261, 26 CR3d 413, 433 & fn. 30]

[6:535.31 - 6:535.34] Reserved.

(d) After delivery of trustee's deed to successful bidder

1) [6:535.35] Circumstances supporting avoidance of sale: Under certain circumstances, an otherwise completed nonjudicial foreclosure sale may be set aside or voided after the trustee's deed is delivered to the high bidding purchaser, but subject to the rights of an intervening BFP (¶ 6:536 ff.):

The borrower must prove three elements, however, to have the sale set aside: wrongfulness, prejudice and tender. [See Ram v. OneWest Bank, FSB (2015) 234 CA4th 1, 11, 183 CR3d 638, 644; West v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2013) 214 CA4th 780, 800, 154 CR3d 285, 301]

a) [6:535.36] Statutorily-deficient notice: A completed trustee's sale based on a statutorily-deficient notice of default and/or notice of sale is invalid and may be set aside. [Miller v. Cote (1982) 127 CA3d 888, 894, 179 CR 753, 756-757—sale invalidated based on premature notice of default; System Invest. Corp. v. Union Bank (1971) 21 CA3d 137, 152-153, 98 CR 735, 744-745—sale invalidated for failure to state nature of overdue payment in notice of default; see also Morris v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2022) 78 CA5th 279, 314-315, 293 CR3d 417, 457-458—monetary damages available for alleged violation of Civ.C. § 2924b presale notice requirements; compare Orcilla v. Big Sur, Inc. (2016) 244 CA4th 982, 1002, 198 CR3d 715, 731—failure to show prejudice resulting from incorrect date in notice of sale prevented borrowers from challenging sale based on procedural irregularity; Knapp v. Doherty (2004) 123 CA4th 76, 97-99, 20 CR3d 1, 17-19—inaccurate default date in notice of default deemed immaterial where no evidence showed notice failed to properly state nature or amount of default]

1/ [6:535.37] Compare—erroneous "surplus" information: But the validity of the sale is not affected by incorrect information given in a notice of default/notice of sale in addition to the information required by statute where the "surplus" information did not mislead the trustor/debtor. [Hanlon v. Western Loan & Bldg. Co. (1941) 46 CA2d 580, 600-601, 116 P2d 465, 476-477—notice of default valid despite misstatement of name of county where property located because property description was surplusage (notice referred to book and page where trust deed recorded), and description included reference to specific intersection of property location, making county misdesignation obvious]

b) [6:535.38] Fraud or deceit: Fraud or deceit in the foreclosure process likewise is ground to set aside the sale. [South Bay Bldg. Enterprises, Inc. v. Riviera Lend-Lease, Inc. (1999) 72 CA4th 1111, 1121, 85 CR2d 647, 652; see also Lona v. Citibank, N.A. (2011) 202 CA4th 89, 103-104, 134 CR3d 622, 633—trustee's illegal, fraudulent or willfully oppressive conduct is ground for equitable cause of action to set aside foreclosure sale; Lo v. Jensen (2001) 88 CA4th 1093, 1095-1096, 106 CR2d 443, 444-445 (two competitive bidders joined together in violation of Civ.C. § 2924h(g) and in restraint of competition, resulting in artificially low price); see also¶ 6:536.9, 6:539.8 ff.]

1/ [6:535.38a] Tort liability; criminal penalties: Additionally, the trustee's or beneficiary's fraudulent conduct during foreclosure proceedings can give rise to tort damages. [South Bay Bldg. Enterprises, Inc. v. Riviera Lend-Lease, Inc. (1999) 72 CA4th 1111, 1121-1122, 85 CR2d 647, 652—trustee and senior creditor fraudulently conspired to prevent others from bidding in order to buy property at low price, thereby causing junior lienholder to lose its security interest; see also Won Shil Park v. First American Title Co. (2011) 201 CA4th 1418, 1423, 136 CR3d 684, 689—junior lienholder's action for tort damages dismissed for failure to show prospective buyer was "ready, willing and able" to purchase property but for delay in foreclosure proceeding caused by trustee's alleged negligent/fraudulent preparation of trust deed]

Moreover, anyone convicted of acts operating as a "fraud or deceit" on a beneficiary, trustor or junior lienholder can be punished with fines of up to $10,000 and imprisonment. [Civ.C. § 2924h(g)]

c) [6:535.39] Mistake: A foreclosure sale may also be set aside where there has been a mistake of such magnitude "that to allow it to stand would be inequitable to purchaser and parties." [See Bank of America Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n v. Reidy (1940) 15 C2d 243, 248, 101 P2d 77, 80]

d) [6:535.40] Inadequate sale price coupled with procedural irregularity: An inadequate sale price coupled with a procedural irregularity may warrant a set-aside of a completed foreclosure sale just as it may be a basis for aborting a sale not yet completed (¶ 6:535.18). [Knapp v. Doherty (2004) 123 CA4th 76, 94-97, 20 CR3d 1, 14-17—inadequate price coupled with premature notice of trustee's sale, in effect giving too much notice of sale, not ground for set-aside]

e) [6:535.41] Void deed of trust: If the foreclosed deed of trust is void, even a bona fide purchaser cannot receive good title to the underlying property. [See La Jolla Group II v. Bruce (2012) 211 CA4th 461, 477-479, 149 CR3d 716, 728-729—forged trust deed deemed void ab initio, precluding BFPs from acquiring title to home following foreclosure sale]

f) [6:535.42] Loan modification agreement and reinstatement: If the lender and borrower enter into a loan modification agreement that cures the default and reinstates the loan, there is no longer any basis to exercise the power of sale and the borrower has a valid cause of action for wrongful foreclosure. [See Barroso v. Ocwen Loan Servicing, LLC (2012) 208 CA4th 1001, 1017, 146 CR3d 90, 103—valid HAMP (¶ 6:511.13 ff.) modification agreement that cured all defaults provided borrower with basis to challenge trustee's sale as wrongful under equitable principles]

g) [6:535.43] Lender's failure to comply with HUD servicing requirements incorporated into FHA-insured loans: Borrowers may seek equitable cancellation of the trustee's deed if their lender forecloses without first complying with the National Housing Act requirements (12 USC § 1701 et seq.) as contractually required by their "FHA California Deed of Trust." [Fonteno v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2014) 228 CA4th 1358, 1369-1371, 176 CR3d 676, 685-687]

2) [6:536] Limitation—conclusive presumption re compliance with notice requirements in favor of BFP: A bona fide purchaser for value (BFP) at a nonjudicial foreclosure sale has the benefit of a conclusive presumption that the foreclosure sale was properly noticed:

A recital in the trustee's deed (executed pursuant to the power of sale) of compliance with "all requirements of law" regarding mailing or personal delivery and publication or posting of the copies of notice of default and notice of sale "shall constitute prima facie evidence of compliance with these requirements and conclusive evidence thereof in favor of bona fide purchasers and encumbrancers for value and without notice." [Civ.C. § 2924(c) (emphasis added); see Biancalana v. T.D. Service Co. (2013) 56 C4th 807, 810, 156 CR3d 437, 439—conclusive presumption as to BFPs does not apply until trustee's deed is delivered (¶ 6:536.6); Millennium Rock Mortgage, Inc. v. T.D. Service Co. (2009) 179 CA4th 804, 809, 102 CR3d 544, 548 (same); see also Orcilla v. Big Sur, Inc. (2016) 244 CA4th 982, 999-1000, 198 CR3d 715, 729-730—conclusive presumption as to BFPs applies only to statutory compliance challenges and does not bar wrongful foreclosure actions based on underlying obligation's unconscionability]

a) [6:536.1] "BFP" defined: For purposes of the Civ.C. § 2924(c) presumption, a BFP is one who pays value for the property without knowledge or notice of "the asserted rights of another." [Melendrez v. D & I Investment, Inc. (2005) 127 CA4th 1238, 1253, 26 CR3d 413, 426; see also Nguyen v. Calhoun (2003) 105 CA4th 428, 442, 129 CR2d 436, 447-448; compare Estate of Yates (1994) 25 CA4th 511, 523, 32 CR2d 53, 59—purchaser who had notice of irregularity in sale and/or of superior claims to property not BFP]

1/ [6:536.2] Payment of fair market value not required: BFP status does not require payment of the property's fair market value; the buyer need only part with something of value in exchange for the property. [Melendrez v. D & I Investment, Inc. (2005) 127 CA4th 1238, 1251-1252, 26 CR3d 413, 424-425]

Thus, experienced purchasers at nonjudicial foreclosure sales who often pay substantially less than fair market value may nonetheless be BFPs. [Melendrez v. D & I Investment, Inc., supra, 127 CA4th at 1252-1253, 26 CR3d at 425-426]

2/ [6:536.3] Constructive notice of competing claim suffices: Generally, on the question of BFP status, a buyer is deemed to have "notice" or "knowledge" of a competing claim if they "ha[ve] knowledge of circumstances which, upon reasonable inquiry, would lead" them to that claim. [Melendrez v. D & I Investment, Inc. (2005) 127 CA4th 1238, 1252, 26 CR3d 413, 425 (emphasis added)]

The buyer's foreclosure sale experience may be considered in determining whether they had knowledge or notice of a competing claim. But such experience does not compel the conclusion that notice of a competing claim should be imputed to the buyer when the buyer did not have actual knowledge or notice of the claim. [Melendrez v. D & I Investment, Inc., supra, 127 CA4th at 1253-1255, 26 CR3d at 426-427, fn. 23—rejecting "theory of imputed notice" where experienced buyer had no actual notice or knowledge of agreement between borrowers and lender to postpone sale; see also Sutton v. Eagle Vista Equities LLC (ND CA 2020) 2020 WL 571056, *3-4—sophisticated buyer at trustee's sale with no actual or constructive notice of alleged defects in foreclosure process had no elevated duty of inquiry into records outside chain of title in order to obtain BFP status]

3/ [6:536.4] BFP status tested at time of acquisition: The BFP determination must be based upon the circumstances that existed at the time the buyer acquired the property; information learned after the acquisition does not affect a buyer's BFP status. [Melendrez v. D & I Investment, Inc. (2005) 127 CA4th 1238, 1254, 26 CR3d 413, 427]

b) [6:536.5] Subordinate encumbrances extinguished: The Civ.C. § 2924(c) conclusive presumption operates to extinguish subordinate interests in the property such as junior liens and leaseholds. [See Dr. Leevil, LLC v. Westlake Health Care Ctr. (2017) 9 CA5th 450, 455, 215 CR3d 127, 131 (reversed on other grounds by Dr. Leevil, LLC v. Westlake Health Care Center (2018) 6 C5th 474, 484-485, 241 CR3d 12, 20)—lease containing automatic subordination clause was "fixed" in junior position to deed of trust and thus extinguished by foreclosure; Zieve, Brodnax & Steele, LLP v. Dhindsa (2020) 49 CA5th 27, 36, 262 CR3d 567, 573—after foreclosure of senior lien, purchaser at trustee's sale takes title free of junior liens, but sold out junior is entitled to share in any surplus sales proceeds; Homestead Savings v. Darmiento (1991) 230 CA3d 424, 436-437, 281 CR 367, 374-375—foreclosure terminated subordinate lienholder's interest even though junior lienholder may not have received actual notice of sale; but see also ¶ 6:534.1 (exception for certain tax liens)]

c) [6:536.6] Delivery of deed required: The Civ.C. § 2924(c) conclusive presumption attaches only upon delivery of the deed to the high bidding purchaser. [Biancalana v. T.D. Service Co. (2013) 56 C4th 807, 810, 156 CR3d 437, 439; see also Angell v. Sup.Ct (Verdugo Trustee Service Corp.) (1999) 73 CA4th 691, 699-700, 86 CR2d 657, 662; compare¶ 6:535.16 (rebuttable presumption of validity of sale to high bidding purchaser before trustee's deed delivered)]

d) [6:536.7] Effect of irregularity in foreclosure procedures not relating to notice: The Civ.C. § 2924(c) conclusive presumption applies only to the propriety of the required notices; it does not protect from challenge a nonjudicial foreclosure sale to a BFP that suffers from other types of defects. [Bank of America, N.A. v. La Jolla Group II (2005) 129 CA4th 706, 714-715, 28 CR3d 825, 830-831; Melendrez v. D & I Investment, Inc. (2005) 127 CA4th 1238, 1255-1256, 26 CR3d 413, 428 & fn. 26 (declining to follow dictum suggesting that Civ.C. § 2924 conclusive presumption applies to any claimed irregularities in trustee's sale)]

[6:536.8] Even though a nonjudicial foreclosure sale was conclusively presumed to have been duly noticed, the trust deed delivered to the BFP was properly canceled as void because the sale was conducted in violation of an agreement between the trustor and beneficiary to cure the default and reinstate the loan—i.e., the beneficiary had no right to exercise the power of sale.

"No statute creates a presumption—conclusive or otherwise—for any purchaser—bona fide or otherwise—that any recitals in a trustee's deed render effective a sale that had no contractual basis." [Bank of America, N.A. v. La Jolla Group II (2005) 129 CA4th 706, 714, 28 CR3d 825, 830]

[6:536.9] A trustee's deed is also subject to cancellation notwithstanding the BFP conclusive presumption when the BFP purchased the property knowing that fraud had been committed in connection with the foreclosure sale. However, any fraud by the trustee and/or beneficiary during the sale process is not imputed to the BFP and, thus, cannot itself support setting the sale aside. [Melendrez v. D & I Investment, Inc. (2005) 127 CA4th 1238, 1256-1258, 26 CR3d 413, 429-430—absent evidence BFP knew lender failed to instruct trustee to postpone sale based on repayment agreement between borrowers and lender, borrowers could not set BFP sale aside]

[6:536.10 - 6:536.14] Reserved.

3) Circumstances not supporting avoidance of sale

a) [6:536.15] Lender's failure to follow internal procedures:See discussion at¶ 6:535.30*.

b) [6:536.16] Automated signatures ("robo-signing"): The use of automated signatures (colloquially referred to as "robo-signing") on statutory notices does not by itself invalidate the foreclosure. [See Kalnoki v. First American Trustee Servicing Solutions, LLC (2017) 8 CA5th 23, 46, 214 CR3d 292, 310—nothing about "robo-signing" notice of default or "notice of substitution" rendered documents invalid or ineffective where debtors did not dispute accuracy of "salient facts" (e.g., amount owed or that loan was in default)]

4) [6:537] Compare—no trustee liability to purchaser for nondisclosure of outstanding liens: A trustee conducting a nonjudicial foreclosure sale has no sua sponte duty to provide bidders with detailed explanations concerning the existence of outstanding liens and encumbrances on the foreclosed property.

Absent outright misrepresentation (affirmative misstatement concerning outstanding liens and encumbrances when bidders ask for that information), the trustee incurs no liability to a successful bidder who allegedly paid an excessive price because of failure to account for outstanding senior liens. The sale to the successful bidder is final when the trustee accepts the bid, without regard to the purchaser's own economic error. [Ostayan v. Serrano Reconveyance Co. (2000) 77 CA4th 1411, 1418-1420, 92 CR2d 577, 583-584 (disapproved on other grounds by Black Sky Capital, LLC v. Cobb (2019) 7 C5th 156, 165, 246 CR3d 583, 591)—lender holding both senior and junior deeds of trust on property foreclosed only on junior lien, leaving foreclosure purchaser (who bid without accounting for senior lien) to take subject to senior lien]

5) [6:537.1] Notice of rescission of invalidated sale: When a trustee's deed is invalidated, a "notice of rescission" of the deed may be recorded. The notice effectively restores the condition of title to the property, including the priority of any lienholders (see¶ 6:536.5), to what it was before the date the deed was recorded. However, a notice of rescission may be recorded only by the trustee or beneficiary, or its successor in interest, who caused the deed to be recorded initially. [Civ.C. § 1058.5]

(e) [6:538] Compare—validity not affected by beneficiary/payoff demand statement: A trustee's foreclosure sale is not affected by the preparation and delivery of a beneficiary statement or payoff demand statement. [Civ.C. § 2943(f)]

[6:538.1 - 6:538.4] Reserved.

(f) [6:538.5] Compare—IRS redemption:See discussion at¶ 6:529.5*.

(g) Monetary remedies and other causes of action

1) [6:539] Successful bidder's remedy when trustee's sale invalidated limited to restitution: When a trustee's sale is aborted (sale invalidated prior to issuance of the trustee's deed) upon discovery of a material and prejudicial irregularity in a statutory foreclosure procedure, the aggrieved successful bidder's remedy is limited to restitution —i.e., return of its purchase money plus interest; the remedy does not include breach of contract damages. [Residential Capital, LLC v. Cal-Western Reconveyance Corp. (2003) 108 CA4th 807, 823-824, 134 CR2d 162, 174-175—successful bidder who sued trustee and beneficiary for refusing to deliver deed upon discovery of mandatory postponement not entitled to "benefit-of-bargain" damages; see also Pro Value Properties, Inc. v. Quality Loan Service Corp. (2009) 170 CA4th 579, 583, 88 CR3d 381, 384—successful bidder's remedy following void trustee's sale limited to purchase price plus statutory 7% interest rate]

a) [6:539.1] Broader damages after trustee's deed issued? Whether the same rule applies when a trustee's sale is set aside after the trustee's deed is issued to the successful bidder has not been decided. [See Residential Capital, LLC v. Cal-Western Reconveyance Corp. (2003) 108 CA4th 807, 823-824, 134 CR2d 162, 174]

2) [6:539.2] Generally no tort damages for trustee's breach of *statutory procedures: The duties of a trustee with respect to nonjudicial foreclosure procedures are strictly limited to those specified in the trust deed and Civ.C. § 2824 et seq., and do not include any common law duties. As such, a trustee's breach of any statutory nonjudicial foreclosure procedure does not give rise to an action for tort damages. [See I.E. Assocs. v. Safeco Title Ins. Co. (1985) 39 C3d 281, 287-288, 216 CR 438, 442; Banc of America Leasing & Capital, LLC v. 3 Arch Trustee Services, Inc. (2009) 180 CA4th 1090, 1097, 103 CR3d 397, 401; Heritage Oaks Partners v. First American Title Ins. Co. (2007) 155 CA4th 339, 345, 66 CR3d 510, 515—policy reasons militate against expansion of trustee's duties]

Creating a nonstatutory duty for trustees conducting foreclosure sales would "graft a tort remedy onto a comprehensive statutory scheme in the absence of a compelling justification for doing so." [Residential Capital, LLC v. Cal-Western Reconveyance Corp. (2003) 108 CA4th 807, 827, 134 CR2d 162, 177]

• [6:539.3] A defaulting trustor had no negligence claim against the trustee for breaching an alleged duty to make reasonable efforts to contact the trustor before sale beyond the statutorily-prescribed notification procedures. [I.E. Assocs. v. Safeco Title Ins. Co., supra]

• [6:539.4] An unsuccessful bidder had no negligence claim against the trustee for failing to read an email advising of mandatory sale postponement before the trustee's sale occurred. [Residential Capital, LLC v. Cal-Western Reconveyance Corp. (2003) 108 CA4th 807, 824-827, 134 CR2d 162, 175-177]

• [6:539.5] A successful bidder had no negligence claim against the trustee for breaching an alleged duty to provide him with a detailed explanation concerning recorded encumbrances on the foreclosed property. [Diediker v. Peelle Fin'l Corp. (1997) 60 CA4th 288, 294-295, 70 CR2d 442, 446-447 (discussed further at¶ 6:529.4)]

• [6:539.6] A trustee who was allegedly negligent in believing it was the trustee of record, and who conveyed title to a successful bidder, owed no duty to subsequent purchasers of the foreclosed property. [See Heritage Oaks Partners v. First American Title Ins. Co. (2007) 155 CA4th 339, 348, 66 CR3d 510, 517 (nor could subsequent purchasers assert equitable indemnity action against trustee because they were not jointly and severally liable to original owners/debtors)]

• [6:539.7] A foreclosing trustee's failure to verify the validity of a loan assignment and the authority of the signatory on the substitution of trustee form were, at most, technical process violations that did not give rise to tort liability. [Citrus El Dorado, LLC v. Chicago Title Co. (2019) 32 CA5th 943, 952, 244 CR3d 372, 379]

3) [6:539.8] Tort damages for wrongful foreclosure: A trustee or beneficiary under a deed of trust who conducts an "illegal, fraudulent or willfully oppressive sale of property" may be liable to the borrower for wrongful foreclosure. [Yvanova v. New Century Mortg. Corp. (2016) 62 C4th 919, 929, 199 CR3d 66, 73-74; see also Morris v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2022) 78 CA5th 279, 315, 293 CR3d 417, 458—trustor could bring postforeclosure private action to recover "full spectrum of tort damages" occasioned by lender's failure to provide Civ.C. § 2924b preforeclosure notice; Miles v. Deutsche Bank Nat'l Trust Co. (2015) 236 CA4th 394, 408, 186 CR3d 625, 635 (noting mere technical violation of foreclosure process insufficient to support tort claim); Munger v. Moore (1970) 11 CA3d 1, 6-8, 89 CR 323, 325-326 (describing nature of wrongful foreclosure actions)]

The basic elements of the wrongful foreclosure tort track the elements of an equitable cause of action to set aside a foreclosure sale: (i) the trustee caused an illegal, fraudulent or willfully oppressive real property sale pursuant to a power of sale in a deed of trust; (ii) the party attacking the sale (usually, but not always, the trustor) was prejudiced or harmed; and (iii) in cases where the trustor challenges the sale, the trustor tendered the amount of the secured indebtedness or was excused from tendering (¶ 6:535.15 ff.). [Sciarratta v. U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n (2016) 247 CA4th 552, 561-562, 202 CR3d 219, 226]

• [6:539.9] A homeowner had standing to sue for wrongful foreclosure where, as a result of a void assignment of her note and deed of trust, the entity that conducted the sale had no interest in either document. The void assignment not only satisfied the illegal foreclosure element of the wrongful foreclosure tort, it provided a basis for the prejudice or damage required by the second element and excused the borrower from tendering payment under the third element. [Sciarratta v. U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n (2016) 247 CA4th 552, 555, 568, 202 CR3d 219, 221-222, 232 & fn. 10 (essentially holding any homeowner who suffers foreclosure due to a void assignment may sue for wrongful foreclosure); compare Hacker v. Homeward Residential, Inc. (2018) 26 CA5th 270, 280-281, 236 CR3d 790, 799-800—family trust that obtained borrower's grant deed had standing to assert wrongful foreclosure claim against successor beneficiary where beneficial interest assignment allegedly was void because assigning entity never held title; Kalnoki v. First American Trustee Servicing Solutions, LLC (2017) 8 CA5th 23, 49-50, 214 CR3d 292, 312-313 (distinguishing Sciarratta and finding subject foreclosure documents neither fraudulent nor invalid and borrowers not prejudiced)—"even assuming for sake of argument that prejudice can be established simply by alleging facts showing the wrong party foreclosed as found in Sciarratta, the judicially noticeable documents in this case show the proper party foreclosed notwithstanding the [borrower's] conflicting allegations"; In re Turner (9th Cir. 2017) 859 F3d 1145, 1149—although transfer of residential loan to investment trust after its closing date rendered transfer voidable, it did not affect validity of subsequent foreclosure sale or support debtors' wrongful foreclosure claim]

• [6:539.10] A loan made to borrowers with limited English proficiency and education, and that required monthly payments exceeding the borrowers' income, was deemed sufficiently unconscionable to be unenforceable, thereby providing the basis for a wrongful foreclosure action. [Orcilla v. Big Sur, Inc. (2016) 244 CA4th 982, 996-998, 198 CR3d 715, 726-729]

• [6:539.11] A wrongful foreclosure claim will lie against a lender who fails to honor its obligation to provide the borrower with a permanent loan modification. [Majd v. Bank of America, N.A. (2015) 243 CA4th 1293, 1306-1307, 197 CR3d 151, 162]

• [6:539.12] A loan servicer who refused an effective tender of the amount required to reinstate a defaulted mortgage under Civ.C. § 2924c, and who thereafter foreclosed without legal basis, could be held liable for wrongful foreclosure. [Turner v. Seterus, Inc. (2018) 27 CA5th 516, 530-531, 238 CR3d 528, 540-541]

WESTLAW © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

• [6:539.13] After entering into multiple loan modification agreements that never materialized, a borrower adequately stated a wrongful foreclosure action and was entitled to recover any damages proximately caused thereby, including lost rental income and emotional distress. [Miles v. Deutsche Bank Nat'l Trust Co. (2015) 236 CA4th 394, 408, 186 CR3d 625, 636]

Comment: Following the events in Miles, supra, the Legislature enacted Civ.C. § 2924.12(b), which provides a damages cause of action against lenders or loan servicers who foreclose on homes when there has been a loan modification and the borrower has not defaulted (see ¶ 6:524.20, 6:524.26). The applicability of this statutory cause of action was not raised in Miles and the court offered no opinion on how it would impact, if at all, a common law tort action for wrongful foreclosure. [See Miles v. Deutsche Bank Nat'l Trust Co., supra, 236 CA4th at 410, 186 CR3d at 637, fn. 6]

And even though Sciarratta, supra, was decided after enactment of the above legislation, the court decided without mentioning either statute that "the measure of damages for wrongful foreclosure is the familiar measure of tort damages: all proximately caused damages." [Sciarratta v. U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n (2016) 247 CA4th 552, 567, 202 CR3d 219, 231]

[6:539.14] Reserved.

4) [6:539.15] Tort damages for *preforeclosure misrepresentations during loan modification negotiations: A trustee or beneficiary also may be liable for tort damages arising from its conduct during the loan modification process. For example, the lender's (or its agent's) false statements may give rise to claims for intentional or negligent representation. [See Sheen v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2022) 12 C5th 905, 943, 290 CR3d 834, 860, fn. 10 (dictum)—potential actions against lenders/servicers who fail to act reasonably in processing loan modification applications include negligent/ intentional misrepresentation, fraud and promissory estoppel; Daniels v. Select Portfolio Servicing, Inc. (2016) 246 CA4th 1150, 1172, 201 CR3d 390, 411 (disapproved on other grounds by Sheen, supra, 12 C5th at 948, 290 CR3d at 864, fn. 12)—trustee of securitized trust that purportedly owned loan was potentially liable under agency theory for former loan servicer's alleged fraudulent misrepresentations re borrower's failure to deliver requisite modification documents; see also Rufini v. CitiMortgage, Inc. (2014) 227 CA4th 299, 308, 173 CR3d 422, 430—borrower's allegation claiming lender falsely told him he was approved for permanent loan modification while lender pursued foreclosure remedy deemed sufficient to state negligent misrepresentation claim; West v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2013) 214 CA4th 780, 795, 154 CR3d 285, 295—lender's verbal assurance that borrower had received HAMP Trial Modification while it moved forward with foreclosure supported fraud/negligent misrepresentation claims]

5) [6:539.16] Economic loss rule bars negligence claims in loan modification negotiations: The general rule that a "financial institution owes no duty of care to a borrower when the institution's involvement in the loan transaction does not exceed the scope of its conventional role as a mere lender of money" applies to post-default loan modification negotiations. Thus, borrowers may not sue to recover negligently inflicted, purely economic losses that arise from the underlying contracts. [See Sheen v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2022) 12 C5th 905, 927-929, 942, 290 CR3d 834, 847-848, 859 (internal quotes and citation omitted) (also concluding "Biakanja" factors used by various lower courts to justify imposing such a duty are inapposite to borrower-lender relationships where parties are in contractual privity) —lender not liable for negligently failing to process borrower's foreclosure alternative application]

Comment: Sheen involved conduct by a lender and servicer in connection with second and third mortgages on the borrower's home. Thus, the HBOR requirements for handling an application to modify a first lien mortgage did not apply (¶ 6:511.1 ff.). [See Sheen v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A., supra, 12 C5th at 921, 290 CR3d at 841-842]

[6:539.17 - 6:539.20] Reserved.

6) [6:539.21] Trustee's breach of general duty to conduct sale fairly: A foreclosing trustee has a general common law duty to ensure that a trustee's sale is conducted fairly, according to proper procedures, and to achieve the highest possible price. This duty runs to the beneficiary and trustor, as well as to unsuccessful bidders who are unfairly prevented from participating in the sale. [Residential Capital, LLC v. Cal-Western Reconveyance Corp. (2003) 108 CA4th 807, 824-825, 134 CR2d 162, 175-176]

• [6:539.22] Junior lienholders adequately pled that the trustee breached a duty owed to them by not stopping the auction briefly to explain the bidding requirements. [Bank of Seoul & Trust Co. v. Marcione (1988) 198 CA3d 113, 119, 244 CR 1, 4]

• [6:539.23] The trustee breached a duty to potential bidders by disqualifying them merely because they had a different form of payment. [Baron v. Colonial Mortg. Service Co. (1980) 111 CA3d 316, 323, 168 CR 450, 454]

• [6:539.24] Compare: A trustee had no duty to sua sponte provide the successful bidder with a detailed explanation of recorded encumbrances on the foreclosed property. [Ostayan v. Serrano Reconveyance Co. (2000) 77 CA4th 1411, 1419-1420, 92 CR2d 577, 583-584 (disapproved on other grounds by Black Sky Capital, LLC v. Cobb (2019) 7 C5th 156, 165, 246 CR3d 583, 591); see discussion at ¶ 6:537]

[6:539.25 - 6:539.29] Reserved.

7) [6:539.30] Trustee's defense—nonmonetary status declaration: A trustee named in an action involving a deed of trust may be excused from participating in the litigation and thereby avoid monetary damages if it files a declaration of nonmonetary status. There is no fee for filing the declaration. The declaration must, among other things, aver that the trustee reasonably believes it has been named solely in its capacity as trustee and not as a result of any wrongdoing. If no party who has appeared objects within 15 days, the trustee is exempt from participating further in the action. [See Civ.C. § 2924*l*; Bae v. T.D. Service Co. (2016) 245 CA4th 89, 104-105, 199 CR3d 282, 293-294—default judgment against trustee set aside based on trustee's unchallenged declaration of nonmonetary status]

c. [6:540] Judicial foreclosure: Unlike a trustee's sale, a judicial foreclosure is a lawsuit and involves a court-supervised foreclosure sale. The beneficiary must sue all parties having subordinate interests in the property in order to extinguish their interests upon the foreclosure sale. If successful, the beneficiary will obtain a judgment ordering sale of the property and the sale will be conducted by a court-appointed levying officer. The proceeds of the sale are then paid out—first, to the beneficiary, and thereafter in the same manner as a trustee's sale (¶ 6:535.13).

(1) Pros and cons from lender's perspective

(a) Advantages

1) [6:541] Deficiency judgment: The principal advantage to a lender (beneficiary) in pursuing a judicial foreclosure is that it can obtain a deficiency judgment provided (i) the loan documents do not provide the loan is a nonrecourse obligation (¶ 6:402); and (ii) no other antideficiency laws apply (such as purchase money antideficiency rules; see¶ 6:563 ff.). [Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 1236, 44 CR2d 352, 357]

a) [6:541.1] "Fair value" deficiency limitation:See¶ 6:577*.

2) [6:542] Opportunity to preserve junior encumbrances: A secondary advantage to pursuing a judicial foreclosure sale is that the lender can choose which junior encumbrances it wishes to wipe out upon its foreclosure. (Junior encumbrancers not named in the lawsuit will be unaffected by the judicial foreclosure; see¶ 6:544.2.) For example, a lender may wish to foreclose-out unfavorable leases yet preserve favorable leases.

(b) [6:543] Disadvantages: Of course, like any other lawsuit, a judicial foreclosure is an adversarial proceeding and involves considerable time and expense. In addition, the trustor retains a statutory right of redemption (opportunity to regain ownership of the property by paying the foreclosure sale price plus certain other amounts) for one year following the judicial foreclosure sale. [CCP §§ 729.010-729.090; Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 1236, 44 CR2d 352, 357; see also ¶ 6:544.12]

(2) [6:544] Judicial foreclosure procedure: Judicial foreclosures are governed by CCP § 725a et seq. and procedures relating to civil actions generally.

(a) [6:544.1] Parties authorized to initiate proceeding: The beneficiary, trustee, mortgagee with power of sale, or successor in interest to any of these entities, is statutorily empowered to file suit for judicial foreclosure. [CCP § 725a; see also Arabia v. BAC Home Loans Servicing, L.P. (2012) 208 CA4th 462, 469, 145 CR3d 678, 684]

In addition, loan servicers assigned the right to foreclose may initiate judicial foreclosure proceedings in their own names. They need not be assigned the note or deed of trust; assignment of the cause of action is sufficient. [See Arabia

v. BAC Home Loans Servicing, L.P., supra, 208 CA4th at 472-473, 145 CR3d at 686-687 (servicer's right to foreclose arose out of assigned "legal obligation" and was not precluded by statute)]

(b) [6:544.2] Notice requirement: All persons holding a recorded interest in the property being foreclosed (even if only a fractional interest) must be given notice and made a party to the action. [Diamond Benefits Life Ins. Co. v. Troll (1998) 66 CA4th 1, 7, 77 CR2d 581, 585]

Absent such notice, holders of a recorded interest are not bound by the foreclosure judgment. [CCP § 726; see Robin v. Crowell (2020) 55 CA5th 727, 748, 270 CR3d 25, 39-40—judicial foreclosure action did not affect omitted junior lienholder (¶ 6:515.2); Arabia v. BAC Home Loans Servicing, L.P. (2012) 208 CA4th 462, 473-474, 145 CR3d 678, 687—although failure to join junior lienholder does not void sale, it renders foreclosure ineffective for purposes of extinguishing junior lien; Diamond Benefits Life Ins. Co. v. Troll, supra, 66 CA4th at 6-7, 77 CR2d at 584-585—easement holder who was not party to judicial foreclosure equitably entitled to one-year right of redemption in subsequent quiet title action]

(c) [6:544.3] Challenging the judgment; mandatory joinder: In an action to challenge a judicial foreclosure judgment, all parties to the execution sale are indispensable parties. [Lee v. Rich (2016) 6 CA5th 270, 277, 210 CR3d 828, 833—third party purchaser at execution sale who was not joined as indispensable party to debtor's motion to set aside and vacate judgment not bound by court's order granting same]

[6:544.4 - 6:544.9] Reserved.

(3) [6:544.10] Sale to third party generally absolute: A judicial foreclosure sale to a party other than the beneficiary generally is "absolute," subject only to the trustor's right of redemption (¶ 6:543, 6:544.12), and "shall not be set aside for any reason." [CCP § 701.680(a); see Lee v. Rich (2016) 6 CA5th 270, 277-279, 210 CR3d 828, 833-834—execution sale of judgment debtor's residence to third party purchaser deemed "absolute" and not subject to set-aside even though underlying foreclosure judgment declared void; Amalgamated Bank v. Sup.Ct. (Corinthian Homes) (2007) 149 CA4th 1003, 1018-1019, 57 CR3d 686, 696-697—where trustor did not timely exercise redemption right and third party purchaser's title to property was perfected, there was "simply no room" in statutory scheme for trustor to deprive third party purchaser of interest in property by bringing set-aside motion]

(a) [6:544.11] Compare—sale to beneficiary subject to challenge for irregularities: A judicial foreclosure sale to the beneficiary (lender) may be set aside for "irregularities in the proceedings" on motion by the trustor or its successor in interest brought within 90 days after the sale. [CCP § 701.680(c)(1); Amalgamated Bank v. Sup.Ct. (Corinthian Homes) (2007) 149 CA4th 1003, 1018, 57 CR3d 686, 696; see also Lee v. Rich (2016) 6 CA5th 270, 278, 210 CR3d 828, 834—judgment debtor may commence action to set aside sale only if sale was improper and purchaser was judgment creditor]

(b) [6:544.12] Compare—equitable right of redemption: Notwithstanding CCP § 701.680's "absolute" language, nothing in the statute affects, limits or eliminates a judgment debtor's equitable right of redemption. [CCP § 701.680(e); see also Lee v. Rich (2016) 6 CA5th 270, 279-282, 210 CR3d 828, 834-837—although underlying foreclosure judgment declared void, homeowner had no equitable right of redemption where third-party purchaser did not secure judgment, was not associated with judgment creditor, did not manipulate legal system to buy property and execution sale price was not grossly inadequate]

d. [6:545] Special provisions regulating residential foreclosures: Special statutes are directed at protecting homeowners whose residences are in foreclosure from fraud, deception, harassment and unfair dealing by persons who represent they can assist in avoiding loss of the residence by foreclosure sale (so-called "foreclosure consultants") and others who attempt to induce defaulting homeowners to sell their homes pending foreclosure for a small fraction of fair market value ("equity purchasers"). [See Civ.C. § 1695(a) (legislative findings re home equity sales contracts), Civ.C. § 2945(a) (legislative findings re "foreclosure consultants")]

These statutes regulate "foreclosure consultants" and "foreclosure consultant service agreements" (Civ.C. § 2945 et seq.); and "home equity sales contracts" (Civ.C. § 1695 et seq.). They apply to any "residence in foreclosure," meaning residential real property consisting of one-to-four family dwelling units, one of which is owner-occupied as a principal residence. [Civ.C. §§ 1695.1(b), 2945.1(e)]

(1) [6:546] Foreclosure consultants: Subject to certain exceptions (e.g., real estate brokers acting under the authority of their licenses as described in Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 10131 and 10131.1, or attorneys rendering services in the course of their practices; see Civ.C. § 2945.1(b) & (c)), any person who solicits, represents or offers to a homeowner to perform a service for compensation that will effectively save the homeowner from foreclosure is a "foreclosure consultant" and subject to the requirements of Civ.C. § 2945 et seq. [See Civ.C. § 2945.1 (defining "foreclosure consultant" and consultant "services"); see also Onofrio v. Rice (1997) 55 CA4th 413, 420, 64 CR2d 74, 78—trial court properly found real estate broker acted as "foreclosure consultant" and violated statutory requirements]

(a) [6:546.1] Written contract required: Any agreement to perform foreclosure consultant services must be in writing and fully disclose the exact nature of the services and the total amount and terms of compensation. [Civ.C. § 2945.3(a)]

1) [6:546.2] Mandatory notices; specific language requirements: The contract must contain statutory notices concerning the homeowner's legal rights, including a right to cancel and how to effect cancellation; a statutory notice of cancellation form (Civ.C. § 2945.3(f)) must be attached to the contract. [See Civ.C. § 2945.3(b), (d), (f), (g)—homeowner to be provided with copy of contract and attached notice of cancellation]

In addition, the contract must be written in the language principally used by the foreclosure consultant to describe their services or to negotiate the contract. Moreover, before the owner signs the contract, the foreclosure consultant must provide the owner with a copy of a completed contract written in any other language used in any communication with the owner and, if requested, in Civ.C. § 1632(b)-designated languages (Spanish, Chinese, Tagalog, Vietnamese, Korean). [Civ.C. §§ 2945.3(c) & 1632(b)(7)]

(b) [6:546.3] Homeowner's right of cancellation: In addition to any other right to rescind, the homeowner has the right to cancel the foreclosure consultant contract until midnight of the fifth business day (as defined by Civ.C. § 1689.5(e)) after the day on which they sign the contract (which complies with Civ.C. § 2945.3, ¶ 6:546.1 ff.). [Civ.C. § 2945.2(a)]

Also, any foreclosure consultant services contract is cancelable by the homeowner until the consultant complies with Civ.C. § 2945.3 (prescribing the form and content of the contract, ¶ 6:546.2). [Civ.C. § 2945.3(h)]

1) [6:546.3a] Manner of cancellation: Cancellation is effected by giving written notice thereof to the foreclosure consultant by mail at the address specified in the contract, or by facsimile or electronic mail at the number or address identified in the contract. Notice of cancellation, if given by mail, is effective when deposited in the mail properly addressed with postage prepaid; if given by fax or electronic mail, it is effective when successfully transmitted. [Civ.C. § 2945.2(b), (c)]

The cancellation form attached to the contract may, but need not, be used; any other form of cancellation notice also is effective so long as it indicates the owner's intent not to be bound by the contract. [Civ.C. § 2945.2(d)]

(c) [6:546.4] Homeowner rights nonwaivable: The rights conferred by Civ.C. § 2945 et seq. are nonwaivable. Indeed, any attempt by a foreclosure consultant to induce a homeowner to waive the homeowner's rights itself violates the statutory scheme. [Civ.C. § 2945.5]

(d) Consequences of violation

1) [6:546.5] Damages liability: A foreclosure consultant who violates any provision of Civ.C. § 2945 et seq. is liable to the homeowner for "actual damages," plus reasonable attorney fees and costs. [Civ.C. § 2945.6(a); see Onofrio v. Rice (1997) 55 CA4th 413, 421, 64 CR2d 74, 79—where foreclosure consultant purchased aggrieved homeowner's residence in foreclosure in violation of § 2945 et seq., "benefit of bargain" was proper measure of "actual damages" (i.e., difference between what defendant paid for the property and property's market value at that time)]

The court may also award appropriate equitable relief and, in its discretion, exemplary (punitive) damages. [Civ.C. § 2945.6(a)]

a) [6:546.5a] Mandatory exemplary damages for certain violations: For a violation of Civ.C. § 2945.4(a), (b) or (d), exemplary damages of at least three times the compensation received by the foreclosure consultant must be awarded in addition to any other award of actual or exemplary damages. [Civ.C. § 2945.6(a); see Onofrio v. Rice (1997) 55 CA4th 413, 423, 64 CR2d 74, 80—treble exemplary damages properly awarded]

Likewise, in addition to any other actual or exemplary damages award, the court "shall award" exemplary damages of at least three times the owner's actual damages for any violation of Civ.C. § 2945.4(c), (e) or (g). [Civ.C. § 2945.6(a)]

b) [6:546.6] Four-year statute of limitations: A Civ.C. § 2945.6 suit must be brought within four years from the date of the alleged violation. [Civ.C. § 2945.6(b)]

c) [6:546.6a] Other remedies preserved: The Civ.C. § 2945.6 damages remedy does not preempt other rights and remedies an aggrieved homeowner may have under the law. [Civ.C. § 2945.6(b)]

2) [6:546.7] Fines and imprisonment: Additionally, the commission of any act proscribed by Civ.C. § 2945.4 "shall be punished" by a maximum $10,000 fine and/or imprisonment in county jail for up to one year, or in state prison … for each such violation. [Civ.C. § 2945.7—cumulative to any other remedies or penalties provided by law]

(e) [6:546.8] CAUTION—ATTORNEY ETHICS ALERT*: In response to the residential mortgage crisis in California, some foreclosure consultants have attempted to avoid the statutory prohibition on collecting fees before any services are rendered by having an attorney work with them in foreclosure consultations. As a result, the State Bar Committee on Professional Responsibility and Conduct reiterated an earlier Ethics Alert to remind California lawyers of the rules that may apply in the event a foreclosure consultant or other nonlawyer requests assistance and/or refers potential distressed homeowner clients to the lawyer.

Specifically, California lawyers may not:

• Pay a referral or marketing fee to a foreclosure consultant or other person for referring distressed homeowners to the lawyer. [See CRPC 7.2(b)]

• Directly or indirectly split any attorney fees that the lawyer earns from a distressed homeowner client with the foreclosure consultant or any other nonlawyer. [See CRPC 7.2(b)]

• Aid a foreclosure consultant or anyone else in the unauthorized practice of law. For example, a lawyer may not form a partnership or joint venture with a foreclosure consultant or other nonlawyer if any of the business activities would involve providing legal services. And a lawyer may not, under the guise of serving as in-house counsel for a foreclosure consulting business, perform legal services for a distressed homeowner. [See CRPC 5.5(a)(2)]

• Contact in person, by telephone (or by real-time electronic contact) a distressed homeowner referred to the lawyer by a foreclosure consultant or someone else unless the lawyer has a family or prior professional relationship with the homeowner; nor may a lawyer direct another to do so on the lawyer's behalf. A lawyer, however, may write to a distressed homeowner who is a prospective client, as specified. [See CRPC 7.3]

• File a lawsuit (or motions in a lawsuit) without good cause and for the purpose of simply delaying or impeding a foreclosure sale. [See CRPC 3.1(a)]

• Intentionally or recklessly fail to perform legal services with competence (CRPC 1.1(a)). And the attorney should be wary of accepting fees for little or no work (See CRPC 1.5(a)).

(2) [6:547] Home equity sales contracts: A similar statutory scheme, known as the Home Equity Sales Contract Act, regulates purchasers of, and contracts to purchase, a "residence in foreclosure" (¶ 6:545). [Civ.C. § 1695 et seq.] In addition to prescribing essential terms of the purchase and sale contract, these statutes give the homeowner a special right of cancellation. [Civ.C. §§ 1695.2, 1695.3, 1695.4, 1695.5, 1695.6; see Hoffman v. Lloyd (9th Cir. 2009) 572 F3d 999, 1000 (applying Calif. law)]

Equity purchasers who violate the Act are subject to civil liability (actual and exemplary damages, plus appropriate equitable relief), as well as fines and imprisonment. [See Civ.C. §§ 1695.7, 1695.8; People v. Shetty (2009) 174 CA4th 1488, 1491, 95 CR3d 355, 357—Act criminalizes violations involving fraud and deceit]

e. [6:548] Mortgage Forgiveness Debt Relief Act: The Mortgage Forgiveness Debt Relief Act (Pub.L. 110-142, 121 Stat. 1803), signed into law December 20, 2007 in response to declining real estate values and crises in the mortgage markets, expired December 31, 2013. The Act excluded from gross income discharges of indebtedness on principal residences that occurred on or after January 1, 2007, and before January 1, 2014. The purpose was to relieve residential borrowers from what would otherwise be deemed taxable income upon foreclosure when the amount owed on their homes was greater than the property's value.

Congress has extended the exclusion for qualified principal residence indebtedness (QPRI) each year since the Act's expiration. The current exclusion applies for QPRI that was discharged before January 1, 2026. [IRC § 108(a)(1)(E)]

➪ [6:548.1] PRACTICE POINTER: Counsel should monitor closely all future legislative action for possible extension of the exclusion to discharges occurring on or after January 1, 2021.

Cross-refer: The Act is treated in greater detail in Ch. 13; see¶ 13:399.18 ff.

f. [6:549] Buyer's Choice Act (sale of foreclosed property): In response to potential unfairness occasioned by the resale of large numbers of foreclosed homes on the market, the Legislature enacted the Buyer's Choice Act (Civ.C. § 1103.20 et seq). The Act prohibits a lender under a deed of trust (or its agents, employees, etc.) from requiring, either directly or indirectly, as a condition to the sale of foreclosed residential real property that the buyer purchase title insurance covering the property from a particular title insurer. [See Civ.C. § 1103.22(a), (b)]

g. [6:549.1] California's "First Look" program (sale of residential properties acquired via foreclosure by certain institutions): Effective January 1, 2023, the Legislature granted a 30-day right of first offer to "prospective owner-occupants" and "affordable housing providers" seeking to purchase one to four unit California residential properties from "institutions" conducting large volume foreclosures (¶ 6:549.2 ff.). Consistent with the federal "First Look" program, the intention is to expand home ownership opportunities in California and strengthen neighborhoods and communities. [Civ.C. § 2924p]

(1) [6:549.2] "Institutions": "Institutions" subject to the "first look" rules include any person or entity that foreclosed on 175 or more residential properties containing one to four units in their immediately preceding annual reporting period. This is so provided the person or entity is (i) a federally or state charted depository institution; (ii) a person licensed under the California Financing Law (Fin.C. § 22000 et seq.) or the California Residential Mortgage Lending Act (Fin.C. § 50000 et seq.); or (iii) a person licensed under the California Real Estate Law (Bus & Prof.C. § 10000 et seq.). [Civ.C. § 2942p(b)(3)]

(2) [6:549.3] "Eligible bidders": Two types of "eligible bidders" have preemptive rights to bid on real property containing one to four residential dwelling units acquired by "institutions" (¶ 6:549.2) through foreclosure under a mortgage or trust deed or at a foreclosure sale. They are "prospective owner-occupants" (¶ 6:549.4) and "eligible bidders" (¶ 6:549.5). [Civ.C. § 2942p(b)(2)]

(a) [6:549.4] "Prospective owner-occupants": A "prospective owner-occupant" having a preemptive right to bid on real property is defined as a natural person who presents to a qualified institution (¶ 6:549.2) an affidavit or declaration under penalty of perjury certifying they will occupy the property as their primary residence within 60 days of the trustee's deed being recorded and will maintain their occupancy for at least one year. [Civ.C. § 2924p(b)(4)(A), (B)]

The above affidavit or declaration also must aver that the prospective owner-occupant is (i) not the mortgagor/trustor or the child, spouse, parent, employee, officer, or member of the mortgagor/trustor; (ii) not the grantor of a living trust named in the property title when the notice of default was recorded; (iii) not a person with an ownership interest in the mortgagor (unless the mortgager is a publicly traded company); and (iv) not purchasing the property as the agent of any other person or entity. [Civ.C. § 2924p(b)(4)(C), (D)]

Comment: The Legislature appears to have copied the definition of "prospective owner-occupant" from the post-sale bidding statute (i.e., by requiring an affirmation that the prospective owner-occupant will occupy the subject property within 60 days following recordation of the trustee's deed; see¶ 6:535.10c). However, institutions may not even list properties for sale that soon since a good deal of internal analysis and paperwork must be completed first. Thus, Civ.C. § 2924p's definition of "prospective owner occupant" appears to be an oversight that most likely will be corrected by the Legislature in a future session.

(b) [6:549.5] Affordable housing providers: Affordable housing providers also have a preemptive right to bid on real property containing one-to four residential units acquired by "institutions" (¶ 6:549.2) through foreclosure under a mortgage or trust deed or at a foreclosure sale. Affordable housing providers include (Civ.C. § 2924p(b)(2)(B)-(E)):

— Non-profit corporations based in California, whose board members all have their primary residence in California, and that have an IRS determination letter certifying they are tax-exempt and not a private foundation. In addition, the corporation's "primary activity" must be the development and preservation of affordable California rental or homeownership housing;

— Community land trusts based in California (see Rev. & Tax.C. § 402.1(a)(11)(C)(ii));

— Limited-equity housing cooperatives based in California (see Civ.C. § 817); and — The state, Regents of the University of California, a county, city, district, public authority, or public agency, as well as any other California political subdivision or public corporation.

(3) [6:549.6] "First Look" procedure: For 30 days following the listing of property subject to California's "first look" program (¶ 6:549.1), the selling institution may only accept offers from "eligible bidders" (¶ 6:593.3 ff.). The institution must respond in writing to all timely offers from eligible bidders before considering any other offers. Nonetheless, there is no requirement that the institution accept an offer from an eligible bidder. [Civ.C. § 2924p(c)]

(4) [6:549.7] "Bundled sales" prohibition: Institutions may not conduct "bundled sales" (i.e., sales of two or more parcels that contain one to four residential dwelling units, at least two of which were acquired through foreclosure). [Civ.C. § 2924p(b)(1), (c)(5)]

4. [6:550] "One Action" Rule/"Security First" Rule (CCP § 726): "There can be but one form of action for the recovery of any debt or the enforcement of any right secured by mortgage upon real property …" [CCP § 726(a) (emphasis added); Nungaray v. Litton Loan Servicing, LP (2011) 200 CA4th 1499, 1505, 135 CR3d 442, 447]

That form of action is foreclosure of the security. [CCP § 726(a); Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 1236, 44 CR2d 352, 357; C.J.A. Corp. v. Trans-Action Fin'l Corp. (2001) 86 CA4th 664, 668, 103 CR2d 538, 541]

a. [6:550.1] Dual purposes: As construed by the courts, CCP § 726 serves dual purposes: It is both a "security first" and a "one action" rule. "It compels the secured creditor, in a single action, to exhaust his security judicially before he may obtain a monetary 'deficiency' judgment against the debtor." [O'Neil v. General Security Corp. (1992) 4 CA4th 587, 597, 5 CR2d 712, 716 (emphasis in original); see also Coker v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2016) 62 C4th 667, 690-691, 197 CR3d 131, 149; Cadlerock Joint Venture, L.P. v. Lobel (2012) 206 CA4th 1531, 1539, 143 CR3d 96, 101-102]

(1) [6:551] "One action" rule: The "one action" component of the rule avoids multiplicity of suits on a secured obligation (e.g., judicial foreclosure suit followed by action(s) for a deficiency judgment). Thus, a creditor seeking to recover a debt secured by real property is limited to one "action." [Kirkpatrick v. Westamerica Bank (1998) 65 CA4th 982, 986, 76 CR2d 876, 878; National Enterprises, Inc. v. Woods (2001) 94 CA4th 1217, 1232, 115 CR2d 37, 47—creditor holding multiple security for single debt must include all of security in single action]

(a) [6:551.1] "Action": The meaning of the term "action" for purposes of CCP § 726 is discussed at ¶ 6:554 ff.

(b) [6:551.2] When rule applies: The restrictions of the "one action" rule are triggered no earlier than when the action is commenced, as opposed to when the deed of trust is made (and possibly later since the commencement of the action does not necessarily constitute an election of remedies; see¶ 6:513, 6:553.10). [National Enterprises, Inc. v. Woods (2001) 94 CA4th 1217, 1238, 115 CR2d 37, 51—"one action" rule did not require one lawsuit by separate holders of first and second deeds of trust, even though both deeds were held by single creditor when created]

(c) [6:551.3] Application to joint obligors: All obligors on the same debt arising from the same transaction are entitled to the protections of the "one action" rule, including those obligors who did not provide the security. [Paykar Const., Inc. v. Spilat Const. Corp. (2001) 92 CA4th 488, 496, 111 CR2d 863, 868—"one action" rule did not preclude action by plaintiff subcontractor against defendant contractor based on debt that was subject of prior judicial foreclosure action by plaintiff against property owners because defendant and property owners not jointly liable for debt]

(d) [6:551.4] Compare—rights of sold-out junior lienholder:CCP § 726 does not bar a junior lienholder from suing the obligor directly after the security has been extinguished by foreclosure of the senior lien. [Brown v. Jensen (1953) 41 C2d 193, 195, 259 P2d 425, 426; Roseleaf Corp. v. Chierighino (1963) 59 C2d 35, 38-41, 27 CR 873, 874-876; see further discussion at¶ 6:559 ff.]

(e) [6:551.5] Compare—debt structured into multiple promissory notes: A single lender may structure a single debt into several promissory notes in order to preserve the right to bring multiple actions without violating CCP § 726. [National Enterprises, Inc. v. Woods (2001) 94 CA4th 1217, 1235, 115 CR2d 37, 49—no violation of "one action" rule where subject debts originated years apart]

(f) [6:551.6] Compare—multiple final *determinations in single action: The purpose of the "one action" rule is to protect debtors from multiple collection suits, not to bar entry of more than one final determination in a single foreclosure action; i.e., a judicial decree of foreclosure does not bar a subsequent proceeding in the same action to adjudicate a deficiency judgment (where a deficiency judgment is otherwise allowed by statute) (¶ 6:578). [Kinsmith Fin'l Corp. v. Gilroy (2003) 105 CA4th 447, 453-454, 129 CR2d 478, 483; see also ¶ 6:578.3]

(g) [6:551.7] Exception—fraud: CCP § 726 itself contains an exception to the "one-action" rule: A lender may sue a borrower for fraudulently inducing the lender to make the loan unless the loan is secured by a single-family home actually occupied by the borrower and the loan is for $150,000 or less (adjusted annually for inflation). [CCP § 726(f), (g); see also In re Montano (9th Cir. BAP 2013) 501 BR 96, 109 (applying Calif. law)—fraud exception did not apply to $89,990 note that borrower used to purchase home even though he purportedly engaged in fraud]

(2) [6:552] "Security first" rule: The "security first" aspect of CCP § 726 compels the creditor to exhaust its security before suing on the underlying debt. [Security Pac. Nat'l Bank v. Wozab (1990) 51 C3d 991, 997-999, 275 CR 201, 204-205; see also Thoryk v. San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. (2014) 225 CA4th 386, 399, 170 CR3d 309, 317; Kinsmith Fin'l Corp. v. Gilroy (2003) 105 CA4th 447, 453, 129 CR2d 478, 483]

(a) [6:552.1] Compare—worthless security: Foreclosure is not required as the lender's first remedy where the encumbered property (security) has become valueless through no fault of the lender, rendering pursuit of a foreclosure action an idle act. [Bank of America Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n v. Graves (1996) 51 CA4th 607, 611, 59 CR2d 288, 291; C.J.A. Corp. v. Trans-Action Fin'l Corp. (2001) 86 CA4th 664, 669, 103 CR2d 538, 541; see also Cadlerock Joint Venture, L.P. v. Lobel (2012) 206 CA4th 1531, 1539, 143 CR3d 96, 101-102—exception does not apply if "beneficiary himself" causes loss of security (e.g., by unilaterally divesting its security interest without debtor's consent); see also ¶ 6:559 ff.]

b. [6:553] Dual application: If a creditor files suit on its secured debt without first pursuing foreclosure on the security, CCP § 726's protections can be invoked in two distinct ways:

(1) [6:553.1] Affirmative defense: First, the debtor may raise CCP § 726 as an affirmative defense, compelling the creditor to first exhaust the security before obtaining a deficiency judgment. [Security Pac. Nat'l Bank v. Wozab (1990) 51 C3d 991, 1004-1005, 275 CR 201, 209; see also In re Prestige Ltd. Partnership-Concord (9th Cir. 2000) 234 F3d 1108, 1114-1115 (applying Calif. law); Scalese v. Wong (2000) 84 CA4th 863, 869, 101 CR2d 40, 43; compare Bank of America, N.A. v. Roberts (2013) 217 CA4th 1386, 1396-1398, 159 CR3d 345, 353-355—lender not required to first pursue foreclosure in light of agreed short sale whereby borrower stipulated to remain personally liable on loan in exchange for lender consenting to release its lien]

(2) [6:553.2] As sanction: Alternatively, the debtor may waive the affirmative defense, allowing the lender's action on the debt to proceed to judgment. [Paykar Const., Inc. v. Spilat Const. Corp. (2001) 92 CA4th 488, 496, 111 CR2d 863, 868]

But the debtor then has the right to invoke CCP § 726 as a sanction, thereby barring the lender from further pursuing its security interest ("election of remedies," ¶ 6:553.3). [Walker v. Community Bank (1974) 10 C3d 729, 734, 111 CR 897, 900; Scalese v. Wong (2000) 84 CA4th 863, 869, 101 CR2d 40, 43; In re Prestige Ltd. Partnership-Concord (9th Cir. 2000) 234 F3d 1108, 1115]

(a) [6:553.3] Election of remedies: A lender who elects a remedy other than foreclosure waives the right to foreclose on the security, effectively losing its security interest (but not the underlying debt). [Security Pac. Nat'l Bank v. Wozab (1990) 51 C3d 991, 997, 1002, 275 CR 201, 204, 208; see Scalese v. Wong (2000) 84 CA4th 863, 869, 101 CR2d 40, 43; In re Prestige Ltd. Partnership-Concord (9th Cir. 2000) 234 F3d 1108, 1114-1117]

1) [6:553.3a] Antideficiency provisions moot: In effect, in this scenario, both sides have given up various of their respective rights: The lender waives for all time its right to have the property serve as security for the note. And the debtor has given up the right to have the security exhausted before becoming (potentially) personally liable for any shortfall. As a result, there can never be a foreclosure on the property and the antideficiency provisions (¶ 6:560 ff.) never come into play. [Scalese v. Wong (2000) 84 CA4th 863, 870, 101 CR2d 40, 44; In re Prestige Ltd. Partnership-Concord (9th Cir. 2000) 234 F3d 1108, 1114-1117]

(b) [6:553.4] Prejudgment attachment of unpledged assets as election of remedies: A secured lender may elect to forgo the remedy of foreclosure when, after the borrower's default, the lender commences legal proceedings to obtain a prejudgment attachment order against the borrower's unpledged property (property other than the security), thereby effectively obtaining an involuntary lien on additional assets belonging to the borrower. By resorting to this procedure before commencing a judicial foreclosure action, the lender may lose its security interest. [See Shin v. Sup.Ct. (Korea First Bank) (1994) 26 CA4th 542, 548-549, 31 CR2d 587, 591-592—lender who first obtained prejudgment attachment against defaulting debtor's unpledged Korean real property could not thereafter obtain judicial foreclosure; Kirkpatrick v. Westamerica Bank (1998) 65 CA4th 982, 990, 76 CR2d 876, 881]

1) [6:553.5] Impact of CCP § 483.012: Under CCP § 483.012, a secured creditor's resort to prejudgment attachment "shall not constitute an action for the recovery of a debt" in violation of the one action rule or security first rule so long as the attachment is pursued in an action to foreclose a mortgage or deed of trust. [See CCP § 483.012 (emphasis added), discussed at¶ 6:555 ff.]

Although not entirely clear, this statute probably does not overrule Shin, supra, … since the attachment in Shin was pursued in a separate action before foreclosing on the secured property (¶ 6:555.4). [See Kirkpatrick v. Westamerica Bank (1998) 65 CA4th 982, 990, 76 CR2d 876, 881 (postdating enactment of CCP § 483.012)—endorsing Shin without discussing CCP § 483.012; see also In re Prestige Ltd. Partnership-Concord (9th Cir. 1999) 164 F3d 1214, 1215—§ 483.012 applies only in actions to foreclose underlying security]

Cross-refer: Other forms of "action" within the meaning of the one action and security first rules are discussed at ¶ 6:554 ff.

[6:553.6 - 6:553.9] Reserved.

(c) [6:553.10] No "election of remedies" absent final judgment: Mere commencement of legal action does not constitute an election of remedies. A secured lender does not make an "election of remedies" for purposes of the one action and security first rules until there is a final judgment. [Kirkpatrick v. Westamerica Bank (1998) 65 CA4th 982, 990, 76 CR2d 876, 881; C.J.A. Corp. v. Trans-Action Fin'l Corp. (2001) 86 CA4th 664, 669, 103 CR2d 538, 542; see National Enterprises, Inc. v. Woods (2001) 94 CA4th 1217, 1237, 115 CR2d 37, 51]

• [6:553.10a] Thus, a partial summary judgment does not constitute an election of remedies; that would only occur at the point when the adjudicated claim is merged into a judgment. [Kirkpatrick v. Westamerica Bank (1998) 65 CA4th 982, 990, 76 CR2d 876, 881—no election of remedies where creditor amended complaint to seek foreclosure after adverse partial summary judgment entered on creditor's claim for breach of implied covenant]

• [6:553.10b] Similarly, the dismissal of a creditor's foreclosure action does not constitute an election of remedies precluding the creditor form bringing a subsequent foreclosure action on the same debt. [Griffin v. Compere (1952) 114 CA2d 246, 246, 250 P2d 1, 2]

(d) [6:553.11] No modification of final judgment to switch remedies: Having knowingly and unequivocally pursued a judicial foreclosure action to final judgment, the lender is estopped to change its remedy by a postjudgment modification authorizing a money judgment for the debt instead. [C.J.A. Corp. v. Trans-Action Fin'l Corp. (2001) 86 CA4th 664, 669-671, 103 CR2d 538, 542-543]

Allowing modification of a foreclosure judgment would be unfair and prejudicial to the debtor by summarily taking away their rights to a fair value hearing and to redeem the property (CCP § 726); the debtor would also be prejudiced to the extent they expended attorney fees and costs in defending the judicial foreclosure action. Moreover, allowing modification of a final judgment to obtain a completely different remedy "does an injustice to the strong policy favoring finality of actions." [C.J.A. Corp. v. Trans-Action Fin'l Corp., supra, 86 CA4th at 671, 103 CR2d at 543—creditor's attempt to modify foreclosure judgment into money judgment 15 months after entry of judgment rejected]

c. [6:554] "Action": The CCP § 726 "one action" and "security first" rules have generated many complex issues. One of the most difficult issues concerns the definition of "action" within the meaning of the statute—i.e., when the creditor's pursuit of a particular remedy may be deemed an "action" in violation of the rules.

"Action" is defined under CCP § 22 as "an ordinary proceeding in a court of justice by which one party prosecutes another for the declaration, enforcement, or protection of a right, the redress or prevention of a wrong, or the punishment of a public offense." [CCP § 22; Kirkpatrick v. Westamerica Bank (1998) 65 CA4th 982, 989, 76 CR2d 876, 880 & fn. 4]

In operation the "one action rule" applies to any proceeding or action by the lender "for recovery of the debt, or enforcement of any right, secured by a mortgage or deed of trust." [Shin v. Sup.Ct. (Korea First Bank) (1994) 26 CA4th 542, 545, 31 CR2d 587, 589]

Clearly, a secured lender violates the "one action" and "security first" rules by recovering a personal money judgment against the debtor without first foreclosing all of its security. That "action" triggers the sanction of CCP § 726 (¶ 6:553.2) and thereby waives further recourse against the security. [Shin v. Sup.Ct. (Korea First Bank), supra, 26 CA4th at 547, 31 CR2d at 590] Resort to other remedies, however, does not necessarily waive the right to foreclose:

(1) [6:554.1] Nonjudicial foreclosure: A nonjudicial foreclosure is not an "action" within the meaning of CCP § 726. Thus, a nonjudicial foreclosure will not itself preclude the lender from pursuing a subsequent "action" for recovery of the secured debt. [See Walker v. Community Bank (1974) 10 C3d 729, 736, 111 CR 897, 901; Birman v. Loeb (1998) 64 CA4th 502, 509, 75 CR2d 294, 299; and Resolution Trust Corp. v. Bayside Developers (9th Cir. 1994) 43 F3d 1230, 1243 (construing Calif. law)]

Compare—antideficiency law: But CCP § 580d (¶ 6:570) would bar a deficiency judgment after the nonjudicial foreclosure sale. [See Black Sky Capital, LLC v. Cobb (2019) 7 C5th 156, 158, 246 CR3d 583, 585; Walker v. Community Bank, supra, 10 C3d at 736, 111 CR at 901-902]

[6:554.2 - 6:554.4] Reserved.

(2) Setoffs

(a) [6:554.5] Bank's setoff of funds in debtor's general account: Generally, an extrajudicial setoff is not an "action" within the meaning of CCP § 726. [Security Pac. Nat'l Bank v. Wozab (1990) 51 C3d 991, 998, 275 CR 201, 205—nonjudicial setoff cannot be an "action" as defined by CCP § 22]

For example, a bank's (creditor's) unilateral setoff against its debtor's general deposit accounts in partial payment of a debt secured by the debtor-depositor's real property does not violate the one action rule … because it is not an "ordinary proceeding in a court of justice" (CCP § 22, ¶ 6:554). [Security Pac. Nat'l Bank v. Wozab, supra, 51 C3d at 998, 275 CR at 205]

Nonetheless, the setoff violates the CCP § 726 security first rule. Having failed to foreclose its real property security interest before taking the setoff, the bank triggers the sanction of § 726 and is deemed to have waived its security interest in the depositor-debtor's real property. [Security Pac. Nat'l Bank v. Wozab, supra, 51 C3d at 999-1002, 275 CR at 205-207]

1) [6:554.5a] Compare—voluntary payments made pursuant to "Loan Workout Plan":CCP § 726 did not preclude foreclosure on a residence where the lender accepted "trial period payments" and postponed the foreclosure sale pursuant to the debtors' Loan Workout Plan, which was preliminary to a possible loan modification that never materialized due to the debtors' failure to fulfill certain other conditions:

"The one-form-of action and security-first rules do not apply under the circumstances here … [The debtors] voluntarily paid monthly payments during the Plan period in hopes of obtaining a loan modification after the [loan servicer and lender] reviewed their financial information and declaration of hardship. In exchange, [the loan servicer and lender] suspended further foreclosure proceedings for approximately six months. We do not consider the payments a set-off manifesting an election to not foreclose pursuant to the one-form-of-action rule of section 726." [Nungaray v. Litton Loan Servicing, LP (2011) 200 CA4th 1499, 1505-1506, 135 CR3d 442, 447-448 (emphasis added); see also Mehta v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (SD CA 2010) 737 F.Supp.2d 1185, 1202 (applying Calif. law)—money paid by debtor pursuant to forbearance agreement was not a set-off and therefore not a basis for invoking CCP § 726's one-form-of-action and "security-first" rules (lender did not pursue debtor's assets or otherwise attempt to pursue debtor personally prior to foreclosure)]

(b) [6:554.6] Distinguish—equitable setoff: On the other hand, a setoff asserted in a judicial proceeding is an action within the meaning of CCP § 726. [Security Pac. Nat'l Bank v. Wozab (1990) 51 C3d 991, 999, 275 CR 201, 206, fn. 7; see Birman v. Loeb (1998) 64 CA4th 502, 509, 75 CR2d 294, 299]

Even so, asserting an equitable right of setoff does not violate § 726 so long as it is the only action brought by the creditor against the debtor. [Birman v. Loeb, supra, 64 CA4th at 509, 75 CR2d at 299]

But the equitable setoff may still be deemed the "functional equivalent" of a "deficiency judgment" and thus barred by the antideficiency laws if it is sought after a nonjudicial foreclosure; see¶ 6:561.2.

(3) [6:555] Prejudgment attachment: Subject to CCP § 580b (no deficiency judgment on a purchase money loan, ¶ 6:563) and CCP § 580d (no deficiency judgment after nonjudicial foreclosure, ¶ 6:570), in an action to foreclose a mortgage or deed of trust on real property (or an estate for years therein), pursuit of any attachment remedy under CCP § 481.010 et seq. "shall not constitute an action for the recovery of a debt" within the meaning of CCP § 726(a) "or a failure to comply with any other statutory or judicial requirement to proceed first against security." [CCP § 483.012 (emphasis added)]

Thus, a secured creditor's resort to prejudgment attachment in a foreclosure action will not bar the creditor from foreclosing against the security. [CCP § 483.012]

(a) [6:555.1] Limited to judicial foreclosure actions: CCP § 483.012 expressly limits its application to "an action to foreclose a mortgage or deed of trust." Thus, an attachment obtained outside the judicial foreclosure process apparently does constitute an "action" for CCP § 726 purposes. [In re Prestige Ltd. Partnership-Concord (9th Cir. 1999) 164 F3d 1214, 1215 (construing CCP § 483.012)—in guaranty action, creditor's attachment of guarantor's unpledged property waived its real property security interest]

(b) [6:555.2] Comment: Because of this limitation, CCP § 483.012 probably does not displace prior case law under which a lender was deemed to have violated the CCP § 726 one action rule by obtaining a prejudgment attachment order against the borrower's unpledged real property before pursuing an action to foreclose its security interest. [See Shin v. Sup.Ct. (Korea First Bank) (1994) 26 CA4th 542, 548-549, 31 CR2d 587, 591-592 (predating CCP § 483.012), discussed at ¶ 6:553.4]

"Since an attachment of property other than trust property constitutes an election to forgo the remedy of enforcement of the security interest the result in Shin is correct." [See Kirkpatrick v. Westamerica Bank (1998) 65 CA4th 982, 990, 76 CR2d 876, 881 (postdating § 483.012 but not addressing the statute)]

(4) [6:556] Authorized enforcement of assignment of rents/profits: Pursuit of a remedy authorized by Civ.C. § 2938(c) to enforce an assignment of rents, issues and profits (see ¶ 6:433.2) is not an "action" in violation of CCP § 726 and does not otherwise create a bar to an action against the security. [Civ.C. § 2938(e)(2) & (3)]

(a) [6:556.1] Petitioning for receiver: Thus, e.g., a lender-assignee does not violate CCP § 726 by petitioning for a court-appointed receiver to enforce the assignment (authorized by Civ.C. § 2938(c)(1)). "[T]he appointment of a receiver is not an action to collect the debt, but merely an action to protect and preserve the lender's security." [Resolution Trust Corp. v. Bayside Developers (ND CA 1993) 817 F.Supp. 822, 828, fn. 4 (emphasis in original), aff'd (9th Cir. 1994) 43 F3d 1230]

(b) [6:556.2] Enforcing securing interest: Enforcing the security interest in associated rents, issues or profits is not a lawsuit to enforce the primary debt which would allow the lender to execute against the debtor's general assets—i.e., the lender does not thereby obtain a personal money judgment in violation of the one action rule. [Resolution Trust Corp. v. Bayside Developers (9th Cir. 1994) 43 F3d 1230, 1240-1241]

Nor does the lender thereby violate the security first rule. The rents, issues and profits constitute additional collateral; thus, the lender has not collected from the debtor's noncollateral general assets before being paid with collateral (the secured real property). Moreover, there is no rule in California requiring the lender to look to its primary security first. [Resolution Trust Corp. v. Bayside Developers, supra, 43 F3d at 1241-1242—lender financing construction of townhouse development did not forfeit foreclosure right by first applying proceeds from receivership sale of completed units and model furniture to debt since they were part of lender's security]

(5) [6:557] Erroneous claim to hazard insurance proceeds: The lender's erroneous claim to proceeds of hazard insurance on the secured property and wrongful refusal to endorse the proceeds to the borrower is neither an "action" triggering a CCP § 726 election of remedies nor a violation of the § 726 security first rule. Simply resisting the borrower's efforts to take control of insurance proceeds does not constitute an attempt by the lender to set off the borrower's personal funds against the secured debt or otherwise to obtain the borrower's noncollateral general assets. Nor does it amount to an affirmative attempt to recover a debt or enforce a right. [Ziello v. Sup.Ct. (First Fed'l Bank of Calif.) (1995) 36 CA4th 321, 331, 42 CR2d 251, 257]

(6) [6:558] Recourse to letter of credit: By statute, there is no violation of the one action rule (or the security first rule) when a lender who holds both a deed of trust and a letter of credit as security for the obligation draws on, receives payment on, or makes a demand for payment under the letter of credit. Whether done before or after judicial or nonjudicial foreclosure of the deed of trust, the secured lender's action on the letter of credit is not an "action" within the meaning of CCP § 726(a) (nor is it a deficiency judgment within the meaning of CCP §§ 580a, 580b, 580d or 726(b), or otherwise in violation of CCP §§ 580a, 580b, 580d or 726). [CCP § 580.5(b); Western Sec. Bank, N.A. v. Sup.Ct. (Beverly Hills Business Bank) (1997) 15 C4th 232, 238, 252-253, 62 CR2d 243, 246, 256]

(a) [6:558.1] Limitation—certain letters of credit not enforceable: Though outside the scope of the one action and security first rules, certain letters of credit given in a loan transaction are not enforceable:

No party may enforce a letter of credit given in a loan transaction in which (i) the customer is a natural person; (ii) the letter of credit is issued to the beneficiary to avoid a default of the existing loan; and (iii) the existing loan is secured by a purchase money deed of trust or purchase money mortgage on one-to-four unit residential real property occupied in whole or in part by the customer (or intended to be so occupied) at the time the existing loan was made. [CCP § 580.7]

[6:558.2 - 6:558.4] Reserved.

(7) [6:558.5] Court proceeding to enforce lender's right of hazardous materials inspection: Under specified circumstances, a secured lender has the statutory right to enter and inspect the real property security for suspected hazardous substance contamination (¶ 6:629 ff.); and, if necessary, may commence an action to enforce that right (¶ 6:633). The lender's commencement of such litigation is not an "action" within the meaning of the CCP § 726(a) one action rule. [Civ.C. § 2929.5(d); CCP § 564(d); see Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 1248, 44 CR2d 352, 366, fn. 10]

(8) [6:558.6] Secured creditor's receipt of cash collateral protection payments in bankruptcy: A secured creditor does not violate CCP § 726 by accepting court-ordered cash collateral adequate protection payments in a Chapter 11 bankruptcy (see 11 USC §§ 361, 363). Section 726 is triggered by a creditor's action, not a debtor's action; and by passively accepting the cash collateral payments, the creditor has neither initiated an action to recover its secured debt, obtained a personal money judgment against the debtor, nor attempted to collect its debt from the debtor's noncollateral general assets. Consequently, this scenario does not result in a waiver of the creditor's real property security. [In re Sunnymead Shopping Center Co. (9th Cir. BAP 1995) 178 BR 809, 817]

d. [6:558.10] Waiver by guarantor: The benefits of CCP § 726*cannot* be waived by the principal obligor (¶ 6:562) but can be waived by a guarantor on the obligation (¶ 6:598 ff.).

5. [6:559] Rights of Sold-Out Junior Lienholder: A sold-out junior lienholder is free to sue the obligor directly after the security has been extinguished by foreclosure of the senior lien (i.e., where a senior foreclosure sale "wipes out" all junior liens) without regard to the "one action rule" (CCP § 726; ¶ 6:551), the nonjudicial sale deficiency prohibition (CCP § 580d; ¶ 6:570) or the "fair value" deficiency limitation (CCP §§ 580a, 726; ¶ 6:577). [See Black Sky Capital, LLC v. Cobb (2019) 7 C5th 156, 160-161, 246 CR3d 583, 587; Bank of America Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n v. Graves (1996) 51 CA4th 607, 613, 59 CR2d 288, 292; CadlerockJoint Venture, L.P. v. Lobel (2012) 206 CA4th 1531, 1546-1547, 143 CR3d 96, 107-108]

Rationale: The purpose of CCP § 580d is to ensure parity between nonjudicial and judicial remedies and to prevent double recovery by the creditor. [Black Sky Capital, LLC v. Cobb (2019) 7 C5th 156, 160-161, 246 CR3d 583, 586-587] Also, the junior lienholder's right to recover should not be controlled "by the whim of the senior." [Black Sky Capital, LLC v. Cobb, supra, 7 C5th at 161, 246 CR3d at 587; see also Roseleaf Corp. v. Chierighino (1963) 59 C2d 35, 44, 27 CR 873, 878; National Enterprises, Inc. v. Woods (2001) 94 CA4th 1217, 1234, 115 CR2d 37, 49]

a. [6:559.1] Notwithstanding junior's aborted nonjudicial foreclosure: The result is the same even if the sold-out junior lienholder commenced foreclosure proceedings by recording a notice of default and notice of trustee's sale before the senior commenced its foreclosure proceedings, but postponed its foreclosure sale to allow the senior to complete its foreclosure sale first. Mere commencement of nonjudicial foreclosure proceedings is not an election of remedies (¶ 6:553.10). [Bank of America Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n v. Graves (1996) 51 CA4th 607, 614-615, 59 CR2d 288, 293]

b. [6:559.2] Single lender holds senior and junior liens: The sold-out junior lienholder exception (¶ 6:559, 6:570.1) may apply even where a single lender holds both the junior and senior liens. This is so provided the lender did not structure what was functionally a single loan into two separate notes (i.e., "intentional loan-splitting") in order to increase its recovery. "Where, as here, there is no allegation of evasive loan splitting or recovery in excess of what junior lienholder would be able to recover, we see no reason to depart from a straightforward reading of section 580d." [See Black Sky Capital, LLC v. Cobb (2019) 7 C5th 156, 164-165, 246 CR3d 583, 590-591 (disapproving prior inconsistent authority)—because no sale occurred under trust deed securing junior note, CCP § 580d did not preclude single lender holding both senior and junior liens from pursuing deficiency judgment on junior note]

c. [6:559.3] Lender assigns/sells liens to separate creditors: Where a single lender holding both the senior and junior liens sells or assigns the liens to independent parties, the buyer/assignee of the junior lien ordinarily is protected by the sold-out junior lienholder exception: i.e., CCP § 726 does not prohibit the junior lienholder from bringing a subsequent action, provided there is no evidence of a scheme between the lienholders to circumvent the "one action" rule. [National Enterprises, Inc. v. Woods (2001) 94 CA4th 1217, 1221, 115 CR2d 37, 38—treating two separate debts once held by single creditor as one debt is inconsistent with plain language and underlying purpose of § 726, and would have adverse effect on transfers to secondary mortgage market]

d. [6:559.4] Limitation—junior "purchase-money loans": The sold-out junior lienholder exception does not apply if the junior loan was a "purchase money loan" (¶ 6:563). Indeed, "[t]here is no question that a junior lienholder whose loan is used to purchase a parcel of property and secured by that property has no legal right to enforce its debt against the borrower personally if the sale price at a foreclosure on that property initiated by any other lienholder who lent money for the purchase price is insufficient to pay off the debt." [See Alborzian v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2015) 235 CA4th 29, 35, 185 CR3d 84, 89 (emphasis added) (discussed further at ¶ 6:563 ff.)]

e. [6:559.5] Limitation—prior nonjudicial foreclosure of one of several secured properties on same debt: Nor does the sold-out junior lienholder exception apply where a single debt is secured by several pieces of property and the creditor has proceeded nonjudicially against its other security. By electing to collect the debt through nonjudicial foreclosure, the creditor has chosen to forgo all judicial remedies. [Marriage of Oropallo (1998) 68 CA4th 997, 1005-1006, 80 CR2d 669, 674-675—after nonjudicial foreclosure on several properties securing single debt, creditor could not invoke "sold out junior lienholder" exception and proceed to sue obligor directly]

f. [6:559.6] Effect in bankruptcy: Sold-out junior trust deed holders who sue on the debt step outside of the foreclosure process. Thus, a subsequent judgment on the debt obtained by a sold-out junior lienholder is not a "judgment arising out of a mortgage foreclosure" for purposes of 11 USC § 522(f)(2)(C) (excepting judicial liens arising from foreclosure from usual homestead exemption). [In re Been (9th Cir. 1998) 153 F3d 1034, 1036]

g. [6:559.7] Compare—"revival" of extinguished junior liens: A junior lien extinguished by the foreclosure of a senior lien may reattach to the property, as a "function of equity," if the original owner (debtor) reacquires the property. Under such circumstances, the "revived" junior lien effectively becomes an "equitable encumbrance," subordinate to the new deed of trust given to reacquire the property and/or any other simultaneously-created and recorded legal liens. [DMC, Inc. v. Downey Sav. & Loan Ass'n (2002) 99 CA4th 190, 199-200, 120 CR2d 761, 768]

Thus, e.g., when an original owner repurchases property after a trustee's sale and thereby revives a junior deed of trust, the junior trust deed remains second to a purchase-money deed of trust that replaced the original senior lien. [DMC, Inc. v. Downey Sav. & Loan Ass'n, supra, 99 CA4th at 199, 120 CR2d at 768—"After agreeing to take a junior lien on the property, it would defy reason and equity to elevate the junior lien above its bargained-for position"]

6. Antideficiency Laws

a. [6:560] In general: The "one action" and "security first" rules discussed at ¶ 6:550 ff. are features of California's broader "antideficiency laws." The antideficiency laws (CCP §§ 580a, 580b, 580d and 726) are detailed and quite complex; and, in many contexts, their application is still evolving.

The purposes behind the antideficiency provisions are to prevent (1) a multiplicity of actions, (2) an overvaluation of the security, (3) aggravation of an economic recession that would likely result if debtors lost their property and were also burdened with personal liability, and (4) creditors from making an unreasonably low bid at the foreclosure sale, acquiring the security below its value, and then recovering a personal judgment against the debtor. [Thoryk v. San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. (2014) 225 CA4th 386, 398, 170 CR3d 309, 316; California Bank & Trust v. Lawlor (2013) 222 CA4th 625, 632, 166 CR3d 38, 43; see also In re Prestige Ltd. Partnership-Concord (9th Cir. 2000) 234 F3d 1108, 1115 (applying Calif. law)]

(Only a small portion of California's antideficiency laws affect purchase and sale transactions. The sections at ¶ 6:561 ff. address those provisions.)

➪ [6:560.1] TACTICAL CONSIDERATIONS: The antideficiency laws raise differing concerns for buyers and sellers:

- Sellers should be concerned with the antideficiency laws only if (i) the transaction will involve seller financing; or (ii) the buyer will be taking over the seller's existing financing (¶ 6:310 ff.).

- On the other hand, buyers should always be concerned whether their particular kind of financing will be subject to antideficiency protection because the result directly affects the extent to which they can be exposed to personal liability on the loan obligation above and beyond the security given.

(1) [6:561] No deficiency judgment in certain circumstances: In certain circumstances, foreclosure of the security is a lender's exclusive remedy—i.e., despite properly pursuing foreclosure as the first remedy ("security first" rule), no deficiency judgment can be obtained:

- *Purchase money loan antideficiency rule:*CCP § 580b bars a deficiency judgment in purchase money loan transactions (see¶ 6:563).

- *Nonjudicial foreclosure antideficiency rule:*CCP § 580d bars a deficiency judgment after nonjudicial foreclosure (see¶ 6:570 ff.).

- *Short sale transaction antideficiency rule:*CCP § 580e bars a deficiency judgment in short sale transactions involving residential one-to-four unit properties (see¶ 6:571 ff.).

(a) [6:561.1] "Deficiency judgment": A "deficiency judgment" is a personal money judgment against the debtor for the difference between the price realized for the secured property at a foreclosure sale and the outstanding debt (in some cases, reduced by the "fair value" limitation, see¶ 6:577). [CCP §§ 580a, 726(b); Cornelison v. Kornbluth (1975) 15 C3d 590, 603, 125 CR 557, 566; see Dreyfuss v. Union Bank of Calif. (2000) 24 C4th 400, 407, 101 CR2d 29, 34]

1) [6:561.2] "Functional equivalent" of deficiency judgment also proscribed: Certain actions by a secured creditor do not literally seek to impose personal liability against the debtor and thus do not seek a "deficiency judgment" per se.

Nonetheless, such actions will be barred as if they were a proscribed "deficiency judgment" if they violate the policy considerations underlying the antideficiency judgment statutes and therefore amount to the "functional equivalent" of a deficiency judgment. [See Birman v. Loeb (1998) 64 CA4th 502, 511, 75 CR2d 294, 300, and cases cited therein]

For example, allowing the creditor an "equitable setoff" of its independent obligation to the debtor against the debtor's deficiency liability to the creditor arising from an inadequately secured real property purchase money loan would be the functional equivalent of a proscribed deficiency judgment … because it would contravene the economic policies underlying the CCP § 580b antideficiency bar. [Birman v. Loeb, supra, 64 CA4th at 513-514, 75 CR2d at 301-302; see also Thoryk v. San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. (2014) 225 CA4th 386, 405, 170 CR3d 309, 322—lender's postforeclosure lien on borrower's claim against third party tortfeasors violated antideficiency laws because it was "measured by, and interrelated to, the remaining deficiency on the note, but [the] loan documents did not create additional available security for the same obligation"; and further discussion at¶ 6:567 ff.]

2) [6:561.3] Serial foreclosures not deficiency judgments: A lender's resort to any and all security on a debt is not an attempt to secure a personal judgment against the debtor and does not implicate the antideficiency provisions. I.e., no deficiency judgment is involved when the lender conducts a nonjudicial foreclosure of one property and then proceeds with serial foreclosure sales of the remaining properties securing the same defaulted loan. [Dreyfuss v. Union Bank of Calif. (2000) 24 C4th 400, 407-409, 101 CR2d 29, 34-35; see also¶ 6:561.15 ff. & 6:570.2]

3) [6:561.4] Attorney fees award to lender in action challenging foreclosure not a deficiency judgment: A lender's prevailing party attorney fees award (pursuant to provision in the loan documents) in an action successfully challenging a nonjudicial foreclosure sale is not a deficiency judgment against the borrower.

The award "is neither measured by, nor interrelated to, a deficiency" on the loan. [Jones v. Union Bank of Calif. (2005) 127 CA4th 542, 546-547, 25 CR3d 783, 787-788—immaterial whether lender's action seeks to enjoin foreclosure or set aside completed trustee's sale; compare Thoryk v. San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. (2014) 225 CA4th 386, 404, 170 CR3d 309, 321—lender's attorney fee claim pursuant to note and junior deed of trust unenforceable following foreclosure because debtor-creditor relationship was extinguished and no additional collateral beyond real property security was available]

(b) [6:561.5] Compare—tort actions: The antideficiency statutes apply to actions on the note (i.e., a contract suit to recover the difference between the secured obligation and the value of the security realized, or that could be realized, in a foreclosure sale). Lenders are not precluded by the antideficiency statutes from pursuing tort actions against the debtor for damages resulting from the debtor's tortious conduct (e.g., action for waste, conversion, fraud, etc.); this is so even though the amount of tort damages received may be similar to what would be recovered in an action on the note. [See Evans v. California Trailer Court, Inc. (1994) 28 CA4th 540, 552-553, 33 CR2d 646, 652 (disapproved on other grounds by Black Sky Capital v. Cobb (2019) 7 C5th 156, 165, 246 CR3d 583, 591)—lender's postforeclosure tort claims alleging impairment of security by debtor's commission of "bad faith" waste, conversion and fraud not barred by antideficiency rules; Webber v. Inland Empire Investments, Inc. (1999) 74 CA4th 884, 903, 88 CR2d 594, 606; compare Lawler v. Jacobs (2000) 83 CA4th 723, 737-738, 100 CR2d 52, 62-63—fraud action for nonperformance of invalid waiver of CCP § 580b antideficiency provision (¶ 6:568) rejected]

1) [6:561.5a] "Bad faith waste": The antideficiency statutes do not protect trustors/debtors from liability for "bad faith waste" resulting from their failure to properly maintain the secured property. [Cornelison v. Kornbluth (1975) 15 C3d 590, 603-604, 125 CR 557, 566-567—"bad faith waste" includes reckless, intentional or malicious despoiling of property (not neglect due to owner's financial inability to properly maintain property); see also Fait v. New Faze Develop., Inc. (2012) 207 CA4th 284, 294, 143 CR3d 382, 388—any waste not committed solely or primarily because of economic pressures or market depression qualifies as "bad faith" waste (¶ 6:561.5d); Nippon Credit Bank, Ltd. v. 1333 North Calif. Boulevard (2001) 86 CA4th 486, 494-496, 103 CR2d 421, 425-427—failure to pay property taxes may be deemed "bad faith waste" (¶ 6:535.2)]

a) [6:561.5b] Elements: The following elements may support an action for "bad faith waste":

— Creditor/beneficiary has a lien encumbering the subject property;

— Trustor/debtor has or had possession of the property; and — Waste was committed on the property in bad faith, impairing its value. [See Cornelison v. Kornbluth (1975) 15 C3d 590, 597-598, 125 CR 557, 562-563 & fns. 2, 3]

b) [6:561.5c] Measure of damages: The measure of damages for bad faith waste is the amount of the security's impairment—i.e., "the amount by which the value of the security is less than the outstanding indebtedness and is thereby rendered inadequate." [Cornelison v. Kornbluth (1975) 15 C3d 590, 606, 125 CR 557, 568]

c) [6:561.5d] Defenses: Defenses to a bad faith waste action include financial difficulties, depressed conditions in the general real estate market and full credit bids at foreclosure proceedings (¶ 6:561.7). [See In re Mills (9th Cir. 1988) 841 F2d 902, 905 (financial difficulties defense); Hickman v. Mulder (1976) 58 CA3d 900, 909, 130 CR 304, 310 (decline in real estate values defense); and Cornelison v. Kornbluth (1975) 15 C3d 590, 606-608, 125 CR 557, 568-570 (full credit bid defense; see¶ 6:535.3 ff., 6:561.7)]

Compare: It is no defense to an action for waste to simply claim that a building's demolition was part of a good faith attempt to improve the property. "The impairment of security that results from the destruction of the building is actionable waste, notwithstanding the antideficiency statutes, unless the destruction itself was somehow caused by the economic pressures of a depressed economy." [Fait v. New Faze Develop., Inc. (2012) 207 CA4th 284, 289, 143 CR3d 382, 384]

2) [6:561.6] Third party torts distinguished: The borrower does not lose antideficiency protection, and can raise the antideficiency rule as a defense, when the tortious conduct in issue was perpetrated by a third party. [See Webber v. Inland Empire Investments, Inc. (1999) 74 CA4th 884, 916-917, 88 CR2d 594, 615-616 (involving "sham" foreclosure allegedly orchestrated by borrower that wiped out plaintiff's purchase money lien)—borrower entitled to raise antideficiency rule as defense since court found third party, not borrower, engaged in the tortious conduct; compare Thoryk v. San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. (2014) 225 CA4th 386, 399, 170 CR3d 309, 317—lender's separate tort action against third party electric company for impairment of security (fire damage) fell outside scope of antideficiency law, making it an "appropriate means" by which lender could pursue "its own remedies"]

3) [6:561.7] Bar under full credit bid rule distinguished: Notwithstanding inapplicability of the antideficiency rule to tort claims, lenders who make a full credit bid (¶ 6:535.1) at a nonjudicial foreclosure sale generally may not pursue tort claims against obligors or third parties. Having obtained property with a market value equal to the value of the debt and the expenses of collection, the lender cannot thereafter complain of being damaged. See discussion at¶ 6:535.3 ff.

[6:561.8 - 6:561.9] Reserved.

(c) [6:561.10] Compare—lender's right to recover amount mistakenly omitted from payoff demand statement: An obligor is entitled to rely on the lender's "payoff demand statement" as establishing the full amount necessary to satisfy the secured obligation. I.e., payment of the specified amount gives the obligor-trustor a right to release of the lien and reconveyance of the trust deed (¶ 6:406). [Civ.C. §§ 2941(b)(1), 2943(d)(1)]

If the statement mistakenly understates the amount due on the secured loan, the balance continues to be recoverable by the lender as an unsecured (personal) obligation (up to the value of the property). This is not a violation of the antideficiency statutes. [Civ.C. § 2943(d)(3); Ghirardo v. Antonioli (1996) 14 C4th 39, 43, 57 CR2d 687, 689 (same where payoff demand statement and reconveyance predated enactment of § 2943(d)(3))]

Rationale

• [6:561.11] The lender's remedy is in the nature of equitable relief on an unjust enrichment theory, to prevent the obligor from receiving a windfall and escaping the obligation of satisfying a loan in full when the deed of trust is retired in error. [Ghirardo v. Antonioli (1996) 14 C4th 39, 43, 57 CR2d 687, 694]

• [6:561.12] Moreover, allowing the lender to pursue the obligor for the balance does "not contradict the policy of requiring the creditor to rely upon the property to secure the debt … because any unjust enrichment recovery could not exceed the property value." In other words, because the lender's recovery from the obligor is limited to the amount of the debt covered by the value of the property, it is not the same as a deficiency judgment. [Ghirardo v. Antonioli (1996) 14 C4th 39, 53, 57 CR2d 687, 695]

Cross-refer: For further discussion of payoff demand statements, see¶ 4:304.1 ff.

[6:561.13 - 6:561.14] Reserved.

(d) [6:561.15] Compare—recourse against multiple security instruments: A lender's foreclosure under a deed of trust does not preclude subsequent recourse under an assignment of rents or other security instrument given to collateralize the same debt. [Hodges v. Mark (1996) 49 CA4th 651, 656, 56 CR2d 700, 703; see also¶ 6:568.6]

On the other hand, when the antideficiency laws apply to the transaction, a lender holding multiple security instruments on the same obligation (e.g., securing the payment of a combined purchase price for real and personal property) cannot obtain a personal money judgment after foreclosing under one of the security instruments. [Sherwood-Trimble Med. Group v. 10001 Venice Blvd. Partnership (1999) 75 CA4th 872, 877, 89 CR2d 533, 536; and see further discussion at¶ 6:564.15 ff.]

1) [6:561.16] "Mixed collateral": Where a single debt is secured by both real and personal property, special "mixed collateral" rules apply. [Florio v. Lau (1998) 68 CA4th 637, 644-645, 80 CR2d 409, 413-414]

Cases allowing nonjudicially foreclosing lenders (¶ 6:561.18) to resort to the "mixed" or "additional" security involve certain types of valuable property mentioned or incorporated in the mortgage documents. [See Thoryk v. San Diego Gas & Elec. Co. (2014) 225 CA4th 386, 405, 170 CR3d 309, 321 (finding general references in trust deed to personal property, etc. "too general to amount to sufficiently specific designations of existing 'additional' security")]

a) [6:561.17] Purpose: The "Mixed Collateral Statute" (Comm'l C. § 9604) is intended to minimize the burdens on creditors secured by personal property when the creditor has also accepted security interests in real property. [Florio v. Lau (1998) 68 CA4th 637, 641, 80 CR2d 409, 411]

b) [6:561.18] Foreclosure options: Under the Mixed Collateral Statute, secured creditors may sell closely-related real and personal property as a single unit in a "unified sale." In such cases, the foreclosure is governed entirely by statutes applicable to real property collateral (e.g., CCP §§ 726, 580a, 580b & 580d). [Florio v. Lau (1998) 68 CA4th 637, 642, 80 CR2d 409, 411-412; see Sherwood-Trimble Med. Group v. 10001 Venice Blvd. Partnership (1999) 75 CA4th 872, 877, 89 CR2d 533, 535-536—"[m]erely by acquiring the real property security interest, the creditor subjects himself and the single obligation secured by both real and personal property to the full panoply of one-action, antideficiency, fair value, and reinstatement provisions" of Calif. statutes (internal quotes and original emphasis omitted)]

Alternatively, the creditor may proceed separately against the real and personal property collateral. In such cases, the real property rules are applied only to the secured real property; the more flexible personal property foreclosure rules are applied to the personal property. [See Oxford Street Properties, LLC v. Rehabilitation Assocs., LLC (2012) 206 CA4th 296, 304, 141 CR3d 704, 709, fn. 4—CCP § 726 (one action rule) does not apply to personal property component of mixed collateral where personal property foreclosed in nonunified sale; Florio v. Lau, supra, 68 CA4th at 642-643, 80 CR2d at 412—CCP § 726 3-month limit on deficiency judgments not applicable to personal property; see also¶ 6:576.1]

c) [6:561.19] "Fair value" limitation in mixed collateral cases:See*¶ 6:577.2.

(2) Waiver limitations

(a) [6:562] Antideficiency protections *nonwaivable by borrower: The benefits of the antideficiency judgment legislation may not be waived by the debtor at the time the loan is made or renewed. Such a waiver "shall be void and of no effect." [Civ.C. § 2953—applicable to CCP §§ 580a & 726; Valinda Builders, Inc. v. Bissner (1964) 230 CA2d 106, 112, 40 CR 735, 738-739—debtor's waiver agreement "contrary to public policy, void and ineffectual for any purpose"; compare Nungaray v. Litton Loan Servicing, LP (2011) 200 CA4th 1499, 1506, 135 CR3d 442, 448—Civ.C. § 2953 does not preclude agreements between borrowers and lenders regarding forbearance of foreclosure to negotiate loan modifications]

1) [6:562.1] Analogous "purchase money" waiver limitation: Although CCP § 580b ("purchase money" antideficiency statute) is not expressly included within the ambit of Civ.C. § 2953 (¶ 6:562), an analogous protection has been fashioned by case law. [DeBerard Properties, Ltd. v. Lim (1999) 20 C4th 659, 670-671, 85 CR2d 292, 299; California Bank & Trust v. Lawlor (2013) 222 CA4th 625, 632, 166 CR3d 38, 43; see¶ 6:568 ff.]

2) [6:562.2] Distinguish—waiver by choice of law provision: A choice of law provision in the note or trust deed may have the effect of a proscribed waiver when the chosen state does not have comparable antideficiency judgment laws. Nonetheless, if the choice of law provision is otherwise enforceable (see¶ 6:273), the debtor properly may be subjected to a deficiency judgment under the chosen state's law … without regard to California's proscription against advance waivers. [See Guardian Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. MD Assocs. (1998) 64 CA4th 309, 323, 75 CR2d 151, 160 (enforcing promissory note provision adopting Texas law which, unlike Calif., did not prohibit deficiency judgment after foreclosure of purchase money security interest)]

[6:562.3 - 6:562.4] Reserved.

(b) [6:562.5] Guarantor waivers: Unlike the principal debtor, a guarantor on the obligation can waive antideficiency protection; see¶ 6:598 ff.

1) [6:562.6] Compare—purported "guaranty" from borrower: Lenders sometimes obtain a separate "guaranty" from the borrower in the misguided belief the guaranty will supersede nonwaivability of the antideficiency laws. A purported guaranty made by a principal obligor of a secured obligation is unenforceable … because a principal obligor cannot guarantee its own debt. [See Valinda Builders, Inc. v. Bissner (1964) 230 CA2d 106, 111, 40 CR 735, 738; and discussion of "sham" guaranties at ¶ 6:595 ff.]

(c) [6:562.7] Indemnitor waivers: Like guarantors, indemnitors can waive antideficiency protections unless the indemnitor is "substantially the same" as the principal debtor. See¶ 6:605.

b. [6:563] "Purchase money loan" antideficiency rule (CCP § 580b): Except as otherwise provided by statute (¶ 6:563.2 ff.), no deficiency is owed by or may be collected from, and no deficiency judgment can be obtained against, the principal obligor after any sale (whether judicial, nonjudicial or short) under a "purchase money" loan. [CCP § 580b(a); Coker v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2016) 62 C4th 667, 676, 197 CR3d 131, 137; see also Alborzian v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2015) 235 CA4th 29, 35, 185 CR3d 84, 89—while CCP § 580b prohibits any collection of post-12/31/12 legally unenforceable debts, it does not absolutely bar lienholders from trying to get borrowers to voluntarily pay off pre-1/1/13 loan balances (¶ 6:563.3); Scalese v. Wong (2000) 84 CA4th 863, 868, 101 CR2d 40, 42—§ 580b protection applies to any purchase loan, even if for five-unit apartment building]

The purpose of § 580b is to place the risk of inadequate security on the purchase money lender/seller. The lender is thus discouraged from overvaluing the security. Similarly, if inadequacy of the security results from general market decline, the statute prevents aggravation of the downturn that would result if defaulting purchasers were burdened with large personal liability. Section 580b compels the purchase money lender to assume the risk that the security is inadequate. [See Coker v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A., supra, 62 C4th at 674, 197 CR3d at 135; Cornelison v. Kornbluth (1975) 15 C3d 590, 601-602, 125 CR 557, 565; see also Alborzian v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A., supra, 235 CA4th at 36, 185 CR3d at 90]

➪ [6:563.1] PRACTICE POINTER: Borrower's counsel should approach this area with caution. It is not always a simple task to determine whether CCP § 580b applies. Failure to raise § 580b as an affirmative defense could result in malpractice liability. [See Crookall v. Davis, Punelli, Keathley & Willard (1998) 65 CA4th 1048, 1067-1068, 77 CR2d 250, 262]

(1) [6:563.2] Applicable to post-12/31/12 loans, refinances and other credit transactions: The CCP § 580b antideficiency rule applies to post-12/31/12 loans, refinances and other credit transactions used to refinance purchase money loans, as defined, as well as subsequent refinances of purchase money loans. [See CCP § 580b(b)]

Lender/creditor advances of new principal that are not applied to an obligation owed or to be owed under the purchase money loan, and to fees, costs or other related refinance expenses, are exceptions to the above rule. [See CCP § 580b(b)]

(a) [6:563.3] Compare—attempts to collect pre-1/1/13 legally unenforceable debts; unlawful debt collection practices apply: For loans executed before 1/1/13, the lienholder is not absolutely barred from trying to get a borrower to pay off the loan balance voluntarily. Nonetheless, the lienholder remains liable under any other law it violates in the course of doing so. For example, the lienholder may run afoul of the federal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (15 USC § 1692 et seq.), the Rosenthal Fair Debt Collection Practices Act (Civ.C. § 1788 et seq.) and the Unfair Competition Law (Bus. & Prof.C. § 17200 et seq.). [See Alborzian v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2015) 235 CA4th 29, 33-36, 185 CR3d 84, 87-90—if sold-out junior lienholder's collection efforts inaccurately implied its debt was still enforceable following foreclosure, borrower could sue lienholder under federal FDCPA, and lienholder or its debt collector under state FDCPA and UCL]

Cross-refer: For a detailed treatment of the federal and state FDCPAs, see Ahart, Cal. Prac. Guide: Enforcing Judgments & Debts (TRG), Ch. 2.

(2) [6:563.4] Inapplicable to guarantors, pledgors or other sureties: The liability that guarantors, pledgors or other sureties may have with respect to deficiencies is unaffected by CCP § 580b. [See CCP § 580b(c); and ¶ 6:568.5 & 6:598 ff.]

(3) [6:563.5] Obligations constituting "purchase money" loans: The facts and circumstances existing when the debt is created determine whether it is a "purchase money" loan. Thus, once determined to be a "purchase money" loan, the obligation ordinarily retains that character after subsequent transactions (but see ¶ 6:568.3). [DMC, Inc. v. Downey Sav. & Loan Ass'n (2002) 99 CA4th 190, 194, 120 CR2d 761, 764-765 (see ¶ 6:565.1)]

There are two kinds of purchase money loans subject to CCP § 580b antideficiency protection:

(a) [6:564] Seller financing: A seller-financed loan for any kind of real property (whether commercial or residential) is a "purchase money" loan protected by CCP § 580b. [CCP § 580b; see Enloe v. Kelso (2013) 217 CA4th 877, 881, 158 CR3d 881, 884 (noting transaction's timing does not change its character)—trust deed given to sellers after escrow closed to secure part of purchase price deemed § 580b purchase money obligation; see also Jones v. Wagner (2001) 90 CA4th 466, 480, 108 CR2d 669, 680—promissory note secured by trust deed not§ 580b purchase money obligation since note given to partner with whom property purchased rather than seller of property]

A secured loan on commercial property (which includes residential property consisting of more than four units; see¶ 6:565) can only be a "purchase money" transaction if it is seller financed. If the lender is a third party—i.e., essentially a "stranger" to the transaction—§ 580b, by its terms, does not apply. [Conley v. Matthes (1997) 56 CA4th 1453, 1462, 66 CR2d 518, 524]

1) [6:564.1] Determining "seller" status: Occasionally, there may be a threshold issue whether the lender is in fact a "seller" for purposes of CCP § 580b or, instead, a third party "stranger" to the transaction.

a) [6:564.2] Liberal approach: Courts generally interpret the term "seller" (or "vendor") broadly when doing so will further the purposes of CCP § 580b. Thus, a "seller" under § 580b "need not have virtual identity with the actual seller of the property." [Conley v. Matthes (1997) 56 CA4th 1453, 1462, 66 CR2d 518, 524; see also

Sherwood-Trimble Med. Group v. 10001 Venice Blvd. Partnership (1999) 75 CA4th 872, 876, 89 CR2d 533, 535—personal property seller in combined real and personal property purchase money sale transaction deemed "vendor" subject to § 580b]

b) [6:564.3] Relevant factors: The "critical factors" in determining the lienholder's status as a "seller" are the lienholder's participation in the sale and whether the financing they provided was necessary to consummation of the sale. [Conley v. Matthes (1997) 56 CA4th 1453, 1462, 66 CR2d 518, 524]

c) [6:564.4] Application: Applying the approach set forth at ¶ 6:564.2 ff., "vendor" status triggering CCP § 580b protection was found where:

• [6:564.5] An original purchase money loan was refinanced to facilitate a sale of the secured property, and the first trust deed holder in the refinancing then took back a second trust deed. Although not the legal owner of the property at the time, the lienholder was a "vendor" for CCP § 580b purposes because his participation and financing were necessary to the sale. [Shepherd v. Robinson (1981) 128 CA3d 615, 623, 180 CR 342, 345 (disapproved on other grounds by DeBerard Properties, Ltd. v. Lim (1999) 20 C4th 659, 671, 85 CR2d 292, 299-300)]

• [6:564.6] A co-owner seller assisted the buyer/borrower in obtaining third party financing for the first trust deeds on two properties, and then loaned the buyer $80,000, taking back a second trust deed on the first property, so that the buyer could complete the purchase of the second property. The co-owner seller's "nexus" to the transaction precluded a finding he was not a "vendor" for CCP § 580b purposes. "[T]he only reasonable inference we can draw from [seller's] loan of $80,000 is that [seller] did intend to finance the purchase of the property. Therefore, [he] is a vendor." [Conley v. Matthes (1997) 56 CA4th 1453, 1462, 66 CR2d 518, 524]

• [6:564.7] A settlement agreement between the buyers and seller of real property that merely modified the terms of the buyer's promissory note secured by a second trust deed in favor of the seller did not render the antideficiency statute inapplicable when the buyers defaulted on the note and the seller sued to enforce the settlement agreement. This was so even though the underlying security had become valueless after a sale under the senior trust deed.

> "Section 580b applies to the Promissory Note because [the seller] retained an interest in the property being sold with the ability to foreclose on it upon nonpayment by the [buyers]—albeit with lower priority than the first deed of trust. Because the property being purchased was used as security, this clearly falls within the definition of a 'deed of trust … given to the vendor to secure payment of the balance of the purchase price' to which section 580b applies … Because the Settlement Agreement was an explicit modification of obligations already owed under the Promissory Note and because of the policy reasons for interpreting section 580b broadly, [seller's] remedy is limited to foreclosure of the Promissory Note's security. As the security has been exhausted for the foreclosure of the senior lien, [seller] has no further remedy against the [buyers] …" [See Weinstein v. Rocha (2012) 208 CA4th 92, 97-99, 145 CR3d 93, 96-97]

[6:564.8] A broker who accepted a note secured by a second deed of trust as payment of his commission "intended to and did partially finance the purchase," subjecting him to the CCP § 580b antideficiency rule. [Bargioni v. Hill (1963) 59 C2d 121, 123-124, 28 CR 321, 322]

[6:564.9 - 6:564.14] Reserved.

2) [6:564.15] Application to mixed collateral sellers: Whenever a deed of trust is given to the seller to secure payment of the real property purchase price, the transaction is a "purchase money" loan subject to CCP § 580b*even though* the seller also takes back a personal property security interest to secure the purchase of personal property sold with the real property as part of the same obligation. [Sherwood-Trimble Med. Group v. 10001 Venice Blvd. Partnership (1999) 75 CA4th 872, 878-879, 89 CR2d 533, 536-537]

a) [6:564.16] Separate real property and personal property sellers given single (combined) note: The purchase money antideficiency rule even applied where the real property and personal property sellers were different individuals, but both the real property and personal property (a medical practice) were sold collectively as a unit and a single promissory note (secured by a deed of trust on the real property and a personal property security agreement) was given to the sellers. When the note was later amended and restated to name the personal property seller as the sole payee, that seller was barred by CCP § 580b from seeking a deficiency judgment. [Sherwood-Trimble Med. Group v. 10001 Venice Blvd. Partnership (1999) 75 CA4th 872, 882, 89 CR2d 533, 539]

➪ [6:564.17] PRACTICE POINTER: The problem that occurred in Sherwood-Trimble, supra, commonly arises where a personal property business is sold along with the real property on which the business is situated in a single purchase money transaction. The personal property seller can avoid application of the CCP § 580b bar by insisting on selling the personal property separately—e.g., in a concurrent escrow contingent on closing of the real property sale. [See Sherwood-Trimble Med. Group v. 10001 Venice Blvd. Partnership (1999) 75 CA4th 872, 879, 89 CR2d 533, 537—having failed to insist on selling its medical practice separately from the real property, seller "made its bed and must lie in it"]

[6:564.18 - 6:564.24] Reserved.

3) [6:564.25] Compare—trust deed given on unrelated property: The CCP § 580b deficiency judgment bar ordinarily applies only where the foreclosure is under a trust deed on the purchased property. When the trust deed is recorded against an entirely different, unrelated property, an action on the note does not seek a deficiency judgment within the terms of § 580b. [Kurtz v. Calvo (1999) 75 CA4th 191, 194, 89 CR2d 99, 101]

The result may be otherwise where, as in Conley, supra, two closely-related sales essentially constitute one transaction so that a trust deed on one property securing the sale price of the other property may be deemed subject to § 580b (see¶ 6:564.6). But that is not the case where the secured property was acquired by the buyers years before they bought the second property and the properties were completely unrelated so that the two sales could not be said to constitute essentially one transaction. [Kurtz v. Calvo, supra, 75 CA4th at 194, 89 CR2d at 101]

(b) [6:565] Certain residential property loans: The CCP § 580b antideficiency rule also applies to a deed of trust or mortgage "on a dwelling for not more than four families given to a lender to secure repayment of a loan which was in fact used to pay all or part of the purchase price of that dwelling occupied, entirely or in part by the purchaser." [CCP § 580b (emphasis added)]

Thus, pursuant to this provision, a loan from any party—even a third party loan—is "purchase money" so long as (i) the loan proceeds are used to purchase a residential dwelling of four units or less; and (ii) at least one of the units is owner occupied. [CCP § 580b]

1) [6:565.1] Property repurchase: The fact that the deed of trust is given in connection with the repurchase of residential property does not affect the "purchase money" nature of the loan. [See DMC, Inc. v. Downey Sav. & Loan Ass'n (2002) 99 CA4th 190, 194, 120 CR2d 761, 764—borrower's new loan to repurchase property foreclosed on by previous lender was "purchase money"]

(4) [6:566] Also protects buyers of property encumbered by prior purchase money loan: Although once removed from the seller-financed transaction, one who buys property encumbered by a prior purchase money deed of trust (whether taking "subject to" or assuming the existing purchase money loan) is also protected by the CCP § 580b antideficiency rule. [Frangipani v. Boecker (1998) 64 CA4th 860, 864, 75 CR2d 407, 409]

[6:566.1 - 6:566.4] Reserved.

(5) [6:566.5] Foreclosure not required to trigger § 580b protection: CCP § 580b antideficiency protection is not limited to situations where the underlying trust deed is foreclosed. Otherwise, § 580b would be rendered meaningless; i.e., the seller/lender would never foreclose and would never be concerned that the fair value of the secured property was the sole means of recovering on the loan. [Frangipani v. Boecker (1998) 64 CA4th 860, 864-865, 75 CR2d 407, 410]

(a) [6:566.6] Example: Buyer assumed an existing purchase money loan. When he defaulted on the payments, Sellers gave the original trust deed beneficiary a $10,000 promissory note to cancel the foreclosure in order to protect their own credit. Sellers then sued Buyer for the $10,000.

CCP § 580b barred Sellers' action. "[A]warding [Sellers] damages for breach of [Buyer's] alleged agreement to honor his assumption of the [purchase money loan] is in the nature of a deficiency judgment and is barred by section 580b." [Frangipani v. Boecker (1998) 64 CA4th 860, 865, 75 CR2d 407, 410-411—sellers' agreement to pay lender to cancel foreclosure was a "voluntary act for their own benefit" since, pursuant to § 580b, neither they nor buyer had a legal obligation to pay any deficiency upon foreclosure]

(6) [6:567] Equitable setoff as "deficiency judgment" barred by § 580b: An equitable setoff does not technically constitute a "deficiency judgment" because (a) it does not impose a personal money judgment against the debtor; and (b) since it represents an independent obligation to the creditor, the amount of the setoff is not measured by the difference between the fair value of the secured property and the outstanding debt. Nonetheless, where an equitable setoff would violate CCP § 580b's underlying policy considerations (¶ 6:563), it will be treated as the "functional equivalent" of a deficiency judgment and thus be barred by § 580b in a purchase money loan transaction. [Birman v. Loeb (1998) 64 CA4th 502, 511, 75 CR2d 294, 300]

• [6:567.1] Buyer purchased a warehouse from Seller in a purchase money (seller-financed) transaction. Buyer later successfully sued Seller for fraudulent misrepresentation and failure to disclose in connection with the sale. In that action, the trial court reformed Buyer's note to Seller by reducing the amount of the loan obligation and awarded Buyer $300,000 in attorney fees and costs.

Buyer made no payments on the reformed note; and Seller never paid Buyer the court-awarded fees and costs.

Seller eventually commenced nonjudicial foreclosure proceedings and reacquired the property by a $2 million full credit bid; the fair market value of the warehouse was between $1.5 million and $2 million, but the balance due on the note exceeded $2 million. Seller sought to set off the $300,000 he owed Buyer against the deficiency, thereby relieving Seller of the $300,000 debt.

The attempted setoff was barred by CCP § 580b. Although allowing the setoff would not impose a personal money judgment against Buyer, it would violate the statute's underlying policies—significantly, placing the risk of inadequate security on the seller/lender. To allow the setoff would improperly shift the risk of inadequate security to Buyer. [Birman v. Loeb (1998) 64 CA4th 502, 513-514, 75 CR2d 294, 301-302]

(7) [6:568] No waiver:CCP § 580b's antideficiency protection may not be contractually waived either before or after a standard purchase money sale. [See DeBerard Properties, Ltd. v. Lim (1999) 20 C4th 659, 670-671, 85 CR2d 292, 299 (expressly disapproving prior cases holding § 580b may be waived following purchase money sale); Coker v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2016) 62 C4th 667, 686-687, 197 CR3d 131, 145-146 (citing DeBerard)—borrower cannot waive § 580b protections in exchange for lender approving short sale; Lawler v. Jacobs (2000) 83 CA4th 723, 736-737, 100 CR2d 52, 61-62—no "wiggle room" in statute to permit waiver; Cadle Co. II v. Harvey (2000) 83 CA4th 927, 934, 100 CR2d 150, 155—§ 580b protections cannot be waived in postorigination agreements changing terms of original loan]

(a) [6:568.1] Exception—significant alteration of purchase money transaction: The "no waiver" rule applies "only to the standard purchase money situation." A narrow exception has been recognized in circumstances involving a variation in the standard purchase money mortgage or deed of trust transaction. [DeBerard Properties, Ltd. v. Lim (1999) 20 C4th 659, 665, 85 CR2d 292, 295 (emphasis added); Crookall v. Davis, Punelli, Keathley & Willard (1998) 65 CA4th 1048, 1061, 77 CR2d 250, 257-258]

1) [6:568.2] Two-prong approach: Determining whether this exception applies involves a two-part inquiry:

— Whether the sale varies from a standard purchase money transaction; and — If so, whether applying CCP § 580b's antideficiency protection comports with legislative intent (basically, to stabilize land values during economic downturns and discourage vendors from overvaluing the security, ¶ 6:563). [DeBerard Properties, Ltd. v. Lim (1999) 20 C4th 659, 665, 85 CR2d 292, 295; Lawler v. Jacobs (2000) 83 CA4th 723, 733-734, 100 CR2d 52, 59-60]

The exception applies only if the answer to the first query is "yes" and the answer to the second is "no." [DeBerard Properties, Ltd. v. Lim, supra, 20 C4th at 665, 85 CR2d at 295; see Coker v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2016) 62 C4th 667, 692, 197 CR3d 131, 150—neither execution of short sale agreement nor borrower's CCP § 726 "security first" waiver destroyed purchase money character of borrower's residential mortgage; Lawler v. Jacobs, supra, 83 CA4th at 735, 100 CR2d at 60-61—exception inapplicable to purchase money transaction because none of "DeBerard touchstones" present; Sherwood-Trimble Med. Group v. 10001 Venice Blvd. Partnership (1999) 75 CA4th 872, 880, 89 CR2d 533, 538—exception inapplicable because "the transaction before us is not a variation on the standard purchase money deed of trust"]

2) [6:568.3] Application—subordination of purchase money loan to construction loan: A purchase money loan that is subsequently subordinated to a construction loan may lose its CCP § 580b antideficiency protection if all of the following factors are present:

• the subordination signals a pronounced change in the property's use;

• the purchaser is in a better position than the lender/seller to assess the property's potential value and understand the risks involved; and

• applying § 580b's protection would unfairly thrust the risk of the failure of the commercial development upon the lender/seller. [DeBerard Properties, Ltd. v. Lim (1999) 20 C4th 659, 666, 85 CR2d 292, 296; see Spangler v. Memel (1972) 7 C3d 605, 614, 102 CR 807, 814; see In re Prestige Ltd. Partnership-Concord (9th Cir. 2000) 234 F3d 1108, 1116-1117 (applying Calif. law)—changing business from "high-end" to "low-end" not pronounced change in property use; and¶ 6:453]

3) [6:568.4] Compare—unexercised subordination clause: Even though the purchase money financing documentation contemplates subordination to a construction loan, CCP § 580b remains applicable, and a deficiency judgment is barred, if the subordination never actually occurs. "Until the subordination provision is exercised, jeopardy to the seller's security has not been aggravated. Thus, … the presence of an unexercised subordination provision does not take a purchase money loan outside section 580b protection." [Webber v. Inland Empire Investments, Inc. (1999) 74 CA4th 884, 915-916, 88 CR2d 594, 614-615 (internal quotes and citation omitted)]

(8) [6:568.5] Compare—exposure for guarantors, pledgors or other sureties: The CCP § 580b purchase money antideficiency rule protects the principal obligor. It does not affect the liability that guarantors, pledgors or other sureties might otherwise have with respect to the deficiency (CCP § 580b(c)). For example, a guarantor, under a properly-drafted guaranty, may remain liable for the deficiency. See ¶ 6:598 ff.

(9) [6:568.6] Compare—recourse against additional security for severable portion of loan: The CCP § 580b purchase money antideficiency rule does not preclude a lender from pursuing additional security when part of the purchase price is represented by a separate promissory note, secured by separate property. [Hodges v. Mark (1996) 49 CA4th 651, 655, 56 CR2d 700, 702—beneficiary may foreclose separate security instruments independently; see further discussion at ¶ 6:561.15 ff.]

[6:569] Reserved.

c. [6:570] Trustee's sale (nonjudicial foreclosure) anti-deficiency rule (CCP § 580d): Except as otherwise provided by statute (¶ 6:570.4), no deficiency may be owed or collected, and no deficiency judgment may be obtained, when the secured property has been foreclosed by a trustee's private power of sale (nonjudicial foreclosure). Thus, a secured lender who elects the more expeditious nonjudicial foreclosure remedy forfeits the right to recover any deficiency that might otherwise be allowed under the law. [CCP § 580d; Alliance Mortg. Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 1236, 44 CR2d 352, 358; see also Cadlerock Joint Venture, L.P. v. Lobel (2012) 206 CA4th 1531, 1540, 143 CR3d 96, 102—§ 580d effectively limits right to obtain deficiency judgment to creditors who employ judicial foreclosure remedy]

Section 580d serves in part "to prevent creditors in private sales from buying in at deflated prices and realizing double recoveries by holding debtors for large deficiencies." [Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell, supra, 10 C4th at 1236, 44 CR2d at 358 (internal quotes and citation omitted)]

(1) [6:570.1] Compare—rights of sold-out junior lienholder: CCP § 580d does not bar a junior lienholder from suing the obligor directly after the security has been extinguished by foreclosure of the senior lien (i.e., where a senior lienholder's nonjudicial foreclosure sale "wipes out" all junior liens). [See Black Sky Capital, LLC v. Cobb (2019) 7 C5th 156, 164-165, 246 CR3d 583, 590-591 (senior and junior liens secured by same property and held by same creditor)—junior lienholder who, in its capacity as senior lienholder conducted nonjudicial foreclosure sale after debtors defaulted on senior loan, not precluded from seeking deficiency judgment against same debtors after they defaulted on junior loan (¶ 6:559.2); see also Bank of America Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n v. Graves (1996) 51 CA4th 607, 611-613, 59 CR2d 288, 290-292]

(2) [6:570.2] Serial nonjudicial foreclosures of multiple security for single debt allowed: A lender who forecloses on one of several pieces of property securing a single debt may continue to exhaust the additional security through nonjudicial foreclosures without violating the antideficiency statutes. No personal judgment against the debtor, and hence no "deficiency judgment," is involved when the lender resorts only to its security—whether concurrently or serially. [Dreyfuss v. Union Bank of Calif. (2000) 24 C4th 400, 407-409, 101 CR2d 29, 34-35; Marriage of Oropallo (1998) 68 CA4th 997, 1005-1006, 80 CR2d 669, 674-675]

However, having elected to collect the debt by nonjudicial foreclosure, CCP § 580d precludes the creditor from subsequently seeking a personal money judgment on the additional collateral. [Marriage of Oropallo, supra, 68 CA4th at 1005-1006, 80 CR2d at 674-675—after foreclosing nonjudicially on several properties securing single debt, creditor could not invoke "sold out junior lienholder" exception in connection with other property securing same debt, and thereby attempt to sue obligor directly]

(3) [6:570.3] Election of remedies: A lender does not "finally" elect its foreclosure remedies (so as to preclude the right to seek a deficiency judgment following judicial foreclosure) unless and until the private trustee's sale is completed. See¶ 6:513.

(4) [6:570.4] Compare—exposure for guarantors, pledgors or other sureties: The CCP § 580d antideficiency rule does not affect the liability that guarantors, pledgors or other sureties might otherwise have with respect to the deficiency (CCP § 580d(b)). For example, a properly-drafted guaranty may effectively waive a guarantor's antideficiency protection. See¶ 6:598 ff.

(5) [6:570.5] Liens given to secure bond payments excluded:CCP § 580d does not apply to a trust deed or other lien given to secure the payment of bonds or other evidence of indebtedness authorized, or permitted to be issued, by the Commissioner of Financial Protection and Innovation, or that is made by a public utility subject to the Public Utilities Act. [CCP § 580d(c)]

d. [6:571] Short sale transaction antideficiency rule (CCP § 580e): The short sale transaction antideficiency rule is meant to protect distressed homeowners obligated under non-purchase money recourse loans when the fair market value of their property is less than the balance owed under the trust deed. This legislation makes sure "these homeowners do not incur a higher dollar amount of liability after a short sale than they would otherwise have after a foreclosure sale." [See CCP § 580e, Hist. & Stat. Notes (explaining CCP § 580e applies to individual, not commercial, loan transactions)]

(1) [6:571.1] Notes secured *solely by trust deeds for residential one-to-four unit properties: No deficiency may be owed or collected, and no deficiency judgment may be rendered, upon a note secured solely by a trust deed for a dwelling of not more than four units if the trustor, with the trust deed holder's written consent, sells the dwelling for less than the remaining amount of indebtedness due at the time of sale, provided (a) title has been voluntarily transferred to a buyer by grant deed or another document that has been recorded; and (b) the sale proceeds are tendered as agreed. [CCP § 580e(a)(1); see also Bank of America, N.A. v. Roberts (2013) 217 CA4th 1386, 1393-1394, 159 CR3d 345, 351-352]

(a) [6:571.1a] No retroactive application: In its original form, CCP § 580e's short sale antideficiency protection applied only to a first trust deed. However, in response to the foreclosure crisis, the Legislature in 2011 amended § 580e by extending its coverage to any trust deed, including junior lienholders, provided the trust deed's holder consented to the short sale and received the proceeds of the sale as agreed. As amended, § 580e applies only to short sales occurring on or after its effective date. [See Bank of America, N.A. v. Roberts (2013) 217 CA4th 1386, 1393-1394, 159 CR3d 345, 351-352—amendment extending § 580e's protection to notes secured by any trust deed did not apply retroactively to short sale that occurred before amendment's effective date and was agreed to under law in effect at that time]

(2) [6:571.2] Notes *not secured solely by trust deeds for residential one-to-four unit properties: When the note is not secured solely by a trust deed for a dwelling of not more than four units, a deficiency judgment upon the note is still prohibited. However, following the short sale, in accordance with the holder's written consent, the voluntary transfer of title to the buyer and the tender of the sale proceeds, as well as the rights, remedies and obligations of any holder, beneficiary, trustor, obligor, obligee or guarantor vis-à-vis the note and with respect to any other property that secures the note, must be treated and determined as if the dwelling had been sold through foreclosure under a power of sale, as specified. [CCP § 580e(a)(2)]

(3) [6:571.3] No additional compensation: The note holder may not require the trustor or maker of the note to pay any additional compensation, aside from the sale proceeds, in exchange for its written consent to the short sale. [CCP § 580e(b)]

(4) [6:571.4] Damages for fraud or waste committed by trustor/third party: Notwithstanding the broad protection afforded homeowners under CCP § 580e, the statute does not limit a trust deed holder's ability to "seek damages and use existing rights and remedies against the trustor … or any third party" if the trustor or third party commits fraud with respect to the sale of or waste to the secured property. [CCP § 580e(c)]

(5) [6:571.5] Commercial loan transactions and liens given to secure bond payments excluded: CCP § 580e does not apply if the trustor is a corporation, limited liability company, limited partnership or political subdivision. Again, the statute's purpose is to protect "distressed homeowners" (¶ 6:571). [CCP § 580e(d)(1)]

Similarly, CCP § 580e does not apply to any trust deed or other lien given to secure the payment of bonds or other evidence of indebtedness authorized, or permitted to be issued, by the Commissioner of Financial Protection and Innovation, or that is made by a public utility subject to the Public Utilities Act. [CCP § 580e(d)(2)]

(6) [6:571.6] Protection not waivable: Any purported waiver of CCP § 580e(a)-(b) (¶ 6:571.1, 6:571.2, 6:571.3) "shall be void and against public policy." [CCP § 580e(e)]

[6:572 - 6:573] Reserved.

7. [6:574] Obtaining Deficiency Judgment: In circumstances where a deficiency judgment is permissible, there are additional rules to consider:

a. Procedural matters

(1) [6:575] Governing law: CCP § 726 regulates the manner in which a lender must proceed to enforce its debt after obtaining a judicial foreclosure of the security. [Paykar Const., Inc. v. Spilat Const. Corp. (2001) 92 CA4th 488, 496, 111 CR2d 863, 868—creditor entitled to deficiency judgment after judicial foreclosure only as provided by CCP § 726; Florio v. Lau (1998) 68 CA4th 637, 647, 80 CR2d 409, 415, fn. 4]

CCP § 580a, on the other hand, governs when the secured property has been foreclosed by a trustee's private power of sale (nonjudicial foreclosure). [Marriage of Oropallo (1998) 68 CA4th 997, 1003, 80 CR2d 669, 672-673]

(a) [6:575.1] Comment: As a practical matter, CCP § 580a has been rendered nearly obsolete with the enactment of CCP § 580d (barring deficiency judgments after nonjudicial foreclosure, ¶ 6:570). [See Marriage of Oropallo (1998) 68 CA4th 997, 1003, 80 CR2d 669, 672-673]

(2) [6:576] Three-month deadline: Applications for deficiency judgments and fair value determinations (¶ 6:577) must be filed within three months from the date of the foreclosure sale—i.e., the date when the highest bid is received at the auction, not when the certificate of sale is recorded. [CCP §§ 580a (nonjudicial foreclosures) & 726(b) (judicial foreclosures); Paykar Const., Inc. v. Bedrosian (1999) 71 CA4th 803, 808, 84 CR2d 135, 138]

The three-month deadline operates as a statute of limitations: i.e., unless the application is filed within the three-month period, no money judgment for a deficiency can be obtained. [Life Savings Bank v. Wilhelm (2000) 84 CA4th 174, 178, 100 CR2d 657, 660—creditor could not seek CCP § 473 relief to file tardy application; see Paykar Const., Inc. v. Spilat Const. Corp., supra, 92 CA4th at 497, 111 CR2d at 869]

(a) [6:576.1] Compare—"mixed collateral" cases: CCP § 726's three-month time limit does not apply to personal property in a mixed collateral situation (i.e., where a single obligation is secured by a combination of real and personal property) unless it is sold in a unified sale (¶ 6:561.18). Under the "Mixed Collateral Statute" (Comm'l C. § 9604), real property limitations "do not in any way" apply to obligations secured by personal property sold separately. [Comm'l C. § 9604(a)(2)(A); see also Oxford Street Properties, LLC v. Rehabilitation Assocs., LLC (2012) 206 CA4th 296, 304, 141 CR3d 704, 709, fn. 4; Florio v. Lau (1998) 68 CA4th 637, 652-653, 80 CR2d 409, 418—more flexible personal property rules govern]

b. [6:577] "Fair value" deficiency limitations: The "fair market value" deficiency rules (CCP §§ 580a (applicable to nonjudicial foreclosures) & 726 (applicable to judicial foreclosures)) limit deficiency judgments to the difference between the fair market value of the property at the time of the sale and the outstanding debt. [CCP § 726; Cornelison v. Kornbluth (1975) 15 C3d 590, 600-601, 125 CR 557, 564-565; Talbott v. Hustwit (2008) 164 CA4th 148, 151, 78 CR3d 703, 705]

(1) [6:577.1] Compare—"sold out" junior lienholders: The "fair value" rules do not apply to a sold-out junior lienholder. [See Bank of America Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n v. Graves (1996) 51 CA4th 607, 612, 59 CR2d 288, 291; and further discussion at ¶ 6:559 ff.]

(2) [6:577.2] Application to mixed collateral: Apparently clearing up an ambiguity under prior law, amendments to the Mixed Collateral Statute indicate that the "fair value" limitation applies to deficiency judgments following foreclosure in mixed collateral situations where the mixed collateral is sold as a unit (¶ 6:561.18). [See Comm'l C. § 9604(a)(2)(A) & (8); Florio v. Lau (1998) 68 CA4th 637, 644-645, 80 CR2d 409, 413-414 (predating eff. date of Comm'l C. amendments) —assuming, but expressly not deciding, that fair value limit applied to mixed collateral]

[6:577.3] Reserved.

(a) [6:577.4] Compare—personal property: The fair value limitation does not apply to deficiency judgments following the foreclosure of secured personal property. [Florio v. Lau (1998) 68 CA4th 637, 652-653, 80 CR2d 409, 418-419]

(3) [6:578] Judicial foreclosures (CCP § 726):CCP § 726's "fair value" limitation on deficiency judgments applies to judicial foreclosures:

In the event a deficiency is neither waived by the creditor nor prohibited by CCP § 580b and it is decreed that defendant (obligor) is personally liable for the debt, upon plaintiff's (lender's) application filed within three months of the date of the foreclosure sale (¶ 6:576) "and after a hearing thereon at which the court shall take evidence and … either party may present evidence as to the fair value of the real property … sold as of the date of sale," the court shall render a money judgment against the defendant for the amount by which the outstanding debt (including interest and costs of levy and sale and of the action) "exceeds the fair value of the real property … sold as of the date of sale." [CCP § 726(b) (emphasis added); see O'Neil v. General Sec. Corp. (1992) 4 CA4th 587, 603, 5 CR2d 712, 720; see also Paykar Const., Inc. v. Spilat Const. Corp. (2001) 92 CA4th 488, 496, 111 CR2d 863, 868]

(a) [6:578.1] "Fair value" determination: "Fair value" for purposes of CCP § 726 is the "fair market value" of the property (i.e., the highest price a willing buyer would pay to a willing seller) as of the date of foreclosure, without reduction for the adverse impact of the foreclosure or the one-year right of redemption that would temporarily lower the market value of the property. [San Paolo U.S. Holding Co., Inc. v. 816 South Figueroa Co. (1998) 62 CA4th 1010, 1026, 73 CR2d 272, 280; see also Kinsmith Fin'l Corp. v. Gilroy (2003) 105 CA4th 447, 455, 129 CR2d 478, 484; Luther Burbank Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Community Const., Inc. (1998) 64 CA4th 652, 657-658, 75 CR2d 367, 370]

1) [6:578.2] Adjustment for other encumbrances: A court's assessment of fair value for CCP § 726 purposes begins with competent evidence (typically appraisals, ¶ 6:665 ff.) showing the likely sales price the property would command in the open market if entirely unencumbered. The court then considers external factors (unrelated to the foreclosure process) that reduce the amount a willing purchaser in an open market would pay a lender for the property. [Luther Burbank Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Community Const., Inc. (1998) 64 CA4th 652, 658, 75 CR2d 367, 370]

Next, having determined a reasonable unencumbered value, the court must consider the amount by which any encumbrances (other than the foreclosed trust deed) might reasonably affect the property's actual sales price. Any such encumbrance unpaid by the borrower at the time of foreclosure is properly excluded in calculating "fair value." The foreclosing lender "gets nothing in return for that portion of the property's value attributable to this encumbrance and passes that debt onto the foreclosure sale purchaser." [Luther Burbank Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Community Const., Inc., supra, 64 CA4th at 658-659, 75 CR2d at 370-371—county tax lien on foreclosed property properly subtracted from property's unencumbered value to determine its "fair value" for deficiency judgment purposes]

2) [6:578.3] Effect on finality of foreclosure decree: A judicial decree of foreclosure conclusively establishes the borrower's liability for the defaulted loans. Thus, it is final and appealable even though the court retains jurisdiction to hear and determine the borrower's liability for any deficiency remaining after the foreclosure. [Citicorp Real Estate, Inc. v. Smith (9th Cir. 1998) 155 F3d 1097, 1101 (applying Calif. law); Kinsmith Fin'l Corp. v. Gilroy (2003) 105 CA4th 447, 452-453, 129 CR2d 478, 481-482]

In addition, any claims precluding judicial foreclosure may be barred if not raised before entry of the foreclosure decree. [Albano v. Norwest Fin'l Hawaii, Inc. (9th Cir. 2001) 244 F3d 1061, 1063-1064 (applying Hawaii law) —once state court action proceeded to final decree of foreclosure, any right debtors had to rescind mortgage transaction based on truth-in-lending law vanished]

(4) [6:579] Nonjudicial foreclosures (CCP § 580a):CCP § 580a, applicable to nonjudicial foreclosures, limits a secured lender's right to recover a deficiency judgment to the amount by which the secured obligation exceeds the fair market value of the property as of the date of the foreclosure sale (plus interest thereon from the date of sale) … except that in no event may the deficiency judgment (exclusive of interest after the date of sale) exceed the difference between the amount for which the property was sold and the entire amount of the secured obligation. [CCP § 580a]

Any such action to recover a deficiency judgment must be brought within three months of the time of sale under the trust deed. [CCP § 580a; see¶ 6:576]

(As noted, the § 580a fair value rule has, for all practical purposes, become obsolete because of the CCP § 580d antideficiency judgment rule, ¶ 6:570.)

(a) [6:579.1] Compare—no fair value limitation on serial foreclosures: Because no deficiency judgment is involved when a lender serially forecloses on multiple items of collateral securing the same debt (¶ 6:561.3, 6:570.2), the debtor has no right to a fair value hearing before each successive foreclosure sale. This is so even if the lender is the successful bidder at the trustee sales. Simply stated, the antideficiency laws do not apply in this scenario. [Dreyfuss v. Union Bank of Calif. (2000) 24 C4th 400, 409-412, 101 CR2d 29, 35-37]

1) [6:579.2] Debtor has no alternative set-aside rights: Nor can a debtor who believes the lender did not credit the fair value of property recovered in prior foreclosure sales realize the equivalent of a fair value hearing by obtaining a set-aside of a subsequent trustee's sale or restitution of an unjust recovery.

"A properly conducted [trustee's] sale does not require judicial oversight and constitutes a final adjudication of the rights of the creditor and debtor … Applying the fair market value provisions of [the antideficiency law] … by eliminating the finality of nonjudicial foreclosure and requiring judicial oversight, would derogate the legislative goal of providing a quick, inexpensive, and efficient remedy." [Dreyfuss v. Union Bank of Calif. (2000) 24 C4th 400, 411-412, 101 CR2d 29, 37 (internal quotes and citation omitted)]

(b) [6:579.3] CCP § 580a protections inapplicable to guarantors: The CCP § 580a deficiency judgment protections afforded principal obligors (¶ 6:579) have no application in actions against guarantors. [Bank of America Nat'l Trust & Sav. Ass'n v. Hunter (1937) 8 C2d 592, 598, 67 P2d 99, 102; Mariners Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Neil (1971) 22 CA3d 232, 234, 99 CR 238, 240; see Talbott v. Hustwit (2008) 164 CA4th 148, 151-152, 78 CR3d 703, 705-706—deficiency judgment against guarantors for difference between foreclosure credit bid and unpaid loan balance proper even though rendered without regard to whether property's fair market value exceeded total amount owed]

[6:579.4 - 6:579.9] Reserved.

c. [6:579.10] Enforcing deficiency judgment; time limit: Deficiency judgments are subject to the provisions of the Enforcement of Judgments Law limiting the period of enforceability of a money judgment (CCP § 683.010 et seq.). The time limit on enforcement (generally 10 years unless the judgment is properly renewed before then, see CCP §§ 683.020, 683.110-683.220) begins to run from the date of entry of the deficiency judgment, not the earlier date of the foreclosure decree. [Kinsmith Fin'l Corp. v. Gilroy (2003) 105 CA4th 447, 454, 129 CR2d 478, 483-484—deficiency judgment enforceable even though more than 10 years passed since issuance of foreclosure decree; compare Starcevic v. Pentech Fin'l Services, Inc. (2021) 66 CA5th 365, 380-381, 280 CR3d 764, 775—failure to renew judgment automatically extinguished judgment creditor's priority lien]

c. [6:613] Guarantor's liability after exoneration of borrower or other guarantors
d. [6:614] Waivers by guarantor

1. [6:580] Lender's Purpose: There are two reasons why a lender might want the borrower's obligations guarantied by another party:

• The borrower's credit might simply be insufficient to meet the lender's standards.

• A properly-drafted guaranty can give the lender deficiency judgment recourse against a third party when the borrower (principal obligor) is protected by California's antideficiency laws (¶ 6:560 ff., 6:598 ff.).

2. [6:581] Governing Law: The rights and obligations of lenders and guarantors are governed by Civ.C. § 2787 et seq. regarding “suretyships.” The principal provisions are overviewed at ¶ 6:582 ff.

a. [6:582] “Guarantors” and “sureties” treated the same: The distinction between “sureties” and “guarantors” was statutorily abolished in 1939. Both terms have the same meaning under California statutory and case law; specifically, a guarantor, like a surety, is “one who promises to answer for the debt, default, or miscarriage of another, or hypothecates property as security therefor.” [Civ.C. § 2787; Central Building, LLC v. Cooper (2005) 127 CA4th 1053, 1058, 26 CR3d 212, 216; see also Gramercy Investment Trust v. Lakemont Homes Nevada, Inc. (2011) 198 CA4th 903, 911, 130 CR3d 496, 502—guarantor promises to answer for debt or perform obligation of another if that person fails to pay or perform; Talbott v. Hustwit (2008) 164 CA4th 148, 151, 78 CR3d 703, 705—guaranty gives rise to separate and independent obligation from that which binds principal debtor]

A guarantor's rights are based on suretyship law. [Civ.C. § 2787; Conner v. Conner (1999) 76 CA4th 646, 650, 90 CR2d 687, 689; see also Bank of America, N.A. v. Stonehaven Manor, LLC (2010) 186 CA4th 719, 723, 113 CR3d 57, 60—under suretyship law, guarantor is entitled to benefit of every security held by creditor]

➪ [6:582.1] PRACTICE POINTER: When researching the applicable law, counsel should keep in mind that California Code references to “sureties” apply equally to guarantors; and be careful about relying on pre-1939 cases involving “guarantors.” [See Civ.C. § 2787—“Guaranties of collection and continuing guaranties are forms of suretyship obligations, and except in so far as necessary in order to give effect to provisions specially relating thereto, shall be subject to all provisions of law relating to suretyships in general”]

(1) [6:582.2] Trustor as guarantor: A property owner sometimes executes a deed of trust encumbering their interest in the property to secure another party's obligation but does not execute the underlying note or other obligation. Because guarantors include those who hypothecate their property as security for the debt of another (Civ.C. § 2787, ¶ 6:582), a trustor under a deed of trust can be a guarantor. [Mead v. Sanwa Bank Calif. (1998) 61 CA4th 561, 568, 71 CR2d 625, 629]

When the trustor allegedly has taken inconsistent positions as to its status as “principal” or “guarantor,” the following rule applies: If the creditor knows that its obligors have agreed between themselves that one will be the principal and the other will be the surety, the latter is bound to the creditor as a surety only, even though they appear from the written instruments to be a principal. [Mead v. Sanwa Bank Calif., supra, 61 CA4th at 571, 71 CR2d at 631]

[6:582.3 - 6:582.4] Reserved.

(2) [6:582.5] Compare—letters of credit: A "letter of credit" within the meaning of Comm'l C. § 5103(1)(a) is not a form of suretyship obligation. [See Civ.C. § 2787]

➪ [6:582.6] PRACTICE POINTER: When a borrower's credit does not meet a lender's standards, the lender often prefers "credit enhancement" in the form of a letter of credit rather than a guaranty. Again, a letter of credit is not a form of suretyship; therefore, it is not subject to California's antideficiency provisions or, in the case of a related borrower and guarantor, a "sham guaranty" defense (see ¶ 6:595 ff.). An additional advantage is that the lender generally may draw on the letter of credit even if the borrower files for bankruptcy.

b. [6:583] Writing generally required to create guaranty: Except as provided in Civ.C. § 2794 (obligations not required to be in writing), a guaranty obligation must be in writing and be signed by the guarantor. [Civ.C. § 2793; see Form 6:L]

Like any contract, however, a guaranty agreement may incorporate another contract (typically, the underlying obligation that is the subject of the guaranty) … in which case, the two documents are read and construed together as a whole according to the intention of the parties. [Central Building, LLC v. Cooper (2005) 127 CA4th 1053, 1058, 26 CR3d 212, 216]

c. [6:584] Unconditional unless otherwise specified: A guaranty is deemed unconditional unless its terms express a condition precedent to the guarantor's liability. [Civ.C. § 2806]

[6:584.1 - 6:584.3] Reserved.

d. [6:584.4] Limited vs. continuing guaranty: A guaranty agreement may be "limited" or "continuing." [Central Building, LLC v. Cooper (2005) 127 CA4th 1053, 1059, 26 CR3d 212, 216]

• [6:584.4a] A limited guaranty restricts the guarantor's obligations to a specific amount or certain terms of the underlying agreement and/or operates only for a specifically-defined period (i.e., the guarantor's obligations terminate upon expiration of the specified period—e.g., when the note is paid off). [See Central Building, LLC v. Cooper (2005) 127 CA4th 1053, 1060, 26 CR3d 212, 217]

• [6:584.4b] A continuing guaranty operates with respect to the principal obligor's present liability and future liabilities under successive transactions continuing the original liability or renewing it (e.g., as when a loan is renewed). [Civ.C. § 2814; Central Building, LLC v. Cooper (2005) 127 CA4th 1053, 1059, 26 CR3d 212, 217]

A continuing guaranty may be revoked by the guarantor at any time as to future transactions, "unless there is a continuing consideration" therefor that is not renounced by the guarantor. [Civ.C. § 2815] However, the right of revocation, like other statutory rights and defenses, may be waived by the guarantor, thereby making the continuing guaranty irrevocable. [See Central Building, LLC v. Cooper, supra, 127 CA4th at 1059, 26 CR3d at 217 (irrevocable continuing guaranty)]

e. [6:584.5] Extent of liability: Generally, a guarantor's liability can be no larger in amount or more burdensome in any other respect than the underlying principal obligation; and, to the extent it exceeds the principal obligation, the guaranty will be reduced accordingly. In determining whether the guaranty imposes a greater or more burdensome obligation, courts focus on the scope of the principal's liability at the time the guaranty is executed. [Civ.C. § 2809; River Bank America v. Diller (1995) 38 CA4th 1400, 1410-1411, 45 CR2d 790, 794-795]

(1) [6:584.6] Waivable: Nonetheless, Civ.C. § 2809 is a waivable defense and, in fact, can be waived even by vague language in the guaranty agreement. The issue turns on whether the agreement, construed as a whole, shows the guarantor's understanding that its obligations under the guaranty are completely separate and independent from the principal's obligation and unaffected by whatever action the lender may take against the primary obligor. [Bloom v. Bender (1957) 48 C2d 793, 804, 313 P2d 568, 575; see River Bank America v. Diller (1995) 38 CA4th 1400, 1413-1419, 45 CR2d 790, 796-800]

For example, a defense based on Civ.C. § 2809 was effectively waived by provisions in a guaranty (i) making the guaranty separate from the obligations guarantied, (ii) permitting the lender to proceed directly against the guarantors, and (iii) providing that receipt of foreclosure proceeds will not terminate the guarantors' liability. [River Bank America v. Diller, supra, 38 CA4th at 1415-1416, 45 CR2d at 798]

f. [6:585] Default triggers liability: A guarantor becomes liable on the guarantied obligation upon the principal obligor's default and without prior demand or notice. [Civ.C. § 2807; see also Civ.C. § 2808 re conditional guaranties]

g. [6:586] Exoneration by subsequent alteration of principal obligation: A guarantor is exonerated from the guarantied obligation (except to the extent they may be indemnified by the principal obligor) if the lender (creditor) alters the underlying obligation "in any respect" without the guarantor's consent or in any way impairs or suspends its remedies against the principal obligor. [Civ.C. § 2819; R.P. Richards, Inc. v. Chartered Const. Corp. (2000) 83 CA4th 146, 154, 99 CR2d 425, 431; Conner v. Conner (1999) 76 CA4th 646, 650, 90 CR2d 687, 689 & fn. 3]

Civ.C. § 2819 applies, however, only where there is a material alteration of the principal obligation in a manner not originally contemplated by the guarantor, irrespective of whether the alteration is prejudicial to the guarantor. [R.P. Richards, Inc. v. Chartered Const. Corp., supra, 83 CA4th at 154, 99 CR2d at 431]

(1) Exceptions

(a) [6:587] Acceptance of part performance: The lender's agreement to accept from the principal obligor an amount less than the balance owed on the original obligation, without the guarantor's consent and without any other change to the underlying agreement between lender and principal obligor, shall not exonerate the guarantor for the lesser sum agreed upon by the lender and principal obligor. [See Civ.C. §§ 2819 & 2822(b)]

(b) [6:588] Indemnification by principal: A guarantor who has been indemnified by the principal is liable to the lender to the extent of the indemnity even though the lender may have modified the principal obligation or released the principal without the guarantor's consent. [Civ.C. § 2824]

[6:588.1 - 6:588.4] Reserved.

➪ [6:588.5] PRACTICE POINTER—ADVANCE CONSENT AND WAIVER BY GUARANTOR: Inadvertent exoneration from alteration of the principal obligation can be avoided by careful drafting of the guaranty. Provisions giving the guarantor's advance consent to subsequent modifications (guaranteeing the principal obligation as so modified) and waiving the guarantor's statutory rights under Civ.C. § 2819 are enforceable. [See Central Building, LLC v. Cooper (2005) 127 CA4th 1053, 1060-1061, 26 CR3d 212, 218-219 (guaranty agreement expressly authorized alteration or modification "without consent or notice to Guarantors" and stated "this Guaranty shall thereupon and thereafter guarantee the Performance as so changed, modified, altered or assigned")]

(2) [6:589] Guaranty not restored by rescission of agreement altering obligation: The guaranty of an exonerated guarantor is not restored by the lender's rescission of an agreement altering the principal obligation or impairing the lender's remedy. [Civ.C. § 2821]

[6:589.1 - 6:589.4] Reserved.

h. [6:589.5] Exoneration by termination of principal's liability on grounds other than principal's "personal disability": A guarantor is also exonerated if the principal's liability ceases on grounds other than the principal's "mere personal disability," unless the guarantor assumed liability with knowledge of the existence of the defense. [Civ.C. § 2810; R.P. Richards, Inc. v. Chartered Const. Corp. (2000) 83 CA4th 146, 155, 99 CR2d 425, 431]

"Personal disabilities" that ordinarily do not exonerate the guarantor include the principal's death or bankruptcy. [R.P. Richards, Inc. v. Chartered Const. Corp., supra, 83 CA4th at 155, 99 CR2d at 431]

i. [6:590] No exoneration by lender's delay in proceeding against principal: The lender's delay in proceeding against the principal obligor (or in enforcing any other remedy) does not itself exonerate the guarantor. [Civ.C. § 2823]

j. [6:591] No exoneration by principal's discharge by operation of law: A guarantor is not exonerated by a discharge of the principal by operation of law "without the intervention or omission" of the lender. [Civ.C. § 2825; R.P. Richards, Inc. v. Chartered Const. Corp. (2000) 83 CA4th 146, 155, 99 CR2d 425, 431]

[6:592 - 6:594] Reserved.

3. [6:595] "True" vs. "Supposed" Guarantors: A "true guarantor" is one who is not already liable on the guarantied obligation. [See Civ.C. § 2787; Cadle Co. II v. Harvey (2000) 83 CA4th 927, 932, 100 CR2d 150, 154]

a. [6:595.1] Test: It is a question of fact whether a person is a "true guarantor" or a principal obligor "in guarantor's disguise." [River Bank America v. Diller (1995) 38 CA4th 1400, 1422, 45 CR2d 790, 802]

(1) [6:595.2] "Sham" notwithstanding different individuals/entities: That the principal obligor and guarantor are not literally the same individual or entity is not dispositive of the issue. "The correct inquiry … is whether the purported debtor is anything other than an instrumentality used by the individuals who guaranteed the debtor's obligation, and whether such instrumentality actually removed the individuals from their status and obligations as debtors … Put another way, are the supposed guarantors nothing more than the principal obligors under another name?" [River Bank America v. Diller (1995) 38 CA4th 1400, 1422-1423, 45 CR2d 790, 802 (emphasis in original; internal quotes and citation omitted); see Talbott v. Hustwit (2008) 164 CA4th 148, 152, 78 CR3d 703, 706; Cadle Co. II v. Harvey (2000) 83 CA4th 927, 932-933, 100 CR2d 150, 154]

• [6:595.3] For example, guarantors who are general partners of a primary obligor partnership are themselves principal obligors. [Union Bank v. Dorn (1967) 254 CA2d 157, 158-159, 61 CR 893, 894; Westinghouse Credit Corp. v. Barton (CD CA 1992) 789 F.Supp. 1043, 1045]

• [6:595.4] Likewise, where a corporation is the nominal primary obligor and the debt is guarantied by its officers and shareholders, the guarantors may be considered the primary obligors. This is true even though the officers and shareholders are not directly obligated on the corporation's debt. [River Bank America v. Diller (1995) 38 CA4th 1400, 1423-1424, 45 CR2d 790, 803]

• [6:595.5] In determining whether a purported corporate guarantor actually is the principal obligor, courts may apply the alter ego doctrine (or the "single business enterprise" theory, a variant of the alter ego doctrine applicable to sister companies). Key factors are "(1) that there be such unity of interest and ownership that the separate personalities of the corporation and the individual no longer exist and (2) that, if the acts are treated as those of the corporation alone, an inequitable result will follow." [See LSREF2 Clover Property 4, LLC v. Festival Retail Fund 1, LP (2016) 3 CA5th 1067, 1081, 208 CR3d 200, 212 (internal quotes omitted)—guarantor that created special purpose entities to acquire and finance real estate could not invoke alter ego principles to escape its guaranty (¶ 6:595.6)]

• [6:595.5a] Compare: Trustors who guarantee loans made to their own trusts may structure the trusts so as to separate themselves from the trusts' debts (e.g., by using limited liability companies as trustees and naming themselves secondary beneficiaries). Such arrangements effectively remove the trustors from "their status and obligations as debtors," rendering them "true guarantors." [See Talbott v. Hustwit (2008) 164 CA4th 148, 153, 78 CR3d 703, 707]

• [6:595.5b] Real estate developers who guarantee business loans to their own limited liability companies and limited partnerships may be "true guarantors," not primary obligors, if they do not personally enter into the subject loan agreements or execute the underlying promissory notes. Moreover, the legal status of both entities provides legal separation between the companies as primary obligors and the developers as guarantors. [See LSREF2 Clover Property 4, LLC v. Festival Retail Fund 1, LP (2016) 3 CA5th 1067, 1071-1073, 1077-1079, 208 CR3d 200, 203-205, 208-210—no sham guaranty where guarantor itself designed ownership structure in advance of loan and guaranteed only 6% of obligation; California Bank & Trust v. Lawlor (2013) 222 CA4th 625, 632, 166 CR3d 38, 43—lender could recover outstanding loans from developers despite their "sham guaranty" claims]

• [6:595.5c] And individuals who elect to borrow through a shell entity for tax purposes may not assert an antideficiency defense to their guaranties where there is adequate legal separation between the borrower and the guarantors. "Where individuals purposefully take advantage of the benefits of borrowing through a corporate entity, they must also assume the risks that come with it." [CADC/RAD Venture 2011-1 LLC v. Bradley (2015) 235 CA4th 775, 792, 185 CR3d 684, 697]

(2) [6:595.6] Subterfuge for avoiding antideficiency legislation indicates "sham": Courts are especially likely to conclude purported guarantors are really primary obligors on the debt where the entire loan transaction has been structured to subvert the purpose of the antideficiency laws; i.e., courts look to whether the purpose and effect of the loan/guaranty agreements is to recover deficiencies in violation of CCP § 580d (¶ 6:570). [River Bank America v. Diller (1995) 38 CA4th 1400, 1423, 45 CR2d 790, 803]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Conversely, a guarantor may not employ a sham guaranty defense to avail itself inequitably of the antideficiency protections: "[The guarantor] may have insulated itself from potential claims on the property by legally separating itself from [the borrower] and the owner of the property, but by doing so, [the guarantor] could not also claim the benefit of the antideficiency protections." [LSREF2 Clover Property 4, LLC v. Festival Retail Fund 1, LP (2016) 3 CA5th 1067, 1082, 208 CR3d 200, 213 (declining to apply alter ego theory to pierce corporate structure created by guarantor and invalidate guaranty); see also CADC/RAD Venture 2011-1 LLC v. Bradley (2015) 235 CA4th 775, 792, 185 CR3d 684, 697—no sham guaranty where guarantors, not lender, opted to borrow through separate entity for their own purposes; and see ¶ 6:598 ff. re guarantor waiver of antideficiency protection]

(3) [6:595.7] Compare—trustor as guarantor: As previously discussed, one who executes a trust deed to secure the obligation of another can be a guarantor rather than the principal obligor. See ¶ 6:582.2.

b. Consequences of sham guaranty

(1) [6:596] Purported guaranty of no legal effect: A principal obligor cannot "guaranty" its own debt. Consequently, any such purported guaranty will be superfluous and unenforceable; i.e., such "sham guaranties" are of no legal effect. [Valinda Builders, Inc. v. Bissner (1964) 230 CA2d 106, 112, 40 CR 735, 738; see also River Bank America v. Diller (1995) 38 CA4th 1400, 1420, 45 CR2d 790, 801; Jack Erickson & Assocs. v. Hesselgesser (1996) 50 CA4th 182, 187-188, 57 CR2d 591, 594]

(2) [6:597] Purported guaranty ineffective to avoid antideficiency protection: Most importantly, a supposed guaranty by the principal obligor is ineffective to circumvent the obligor's statutory antideficiency protection. [River Bank America v. Diller (1995) 38 CA4th 1400, 1420, 45 CR2d 790, 801; Cadle Co. II v. Harvey (2000) 83 CA4th 927, 933, 100 CR2d 150, 154-155; but see also Jack Erickson & Assocs. v. Hesselgesser (1996) 50 CA4th 182, 188, 57 CR2d 591, 594—principal obligor/purported guarantor waived CCP § 580b antideficiency protection when senior purchase money lienholder agreed to subordinate to subsequent construction loan (¶ 6:453)]

4. [6:598] Guarantor Waiver of Antideficiency Protection: Generally, guarantors can waive the benefits of California antideficiency laws. [Civ.C. § 2856] Thus, while a borrower might be protected from deficiency judgment liability (¶ 6:560 ff.), the guarantor will not necessarily enjoy the same protection. [Cadle Co. II v. Harvey (2000) 83 CA4th 927, 932, 100 CR2d 150, 154; see also Gramercy Investment Trust v. Lakemont Homes Nevada, Inc. (2011) 198 CA4th 903, 911, 130 CR3d 496, 502—guarantor's express waiver of antideficiency protections resulted in estoppel to assert same; Gray1 CPB, LLC v. Kolokotronis (2011) 202 CA4th 480, 482, 135 CR3d 448, 449—continuing guaranty under which guarantor, among other things, unconditionally agreed to pay amount equal to borrower's debt was "in form and substance" a guaranty, rendering guarantor's antideficiency protection waiver valid (guaranty's isolated references mirroring demand note language insufficient to transform agreement's essence)] a. [6:599] Background—guarantor's "Gradsky defense": Normally, a guarantor who is called upon to pay the principal obligor's debt becomes subrogated to the same rights against the debtor that the original lender had. The guarantor effectively "steps into the shoes" of the lender and can obtain no greater rights than the lender had. Thus, a lender who elects the remedy of nonjudicial foreclosure cannot obtain a deficiency judgment against the principal obligor and, in turn, effectively destroys the guarantor's subrogation rights against the principal obligor; the guarantor (now standing in the lender's shoes) has no further rights against the principal obligor.

Because only the lender has the option of preserving its rights and preserving the guarantor's subrogation rights (by electing judicial foreclosure), the lender is estopped to pursue the guarantor for a deficiency when it elects a remedy that destroys the guarantor's subrogation rights … unless the guarantor has effectively waived this estoppel (so-called "Gradsky") defense. [Union Bank v. Gradsky (1968) 265 CA2d 40, 43-47, 71 CR 64, 69-70; see Cathay Bank v. Lee (1993) 14 CA4th 1533, 1535, 18 CR2d 420, 421, fn. 3; Trust One Mortg. Corp. v. Invest America Mortg. Corp. (2005) 134 CA4th 1302, 1311-1312, 37 CR3d 83, 90]

b. [6:600] Requirements for effective waiver: Waivers of the "Gradsky defense" in secured real property transactions traditionally have received close judicial scrutiny so as to protect the guarantor from the inequity that otherwise would occur when the lender elects nonjudicial foreclosure. However, the applicable law is in a transitional stage, moving from one-time very rigid requirements (¶ 6:602 ff.) to a more lenient statutory approach (¶ 6:601 ff.).

(1) [6:600.1] Governing law based on date waiver executed: The validity of a guarantor's Gradsky defense waiver "shall be determined by the application of the law that existed on the date that the waiver was executed." [Civ.C. § 2856(f)]

As discussed at ¶ 6:601 ff., the validity of waivers executed on and after January 1, 1997 is determined under the version of Civ.C. § 2856 added to the Civil Code effective January 1, 1997 (Stats. 1996, Ch. 1013) (¶ 6:601 ff.). Waivers executed before 1997 are governed by the former version of § 2856 (¶ 6:601.3) and more stringent prior case law (¶ 6:602 ff.).

(2) [6:600.2] Clear statement of intent required: The law has remained consistent on the point that an effective guarantor waiver of antideficiency protection must express the guarantor's intent to do so. Court's will "not strain" to imply a waiver from ambiguous language. [See Civ.C. § 2856(b)—"contractual provision that expresses an intent to waive … [Gradsky defense] shall be effective"; Union Bank v. Gradsky (1968) 265 CA2d 40, 48, 71 CR 64, 70; see also Gramercy Investment Trust v. Lakemont Homes Nevada, Inc. (2011) 198 CA4th 903, 911, 130 CR3d 496, 503—waiver finding appropriate where waiver language evinces such intention, particularly when parties are sophisticated business persons with real estate development expertise]

(3) [6:601] Post-1996 waivers: With respect to post-1996 guaranties of loans other than those secured by certain borrower-occupied residential property (see ¶ 6:604), a contractual provision that expresses an intent to waive any or all of the rights and defenses set forth in Civ.C. § 2856(a) (¶ 6:601.1) "shall be effective to waive those rights and defenses without regard to the inclusion of any particular language or phrases" in the waiver "or any references to statutory provisions or judicial decisions." [Civ.C. § 2856(b) (emphasis added); see also Stats. 1996, Ch. 1013, § 3—"It is the intent of the Legislature that the types of waivers described in … [Civ.C. § 2856] do not violate the public policy of this state"]

(a) [6:601.1] Waivable rights and defenses: The guarantor rights and defenses that may be waived pursuant to Civ.C. § 2856 include:

- Rights of subrogation, reimbursement, indemnification, and contribution "and any other rights and defenses that are or may become available to the guarantor … by reason of [Civil Code] Sections 2787 to 2855, inclusive" (Civ.C. § 2856(a)(1));

- Rights or defenses the guarantor may have by reason of the creditor's (lender's) election of remedies (Civ.C. § 2856(a)(2));

- Rights or defenses the guarantor may have because the principal's note or other obligation is secured by real property —including, but not limited to, rights or defenses based upon CCP §§ 580a, 580b, 580d or 726 (antideficiency laws) (Civ.C. § 2856(a)(3)). [Gramercy Investment Trust v. Lakemont Homes Nevada, Inc. (2011) 198 CA4th 903, 912, 130 CR3d 496, 503]

The Civ.C. § 2856(a)(2) and (3) rights/defenses essentially encompass the Gradsky defense.

1) [6:601.1a] Compare—equitable defenses: A guarantor's waiver of defenses is limited to legal and statutory defenses expressly set out in the agreement. Indeed, "[a] waiver of statutory defenses is not deemed to waive all defenses, especially equitable defenses, such as unclean hands, where to enforce the guaranty would allow a lender to profit by its own fraudulent conduct … Public policy requires us to read Civil Code section 2856 in a manner that prevents one party from capitalizing upon its own fraud or willful misconduct." [See California Bank & Trust v. DelPonti (2014) 232 CA4th 162, 166-168, 181 CR3d 216, 218-220 (applying rule of strict construction to contractual predefault waivers in case of first impression)—guarantors entitled to raise equitable defenses despite waiver provision where creditor willfully breached guaranty agreement]

(b) [6:601.2] "Safe harbor" language for effective waiver of "Gradsky defense": Without limiting the parties' right to use any other language to express an intent to waive the Civ.C. § 2856(a)(2) and (3) rights and defenses (i.e., the Gradsky defense), use of the following statutory language "shall effectively waive" those rights and defenses (Civ.C. § 2856(c) (emphasis added); see also Form 6:L):

> "The guarantor waives all rights and defenses that the guarantor may have because the debtor's debt is secured by real property. This means, among other things:

"(1) The creditor may collect from the guarantor without first foreclosing on any real or personal property collateral pledged by the debtor.

"(2) If the creditor forecloses on any real property collateral pledged by the debtor:

"(A) The amount of the debt may be reduced only by the price for which that collateral is sold at the foreclosure sale, even if the collateral is worth more than the sale price.

"(B) The creditor may collect from the guarantor even if the creditor, by foreclosing on the real property collateral, has destroyed any right the guarantor may have to collect from the debtor.

"This is an unconditional and irrevocable waiver of any rights and defenses the guarantor may have because the debtor's debt is secured by real property. These rights and defenses include, but are not limited to, any rights or defenses based upon Section 580a, 580b, 580d, or 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure." [Civ.C. § 2856(c)]

1) [6:601.3] Alternative "safe harbor" language—validating post-1994 waivers: Section 2856 also validates alternative "safe harbor" language taken from that version of the statute in effect between 1995 and the end of 1996 (former Civ.C. § 2856(b)).

Without limiting the parties' right to use any other language to express an intent to waive all guarantor rights and defenses by reason of the creditor's (lender's) election of remedies, the following provision "shall be effective" to waive all rights and defenses the guarantor may have by reason of the creditor's (lender's) election of remedies (Civ.C. § 2856(d) (emphasis added)):

"The guarantor waives all rights and defenses arising out of an election of remedies by the creditor, even though that election of remedies, such as a nonjudicial foreclosure with respect to security for a guaranteed obligation, has destroyed the guarantor's rights of subrogation and reimbursement against the principal by the operation of Section 580d of the Code of Civil Procedure or otherwise." [Civ.C. § 2856(d) (former Civ.C. § 2856(b))]

Pursuant to current Civ.C. § 2856(f) (¶ 6:600.1), the above "safe harbor" language validates any waiver of the Gradsky defense executed on and after January 1, 1995. [See Gramercy Investment Trust v. Lakemont Homes Nevada, Inc. (2011) 198 CA4th 903, 912, 130 CR3d 496, 503—waiver finding appropriate where guarantor, in Civ.C. § 2856 recommended language, clearly and unequivocally waived all rights or defenses it had based on antideficiency statutes and creditor's election of remedies]

2) [6:601.4] Exception for guaranties of certain residential secured loans: See ¶ 6:604.

(4) [6:602] Pre-1995 waivers—stricter Cathay Bank standards: Civ.C. § 2856 (¶ 6:601.3) was enacted in response to case law that took a particularly stringent position with respect to the enforceability of a purported waiver of the Gradsky defense (Cathay Bank v. Lee (1993) 14 CA4th 1533, 1539-1540, 18 CR2d 420, 423-424). [See Gramercy Investment Trust v. Lakemont Homes Nevada, Inc. (2011) 198 CA4th 903, 911, 130 CR3d 496, 502—Cathay Bank imposed "stringent requirements" on wording and interpretation of guarantor's waiver of a defense arising from principal's rights under antideficiency statutes]

The Cathay Bank decision (¶ 6:602.1 ff.) continues to apply to guarantor waivers executed before 1995 (i.e., before the enactment of Civ.C. § 2856 in its former and current versions; cf. Civ.C. § 2856(f)); and it may still govern guarantor waivers with respect to certain residential property secured loans (see ¶ 6:604).

(a) [6:602.1] Explanation of defense being waived: According to Cathay Bank and its progeny, an effective waiver must not only expressly identify the rights being waived but also evidence the guarantor's actual knowledge and awareness of what is being waived—i.e., the waiver language must alert the guarantor to the nature of the defense at stake. [Cathay Bank v. Lee (1993) 14 CA4th 1533, 1539-1540, 18 CR2d 420, 423-424]

Specifically, an effective "explicit" waiver must tell the guarantor that "if the lender selects nonjudicial foreclosure, [the guarantor] will have a defense to a deficiency judgment, and it is that defense which the guarantor is now being asked to give up in advance." [Cathay Bank v. Lee, supra, 14 CA4th at 1538-1539, 18 CR2d at 423 (emphasis in original); see Resolution Trust Corp. v. Titan Fin'l Corp. (9th Cir. 1994) 22 F3d 923, 925]

1) [6:602.2] Doubts resolved against waiver: Further, under the stricter Cathay Bank approach, any ambiguity regarding the guarantor's knowing waiver of the Gradsky defense must be interpreted against the lender (drafter of the guaranty) and thus against an effective waiver. [Cathay Bank v. Lee (1993) 14 CA4th 1533, 1540-1541, 18 CR2d 420, 424]

2) Application

• [6:602.3] At least under Cathay Bank, language stating Guarantor "shall be liable to [Lender] for any deficiency resulting from the exercise by it of any such remedy, even though any rights which Guarantor may have against others might be … destroyed" is not an effective waiver. These words are not sufficiently specific about the precise rights being waived.

"To find a waiver of the Gradsky defense here one must go beyond the actual words and imply into them two more ideas, namely: (1) that the destruction of subrogation rights creates a defense to a deficiency judgment, and (2) the guarantor is now waiving that specific defense." [Cathay Bank v. Lee (1993) 14 CA4th 1533, 1539, 18 CR2d 420, 423 (emphasis in original)]

(b) [6:603] Civ.C. § 2856 preemption re post-1994 waivers: To the extent Civ.C. § 2856 applies—in either its former or current forms—the stricter Cathay Bank requirements are effectively preempted. [See River Bank America v. Diller (1995) 38 CA4th 1400, 1419, 45 CR2d 790, 800—"it is clear the Legislature enacted section 2856 to ameliorate the strict rule laid down in Cathay Bank"]

(c) [6:604] Continued Cathay Bank viability with respect to certain residential secured loans? The more lenient Civ.C. § 2856(b), (c), and (d) waiver provisions (including waiver of the Gradsky defense) expressly do not apply to a "guaranty or other type of suretyship obligation made in respect of a loan secured by a deed of trust or mortgage on a dwelling of not more than four families when the dwelling is occupied, entirely or in part, by the borrower and that loan was in fact used to pay all or part of the purchase price of that dwelling." [Civ.C. § 2856(e) (emphasis added)]

In an uncodified statement of intent, the Legislature declared that, by enacting Civ.C. § 2856(b), (c) and (d), it did not intend to address the legal requirements for guarantor waivers in connection with loan transactions described in Civ.C. § 2856(e); but that "[n]o inference of any kind should be drawn from the exclusion of these transactions" from Civ.C. § 2856(b), (c), and (d). [See Stats. 1996, Ch. 1013, § 3]

Thus, the Legislature has taken no position on the issue either way but, instead, deferred to the courts to decide whether Cathay Bank or some other standard should apply in these cases. See also Stats. 2013, Ch. 65, § 1, wherein the Legislature explicitly recognizes that the antideficiency protections of CCP §§ 580b and 580d do not impact existing law regarding the liability of guarantors, pledgors or other sureties with respect to deficiencies, nor existing law regarding other collateral pledged to secure obligations that are the subject of deficiencies (¶ 6:563 and 6:563.2).

c. [6:605] Application to indemnity agreements: The Gradsky defense (¶ 6:599) also applies to an indemnity agreement when the indemnitor and principal obligor are "substantially the same." In such a case, the agreement is the same as a guaranty and, without an effective waiver (¶ 6:600 ff.), constitutes an invalid attempt to circumvent the antideficiency laws. [See Trust One Mortg. Corp. v. Invest America Mortg. Corp. (2005) 134 CA4th 1302, 1310-1313, 37 CR3d 83, 90-92 (collecting cases) (emphasis added)—agreement between lender and mortgage broker whereby lender funded secured loans brokered by broker and broker agreed to indemnify lender for losses incurred as result of borrowers' defaults not subject to Gradsky defense (i.e., antideficiency law did not bar enforcement of indemnity agreement) because broker (indemnitor) was unrelated to borrowers —not "a principal obligor in guarantor's guise"]

d. [6:606] Compare—guarantor as secured debtor: Guarantors may lawfully waive antideficiency protection (the "Gradsky defense," ¶ 6:599 ff.) only as to the underlying secured obligation which they guaranty. On the other hand, guarantors who pledge real property as security for their guaranty are themselves principal obligors entitled to the antideficiency protections of CCP §§ 580d and 726 with respect to a foreclosure on the property pledged to secure the guaranty.

5. [6:607] Guarantor as Foreclosing Creditor: A borrower (principal obligor) has the protection of antideficiency legislation with respect to claims by either the guarantor or the lender. However, the guarantor might be able to purchase the loan from the lender and thereafter pursue a judicial foreclosure. If the loan is not otherwise nonrecourse (¶ 6:402), the guarantor would then stand in the lender's shoes and could obtain a deficiency judgment against the borrower following the judicial foreclosure.

6. [6:608] Drafting Effective Guaranties: To protect the lender, a guaranty should, at a minimum, cover the issues addressed at ¶ 6:609 ff.

• FORM: Guaranty, see Form 6:L.

a. [6:609] Scope of guaranty: The precise scope of the obligation guarantied by the guarantor should be described.

➪ [6:610] PRACTICE POINTER: A guaranty of all of the borrower's obligations should explicitly state it extends to all obligations, whether principal, interest, collection costs or otherwise.

If, however, the amount guarantied is less than the borrower's full obligation, the parties should be particularly careful in describing the limitations on the scope of the guaranty.

b. [6:611] Modifications, renewals and extensions of loan: The guaranty should state whether it will continue after any modification, renewal or extension of the loan.

➪ [6:612] PRACTICE POINTER: It is always advisable for a lender to obtain the guarantor's written consent to any modification of the guarantied obligation (see ¶ 6:586 re exoneration by alteration of principal obligation). In particular, the guarantor should always obtain a separate, additional guaranty if the loan amount is ever increased. This is because an increase in the loan amount is not necessarily a "modification" of the loan but, rather, the creation of an additional, new debt.

c. [6:613] Guarantor's liability after exoneration of borrower or other guarantors: Well-drafted guaranties typically state each guarantor remains liable even if (1) the borrower or other guarantors are not pursued by the lender; and (2) the lender has compromised or released any claim against the borrower or other guarantors. In other words, the guaranty remains valid even if, at any time, the guarantor's liability to the lender is greater than that of the borrower or some other guarantor.

d. [6:614] Waivers by guarantor: The guarantor is usually required to waive various defenses and rights, including: applicable statutes of limitations; certain defenses to which the borrower might be entitled; defenses based on the lender's election of remedies ("Gradsky defense"); antideficiency protections; the lender's release of the borrower or any other guarantor; the lender's delay in exercising its remedies, etc. [See Bank of America, N.A. v. Stonehaven Manor, LLC (2010) 186 CA4th 719, 723-724, 113 CR3d 57, 60—property of two guarantors was subject to attachment upon debtor's default (both guarantors contractually waived their right under suretyship law to benefit of real property security pledged by borrower and third guarantor)]

Waiver provisions should be stated explicitly and, to ensure they will be given effect, should use the Civ.C. § 2856 "safe harbor" language (see ¶ 6:601.2, 6:601.3). (Guarantor waivers in connection with loans secured by borrower-occupied residential (one-to-four unit) property arguably should be more extensive, adhering to Cathay Bank's stricter standards; see ¶ 6:602 ff., 6:604.)

Chapter 6. Financing and Appraisals

K. Environmental Indemnities

1. [6:620] Necessity for From Lender's Perspective
2. [6:621] Nature of Borrower's Indemnity
3. [6:622] Antideficiency Protection?
4. [6:624] Lender's Statutory Rights
   a. [6:625] Waiver of lien
      (1) [6:626] Limitation—culpable borrower
   b. [6:627] Breach of contract remedy
      (1) [6:628] Limitation on recoverable damages
   c. [6:629] Lender's right of entry and inspection
      (1) [6:630] Conditions on entry/inspection rights
      (2) [6:631] Prior notice
      (3) [6:632] Consequential damages reimbursement
      (4) [6:633] Court action to enforce entry/inspection rights; appointment of receiver
         (a) [6:634] Not subject to "one action" rule

1. [6:620] Necessity for From Lender's Perspective: Lenders have wisely developed a heightened sensitivity to environmental issues out of concern they might become subject to third party claims either before or after they foreclose. This concern is particularly acute in light of California antideficiency laws, which might cut off the lender's rights against a borrower relating to environmental contamination of the encumbered property.

Therefore, in commercial and multi-unit residential loan transactions, lenders typically require the borrower to execute a separate environmental indemnity agreement under which the borrower agrees to indemnify the lender for various environmental liabilities relating to the secured property.

Cross-refer: Environmental indemnities are also discussed in Ch. 5 in connection with the allocation of environmental (cleanup) liability risks in a real property purchase and sale transaction; see ¶ 5:230 ff. Additionally, keep in mind that lenders are protected from CERCLA and State Superfund liability (i.e., they are not deemed "owners" or "operators" of a contaminated property) under specified conditions; see ¶ 5:84 ff.

2. [6:621] Nature of Borrower's Indemnity: Lenders typically require one of two kinds of an environmental indemnity: Either an unsecured environmental indemnity; or a secured environmental indemnity, which becomes unsecured upon a foreclosure of the deed of trust.

3. [6:622] Antideficiency Protection? There is yet no known case law addressing whether an environmental indemnity obligation might be subject to the protection of California's antideficiency laws.

4. [6:624] Lender's Statutory Rights: Lenders are afforded certain statutory rights and protections with respect to environmental matters.

a. [6:625] Waiver of lien: A secured lender may elect to waive its lien on "environmentally impaired" property (see CCP § 726.5(e)(3)) and exercise the rights and remedies of an unsecured creditor by proceeding against the borrower's other assets. [CCP § 726.5(a) (applicable only to secured real property loans made, renewed or modified on or after January 1, 1992; see CCP § 726.5(g))]

(1) [6:626] Limitation—culpable borrower: However, a lender may make this election only if the borrower is culpable in either causing, contributing to, or not informing the lender of the environmental impairment. [See CCP § 726.5(d)]

b. [6:627] Breach of contract remedy: "Notwithstanding any other provision of law," secured lenders may bring a breach of contract action against the borrower for breach of any environmental agreement made by the borrower relating to the real property security. This cause of action does not invoke the protections of California antideficiency laws. [CCP § 736(a) (applicable only to environmental provisions contracted in conjunction with loans made, renewed or modified on or after January 1, 1992; see CCP § 736(e))]

(1) [6:628] Limitation on recoverable damages: However, the damages recoverable in a CCP § 736 action are subject to several statutory limitations. [See CCP § 736(b)] And no such damages are recoverable if:

- the original principal loan amount did not exceed $200,000;
- the lender agreed in writing to accept the real property security on the basis of a completed environmental site assessment "and other relevant information from the borrower";
- the borrower did not permit, cause or contribute to the release or threatened release of hazardous substances; and
- the deed of trust covering the secured property has not been discharged, reconveyed or foreclosed upon. [See CCP § 736(c)]

c. [6:629] Lender's right of entry and inspection: Secured lenders have a statutory right to enter and inspect their real property security for the purpose of determining the "existence, location, nature, and magnitude of any past or present release or threatened release of any hazardous substance into, onto, beneath, or from the real property security …" [Civ.C. § 2929.5(a)]

(1) [6:630] Conditions on entry/inspection rights: The right of entry and inspection is conditioned upon the occurrence of either of the following:

- The lender's "reasonable belief" of a past or present hazardous substance release or threatened release not previously disclosed in writing to the lender in conjunction with the making, renewal or modification of its secured loan (Civ.C. § 2929.5(a)(1)); or
- The commencement of nonjudicial or judicial foreclosure proceedings against the real property security (Civ.C. § 2929.5(a)(2)).

(2) [6:631] Prior notice: Except in emergencies or when the borrower (or a tenant of the property) has abandoned the premises, and unless it is "impracticable" to do so, the lender must give the borrower (or tenant of the property) "reasonable notice" (generally, at least 24 hours' notice) of the intent to enter and may enter only during the borrower's (or tenant's) normal business hours. [Civ.C. § 2929.5(b); CCP § 564(c)]

(3) [6:632] Consequential damages reimbursement: The lender must reimburse the borrower for the cost of repairing any physical injury to the secured property caused by the entry and inspection. [Civ.C. § 2929.5(c)]

(4) [6:633] Court action to enforce entry/inspection rights; appointment of receiver: If the borrower (or tenant of the property) refuses the lender the right of entry and inspection, or if the lender is otherwise unable to enforce its inspection rights without breaching the peace, the lender may commence an action for an order compelling compliance. [Civ.C. § 2929.5(d)] Incident thereto, the court may appoint a receiver to facilitate enforcement of the lender's Civ.C. § 2929.5 rights. [CCP § 564(c)]

(a) [6:634] Not subject to "one action" rule: Neither a Civ.C. § 2929.5 enforcement action nor the appointment of a receiver pursuant to CCP § 564 constitutes an "action" within the meaning of the CCP § 726(a) "one action rule" (¶ 6:551). [Civ.C. § 2929.5(d); CCP § 564(d)]

1. General Considerations

a. [6:650] Definition: Other than in connection with loans by "federally-regulated financial institutions" (which are subject to the Real Estate Appraisers' and Licensing Certification Law, see ¶ 6:690), the term "appraisal" has no specific legal definition.

WESTLAW © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Broadly, a real estate appraisal is merely someone's opinion as to the monetary value of a property. While that valuation opinion might be based on a standardized methodology, it is only an opinion, not a scientific fact or legal conclusion.

Indeed, unless the appraisal is made in connection with a "federally-related transaction" (¶ 6:690 ff.), anyone can call oneself a real estate "appraiser." Therefore, the term "real estate appraisal" has traditionally meant anything from an informal valuation opinion (with little or no supporting research or data) to the opinion of a highly experienced valuation professional based on extensive research consistent with the standards and practices of a professional real estate appraisers association.

b. [6:651] "Appraised value": In lay parlance, the "appraised value" of a piece of real property is generally thought to be its "fair market value"—i.e., the price at which a willing seller would sell and a willing buyer would buy in an arm's length transaction. However, depending upon the purpose of the appraisal and the valuation methodology used, a property's "fair market value" may or may not be the same as its "appraised value":

(1) [6:652] Appraised value as affected by purpose of appraisal: The valuation of a property can dramatically change with the purpose for which the appraisal is made. For example, appraisals for the identical property (or property interest) may yield entirely different results when made for purposes of determining (a) a compensation award in an eminent domain proceeding, or (b) gift and estate tax, or (c) the value of collateral for a lender's secured financing.

(2) [6:653] Appraised value as affected by method of appraisal: The particular appraisal methodology or "approach" utilized in a given transaction can produce different valuations for the same property (or property interest). For example, the appraised value of a single family residence based on a comparison with sale prices for comparable homes might be different from the appraised value of the identical residence based on its "replacement cost" (see ¶ 6:665 ff. re real estate appraisal "approaches").

c. [6:654] Appraisal purposes: The general purpose of a real estate appraisal is to value a particular interest in real property. Typically, the appraised interest is a fee or leasehold; however, other interests—such as an option to purchase or an easement —can also be the subject of a real estate appraisal.

More specifically, there are several fundamental purposes for an appraisal:

(1) [6:655] Determining purchase/sale price: A seller might need an appraisal to determine the property's fair market purchase and sale price.

(2) [6:656] Determining value for secured loan or credit bidding at foreclosure: Lenders conduct appraisals to ascertain the value of the property that will serve as security for a particular loan.

Also, in contemplation of making a full credit bid at a foreclosure sale of the secured property, lenders usually conduct appraisals to ensure the property is worth at least as much as the principal obligation. (The lender's purchase by full credit extinguishes its lien and the underlying debt, and ordinarily bars it from pursuing other remedies based on impairment of the security; see ¶ 6:535.1 ff.)

(3) [6:657] Determining compensation in eminent domain proceeding: In eminent domain proceedings, an appraisal may be the yardstick by which appropriate compensation for the acquired parcel or interest is measured.

(4) [6:658] Determining valuation for tax purposes: A taxpayer may need to determine the value of property for a variety of tax purposes (property tax, gift/estate tax, allocation of the purchase price between land and improvements, etc.). The property valuation established by the tax assessor for purposes of calculating property tax is referred to as the "assessed value." A taxpayer wishing to appeal the assessed or taxable value of property may submit evidence of a lower value, including an appraisal, to the taxing authority.

(5) [6:658.1] Determining basis for canceling PMI: "Private mortgage insurance" (PMI) often is required as a condition of a loan secured by a deed of trust or mortgage on real property. A borrower may be able to cancel PMI based upon various factors, including a current appraisal of the property. [See generally, Civ.C. § 2954.12(a), (b) (conditions for canceling PMI on post-12/31/97 loans, exclusive of loans made by or sold to institutional third parties such as Fannie Mae, Freddie Mac or Ginnie Mac)]

[6:659] Comment: In terms of sheer volume, the great majority of appraisals are prepared for lenders who contemplate making a loan that is to be secured by the property appraised. Indeed, every institutional lender (and every prudent private lender) will require some form of appraisal in order to determine whether the value of the security will support the loan. (See ¶ 6:109 ff. re lenders' "loan-to-value" requirements.) For this reason, the remaining sections of this Chapter focus primarily on appraisals prepared by real property secured lenders.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

d. [6:660] Professional real estate appraiser organizations: Numerous national professional real estate appraiser organizations provide certification functions. Appraisers who wish to be certified by these organizations must satisfy specified education and experience requirements. Member appraisers must also follow the organization's guidelines and standards in preparing their appraisals.

Perhaps the three best known professional real estate appraiser organizations are the American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers (whose members' appraisals are known as "MAI appraisals"), the Society of Real Estate Appraisers and the Appraisal Foundation.

[6:661 - 6:664] Reserved.

2. [6:665] Basic Real Property Appraisal Approaches: There are three basic methods (or "approaches") to the appraisal of real property: the sales comparison approach, the cost approach, and the income capitalization approach. The particular approach used by an appraiser will depend on the purpose of the appraisal and, of course, on the preference of the party who commissions the appraisal.

The various appraisal methods take different factors into consideration; consequently, as discussed, the "appraised value" of a property (or interest therein) yielded under one approach will not necessarily be the same value yielded under another approach.

a. [6:666] Sales comparison approach: Residential real property most commonly is appraised by the "sales comparison approach." This method assumes there is a direct correlation between the market value of a property and the price of comparable properties that have recently sold.

(1) [6:667] Comparison factors: The typical factors for comparison are:

• the real property rights conveyed;

• financing terms;

• conditions of sale;

• date of sale;

• location of the property; and

• specific physical characteristics of the property (e.g., lot size, number of rooms, age of structure, quality of construction materials, unique design features, etc.).

(2) [6:668] Preferred method for single-family residences: Although the sales comparison approach may be used for appraising almost every kind of real property, it has its greatest applicability to single-family residences. This is chiefly because a single-family residence appraisal based on the sales comparison approach is relatively easy to do and there is often a sizable pool of comparable properties that have recently sold.

The "income capitalization approach" (¶ 6:674) is not particularly appropriate for appraising single-family residences because they rarely produce income and, even if they do, the income is not necessarily comparable to other residential properties. The "cost approach" (¶ 6:670) is equally inappropriate for single-family residences because it is not a reliable method for valuing older residential properties which may need significant repairs.

➪ [6:669] PRACTICE POINTER: Despite its general acceptance for residential property valuations, a sales comparison approach may not necessarily be suitable to a given case. In particular, it may be unreliable if there are not sufficient comparable sales within a recent time period. It may also be unreliable if market conditions change dramatically. For example, a sudden change in interest rates or tax laws, or a recent natural disaster (e.g., flood, earthquake or hurricane), can make a valuation that was valid when made unreliable one month later.

b. [6:670] Cost approach: Like the sales comparison approach, the "cost approach" to valuation is also based on comparability. However, the comparison is between the value of the completed project (which is being appraised) and the cost to develop a comparable project. In other words, the appraiser estimates the cost to replace the subject project.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(1) [6:671] Methodology: The appraiser first calculates the cost of reproducing the subject project by (a) determining the value of the land and then (b) adding the cost of reproducing the building and other improvements with a comparable design and comparable materials.

From that total cost, the appraiser must factor in a depreciation adjustment to reflect the age and depreciation of the existing project.

(2) [6:672] Applicable properties: The cost approach is most applicable in appraising new or relatively newly-constructed projects, but is more problematic to apply to older properties (because it is sometimes difficult to assess the degree of depreciation in older properties). The cost approach is particularly valuable when the sales comparison approach would be unreliable because either the subject property is unique or there is not a pool of recent sales sufficient to justify a valuation based on sales comparisons.

➪ [6:673] PRACTICE POINTER: As a practical matter, the cost approach is more likely to be used when assessing issues relating to property damage insurance. Because it is fairly unrelated to the "market value" of a property, the cost approach is rarely used by lenders (or, for that matter, by buyers or sellers).

c. [6:674] Income capitalization approach: The "income capitalization approach" is used to appraise income-producing property; it is based on the premise that the value of a property is directly related to the ability of the property to generate revenues. Therefore, value is fundamentally determined by assessing the property's estimated future income stream.

The income capitalization approach includes some of the factors considered in the sales comparison and cost approaches, but is perhaps the most complex method of valuing a property. It is usually most appropriate when valuing a commercial (or other income-producing) building, an interest in an entity that owns a real estate project, participation mortgages, master leaseholds, subleasehold estates, or like real property interests.

3. [6:675] Selecting an Appraiser—Checklist: If the appraisal is commissioned in connection with a secured loan application, the borrower typically has no voice in selecting the appraiser. However, a buyer or seller looking to commission an appraisal for any other purpose should consider the following factors in assessing a particular appraiser's suitability:

• What is the appraiser's education and general experience level?

• Does the appraiser have substantial experience in appraising similar kinds of properties?

• Is the appraiser experienced in valuing properties in the subject property's geographic locale? (Knowledge of local market conditions, zoning laws, etc. is important.)

• Is the appraiser a member of a respected professional appraisal association? (See ¶ 6:660.) If so, the appraiser will be able to certify that the appraisal meets generally-accepted standards in the industry. (For example, a member of the American Institute of Real Estate Appraisers can issue an "MAI appraisal," which is one of the most highly regarded kinds of real estate appraisals.)

• If the appraisal is being prepared in connection with litigation (e.g., to obtain evidence of fair market value for use in a breach of contract suit between buyer and seller), does the appraiser have sufficient knowledge, skill and expertise to be a convincing expert witness?

(Also, if the appraisal is commissioned in connection with litigation, any potential conflict of interest between the appraiser and any party to the lawsuit should be considered before retaining the appraiser.)

➪ [6:676] PRACTICE POINTER: The completed appraisal is likely to be formalized by the appraiser's written report (see ¶ 6:677 ff.). When the appraisal is being prepared in connection with litigation, the report is likely to be a discoverable document (because relevant to the subject matter, see CCP § 2017). If discoverability is a concern, it may be advisable to have the attorney (rather than the party personally) hire the appraiser, thereby making the report subject to work product protection (see CCP § 2018; and detailed discussion in Weil & Brown et al., Cal. Prac. Guide: Civ. Pro. Before Trial (TRG), Ch. 8C).

4. [6:677] Appraiser's Report: A completed appraisal can be as informal as an oral report or a brief letter. Typically, however, appraisers prepare a written report that contains most (if not all) of the following information:

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

a. [6:678] Property identification: An identification of the real property (and the interest being appraised), including a legal description of the land and a description of the improvements thereon.
b. [6:679] Dates: The date of valuation of the property and the date the appraisal was completed.
c. [6:680] Appraisal approach: The particular appraisal methodology used (e.g., sales comparison approach, cost approach, income capitalization approach) and a brief discussion of that methodology.
d. [6:681] Assumptions and conditions: Specific factual and legal assumptions made in the valuation process and so-called “limiting conditions.” (Limiting conditions might include such things as a statement that no survey was made; or that no analysis of subsurface mineral, oil and gas rights was considered.)
e. [6:682] Personal property: An indication of any personal property that is (or is not) included in the appraisal.
f. [6:683] Misc. background information: Miscellaneous background material, such as a statement as to how value is estimated; the appraiser's definition of the “appraisal” (or of “value”); and the purpose of the appraisal.
g. [6:684] Supporting data: Depending on the type of appraisal, the report will include various data that support the appraiser's valuation. This may include photographs of the property (and comparable properties); maps and charts; a preliminary title report; a history of the property; market studies; abstracts of leases; building specifications; income and expense data; cost estimates; sales and listings for comparable properties; real property taxes and assessments; plans and elevations of buildings; a plot plan; and area data (which may include information relating to public transportation, proximity to schools, parks and social services, population trends, vacancy and rent levels, new construction activities, adequacy of on-site and off-site parking and other beneficial or detrimental influences).
h. [6:685] Appraiser's qualifications: If the appraisal has been prepared in accordance with the standards of a professional appraisers association, the report will so indicate (and also include a reference to the association's standards and practices).
i. [6:686] Appraised value: The appraised value might be stated in a specific dollar amount or a range of values.
j. [6:687] Borrower's right to receive copy of appraisal: If the borrower is required to pay for the appraisal, the report should indicate that the lender or broker must provide the borrower with a copy of the appraisal upon request (see ¶ 6:692).

[6:688 - 6:689] Reserved.

5. Appraiser Licensing Requirements

a. [6:690] California Licensing Law: California has enacted the “Real Estate Appraisers' Licensing and Certification Law” (Bus. & Prof.C. § 11300 et seq.), which requires real estate appraisers who engage in “federally-related real estate appraisal activity” to be licensed by the California Bureau of Real Estate Appraisers. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 11320]

Indeed, no person other than a state-licensed real estate appraiser may assume or use that title (or any other title likely to create the impression of state licensure as a real estate appraiser in California). And, while nonlicensed persons may assist in preparing an appraisal in federally-related transactions under specified conditions (see Bus. & Prof.C. § 11324), only a duly-licensed appraiser may sign an appraisal in a federally-related transaction. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 11321(b)]

(1) [6:691] Limited application—federally-related loan transactions only: The purpose of the California Real Estate Appraisers' Licensing and Certification Law is to control abuses in the preparation of real estate appraisals in connection with loans issued by federally-regulated financial institutions. Thus, the statutory scheme applies only to appraisals “on real estate or real property in a federally related transaction.” [Bus. & Prof.C. § 11302(s)]

A “federally-related transaction” means “any real estate-related financial transaction that a federal financial institutions regulatory agency engages in, contracts for or regulates and that requires the services of a state licensed real estate appraiser regulated by [Bus. & Prof.C. § 11300 et seq.].” It also includes any transaction identified as such by a federal financial institutions regulatory agency. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 11302(t)] In other words, the appraiser must be licensed under California law only if the appraisal is prepared in connection with a loan from a federally-regulated financial institution.

(2) [6:692] Licensing requirements and administration: Under the statutory scheme, the Governor of California appoints a Chief of the Bureau of Real Estate Appraisers and, together, they administer the licensing and certification program for real estate appraisers. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 11310]

At a minimum, licensed appraisers must satisfy criteria established by the Appraiser Qualification Board of the Appraisal Foundation or the Appraisal Subcommittee. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 11314; and see ¶ 6:694]

A license issued with an effective date of January 1, 2000 or later is valid for two years unless otherwise extended or limited by the Director. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 11341]

Beginning January 1, 2023, applicants must complete at least one hour of instruction in cultural competency (as defined). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 11340(e)]

To renew an appraiser's license the applicant must demonstrate "continuing fitness" to hold a license and, beginning January 1, 2023, complete at least two hours of elimination of bias training. [Bus. & Prof.C § 11360(a), (b)]

In addition, the law contemplates compliance with continuing education requirements (to be reported on the basis of four-year continuing education cycles). Thus, every four years, licensees must complete at least four hours of appraisal-related statutory and regulatory law. Moreover, beginning January 1, 2023, they must complete at least one hour of cultural competency training every four years. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 11360(a), (b), (c), (e) (defining "cultural competency")]

If the borrower is required to pay for the appraisal, the law also requires the lender or broker to provide the borrower with a copy of the appraisal upon the borrower's request. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 11423(b), (d)—lender must give loan applicant written notice of right to request copy of appraisal as statutorily specified; see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 10241.3—licensed broker must provide copy of appraisal to both borrower and lender at or before loan transaction's closing]

[6:692.1 - 6:692.4] Reserved.

(3) [6:692.5] Compensation limitation: Appraisers required to be licensed under the Real Estate Appraisers' Licensing and Certification Law are prohibited from basing the amount of their compensation on the value they ultimately ascribe to the subject real property: "No licensee shall engage in any appraisal activity if [their] compensation is dependent on or affected by the value conclusion generated by the appraisal." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 11323]

(4) Enforcement

(a) Administrative orders and fines

1) [6:693] Up to $10,000 fine for each violation: A licensee, license applicant, person who acts in a capacity requiring a real estate appraiser license, course provider or applicant for course provider accreditation, or person or entity acting in a capacity requiring course provider accreditation, can be cited for violations of Bus. & Prof.C. § 11300 et seq. and assessed administrative fines (maximum $10,000 per violation). [Bus. & Prof.C. § 11315(a) & (e)]

Failure to pay the fine or penalty (or a required installment on the fine or penalty) by the date due will result in disciplinary action. The violator will also be charged interest and a penalty of 10% of the fine (or installment amount). Additional disciplinary action will be taken if the fine (or a required installment on the fine) is not paid within 30 days of the date ordered in the citation (unless the citation is being appealed). [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 11315(g)]

Further, the full amount of the unpaid balance of the fine will be added to any license renewal fee. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 11315(g)]

Any fine or interest thereon not paid within 30 days of a final citation or order constitutes a "valid and enforceable civil judgment." [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 11315(g)]

2) [6:693.1] Abatement and continuing education: The citation may also order abatement of the violation within a specified reasonable time. And, "if appropriate," the citation may order the violator to enroll in and successfully complete additional basic or continuing education courses. Failure to satisfactorily complete or timely report the education course by the date specified in the citation "shall result in the automatic suspension of the licensee's real estate appraisal license as of that date." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 11315(d)(2)(D)]

Moreover, no license may be renewed prior to satisfactory completion of the education course specified in the citation unless the citation provides for a completion date after the license renewal date. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 11315(d)(2)(D)]

(b) [6:693.2] Criminal penalties: Additionally, a willful violation of § 11320 (prohibition against engaging in a federally-related real estate appraisal activity without a license or misrepresenting licensed status) is punishable by imprisonment in state prison, or in county prison for up to one year, and/or a maximum $10,000 fine. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 11320]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(c) [6:693.3] Disciplinary proceedings: The expiration, suspension, cancellation, forfeiture or surrender of a license or registration certificate may not, during any period in which it can be renewed, restored, reissued or reinstated, prevent the Bureau of Real Estate Appraisers from (i) instituting or continuing disciplinary proceedings against the licensee or registrant; or (ii) entering an order suspending or revoking the license or registration certificate, or otherwise taking disciplinary action against the licensee or registrant. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 11315.3]

[6:693.4] Reserved.

(5) [6:693.5] Compare—registration of appraisal management companies: Appraisal management companies, as defined, also are subject to the Real Estate Appraiser's Licensing and Certification Law (¶ 6:690 ff.) and must be registered with the Bureau of Real Estate Appraisers. [See Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 11302(d), (h), (w) & 11320.5]

(The Bureau of Real Estate Appraisers is charged with adopting regulations governing the registration process for appraisal management companies, with minimum requirements, and establishing fees to cover the costs associated therewith; see Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 11345 & 11406.5.)

(a) [6:693.6] Standards; administrative penalties: As with individual licensees, appraisal management companies must meet certain standard business practices. The Bureau of Real Estate Appraisers has authority to issue citations or administrative penalties for violations of those standards (not to exceed $10,000 per violation). [See Bus. & Prof.C. §§ 11315.1 & 11345.3]

(b) [6:693.7] Fingerprinting; background checks: As with individual applicants, "each controlling person of each applicant for registration as an appraisal management company" must submit to the Department of Justice fingerprint images and information via LiveScan. Out-of-state applicants must include fingerprint cards with their application packages. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 11343(a)]

(c) [6:693.8] Unlawful influence of appraisers; prohibited acts; cross-registration violations: See ¶ 6:710 ff.

(d) [6:693.9] Federal preemption: Any provision under the Real Estate Appraisers' Licensing and Certification Law relating to appraisal management companies is inoperative 60 days after the effective date of any federal law that mandates registration or licensing of them with an entity other than the applicable state regulatory authority. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 11346]

b. [6:694] Federal law: Federal law establishes the "Appraisal Subcommittee of the Federal Financial Institutions Examination Council" (12 USC § 3331 et seq.). Like the state law counterpart (¶ 6:690 ff.), this law is specifically directed at regulating real estate appraisers and appraisals in federally-related loan transactions.

The purpose of the federal law is expressly codified: "… to provide that Federal financial and public policy interests in real estate related transactions will be protected by requiring that real estate appraisals utilized in connection with federally-related transactions are performed in writing, in accordance with uniform standards, by individuals whose competency has been demonstrated and whose professional conduct will be subject to effective supervision." [12 USC § 3331; see Groten v. State of Calif. (9th Cir. 2001) 251 F3d 844, 848]

The law then goes on to provide for an Appraisal Subcommittee (under the authority of the Secretary of the Treasury) to carry out the purposes of the statute (12 USC §§ 3332 ff.); it also establishes various appraiser certification and licensing requirements and provides for the promulgation of appraisal standards (see 12 USC §§ 3336, 3340, 3345).

6. [6:695] Appraiser Liability for Erroneous Valuations: Appraisers who erroneously value a property may be liable to persons who suffer damages in reliance upon the valuation (e.g., lender finances a secured loan in reliance on adequacy of the secured property but subsequently discovers the property was overvalued and thus not sufficient recourse for the loan). [See Neu-Visions Sports, Inc. v. Soren/McAdam/Bartells (2000) 86 CA4th 303, 310, 103 CR2d 159, 163, fn. 3]

a. [6:696] Theories of liability: Like other professionals (attorneys, physicians, etc.), appraisers may be exposed to a variety of claims premised on distinct theories of liability—e.g., negligence in the performance of their duties, fraud/misrepresentation, breach of contract, etc.

(1) [6:697] Professional negligence/duty of care: Appraisers owe a duty to act with that degree of skill, prudence and diligence as real estate appraisers of ordinary skill and capacity commonly possess and exercise in the performance of the tasks they undertake. [See generally, Smith v. Lewis (1975) 13 C3d 349, 356, 188 CR 621, 625 (disapproved on other grounds by Marriage of Brown (1976) 15 C3d 838, 851, 126 CR 633, 641, fn. 14) (regarding professional's standard of care); and Budd v. Nixen (1971) 6 C3d 195, 200, 98 CR 849, 852 (superseded by statute on other grounds as stated in Adams v. Paul (1995) 11 C4th 583, 595, 46 CR2d 594, 602, fn. 1, see J. Kennard concur.opn.) (elements of tort cause of action for professional negligence)] A breach of that standard of care in the performance of their duty may thus give rise to liability predicated on professional negligence.

(a) [6:698] Threshold duty issue: As in any negligence action, plaintiffs proceeding on a theory of professional negligence must meet the threshold burden of establishing that the defendant appraiser owed them a duty of care in making the appraisal. [Nymark v. Heart Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1991) 231 CA3d 1089, 1096, 283 CR 53, 56]

1) [6:699] Lender's duty in appraisal process: As a general rule, a lender owes no duty of care to its borrower in appraising the borrower's collateral to determine if it is adequate security for the loan. "[W]hen the [financial] institution's involvement in the loan transaction does not exceed the scope of its conventional role as a mere lender of money," the institution owes no duty of care to the borrower. [Nymark v. Heart Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1991) 231 CA3d 1089, 1096, 283 CR 53, 56; see also Graham v. Bank of America, N.A. (2014) 226 CA4th 594, 607, 172 CR3d 218, 229—appraisal ordinarily is intended for lender's benefit, not to ensure borrower made "a good bargain"; Wagner v. Benson (1980) 101 CA3d 27, 35, 161 CR 516, 521—"Liability to a borrower for negligence arises only when the lender actively participates in the financed enterprise beyond the domain of the usual money lender" (internal quotes omitted)]

• [6:700] A lender that conducts an appraisal of its borrower's property in the usual course and scope of its loan processing procedures acts to protect its own (the lender's) interest by satisfying itself that the property provides adequate security for the loan. Absent facts indicating the appraisal was intended to induce the borrower to enter into the loan transaction or to assure the borrower that their collateral was sound, the lender owes the borrower no duty of care in preparing the property appraisal and, thus, cannot incur professional negligence liability to the borrower for an erroneous appraisal. [Nymark v. Heart Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1991) 231 CA3d 1089, 1096-1097, 1099-1100, 283 CR 53, 57, 58-59—lender who prepared appraisal to determine adequacy of security for loan not liable to borrower who suffered loss in purported reliance on appraisal that erroneously indicated borrower's property was of "A+ quality" and structurally sound; see also Graham v. Bank of America, N.A. (2014) 226 CA4th 594, 606-607, 172 CR3d 218, 228-229 (borrower's action against lender for fraud dismissed)—statements in appraisal indicating, among other things, that FMV of borrower's home was "ever-increasing" and loan was "good" for borrower were not facts, but rather statements of opinion or predictions of future events made for lender's benefit, and thus not actionable; Cansino v. Bank of America (2014) 224 CA4th 1462, 1469, 169 CR3d 619, 626 (fact pattern similar to Graham)—appraisal's future appreciation representations were mere opinions, not actionable misrepresentations]

2) [6:701] Appraiser's duty in loan financing process: Similarly, an appraiser designated by a lender to value its borrower's collateral for financing purposes generally owes its duty of care to the lender, not to the borrower. Indeed, "[w]hether the lender conducts the appraisal in house or hires an outside appraiser, the considerations are the same. The appraisal ordered by the lender is for its own protections and the borrower has [their] own means of ascertaining the desirability of the property." [Willemsen v. Mitrosilis (2014) 230 CA4th 622, 629, 178 CR3d 735, 740 (noting borrower should know lender's appraisal is intended for lender's benefit, not to ensure success of borrower's investment); see also Tindell v. Murphy (2018) 22 CA5th 1239, 1253-1254, 232 CR3d 448, 459-460—lender's appraiser had no duty of care to borrowers for inaccurate property description as appraisal was intended to support lender's evaluation of collateral, not borrowers' decision whether to purchase property]

For example, an appraiser selected by the Veterans Administration to appraise property that is the subject of a veteran's application for a VA-guaranteed loan is not liable to the borrower for negligently undervaluing the property, as a result of which the borrower is rendered ineligible for a VA loan and must obtain conventional financing at a greater cost. [Gay v. Broder (1980) 109 CA3d 66, 75, 167 CR 123, 127]

The VA's statutory duty to appraise property that is the subject of a VA loan application (38 USC § 3710(b)(5)) is designed to protect the federal government from having to assume the responsibility of a guarantor because of inadequate security. Since the statute is directed at protecting the VA and not the loan applicant, the appraiser's duty of care extends only to the VA. Otherwise, "[c]oncern with the possibility of claims against him for refusing to set a value as high as the loan desired … would deter the appraiser from reporting to the [VA] his true opinion as to value and tend to cause him to breach his duty to the federal government. The policy considerations against the imposition of liability in the instant case are manifest." [Gay v. Broder, supra, 109 CA3d at 75, 167 CR at 127]

(b) [6:702] Accrual of cause of action: A professional negligence action against an appraiser is subject to the CCP § 339(1) two-year statute of limitations. The two-year period commences to run upon accrual of the cause of action; and the cause of action does not accrue until plaintiff both (i) sustains damage and (ii) discovers, or should discover, the negligence. [See generally, Budd v. Nixen (1971) 6 C3d 195, 203, 98 CR 849, 854 (superseded by statute on other grounds as stated in Adams v. Paul (1995) 11 C4th 583, 595, 46 CR2d 594, 602, fn. 1, see J. Kennard concur.opn.); and Slavin v. Trout (1993) 18 CA4th 1536, 1539-1540, 23 CR2d 219, 222 (lender's professional negligence action against appraiser who overvalued secured property)]

Speculative harm or the threat of future harm is not sufficient to create a cause of action. Notwithstanding discovery of the defendant's negligence, the two-year statute of limitations does not commence until plaintiff suffers "appreciable harm" as a result of the professional negligence. [Budd v. Nixen, supra, 6 C3d at 200, 98 CR at 852; Slavin v. Trout, supra, 18 CA4th at 1540, 23 CR2d at 222]

1) [6:703] Accrual triggered by recourse to security: A secured lender does not suffer actual and appreciable harm from reliance on an overvalued appraisal until resort to the inadequate security. Thus, the lender's professional negligence cause of action against the appraiser does not accrue—and the limitations period does not commence to run—until the lender acquires the property by foreclosure or power of sale (regardless of the date of its borrower's default). [See Slavin v. Trout (1993) 18 CA4th 1536, 1542-1543, 23 CR2d 219, 223-224]

[6:704] Reserved.

(2) [6:705] Negligent misrepresentation: Appraisers who erroneously value a property might be held liable on a theory of negligent misrepresentation. Appraisers clearly risk such liability to those with whom they directly contract to perform the appraisal, knowing they intend to rely on the appraisal report in conducting their affairs. In addition, however, appraisers may incur negligent misrepresentation liability to third persons.

(a) [6:705a] Framework for liability to third parties: An appraiser may be liable for negligent misrepresentation to third parties who justifiably rely on the appraisal report in a particular transaction or type of transaction which the appraiser intended to influence. [Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 C4th 370, 376, 11 CR2d 51, 53; Mariani v. Price Waterhouse (1999) 70 CA4th 685, 705, 82 CR2d 671, 683]

1) [6:705.1] Knowledge of plaintiff's specific identity not required: It need not be shown that the appraiser, when hired, knew the names or specific identities of the third parties. Liability may be imposed where the appraiser "knows with substantial certainty that plaintiff, or the particular class of persons to which plaintiff belongs, will rely on the representation in the course of the transaction." [Soderberg v. McKinney (1996) 44 CA4th 1760, 1768, 52 CR2d 635, 640, quoting Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 C4th 370, 414, 11 CR2d 51, 78 (emphasis added); see also Rest.2d Torts § 552, comm. "h"]

2) [6:705.2] Knowledge of precise transaction not required: Nor is it essential that the appraiser have contemplated the precise details of the transaction in which the appraiser's report ultimately will be used. Negligent misrepresentation liability may exist if the appraisal report was relied upon in the type of transaction the appraiser anticipated or in one substantially similar to it. [Soderberg v. McKinney (1996) 44 CA4th 1760, 1769, 52 CR2d 635, 641, citing Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 C4th 370, 392, 410, 11 CR2d 51, 64, 75; see also Rest.2d Torts § 552, comm. "j"]

3) [6:705.3] Direct transmittal from appraiser to plaintiff not required: Further, the appraiser need not be the one who transmitted their report to the third persons. Appraisers may be liable if they knew their client would forward the report to a particular class of persons. [Soderberg v. McKinney (1996) 44 CA4th 1760, 1771, 52 CR2d 635, 642, citing Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 C4th 370, 392-393, 414, 11 CR2d 51, 64, 78-79]

4) [6:705.4] Compare—no liability if appraiser ignorant of appraisal's intended purpose/use: On the other hand, there can be no appraiser liability to third persons where there is no evidence indicating the appraiser knew what purpose their report was intended to serve and thus no evidence that the appraiser knew any class of third persons would rely on it. Liability is "restricted to those to whom or for whom the misrepresentations were made." [Soderberg v. McKinney (1996) 44 CA4th 1760, 1770, 52 CR2d 635, 641, quoting Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 C4th 370,

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

408, 414-415, 11 CR2d 51, 74, 79—absent competent evidence that professional supplied report "with knowledge of the existence of a specific transaction or a well-defined type of transaction which the report was intended to influence, … summary adjudication [in favor of professional] will be appropriate because plaintiff will not, as a matter of law, fall within the class of intended beneficiaries"]

(b) [6:705.5] Example: Mortgage Broker solicited Third Party to invest in a second trust deed on residential property that had been valued at $670,000. Third Party verbally committed $50,000 pending receipt of an appraisal report. Mortgage Broker contracted with Appraiser to conduct the appraisal; Appraiser's report confirmed a $670,000 value and, in reliance thereon, Third Party invested the $50,000 and solicited others to contribute another $25,000. When Borrowers defaulted on the first and second deeds of trust, plaintiff investors learned the true value of the property was between $450,000 and $500,000, leaving insufficient equity to protect their investments. Their suit against Appraiser for negligent misrepresentation followed.

Summary judgment for Appraiser on the ground he did not know plaintiffs' names or specific identities until after they had relied on his report and invested in the loan (and thus owed them no duty of care) was reversed on appeal. Appraiser had performed some 200 appraisals for Mortgage Broker prior to this transaction and knew Mortgage Broker had always sent the appraisal reports to potential investors. Appraiser admittedly also knew Mortgage Broker was in the business of connecting potential borrowers using real property as security with investors who have ready cash.

"Based on this record, [Appraiser] did not establish as a matter of law that he believed the appraisal would be used solely by [Mortgage Broker]. Rather … [Appraiser] knew that a particular group or class of persons to which plaintiffs belonged—potential investors contacted by [Mortgage Broker]—would rely on his report in the course of a specific type of transaction he contemplated—investing in a deed of trust secured by the appraised property … [D]isputed issues of material fact concerning the intended beneficiaries of the appraisal and the circumstances of the transaction precluded summary adjudication [in Appraiser's favor on the negligent misrepresentation claim]." [Soderberg v. McKinney (1996) 44 CA4th 1760, 1771-1772, 52 CR2d 635, 642-643 (emphasis added)]

(c) [6:705.6] Comment re prior case law: Case law predating Soderberg, supra, states that, as a prerequisite to liability, the appraiser must have known the specific individual investor, and that no negligent misrepresentation liability can run to "unspecified strangers." [See Christiansen v. Roddy (1986) 186 CA3d 780, 786, 231 CR 72, 76]

However, Christiansen also predated Bily, wherein the Cal. Supreme Court clarified that a professional supplier of information need not know the third party's name or specific identity and that, for negligent misrepresentation liability purposes, it is sufficient that the third party belongs to a particular group or class which the information was intended to benefit (Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 C4th 370, 392-393, 11 CR2d 51, 64). Although the Cal. Supreme Court has not had occasion to overrule Christiansen (the Bily facts concerned accountants' liability), Soderberg notes there is no reason why Bily should not be extended to all groups of information-supplying professionals and, therefore, logically concludes that conflicting language in Christiansen "is no longer good law." [Soderberg v. McKinney (1996) 44 CA4th 1760, 1770, 52 CR2d 635, 641-642]

By the same token, the result in Christiansen probably would be the same even under the Bily standards:

• [6:705.7] Appraiser, hired by a mortgage company to value a borrower's proposed collateral for a loan but who grossly overvalued the property, could not be held liable on a theory of negligent misrepresentation to third party investors who "bought into" the loan on recommendation of an investment counselor who worked for the mortgage company. Appraiser performed his services for the borrower and the mortgage company—not for the third party investors; there was no evidence Appraiser knew his report would be used by third party investors (let alone these particular third party plaintiffs) and no indication he was aware that any of them were considering loaning money secured by the subject property until he was served in the lawsuit. [Christiansen v. Roddy (1986) 186 CA3d 780, 787-788, 231 CR 72, 77; see Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 C4th 370, 408, 11 CR2d 51, 74—citing Christiansen with approval for proposition that liability is limited to those to whom or for whom professional's misrepresentations were made]

(3) [6:706] Mortgage loan broker's liability for appraiser's negligent valuation: A mortgage loan broker owes a fiduciary duty of the "highest good faith" toward its principal and is charged with a duty of "fullest disclosure of all material facts concerning the transaction that might affect the principal's decision." This includes a duty to provide prospective lenders with an estimate of the fair market value of the secured property. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10232.5(a)(2); see also Fin.C.

§ 50701(d) (same re residential mortgage lenders, ¶ 6:167.7); Wyatt v. Union Mortgage Co. (1979) 24 C3d 773, 782, 157 CR 392, 397; Barry v. Raskov (1991) 232 CA3d 447, 455-457, 283 CR 463, 467-468]

(a) [6:706.1] To whom duty owed: A mortgage loan broker's fiduciary duties run both to the borrower and to third party investors who "buy into" the loan. [Barry v. Raskov (1991) 232 CA3d 447, 455, 283 CR 463, 467]

(b) [6:706.2] Nondelegable duty: Mortgage loan brokers (like any fiduciary) cannot delegate their fiduciary duties to someone else. "To hold otherwise would allow mortgage loan brokers to evade their responsibilities by simply allocating them among numerous unlicensed independent contractors … This would subvert the real estate law's purpose to upgrade the standards of the real estate profession, which includes mortgage loan brokers …, and to provide protection to the consuming public." [Barry v. Raskov (1991) 232 CA3d 447, 455-456, 283 CR 463, 467-468]

1) [6:706.3] Use of licensed appraiser's report: Notwithstanding their nondelegable fiduciary duty as set forth at ¶ 6:706 ff., brokers who engage the services of a licensed real estate appraiser for the loan transaction and deliver the resulting appraisal report to the prospective lender and borrower are, by statute, deemed to have satisfied their duty to provide an estimate of the fair market value of the property. A separate estimate of fair market value under Bus. & Prof.C. § 10232.5 need not be provided. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10232.6(a)]

2) [6:706.4] Negligence liability despite use of licensed appraiser's report: Ordinarily, one who hires an independent contractor to perform the hirer's nondelegable duty is liable for the independent contractor's tortious acts or omissions in the discharge of that duty. This principle would ordinarily support a rule of vicarious liability for the negligence of an independent property appraiser employed by a mortgage loan broker to appraise property that will be used to secure a loan. [Barry v. Raskov (1991) 232 CA3d 447, 454-457, 283 CR 463, 466-468]

The vicarious liability rule has seemingly been changed by Bus. & Prof.C. § 10232.6(a), providing that mortgage loan brokers meet their obligation to provide lenders with a fair value estimate of the secured property by furnishing an appraisal prepared by a licensed appraiser (¶ 6:706.3). However, the statute also carves out circumstances wherein the loan broker may nonetheless incur liability based on a negligent independent appraisal:

a) [6:706.5] Appraisal by broker's employee: Bus. & Prof.C. § 10232.6 does not apply where the licensed appraiser is an employee of the broker. (This apparently recognizes that a loan broker may be held vicariously liable for its employee-appraiser's negligent appraisal under normal respondeat superior principles applicable in any employer-employee relationship.) [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10232.6(b)]

b) [6:706.6] Negligent referral or inaccurate appraisal known to broker: The broker's duty to disclose estimated fair market value "shall not be deemed met" where the broker knew or should have known the referral to the appraiser was negligently made or that the fair market value provided by the appraiser was inaccurate. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10232.6(b) (emphasis added)]

c) [6:706.7] Facts affecting value known to broker: Brokers cannot hide behind a licensed appraiser's report to justify withholding known facts affecting the property's value. Nothing in Bus. & Prof.C. § 10232.6 relieves the broker "of any obligation or requirement to disclose what they know about the value of the property." [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10232.6(c)]

d) [6:706.8] Real estate broker disclosure duties unaffected: Bus. & Prof.C. § 10232.6 applies only to loan transactions. Despite a proper referral to a licensed appraiser and use of the appraiser's report in performing duties as a mortgage loan broker, real estate brokers remain subject to their ordinary duties of disclosure in purchase and sales transactions. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10232.6(d)]

b. [6:707] Measure of damages; punitive damages: Appraiser liability predicated on tort causes of action (negligence, fraud, etc.) generally is subject to the Civ.C. § 3333 tort measure of damages ("except where otherwise expressly provided by this code, … the amount which will compensate for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, whether it could have been anticipated or not"). [See Foggy v. Ralph F. Clark & Assocs., Inc. (1987) 192 CA3d 1204, 1214-1217, 238 CR 130, 137-138—lenders who prevailed in action alleging negligence or fraud of real estate appraisers caused them to enter into loan agreement were entitled to all consequential damages (pursuant to Civ.C. § 3333), including expenses incurred in keeping first loan current, paying property taxes, and maintaining and insuring the property]

Moreover, where the liability rests on a tort theory (rather than breach of contract), punitive damages may be recoverable upon proof by "clear and convincing evidence" that the appraiser acted with "oppression, fraud or malice" (Civ.C. § 3294). [Foggy v. Ralph F. Clark & Assocs., Inc., supra, 192 CA3d at 1214, 238 CR at 137—court erred in omitting requested punitives instruction since plaintiffs proceeded on tort (rather than contract) causes of action; compare Barry v. Raskov (1991) 232 CA3d 447, 457-458, 283 CR 463, 469—punitives instruction properly denied in action against mortgage loan broker for its appraiser's negligence because no "clear and convincing" evidence that appraiser (or any other employee of broker) was guilty of Civ.C. § 3294 "fraud" or that broker was aware of appraiser's "unfitness" or ratified his conduct as required by Civ.C. § 3294(b)]

[6:708 - 6:709] Reserved.

7. [6:710] Unlawful Influence of Property Valuations/Appraisals: No person with an interest in a real estate transaction involving a valuation may "improperly influence, or attempt to improperly influence, the development, reporting, result, or review of that valuation, through coercion, extortion, bribery, intimidation, compensation, or instruction." [Civ.C. § 1090.5(a); see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 11345.4 (applying similar proscriptions to appraisal management companies attempting to improperly influence appraisals)]

A valuation is defined as "an estimate of the value of real property in written or electronic form, other than one produced solely by an automated valuation model or system." [Civ.C. § 1090.5(a)]

a. [6:710.1] Prohibited acts: Prohibited acts include, but are not limited to:

— Seeking to influence a valuation preparer to report a minimum or maximum value for specified property;

— Requesting a preliminary estimate or opinion of value prior to entering into a contract for valuation services;

— Conditioning a person's employment based on an expectation of the value conclusion they are likely to return;

— Conditioning a person's compensation on the value conclusion they return;

— Providing an anticipated, estimated, encouraged or desired valuation to a person prior to their completion of a valuation;

— Withholding/threatening to withhold timely payment to a valuation preparer or the person/entity that provides valuation management functions because they do not return a value at or above a certain amount;

— Implying to a valuation preparer that their current or future retention depends on their estimate of a real property's value;

— Excluding a valuation preparer from consideration for future engagement because they report a value that does not meet or exceed a predetermined threshold;

— Conditioning the compensation paid to a valuation preparer on consummation of the real estate transaction for which the valuation is prepared;

— Requesting the payment of compensation to achieve higher priority in the assignment of valuation business. [Civ.C. § 1090.5(a); see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 11345.4(a)-(f) (parallel statute applicable to appraisal management companies attempting to improperly influence appraisers)]

b. [6:711] Cross-licensing/registration violations: Anyone licensed or registered under any state licensing or registration law who violates Civ.C. § 1090.5 while performing that person's professional duties is deemed to have violated the specific law under which that person is licensed or registered. [Civ.C. § 1090.5(c)] (Apparently, therefore, the person in turn will be subject to the disciplinary provisions, license or registration suspension/revocation provisions, and penalty provisions of that particular licensing/registration law.)

c. [6:712] Permitted activities: Persons interested in a particular real estate transaction are not prohibited from doing any of the following:

— Asking a valuation preparer to consider additional, appropriate property information, including information about comparable properties;

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

— Asking a valuation preparer to provide further detail, substantiation or explanation for the person's value conclusion;

— Asking a valuation preparer to correct errors in the valuation report;

— Obtaining multiple valuations for purposes of selecting the most reliable valuation;

— Withholding compensation due to breach of contract or substandard performance of services;

— Providing a copy of the sales contract in connection with a purchase transaction. [Civ.C. § 1090.5(b); see also Bus. & Prof.C. § 11345.4(g) (parallel statute applicable to appraisal management companies)]

[6:713 - 6:720] Reserved.

8. [6:721] Unlawful discrimination in performing appraisals: It is unlawful for any person or entity whose business includes performing (or making available) residential real property appraisals to discriminate against any person because of their race, color, religion, sex, gender, gender identity, gender expression, sexual orientation, family status, source of income, disability, genetic information, veteran or military status, or national origin. [Gov.C. § 12955(i)(2)]

Likewise, licensed appraisers may not base their analysis or opinion of value on such attributes of either the present or prospective owners, occupants or neighbors of a subject property, or on any other basis prohibited by the federal Fair Housing Act. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 11424]

If Lender requests, it shall have received a list of names and address of all material dealers, laborers and subcontractors with whom agreements have been made by the general contractor and/or Borrower to deliver materials and/or perform work on the improvements. Such list shall include an estimate of the dollar value of the work and materials to be performed and/or delivered and if work is in progress, the amount still owing.

5.2.3. Upon completion of the foundations, title insurer has issued its foundation endorsement assuring Lender that the foundation is constructed wholly within the boundaries of the property and does not encroach on any easements.

5.2.4. The representations and warranties of Borrower made in Section 7 hereof shall be true and correct on and as of date of each disbursement with the same effect as if made on such date.

5.2.5. The improvements shall not have been materially injured or damaged by fire or other casualty unless Lender shall have received insurance proceeds sufficient in its judgment to effect the satisfactory restoration of the improvements and to permit the completion thereon within a reasonable time.

5.3. Prior to the final disbursement, at Lender's sole option, the conditions set forth in paragraph 5.2 shall be satisfied and in addition, the following conditions shall have been satisfied by Lender's receipt of:

5.3.1. Advice from Lender's inspection department to the effect that the improvements have been completed in accordance with the plans and specifications and in a workmanlike manner.

Subject to the provisions of this Agreement, the final disbursement shall be made only after Borrower has satisfied the conditions of paragraph 5.3 hereof and delivered or caused to be delivered to Lender in addition to those required under paragraph 8.3 hereof, such additional indorsements or such additional policies of title insurance with indorsements thereto as Lender may require, with a liability limit of not less than the principal amount of the Note, issued by the title insurer, with coverage and in form satisfactory to Lender, insuring Lender's interest under the Deed of Trust as a first lien on the property, excepting only such items as shall have been approved in writing by Lender. However, Lender may withhold the final disbursement until Borrower has furnished Lender with the written approval of such final disbursement by the title insurer and the surety on any bond required by Lender.

5.3.4. Evidence of approval of completion of the improvements by governmental bodies, FHA, VA, HUD, or other guarantor or purchaser and tenants under major leases as such approvals are deemed appropriate by Lender.

5.3.5. If tenant improvements are to be installed by Borrower, Lender shall have segregated sufficient funds, in Lender's judgment, from the loans in process account to pay such tenant improvements.

6. LOAN DISBURSEMENT: Provided Borrower is not in default, the loan and Borrower's funds credited in the loans in process account including the proceeds of the noncash items referred to in paragraph 16.1 hereof shall be disbursed as follows:

6.1. Initial Disbursements: Immediately following recordation and upon satisfaction of the conditions of paragraph 5.1 hereof, Lender shall disburse the amounts necessary to pay all costs, charges and expenses incurred or to be incurred (as estimated and approved by Lender) in connection with the loan or payable pursuant to this Agreement, the Deed of Trust or security agreements, excluding direct costs of labor and materials related to the improvements, and including but not limited to loan fees (which are deemed earned at recordation and are not refundable in whole or in part), trustee's fees, service charges, title charges, tax and lien service charges, recordation fees, escrow fees, appraisal fees, real property taxes and assessments, insurance premiums, any amount required to pay existing encumbrances affecting the property and amounts required to complete the purchase of the property.

6.2. Subsequent Disbursements: Upon satisfaction of the conditions of paragraph 5.2 hereof, Lender shall disburse such sums as required for the payment of costs and expenses of construction of the improvements and costs incidental thereto which are described in the construction cost breakdown and interest payments as they become due under the loan if an interest reserve has been established. Such disbursements shall be made in accordance with the applicable provisions of Exhibit A. The disbursed funds shall be used for the payment of those items contemplated by the particular cost item or otherwise as approved by Lender. However, any funds remaining after the particular cost item is complete and paid shall constitute a cash reserve for payment of unforeseen contingencies and shall be disbursed in payment of such other items as Lender in its discretion deems appropriate which are not provided for herein or otherwise approved by Lender.

6.3. Disbursement of Borrower's Funds: Borrower's funds including the proceeds of the noncash items referred to in paragraph 16.1 hereof shall, at the option of Lender, be disbursed before the loan proceeds in the loan in process account are disbursed. Lender reserves the right to draw upon and convert into cash, at any time, all or any part of the noncash items referred to in paragraph 16.1 hereof in the event Lender in its sole judgment determines that to do so is necessary to protect the security for the loan.

6.4. Anything contained herein to the contrary notwithstanding, in the event the Deed of Trust is recorded after the work of construction has commenced, thus causing a potential loss of priority of said Deed of Trust with respect mechanic's or materialmen's liens hereafter claimed, or if possible loss of partial priority is apparent with respect to any disbursements to be made hereunder, Lender shall be obligated to disburse the construction fund only upon first having been furnished with title insurance coverage acceptable to Lender. Lender shall have the absolute obligation to disburse portions of the construction fund to the extent that such disbursements are covered by such title insurance, and provided neither Borrower nor general contractor is in default under the terms of this Agreement, the Note, the Deed of Trust or the security agreements.

6.4.1. Borrower agrees that regardless of the method of disbursement in effect hereunder Lender shall be furnished with CLTA Indorsement No. 102.5 or 102.7 by the title insurer as soon as the foundation has been completed. If, for any reason said indorsement is not available, Lender may withhold all undisbursed funds until the indorsement is issued. If the project to be constructed consists of separate structures, funds for payment for separate foundations shall be disbursed from time to time as foundations are completed. Such disbursements shall be made in conformance with Exhibit "A" and shall only be made after such completion is verified by Lender's inspections and the furnishing to Lender of CLTA Indorsement No. 102.5 or 102.7 issued by the title insurer as each increment of foundation is completed.

6.4.2. Final Disbursement.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

A. Subject to the provisions of subparagraph 6.4.2B below, if applicable, the remaining balance of the construction fund with the exception of any undisbursed funds retained for payment of interest shall be disbursed to pay final costs of construction. When the improvements have been substantially completed and Borrower or general contractor has deposited with Lender an affidavit stating that all bills for labor and/or materials used in or related to construction of the improvements have been paid or ordered to be paid as hereinbefore provided (and has submitted proof which, in the sole judgment of Lender, establishes that the amount available for construction has been used for the direct cost of completion of the improvements), any balance of the construction fund remaining after payment of construction costs in full shall either be applied as a credit to the loan balance, applied as additional interest reserve, or paid to Borrower or to the general contractor at the option of Lender.

B. [Disregard if not applicable.] Installation of carpet or tenant improvements provided for in the plans is not required for substantial completion. At the time for final disbursement under the provisions of paragraph 6.4.2A hereof, any balance of the amount allocated for carpets or tenant improvements as installed, provided that if installation of carpets and/or tenant improvements as to any part of the project is not completed within 90 days from the completion of such part, Lender, at its option, may apply and credit the amount withheld for such part to the loan balance. Delay or omission of installation shall not prevent or delay disbursement in accordance with the provisions of paragraph 6.4.2A, of such remaining balance.

6.5. Interest will be charged monthly on the first day of the month and shall be calculated on the aggregate amount of funds disbursed, with interest accruing from actual day of disbursement. Interest will be deducted from interest reserve account, if established, up to the amount of that account and shall be billed to Borrower thereafter. If no interest reserve is established, the interest billing shall be mailed to borrower directly and is due and payable upon receipt.

6.6. Disbursement Limit: Lender shall not be required to disburse an aggregate amount of the construction fund for labor furnished to and materials incorporated into the improvements during any stage of construction which exceeds the lesser of the value of such labor and materials or the amount allocated to that stage of construction. Lender shall not be required to disburse any amount which, in Lender's opinion, will reduce the loan in process account below that needed to pay for the labor and materials necessary to complete the improvements. If Borrower consists of more than one person or is a partnership or joint venture, Lender is authorized to make disbursements to any one of such persons or to any partner or joint venturer, at Lender's option.

6.7. At Lender's option, no disbursement shall be made to or for any city, county, public body or agency, irrigation, sewer or water district or company, gas and/or electric company, telephone company or any other person, entity or agency for the installation of any such utility or service unless and until the benefits of a corresponding reimbursement agreement shall have been assigned to Lender pursuant to the provisions of the Deed of Trust and such assignment has been accepted and approved by the reimbursing party. Such acceptance and approval shall include a statement by such party that the assignment is sufficient to entitle Lender to receive the monies deposited for such installation at the time or times and to the extent that Borrower would otherwise be entitled to reimbursement in the absence of such assignment.

7. REPRESENTATIONS AND WARRANTIES OF BORROWER: Borrower represents and warrants that:

7.1. If Corporation: If a corporation, it is duly organized and validly existing, in good standing under the laws of the state of its incorporation, is qualified to do business, and is in good standing in the state in which the property is situated with full power and authority to consummate the transactions contemplated hereby.

7.2. If Partnership: If a partnership, it is duly organized and validly existing.

7.3. If Trust: If a trust, it is duly organized and validly existing.

7.4. 7.5. Financial Statements: The financial statements heretofore delivered to Lender are true and correct in all respects, have been prepared in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles, fairly present the respective financial conditions reflected therein since their respective dates and no additional borrowings have been made by Borrower since the date thereof other than the borrowing contemplated hereby or approved by Lender.

7.6. Litigation: There are no actions, suits or proceedings pending, or to the knowledge of Borrower threatened against or affecting it, the property or guarantor, or involving the validity or enforceability of the Deed of Trust or the priority of the lien thereof, at law or in equity, or before or by any governmental authority or local authority. To the Borrower's knowledge it is not in default with respect to any order, writ, injunction, decree or demand of any court or any governmental authority.

7.7. No Breach: The consummation of the transaction hereby contemplated and performance of this Agreement, Deed of Trust and the security agreements will not result in any breach of, or constitute a default under any mortgage, deed of trust, lease, bank loan or security agreement, corporate charter, bylaws or other instrument to which the Borrower is a party or by which it may be bound or affected.

7.8. Utilities: All utility services necessary for the construction of the improvements and the operation thereof for their intended purpose are either available at the boundaries of the property or all necessary steps have been taken by Borrower and local authority to assure the complete construction and installation thereof, including water supply, storm and sanitary sewer facilities, gas, electric and telephone facilities.

7.9. Certified Invoice: Each certified invoice shall be true and accurate and the submission of same or the receipt of the funds so requested shall constitute a reaffirmation of the representations, warranties and covenants contained herein.

7.10. Other Liens: It has made no contract or arrangement of any kind, the performance of which by the other party thereto would give rise to a lien on the property, except for its arrangements with Borrower's architect, the general contractor or the major subcontractors if there is no general contractor.

7.11. Title: Borrower's title to the property is not subject to a vendor's lien.

7.12. Major Leases: All major leases, if any, are in full force and effect, there are no defaults under any of the provisions thereof, and all conditions to the effectiveness thereof required to be satisfied as of the date thereof have been satisfied.

7.13. No Default: There is no default on the part of Borrower under this Agreement, Note or Deed of Trust, and no event has occurred and is continuing which with notice or the passage of time or either would constitute a default under any thereof.

7.14. CC&Rs, Zoning: It has examined, is familiar with, and the improvement will in all respects conform to and comply with all covenants, conditions, restrictions, reservations and zoning ordinances affecting the property.

7.15. Other Financing: It has not received any financing for either the acquisition of the property or the construction and installation of the improvements except as has been specifically disclosed to and approved by Lender prior to recordation.

8. BORROWER'S COVENANTS: Borrower covenants and agrees until the full and final payment of the loan, unless Lender waives compliance in writing, that it will:

8.1. Borrower's Funds: At the time and in the amounts required by Lender, deposit Borrower's funds in the loan in process account. Borrower's funds shall be disbursed from such account in the manner provided in paragraph 6 herein. Should it appear at any time that the total funds then held by Lender are insufficient, in Lender's reasonable judgment, to provide the financing for the completion of the improvements, Borrower, within ten (10) days following receipt of written demand by Lender for additional funds, shall pay to Lender an amount equal to such deficiency as expressed in said demand for deposit in the loan in process account.

8.2. Improvements Inspection: Permit Lender, or its representatives, (and Lender shall have the right) to enter upon the property, inspect the improvements and all materials to be used in the construction thereof and to examine the plans and all detailed plans and shop drawings which are or may be kept at the construction site and will cooperate and cause the general contractor or, if none, the major subcontractors, to cooperate with Lender. Inspection by Lender of construction shall be for the purposes of protecting the security of the Lender and such inspection is in no way to be construed as a representation by Lender that there is a compliance with the plans or that the construction is free from faulty material or workmanship. Lender is not required to make inspections of said improvements and any inspection that may be made of the proposed building by Lender is made solely for the benefit and protection of the Lender, and the contractors and owners will not rely thereon but will make their own inspections during the course of the construction and if any labor or materials used therein, or any part thereof is not satisfactory to them, or if the contract is not complied with in any respect, they will immediately notify the Lender in writing.

8.3. Title Insurance: Deliver or cause to be delivered at recordation or within a reasonable time thereafter an ALTA LP-10 policy of title insurance or its equivalent, with a liability limit of not less than the face amount of the Note, issued by a title insurer acceptable to Lender, insuring Lender's interest under the Deed of Trust as a valid first lien on the property. Said policy shall contain only such exceptions from its coverage as shall have been approved in writing by Lender. After recordation, Borrower shall, at its own cost and expense, maintain the Deed of Trust as a first lien on the property and deliver or cause to be delivered to Lender from time to time such indorsements to said policy as Lender deems necessary to insure the priority of the Deed of Trust as a first lien on the property. Borrower shall furnish to the title insurer surveys and any other information required to enable it to issue such indorsements and policies.

8.4. Leases: Deliver to Lender an executed counterpart of all leases of the property whether executed before or after the date hereof.

8.5. Change Orders: Not permit the performance of any work pursuant to any change order which will result in a change in the general contract price in excess of the change order amount unless it shall have received the specific approval of Lender to such change order and provided that the additional funds necessary to pay for such change order are deposited in the loan in process account. 8.18. Approval: Borrower shall obtain and deliver to Lender evidence of the approval by the local board of fire underwriters or its equivalent and by all governmental authority of the improvements in their entirety for permanent occupancy to the extent any such approval is a condition of the lawful use and occupancy of the improvements.

10.3. Notwithstanding the exercise of either or both of the remedies described in paragraph 10.1 and 10.2 hereof, Lender may make any disbursements after the happening of any one or more of said events of default without thereby waiving its right to demand payment of the Note and without liability for making any other or further disbursements.

10.4. Proceed as authorized by law to satisfy the indebtedness of Borrower to Lender and, in that regard, Lender shall be entitled to all of the rights, privileges and benefits contained in the Deed of Trust, security agreements or other loan documents.

11.7. To prosecute and defend all actions and proceedings in connection with the construction of the improvements.

11.8. As Lender in its sole discretion deems proper, to execute, acknowledge and deliver all instruments and documents in the name of Borrower which may be necessary or desirable to do and to do any and every act with respect to the construction of the improvements which Borrower might do on his own behalf. This power of attorney is a power coupled with an interest and cannot be revoked.

12. DISCLAIMER: WHETHER OR NOT LENDER ELECTS TO EMPLOY ANY OR ALL OF THE REMEDIES AVAILABLE TO IT IN THE EVENT OF DEFAULT, LENDER SHALL NOT BE LIABLE FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OF OR FAILURE TO CONSTRUCT OR COMPLETE OR PROTECT THE IMPROVEMENTS OR FOR PAYMENT OF ANY EXPENSE INCURRED IN CONNECTION WITH THE EXERCISE OF ANY REMEDY AVAILABLE TO LENDER OR FOR THE CONSTRUCTION OR COMPLETION OF THE IMPROVEMENTS OR FOR THE PERFORMANCE OR NONPERFORMANCE OF ANY OTHER OBLIGATION OF BORROWER.

14. MISCELLANEOUS

14.1. Limitation of Starts: In a tract development Lender may from time to time limit the number of construction starts, if, in its sole discretion, based on then current market conditions, it is determined that it is not economically feasible to proceed with a greater number of starts at that time. If, in the sole discretion of Lender, no further starts are authorized, Lender may discharge any and all of its obligations under this Agreement by crediting the balance of the construction fund to the loan thereby reducing the principal balance thereof by such amount. Any guaranty written in connection with the completion of the improvements shall be divisible and limited as to each phase as groups of starts are authorized. At such time as a new group of starts is authorized said guaranty shall cover that phase to the same extent and with the same effect as if a separate and distinct guaranty agreement were then executed at the inception of the construction of the new group starts. 15. GENERAL CONDITIONS:

15.1. No Waiver: No delay or omission of Lender in exercising any right or power arising from any default by Borrower shall be construed as a waiver of such default or as an acquiescence therein, nor shall any single or partial exercise thereof preclude any further exercise thereof. Lender may, at its option, waive any of the conditions herein and any such waiver shall not be deemed a waiver of Lender's rights hereunder but shall be deemed to have been made in pursuance of this Agreement and not in modification thereof. In the case of service by mail it shall be deemed complete at the expiration of the second day after the date of mailing. 15.13. Governmental Regulations: If payment of the indebtedness secured by the Deed of Trust is to be insured or guaranteed by any governmental agency, Borrower shall comply with all rules, regulations, requirements and statutes relating thereto or provided in any commitment issued by any such agency to insure or guarantee payment of such indebtedness.

15.14. Collection Costs: Borrower shall pay promptly to Lender without demand, with interest thereon from date of expenditure at the rate specified in the Note, reasonable attorney fees and costs and other expenses paid or incurred by Lender in enforcing or exercising its rights or remedies created by, connected with or provided in this Agreement, and payment thereof shall be secured by the Deed of Trust and each of the security agreements.

4. Covenants of Borrower. Borrower covenants and agrees (a) that it will not further assign, encumber or suffer the assignment or encumbrance of any of the Contracts and Documents without the prior written consent of Lender, (b) that it will faithfully abide by, perform and discharge each and every obligation, covenant and agreement of Borrower under the Contracts and Documents, (c) that it will enforce or secure the performance of each and every obligation, covenant and agreement of the other parties to the Contracts and Documents, and (d) that it will not, without Lender's prior written consent, waive, modify, extend or in any way alter any of the terms of any of the Contracts and Documents or in any manner release or discharge any party thereto from the obligations, covenants and agreements of such party thereunder.

5. Limitation of Lender's Obligation. Nothing in this Assignment shall constitute an assumption of any obligation by Lender under any of the Contracts and Documents. Borrower shall continue to be liable for all obligations thereunder and hereby agrees to perform all such obligations, to comply with all terms and conditions of the Contracts and Documents, and to take such steps as may be necessary or appropriate to secure performance by all other parties thereto. Borrower shall defend, indemnify and hold Lender harmless from and against all losses, costs, liabilities and expenses, including without limitation attorneys' fees, arising from or related to any failure by Borrower to perform any obligation of Borrower under any of the Contracts and Documents.

6. Cure by Lender. At any time and from time to time, Lender shall have the right, but shall have no obligation, to take all actions that Lender may determine to be necessary or appropriate to cure any default under any of the Contracts and Documents and to protect the rights of Borrower or Lender thereunder, and may do so in Lender's name, in the name of Borrower or otherwise. If any such action taken by Lender shall prove to be inadequate or invalid in whole or in part, Lender shall incur no liability on account thereof, and Borrower hereby agrees to defend, indemnify and hold Lender harmless from and against all losses, costs, liabilities and expenses, including attorneys' fees, which Lender may incur or to which it may become subject in exercising any of its rights under this Assignment.

7. Lender's Rights and Remedies. Upon the occurrence of any event of default under any of the Loan Documents, irrespective of whether a notice of default has been given with respect to such event of default, and with or without bringing any action or proceeding, Lender may, at its option, succeed to and proceed to enforce all of the rights, interest and remedies of Borrower under the Contracts and Documents, amend, modify, cancel, terminate or replace the same, reassign Borrower's rights, title and interest therein to any other person, and exercise any and all other rights of Borrower under the Contracts and Documents, either in person or through an agent or receiver, without further notice to or consent by Borrower, and without regard to the adequacy of security for the indebtedness and obligations secured hereby or the availability of any other remedies. The exercise of any of the foregoing rights or remedies shall not cure or waive any default under any of the Loan Documents, nor waive, modify or affect any notice of default thereunder, nor invalidate any act done pursuant to any such notice. In addition to the rights and remedies of Lender as set forth in this Assignment, Lender shall be entitled to the benefit of all other rights and remedies set forth in the Loan Documents, at law or in equity.

8. Additional Instruments. With respect to both existing and further Contracts and Documents, Borrower hereby agrees to execute and deliver such additional assignments and other documents as Lender may reasonably request in order to implement the purpose and intent of this Assignment.

9. Miscellaneous. This Assignment shall inure to the benefit of and be binding upon the parties hereto and their respective heirs, legal representatives, successors and assigns. In any action or proceeding arising from or related to this Assignment, including without limitation, arbitration, the prevailing party shall be entitled to recover its costs and attorneys' fees. ALL-INCLUSIVE PROMISSORY NOTE
SECURED BY ALL-INCLUSIVE DEED OF TRUST

In installments as herein stated, for value received, the undersigned ("Maker") promises to pay to ___________ ("Payee"), or order, at ___________, the principal sum of ___________ ($________), with ___________ (____%) per annum; interest only payable in monthly installments of $________ on the ___ day of each calendar month, beginning on the $________ day of ___________, and continuing until ___________, on which day the entire balance of the unpaid principal with unpaid interest due thereon shall be due and payable. Should interest not be so paid, it shall thereafter bear like interest as the principal.

The original principal amount of this Note includes the unpaid principal balance of the promissory note(s) (collectively hereinafter referred to as the "Underlying Note") secured by a Deed of Trust, more particularly described as follows:

By Payee's acceptance of this Note, Payee covenants and agrees that, provided Maker is not delinquent or in default under the terms of this Note, Payee shall pay all installments of principal and interest which shall hereafter become due pursuant to the provisions of the Underlying Note as and when the same become due and payable. In the event Maker shall be delinquent or in default under the terms of this Note, Payee shall not be obligated to make any payments required by the terms of the Underlying Note until such delinquency or default is cured. In the event Payee fails to timely pay any installment of principal or interest on the Underlying Note at the time when Maker is not delinquent or in default hereunder, Maker may, at Maker's option, make such payments directly to the holder of such Underlying Note, in which event Maker shall be entitled to a credit against the next installment(s) of principal and interest due under the terms of this Note equal to the amount so paid and including, without limitation, any penalty, charge, and expense paid by Maker to the holder of the Underlying Note on account of Payee's failing to make such payment. The obligations of Payee hereunder shall terminate upon the earliest of (i) foreclosure of the lien of the All-inclusive Deed of Trust securing this Note or (ii) cancellation of this Note and reconveyance of the All-inclusive Deed of Trust securing same.

Should Maker be delinquent or in default under the terms of this Note and Payee consequently incurs any penalties, charges, or other expenses on account of the Underlying Note during the period of such delinquency or default, the amount of such penalties, charges, and expenses shall be immediately added to the principal amount of this Note and shall be immediately payable by Maker to Payee.

Notwithstanding anything to the contrary herein contained, the right of Maker to prepay all or any portion of the principal of this Note is limited to the same extent as any limitation exists in the right to prepay the principal of the Underlying Note. If any prepayments of principal of this Note shall, by reason of the application of any portion thereof by Payee to the prepayment of principal of the Underlying Note, constitute such prepayment for which the holders of the Underlying Note are entitled to receive a prepayment penalty or consideration, the amount of such prepayment penalty or consideration shall be paid by Maker to Payee upon demand, and any such amount shall not reduce the unpaid balance of principal or interest hereunder.

At any time when the total of the unpaid principal balance of this Note, accrued interest thereon, all other sums due pursuant to the terms hereof, and all sums advanced by Payee pursuant to the terms of the All-Inclusive Deed of Trust securing this Note, is equal to or less than the unpaid balance of principal and interest then due under the terms of the Underlying Note, Payee, at his option, shall cancel this Note and deliver same to Maker and execute a Request for Full Reconveyance of the Deed of Trust securing this Note.

Should default be made by Maker in payment of any installments of principal, interest, or any other sums due hereunder or in the All-Inclusive Deed of Trust securing this Note, the whole sum of principal and interest hereunder, shall become immediately due at the option of the holder of this Note.

Principal, interest and all other sums due hereunder are payable in lawful money of the United States.

Maker acknowledges that late payment to Payee will cause Payee to incur costs not contemplated by this loan. Such costs include, without limitation, processing and accounting charges. Therefore, if any installment is not received by Payee when due, Maker shall pay to Payee an additional sum of six percent (6%) of the overdue amount as a late charge. The parties agree that this late charge represents a reasonable sum considering all of these circumstances existing on the date of this Note and represents a fair and reasonable estimate of the costs that Payee will incur by reason of late payment. The parties further agree that proof of actual damages would be costly or inconvenient. Acceptance of any late charge shall not constitute a waiver of a default with respect to the overdue amount, and shall not prevent Payee from exercising any of the other rights and remedies available to Payee.

In the event of any default by Maker under this Note, the All-Inclusive Deed of Trust securing this Note, Maker shall pay, in addition to all principal and interest, all reasonable costs and attorneys' fees necessary to collect the obligation evidenced by this Note and the All-Inclusive Deed of Trust, whether or not suit be filed; plus the aggregate of all amounts theretofore paid by Payee pursuant to the terms of the All-Inclusive Deed of Trust for taxes, assessments, insurance premiums, delinquency charges, foreclosure costs, and any other sums advanced by the beneficiary of the All-Inclusive Deed of Trust pursuant to the terms thereof, to the extent the same were not previously repaid by Maker to Payee; plus the costs of foreclosure under the All-Inclusive Deed of Trust; plus attorneys' fees and costs incurred by Payee in enforcing payment of this Note or the All-Inclusive Deed of Trust including, but not limited to, all reasonable costs and fees incurred in order to obtain relief from any Federal Bankruptcy Court stay enjoining foreclosure.

This Note is secured by an All-Inclusive Deed of Trust given to ___________, a California corporation, as Trustee.

[Form 6:G] Promissory Note Secured by Deed of Trust (Complex)

ADJUSTABLE RATE PROMISSORY NOTE (SECURED BY DEED OF TRUST)

NOTICE TO BORROWER: THIS DOCUMENT CONTAINS PROVISIONS FOR A VARIABLE INTEREST RATE

$________ _____, California
____

FOR VALUE RECEIVED, ___________ ("Maker") promises to pay to ___________, or order ("Holder"), the principal sum of ___________ Dollars ($________), or so much thereof as may be advanced, together with interest on the unpaid principal from and after _____, ("Interest Commencement Date"), and all other sums as provided below.

1. Adjustable Interest Rate. Interest shall accrue on the unpaid principal at the Loan Rate (defined below). The Loan Rate shall be adjusted on the first day of the calendar month following the _____ month anniversary of the Interest Commencement Date and on each _____ month anniversary thereafter (the "Adjustment Dates"). "Loan Rate" is defined as and shall mean the interest rate which is _____ percent (____%) above the Prime Rate (defined below) in effect three (3) days prior to the date of the calculation of the Loan Rate. "Prime Rate" is defined as and shall mean the variable rate of interest per annum most recently announced by ___________ Bank, at its principal office in _____, _____ as its "prime rate," and which serves as a basis upon which effective rates of interest are calculated for loans making reference thereto. Interest shall be calculated on the basis of 1/360th of one year's interest at the applicable rate multiplied by the number of days for which interest is being calculated.

2. Payment of Principal and Interest.

(a) Interest Due on Interest Commencement Date. On the Interest Commencement Date, Maker shall pay to Holder an amount equal to the interest which shall accrue on the unpaid principal from the Interest Commencement Date through the last day of the calendar month in which the Interest Commencement Date occurs.

(b) Monthly Installments of Principal and Interest. Commencing on ___ 1, ___, Maker shall pay to Holder installments of principal and accrued interest on the first (1st) day of each calendar month during the term of this Adjustable Rate Promissory Note (Secured By Deed of Trust) (this "Promissory Note"). The installments of principal and accrued interest shall be paid in arrears, and, therefore, the first installment of principal and accrued interest due pursuant to this Paragraph 2(b) shall be paid for the calendar month following the calendar month in which the Interest Commencement Date occurs. Each installment of principal and accrued interest shall be in an amount which would enable Maker to repay the entire unpaid principal and interest at the then current Loan Rate in equal monthly installments over a period of _____ years.

(c) General Terms. Maker acknowledges that because the monthly installments of principal and accrued interest due under this Promissory Note are based on an amortization period which is longer than the term of this Promissory Note, the principal balance due on the Maturity Date (defined below) will be substantial. Any accrued interest not paid when due shall, at Holder's sole option, be added to the principal owing hereunder and thereafter earn like interest of principal and accrued interest as principal and otherwise be treated as principal hereunder. Each monthly installment of principal and accrued interest paid by Maker shall be credited first to expenses incurred by Holder in connection with this Promissory Note and/or the Deed of Trust (defined below), then to accrued interest, and finally to unpaid principal.

3. Method of Payment. All payments of principal, interest and other sums due hereunder shall be paid in lawful money of the United States to Holder at the following address: ___________, California _____ (or at such other place, and to such other holder of this Promissory Note, as Holder may designate in writing from time to time).

4. Maturity Date. Except as otherwise provided below in this Promissory Note, the maturity date ("Maturity Date") of this Promissory Note shall be ___________. Therefore, on the Maturity Date, Maker shall pay Holder any and all unpaid principal, accrued and unpaid interest and any other sums due under this Promissory Note.

5. Promissory Note Secured By Deed of Trust. This Promissory Note is secured by a deed of trust ("Deed of Trust") made of even date herewith by and between Maker, as trustor, and Holder, as beneficiary, encumbering that certain real property commonly known as ___________, California (the "Property").

6. Default and Acceleration. A default shall be deemed to occur if Maker (a) fails to pay any sum due under this Promissory Note, (b) fails to comply with any nonmonetary covenant under this Promissory Note, (c) fails to pay any sum due under the Deed of Trust, or (d) fails to comply with any non-monetary covenant under the Deed of Trust and such failure to comply with any non-monetary covenant under the Deed of Trust continues for more than thirty (30) days. Notwithstanding anything herein to the contrary, upon the occurrence of a default, Holder may elect, in its sole discretion, to accelerate the Maturity Date and declare the entire unpaid principal, accrued interest and other sums to be immediately due and payable.

7. Late Charge. If Maker fails to pay any amount due hereunder (including, without limitation, any monthly installment or the final installment of principal and interest due on the Maturity Date) within fifteen (15) days following the due date, Maker shall pay a late charge of five percent (5%) of the amount past due. Maker acknowledges and agrees that it would be extremely difficult or impracticable to fix the actual damages resulting from Maker's failure to pay amounts when due, and therefore, Maker shall pay such late charges not as a penalty, but for the purpose of defraying the expenses incident to handling amounts past due. Such late charges represent the reasonable estimate of the loss that may be sustained by Holder due to the failure of Maker to timely pay amounts due hereunder. The late charges shall be payable by Maker without prejudice to the rights of Holder to collect any other amounts to be paid under this Promissory Note (including, without limitation, interest at the Default Rate pursuant to Paragraph 9, below) the Deed of Trust, or to accelerate all sums due hereunder pursuant to Paragraph 6, above.

8. Due-on-Sale. If Maker sells, conveys, assigns or otherwise transfers (a) all or any part of the Property, (b) any interest in the Property, or (c) all or substantially all of the beneficial interest of Maker (which shall include, without limitation, a sale or other transfer of fifty percent (50%) or more of the shares of Maker if Maker is a corporation, and a sale or other transfer of fifty percent (50%) or more of the general partners' interests in Maker if Maker is a partnership), whether any such sale, conveyance, assignment or other transfer occurs directly or indirectly, voluntarily or involuntarily or by operation of law, without the prior written consent of Holder (which may be withheld in Holder's sole and absolute discretion), then Holder may elect, in its sole and absolute discretion, to accelerate the Maturity Date and declare the entire unpaid principal, accrued interest and other sums due hereunder to be immediately due and payable.

9. Default Interest Rate. Notwithstanding anything in this Promissory Note to the contrary, after the Maturity Date (regardless of whether the Maturity Date occurs by reason of acceleration pursuant to Paragraph 6 or 8, above, or in the ordinary course), interest shall accrue on the unpaid principal at the interest rate (the "Default Rate") equal to the lesser of (a) _____ percent (____%) above the Loan Rate, or (b) the maximum interest rate permissible by law. If the Maturity Date is accelerated pursuant to Paragraph 6, above, the unpaid principal shall accrue interest at the Default Rate only until the default is cured and the Deed of Trust is reinstated. Maker acknowledges and agrees that it would be extremely difficult or impractical to fix the actual damages resulting from Maker's failure to pay the principal, accrued interest and other sums due on the Maturity Date, and therefore Maker shall pay interest at the Default Rate not as a penalty, but for purposes of defraying the expenses incident to handling the past due principal, accrued interest and other sums due under this Promissory Note. Interest at the Default Rate represents the reasonable estimate of the loss that may be sustained by Holder due to the failure of Maker to pay the principal, accrued interest and other sums due on the Maturity Date. Interest at the Default Rate shall be payable by Maker without prejudice to the rights of Holder to collect any other amounts to be paid under this Promissory Note (including, without limitation, late charges pursuant to Paragraph 7, above) or the Deed of Trust.

10*. *Waivers. Maker, without affecting Maker's liability, waives all defenses available to Maker of diligence, presentment, protest and demand, and also notice of protest, demand, nonpayment, dishonor and maturity and consents to any extension of the time or terms of payment hereof, any and all renewals or extensions of the terms hereof, any release of all or any part of the security given for this Promissory Note, any acceptance of additional security of any kind and any release of any party liable under this Promissory Note. Any such renewals or extensions may be made without notice to Maker.

11*. *Cost of Collection. Maker agrees to pay all costs of collection, all costs of suit, foreclosure or other enforcement of this Promissory Note and/or the Deed of Trust and all costs in the event Holder is made a party to any litigation (including, without limitation, appellate and bankruptcy proceedings) because of the existence of this Promissory Note. For the purpose of this provision, “costs” shall include all reasonable attorneys' fees and costs, consultants' fees, experts' fees and the like.

12*. *Compliance With Usury Laws. It is the intent of Maker and Holder in the execution of this Promissory Note and the Deed of Trust to contract in strict compliance with the usury laws of the State of California governing the loan evidenced by this Promissory Note. In furtherance thereof, Maker and Holder stipulate and agree that none of the terms and provisions contained in this Promissory Note or in the Deed of Trust shall ever be construed to create a contract in violation of the usury laws of the State of California. Maker or any other party now or hereafter becoming liable for the payment of this Promissory Note shall never be required to pay interest on this Promissory Note at a rate in excess of the maximum interest that may be lawfully charged under the laws of the State of California, and the provisions of this Paragraph shall control over all other provisions hereof and any other instrument executed in connection herewith which may be in apparent conflict herewith. In the event any holder of this Promissory Note shall collect monies which are deemed to constitute interest which would otherwise increase the effective interest rate on this Promissory Note to a rate in excess of that permitted to be charged by the laws of the State of California, all such sums deemed to constitute interest in excess of the maximum rate shall, at the option of Holder, be credited to the payment of principal or returned to Maker.

13*. *Miscellaneous.

(a) Assignment. Holder may, at its sole option, assign this Promissory Note and/or designate any other person or entity as the holder hereof.

(b) No Modifications or Amendments; No Waiver. Except as specified herein, this Promissory Note may not be amended, modified or changed, nor shall any waiver of the provisions hereof be effective, except only by an instrument in writing signed by the party against whom enforcement of any waiver, amendment, change, modification or discharge is sought. Additionally, a waiver of any provision in one event shall not be construed as a waiver of any other provision at any time, as a continuing waiver, or as a waiver of such provision on a subsequent event.

(c) Severability. Any provision of this Promissory Note which shall be held by a court of competent jurisdiction to be invalid, void or illegal shall in no way affect, impair or invalidate any other provision or term hereof, and such other provisions or terms shall remain in full force and effect.

(d) Successors and Assigns. Whenever used herein, the terms “Holder” and “Maker” shall be deemed to include their respective heirs, personal representatives, successors and assigns.

(e) Choice of Law. This Promissory Note shall be subject to, governed by, construed, and enforced pursuant to the internal laws of the State of California applicable to instruments, persons and transactions having contacts and relationships solely within the State of California. In the event of any dispute or controversy arising under this Promissory Note, the parties mutually consent to the jurisdiction of the courts of the State of California.

(f) Remedies. The rights, powers and remedies of Holder permitted by law or contract or as set forth herein or in the Deed of Trust shall be cumulative and concurrent, and may be pursued singly, successively or together against Maker or the Property, in the sole discretion of Holder, and such rights, powers and remedies shall not be exhausted by any exercise thereof but may be exercised as often as occasion therefor shall occur. Additionally, the failure to exercise any such rights, powers and remedies or the acceptance by Holder of any payment hereunder which is less than payment in full shall not constitute a waiver of the right to exercise any of Holder's rights, powers or remedies at that time or any subsequent time.

(g) Notice. All notices to Maker shall be in writing and shall be given to Maker at the address set forth below by: (i) personal service (including service by overnight courier service regularly providing proof of delivery), or (ii) registered or certified, first class mail, return receipt requested. All notices by personal service shall be deemed given upon receipt, and all notices by registered or certified, first class mail, return receipt requested, shall be deemed given three (3) days after deposit in the U.S. Mail.

14. Prepayment of Promissory Note. Maker shall not have any right to prepay this Promissory Note except as set forth below in this Paragraph 14. Maker shall have the right to prepay this Promissory Note, in whole or in part, on any Adjustment Date by giving Holder thirty (30) days prior written notice (which notice shall include the amount to be prepaid). If Maker so prepays the Promissory Note, in whole or in part, on an Adjustment Date, Maker shall not be required to pay any prepayment premium therefor. Maker shall have the right to prepay this Promissory Note, in whole or in part, on a day other than an Adjustment Date upon (a) giving Maker thirty (30) days prior written notice (which notice shall include the amount to be prepaid), and (b) paying to Holder a prepayment premium equal to ___________. Any partial prepayment shall be applied to the principal installments due hereunder in their inverse order of maturity. MAKER ACKNOWLEDGES AND AGREES THAT MAKER HAS NO RIGHT TO PREPAY THIS PROMISSORY NOTE EXCEPT AS PROVIDED IN THIS PARAGRAPH 14. MAKER FURTHER ACKNOWLEDGES AND AGREES THAT IF THE MATURITY DATE IS ACCELERATED BY HOLDER PURSUANT TO PARAGRAPH 6 OR 8, ABOVE, AND MAKER OR ANY THIRD PERSON (INCLUDING, WITHOUT LIMITATION, A JUNIOR LIENHOLDER OF THE PROPERTY) THEREAFTER SEEKS TO PAY OFF SUCH ACCELERATED INDEBTEDNESS OR PURCHASE THE PROPERTY AT A FORECLOSURE SALE (WHETHER JUDICIAL OR NON-JUDICIAL), SUCH PAYOFF OR PURCHASE SHALL CONSTITUTE A PREPAYMENT HEREUNDER AND THE PREPAYMENT PREMIUM SET FORTH ABOVE SHALL BE DUE IN THE EVENT PREPAYMENT OCCURS ON A DATE OTHER THAN AN ADJUSTMENT DATE. BY INITIALING BELOW MAKER SPECIFICALLY ACKNOWLEDGES AND AGREES THAT MAKER SHALL PAY THE PREPAYMENT PREMIUM, EVEN IN THE CASE WHERE HOLDER HAS ACCELERATED THE MATURITY DATE PURSUANT TO PARAGRAPH 6 OR PARAGRAPH 8, ABOVE; THAT THE CALCULATION OF THE PREPAYMENT PREMIUM IS FAIR AND REASONABLE TO COMPENSATE HOLDER FOR THE LOSS WHICH HOLDER MAY INCUR AS A RESULT OF PREPAYMENT OF THIS PROMISSORY NOTE; THAT MAKER WAIVES ANY RIGHT MAKER MAY HAVE OR CLAIM TO HAVE UNDER CALIFORNIA CIVIL CODE SECTION 2954.10 OR ANY SUCCESSOR STATUTE; AND THAT HOLDER HAS MADE THE LOAN EVIDENCED BY THIS PROMISSORY NOTE IN RELIANCE ON THE AGREEMENTS AND WAIVERS OF MAKER IN THIS PARAGRAPH 14 AND HOLDER WOULD NOT HAVE MADE THE LOAN WITHOUT SUCH AGREEMENTS AND WAIVERS.

(ii) "Hazardous Substances" shall mean any hazardous or toxic substances, materials or wastes, pollutants or contaminants defined, listed or regulated by the Environmental Laws or any other federal, state or local law, regulation, order or common law decision.

(b) Trustor hereby represents and warrants to Beneficiary that neither Trustor, nor any agent, affiliate, tenant, partner or joint venturer of Trustor has actual knowledge or notice of the actual, alleged or threatened presence or release of Hazardous Substances in, on, around or potentially affecting any part of the Trust Estate or the soil, groundwater or soil vapor on or under the Trust Estate, except as has been expressly disclosed to Beneficiary in writing. Trustor has used its best efforts to investigate the presence of Hazardous Substances in, on, around or potentially affecting any part of the Trust Estate, and any potential environmental liability with respect to the Trust Estate for noncompliance with the Environmental Laws. Trustor shall perform regular environmental audits to determine if any Hazardous Substances are in, on, around or potentially affecting any part of the Trust Estate and investigate any potential environmental liability with respect to the Trust Estate for noncompliance with the Environmental Laws. Trustor has complied, and shall comply and cause all occupants of the Trust Estate to comply, with all Environmental Laws, including those requiring disclosures to prospective and actual buyers of all or any portion of the Trust Estate. Trustor also has complied and shall comply with the recommendations of any qualified environmental engineer or other expert which apply or pertain to the Trust Estate. Trustor shall promptly notify Beneficiary if it knows, suspects or believes there may be any Hazardous Substance in, around or potentially affecting the Trust Estate or the soil, groundwater or soil vapor on or under the Trust Estate, or that Trustor or the Trust Estate may be subject to any threatened or pending investigation by any governmental agency under any Environmental Laws.

(c) Beneficiary shall have the right at any reasonable time to enter and visit the Trust Estate for the purposes of observing the Trust Estate, taking and removing soil or groundwater samples, and conducting tests on any part of the Trust Estate. Beneficiary has no duty, however, to visit or observe the Trust Estate or to conduct tests, and no site visit, observation or testing by Beneficiary shall impose any liability on Beneficiary. In no event shall any site visit, observation or testing by Beneficiary be a representation that Hazardous Substances are or are not present in, on, under or around the Trust Estate, or that there has been or shall be compliance with any Environmental Laws. Neither Trustor nor any other party is entitled to rely on any site visit, observation or testing by Beneficiary. Beneficiary owes no duty of care to protect Trustor or any other party against, or to inform Trustor or any other party of, any Hazardous Substances or any other adverse condition affecting the Trust Estate. Beneficiary shall not be obligated to disclose to Trustor or any other party any report or findings made as a result of, or in connection with, any site visit, observation or testing by Beneficiary. Beneficiary shall make reasonable efforts to avoid interfering with Trustor's use of the Trust Estate in exercising any rights provided in this Section 2.2(c).

(d) In the event any or all of the representations contained in subsection (b), above, are or become untrue or Trustor defaults in or fails to perform or observe any of its obligations under this Section 2.2, Beneficiary, at its option, and without prior notice to or the right to cure by Trustor, may: (i) declare the Indebtedness immediately due and payable; (ii) require Trustor to promptly perform, at Trustor's sole cost and in accordance with applicable law, all Remedial Work (defined below) desired by Beneficiary; and (iii) cause a person other than Trustor to perform the Remedial Work, at Trustor's sole cost.

(e) All monitoring and investigation of site conditions, cleanup, containment, removal, restoration or other remedial work for the Trust Estate which is required by the Environmental Laws or reasonably requested by Beneficiary pursuant to this Section 2.2 is hereinafter referred to as the "Remedial Work." All Remedial Work shall be conducted: (i) in a diligent and timely manner by licensed contractors acting under the supervision of a consulting environmental engineer; (ii) pursuant to a detailed written plan approved by any public or private agencies or persons with the legal or contractual right to such approval; (iii) with such insurance coverage pertaining to liabilities arising out of the Remedial Work as is customarily maintained with respect to such activities; and (iv) only following receipt of any required permits, licenses, or approvals. The selection of the Remedial Work contractors and consulting environmental engineer, the contracts entered into with such parties, all disclosures to or agreements with any public or private agencies or parties relating to the Remedial Work and the written plan for the Remedial Work shall be subject to Beneficiary's prior written approval. In addition, Trustor shall submit to Beneficiary, promptly upon receipt or preparation, copies of any and all reports, studies, analyses, correspondence, governmental comments or approvals prepared or received by Trustor in connection with any Remedial Work. All costs and expenses of such Remedial Work shall be paid by Trustor, including, without limitation, the cost of the Remedial Work contractors and the consulting and environmental engineers, taxes and penalties assessed in connection with the Remedial Work and Beneficiary's reasonable fees and costs incurred in connection with monitoring and reviewing the Remedial Work. In the event Trustor shall fail to commence or cause to be commenced in a timely manner or fail diligently to prosecute the completion of such Remedial Work, Beneficiary may, but shall not be required to, cause such Remedial Work to be performed, and all costs incurred in connection therewith, together with interest at the Advance Interest Rate, shall be reimbursed by Trustor upon demand and shall be secured by this Deed of Trust.

2.3. Required Insurance.

(a) Trustor shall at all times provide and keep in force the following policies of insurance: (i) insurance covering the Improvements (exclusive of the excavations, grading, filling and foundations of buildings below the lowest basement floor) and Personal Property against all risks of physical loss (including, without limitation, fire, lightning, windstorm, hail, explosion, vandalism and civil unrest) in an amount not less than the full replacement cost of the Improvements and Personal Property (without deduction for depreciation); (ii) comprehensive public liability insurance covering Trustor against any and all liability in connection with the Trust Estate, the adjoining streets and sidewalks (including, but not limited to, construction operations coverage if any construction of new Improvements occurs following the execution of this Deed of Trust); (iii) if requested by Beneficiary, business interruption insurance and loss of “rental value” insurance in such amounts as are reasonably required by Beneficiary; (iv) during the course of any construction or repair of the Improvements, builder's risk completed value insurance against all risks of physical loss, including collapse and transit coverage, covering the total value of the work performed, plus equipment, supplies and materials; (v) boiler and machinery insurance covering pressure vessels, air tanks, boilers, machinery, pressure piping, heating, ventilation and air conditioning equipment, and elevator and escalator equipment, provided the Improvements contain equipment of such nature, and insurance against loss of occupancy or use arising from any breakdown of any such items, in such amounts as are reasonably required by Beneficiary; (vi) upon Beneficiary's written request, insurance against loss or damage by earthquake; (vii) flood insurance if all or any part of the Trust Estate is now or hereafter located in a special flood hazard area, as defined in the Flood Disaster Protection Act of 1973, as now in force or as hereafter amended, or any successor thereto or regulations thereunder, in compliance with all requirements of the National Flood Insurance Programs as applicable to the Trust Estate, in an amount approved by Beneficiary and by an insurance company or companies or governmental agency or instrumentality approved by Beneficiary; (viii) upon Beneficiary's written request, insurance against environmental impairment liability, as well as an environmental cleanup bond, valued at the principal sum of the Indebtedness; (ix) workers' compensation coverage and employee automobile coverage in an amount and form required by California law; and (x) Such other policies of insurance as may from time to time be reasonably required by Beneficiary. All policies of insurance required by this Deed of Trust shall contain an endorsement or agreement by the insurer that any loss shall be payable in accordance with the terms of such policy notwithstanding any act, omission or negligence of Trustor which might otherwise result in forfeiture of such insurance, and an endorsement that the insurer waives all rights of setoff, counterclaims or deductions against Trustor.

(b) All policies of insurance shall be issued by companies and in amounts reasonably satisfactory to Beneficiary. All liability policies (including those listed in clauses (a)(ii), (vii) and (ix), above) shall list Beneficiary as an additional insured, and all property policies (including those listed in clauses (a)(i), (iii), (iv), (v), (vi) and (vii), above) shall list Beneficiary as mortgagee and shall have attached thereto a lender's loss payable endorsement for the benefit of Beneficiary in form satisfactory to Beneficiary. Trustor shall furnish Beneficiary with an original of all policies of insurance required by this Deed of Trust. If Beneficiary consents to Trustor providing any of the required insurance through blanket policies carried by Trustor and covering more than one property, Trustor shall furnish Beneficiary with a certified copy of each such policy and a certificate of insurance for each such policy setting forth the coverage as to the Trust Estate, the limits of liability as to the Trust Estate, the name of the carrier, the policy number and the expiration date. At least thirty (30) days prior to the expiration of each insurance policy, Trustor shall furnish Beneficiary with evidence satisfactory to Beneficiary of the payment of the premium and arrangements for the reissuance of the policy continuing insurance in force as required by this Deed of Trust. All such policies shall contain a provision that such policies shall not be canceled or materially amended (which includes any reduction in the scope or limits of coverage), without at least thirty (30) days prior written notice to Beneficiary. If Trustor fails to provide, keep in force or deliver to Beneficiary the policies of insurance required by this Deed of Trust, Beneficiary may procure such insurance, and Trustor shall pay all premiums thereon promptly upon demand by Beneficiary, and until such payment is made by Trustor the amount of all such premiums, together with interest thereon at the Advance Interest Rate, shall be secured by this Deed of Trust.

(c) In the event of foreclosure of this Deed of Trust or other transfer of title or assignment of the Trust Estate in extinguishment, in whole or in part, of the Indebtedness, all right, title and interest of Trustor in and to all policies of insurance required by this Deed of Trust shall inure to the benefit of and pass to the successor in interest to Trustor, or the purchaser or grantee of the Trust Estate. In the event that prior to any such transfer of title, any claim under any casualty insurance policy has not been paid and distributed in accordance with the terms of this Deed of Trust, but such claim is paid after any such transfer of title, then, to the extent the Indebtedness was not fully discharged in conjunction with such transfer of title, the subject insurance proceeds shall belong to and be paid to Beneficiary. Trustor hereby assigns, transfers and sets over to Beneficiary all of its respective right, title, and interest in and to any such insurance proceeds. The balance of any such insurance proceeds, if any, shall belong to Trustor. Notwithstanding the above, Trustor shall retain an interest in the insurance policies required by this Deed of Trust during any redemption period.

2.4*. Insurance Proceeds.

(a) Following the occurrence of any casualty to the Trust Estate, Trustor shall give prompt written notice thereof to Beneficiary (but in no event shall Trustor give any such notice later than three (3) days following the date of the occurrence of the casualty). (b) In the event of any damage to or destruction of the Trust Estate, all proceeds of insurance shall be payable to Beneficiary, and Trustor hereby authorizes and directs any and all insurance companies to make payment of such proceeds directly to Beneficiary. Beneficiary is hereby authorized and empowered by Trustor to settle, adjust and compromise all claims for loss, damage or destruction under any policy of insurance. (c) In the event of any such damage or destruction, Beneficiary shall have the right, in its sole discretion, to apply all or any part of the insurance proceeds to (i) the Indebtedness (in such order as Beneficiary may determine), (ii) the restoration and/or replacement of the Trust Estate, or (iii) Trustor. (d) If the insurance proceeds are applied by Beneficiary to the restoration and/or replacement of the Trust Estate, Trustor shall restore, repair and replace the Trust Estate as nearly as possible to its value, condition and character immediately prior to such damage or destruction. Beneficiary shall have the right, at Beneficiary's option, to establish disbursement procedures and to condition disbursement of the insurance proceeds on Beneficiary's approval (in its sole discretion) of architects' and/or engineers' plans and specifications, contractors' cost estimates, architects' certificates, waivers of liens, sworn statements of contractors, mechanics and materialmen, and such other evidence of costs, completion of construction, application of payments, and satisfaction of liens as Beneficiary may require. (e) Except to the extent that insurance proceeds are received by Beneficiary and applied to the Indebtedness, nothing herein shall excuse Trustor from repairing or maintaining the Trust Estate as provided in Section 2.1, above, or restoring and/or replacing all damage to or destruction of the Trust Estate, regardless of whether insurance proceeds are available or sufficient in amount, and the application or release by Beneficiary of any insurance proceeds shall not cure or waive any default or notice of default under this Deed of Trust.

2.5*. Indemnification; Subrogation; Waiver of Offset.

(a) If Beneficiary is made a party to any action, cause of action, litigation or other proceeding (“action”) concerning this Deed of Trust or the Trust Estate or any part thereof or interest therein, or the use or occupancy thereof, then Trustor shall indemnify, protect, defend and hold harmless Beneficiary from and against any and all claims, demands, liability, losses, damages, costs and expenses (including attorneys' fees and costs) by reason of such action, whether or not any such action is prosecuted to judgment. If Beneficiary commences an action against Trustor to enforce this Deed of Trust or because of the breach by Trustor of this Deed of Trust, or for the recovery of the Indebtedness or any part thereof, Trustor shall pay Beneficiary's attorneys' fees and costs, and the right to such attorneys' fees and costs, shall be deemed to have accrued on the commencement of such action and shall be enforceable whether or not such action is prosecuted to judgment. If Trustor breaches any covenant or agreement in this Deed of Trust, Beneficiary may employ attorneys to protect its rights hereunder and, in the event of such employment following any breach by Trustor, Trustor shall pay Beneficiary's attorneys' fees and costs, whether or not an action is actually commenced against Trustor by reason of the breach.

(b) Trustor waives any and all right to claim or recover against Beneficiary, its directors, officers, employees, agents and representatives, for loss of or damage to Trustor, the Trust Estate, Trustor's property or the property of others under Trustor's control from any cause insured against or required to be insured against by this Deed of Trust.

(c) All sums payable by Trustor pursuant to this Deed of Trust shall be paid without notice, demand, counterclaim, setoff, deduction or defense and without abatement, suspension, deferment, diminution or reduction, and the obligations and liabilities of Trustor hereunder shall in no way be released, discharged or otherwise affected (except as expressly provided herein) by reason of: (i) any damage to or destruction or any condemnation or similar taking of the Trust Estate or any part thereof; (ii) any restriction or prevention of or interference with any use of the Trust Estate or any part thereof; (iii) any title defect or encumbrance or any eviction from the Trust Estate or any part thereof by title paramount or otherwise; (iv) any bankruptcy, insolvency, reorganization, composition, adjustment, dissolution, liquidation or other like proceeding relating to Trustor or Beneficiary, or any action taken with respect to this Deed of Trust by any trustee or receiver of Trustor or Beneficiary, or by any court, in any such proceeding; (v) any claim which Trustor has or might have against Beneficiary; (vi) any default or failure on the part of Beneficiary to perform or comply with any of the terms hereof or of any other agreement with Trustor; or (vii) any other occurrence whatsoever, whether similar or dissimilar to the foregoing, whether or not Trustor shall have notice or knowledge of any of the foregoing. Except as expressly provided herein, Trustor waives all rights now or hereafter conferred by statute or otherwise to any abatement, suspension, deferment, diminution or reduction of any sum secured by this Deed of Trust and payable by Trustor.

2.6*. Taxes, Assessments and Impositions.

(a) Trustor agrees to pay prior to the date when due all general, special and supplemental real property taxes and assessments, and all other taxes, assessments, fees, levies and charges of every kind and nature whatsoever, including, without limitation, all nongovernmental levies and assessments such as maintenance charges, owner association dues and charges, and assessments, fees, levies and charges resulting from covenants, conditions and restrictions affecting the Trust Estate, which are assessed against or imposed upon the Trust Estate, or become due and payable with respect to the Trust Estate, or which create or are secured by a lien upon the Trust Estate (all of such taxes, assessments, fees, levies and charges are hereinafter collectively referred to as “Impositions”). In the event Trustor fails to pay any Imposition as required by this Deed of Trust, Beneficiary may pay such Imposition, and Trustor shall pay the amount thereof to Beneficiary promptly upon demand by Beneficiary, and until such payment is made by Trustor the amount of such Imposition, together with interest thereon at the Advance Interest Rate, shall be secured by this Deed of Trust. Subject to the provisions of Section 2.6(c), below, Trustor shall provide to Beneficiary, within thirty (30) days following the date an Imposition is due, receipts evidencing the payment of such Imposition. Subject to the provisions of Section 2.6(c), below, Trustor shall provide to Beneficiary, within thirty (30) days following the date an Imposition is due, receipts evidencing the payment of such Imposition. If requested by Beneficiary, Trustor shall (at Trustor's cost) cause to be provided to Beneficiary a tax reporting service covering the Trust Estate of the type and duration and with a company satisfactory to Beneficiary.

(b) If at any time there is assessed or imposed any tax, assessment, levy or fee on Beneficiary and measured by or based in whole or in part on this Deed of Trust, the amount of the Indebtedness or upon the Trust Estate, then all such taxes, assessments, levies and fees shall be deemed to be included within the term “Impositions” as defined in subparagraph (a) of this Section 2.6 and Trustor shall pay and discharge the same as provided with respect to the payment of Impositions or, if it is unlawful for Trustor to pay any such tax, assessment, levy or fee, at the option of Beneficiary, the Indebtedness shall immediately become due and payable. If requested by Beneficiary, Trustor shall (at Trustor's cost) cause to be provided to Beneficiary a tax reporting service covering the Trust Estate of the type and duration and with a company satisfactory to Beneficiary.

(c) Trustor shall have the right before any delinquency occurs to contest in good faith the amount or validity of any Imposition by appropriate legal proceedings; provided, any such contest by Trustor shall not in any way release, modify or extend Trustee's obligation to pay an Imposition at the time and in the manner provided in this Section 2.9 unless Trustor gives prior written notice to Beneficiary of Trustor's intent to contest the Imposition, and, at Beneficiary's sole option, (i) Trustor demonstrates to Beneficiary's satisfaction that the contest proceedings shall conclusively operate to prevent the sale of the Trust Estate or to stay payment of the Imposition prior to final determination of the proceedings, (ii) Trustor furnishes a good and sufficient bond or other security for payment as requested by and satisfactory to Beneficiary, or (iii) Trustor furnishes a good and sufficient bond or undertaking as may be required or permitted by law to accomplish a stay of payment of the Imposition. At the conclusion of such proceedings, Trustor shall pay the Imposition as determined in such proceedings.

2.7. Impound Payments. At the request of Beneficiary, Trustor shall deposit with Beneficiary, in monthly installments in advance on the first day of each month, an amount sufficient, as estimated by Beneficiary in its sole discretion, to pay (a) all Impositions next due on the Trust Estate, and (b) all insurance premiums next due on all policies of insurance required by this Deed of Trust. In such event, Trustor agrees, upon Beneficiary's request, to cause all bills, statements and other documents relating to Impositions and the insurance premiums to be mailed directly to Beneficiary. Upon receipt of such bills, statements and other documents, and provided Trustor has deposited sufficient funds with Beneficiary, Beneficiary shall pay the amounts due thereunder from the funds deposited with Beneficiary. If at any time and for any reason the funds deposited with Beneficiary are or will be insufficient to pay the Impositions and insurance premiums as may then or subsequently be due, Beneficiary may notify Trustor and Trustor shall immediately deposit an amount equal to the deficiency with Beneficiary. If at any time the funds deposited with Beneficiary exceed the amount deemed necessary by Beneficiary to pay such Impositions and insurance premiums as may then or subsequently be due, such excess shall be credited to Trustor on the next monthly installment or installments of such Impositions and insurance premiums (unless Trustor is in default of this Deed of Trust or another Loan Document, in which event any such excess shall be applied to reduce the Indebtedness in such order as Beneficiary shall elect). Upon payment in full of the Indebtedness, Beneficiary shall promptly refund to Trustor any funds held by Beneficiary for the payment of Impositions and insurance premiums. Trustor grants to Beneficiary a security interest in all funds deposited with Beneficiary for the payment of Impositions and insurance premiums, and such funds are pledged by Trustor to Beneficiary for the purpose of securing the Indebtedness. Nothing herein shall cause Beneficiary to be deemed a trustee of such funds or to be obligated to pay any amounts in excess of the amount of funds deposited with Beneficiary. Beneficiary may commingle such deposits with its own funds and Trustor shall not be entitled to any interest on the funds deposited with Beneficiary.

2.8. Eminent Domain.

(a) If the Trust Estate, or any part thereof or interest therein, is taken or damaged by reason of any public improvement, condemnation proceeding, exercise of the power of eminent domain, or conveyance in lieu of condemnation (hereinafter collectively referred to as a “taking”), or if Trustor receives any notice or other information regarding any such taking, Trustor shall give prompt written notice thereof to Beneficiary.

(b) Beneficiary shall have the right to receive all compensation, awards, damages, proceeds and other payments for any such taking, and shall be entitled to commence, appear in and prosecute in its own name any action or proceeding at Trustor's sole cost. Beneficiary shall also have the right to make any compromise or settlement in connection with any such taking at Trustor's sole cost. Trustor hereby absolutely and unconditionally assigns to Beneficiary all such compensation, awards, damages, proceeds and other payments awarded to Trustor (the “Proceeds”) and Trustor agrees to execute all further assignments of the Proceeds which are requested by Beneficiary.

(c) In the event the Trust Estate, or any part thereof or interest therein, is taken, Beneficiary shall have the right, in its sole discretion, to apply all or any part of the Proceeds, after deducting therefrom all costs incurred by Beneficiary in connection with the Proceeds (including, without limitation, attorneys' fees and costs), to (i) the Indebtedness (in such order as Beneficiary may determine), (ii) the restoration and replacement of the Trust Estate, or (iii) Trustor.

(d) If the Proceeds are applied by Beneficiary to the restoration and replacement of the Trust Estate, Trustor shall restore, repair and replace the Trust Estate as nearly as possible to its value, condition and character immediately prior to the taking. Beneficiary shall have the right, at Beneficiary's option, to establish disbursement procedures and to condition disbursement of the Proceeds on Beneficiary's approval of architects' and/or engineers' plans and specifications contractors' cost estimates, architects' certificates, waivers of liens, sworn statements of contractors, mechanics and materialmen, and such other evidence of costs, completion of construction, application of payments, and satisfaction of liens as Beneficiary may require.

(e) Except to the extent that the Proceeds are received by Beneficiary and applied to the Indebtedness, nothing herein shall excuse Trustor from repairing or maintaining the Trust Estate as provided in Section 2.1 or restoring all damage to the Trust Estate, regardless of whether Proceeds are available or sufficient in amount, and the application or release by Beneficiary of any Proceeds shall not cure or waive any default or notice of default under this Deed of Trust.

2.9. Financial Statements and Records. Trustor shall deliver to Beneficiary: (a) copies of operating statements, balance sheets, statements of changes in financial positions, tax returns and such other financial statements and reports in such form and content as Beneficiary may require of Trustor, the Trust Estate and any guarantor or the Indebtedness on or before ninety (90) days following the end of the fiscal year of Trustor; (b) copies of any interim operating statements, balance sheets, statements of changes in financial positions, tax returns and such other financial statements and reports in such form and content as Beneficiary may reasonably require of Trustor, the Trust Estate and any guarantor of the Indebtedness on or before the fifteenth (15th) business day following Beneficiary's written demand; and (c) any other report Beneficiary may reasonably require from time to time regarding Trustor, the Trust Estate and any guarantor of the Indebtedness. The foregoing operating statements, balance sheets and statements of changes in financial positions, tax returns and other financial statements and reports shall be prepared in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles and shall be certified as to accuracy by an independent certified public accountant or representative of Trustor acceptable to Beneficiary. Trustor authorizes Beneficiary, at any time, prior to payment in full of the Indebtedness, or within one year following foreclosure of the Trust Estate, to obtain any information that Beneficiary may reasonably require, including credit information from other sources (such as credit reporting agencies), concerning Trustor, the Trust Estate and any guarantor of the Indebtedness. Trustor shall also be required to furnish to Beneficiary at any time upon the request of Beneficiary, a rent roll for the Trust Estate, certified as to accuracy by Trustor, including for each unit of rentable space the identity of the tenant or a statement that such space is vacant, the net rentable area, the lease expiration date, the rent payable and the rent and any security or other deposit actually paid. Trustor shall keep and maintain at all times at the Trust Estate, or such other place as Beneficiary may approve in writing, complete and accurate books of account and records adequate to reflect correctly the results of the operation of the Trust Estate and copies of all written contracts, leases and other documents which affect the Trust Estate. Such books, records, contracts, leases and other documents shall be subject to examination, inspection and copying at any reasonable time by Beneficiary.

2.10. Sale or Encumbrance of Trust Estate. If Trustor sells, conveys, assigns or otherwise transfers (hereinafter collectively referred to as a “Sale”) or further pledges, mortgages or otherwise encumbers (hereinafter collectively referred to and an “Encumbrance”) all or any part of the Trust Estate or any interest in the Trust Estate, whether any such Sale or Encumbrance occurs directly or indirectly, voluntarily or involuntarily, or by operation of law, without the prior written consent of Beneficiary (which may be withheld in Beneficiary's sole and absolute discretion) the entire Indebtedness shall become immediately due and payable at the election of Beneficiary, without notice to Trustor. For purposes of this Deed of Trust, a transfer of the interests in Trustor, whether direct or indirect or in one or more transactions, shall be deemed a transfer of Trustor's interest in the Trust Estate (and, therefore, a “Sale” for purposes of this Section 2.10).

2.11. Inspections. Beneficiary, its agents and representatives are authorized to enter the Trust Estate at any reasonable time, and from time to time, for the purpose of inspecting the Trust Estate and performing any of the acts Beneficiary is authorized to perform under this Deed of Trust and any other Loan Document.

2.12. Preservation of Lien Priority by Trustor. (a) This Deed of Trust is and shall continue to be a valid lien upon the Trust Estate subject only to the liens, charges and encumbrances approved by Beneficiary in writing, and Trustor shall not, directly or indirectly, create or permit to be created against the Trust Estate, or any portion thereof, any lien, charge or encumbrance prior to, subordinate to, or on a parity with the lien of this Deed of Trust without Beneficiary's prior written consent; Trustor acknowledges and agrees that Beneficiary may withhold consent to any subordinate financing secured by the Trust Estate which Beneficiary, in its business judgment, deems to be detrimental to Beneficiary. (b) All property of every kind acquired by Trustor after the date hereof which, by the terms hereof, is required or intended to be subjected to the lien of this Deed of Trust shall, immediately upon the acquisition thereof and without any further conveyance, assignment or transfer, become subject to the lien of this Deed of Trust. (c) In order to more effectively evidence or confirm the lien of this Deed of Trust on the Trust Estate (including all property acquired after the date hereof which is subject to the lien of this Deed of Trust), Trustor shall, at its sole cost, do, execute, acknowledge and deliver all such further acts, conveyances, deeds of trust, assignments, notices of assignments and further instruments required by Beneficiary, including, without limitation, security agreements, financing statements, continuation statements and other instruments requested by Beneficiary. (d) If any action or proceeding is instituted (i) which could materially affect Trustor's ability to perform its obligations under any of the Loan Documents, (ii) to evict Trustor, (iii) to recover possession of the Trust Estate, or (iv) for any other purpose which affects the Trust Estate, the lien of this Deed of Trust or Beneficiary's rights hereunder, Trustor shall, immediately upon service thereof on or by Trustor, deliver to Beneficiary a true copy of each petition, summons, complaint, notice of motion, order to show cause and all other processes, pleadings and papers, however designated, served in such action or proceeding.

2.13*. *Liens. Trustor shall pay, at Trustor's sole cost, as and when payment is due, all lawful claims and demands of mechanics, materialmen, laborers and others which, if unpaid, might result in, or permit the creation of, a lien on the Trust Estate, the Leases, Rents or Profits, and Trustor shall do or cause to be done everything necessary so that the lien and security interest hereof shall be fully preserved; provided, however, that if applicable law empowers Trustor to discharge of record any mechanic's, laborer's, materialman's or other lien against the Trust Estate by posting a bond or other security, Trustor shall not have to make such payment if Trustor posts such bond or other security within the time prescribed by law so as not to place the Trust Estate in jeopardy of a lien or forfeiture. Trustor shall have the right to contest in good faith the amount or validity of any such lawful claims and demands of mechanics, materialmen, laborers and others by appropriate legal proceeding if Trustor gives Beneficiary prior written notice and procures a bond or anything else required by and satisfactory to Beneficiary (in Beneficiary's sole discretion). If at any time payment of any obligation imposed upon Trustor herein shall become necessary to prevent the delivery of a tax deed conveying the Trust Estate or any portion thereof because of non-payment, or if the Beneficiary or Trustee shall incur any civil or criminal liability as a result of such non-payment, then Beneficiary may pay the same in sufficient time to prevent the delivery of such tax deed or the incurrence of civil or criminal liability, and any expense incurred by Beneficiary in connection therewith shall be payable by Trustor upon demand, together with interest at the Advance Interest Rate, and shall be secured by this Deed of Trust.

2.14*. *Beneficiary's Powers. Without affecting the liability of any other person liable for the Indebtedness, and without affecting the lien of this Deed of Trust upon any portion of the Trust Estate not then released as security for the Note or any other Loan Document, Beneficiary may, from time to time and without notice: (a) release any person so liable; (b) extend the maturity or alter any of the terms of the Indebtedness; (c) grant other indulgences; (d) release or reconvey any parcel, portion or all of the Trust Estate; (e) take or release any other security for the Indebtedness; (f) make any arrangements with debtors in relation to the Indebtedness; and (g) advance additional funds to protect the security of this Deed of Trust and pay or discharge the obligations of Trustor hereunder or under any other Loan Document, and all amounts so advanced, together with interest at the Advance Interest Rate, shall be paid by Trustor to Beneficiary on demand and shall be secured by this Deed of Trust.

2.15*. *Cross Default Effect of Further Security Instruments. The Indebtedness may be secured by additional assignments of Trustor's interest in the Leases, security agreements, financing statements, deeds of trust, letters of credit, collateral assignments, pledges, or other security instruments. Any default under the provisions of any such additional security instruments that is not remedied within any applicable cure period shall be an Event of Default under this Deed of Trust, and Beneficiary may, at its option, effect a sale or foreclosure of any one or more of said security instruments either prior or subsequent to, joined or otherwise contemporaneous with, any sale or foreclosure with respect to this Deed of Trust, and may apply the proceeds received therefrom to the Indebtedness without waiving or affecting the status of any default or any right or power (whether contained in this Deed of Trust or any other security instrument).

3. ASSIGNMENT OF LEASES, RENTS AND PROFITS.

3.1*. *Assignment. Pursuant to Section 1.2, above, Trustor has absolutely, presently, and unconditionally assigned, transferred, conveyed and set over to Beneficiary all of Trustor's right, title and interest in and to the Leases, Rents and Profits to be applied by Beneficiary to the Indebtedness (the “Assignment”). This Assignment shall be fully operative without any further action on the part of Trustor or Beneficiary and Beneficiary shall be entitled, at its option, to all Rents and Profits whether or not Beneficiary takes possession of the Trust Estate. Trustor hereby further grants to Beneficiary the right to (a) enter and take possession of the Trust Estate for the purposes of collecting the Rents and Profits, (b) dispossess by the usual summary proceedings of any tenant defaulting in the payment thereof to Beneficiary, (c) let the Trust Estate or any part thereof, and (d) apply the Rents and Profits, after payment of all necessary charges and expenses (including attorneys' fees and costs) to the Indebtedness. This Assignment shall continue in effect until the Indebtedness is paid in full. The execution of this Deed of Trust constitutes Trustor's irrevocable consent to Beneficiary's entry and taking possession of the Trust Estate pursuant to this Assignment, whether or not sale or foreclosure has been instituted. Neither the exercise of any rights under this Assignment by Beneficiary nor the application of the Rents and Profits to the Indebtedness shall cure or waive an Event of Default or notice of default, and shall be cumulative with all other rights and remedies of Beneficiary.

3.2. Trustee's License. Notwithstanding anything in Section 3.1, above, to the contrary, as long as an Event of Default (described below) has not occurred, Trustor shall have a license to collect and receive all Rents and Profits. Upon the occurrence of an Event of Default, such license shall be deemed automatically revoked, without regard to the adequacy of Beneficiary's security and without notice to or demand upon Trustor, and any Rents and Profits received thereafter by Trustor shall be immediately turned over to Beneficiary. Upon the occurrence of an Event of Default, Trustor agrees to deliver the original copies of all Leases to Beneficiary. Trustor hereby irrevocably appoints Beneficiary its true and lawful attorney-in-fact to enforce in Trustor's name or Beneficiary's name or otherwise all rights of Trustor in the instruments, including without limitation, checks and money orders, tendered as payments of Rents and Profits and to do any and all things necessary and proper to carry out the purposes of this Assignment.

3.3. Trustor's Covenants. Trustor shall not: (i) execute an assignment of the rents or any part thereof from the Trust Estate; (ii) except where the lessee is in default thereunder, terminate or consent to the cancellation or surrender of any Lease having an unexpired term of two (2) years or more unless, promptly after the cancellation or surrender of any Lease, a new Lease is entered into with a new lessee satisfactory to Beneficiary and on terms at least as favorable to the lessor thereunder as were the terms of the Lease so terminated or canceled; (iii) modify any Lease or give consent to any assignment or subletting without Beneficiary's prior written consent; (iv) accept prepayments of any installments of rent or additional rent to become due under the Leases, except prepayments in the nature of security for the performance of the lessee's obligations thereunder; or (v) in any other manner impair the value of the Trust Estate or the security of the Trustee or Beneficiary for the payment of the Indebtedness. Trustor shall not execute any Lease for all or a substantial portion of the Trust Estate except for actual occupancy by the lessee thereunder, and shall at all times promptly and faithfully perform, or cause to be performed, all of the covenants, conditions and agreements contained in all Leases now or hereafter existing, on the part of the lessor thereunder to be kept and performed. Trustor shall, from time to time upon request of Beneficiary, specifically assign to Beneficiary as additional security hereunder, by a written instrument approved by Beneficiary, all right, title and interest of Trustor in and to any and all Leases, together with all security therefor and all monies payable thereunder, subject to the Trustor's conditional license to collect the Rents. Trustor shall also execute and deliver to Beneficiary any notification, financing statement or other document reasonably required by Beneficiary to perfect the Assignment as to any of the Leases. Each Lease shall provide that, in the event of the enforcement by the Trustee or Beneficiary of the remedies provided for by law or by this Deed of Trust, any person succeeding to the interest of Trustor as a result of such enforcement shall not be bound by any payment of rent or additional rent for more than one month in advance, and that nothing in the Lease or Deed of Trust affects or impairs the rights of Beneficiary to terminate the Lease in connection with the Beneficiary's or Trustee's exercise of its remedies hereunder.

3.4. Foreclosure. Upon a sale of the Trust Estate pursuant to foreclosure of this Deed of Trust, all right, title and interest of Trustor in and to the Leases shall, by virtue of this Deed of Trust and the Assignment, automatically vest in and become the absolute property of the purchaser of the Trust Estate without any further act or assignment by Trustor. Trustor hereby irrevocably appoints Beneficiary and its successors and assigns, as its agent and attorney-in-fact, to execute all instruments of assignment or further assurances in favor of such purchaser of the Property as may be necessary or desirable for such purpose. Nothing contained herein shall prevent Beneficiary from terminating through foreclosure the Lease of any tenant subordinate to this Deed of Trust.

4.1. Creation of Security Interest. Trustor hereby grants to Beneficiary a security interest in the Personal Property for the purpose of securing the Indebtedness.

4.2. Warranties, Representations and Covenants of Trustor. Trustor hereby warrants, represents and covenants as follows: (a) except for the security interest granted hereby, Trustor is, and as to portions of the Personal Property to be acquired after the date hereof will be, the sole owner of the Personal Property, free from any lien, security interest, encumbrance or adverse claim of any kind whatsoever, and Trustor shall indemnify, protect, defend, and hold harmless Beneficiary and the Personal Property against all claims and demands of all persons and entities at any time claiming the Personal Property or any part thereof or any interest therein; (b) Trustor shall promptly notify Beneficiary of any attachment or other legal process levied against any of the Personal Property and any information received by Trustor relative to the Personal Property, Trustor's debtors or other persons obligated in connection therewith, which may in any way affect the value of the Personal Property or the rights and remedies of Beneficiary in respect thereto; (c) Trustor shall not lease, sell, convey or in any manner transfer the Personal Property without the prior written consent of Beneficiary; (d) the Personal Property is not, and shall not be, used or bought for personal, family or household purposes; (e) the Personal Property shall be kept on or at the Property and Trustor shall not remove the Personal Property from the Property without the prior written consent of Beneficiary, except for such portions or items of Personal Property as are consumed or worn out in ordinary usage, all of which Trustor shall promptly replace with new items of equal or better quality; (f) Trustor maintains a place of business in the State of California and Trustor shall immediately notify Beneficiary in writing of any change in its place of business; (g) at the request of Beneficiary, Trustor shall join Beneficiary in executing financing statements and continuations and amendments thereof pursuant to the California Commercial Code in form satisfactory to Beneficiary, and Trustor shall pay the cost of filing the same in all public offices wherever filing is deemed by Beneficiary to be necessary or desirable; (h) all covenants and agreements of Trustor in this Deed of Trust relating to the Trust Estate shall be deemed to apply to the Personal Property whether or not expressly referred to herein; (i) Trustor shall permit representatives of Beneficiary to inspect the Personal Property and Trustor's books and records relating to the Personal Property and make copies thereof and arrange for verification of the amount of Personal Property under procedures acceptable to Beneficiary at Trustor's cost; and (j) Trustor shall maintain, preserve and protect all Personal Property, keep all Personal Property in good condition and repair and prevent any waste or unusual depreciation thereof; and (k) until Beneficiary exercises its right to collect proceeds of the Personal Property pursuant to this Section 4, Trustor shall collect with diligence any and all proceeds of the Personal Property (which shall be held in trust for Beneficiary), and upon written request by Beneficiary, Trustor shall keep all such proceeds collected separate from all other funds so as to be capable of identification as to the property of Beneficiary and shall deliver such collections to Beneficiary at such time as Beneficiary may request and in the identical form received, properly endorsed or assigned when required to enable Beneficiary to complete collection thereof.

4.3. Beneficiary's Rights as a Secured Party. With respect to the security interest granted to Beneficiary in this Section 4, Beneficiary shall have all the rights and remedies granted to a secured party under Division 9 of the California Commercial Code, as well as all other rights and remedies available at law or in equity. Trustor shall, upon the demand of Beneficiary, assemble all of such Personal Property and make it available to Beneficiary at the Trust Estate, which is hereby agreed to be reasonably convenient to Beneficiary, Trustee and Trustor. Any sale proceeds which are applied against the principal component of the Indebtedness shall, to the extent not repaying the entire Indebtedness, be applied to principal in the reverse order of maturity.

4.4. Beneficiary's Collection of Proceeds. Beneficiary may at any time, without prior notice to Trustor, collect proceeds of the Personal Property and may give notice of assignment to any and all of Trustor's debtors, and Trustor hereby irrevocably appoints Beneficiary its true and lawful attorney-in-fact to enforce in Trustor's name or in Beneficiary's name or otherwise all rights of Trustor in the Personal Property and to do any and all things necessary and proper to carry out the purposes hereof; provided, however, Trustor shall have the right to collect, retain, use and enjoy such proceeds subject to the terms of the Loan Documents prior to the occurrence of any Event of Default. It is recognized that the power of attorney granted herein is coupled with an interest and shall not be revocable and Beneficiary shall have the right to exercise this power of attorney upon any Event of Default. Beneficiary shall notify Trustor of any action taken by Beneficiary pursuant to this provision, but Beneficiary's failure to do so shall not invalidate any such act, affect any of Trustor's obligations to Beneficiary or give rise to any right, claim or defense on the part of Trustor.

4.5. Fixture Filing. The Personal Property in which Beneficiary has a security interest includes goods which are or may become fixtures on the Property. This Deed of Trust is intended to serve as a fixture filing pursuant to the terms of sections 9313 and 9402 of the California Commercial Code. This filing is to be recorded in the real estate records of the county in which the Property is located. Trustor warrants and agrees that there is no financing statement covering the Trust Estate or any part thereof on file in any public office.

5. REMEDIES UPON DEFAULT.

5.1. Events of Default. In addition to any Event of Default under any other Section of this Deed of Trust, the occurrence of any of the following events shall be an Event of Default under this Deed of Trust: (a) Trustor's failure to pay any of the following sums on the date that such sums are required to be paid: (1) any regular installment of interest and/or principal due under the Note; (2) any other payment of interest and/or principal due under the Note (whether at any stated maturity or by acceleration or otherwise); or (3) any other sums required to be paid by Trustor pursuant to the Note, this Deed of Trust or any other Loan Document. (b) Trustor's failure to perform when due any covenant, condition or agreement of Trustor in this Deed of Trust, or any other Loan Document. (c) Trustor (or any guarantor of the Indebtedness) files a voluntary petition in bankruptcy or is adjudicated a bankrupt or insolvent, or files any petition or answer seeking or acquiescing in any reorganization, arrangement, composition, readjustment, liquidation, dissolution or similar relief under any present or future federal, state or other statute, law or regulation relating to bankruptcy, insolvency or other relief for debtors, or seeks or consents to or acquiesces in the appointment of any trustee, receiver, custodian, liquidator or similar official for Trustor or the Trust Estate, or makes any general assignment for the benefit of creditors, or admits in writing its inability to pay its debts generally as they become due. (d) An order for relief or any other order, judgment or decree is entered approving a petition filed against Trustor (or any guarantor of the Indebtedness) seeking any reorganization, arrangement, composition, readjustment, liquidation, dissolution or similar relief under any present or future federal, state or other statute, law or regulation relating to bankruptcy, insolvency or other relief for debtors, and such order, judgment or decree remains unvacated and unstayed for an aggregate of thirty (30) days (whether or not consecutive) from the first date of entry thereof, or any trustee, receiver, custodian, liquidator or similar official of Trustor (or guarantor of the Indebtedness) or of all or any part of the Trust Estate or any interest therein is appointed without the consent or acquiescence of Trustor (or guarantor of the Indebtedness) and such appointment is not vacated and not stayed for an aggregate of thirty (30) days (whether or not consecutive) from the first date of entry thereof. (e) A writ of execution or attachment or any similar process is issued or levied against all or any part of the Trust Estate or any interest therein, or any judgment is entered against Trustor which becomes a lien on the Trust Estate or any part thereof or interest therein, and such execution, attachment or similar process or judgment is not released, vacated or stayed within thirty (30) days after its issuance, levy or entry. (f) Any or all of the representations or warranties made by Trustor in the Note, this Deed of Trust or any other Loan Document proves to be untrue, which adversely affects Beneficiary's security hereunder. (g) Any Sale or Encumbrance in violation of Section 2.10. (h) Any other default under or breach of any provision of the Note, this Deed of Trust or any other Loan Document (including, without limitation, any environmental indemnity executed to secure the Indebtedness.

5.2. Remedies. Upon the occurrence of any Event of Default, Trustee and Beneficiary, effective as of the date of the occurrence of any Event of Default, shall have any and all of the following rights and remedies which may be exercised individually, collectively or cumulatively:

(a) Beneficiary may declare all the Indebtedness immediately due and payable by delivery to Trustee of written declaration of default and demand for sale and written notice of default and of election to cause the Trust Estate to be sold, which notice Trustee shall cause to be duly filed for record. Beneficiary also shall deposit with Trustee this Deed of Trust, the Note and all documents evidencing expenditures secured hereby.

After the lapse of such time as may then be required by law following the recordation of said notice of default, and notice of sale having been given as then required by law, Trustee, without demand on Trustor, shall sell the Trust Estate at the time and place fixed by it in said notice of sale, either as a whole or in separate parcels, and in such order as it may determine, at public auction to the highest bidder for cash and lawful money of the United States, payable at time of sale. If the Trust Estate consists of more than one legal parcel, Beneficiary may designate the order in which such parcels shall be sold or offered for sale, subject, however, to any unqualified statutory right which Trustor may have to direct such order. In addition, if the Trust Estate consists of more than one legal parcel, Beneficiary may require that such parcels be sold at separate sales held at separate times, subject, however, to any unqualified statutory right which Trustor may have to direct the manner of the sale of such parcels. Trustee may postpone sale of all or any portion of the Trust Estate by public announcement at such time and place of sale, and from time to time thereafter may postpone such sale by public announcement at the time and place fixed by the preceding postponement. After making such sale, Trustee shall deliver to the purchaser or purchasers its deed or deeds conveying the Trust Estate so sold, but without any covenant or warranty, express or implied. The recitals in such deed of any matters or facts shall be conclusive proofs of the truthfulness thereof. Any person, including Trustor, Trustee or Beneficiary may purchase at such sale.

After deducting all costs, fees and expenses of Trustee and of the trust created by this Deed of Trust, including cost of evidence of title in connection with sale, Trustee shall apply the proceeds of sale to payment of: (i) all sums expended in connection with such sale, together with reasonable expenses of the trust created hereby, not then repaid, with accrued interest at the amount allowed by law in effect at the date hereof; (ii) all other sums advanced or expended by Beneficiary and secured hereby; (iii) the Indebtedness remaining unpaid; and (iv) the remainder, if any, to the person or persons legally entitled thereto.

The power of sale under this Deed of Trust shall not be exhausted by any one or more sales (or attempts to sell) as to all or any portion of the Trust Estate remaining unsold, but shall continue unimpaired until all of the Trust Estate has been sold by exercise of the power of sale in this Deed of Trust and all Indebtedness has been paid and discharged in full.

(b) Beneficiary may at any time, without notice, in person, by agent or by a court appointed receiver, and without regard to the adequacy of any security for the Indebtedness, enter upon and take possession of the Trust Estate or any part thereof, in Beneficiary's own name sue for or otherwise collect such Rents and Profits, including those past due and unpaid, and apply the same, less costs and expenses of operation and collection, including reasonable attorneys' fees, to any Indebtedness, in such order as Beneficiary may determine. The entering upon and taking possession of the Trust Estate, the collection of such Rents and Profits and the application thereof as aforesaid, shall not cure or waive any default or notice of default hereunder or invalidate any act on or pursuant to such notice.

Beneficiary may also at any time, without notice, in person, by agent, or by a court appointed receiver, and without regard to the adequacy of any security for the Indebtedness, enter upon, possess, manage, operate, dispose of and contract to dispose of the Trust Estate or any part thereof; take custody of all accounts; negotiate with governmental authorities with respect to the Trust Estate's environmental compliance and remedial measures; take any action necessary to enforce compliance with the Environmental Laws (defined above), including but not limited to spending Rents and Profits and/or other benefits arising from the Trust Estate to cause compliance with Environmental Laws; make, terminate, enforce or modify real or personal property leases, contracts, and agreements for occupancy and/or use of the Trust Estate upon such terms and conditions as Beneficiary deems proper; contract for goods and services, hire agents, employees and counsel, make repairs, alterations and improvements to the Trust Estate which are necessary, in Beneficiary's judgment, to protect or enhance the security of this Deed of Trust; appear in and defend any action or proceeding affecting the Trust Estate or other security hereof or the rights and powers of Beneficiary or Trustee; incur the risks and obligations ordinarily incurred by owners of property (without any personal obligation on the part of Beneficiary or the receiver); and/or take any and all other actions which may be necessary or desirable to comply with Trustor's obligations hereunder and under the other Loan Documents. All sums expended by Beneficiary or Trustee in exercising any of the foregoing shall be secured by this Deed of Trust and shall be immediately due and payable without demand or notice, with interest from the date of expenditure at the Advance Interest Rate. All sums realized by Beneficiary under this Section 5.4(b), less all costs and expenses incurred under this Section 5.4(b) (including, without limitation, attorneys' fees and costs), and less such sums as Beneficiary deems appropriate as a reserve to meet future expenses under this Section 5.4(b), shall be applied to the Indebtedness in such order as Beneficiary shall determine in its sole discretion. Neither application of said sums to the Indebtedness, nor any other acts taken by Beneficiary under this Section 5.4(b), shall constitute a waiver of any Event of Default or notice of default, or nullify the effect of any such notice of default. Beneficiary may take any action or proceeding hereunder without regard to the existence of a declaration that the Indebtedness secured hereby has been declared immediately due and payable or the filing of a notice of default and/or a notice of sale.

(c) Beneficiary shall have the right to commence an action to foreclose this Deed of Trust, appoint a receiver, and specifically enforce any of the covenants contained in this Deed of Trust or any other Loan Document. If an Event of Default under this Deed of Trust occurs, and as long as any such Event of Default exists, Beneficiary, as a matter of right and without notice to Trustor or anyone claiming under Trustor, and without regard to the adequacy of the security or the then value of the Trust Estate or the interest of Trustor therein, shall have the right to have a receiver of the Trust Estate appointed by any court having jurisdiction, and Trustor hereby irrevocably consents to such appointment. Any such receiver shall have all the usual powers and duties of receivers in like or similar cases and all the powers of Beneficiary in case of entry as provided in Section 5.2(b) and shall continue as such and exercise all such powers until the date of confirmation of sale of the Trust Estate unless such receivership is sooner terminated.

(d) Beneficiary shall have the right to exercise and enforce any or all of the rights and remedies available to a secured party under the Uniform Commercial Code of California, including, without limitation, those rights and remedies set forth in Section 4 of this Deed of Trust, or the right to sell the Personal Property or any part thereof, or any further or additional or substitute of the Personal Property, at one or more times, and from time to time at public sale or sales or private sale or sales, on such terms as cash or credit, or partly for cash and partly on credit, as Beneficiary may deem proper. At any such sale or sales, Beneficiary shall have the right to become the purchaser, free and clear of any and all claims and rights of equity or redemption in Trustor, all of which are hereby waived and released. Should any of the Personal Property be sold to any party other than Beneficiary, on credit or for future delivery, the Personal Property so sold may be retained by Beneficiary until the full sales price therefor is paid, and Beneficiary shall not be liable or responsible for the failure of such purchaser to pay for any Personal Property so sold but may, in such event resell such Personal Property. Trustor shall not be credited with the amount of any part of such purchase price, unless (and only to the extent) that such payment is actually received in cash. Notice of public sale, if given, shall be sufficiently given, for all purposes, if published not less than nor more than seven (7) days prior to any sale, in a newspaper of general circulation distributed in the city in which the Personal Property is located. The net proceeds of any sale of the Personal Property which may remain after the deduction of all costs, fees and expenses incurred in connection therewith (including, but not limited to, all advertising expenses, brokers' commissions, documentary stamp taxes, recording fees, foreclosure costs, and attorneys' fees and costs) shall be credited by Beneficiary against the Indebtedness. Any portion of the Personal Property which may remain unsold after the full payment of the Indebtedness shall be returned to the respective parties which delivered the same to Beneficiary. If at any time Trustor or any other parties shall become entitled to the return of any of the Personal Property, any transfer or assignment by Beneficiary shall be and shall recite that the same is made wholly without representation or warranty whatsoever by or recourse whatsoever against Beneficiary. Trustor recognizes that Beneficiary may not have the usual opportunity for an orderly liquidation of the Personal Property or part thereof, but may be compelled to resort to “private sale” of the Personal Property, at a price which may be less than any fair market price for the Personal Property at the time of its sale. Trustor specifically authorizes Beneficiary to sell at Beneficiary's election, any or all of the Personal Property at “private sale” at such price as may be negotiated directly between Beneficiary and the purchaser of the Personal Property, or any part thereof, whether or not the price may be less than the fair market price at the time of such sale. Trustor further acknowledges and agrees that, at Beneficiary's election, the Personal Property may be sold, pursuant to the California Commercial Code, concurrent with the sale of the Trust Estate.

(e) Beneficiary or its agents, acting by themselves or through a court appointed receiver, may, with or without notice, and without releasing Trustor from any obligation hereunder, for the purpose of curing any default of Trustor or otherwise in connection therewith, enter upon the Trust Estate or any part thereof and perform such acts and do such things as Beneficiary deems necessary or desirable to inspect, investigate, assess and protect the security of this Deed of Trust, including, without limitation: (i) obtain a court order to enforce Beneficiary's right to enter and inspect the Trust Estate under California Civil Code Section 2929.5 to determine whether there exists a release or threatened release of a Hazardous Substances onto the Trust Estate (which such determination by Beneficiary shall be deemed reasonable and conclusive as between the parties hereto); and (ii) have a receiver appointed under California Code of Civil Procedure Section 564 to enforce Beneficiary's right to enter and inspect the Trust Estate for Hazardous Substances. All costs and expenses incurred by Beneficiary with respect to the audits, tests, inspections and examinations which Beneficiary or its agents or employees may conduct, including the fees of the engineers, laboratories, contractors, consultants and attorneys, shall be paid by Trustor. All costs and expenses incurred by Trustee and Beneficiary pursuant to this Section 5.4(e) (including, without limitation, court costs, consultant fees and attorneys' fees, whether incurred in litigation or not and whether before or after judgment) shall bear interest at the Advance Interest Rate from the date of expenditure and shall be secured by this Deed of Trust.

(f) Beneficiary may seek a judgment that Trustor has breached its covenants, representations, warranties and/or indemnities set forth in Section 2.2, above (or elsewhere in this Deed of Trust), in any separate environmental indemnity or other agreement relating to environmental matters, by commencing and maintaining an action for breach of contract pursuant to California Code of Civil Procedure Section 736, whether commenced prior to foreclosure of the Trust Estate or after foreclosure of the Trust Estate, and may further seek the recovery of any and all costs, damages, expenses, fees, penalties, fines, judgments, indemnification payments to third parties, and other out-of-pocket costs or expenses actually incurred by Beneficiary (collectively the “Environmental Costs”) or advanced by Beneficiary for the cleanup, remediation or other response action required by any Environmental Law, or which Beneficiary believes necessary to protect the Trust Estate, it being conclusively presumed between Beneficiary and Trustor that all such Environmental Costs incurred or advanced by Beneficiary relating to the cleanup, remediation or other response action of or to the Trust Estate were made by Beneficiary in good faith. All Environmental Costs incurred by Beneficiary under this Section 5.2(f) (including without limitation court costs, consultant fees and attorneys' fees, whether incurred in litigation or not and whether before or after judgment) shall bear interest at the Advance Interest Rate from the date of expenditure and shall be secured by this Deed of Trust until said sums have been paid. Beneficiary shall be entitled to bid at any foreclosure sale of the Trust Estate held under this Deed of Trust the amount of said Environmental Costs together with accrued interest thereon in addition to the amount of the other Indebtedness as a credit bid, but neither such credit bid nor the foreclosure and sale of the Trust Estate shall operate to invalidate or to discharge Trustor from its obligations under the terms of Section 5.2(f), any other portion of this Deed of Trust, any environmental indemnity or other agreement relating to the environmental condition of the Trust Estate. In addition, Beneficiary may, without notice, elect to waive its lien against the Trust Estate or any portion thereof, including fixtures or personal property, to the extent such Trust Estate is found to be environmentally impaired in accordance with California Code of Civil Procedure Section 726.5 and to exercise any and all rights and remedies of an unsecured creditor against Trustor and all of Trustor's assets and the Trust Estate for the recovery of any deficiency and Environmental Costs, including, but not limited to, seeking an attachment order under California Code of Civil Procedure Section 483.010. As between Beneficiary and Trustor, for purposes of California Code of Civil Procedure Section 726.5, Trustor shall have the burden of proving that Trustor or any related party (or any affiliate or agent of Trustor or any related party) was not in any way negligent in permitting the release or threatened release of the Hazardous Substance. TRUSTOR ACKNOWLEDGES AND AGREES THAT NOTWITHSTANDING ANY TERM OR PROVISION CONTAINED HEREIN OR IN THE OTHER LOAN DOCUMENTS, ALL ENVIRONMENTAL COSTS INCURRED PURSUANT TO THIS DEED OF TRUST AND ALL JUDGMENTS AND AWARDS ENTERED AGAINST TRUSTOR IN RESPECT OF OR PERTAINING TO THE PROVISIONS OF THIS SECTION 5.2(f), SHALL BE EXCEPTIONS TO ANY NONRECOURSE OR EXCULPATORY PROVISION OF THE LOAN DOCUMENTS, WHETHER SPECIFICALLY SET FORTH IN THE LOAN DOCUMENTS OR PROVIDED BY STATUTE, AND TRUSTOR SHALL BE FULLY AND PERSONALLY LIABLE FOR ALL SUCH ENVIRONMENTAL COSTS AND FOR ALL SUCH JUDGMENTS AND AWARDS ENTERED AGAINST TRUSTOR THEREUNDER, AND SUCH LIABILITY SHALL NOT BE LIMITED TO THE ORIGINAL PRINCIPAL AMOUNT OF THE INDEBTEDNESS. TRUSTOR'S OBLIGATIONS WITH RESPECT TO SUCH ENVIRONMENTAL COSTS AND JUDGMENTS AND AWARDS SHALL SURVIVE A FORECLOSURE, DEED IN LIEU OF FORECLOSURE, RELEASE, RECONVEYANCE OR ANY OTHER TRANSFER OF THE TRUST ESTATE OR THIS DEED OF TRUST. FOR THE PURPOSES OF ANY ACTION BROUGHT UNDER THIS SECTION 5.2(f), TRUSTOR HEREBY WAIVES THE DEFENSE OF LACHES AND ANY APPLICABLE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

(g) Beneficiary shall have the right to full and complete access to the Trust Estate for the purpose of conducting any investigations, appraisals, studies or reports that Beneficiary may desire in its sole discretion, and the cost of any such investigations, appraisals, studies and reports shall be paid by Trustor, together with interest at the Advance Interest Rate, and shall be secured by this Deed of Trust.

5.3. Remedies Not Exclusive. Every right, power and remedy granted to Trustee or Beneficiary in this Deed of Trust shall be cumulative and not exclusive, and in addition to all rights, powers and remedies granted at law or in equity or by statute, and each such right, power and remedy may be exercised from time to time and as often and in such order as may be deemed expedient by Trustee or Beneficiary, and the exercise of any such right, power or remedy shall not be deemed a waiver of the right to exercise, at the same time or thereafter, any other right, power or remedy.

5.4. Waiver of Rights. Upon the commencement of any action, suit or other legal proceeding by Beneficiary to obtain a judgment in connection with the Indebtedness or for the enforcement of this Deed of Trust or any other Loan Document, Trustor, to the fullest extent permitted by law, hereby waives every statute of limitations applicable at any time to any such action, suit, or proceeding. To the fullest extent permitted by applicable law, Trustor shall not at any time insist upon, plead or in any manner claim or take any benefit or advantage of, any stay or extension or moratorium law or law pertaining to the marshaling of assets, the administration of estates of decedents, any exemption from execution or sale of the Trust Estate or any part thereof, including exemption of homestead, wherever enacted, now or at any time hereafter in force, which may affect the covenants and terms of performance of this Deed of Trust. Trustor, to the fullest extent permissible, further waives its rights to claim, take, or insist upon any benefit or advantage of any law now or hereafter in force providing for the valuation or appraisal of the Trust Estate or any part thereof, prior to any sale or sales thereof which may be made pursuant to any provision herein, or pursuant to the decree, judgment or order of any court of competent jurisdiction (not including, however, appraisals incident to judicial foreclosures hereunder). Additionally, after any such sale or sales, Trustor shall not claim or exercise any right under any statute heretofore or hereafter enacted to redeem the Trust Estate so sold or any part thereof. Trustor hereby expressly waives, to the extent legally permissible, all benefit or advantage of any such law or laws, and covenants not to hinder, delay or impede the execution of every power as though no such law or laws had been made or enacted. Finally, Trustor, for itself and all who claim under it, specifically waives, to the extent that it lawfully may, all right to have the Trust Estate marshaled upon any sale or foreclosure hereunder.

5.5. Expenses. All expenses incurred by Beneficiary and Trustee in exercising any of their rights under this Section 5 of the Deed of Trust or in exercising any other rights available at law or in equity (including, without limitation, expenses incurred in retaking, holding, preparing for sale or selling the Trust Estate or any part thereof and Trustee's and attorneys' fees and costs) shall be borne solely by Trustor and shall, together with interest at the Advance Interest Rate, be secured by this Deed of Trust.

5.6. Order of Application. The purchase money or other proceeds of any foreclosure sale made under or by virtue of this Deed of Trust, together with all other sums which then may be held by Trustee or Beneficiary under this Deed of Trust, whether under the provisions of Section 5.4 or otherwise, shall be applied as follows: (a) first, to the payment of the costs and expenses of sale and any related judicial proceeding including, without limitation, reasonable compensation to Trustee and Beneficiary, their agents and counsel, all costs of publishing, recording, mailing and posting notices, the costs of any search and evidence of title procured in connection therewith and revenue stamps on any deed or instrument of conveyance, all expenses, liabilities and advances made or incurred by Trustee under this Deed of Trust, together with interest as provided herein and all taxes or assessments, except for any taxes, assessments or other charges subject to which the Trust Estate shall have been sold; (b) second, to the payment of any and all other sums expended under the provisions of this Deed of Trust not then repaid, and all other sums (other than sums described in clause (c), below) required to be paid by Trustor pursuant to any provisions of this Deed of Trust or any other Loan Document, including, without limitation, all expenses, liabilities and advances made or incurred by Beneficiary under this Deed of Trust or in connection with the enforcement thereof, together with interest thereon as set forth herein, with the specific exception of any sums which might otherwise be recoverable by Beneficiary under the provisions of California Code of Civil Procedure Section 736; (c) third, to the payment of the whole amount then due, owing or unpaid upon the Note for the principal, interest, other charges and any damages, and any other sums advanced by, or owed to, Beneficiary and secured hereby, with the exception of any sums which might otherwise be recoverable by Beneficiary under the provisions of California Code of Civil Procedure Section 736; (d) fourth, to any and all portions of the Indebtedness which might otherwise be recoverable by Beneficiary under the provisions of California Code of Civil Procedure Section 736; and (e) fifth, the remainder, if any, to the persons legally entitled thereto.

6. MISCELLANEOUS.

6.1. Governing Law. This Deed of Trust shall be governed by and construed in accordance with the laws of the State of California without resort to choice of law principles.

6.2. Statements. Beneficiary shall, within ten (10) days after notice, furnish to Trustor a written statement setting forth the unpaid principal and interest due under the Note and any other component of the Indebtedness. Trustor agrees to pay Beneficiary for each such statement the maximum fee allowed by law or, if there is no maximum fee, such reasonable fee as is then charged by Beneficiary for such statement.

6.3. Reconveyance by Trustee. Upon written request of Beneficiary stating that the Indebtedness has been paid in full, and upon surrender of this Deed of Trust and the Note to Trustee for cancellation and retention, and upon payment by Trustor of Trustee's fees, Trustee shall reconvey to Trustor, or the person legally entitled thereto, without warranty, any portion of the Trust Estate then held hereunder. The recitals in such reconveyances of any matters or facts shall be conclusive proof of the truthfulness thereof.

6.4. Trustee. Trustee accepts this trust when this Deed of Trust, duly executed and acknowledged, is made a public record as provided by law. The trust hereby created shall be irrevocable by Trustor. Beneficiary may, from time to time, by a written instrument executed and acknowledged by Beneficiary and recorded in the county in which the Trust Estate is located, and by otherwise complying with applicable law, substitute a successor or successors to the Trustee named herein or acting hereunder. Trustee may resign at any time upon giving ten (10) days' notice in writing to Trustor and to Beneficiary. Trustor shall pay all costs, fees, and expenses of Trustee, its agents, and counsel in connection with the performance of its duties hereunder and shall pay all taxes (except federal and state income taxes) or other governmental charges or impositions imposed by any governmental authority on Trustee by reason of its interest in the Note, this Deed of Trust or any other Loan Document.

6.5. Further Assurances. Whenever reasonably requested by Beneficiary, Trustor shall promptly execute and deliver or cause to be executed and delivered all such other and further instruments, documents or assurances, and promptly do or cause to be done all such other and further things as may be necessary and reasonably required in order to further and more fully vest in Trustee or Beneficiary all rights, interest powers, benefits, privileges and advantages conferred or intended to be conferred by this Deed of Trust.

6.6. Notices. Whenever Beneficiary, Trustor or Trustee wishes to give any notice or demand with respect to this Deed of Trust, each such notice or demand shall be in writing and shall be given by personal service, certified or registered mail, return receipt requested, or Federal Express or other recognized overnight delivery service regularly providing proof of delivery, addressed to the address set forth at the beginning of this Deed of Trust. All such notices and demands shall be deemed given upon receipt. Any party may change its address for such notices by giving notice of such change to the other parties hereto.

6.7. Time. Time is of the essence in the performance of each and every obligation contained herein.

6.8. Successors and Assigns. This Deed of Trust inures to the benefit of and binds all parties hereto, their personal representatives, heirs, successors and assigns. The term Trustor includes both the original Trustor and any subsequent owner of the Trust Estate or any part thereof. The term Beneficiary shall mean the owner and holder of the Note whether or not named as Beneficiary herein.

6.9. Interpretation. The captions or headings at the beginning of each Section hereof are for the convenience of the parties and are not a part of this Deed of Trust. Whenever the context requires, the singular number includes the plural, and vice versa, and each gender includes each other gender.

6.10. Invalidity of Certain Provisions. If the lien of this Deed of Trust is invalid or unenforceable as to any part of the Indebtedness, or if such lien is invalid or unenforceable as to any part of the Trust Estate, the unsecured or partially secured portion of such Indebtedness shall be completely paid prior to the payment of the remaining and secured or partially secured portion, and all payments made, whether voluntary or under foreclosure or other enforcement action or procedure, shall be considered to have been first paid on and applied to the full payment of that portion of the Indebtedness which is not secured or not fully secured by the lien of this Deed of Trust. The invalidity of any provision of this Deed of Trust shall not affect the remaining provisions of this Deed of Trust or any part thereof and this Deed of Trust shall be construed as if such invalid provision, if any, had not been inserted herein.

6.11*. *Subrogation. To the extent that proceeds of the Note or advances under this Deed of Trust are used to pay any outstanding lien, charge or prior encumbrance against the Trust Estate, such proceeds or advances have been or will be advanced by Beneficiary at Trustor's request and Beneficiary shall be subrogated to any and all rights and liens held by any owner or holder of such outstanding liens, charges and prior encumbrances, irrespective of whether such liens, charges or encumbrances are released.

6.12*. *No Waiver. The acceptance by Beneficiary of any sum after it is due shall not constitute a waiver of the right either to require prompt payment, when due, of all other sums hereby secured or to declare a default as herein provided. The acceptance by Beneficiary of any sum in an amount less than the sum then due shall be deemed an acceptance only of the sum so paid, and such acceptance of less than the full amount due shall not constitute a waiver of the obligation of Trustor to pay the entire sum then due. In addition, Trustor's failure to pay the entire sum then due shall be and continue to be a default notwithstanding acceptance of an amount which is less than the full amount due, and Beneficiary or Trustee shall, at all times thereafter and until the entire sum then due has been paid (and notwithstanding the acceptance by Beneficiary thereafter of further sums) be entitled to exercise all rights in this Deed of Trust conferred upon them upon the occurrence of a default, and the right to proceed with a sale under any notice of default, and election to sell, shall in no way be impaired, whether any of such amounts are received prior or subsequent to such notice. Consent by Beneficiary to any transaction or action of Trustor which is subject to consent or approval of Beneficiary hereunder shall not be deemed a waiver of the right to require such consent or approval to future or successive transactions or actions. This Deed of Trust cannot be waived, amended, modified, changed, discharged or terminated orally, but only by an instrument in writing signed by the party against whom enforcement of any waiver, amendment, modification, change, discharge or termination is sought.

6.13*. *Counterparts. This Deed of Trust may be executed in any number of counterparts and each of such counterparts shall for all purposes be deemed to be an original, and all such counterparts shall together constitute one and the same Deed of Trust.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, Trustor has executed this Deed of Trust as of the date first above written.

WHEREAS, Lender is willing to make said loan provided the deed of trust securing the same is a lien or charge upon the described property prior and superior to the lien or charge of the deed of trust first above mentioned and provided that Beneficiary will specifically and unconditionally subordinate the lien or charge of the deed of trust first above mentioned to the lien or charge of the deed of trust in favor of Lender; and

WHEREAS, it is to the mutual benefit of the parties hereto that Lender make such loan to Owner; and Beneficiary is willing that the deed of trust securing the same shall, when recorded, constitute a lien or charge upon said real property which is unconditionally prior and superior to the lien or charge of the deed of trust first above mentioned.

NOW, THEREFORE, in consideration of the mutual benefits accruing to the parties hereto and other valuable consideration, the receipt and sufficiency of which consideration is hereby acknowledged, and in order to induce Lender to make the loan above referred to, it is hereby declared, understood and agreed as follows:

[Form 6:K] Personal Property Security Agreement

SECURITY AGREEMENT

THIS SECURITY AGREEMENT is made as of the ___ day of _____, by ___________, a ___________, whose address is ___________ (hereinafter called the "Debtor"), in favor of ___________ its successors and assigns, whose address is ___________, (hereinafter the "Secured Party").

1. RECITALS

1.1. The Debtor owes the Secured Party the sum of ___________ ($________), as evidenced by a Promissory Note Secured By Deed of Trust (hereinafter the "Note").

1.2. As security for the Note, Debtor has executed and delivered to the Secured Party a Deed of Trust with Assignment of Rents of even date herewith (the "Deed of Trust") encumbering the real property described on Exhibit "A," attached hereto and incorporated herein (hereinafter the "Real Property").

1.3. The making of said loan by Secured Party to Debtor is conditioned upon Debtor further securing the Note by giving to Secured Party a security interest in all of the property described on "Exhibit "B," attached hereto and incorporated herein. Such property includes, but is not limited to, whatever interest Debtor may have in all personal property which is now used upon (or may hereafter be appropriated for use on), and whatever interest Debtor may have in all personal property which is located on, the Real Property; all rights of Debtor under any policy or policies of insurance covering the property described on Exhibit "B," including but not limited to, all proceeds, loss payments, and premium refunds which may become payable with respect to such insurance policies; and any and all compensation, accounts, accounts receivable, fees, royalties, income, revenues, rights and benefits of any kind or nature generated by, from or in connection with, the ownership, use and/or operation of the Real Property, or any part thereof, whether such monies or right to monies arise by virtue of a contract, lease, license, concession agreement, or occupancy or other rental agreement, or any other contract or right under which Debtor is entitled to payment of monies; and various entitlements, permits, licenses, certificates, instruments and general intangibles of Debtor pertaining to the Real Property and its ownership, occupancy and/or use.

2. SECURITY INTEREST

2.1. In consideration of the aforesaid loan, Debtor hereby grants to Secured Party a security interest (hereinafter the "Security Interest") in the property described in Recital 1.3 above and on Exhibit "B" attached hereto and incorporated herein, including any and all replacements and proceeds of said property (hereinafter collectively referred to as the "Collateral").

2.2. This Security Agreement and the rights hereby granted shall secure the following (hereinafter sometimes collectively referred to as the "Obligations"):

WESTLAW © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(a) The principal of, the interest on, and any other sums due under the Note including any renewals, extensions or modifications thereof;

(b) The statutory and other costs of all legal proceedings brought by the Secured Party to enforce the Note or the Deed of Trust, this Security Agreement (including, but not limited to, Secured Party's reasonable attorneys' fees in connection therewith), and all other costs and expenses paid or incurred by Secured Party in respect of or in connection with the Collateral, and any other sums that may become due and payable hereunder by Debtor; and

(c) The observance and performance by Debtor of all of the terms, provisions, covenants and obligations on its part to be observed or performed under the Deed of Trust, this Security Agreement and any other of the documents providing further security for the Note.

3. DEBTOR WARRANTS, COVENANTS AND AGREES

Debtor warrants, covenants and agrees that:

3.1. Although proceeds of Collateral are covered by this Security Agreement, this shall not be construed to mean that Secured Party consents to any sale of the Collateral.

3.2. Except for purposes of replacement and repair, Debtor will not remove those items of Collateral which constitute tangible personal property (or allow any such item to be removed), from the Real Property upon which it is currently located, without the prior written consent of Secured Party. Debtor will promptly give written notice to the Secured Party of any substantial change in the character of its business conducted on the Real Property and of the cessation of all or any part thereof and of any loss or damage by fire or other casualty to any substantial part of the Collateral.

3.3. Debtor will, at all reasonable times, allow Secured Party or its representatives free and complete access to all of Debtor's records which in any way relate to the Collateral, for such inspection and examination as Secured Party deems necessary. Debtor shall also upon request of Secured Party from time to time submit up-to-date schedules of the items comprising the Collateral in such detail as Secured Party shall require.

3.4. Debtor, at its sole cost and expense, will protect and defend this Security Agreement, all of the rights of Secured Party hereunder, and the Collateral against the claims and demands of all other parties.

3.5. Debtor will at all times keep and maintain and/or cause it tenants to keep and maintain those items of tangible personal property which are part of the Collateral in good order, repair and condition, and will promptly replace or cause its tenant to replace, any part thereof that from time to time may become obsolete, badly worn, or in a state of disrepair, or, if supplies, be consumed in the normal course of Debtor's business operations. Except as otherwise provided in Section 3.7 hereof, all such replacements shall be free of any other lien, security interest or encumbrance of any nature. Debtor may sell or dispose of, or suffer or allow its tenant to sell or dispose of, only that part of the Collateral that Debtor is obliged to replace, and unless Secured Party then agrees otherwise in writing, all proceeds from any sale or disposition in excess of the amount expended for such replacements shall promptly be paid over by Debtor to Secured Party to be applied against the sums secured hereby, whether or not such sums are then due and payable.

3.6. Secured Party or its representative may at any and all reasonable times inspect the Collateral and may enter upon any and all premises where the same is kept or might be located.

3.7. Debtor will not, without obtaining the prior written consent of Secured Party, transfer or permit any transfer of the Collateral or any part thereof to be made, or any interest therein to be created by way of a sale (except as permitted in Paragraph 3.5, above), or by way of a grant of a security interest, or by way of a levy or other judicial process.

3.8. Debtor will promptly notify Secured Party of any levy, distraint or other seizure by legal process or otherwise of any part of the Collateral, and of any threatened or filed claims or proceedings that might in any way affect or impair any of the rights of Secured Party under this Security Agreement.

3.9. Secured Party at all times shall have a perfected security interest in the Collateral which shall be prior to any other interests therein. Debtor has and will continue to have full title to the Collateral free from any liens, leases, encumbrances, judgments or other claims (except the lien created hereby or as otherwise permitted pursuant to Section 3.7 above) and Secured Party's security interest in the Collateral constitutes and will continue to constitute a first, prior and indefeasible security interest in favor of Secured Party. Debtor will do all acts and things, and will execute and file all instruments (including, but not limited to, security agreements, financing statements, continuation statements, etc.) reasonably requested by Secured Party to establish, maintain and continue the perfected security interest of Secured Party in the Collateral, and will promptly on demand, pay all costs and expenses of filing and recording, including the costs of any searches deemed necessary by Secured Party from time to time to establish and determine the validity and the continuing priority of the security interest of Secured Party, and also pay all other claims and charges that in the opinion of Secured Party might prejudice, imperil or otherwise affect the Collateral or its security interest therein.

3.10. Debtor at its expense will obtain and maintain in force, or shall cause its tenant to obtain and maintain in force, insurance policies covering losses or damage to those items of Collateral which constitute physical personal property. The insurance policies to be obtained by Debtor shall be in form and amounts acceptable to Secured Party. Secured Party hereby acknowledges and agrees that, once such policies reflect that Secured Party is the loss payee, the insurance policies of Debtor's tenant currently in effect will be in form and amounts acceptable to Secured Party. Secured Party is hereby irrevocably appointed Debtor's attorney-in-fact to endorse any check or draft that may be payable to Debtor, alone or jointly with other payees, so that Secured Party may collect the proceeds payable for any loss under such insurance. The proceeds of such insurance, less any costs and expenses incurred or paid by Secured Party in the collection thereof, shall be applied either toward the cost of the repair or replacement of the items damaged or destroyed, or on account of any sums secured hereby, whether or not then due or payable, in the same manner, and subject to the same terms and conditions, as set forth in the Deed of Trust.

3.11. Secured Party may, at its option, and without any obligation to do so, pay, perform and discharge any and all amounts, costs, expenses and liabilities herein agreed to be paid or performed by Debtor, and all amounts expended by Secured Party in so doing shall become part of the Obligations secured hereby, and shall be immediately due and payable by Debtor to Secured Party upon demand theretofore, and shall bear interest at the Default Interest Rate (as that term is defined in the Note) from the dates of such expenditures until paid.

3.12. Upon the request of Secured Party, Debtor will furnish within five (5) days thereafter to Secured Party, or to any proposed assignee of the Note, Deed of Trust, this Security Agreement, and any other security for the Note, a written statement in form satisfactory to Secured Party, duly acknowledged, certifying the amount of the principal and interest then owing under the Note, whether any claims, offsets or defenses exist there against or against this Security Agreement, or any of the terms and provisions of any other agreement of Debtor securing the Note. In connection with any assignment by Secured Party of the Note, Deed of Trust, this Security Agreement, and any other security for the Note, Debtor hereby agrees to cause the insurance policies required hereby and by the Deed of Trust to be carried by Debtor, to be endorsed in form satisfactory to Secured Party or to such assignee, with loss payable clauses in favor of such assignee, and to cause such endorsements to be delivered to Secured Party within ten (10) calendar days after request therefor by Secured Party.

4. EVENTS OF DEFAULT

The occurrence of any of the following events shall constitute, and is hereby defined to be, an “Event of Default”:

4.1. Debtor (i) breaches any of the representations and warranties set forth herein, in the Note or in any of the other agreements or (ii) commits a default in the performance of or compliance with any of the terms, covenants or conditions of this Security Agreement, and such default shall continue for more than ten (10) business days after the date that Debtor's performance hereunder was due; provided, however, that if Debtor shall commit a non-monetary breach or default of any provision of any one or more of the agreements executed by Debtor, including without limitation, this Agreement, it shall not constitute an Event of Default hereunder unless said non-monetary breach or default is not cured within thirty (30) calendar days after Secured Party has given notice thereof to Debtor, or if the non-monetary breach or default is of a type which is not capable of being cured within a thirty (30) calendar-day period, then it shall not constitute an Event of Default hereunder unless Debtor has failed to commence with due diligence and dispatch the cure of said breach or default within thirty (30) calendar days after Secured Party's notice to Debtor, or Debtor does not thereafter promptly prosecute the cure of such non-monetary breach or default to completion within sixty (60) calendar days after Secured Party's notice to Debtor of said breach or default; or

4.2. Any failure of Debtor to pay any installment of principal and/or interest or any other sum due under the Note, or under any other Obligations secured hereby, at the time such installment shall become due and payable which failure continues beyond any applicable grace period; or

4.3. The occurrence of any Event of Default under the Note, the Deed of Trust or any other agreement, which shall continue beyond any grace period which may be therein provided, or failure of Debtor to observe and perform all of the terms, provisions, covenants and agreements under any other agreements given in connection herewith within the grace periods therein provided; or

4.4. If any warranty, representation or statement contained in this Security Agreement made or furnished to Secured Party by or on behalf of Debtor, shall be or shall prove to have been false when made or furnished; or

4.5. Any material loss, material theft, substantial damage, or any destruction of or the attachment of an encumbrance to any of the Collateral (other than as permitted pursuant to Paragraph 3.7 above), or the voluntary or involuntary transfer of any of the Collateral (and said Collateral is not replaced, restored or returned within thirty (30) calendar days) or the transfer of possession thereof to anyone other than tenants approved by Secured Party of any portion of the Real Property, or the sale or creation of a security interest, lien, attachment, levy, garnishment, distraint, or other process of, in or upon any of the Collateral, and if such attachment or other similar process is not bonded or released within thirty (30) days after levy.

5. SECURED PARTY'S REMEDIES

Upon the occurrence of an Event of Default hereunder, Secured Party shall have the following rights and remedies; at any time after giving notice and after the expiration of the grace period provided herein:

5.1. Secured Party may, at its option, declare all sums due under the Note immediately due and payable and Debtor shall on demand by Secured Party deliver the Collateral to Secured Party. Secured Party may, without further notice or demand and without legal process, take possession of the Collateral wherever found and, for this purpose, may enter upon the Real Property or upon any other property occupied by or in the control of Debtor. Secured Party may require Debtor to assemble the Collateral and make it available to Secured Party at a place to be designated by Secured Party that is reasonably convenient to both parties. In taking possession of the Collateral, Secured Party may also take any and all of Debtor's documents, instruments, computer hardware and software, files and records, and any receptacles and cabinets containing the same, relating to the Collateral and Secured Party may use the supplies and space of Debtor at Debtor's place of business as may be necessary or appropriate properly to administer and control the Collateral.

5.2. Secured Party may pursue any legal remedy available to collect all sums secured hereby and to enforce its title in and right to possession of the Collateral, and to enforce any and all other rights or remedies available to it, and no such action shall operate as a waiver of any other right or remedy of Secured Party under the terms hereof, or under the laws of the State of California.

5.3. Secured Party may, at its option, treat the Collateral and the Real Property, as an entirety or as one parcel or security for the Note. Accordingly, Secured Party shall have the right and power, to the extent that it is lawful, to cause the Collateral to be sold at the same time and together with the Real Property secured by the Deed of Trust for one total bid or price at any judicial sale whereby the Deed of Trust is foreclosed.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

5.4. Secured Party, upon obtaining possession of the Collateral or any part thereof, may sell the same at public or private sale either with or without having such Collateral at the place of sale, and with notice to Debtor as provided in Paragraph 5.6 herein. The proceeds of such sale, after deducting therefrom all expenses of Secured Party in taking, storing, repairing and selling the Collateral (including reasonable attorneys' fees) shall be applied to the payment of any part or all of the Obligations and any other indebtedness or liability of Debtor to Secured Party in such order as Secured Party may determine, and any surplus thereafter remaining shall be paid to Debtor, or any other person that may be legally entitled thereto.

5.5. At any sale, public or private, of the Collateral or any part thereof, made in the enforcement of the rights and remedies hereunder of Secured Party, Secured Party may, so far as may be lawful, purchase any part or parts of the Collateral or all thereof offered at such sale.

5.6. Secured Party shall give Debtor reasonable notice of any sale or other disposition of the Collateral or any part thereof. Debtor agrees that notice and demand shall be conclusively deemed to be reasonable and effective if such notice is mailed by regular or certified mail postage prepaid to Debtor at the address above given, or at such other address as Debtor may designate hereafter by written notice to Secured Party, at least ten (10) calendar days prior to such sale or other disposition.

5.7. Secured Party shall give notice of an Event of Default hereunder to those parties and in the manner set forth in the Deed of Trust, and shall allow any applicable grace periods therein provided, if any, to expire prior to exercising any remedies for default hereunder.

5.8. Secured Party shall have all the rights and remedies afforded a secured party under the California Commercial Code and all other legal or equitable remedies provided by the laws of the United States and the State of California.

5.9. Debtor irrevocably appoints Secured Party its true and lawful attorney-in-fact, which appointment is coupled with an interest, for purposes of accomplishing any of the foregoing. Debtor further nominates and appoints Secured Party as attorney-in-fact to perform all acts and execute all documents deemed necessary by Secured Party in furtherance of the terms of this Agreement; except, however, for receiving notice on behalf of Debtor.

6. MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

6.1. No Event of Default hereunder by Debtor shall be deemed to have been waived by Secured Party except by a writing to that effect signed on behalf of Secured Party by an officer thereof and no waiver of any such Event of Default shall operate as a waiver of any other Event of Default on a future occasion, or as a waiver of that Event of Default after written notice thereof and demand by Secured Party for strict performance of this Security Agreement. All rights, remedies and privileges of Secured Party hereunder shall be cumulative and not alternative, and shall, whether or not specifically so expressed, inure to the benefit of Secured Party, its successors and assigns, and all obligations of Debtor shall bind its successors and legal representative.

6.2. Until the occurrence of an Event of Default and expiration of any applicable grace period, Debtor may retain possession of the Collateral and may use it in any lawful manner not inconsistent with this Security Agreement or with the provisions of any policies of insurance thereon.

6.3. The terms hereof shall have the meanings set forth in and be construed under the California Commercial Code. Whenever possible each provision of this Security Agreement shall be interpreted in such manner as to be effective and valid under applicable law, but if any provision of this Security Agreement shall be prohibited by or invalid under applicable law, such provision shall be ineffective to the extent of such prohibition or invalidity, without invalidating the remainder of such provision or the remaining provisions of this Security Agreement.

6.4. No modification, rescission, waiver, release, alteration or amendment of any provision of this Security Agreement shall be made except by a written agreement subscribed by Debtor and a duly authorized officer of Secured Party.

6.5. This Security Agreement shall remain in full force and effect until all of the Obligations and any extensions or renewals thereof shall be paid in full.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

6.6. Secured Party and Debtor as used herein shall include the heirs, executors or administrators, or successors or assigns of those parties. The provisions of this Security Agreement shall apply to the parties according to the context hereof and without regard to the number or gender of words and expressions used herein.

6.7. This Security Agreement shall be governed by, and construed and enforced in accordance with, the laws of the State of California applicable to parties and transactions with contacts and relationships solely within the State of California and without reference to choice of law principles. Notice of acceptance of this Security Agreement by secured party is waived by debtor.

6.8. [Form 6:L] Guaranty

GUARANTY

FOR VALUABLE CONSIDERATION, receipt of which by the undersigned is acknowledged, and which is evidenced by various documents, including as applicable, a Promissory Note Secured by Deed of Trust ("Note") in the face amount of $________, a Deed of Trust, Security Agreement and Assignment of Rents and a Security Agreement, (all of even date herewith, and all jointly, and as applicable, severally, referred to as the "Loan Documents"); and to induce _____, _____ with offices at ___________ ("Lender") to make the loan described in the Loan Documents to or for the account of _____ ("Borrower") ("Loan"), which Loan Lender would not make but for this Guaranty, the undersigned (sometimes referred to herein as "Guarantors") irrevocably and unconditionally guarantees to Lender the full payment and prompt performance of each and every covenant, warranty, representation, provision, term and condition made or to be kept or performed by the Borrower and contained in the Loan Documents, and all liabilities, direct or contingent, joint, several, or independent arising in conjunction with said Loan Documents, including all liabilities of any assignee or successor in interest of Borrower, as performance becomes due, whether as installments, or whether at maturity, or earlier by reason of acceleration or otherwise, or whether extended, together with interest, attorneys' fees, and other costs and expenses which Borrower is obligated to pay under the terms and provisions of any Loan Document.

The undersigned hereby expressly waives the following, including, without limitation, any and all defenses, claims and set-offs of any kind or nature arising directly or indirectly as a result of any of the following: (i) acceptance or notice of the acceptance of this Guaranty; (ii) notice of the existence or creation of any Loan Documents; (iii) presentment, demand, notice of dishonor, protest, and all other notice whatsoever; (iv) the invalidity, irregularity, or unenforceability of the liabilities hereby guaranteed; (v) all diligence on the part of Lender in collection or protection of, or realization upon, any security for any of the liabilities or in enforcing any remedy available to it under any Loan Document; (vi) the right or power under any statute or rule of law, to demand, or otherwise require, that Lender take, initiate or pursue any action against the Borrower or against the property of the Borrower standing as security for the liabilities; (vii) any defense that may now or hereafter arise by reason of the incapacity, lack of authority, death or disability of Borrower, or any officer, partner or agent of Borrower, any co-guarantor, or any other person or entity or the failure of Lender to file or enforce a claim against the estate (either in administration, bankruptcy, or any other proceeding) of Borrower or any other person or entity; (viii) any duty on the part of Lender to disclose to the undersigned any facts it may now or hereafter know regarding the Borrower; (ix) the defense of the statute of limitations in any action hereunder or for the collection of the indebtedness or the performance of any obligation hereby guaranteed; (x) any delay on the part of Lender in exercising any of its rights under this Guaranty, or otherwise; (xi) until the obligations hereby guaranteed are satisfied in full, any right of subrogation to Lender against Borrower and any rights to enforce any remedy which Lender may have against Borrower and any rights to participate in any security for the Note or Loan Documents; and (xii) any defense based upon an election of remedies by Lender which destroys or otherwise impairs any subrogation rights of the undersigned or the right of the undersigned to proceed against Borrower for reimbursement, and/or any other rights of the undersigned to proceed against Borrower, against any other guarantor, or against any other person or security, including, without limitation, any defense based upon an election of remedies by Lender under the provisions of Section 580d and 726 of the California Code of Civil Procedure and/or any similar law of California or of any other jurisdiction; (xiv) any right to assert against Lender any defense (legal or equitable), set-off, counterclaim, and/or claim which the undersigned may now or at any time hereafter have against Borrower and/or any other party liable to Lender in any way or manner.

Without in any way limiting the foregoing, or any other provision in this Guaranty, the undersigned Guarantors agree as follows. Guarantors agree that nothing contained in this Guaranty shall prevent Lender from suing on the Note or from exercising any rights available to it under the Note or under any of the Loan Documents, and that the exercise of any of these rights shall not constitute a legal or equitable discharge of Guarantors. Guarantors understand that the exercise by the Lender of certain rights and remedies contained in the Loan Documents may affect or eliminate Guarantors' right of subrogation against Borrower and that Guarantors may therefore succeed to a partially or totally nonreimbursable liability hereunder. Nevertheless, Guarantors hereby authorize and empower Lender to exercise, in its sole discretion, any rights and remedies, or any combination of rights and remedies that may then be available, since it is the intent and purpose of Guarantors that the obligations hereunder shall be absolute, independent, and unconditional under any and all circumstances. Without limiting the generality of the foregoing, Guarantors expressly waive any and all benefits under California Civil Code Sections 2809, 2810, 2819, 2845, 2849, 2850, and 2855, and California Code of Civil Procedure Sections 580a, 580b, 580d and 726. Guarantors understand that each have a defense to a deficiency judgment under California Code of Civil Procedure Section 580d should the Lender elect to pursue nonjudicial foreclosure remedies, and each Guarantor expressly waives any and all benefits of any defense to a deficiency judgment should Lender elect to exercise its nonjudicial foreclosure remedies (including waiver of any Guarantor's defense under Section 580d).

[NOTE: The lender may wish to use either of the following paragraphs (quoting from Civil Code § 2856) in lieu of, or in addition to, the waivers set forth in the preceding paragraph:

"Guarantor waives all rights and defenses arising out of an election of remedies by the creditor, even though that election of remedies, such as a nonjudicial foreclosure with respect to security for a guaranteed obligation, has destroyed the guarantor's rights of subrogation and reimbursement against the principal by the operation of Section 580d of the Code of Civil Procedure or otherwise."

OR

"Guarantor waives all rights and defenses that the guarantor may have because the debtor's debt is secured by real property. This means, among other things: (1) The creditor may collect from the guarantor without first foreclosing on any real or personal property collateral pledged by the debtor. (2) If the creditor forecloses on any real property collateral pledged by the debtor: (A) The amount of the debt may be reduced only by the price for which that collateral is sold at the foreclosure sale, even if the collateral is worth more than the sale price. (B) The creditor may collect from the guarantor even if the creditor, by foreclosing on the real property collateral, has destroyed any right the guarantor may have to collect from the debtor. This is an unconditional and irrevocable waiver of any rights and defenses the guarantor may have because the debtor's debt is secured by real property. These rights and defenses include, but are not limited to, any rights or defenses based upon Sections 580a, 580b, 580d or 726 of the Code of Civil Procedure."]

In addition to but not in limitation of the preceding, the undersigned agrees that Lender may, at any time and from time to time (more than once), without the consent of, or notice or responsibility to the undersigned, and without impairing or releasing any obligations or liability of the undersigned, upon or without any terms or conditions and in whole or in part: (i) change the manner, place or terms of payment, or change or extend the time of payment of, renew, reamortize or accelerate any liability of Borrower hereby guaranteed; (ii) alter, change, amend or modify any liability of Borrower hereby guaranteed and the terms and provisions of any documents evidencing or securing said liability, including without limitation, to increase or decrease the principal sum thereof or rate of interest thereon and to defer any installment payments of principal or interest and charge interest on the payments deferred at rates acceptable to Lender; (iii) sell, exchange, release, surrender, realize upon or otherwise deal with, in any manner and in any order, any property by whomsoever at any time pledged or mortgaged to secure or howsoever securing the liabilities hereby guaranteed, or any liabilities including those hereby guaranteed, whether incurred directly or indirectly in respect thereof, or offset there against; (iv) exercise or refrain from exercising any rights against Borrower or others, including the undersigned or otherwise in any way act or refrain from acting; (v) settle or compromise any liabilities hereby guaranteed or any liabilities due to Lender, incurred directly or indirectly, and subordinate the payment of all or any part thereof to the payment of any liabilities which may be due to Lender or others; (vi) apply any sums by whomsoever paid or howsoever realized to any liability or liabilities of Borrower to Lender, regardless of what liability or liabilities of Borrower to Lender remain unpaid; (vii) release any guarantor or endorser of the Note or Loan Documents; and (viii) accept a conveyance or conveyances of all or part of the property encumbered by the Loan Documents as partial satisfaction of the liability due under the Loan Documents and proceed against the undersigned for the balance due after said conveyance or conveyances. The undersigned agrees that Lender may do any or all of the foregoing in such manner, upon such terms, and at such times as Lender, in its sole discretion, deems advisable, without, in any way or respect, impairing, affecting, reducing or releasing the undersigned from the undersigned's undertakings hereunder, and the undersigned hereby consents to each and all of the foregoing acts, events and/or occurrences. This Guaranty shall apply to any liability of Borrower hereby guaranteed, or any other liabilities, incurred directly or indirectly as the result of any change, extension, renewal, increase, reamortization, amendment, modification or alteration of the Loan Documents in any manner.

Notwithstanding any foreclosure of the lien of the deed of trust or security agreement with respect to any or all real or personal property secured thereby, whether by the exercise of the power of sale contained herein, by an action for judicial foreclosure, or by an acceptance of a deed in lieu of foreclosure, each Guarantor shall remain bound under this Guaranty on the indebtedness that is the subject of the Note and all instruments securing said Note and shall be liable to Lender for any part of the indebtedness remaining unpaid after any foreclosure.

The provisions of this Guaranty shall extend and be applicable to all renewals, amendments, extensions, consolidations and modifications of the Note and Loan Documents, and shall continue unabated notwithstanding the failure of Lender to give the undersigned notice of any of the preceding. Any and all references herein to the Note and Loan Documents shall be deemed to include any such renewals, extensions, amendments, consolidations or modifications thereof.

In the event Borrower fails to perform its covenants, agreements and undertakings as provided in any of the Loan Documents, including its covenant to make payment as and when due, the undersigned shall immediately upon the written demand of Lender promptly and with due diligence, do and perform for the benefit of Lender, all of such covenants, agreements and undertakings, including the covenant to make payment as and when due, as if it constituted the direct and primary obligations of the undersigned.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

The obligations of the undersigned are independent of the obligations of Borrower or one another, and a separate action or actions for payment of any installment, payment upon maturity or upon acceleration, damages, or performance may be brought and prosecuted against the undersigned or any one of them, whether or not (i) an action is brought against the Borrower or the security for Borrower's obligation; (ii) Borrower is joined in any such action or actions; (iii) notice is given or demand is made upon Borrower; (iv) remedies are exhausted against the Borrower or the security for Borrower's obligation under the Loan Documents; and (v) any payment by Borrower to Lender is held to constitute a preference in any bankruptcy of Borrower or if for any reason Lender is required to refund such payment or pay such amount to Borrower or someone else.

The undersigned hereby authorizes and empowers Lender, at its sole discretion, and without notice to the undersigned, to exercise any right or remedy which Lender may have, as to any security, whether real, personal, or intangible, including, but not limited to, commencement of judicial foreclosure, exercise of rights of power of sale, acceptance of a deed or assignment in lieu of foreclosure, appointment of a receiver to collect, or direct collection of, rents and profits, exercise of remedies against personal property, or enforcement of any assignment of leases. If the indebtedness guaranteed hereby is partially paid for any reason, this Guaranty shall nevertheless remain in full force and effect, and the undersigned shall remain liable for the entire unpaid balance of the indebtedness guaranteed hereby.

The undersigned hereby subordinates any and all indebtedness of Borrower now or hereafter owed to the undersigned, or any of them, to all indebtedness of Borrower to Lender, and agrees with Lender that the undersigned shall not demand or accept any payment of principal or interest from Borrower, shall not claim any offset or other reduction of the undersigned's obligations hereunder because of any such indebtedness and shall not take any action to obtain any of the security described in and encumbered by the Loan Documents.

This Guaranty is an irrevocably absolute, continuing guaranty of payment and not a guaranty of collection. If this Guaranty is executed by more than one signer, all agreements and promises herein contained shall be construed, and are hereby declared to be, joint and several in each and every particular, and shall be fully binding upon and enforceable against either, any, or all of such signers, and neither the death, bankruptcy, insolvency, release of or revocation by one or more signers shall affect or release the liability of any other signer, either as to indebtedness then existing or thereafter incurred. The death of any of the undersigned shall not revoke this Guaranty as to such decedent unless and until written notice thereof is actually received by Lender and until all indebtedness then existing is fully paid and discharged.

The undersigned shall pay to Lender all attorneys' fees and costs incurred by Lender in seeking to enforce any of the liabilities or obligations of the undersigned under this Guaranty.

Nothing contained in this Guaranty shall prevent Lender from bringing any action or exercising any rights against any security or against the undersigned personally, or against any property of the undersigned, within any other state. Initiating such proceeding or taking such action in any other state shall in no event constitute a waiver of the agreement contained herein that the law of the State of California shall govern the rights and obligations of the undersigned and Lender hereunder or of the submission herein made by the undersigned to personal jurisdiction within the State of California. The aforesaid means of obtaining jurisdiction and perfecting service of process are not intended to be exclusive but are cumulative and in addition to all other means of obtaining personal jurisdiction and perfecting service of process now or hereafter provided by the laws of the State of California.

This Guaranty shall be construed in accordance with the laws of the State of California, and such laws shall govern the interpretation, construction and enforcement hereof. Wherever possible each provision of this Guaranty shall be interpreted in such a manner as to be effective and valid under applicable law, but if any provision of this Guaranty, or application thereof, shall be prohibited by or be invalid under such law, such provision or application, as the case may be, shall be ineffective to the extent of such prohibition or invalidity, without invalidating the remainder of such provision or other applications or the remaining provisions of this Guaranty.

Except as otherwise provided herein, any and all notices, elections, demands, requests and responses thereto permitted or required to be given under this Guaranty shall be in writing, shall be deemed properly given and shall be effective upon either (i) three (3) days after their deposit in the United States mail postage prepaid, (ii) two (2) days after their deposit in a nationally recognized overnight courier service, or (iii) on the day of their personal delivery if delivered to the undersigned at the address designated below or at such other address as is specified in writing by any party to the others, provided that no change of address by the undersigned shall be effective unless the undersigned first serves notice of such change of address on Lender in writing by certified mail with return receipt requested, retaining a copy of such receipt in its files. Personal delivery to a party or to any officer, agent or employee at such address shall constitute receipt. Rejection or other refusal to accept or inability to deliver because of changed address of which no notice has been received shall also constitute receipt. Any such notice, election, demand, request or response, if given to Lender or the undersigned, shall be addressed as follows:

Time is of the essence in this Guaranty. All prior understandings, discussions and agreements are merged in the governing terms of this Guaranty, which is a complete and final written expression of the parties hereto. The undersigned acknowledge that the undersigned, and each of them, are not relying upon any oral representations and that this Guaranty is intended to be a legal and binding document. This Guaranty may not be changed orally, and no obligation of the undersigned can be released or waived by Lender or any officer or agent of Lender, except by a writing signed by a duly authorized officer of Lender. This Guaranty shall be irrevocable by the undersigned until all indebtedness guaranteed hereby has been completely repaid and all obligations and undertakings of the Borrower under, by reason of or pursuant to the Loan Documents have been completely performed.

This Guaranty and each of its provisions shall be binding upon the undersigned and upon the heirs, legal representatives, successors and assigns of the undersigned, and of each of them, respectively, and shall inure to the benefit of Lender, its successors and assigns. Lender shall be entitled to assign this Guaranty and all of its rights, privileges and remedies hereunder without notice to or consent of the undersigned, and such assignee shall be entitled to the benefits of this Guaranty and to exercise all such rights, interests and remedies as fully as Lender.

The term “undersigned” as used herein shall mean the entity or person executing this Guaranty, or any one or more of them. Anyone signing this Guaranty shall be bound hereby, whether or not anyone else signs this Guaranty at any time.

This Guaranty shall continue in full force and effect until all obligations of Borrower under the Loan Documents are fully paid, performed and discharged and Lender gives the undersigned written notice of that fact. The obligations of Borrower under the Loan Documents shall not be considered fully paid, performed and discharged unless and until all payments by Borrower to Lender are no longer subject to any right on the part of any person whomsoever, including, without limitation, Borrower, Borrower as a debtor-in-possession, and/or any trustee in bankruptcy, to set aside such payments or seek to recoup the amount of such payments, or any part thereof. The foregoing shall include, by way of example and not by way of limitation, all rights to recover preferences voidable under Title 11 of the United States Code. In the event that any such payments by Borrower to Lender are set aside after the making thereof, in whole or in part, or settled without litigation, to the extent of such settlement, all of which is within Lender's sole discretion, the undersigned shall be liable for the full amount Lender is required to repay plus costs, interest, attorneys' fees and any and all expenses which Lender paid or incurred in connection therewith.

In the event that any bankruptcy, insolvency, receivership or similar proceeding is instituted by or against the undersigned and/or Borrower, or in the event that either the undersigned or Borrower becomes insolvent, makes an assignment for the benefit of creditors, or attempts to effect a composition with creditors, then, at Lender's election, without notice or demand, the obligations of the undersigned created hereunder shall become due, payable and enforceable against the undersigned whether or not the obligations of Borrower under the Loan Documents are then due and payable.

Notwithstanding any modification, discharge or extension of any obligations or liabilities under the Loan Documents or any amendment, modification, stay or cure of Lender's rights under the Loan Documents which may occur in any bankruptcy or reorganization case or proceeding concerning the Borrower, whether permanent or temporary, and whether assented to by Lender, the undersigned hereby agrees that it shall be obligated hereunder to perform in accordance with the terms of the Loan Documents and this Guaranty as originally written and not as so amended, modified, stayed or cured.

The undersigned understands and acknowledges that by virtue of this Guaranty, it has specifically assumed any and all risks of a bankruptcy or reorganization case or proceeding with respect to the Borrower. As an example and not by way of limitation, a subsequent modification of the Note in any reorganization case concerning the Borrower shall not affect the obligation of the undersigned to pay the Note in accordance with its original terms.

The undersigned represents and warrants to Lender that the undersigned has received, or will receive, direct or indirect benefit from the making of this Guaranty and the extension of the Loan or credit to Borrower as set forth in the Loan Documents.

THE UNDERSIGNED WAIVES THE RIGHT TO TRIAL BY JURY IN ANY AND EVERY ACTION OR PROCEEDING OF ANY KIND OR NATURE UNDER OR BY REASON OF OR RELATING IN ANY WAY TO THIS GUARANTY, THE LOAN DOCUMENTS OR ANY OF THE MATTERS AND THINGS REFERRED TO HEREIN.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the undersigned have executed this as of the date set forth below.

(2) Other considerations
(a) [7:52] Tailoring investment to use
(b) [7:53] Use benefits equivalent to fee ownership

1. [7:1] Overview: The term "ground lease" is somewhat of a misnomer. "Ground lease" is simply a euphemism for a long-term lease, often involving vacant land upon which the tenant is permitted (or required) to build improvements. A "ground lease" has no defined legal significance and could just as easily be (and often is) denominated a "lease," "land lease" or any other designation indicating a leasehold. Thus, a ground lease involves all of the legal and practical issues associated with most any lease.

Apart from the concerns normally associated with the acquisition of a fee interest (Ch. 4), the purchase and sale of a "ground leasehold" presents some of the most sophisticated leasing issues. However, because of its extended term, the parties in many ways functionally treat the ownership and sale of a ground leasehold as they would the ownership and transfer of a fee interest. Therefore, in negotiations for the purchase and sale of a ground leasehold, counsel and client must analyze and weave together both leasehold and fee interest issues. As will be seen, the basic form of a purchase and sale agreement for the transfer of a ground leasehold interest should essentially be the same as for the purchase and sale of a fee interest, discussed in Ch. 4. Likewise, an escrow should be employed as it would when transferring a fee (discussed in Ch. 4).

Ground leaseholds exist in connection with every kind of real property: e.g., office, industrial, retail and residential developments. (However, in residential projects, the development is usually a common interest subdivision—such as a condominium or planned unit development.) Regardless of the type of property involved, the issues for the parties and their counsel are almost always the same.

(Scope Note: This Chapter focuses on the transfer of a tenant's interest in a ground lease; it does not deal with the creation of a ground lease or the ongoing landlord-tenant relationship. For a comprehensive treatment of the creation and termination of tenancies, and landlord-tenant rights and obligations during a tenancy, see Friedman, Garcia & Hoy, Cal. Prac. Guide: Landlord-Tenant (TRG).)

• FORM: A sample ground lease is reproduced at the close of this Chapter as Form 7:A.

2. [7:2] Distinguishing Features: Ground leases are distinguishable from other leasehold interests in various fundamental characteristics. These are among the more salient distinguishing features:

a. [7:3] Extensive term: Perhaps the most obvious difference between a ground lease and other leases is the duration of the term. The term of a ground lease is typically very long—35, 50 or 99 years.

(1) [7:4] Statutory limits on duration of certain kinds of leases: However, the Civil Code restricts the term of certain leases.

(a) Examples

1) [7:5] Municipal property: Property owned, managed or controlled by a municipality (or department or board thereof) ordinarily cannot be leased for a term greater than 55 years (Civ.C. § 718); but the term can be extended for up to 99 years if the municipality follows specified statutory procedures (Civ.C. § 719).

2) [7:6] Municipal mineral leases: Property owned by a municipality may not be subject to a mineral lease exceeding 35 years. [Civ.C. § 718]

3) [7:7] Municipal tideland or submerged land leases: Any lease of tidelands or submerged lands granted to any city by the State of California may not exceed 66 years. Likewise, tidelands or submerged lands owned or controlled by a city may not be leased for a period exceeding 66 years. [Civ.C. § 718]

4) [7:8] Nonmunicipal mineral, oil and gas leases: Mineral, oil and gas leases on nonmunicipal property may not exceed 99 years. [Civ.C. § 718f]

5) [7:9] Agricultural property: A lease for "agricultural or horticultural purposes" cannot exceed 51 years. [Civ.C. § 717]

6) [7:10] Town or city lots: The lease of any town or city lot is limited to a maximum 99-year term (this restriction typically applies to commercial, including retail, property). [Civ.C. § 718; see Shaver v. Clanton (1994) 26 CA4th 568, 576, 31 CR2d 595, 599-600]

7) [7:10.1] State park land: The Department of Parks and Recreation may lease state park system property for any "compatible" use up to a maximum 10-year term (longer terms must be approved by the Joint Legislative Budget Committee, as statutorily prescribed). [See Pub.Res.C. § 5003.17]

(b) [7:11] Options to renew included: The statutory limits set forth at ¶ 7:4 ff. apply to the lease term as initially stated in the ground lease and as extended by the grant of options to renew. Thus, even though the original lease term is within the applicable statutory limit, the lease violates the applicable statute if it provides for options (or perpetual options) by which it could be extended beyond the authorized term. [Shaver v. Clanton (1994) 26 CA4th 568, 575-576, 31 CR2d 595, 599-600—shopping center lease that provided for original 10-year term but was amended to provide for perpetual five-year options to renew violated Civ.C. § 718; Epstein v. Zahloute (1950) 99 CA2d 738, 739, 222 P2d 318, 319—right of perpetual renewal violates Civ.C. § 718; but see Fisher v. Parsons (1963) 213 CA2d 829, 842, 29 CR 210, 218—fact that lease might violate Civ.C. § 718 does not make term unlawful]

(c) [7:12] Effect of excessive term: Some of the statutes setting a maximum term are seemingly worded to make the lease invalid if it exceeds the maximum authorized term (see, e.g., Civ.C. § 717—no lease for agricultural or horticultural purposes exceeding 51 years "shall be valid"; Civ.C. § 718—no lease of town or city lot exceeding 99-year term "shall be valid"). Nonetheless these statutes are construed to void only the excess term; i.e., a lease exceeding the maximum authorized term is valid for the maximum authorized term. [See Tufeld Corporation v. Beverly Hills Gateway, L.P. (2022) 86 CA5th 12, 18, 29, 302 CR3d 203, 206, 214—amended commercial ground lease deemed void to extent its term exceeded 99 years in contravention of Civ.C. § 718's public policy, discussed further at ¶ 7:326; Shaver v. Clanton (1994) 26 CA4th 568, 576, 31 CR2d 595, 600, & fn. 9—town or city lot lease granting perpetual options to renew violates Civ.C. § 718 but is valid for 99-year term from its effective date; see also Kendall v. Southward (1957) 149 CA2d 827, 828-830, 308 P2d 915, 917-918—agricultural lease for life does not violate Civ.C. § 717 except to extent it may actually exceed statutory limit]

• [7:12.1] Comment: There is contrary authority holding that (at least with regard to the Civ.C. § 718 99-year term on town or city lot leases), a lease exceeding the maximum statutory term is void from its inception (Epstein v. Zahloute (1950) 99 CA2d 738, 739, 222 P2d 318, 319). However, that position has been criticized as a departure from a clear line of case law, including Cal. Supreme Court authority (Harter v. City of San Jose (1904) 141 C 659, 667, 75 P 344, 347—lease in violation of statutory term "would not be void except as to the excess of the period"). [See Shaver v. Clanton (1994) 26 CA4th 568, 576, 31 CR2d 595, 600, fn. 9]

(2) Restrictions on commencement date

(a) [7:13] Rule against perpetuities: Like ordinary leasehold estates, ground leases are, theoretically, subject to the rule against perpetuities (Prob.C. § 21205—nonvested property interest invalid unless (i) certain to vest or terminate no later than 21 years after death of an individual then alive, or (ii) it vests or terminates within 90 years after its creation). However, so long as already vested, a long-term lease is not affected by the rule. [Fisher v. Parsons (1963) 213 CA2d 829, 838-841, 29 CR 210, 215-217]

1) [7:14] Compare—nonvested and contingent leaseholds: On the other hand, leaseholds could be vulnerable to the rule against perpetuities where the tenant's rights are contingent and have not yet vested—e.g., if the commencement date is uncertain and there are no deadlines after which the nonvested interest will terminate. [First & C Corp. v. Wencke (1967) 253 CA2d 719, 726, 61 CR 531, 536]

a) [7:14.1] Commercial lease exemption: Nonetheless, California law exempts all nondonative commercial transactions from the statutory rule against perpetuities. [See Prob.C. § 21225(a); Shaver v. Clanton (1994) 26 CA4th 568, 574, 31 CR2d 595, 599—commercial lease granting perpetual options to renew not violative of rule against perpetuities]

(Comment: Loose drafting of Prob.C. § 21200 et seq. has raised the question whether, by exempting these interests from the statutory rule against perpetuities, the Legislature meant for those interests to remain subject to the common law rule against perpetuities. Shaver, supra, did not consider the issue; and there is, as yet, no reported California decision on point.)

1/ [7:14.2] Special rule of construction re renewal provisions: Although enforceable, commercial lease provisions giving a tenant the right to perpetual renewals are disfavored. Indeed, leases allowing for unlimited extensions are enforceable only if they clearly and unequivocally establish the parties intended to give the tenant unlimited extensions. Otherwise, the leases are construed as providing for only one renewal. [See Ginsberg v. Gamson (2012) 205 CA4th 873, 889-893, 141 CR3d 62, 74-78—option to renew commercial lease for additional five-year periods did not unequivocally demonstrate parties' intent to create unlimited extension rights, rendering lease subject to only one renewal]

[7:14.3 - 7:14.4] Reserved.

b) [7:14.5] Reformation to cure perpetuities problems: Even where the rule against perpetuities would otherwise apply to the transaction (primarily, donative family-oriented transfers), the court is empowered to reform the disposition to make it consistent with the rule and the parties' intent. [See Prob.C. § 21220; Shaver v. Clanton (1994) 26 CA4th 568, 575-576, 31 CR2d 595, 599 & fn. 8]

(b) [7:15] Statutory maximum 30-year actual commencement date: Even if consistent with the rule against perpetuities, a lease to commence at a specified future date or upon the happening of a future event becomes invalid if its term does not actually commence in possession within 30 years after its execution. [Civ.C. § 715]

b. [7:16] Construction of improvements: Unlike many other leases, ground leases usually involve property that is initially either completely unimproved, minimally improved, or in need of rebuilding (hence, the term “ground” or “land” lease). Also, in contrast to most other landlord-tenant relationships, the ground lease tenant (rather than the landlord) constructs (and often initially owns) the improvements.

This feature of the tenancy relationship impacts a variety of other leasehold issues:

(1) [7:17] Landlord approval rights: The ground lease tenant will require that it be granted broad discretion regarding what it can build, with only minimal landlord rights of approval.

(2) [7:18] Future alterations: The ground lease tenant will also require wide latitude in making future alterations and modifications to the improvements, again subject to only minimal landlord rights of approval. (The longer the lease, the more likely the tenant will be making future alterations to modernize or adapt the property to a changing commercial environment.)

(3) [7:19] Ownership of improvements: Because the tenant is usually constructing and paying for the initial improvements or the renovation of existing ones, it often requires certain ownership rights in those structures during the lease term. Ultimately, however, the improvements become the landlord's property (certainly, at the end of the lease term unless the landlord requires their removal). [See Auerbach v. Assessment Appeals Bd. No. 1 for County of Los Angeles (2006) 39 C4th 153, 162-163, 45 CR3d 774, 779-780]

The tenant's ownership of the structures during the lease term may provide the tenant with certain tax benefits—such as the right to depreciate the construction costs. The parties' ownership designations in the lease, however, are not binding on the taxing authorities.

Aside from tax concerns, the issue of who owns the improvements often becomes important in the context of damage/destruction and condemnation; see ¶ 7:222 ff.

(4) [7:20] Repair and maintenance obligations: Because the tenant usually constructs (and, at least initially, owns) the improvements, the tenant typically has virtually all of the repair and maintenance obligations for the lease term.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

c. [7:21] Financeability of leasehold: Most ordinary leases do not contemplate that the tenant will finance its leasehold interest. However, because a ground lease tenant may need to borrow funds to pay for the construction of improvements (or may otherwise periodically desire to finance and refinance its interest in such a long-term leasehold), a ground lease should almost always be financeable and contain appropriate provisions granting rights to the tenant's lender (the "leasehold mortgagee"). See ¶ 7:390 ff.

d. [7:22] Use: Ground lease tenants must make certain that the lease allows for a flexible change of use. This is especially important because of the extensive duration of the rental term; i.e., ground lease tenants will rarely be able to foresee what potential uses might be desirable or necessary 30, 50 or 90 years hence.

Significantly, optimum change of use rights will be important for these reasons:

• [7:23] To accommodate the tenant's growth or change of plans during the course of the long-term lease.

• [7:24] To accommodate the needs of various subtenants who may be subleasing portions of the property from time to time.

• [7:25] To accommodate the needs of any third party to whom the tenant might assign its interest.

• [7:26] To satisfy a future leasehold mortgagee. The tenant's lender will require that the tenant have broad usage rights because, if it should become the owner of the leasehold interest through foreclosure, it will want the ability to select from as broad a pool of prospective new tenants as possible in assigning the lease. See ¶ 7:403, 7:406.

➪ [7:27] PRACTICE POINTER: It thus behooves tenants to insist on a lease permitting open-ended use "for any lawful purpose" (or similar nonrestrictive language).

However, negotiating for such latitude can be difficult. The landlord (fee owner) may be looking for a particular usage as a source of income to satisfy the tenant's rent obligation. For example, a landlord who expects the property to be developed as a shopping center may require that use be restricted to retail purposes. Moreover, because the landlord will ultimately end up owning the improvements, it may be entering into the lease with an expectation that the property will always be used as (and the landlord will eventually inherit) a shopping center, retail office building, or medical building, etc. In these cases, the landlord may be unyielding on the issue of certain use (and change in use) restrictions. See further discussion at ¶ 7:170 ff.

e. [7:28] Damage, destruction and partial condemnation: In many leaseholds, landlord and/or tenant might desire that the lease terminate upon damage or destruction of the structures (or partial condemnation of the structures or land). But in the ground leasehold context, the landlord usually requires that the structures be rebuilt in the event of damage, destruction or partial condemnation. Moreover, the ground lease tenant will rarely want these events to trigger a termination of its long-term leasehold. Therefore, a ground lease typically will—and should—include extensive provisions governing the parties' rights and obligations upon damage, destruction or condemnation. See discussion at ¶ 7:222 ff.

[7:29] Reserved.

f. [7:30] Assignments and subletting: Many ordinary leases restrict transferability of the tenant's interest, or condition the right of transfer on the landlord's prior consent. However, as with the subject of future use changes, the extensive duration of a ground lease makes flexible rights of assignment and subleasing important to ground lease tenants; also, potential leasehold mortgagees will require extremely liberal sublease/assignment rights (¶ 7:406). Thus, it is in the tenant's interest to negotiate for an unrestricted right to transfer its leasehold interest, keeping landlord approval rights to a minimum. See detailed discussion at ¶ 7:60 ff.

g. [7:31] Maintenance of property: Most ordinary leases put some responsibility for maintaining the property on the landlord (e.g., at a minimum, the landlord is often required to maintain the structural portions of the improvements). In contrast, the landlord characteristically has no maintenance obligations under a long-term ground lease; this is because, conceptually, the parties view the relationship as giving the tenant almost exclusive control of (and corresponding obligations for) the property during the term.

Indeed, the longer the lease term, the more likely courts are to construe lease language purporting to shift all repair and maintenance obligations to the tenant as including renovation and abatement responsibilities that normally accompany ownership interests and, under a short-term lease, would significantly benefit only the landlord's reversionary interest. [See Brown v. Green (1994) 8 C4th 812, 831-832, 35 CR2d 598, 610—relatively long-term (15-year) lease for substantial rent construed to shift asbestos clean-up responsibility to tenant; compare Hadian v. Schwartz (1994) 8 C4th 836, 847-848, 35

CR2d 589, 596—relatively short-term (3 years with 5-year renewal option) low-rent lease construed not to shift seismic reconstruction obligation to tenant]

h. [7:32] Allocation of repair, maintenance and operating costs: The allocation of costs relating to the property is a matter of contract and is typically specified in great detail in a properly drafted ground lease. These costs include taxes, insurance, utilities, repair, maintenance and other operating expenses.

(1) [7:33] "Gross lease" vs. "net lease": The leasing industry typically utilizes the terms "gross" or "net" lease to describe expense allocations.

(a) [7:34] "Gross lease"—allocated to landlord: Generally, under a "gross lease," the tenant has no responsibility for costs relating to ownership of the property (taxes, insurance, repairs, maintenance, utilities, etc.).

(b) [7:35] "Net lease"—allocated to tenant: The term "net" or "triple net" means the tenant is responsible for most (or all) of the costs normally associated with ownership of the property. In economic terms, under a net lease, the landlord "foregoes the speculative advantages of ownership in return for the agreed net rental"; the tenant, in exchange, "gambles on the continued value of the location and the improvement[s] … and assumes all risks in connection therewith." [Brown v. Green (1994) 8 C4th 812, 826-828, 35 CR2d 598, 607-608 (internal quotes omitted); see also Hadian v. Schwartz (1994) 8 C4th 836, 845-846, 35 CR2d 589, 595—fact lessor retains obligations to pay major portion of property taxes and casualty insurance premiums tends to negate conclusion parties intended true "net" lease]

In practice, under a "net lease," the tenant may have certain minimal obligations regarding operating costs. Under a "triple net lease," all operating costs are the tenant's obligation. [Tin Tin Corp. v. Pacific Rim Park, LLC (2009) 170 CA4th 1220, 1226, 88 CR3d 816, 822, fn. 3 (citing text)]

(c) [7:36] Variations: There are many variations on the concepts set forth at ¶ 7:33 ff. For example, even though many commercial and retail leases are identified as "net" or "triple net," the landlord is responsible for certain costs and for maintaining various components of the leased property (such as structural portions). Conversely, under a so-called "gross lease," the tenant may be required to pay certain utility and/or other operating costs.

(d) [7:37] Label not determinative: Commercial leases often are labeled with the industry terminology "gross," "net," "triple net" or "modified net"; but the titles or labels themselves have no legal significance and are not decisive of the extent to which the parties intended to shift the expense burdens of various operating, repair and maintenance obligations from landlord to tenant. Rather, the allocation of cost responsibilities is dictated by the substance of the lease. [Tin Tin Corp. v. Pacific Rim Park, LLC (2009) 170 CA4th 1220, 1226, 88 CR3d 816, 822 (citing text)]

"What is persuasive is a consideration of the provisions of the lease agreement as a whole …" To conclude a true "net" (or "triple net") lease was created, it must be "reasonably clear from the four corners of the agreement itself that the parties intended to transfer from the lessor to the tenants the major burdens of ownership of real property over the life of the lease." [Brown v. Green (1994) 8 C4th 812, 828, 35 CR2d 598, 608 (emphasis in original); see Hadian v. Schwartz (1994) 8 C4th 836, 846, 35 CR2d 589, 595—despite title "net" lease, tenant did not agree to assume burden of complying with city seismic safety reconstruction order]

(2) [7:38] Ground lease as "net lease": Ground leases are almost invariably of the "triple net" type (i.e., tenant bears all maintenance and operating costs). There are several reasons:

• [7:39] The parties conceptually view a long-term ground lease much akin to the transfer of a fee interest; i.e., like the owner of a fee interest, the tenant is to have exclusive control of—and responsibility for—the improvements and operation of the property during the term.

• [7:40] Being the party who typically builds the improvements, the tenant prefers to have control over maintenance, repair and the like.

• [7:41] The landlord usually views the transaction as a long-term investment yielding a consistent cash flow, but without typical landlord responsibilities.

➪ [7:42] PRACTICE POINTER: Of course, even under a purported "triple net lease," not all expenses are necessarily passed on to ground lease tenants. For example, who bears the burden of property tax reassessments in the event the landlord sells the fee is usually intensely negotiated. The tenant obviously will take a hard position against any provision obligating it to pay increased taxes (which could be substantial) upon a sale of the fee … particularly since such tax consequences are triggered by an event solely within the landlord's (fee owner's) control. (See ¶ 7:269.)

[7:43 - 7:44] Reserved.

3. [7:45] Advantages of Ground Leasing: From the tenant's perspective, the benefits and burdens attaching to a ground lease are conceptually quite similar to those that accompany the transfer of a fee interest. This raises the issue of why a “buyer” would prefer to create a leasehold relationship rather than a conventional purchase and sale of the fee interest. As discussed at ¶ 7:46 ff., there are distinct advantages to both the tenant and owner/landlord under a ground lease.

a. Fee owner's motivations

(1) [7:46] Tax considerations: From the owner's perspective, a ground lease may be tax motivated.

For example, for estate planning purposes or otherwise, the “seller” (landlord) may want to defer realization of the value of the land until a later date. A sale of the property could result in unwanted present tax consequences. By leasing the land, the owner will have taxable income, but the proceeds will be received in installments (of rent) over time. Moreover, by retaining its fee interest, the owner can ultimately realize the continued appreciation of the value of the property.

➪ [7:47] PRACTICE POINTER: To realize other tax benefits, a fee owner might sell the property and then lease it back through a ground lease.

This is called a sale-leaseback, whereby the former owner may obtain the tax benefits of being a tenant because rental payments and other payments are deductible for tax purposes. (For further discussion on tax treatment of sale-leaseback transactions, see Frank Lyon Co. v. United States (1978) 435 US 561, 572-584, 98 S.Ct. 1291, 1298-1304.)

(2) Other benefits

(a) [7:48] Improvements and entitlements: The fee owner also receives the benefit of the tenant's development of the property … because, as earlier noted, the tenant's improvements typically become the landlord's property upon termination of the lease (¶ 7:19). This includes not only the tangible physical structures, but also the intangible benefit of the various entitlements and development permits the tenant will have obtained (which may include subdivision of the property, procurement and filing environmental impact reports, procurement of zoning variances, building permits and the like).

If nothing else, the owner benefits from the securing of certain vested rights that attach to such efforts by the tenant. For example, the owner may be able to avoid the possibility of “down zoning” (or other zoning changes) affecting the property while the land would otherwise remain vacant.

(b) [7:49] Rent security: Fee owners otherwise motivated to lease their property may find greater rent security in a ground lease tenant than a tenant under an ordinary lease. Typically, having invested substantial time and money in development of the property to allow for successful business operations, ground lease tenants may be more likely to keep current in their rent payments than tenants under an ordinary lease (who have no investment in the creation of improvements).

(c) [7:50] Security from potential leasehold mortgagee: The fee owner may also derive some comfort from knowing that, should the tenant finance its leasehold interest, the leasehold mortgagee might cure any default by the tenant rather than risk termination of the ground lease (which would wipe out the leasehold mortgagee's security for its loan).

b. Tenant's motivations

(1) [7:51] Tax considerations: The tenant might also be motivated by tax considerations. For example, rental payments, which include costs of operating the property (taxes, insurance, etc.) are deductible, whereas the buyer of a fee can deduct only the interest portion of the mortgage payments. Additionally, the tenant might be able to depreciate improvements constructed by it over the useful life of the improvements or the term of the lease, whichever is shorter. (This could mean faster depreciation for the tenant than if the property, with improvements, were purchased in fee.)

(2) Other considerations

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(a) [7:52] Tailoring investment to use: If the contemplated use of the property is to be limited in time or purpose, it may be unwise for the tenant to pay for the value of the underlying land. For example, a fast food restaurant or gas station operator may only want the property to operate its business and may not wish to tie up capital in a purchase of the land. Moreover, by building a structure which only has a useful life equal to the length of the ground lease term, the tenant does not leave any residual, excess value in the structure when the term ends.

(b) [7:53] Use benefits equivalent to fee ownership: When otherwise motivated to pursue a ground lease, tenants may effectively give up little in practical day-to-day benefits accompanying outright fee ownership. Ground lease tenants often have almost as much freedom to determine what they build, and how they use the property, as they would had they purchased the fee interest.

➪ [7:54] PRACTICE POINTER: Do not assume, however, that all—or even most—ground leases involve tenants who actually intend to operate their business from the property. Frequently, the ground lease tenant is a developer who has leased the land for the purpose of developing it and then subleasing the development to various commercial subtenants.

[7:60] For purposes of the balance of this Chapter, the term “selling tenant” refers to the tenant selling its existing leasehold interest in a ground lease. The term “purchasing tenant” refers to the tenant purchasing the selling tenant's ground leasehold interest. The term “landowner” means the landlord under the ground lease—i.e., the owner of the fee interest in the property.

1. [7:61] Introduction: The threshold legal issue confronting attorneys for the purchasing and selling tenants is to determine the selling tenant's right to assign its leasehold interest. Obviously, a contemplated sale will be subject to major obstacles if the ground lease prohibits or significantly restricts assignment.

The tenant's right to assign turns both on the terms of the ground lease and on statutory and case law regarding assignments of leaseholds generally. Further, because the law on assignments is inextricably bound with the law on subletting, the sections set forth at ¶ 7:62 ff. also address the parties' rights with respect to subletting.

2. [7:62] Distinction Between "Assignment" and "Sublease": Though the terms are often used interchangeably, "assignments" and "subleases" are distinct legal concepts and have distinct legal consequences.

a. [7:63] Assignment: A true "assignment" of a tenant's interest in a lease is the transfer of all of the tenant's right, title and interest in the leasehold. The tenant's assignee steps into direct privity of estate with the landowner, acquiring the benefits and becoming obliged by the burdens of all "covenants running with the land." If the assignee expressly assumes the master lease (see ¶ 7:334), the assignee and landowner also stand in a privity of contract relationship. [Vallely Investments, L.P. v. BancAmerica Comm'l Corp. (2001) 88 CA4th 816, 822, 106 CR2d 689, 694]

Unlike a sublease (¶ 7:64), the selling tenant/assignor retains no reversionary interest in or right to reenter the leasehold, even if its assignee abandons the property; but the assignor remains in privity of contract with the landowner absent an express release. [See Vallely Investments, L.P. v. BancAmerica Comm'l Corp., supra, 88 CA4th at 822-823, 106 CR2d at 694-695 (discussing distinctions between sublease and assignment); Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc. (1985) 40 C3d 488, 492, 220 CR 818, 820, fn. 2]

b. [7:64] Sublease: In contrast, by a sublease, the tenant transfers less than the entire premises or less than the entire term of the lease to a third party. A sublease does not change the privity relationship between landowner and sublessor tenant; i.e., subtenant and landowner are neither in privity of contract nor privity of estate. The subtenant's rights are governed by the sublease with the master lease tenant (sublessor), which can be no greater than the rights granted by the master lease; and the landowner's rights remain governed by the master lease with the tenant (sublessor). [Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc. (1985) 40 C3d 488, 492, 220 CR 818, 820, fn. 2; Vallely Investments, L.P. v. BancAmerica Comm'l Corp. (2001) 88 CA4th 816, 823, 106 CR2d 689, 695]

Thus, the tenant (not the subtenant) remains responsible for the payment of rent to the landowner (Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., supra, 40 C3d at 502, 220 CR at 827); and, upon a default by the tenant, the landowner can usually terminate the sublease by terminating the ground lease.

➪ [7:64.1] PRACTICE POINTER: Under the definitions set forth at ¶ 7:62 ff., a sublease would be technically created if the ground lease tenant "subleased" the entire property for the entire balance of the term except for the last day. Similarly, a sublease would be technically created even though the "sublessor" leases to the subtenant all but a nominal portion of the property for the entire balance of the term. And, a sublease is created where the transferring tenant retains a right of reentry. Indeed, selling tenants may try to structure their deals in such a manner in an attempt to avoid the generally harsher restrictions on assignment (see ¶ 7:66 ff.). [See generally, Kendis v. Cohn (1928) 90 CA 41, 58-60, 265 P 844, 851]

c. [7:65] Importance of distinction: To the extent a tenant is subject to transfer restrictions, most ordinary leases do not distinguish between leasehold transfers by assignment vs. sublease; i.e., an assignment will either be permitted or prohibited on the same basis as a sublease.

However, ground leases frequently subject the two types of transfers to different standards. The reasons are two-fold:

(1) [7:66] Assignee steps into assignor's shoes; subtenant's creditworthiness less important to landlord: Absent a novation (¶ 7:326), an assignment does not itself let the assignor tenant out of its contractual obligations under the lease (see ¶ 7:320). Even so, privity of estate binds the new tenant/assignee to the lease obligations for so long as it remains in possession (¶ 7:334 ff.). Thus, for all practical purposes, an assignment substitutes one tenant for another; and, because the parties to a ground lease have a long-term relationship, the landlord is justifiably concerned about the quality—especially the creditworthiness—of any assignee.

On the other hand, a sublease disturbs neither the privity of contract nor privity of estate relationship between the original tenant and landowner; indeed, a sublease is subordinate to the covenants in the master lease. Since there is no substitution of the original tenant, the landowner is far less concerned about the quality of a subtenant.

(2) [7:67] Tenant-developer's need for flexible sublease rights: Because the ground lease tenant is frequently a developer who intends to enter into several subleases with subtenant/operators, it will not want to be hampered by severe subletting restrictions. For example, in the context of a retail ground lease, the developer must be able to create its own tenant mix and retail environment. The landowner will generally be receptive to broad subleasing rights since it is not looking to subtenants for the payment of rent.

➪ [7:68] PRACTICE POINTER: For the reasons set forth at ¶ 7:66 ff., it is not uncommon for ground leases to narrowly restrict assignment rights yet liberally permit subleases. In such event, to avoid creative attempts by tenants to avoid assignment restrictions, a well-drafted ground lease should specify that a "subletting" of the entire property will constitute an assignment—notwithstanding the length of the sublease term.

If the ground lease is not properly drafted, the selling tenant might be able to completely change the operator of the property under the guise of a sublease, thereby defeating the landowner's goal of having the right to approve such a drastic change in tenants. (For example, the tenant could sublease the entire premises for a term ending just shortly before the end of the (master) ground lease term; or the tenant could sublease all but a small, insignificant portion of the property for the entire balance of the term, calling the transaction a "sublease.") [Cf. Kendis v. Cohn (1928) 90 CA 41, 56-59, 265 P 844, 850-851]

3. [7:69] Validity and Construction of Contractual Restrictions on Assignment and Subletting: The provisions of the ground lease will govern the selling tenant's right to assign and sublet. These provisions generally fall into the following categories:

• Unrestricted right to assign and sublease.

• Absolute prohibition on assignment and subletting.

• Express standards or conditions on the right to assign or sublease.

• Allowing assignment and subletting only with the landowner's prior consent, without stating standards for the giving or withholding of consent.

• Allowing assignment and subletting only with the landowner's prior consent, which consent may not unreasonably be withheld.

• Allowing assignment or subletting only upon the landowner's prior consent, but subject to specific standards on the giving or withholding of consent.

a. [7:70] Governing law, generally: The construction, validity and enforceability of assignment, sublease and other restrictions on the transfer of a nonresidential property leasehold interest are governed by Civ.C. § 1995.010 et seq. (The common law continues to apply to residential leasehold transfer restrictions; but § 1995.010 et seq. substantially tracks that law. See detailed discussion in Friedman, Garcia & Hoy, Cal. Prac. Guide: Landlord-Tenant (TRG), Ch. 2B.)

Notwithstanding the traditional public policy abhorrence to restraints on alienation (Civ.C. § 711), these statutes essentially respect contractual restrictions on the transfer of a leasehold interest freely and voluntarily negotiated by parties of roughly equal bargaining strength. Subject to ordinary "adhesion"/"unconscionable" contract limitations (¶ 7:73.5), there are no statutory limits on the breadth of an enforceable leasehold transfer restriction. [See Carma Developers (California), Inc. v. Marathon Develop. California, Inc. (1992) 2 C4th 342, 367, 6 CR2d 467, 481—Civ.C. § 1995.020 et seq. preempts application of Civ.C. § 711 prohibition against "unreasonable" restraints on alienation; see also Ilkhchooyi v. Best (1995) 37 CA4th 395, 408-409, 45 CR2d 766, 774]

(1) [7:71] Ambiguities resolved in favor of unrestricted transferability: By the same token, in order to further public policy favoring free transferability of property and avoid the harsh consequences of a forfeiture of the lease, ambiguous leasehold transfer restrictions will be construed in favor of free transferability. [Civ.C. § 1995.220; Karbelnig v. Brothwell (1966) 244 CA2d 333, 341, 53 CR 335, 340]

(2) [7:72] Narrow interpretation of controlling language: So too, the public policy hostility toward restraints on alienation and forfeitures means courts will narrowly construe transfer restrictions in a lease. The language used in the restrictive clause is likely to be given a literal interpretation.

Thus, e.g., provisions barring or restricting an "assignment" have been held inapplicable to a sublease (Stevinson v. Joy (1912) 164 C 279, 286, 128 P 751, 754), a mortgage of the lease (Chapman v. Great Western Gypsum Co. (1932) 216 C 420, 426-427, 14 P2d 758, 760-761) and a transfer of stock by corporate tenants (Ser-Bye Corp. v. C.P. & G. Markets, Inc. (1947) 78 CA2d 915, 920-921, 179 P2d 342, 345 (superseded by statute on other grounds as stated in In re Alberto (2002) 102 CA4th 421, 430, 125 CR2d 526, 532, fn. 4).

(3) [7:73] Compare—strict enforcement of clearly unambiguous transfer restrictions: On the other hand, courts will not "read in" ambiguities where the lease language is plain and clear. If the contract was freely negotiated, and particularly where both sides had the benefit of independent counsel, a clear prohibition against "subleases and assignments"—as well as any other transfer restriction (subject to "unconscionability" limitations, ¶ 7:73.5 ff.)—will be enforced according to its terms … notwithstanding that it might work a forfeiture. [See Carma Developers (California), Inc. v. Marathon Develop. California, Inc. (1992) 2 C4th 342, 371, 6 CR2d 467, 483; Boston Properties v. Pirelli Tire Corp. (1982) 134 CA3d 985, 995, 185 CR 56, 62—"The courts are not required to resort to scholastic subtleties to save tenants from the consequences of their deliberate breach of their covenants"]

"Neither the law governing unreasonable restraints on alienation … nor the law governing the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing … prevents the enforcement of a restriction on transfer in accordance with the express terms of the restriction." [See Civ.C. § 1995.210, Law Rev. Comm'n Comment; Ilkhchooyi v. Best (1995) 37 CA4th 395, 408, 45 CR2d 766, 774]

[7:73.1 - 7:73.4] Reserved.

(4) [7:73.5] "Unconscionable" contract limitations: Despite Civ.C. § 1995.010 et seq.'s broad validation of any express transfer restriction in a commercial lease, that authority remains subject to "general principles limiting freedom of contract." Thus, "a party to a commercial lease who is trapped in a bad bargain" may still have a way out under the doctrines of "adhesion and unconscionability." [Ilkhchooyi v. Best (1995) 37 CA4th 395, 409, 45 CR2d 766, 774 (emphasis added); see Civ.C. §§ 1995.210, 1995.230, 1995.240, 1995.250, Law Rev. Comm'n Comments]

(a) [7:73.6] Court power to deny enforcement of unconscionable provisions: If a court finds, as a matter of law, a lease or any provision therein to have been unconscionable at the time it was made, it may refuse to enforce the lease or may enforce only part of the lease without the unconscionable provision, or may so limit application of any unconscionable provision as to avoid an unconscionable result. [Civ.C. § 1670.5; see also AT&T Mobility LLC v. Concepcion (2011) 563 US 333, 340, 131 S.Ct. 1740, 1745-1746 (recognizing courts may, under California law, refuse to enforce any contract "found to have been unconscionable at the time it was made," while simultaneously holding FAA preempts California's judicial rule regarding unconscionability of class arbitration waivers in consumer actions); Ilkhchooyi v. Best (1995) 37 CA4th 395, 409, 45 CR2d 766, 774—profit-shifting clause in commercial lease, giving landlord portion of sale price for tenant's business upon assignment of lease, held unconscionable and thus unenforceable (¶ 7:79.1); see also Lennar Homes of Calif., Inc. v. Stephens (2014) 232 CA4th 673, 688, 181 CR3d 638, 651 (unconscionable indemnity clause in residential buy-sell agreement held unenforceable; ¶ 7:73.10c)]

Some contracts, however, are so permeated with unconscionability, that they cannot be saved by severing "tainted" provisions, and the entire contract will be denied enforcement. [Flores v. Transamerica HomeFirst, Inc. (2001) 93 CA4th 846, 857, 113 CR2d 376, 385—arbitration clause in "reverse mortgage" loan agreement lacking "modicum of bilaterality" could not be saved by severing offending provisions]

(b) [7:73.7] Establishing "unconscionability": Because of the strong legislative policy favoring the enforceability of expressly agreed-upon transfer restrictions, a contracting party challenging those restrictions as "unconscionable" bears a "formidable burden." [Ilkhchooyi v. Best (1995) 37 CA4th 395, 409, 45 CR2d 766, 774; see also Sanchez v. Valencia Holding Co., LLC (2015) 61 C4th 899, 911, 190 CR3d 812, 821—because unconscionability is contract defense, party asserting it bears burden of proof]

"Unconscionability" generally is recognized as including an absence of meaningful choice on the part of one of the parties, together with contract terms that are unreasonably favorable to the other party. It has procedural and substantive elements, both of which must be present to invalidate a contractual provision as unconscionable. [Sanchez v. Valencia Holding Co., LLC, supra, 61 C4th at 910, 190 CR3d at 820; see also Pardee Const. Co. v. Sup.Ct. (Rodriguez) (2002) 100 CA4th 1081, 1088, 123 CR2d 288, 293]

1) [7:73.8] Procedural element—oppression and surprise: The procedural element of unconscionability includes (i) oppression arising from an inequality of bargaining power that results in no real negotiation and an absence of meaningful choice; and (ii) surprise involving the extent to which the supposedly agreed-upon terms are hidden in a "prolix printed form" drafted by the party seeking to enforce the disputed terms (i.e., essentially an adhesion contract). [Ilkhchooyi v. Best (1995) 37 CA4th 395, 409-410, 45 CR2d 766, 775]

a) Application

• [7:73.8a] Arbitration clauses in a loan agreement and deed of trust imposed on borrowers on a "take-it-or-leave-it" basis constituted adhesion contracts and thus were procedurally unconscionable. [Flores v. Transamerica HomeFirst, Inc. (2001) 93 CA4th 846, 853-854, 113 CR2d 376, 382]

• [7:73.8b] Arbitration clauses contained in 30-page booklets, printed in single-spaced 10-point type, buried in "voluminous" stacks of purchase and sale documents and presented to prospective buyers on a "take-it-or-leave-it" basis constituted adhesion contracts and thus were procedurally unconscionable. [Bruni v. Didion (2008) 160 CA4th 1272, 1293-1294, 73 CR3d 395, 413-414]

• [7:73.8c] Arbitration clauses that, on their face, applied to a limited category of actions and were included in approximately 800 pages of purchase and sale documents constituted adhesion contracts that were both oppressive and contained an element of surprise, rendering the arbitration provisions procedurally unconscionable. [Thompson v. Toll Dublin, LLC (2008) 165 CA4th 1360, 1372-1373, 81 CR3d 736, 746]

• [7:73.8d] Although the indemnity clause in a residential buy-sell agreement contained only a "low level" of procedural unconscionability (i.e., minimal evidence of inequality and surprise), it was enough to satisfy the requisite minimum and therefore justified consideration of the substantive element of unconscionability (¶ 7:73.10 ff.). [Lennar Homes of Calif., Inc. v. Stephens (2014) 232 CA4th 673, 688-690, 181 CR3d 638, 651-653]

b) [7:73.9] Standard form contracts not per se procedurally unconscionable: A seller's/landlord's standard form contract does not ipso facto prevent the buyer/tenant from negotiating for other terms. Thus, a form contract used by a party for many transactions is not necessarily a contract of adhesion and procedurally unconscionable. Rather, the particular circumstances under which the contract was executed must be considered. [Crippen v. Central Valley RV Outlet, Inc. (2004) 124 CA4th 1159, 1165-1167, 22 CR3d 189, 192-194]

2) [7:73.10] Substantive element: The substantive element of unconscionability includes one-sided terms lacking in justification that reallocate the risks of the bargain in an objectively unreasonable or unexpected manner. [Ilkhchooyi v. Best (1995) 37 CA4th 395, 410, 45 CR2d 766, 775]

• [7:73.10a] Arbitration provisions in a "reverse loan" agreement were deemed substantively unconscionable because they lacked a "modicum of bilaterality" in the arbitration remedy. [Flores v. Transamerica HomeFirst, Inc. (2001) 93 CA4th 846, 854, 113 CR2d 376, 382]

• [7:73.10b] Arbitration provisions contained in ancillary warranties (rather than in main residential purchase and sale agreements) were deemed substantively unconscionable. The provisions required purchasers to arbitrate, among other things, disputes concerning the sale of their homes and the arbitrability of the provisions themselves. This violated the purchasers' "reasonable expectations" because they reasonably would expect the arbitration provisions to apply only to disputes over the warranties. Moreover, the question of who should decide arbitrability is "well beyond a layperson's 'reasonable expectations.'" [See Bruni v. Didion (2008) 160 CA4th 1272, 1289-1295, 73 CR3d 395, 410-414—failure to pass "reasonable expectations" test generally treated as equivalent of "substantive unconscionability"]

• [7:73.10c] An indemnity clause in a residential buy-sell agreement that barred any possibility of meaningful recovery for claims falling within its scope, regardless of merit, was deemed substantively unconscionable. "[U]nder the bare language of the indemnity clause, there is not even the theoretical possibility a homeowner could be made whole for any damages arising from fraud committed by [Seller] with respect to disclosures. The clause is a paradigmatic example of a 'heads I win, tails you lose' proposition …" [Lennar Homes of Calif., Inc. v. Stephens (2014) 232 CA4th 673, 693, 181 CR3d 638, 655]

• [7:73.10d] Compare: Arbitration provisions in an automobile sales contract providing, among other things, that an award was final and binding unless the amount was $0 or in excess of $100,000, in which case it could be appealed to a three-arbitrator panel was not, "on its face," considered unreasonably one-sided and therefore substantively unconscionable. This was so even though the buyer was more likely to appeal $0 while the seller was more likely to appeal $100,000. "[N]othing in the record indicates that the latter provision is substantially more likely to be invoked than the former. We cannot say that the risks imposed on the parties are one-sided, much less unreasonably so." [See Sanchez v. Valencia Holding Co., LLC (2015) 61 C4th 899, 917, 924, 190 CR3d 812, 826, 832]

3) [7:73.11] "Sliding scale" relationship between elements: Although both procedural and substantive elements must be present to sustain a finding of unconscionability in the context of a commercial lease (¶ 7:73.7), there is a

"sliding scale" relationship between the two concepts: The greater the degree of substantive unconscionability, the less the degree of procedural unconscionability that is required to annul the contract or clause. [See Lennar Homes of Calif., Inc. v. Stephens (2014) 232 CA4th 673, 687-690, 181 CR3d 638, 650-653 (residential buy-sell agreement)—indemnity clause containing only "low-level" of procedural unconscionability still met requisite minimum, thereby justifying "consideration of substantive portion of sliding scale" (¶ 7:73.8d)]

b. [7:74] No provision concerning assignment or subletting; or provision allowing assignment and subletting without restriction: Both of these situations are treated equally under the law. Unless the lease includes an express restriction on transfer, a tenant's rights under the lease include unrestricted transfer of the leasehold interest—i.e., at the tenant's sole discretion. [Civ.C. § 1995.210; see also Kassan v. Stout (1973) 9 C3d 39, 43, 106 CR 783, 785]

c. [7:75] Absolute prohibition on assignment and subletting: A lease may absolutely prohibit transfer of a tenant's leasehold interest—whether by way of assignment, subletting or otherwise. [Civ.C. § 1995.230]

Therefore, when a ground lease completely prohibits assignment or subletting, a "sale" of the tenant's interest is impossible for the duration of the term unless the landowner waives the restriction.

d. [7:76] Assignment or sublease subject to express standards or conditions: Since an absolute prohibition on assignment or sublease is valid (¶ 7:75), so too is any restriction that subjects the tenant's right to sublease or assign to express standards or conditions (typically, that the tenant obtain the landlord's prior consent, the giving or withholding of which may itself be subject to standards or conditions; see ¶ 7:76.1 ff.).

(1) [7:76.1] "Reasonable" or "unreasonable" standards/conditions: The lease may provide that transfer of the tenant's leasehold interest is subject to any express standard or condition, whether "reasonable" or "unreasonable" (subject, however, to "unconscionability" limitations, ¶ 7:73.5 ff.). [See Civ.C. §§ 1995.210(a), 1995.240, and Law Revision Comm'n Comment thereto; Carma Developers (California), Inc. v. Marathon Develop. California, Inc. (1992) 2 C4th 342, 368, 6 CR2d 467, 481; but see also Ilkhchooyi v. Best (1995) 37 CA4th 395, 407, 45 CR2d 766, 773—profit-sharing condition on assignment, by which landlord would share in portion of proceeds from sale of tenant's business, held unconscionable and thus unenforceable (¶ 7:79.1)]

(a) [7:77] Examples: Some of the more common standards set forth in ground (and other) leases relate to:

- The quality of the assignee's business.
- The assignee's operating history and reputation.
- The assignee's financial strength (including a specified net worth).
- The assignee's intended use and the effect such use would have on the tenant mix.
- The assignee's contemplated alterations to improvements.

➪ [7:78] PRACTICE POINTER: Remember any leasehold mortgagee also will be keenly interested in assignability. Therefore, all ground lease assignment provisions should be viewed in the context of potential leasehold financing and lender requirements. (See ¶ 7:406 ff.)

(2) [7:79] "Termination/recapture" conditions: Civ.C. § 1995.240 expressly recognizes that the tenant's right to transfer may be made subject to a provision giving the landlord the right to "some or all of any consideration the tenant receives from a transferee in excess of the rent under the lease." [Civ.C. § 1995.240; Carma Developers (California), Inc. v. Marathon Develop. California, Inc. (1992) 2 C4th 342, 370, 6 CR2d 467, 482]

A provision giving the landlord the right to terminate the lease and enter into a new lease with the intended transferee (tenant's proposed assignee or sublessee), reserving any profits therefrom exclusively to the landlord, is within the contemplation of § 1995.240. Such "recapture/termination" conditions are enforceable transfer restrictions even though exercised solely for the landlord's financial gain. [Carma Developers (California), Inc. v. Marathon Develop. California, Inc., supra, 2 C4th at 371, 6 CR2d at 483]

(Comment: Nonetheless, as a practical matter, such transfer conditions are less likely to be found in ground leases, where both parties contemplate a long-term uninterrupted tenancy.)

(a) [7:79.1] Limitation on recapture conditions exceeding leasehold value: Notwithstanding the "termination/recapture" conditions discussed at ¶ 7:79, statutory authority expressly recognizing the landlord's right to condition a transfer on being paid some or all of the "consideration" the tenant receives from the transferee in excess of the rent under the lease (Civ.C. § 1995.240) has been construed as limited to consideration connected with the value of the lease—i.e., a recapture of appreciated rental value. [Ilkhchooyi v. Best (1995) 37 CA4th 395, 407, 45 CR2d 766, 773]

A transfer restriction that goes further—essentially giving the landlord the right to share in consideration paid for the transferor tenant's business (i.e., proceeds from sale of business to proposed assignee)—may be deemed unconscionable (¶ 7:73.5 ff.) and thus unenforceable under ordinary contract principles. [Ilkhchooyi v. Best, supra, 37 CA4th at 410-411, 45 CR2d at 775-776—profit-sharing clause buried in "diminutive print" in lengthy form lease, purporting to give landlord right to 75% of consideration tenant received from sale of business to assignee (including share of payments for tenant's covenant not to compete with assignee), in addition to right to increase assignee's rent to market value, held to be "blatant overreaching"]

"Although the Legislature has insulated express transfer restrictions in commercial leases from attack as unreasonable restraints on alienation or as breaches of good faith, it did not intend to allow commercial lessors to gouge their tenants in the name of freedom of contract." [Ilkhchooyi v. Best, supra, 37 CA4th at 411, 45 CR2d at 775 (emphasis added)]

e. [7:80] Assignment and subletting only with landlord consent: A tenant's right to assign or sublet may be made subject to landowner consent. [Civ.C. § 1995.250] These "consent clause" restrictions themselves take various forms:

(1) [7:81] No specified conditions—giving or withholding consent subject to implied "reasonableness" standard: If a "consent clause" restriction contains no express standard for giving or withholding landowner consent to the contemplated leasehold transfer, the restriction is deemed to include an implied standard that the landowner's consent may not "unreasonably" be withheld. [Civ.C. § 1995.260 (applicable to transfer restrictions executed on or after 9/23/83; see Civ.C. § 1995.270(b)); Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc. (1985) 40 C3d 488, 498, 220 CR 818, 824]

[7:82] Reserved.

(2) [7:83] Express standard that consent may not be unreasonably withheld: Perhaps the most common ground lease assignment provision is one which requires the landowner's prior consent, but expressly provides the consent cannot "unreasonably" be withheld.

(a) [7:84] Fact question; burden of proof: Whether the landowner "unreasonably" withheld consent in a given case is a question of fact on which the selling tenant has the burden of proof. [Civ.C. § 1995.260]

1) [7:84.1] Not subject to anti-SLAPP statute: Unreasonably refusing to consent to a lease assignment is not subject to anti-SLAPP protection. [ValueRock TN Properties, LLC v. PK II Larwin Square SC LP (2019) 36 CA5th 1037, 1048, 249 CR3d 179, 188]

(b) [7:85] Statutory method of meeting burden of proof: Section 1995.260 codifies one nonexclusive method of satisfying the burden of proof: Tenants may carry the burden of proving "unreasonable" withholding of consent by demonstrating that, in response to their written request for a statement of reasons for withholding consent, the landowner failed, within a "reasonable time," to state in writing a "reasonable objection" to the transfer. [Civ.C. § 1995.260]

(c) [7:86] Otherwise, case-by-case approach—issue of procedure or *substance: Beyond the restrictions/conditions set forth at ¶ 7:80 ff., the statute offers no guidelines on the distinction between "reasonable" vs. "unreasonable" withholding of consent. Indeed the Legislature purposefully rejected any "absolute" approach; courts are supposed to apply an objective standard as developed by case law (¶ 7:87 ff.). [See Civ.C. § 1995.260, Law Rev. Comm'n Comment]

Whether a landowner unreasonably withheld consent in a particular case may be an issue of procedure or substance. Thus, tenants may carry their burden of proof by demonstrating either:

- The landowner acted unreasonably in its procedure for reviewing the proposed assignment or sublease—e.g., by delaying its response or failing to respond to the tenant's request for consent, or by requiring excessive investigation charges; or

- The landowner has no justifiable substantive basis for its objection to the assignment or sublease. [See Civ.C. § 1995.260, Law Rev. Comm'n Comment]

(d) [7:87] Kendall* "commercially reasonable" approach: The Law Revision Commission indicates that, deferring to case law on the subject, the Legislature intended substantive "reasonableness" in this context to be judged under the

WESTLAW © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Kendall "commercially reasonable" standard: i.e., landowners may reasonably withhold consent only if they have a "commercially reasonable objection" to the proposed transfer. [Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc. (1985) 40 C3d 488, 496, 220 CR 818, 822; and see Civ.C. § 1995.260, Law Rev. Comm'n Comment]

[7:88] Application: Applying this approach, the following circumstances have been held "reasonable" grounds for withholding consent … on the theory they affect the landowner's interest in preserving the fee estate and in obtaining performance of the tenant's lease obligations (see generally, Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc. (1985) 40 C3d 488, 501, 220 CR 818, 826; and Cohen v. Ratinoff (1983) 147 CA3d 321, 330, 195 CR 84, 89):

1) [7:89] Proposed assignee's financial instability: Landowners act reasonably in rejecting a proposed assignee whose ability to pay rent is suspect. [Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc. (1985) 40 C3d 488, 501, 220 CR 818, 826; Cohen v. Ratinoff (1983) 147 CA3d 321, 330, 195 CR 84, 89]

2) [7:90] Suitability of property for proposed use: An objection to assignment is reasonable if the premises are not presently suitable for the proposed assignee's intended use. [Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., supra; Cohen v. Ratinoff, supra]

3) [7:91] Planned alterations: Similarly, landowners act reasonably in withholding consent if the proposed assignee's contemplated use would require extensive alterations to the premises. [Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., supra; Cohen v. Ratinoff, supra]

4) [7:92] Illegal use: Clearly, it is "commercially reasonable" for landowners to withhold approval of assignees proposing to use the property for an unlawful purpose. [Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., supra; Cohen v. Ratinoff, supra]

5) [7:93] Wholly different nature of occupancy: Reasonableness may also turn on the nature of the proposed assignee's occupancy—e.g., office, clinic, factory, retail store, etc.: Landowners should not be required to accept an entirely different type of tenant. [Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., supra; Cohen v. Ratinoff, supra—"undesired use" is basis for good faith reasonable objection]

6) [7:94] Competitiveness of use: Withholding consent to assignment of a shopping center lease is "commercially reasonable" when the proposed assignee's business would compete with another store in the center … even if the other store is owned by the landlord. [Pay'N Pak Stores, Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Miller) (1989) 210 CA3d 1404, 1410-1411, 258 CR 816, 819-820—shopping center landlord "reasonably" refuses to approve sublease to potential competitor if such refusal reasonably necessary to protect landlord's ownership and operation of particular property]

7) [7:95] Risk of receiving less rent (percentage rent leases): It is "commercially reasonable" to refuse consent to a proposed assignment or sublease that would prevent the landowner from receiving at least the same rental income the tenant had been paying under the original lease. Here, the withholding of consent is validly based on the landowner's interest in preserving what was originally bargained for; it is not "commercially reasonable" to require the landowner to accept less. [John Hogan Enterprises, Inc. v. Kellogg (1986) 187 CA3d 589, 593, 231 CR 711, 713]

(However, the landowner cannot require the payment of an inordinate amount of money as a condition to granting its consent to an assignment. See Schweiso v. Williams (1984) 150 CA3d 883, 886, 198 CR 238, 240; see also Ilkhchooyi v. Best (1995) 37 CA4th 395, 407-411, 45 CR2d 766, 773-776, discussed at ¶ 7:79 ff.)

• [7:96] Example: Tenant operated a women's clothing store under a lease making rent payable according to a percentage of gross sales, with a $2,750 specified minimum. Her business generated sufficient gross sales to produce rental income consistently exceeding the minimum monthly rent (average $4,000/month). However, Tenant's proposed assignee, who intended to operate an antique store as a hobby, did not expect sufficient gross sales ever to generate more than the $2,750 minimum monthly rent.

"Unquestionably, Lessor would suffer substantial financial detriment upon the proposed assignment … To force Lessor to accept the minimum $2,750 … from an assignee who cannot generate more … is out of touch with commercial reality. Refusing consent to highway robbery cannot be deemed commercially unjustified." [John Hogan Enterprises, Inc. v. Kellogg (1986) 187 CA3d 589, 594, 231 CR 711, 713-714 (also suggesting it would have been "commercially reasonable" for Lessor to require a new lease with assignee or to require assignee or Tenant to make up the difference and pay the past average rent)]

(e) [7:97] Withholding consent to exact higher rent? Kendall, supra, holds that, as a matter of law, withholding consent solely for the purpose of exacting a higher rent than agreed to under the original lease is commercially unreasonable.

[Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc. (1985) 40 C3d 488, 501, 220 CR 818, 826—assignee's proposed use was compatible with leased property (hangar space) and only obstacle was landlord's impermissible demand for higher rent]

The Kendall Court reasoned that the landlord's desire for a "better bargain" has nothing to do with the permissible purposes of the restraint on alienation (to protect landlord's interest in preserving premises and performance of lease covenants). A "consent clause" is intended to protect the landlord's ownership and operation of the property—not to further the landlord's general economic interests. [Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc., supra, 40 C3d at 501, 220 CR at 826]

1) [7:98] Not necessarily under Civ.C. § 1995.260: However, the Kendall "commercially unreasonable as a matter of law" conclusion did not survive Civ.C. § 1995.260. Again, the statute rejects an "absolute" approach to the question of commercial reasonableness, opting instead for a case-by-case analysis (¶ 7:86). [See Civ.C. § 1995.260, Law Rev. Comm'n Comment]

2) [7:99] Compare—express provision for modification of rent upon transfer: In any event, the Kendall result would be otherwise if the lease expressly reserved the landowner's right to change the rent (e.g., upward to current market value) upon the tenant's exercise of a right to assign or sublease. Subject to "unconscionability" limitations (¶ 7:73.5 ff.), a lease may make a tenant's transfer of interest subject to any express standard or condition (¶ 7:76 ff.). [Carma Developers (California), Inc. v. Marathon Develop. California, Inc. (1992) 2 C4th 342, 371, 6 CR2d 467, 483]

3) [7:100] Compare—independent "recapture" clause: Neither Kendall nor Civ.C. § 1995.260 (implied reasonableness consent clause condition, ¶ 7:81) have any application to an independent "recapture clause" giving the landowner the right to terminate a lease upon an attempted assignment or sublease expressly for the purpose of realizing an appreciation in rental value. See ¶ 7:79.

4) [7:101] Compare—express condition allocating "excess" transfer consideration to landowner: Civ.C. § 1995.240 specifically permits landowners to subject a tenant's right to transfer to a condition entitling the landowner to "some or all of any consideration the tenant receives from a transferee in excess of the rent under the lease"—i.e., the lease may expressly obligate the tenant to remit to the landowner any specified portion of "appreciated rentals" or "bonus value" of the leasehold interest received as consideration for the assignment, sublease or other transfer. [See Civ.C. § 1995.240, and Law Rev. Comm'n Comment thereto; see also Carma Developers (California), Inc. v. Marathon Develop. California, Inc. (1992) 2 C4th 342, 371, 6 CR2d 467, 483; but see Ilkhchooyi v. Best (1995) 37 CA4th 395, 407, 45 CR2d 766, 773—§ 1995.240 recapture consideration does not include consideration unconnected with leasehold value (¶ 7:79.1)]

However, § 1995.240 is not intended to create any "presumption" that, absent such an express provision, a demand by the landowner for all or part of the transfer consideration as a condition for consenting to the transfer is either "reasonable" or "unreasonable." Whether such a demand would be "unreasonable" (under Civ.C. § 1995.250(a) (express reasonableness condition) or Civ.C. § 1995.260 (implied reasonableness condition)) "is a question governed by the case law on the subject." [See Civ.C. § 1995.240, Law Rev. Comm'n Comment]

(f) [7:102] Compare—personal preferences: Case law predating Civ.C. § 1995.010 et seq. holds it is per se "unreasonable" to withhold consent solely on the basis of personal taste, convenience, or sensibility … because these factors bear no relation to the landowner's interest in preserving ownership interests in the property or securing the benefit of the covenants in the original lease. [Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc. (1985) 40 C3d 488, 501, 220 CR 818, 826]

But, as earlier noted, Civ.C. § 1995.260 rejects the Kendall "absolute" approach (¶ 7:86), leaving open the possibility the particular facts in a given case might warrant a contrary conclusion. [See Civ.C. § 1995.260, Law Rev. Comm'n Comment]

(3) [7:103] Express standard that consent may be withheld for *any reason: Since (subject to "unconscionability" limitations, ¶ 7:73.5 ff.) a restriction on transfer may be made subject to any standard or condition (Civ.C. §§ 1995.210(a), 1995.240, ¶ 7:76 ff.), a lease may validly subject the tenant's right to assign or sublet to the landowner's prior consent and expressly provide such consent may be withheld in the landowner's sole and absolute discretion. Pursuant to such an express standard, the landowner need not have a justifiable basis for refusing its consent. [See Civ.C. § 1995.210, Law Rev. Comm'n Comment—"Neither the law governing unreasonable restraints on alienation … nor the law governing the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing … prevents the enforcement of a restriction on transfer in accordance with the express terms of the restriction"]

[7:104 - 7:109] Reserved.

4. Rights and Remedies Upon Breach of Contractual Transfer Restriction

a. General rules

(1) [7:110] Remedies negotiable: Remedies for the breach of an assignment/sublease restriction are subject to express provisions in the lease affecting the available remedies. Thus, the parties may negotiate the remedies to be applied in the event of breach of an assignment/sublease restriction and, in such event, the contract remedies control. [Civ.C. § 1995.300(a)]

(2) [7:111] Waiver/estoppel defense: Remedies for the violation of an assignment/sublease restriction are subject to "any applicable defense, whether legal or equitable"—including waiver and estoppel. [Civ.C. § 1995.300(b)]

However, the landlord's consent or waiver of restrictions as to a particular assignment or sublease does not waive lease restrictions as to subsequent assignments/subleases by a tenant, assignee or subtenant unless (a) the lease expressly provides the restriction is limited to the original tenant, or (b) the landlord expressly states in writing that the waiver applies to a subsequent assignment/sublease. [Civ.C. § 1995.340]

b. Landowner's recourse

(1) [7:112] Contract damages and/or termination of lease: An agreed-upon assignment/sublease restriction is a covenant, violation of which breaches the lease. Thus, if a tenant transfers its leasehold interest in violation of a transfer restriction, in addition to any other available remedies (e.g., injunctive or declaratory relief), the landowner may pursue ordinary contract remedies … including (but not limited to) either or both:

- A suit for contract damages caused by the wrongful assignment/sublease;

- Termination of the lease—i.e., the landlord may declare the lease forfeited by the breach and commence an unlawful detainer action. [Civ.C. § 1995.320; see also Civ.C. § 1946.2(b)(1)(G) (assigning or subletting property in violation of tenant's lease is grounds for "just cause" eviction) (1/1/2030 "sunset" date)]

(a) [7:112.1] Limitation—COVID-19 rental debt and eviction moratorium: As a result of the COVID-19 pandemic, California enacted the COVID-19 Tenant Relief Act (CCP § 1179.01 et seq. (10/1/25 "sunset" date)). The Act imposes a moratorium on residential evictions between March 1, 2020 and September 30, 2021 (i.e., the "covered time period"). [See CCP §§ 1179.02(a), 1179.03.5]

Cross-refer: For a more detailed discussion of the COVID-19 Tenant Relief Act, see Friedman, Garcia & Hoy, Cal. Prac. Guide: Landlord-Tenant (TRG), Chs. 7 & 8.

1) [7:112.2] Demanding payment of COVID-19 rental debt: To demand payment of rent due between March 1, 2020, and September 30, 2021, residential landlords must serve tenants with statutorily-prescribed notice informing the tenants of their right to avoid eviction based on decreased income or increased expenses caused by COVID-19. [See CCP § 1179.02(c) (defining "COVID-19 rental debt") & § 1179.03(b), (c)]

2) [7:112.3] Eviction protection based on COVID-19-related financial distress: To avoid eviction, tenants must deliver a signed declaration of COVID-19-related financial distress to their landlord within 15 days of their landlord serving the required notice, excluding weekends and judicial holidays. In addition, tenants must pay at least 25 percent of the rent due during the "transition time period" between September 1, 2020, and September 30, 2021. However, tenants do not immediately have to pay any portion of the rent due during the "protected time period" between March 1, 2020, and August 30, 2020, to avoid eviction. Notwithstanding the foregoing, tenants will continue to owe the full amount of outstanding rent to their landlords. [See CCP § 1179.02(b), (d), (f), (i) (defining "COVID-19-related financial distress," "Declaration of COVID-19-related financial distress," "Protected time period" and "Transition time period") and CCP § 1179.03(g)]

Compare: A court may not find a tenant guilty of unlawful detainer before October 1, 2021, unless it finds (i) the tenant was guilty of unlawful detainer before March 1, 2020, (ii) the tenant has failed to deliver a declaration of COVID-19-related financial distress as statutorily required (above), or (iii) the tenancy was terminated due to:

• an at-fault just cause (Civ.C. § 1946.2(b)(1) (1/1/2030 ("sunset" date));

• a no-fault just cause (Civ.C. § 1946.2(b)(2) (1/1/2030 "sunset" date)), other than an intent to demolish or substantially remodel the residential real property (Civ.C. § 1946.2(b)(2)(D) (1/1/2030 "sunset" date)), unless the demolition or remodeling is necessary to comply with Civ.C. § 1941.1, Health & Saf.C. §§ 17920.3 or 17920.10, or any other applicable laws governing the habitability of residential rental units; or

• the property owner entered into a sales contract with a buyer who intends to occupy the property and all Civ.C. § 1946.2(e)(8) (1/1/2030 "sunset" date) requirements have been satisfied. [CCP § 1179.03.5(a)]

(b) [7:113] Remedies not mutually exclusive: Section 1995.320 makes clear the landowner may pursue both a breach of contract (damages) action and a termination of the lease (unlawful detainer). This is a specific application of Civ.C. § 1951.2 (damages in connection with lease termination; see Friedman, Garcia & Hoy, Cal. Prac. Guide: Landlord-Tenant (TRG), Ch. 7). [See Civ.C. § 1995.320, Law Rev. Comm'n Comment]

Alternatively, pursuant to § 1995.320, the landowner may waive the termination remedy and still recover contract damages for the wrongful assignment/sublease. (This is consistent with Civ.C. § 1951.4, pursuant to which the landowner may leave a breached lease in effect and recover damages for breach of covenant; see Friedman, Garcia & Hoy, Cal. Prac. Guide: Landlord-Tenant (TRG), Ch. 7.) [See Civ.C. § 1995.320, Law Rev. Comm'n Comment]

(c) [7:114] Waiver limitation: An assignment, sublease or other transfer in violation of a transfer restriction is not void; it is simply voidable by the landowner, who must take affirmative action to declare a forfeiture of the lease (i.e., eviction action). [People v. Klopstock (1944) 24 C2d 897, 901, 151 P2d 641, 643]

If instead, the landowner accepts rent from an unauthorized assignee or subtenant, or otherwise expressly or by conduct manifests acquiescence in the breach, the transfer restriction is unenforceable as to the particular transfer —i.e., the landowner effectively waives the right to declare a forfeiture and/or pursue any other remedies for the breach. [Karbelnig v. Brothwell (1966) 244 CA2d 333, 341, 53 CR 335, 340; see also Civ.C. § 1995.320, Law Rev. Comm'n Comment]

(d) Application of remedies to unauthorized transferee

1) [7:115] Joint and several damages liability: An "assignee" who receives or makes a transfer in violation of a transfer restriction in a lease is jointly and severally liable with the tenant for contract damages under Civ.C. § 1995.320 (¶ 7:112 ff.). For this purpose, the provisions of Civ.C. § 1951.2 applicable to lessees (damages in connection with lease termination) apply to assignees as well. [Civ.C. § 1995.330(a)]

• [7:116] Comment: Civ.C. § 1995.330(a) uses the term "assignee" exclusively; it is unclear whether this was meant to exclude subtenants and other unauthorized transferees who are not "assignees" from joint and several contract damages liability to the landowner.

2) [7:117] Termination of transfer without terminating lease: Additionally, or alternatively, the landowner has the option of terminating the transfer (assignment or sublease) without terminating the lease. In such event, the unauthorized assignee or subtenant in possession is guilty of unlawful detainer and the landowner may obtain possession from the assignee or subtenant pursuant to CCP § 1159 et seq. (unlawful detainer procedures) without terminating the tenant's right to possession. [Civ.C. § 1995.330(b)]

(2) [7:118] Declaratory relief: Of course, a landowner can neither pursue a breach of contract remedy nor declare a forfeiture for an unauthorized assignment or sublease which is only contemplated (has not yet occurred). However, if the dispute concerns whether the contemplated transfer might violate a restriction in the lease, or whether the landlord is acting "reasonably" in withholding consent to the tenant's anticipated assignment/sublease under a "consent clause" provision subject to an express or implied "reasonableness" standard, the landowner may bring suit for declaratory relief … seeking a judicial determination of the issue. [CCP § 1060; see also Civ.C. § 1995.320, Law Rev. Comm'n Comment —other remedies available to landowner include declaratory relief]

(3) [7:119] Injunctive relief: Alternatively, a landowner facing a proposed assignment or sublease in violation of the master lease may seek a preliminary and permanent injunction preventing the anticipated assignment/sublease from proceeding. [CCP § 525; see Civ.C. § 1995.320, Law Rev. Comm'n Comment—other remedies available to landowner include injunctive relief]

A prohibitory injunction would bar the proposed assignee/sublessee from entering into possession and would be enforceable through contempt.

• [7:120] Comment: Except in extraordinary circumstances, an injunction is difficult to obtain because there must be a showing of "irreparable harm" and that the "legal remedy" would be inadequate (see CCP § 526). In addition, the remedy may be expensive … because an undertaking will ordinarily be required (CCP § 529). (See generally, Weil & Brown et al., Cal. Prac. Guide: Civ. Pro. Before Trial (TRG), Ch. 9 Part II.)

Accordingly, landowners faced with an anticipated prohibited assignment or sublease may be better off suing for declaratory relief (¶ 7:118); or deferring action until after the breach and then initiating appropriate eviction proceedings (¶ 7:112, 7:117).

c. Tenant's recourse

(1) [7:121] Declaratory relief: A tenant contemplating an assignment or sublease under a "consent clause" lease subject to an express or implied "reasonableness" condition, and who is met with the landowner's objection, may bring an action for declaratory relief seeking a judicial determination that the landowner's withholding of consent is "unreasonable" and that the tenant is entitled to the landowner's approval.

(However, the tenant bears the burden of proving "unreasonable" withholding of consent. See Civ.C. § 1995.260; ¶ 7:84.)

(2) [7:122] Injunctive relief: Alternatively, it may be possible to obtain a mandatory injunction ordering the landowner to approve the tenant's proposed assignment or sublease under a "consent clause" lease. [CCP § 525 et seq.]

• [7:123] Comment: As a practical matter, given the statutory prerequisites ("irreparable harm," and "inadequate legal remedy," CCP § 526), a mandatory injunction is unlikely to issue except in very extreme cases; declaratory relief and damages will ordinarily be more realistic remedies.

(3) [7:124] Contract damages and/or termination of lease: When a tenant's right to transfer is conditioned on landowner consent, the giving or withholding of which is subject to an express or implied "reasonableness" condition, the landowner breaches the lease by "unreasonably" withholding consent. In such event, in addition to any other remedies provided by law for breach of a lease, the tenant is entitled to pursue all available remedies for breach of contract—including (but not limited to) either or both:

• A suit for contract damages caused by the landlord's breach (see Cohen v. Ratinoff (1983) 147 CA3d 321, 195 CR 84);

• Termination of the lease—i.e., the tenant may give notice of termination and raise the landowner's breach in defense to a Civ.C. § 1951.2 or § 1951.4 damages action. [Civ.C. § 1995.310(a) & (b)]

(a) [7:125] Remedies not mutually exclusive: Just as the landowner may pursue both a damages remedy and an unlawful detainer, or one and not the other, when the tenant breaches an assignment/sublease restriction (¶ 7:112 ff.), tenants aggrieved by an unreasonable withholding of consent in violation of the lease may both terminate the lease and seek contract damages or, instead, waive the termination remedy and still collect contract damages for the breach. [Civ.C. § 1995.310]

[7:130] Almost all issues pertinent to the purchase and sale of a fee interest are also germane to the purchase and sale of a tenant's interest in a ground lease. Therefore, when representing the purchaser or seller of a tenant's interest in a ground lease, Chapter 4 of this Practice Guide, regarding the purchase and sale of real property generally (including the purchase and sale agreement and the use and mechanics of an escrow), should be consulted.

In addition, however, the purchase of a leasehold interest also requires a thorough analysis and review of important leasing issues. Obviously, the starting point is a review of the ground lease itself.

1. [7:131] Reviewing Ground Lease and Related Documents: The importance of reviewing the selling tenant's pertinent files cannot be overemphasized. In particular, counsel's attention should focus on the ground lease (including any amendments and prior assignments), as well as correspondence between the landowner and selling tenant. (The review of subleases and related matters is discussed at ¶ 7:246 ff.)

The following issues are of paramount importance:

a. Term

(1) [7:132] General considerations: The balance of the term (including any options to extend the lease term) should be lengthy enough to satisfy the purchasing tenant's needs. If the purchaser intends to finance its leasehold, the balance of the term must be sufficiently long to satisfy a lender as well (see ¶ 7:399 ff.).

(2) [7:133] Options to extend term: Ground leases often contain options to extend or renew the term. (Technically, an “extension” is a continuation of the term for a fixed period of time; whereas a “renewal” extends the lease term by an amount of time equal to the original term. While courts have distinguished an “extension” from a “renewal” (Howell v. City of Hamburg Co. (1913) 165 C 172, 177-178, 131 P 130, 132-133), the distinction usually has no practical importance.)

Commercial tenants generally have strong economic motives for renewing a lease—notably, e.g., recovering a reasonable return on investments in trade fixtures, avoiding moving expenses, and maintaining the goodwill attached to the location. Thus, including an option to renew or extend in the ground lease may be an important requirement for a commercial tenant. [See Robert T. Miner, M.D., Inc. v. Tustin Avenue Investors, LLC (2004) 116 CA4th 264, 273, 10 CR3d 178, 183]

As with the duration of the term, the extensions should be long enough to justify the purchasing tenant's economic investment in the leasehold and to satisfy any prospective leasehold mortgagee.

➪ [7:134] PRACTICE POINTER: When reviewing options to extend the term, remember that option provisions are generally construed in favor of the tenant. [Mitchell v. Exhibition Foods, Inc. (1986) 184 CA3d 1033, 1041-1043, 229 CR 535, 540-541]

(a) [7:135] Assignable? Also consider whether options to extend can be assigned to a purchasing tenant. Unless otherwise specifically provided in the lease, an option to extend is assignable to the leasehold transferee. [Penilla v. Gerstenkorn (1927) 86 CA 668, 261 P 488, 489]

However, a purchasing tenant will not be able to exercise an option to extend if the lease makes the option “personal” to the selling tenant. [Cf. Civ.C. § 1995.230, ¶ 7:75—lease may absolutely prohibit transfer of a tenant's leasehold interest]

(b) [7:136] Rent during option period: Because the initial term of a ground lease is extensive, it is difficult for the parties to predict with certainty what a fair rent should be for an option period not set to commence for 20 years or more. More commonly, the lease incorporates a standard or formula for fixing the rent rather than a specified rent amount.

1) [7:137] Agreement to agree unenforceable: Courts will not write contracts for parties who have expressed no standards in their agreement for establishment of its terms. Therefore, an extension or renewal provision leaving the future rent to be fixed by agreement of the parties is unenforceable unless it contains an ascertainable standard for determining rent. [ETCO Corp. v. Hauer (1984) 161 CA3d 1154, 1161-1162, 208 CR 118, 123—commercial lease option unenforceable where rent left to parties' "mutual agreement"; Ablett v. Clauson (1954) 43 C2d 280, 285-286, 272 P2d 753, 756-757—option to renew for 5-year period "upon terms to be then agreed upon" too uncertain to be enforceable; see Robert T. Miner, M.D., Inc. v. Tustin Avenue Investors, LLC (2004) 116 CA4th 264, 274, 10 CR3d 178, 184 (discussing cases)]

2) [7:138] Rental amount tied to specified formula or guideline: On the other hand, failure to specify a sum certain in future rent is not fatal to an extension provision so long as the lease contains some formula or guideline by which the future rental amount can objectively be ascertained.

The methods for determining rent during the option term are virtually limitless. Common approaches include:

a) [7:139] "Fair market value": Rent due for the extension period may be tied to a percentage of the current "fair market value" of the leased premises. At least where the use being made of the property does not impact its fair market value, the rent is figured in accordance with the price the property will command in the market as of the renewal date—i.e., a rent based on the potential highest and best use of the property. [See, e.g., Bullock's, Inc. v. Security-First Nat'l Bank of Los Angeles (1958) 160 CA2d 277, 283, 325 P2d 185, 189—5% of "appraised value of the leased land"; Eltinge & Graziadio Develop. Co. v. Childs (1975) 49 CA3d 294, 298, 122 CR 369, 371—6% of "appraisal value"; Humphries Investments, Inc. v. Walsh (1988) 202 CA3d 766, 768, 248 CR 800, 801—7% of "current market value"]

b) [7:140] "Fair market rental (or use) value": On the other hand, where the rental amount for option periods is tied to the property's "fair market rental value" (or "fair market use value") and the tenant is only allowed to use the premises for a limited purpose, future rent must be based on the particular use for which the premises are leased—not the property's "highest and best use." [Wu v. Interstate Consolidated Industries (1991) 226 CA3d 1511, 1517, 277 CR 546, 550; see also California Nat'l Bank v. Woodbridge Plaza, LLC (2008) 164 CA4th 137, 143-146, 78 CR3d 561, 566-568—lease requiring tenant-bank's rent during option period to be calculated at "then prevailing rate," capped by amount paid by competitor bank (or its successor) leasing space in same shopping center, interpreted to mean comparable rent paid by nearby financial institutions for bank space, not rent paid by "just any other tenant" leasing for general office purposes competitor bank's former space]

"An interpretation that the rent during the option terms is to be based upon the highest and best use of the property despite the purposes for which lessor and lessee agreed it could be used, would be economically and commercially unreasonable and violate the intent of the parties (Civ.C. § 1643)." [Wu v. Interstate Consolidated Industries, supra, 226 CA3d at 1515, 277 CR at 548—movie theater lease setting rent during option periods at "fair market rental value" required rent to be determined on basis of use of premises as movie theater, rather than highest and best use for retail and specialty shops]

➪ [7:141] PRACTICE POINTER: Notwithstanding the limited use to which the premises are susceptible at the time the agreement is executed, a "highest and best use" approach may be utilized to measure future rent for option periods if the parties have expressly so agreed in the lease. See further discussion at ¶ 7:165 ff.

3) [7:142] Arbitration/appraisal methods for determining rent: It is also sufficient if the parties leave the exact amount of future rent open for later agreement but also provide that, if they fail to agree, they will submit the matter to binding arbitration (see Ablett v. Clauson (1954) 43 C2d 280, 285, 272 P2d 753, 756, and cases cited therein) or defer to the decision of neutral appraisers (see Streicher v. Heimburge (1928) 205 C 675, 676-677, 272 P 290, 291).

a) [7:143] Three appraisers: One popular method is to require the landowner and tenant each to select an appraiser who will attempt to reach an agreement. If those two appraisers cannot agree, they will jointly select another appraiser to independently determine the market rent.

Another method calls for the selection of three appraisers, each of whom renders an opinion on market rent. The two appraisals closest to each other are then averaged to arrive at the rent figure. [See also Casden Park La Brea Retail, LLC v. Ross Dress for Less, Inc. (2008) 162 CA4th 468, 471, 75 CR3d 763, 765—fair market rental value determined by majority vote of arbitrators or, if two of them do not agree, by averaging two closest figures and then fixing rent at amount selected by party whose original proposed rent was closest to averaged figure]

b) [7:144] "Baseball arbitration": Under "baseball arbitration" (named after the method used to determine baseball players' salaries during arbitration), the tenant and landowner each select a rental figure and submit their respective figures to arbitration. The arbitrator must then decide which figure (tenant's or landowner's) is closer to the market value. The arbitrator cannot choose any other number or compromise the two figures. Theoretically, the risk of the arbitrator choosing the other party's rent figure should motivate each party to propose a conservative and reasonable rent figure.

(c) [7:145] Right of first refusal to extend: Like many other leases, ground leases sometimes grant the tenant a "right of first refusal" to extend the lease term. Such a provision essentially provides the tenant with the chance to match any offer from a third party at the end of the lease term. If the tenant matches the offer, the new lease will include all provisions of the third party offer (including any new options to extend). Conversely, if the tenant's election to renew differs in any material respect from the terms offered by the third party, the landlord generally can validly choose not to extend the tenant's term. [Ellis v. Chevron, U.S.A., Inc. (1988) 201 CA3d 132, 137, 246 CR 863, 865; but see ¶ 7:148.1]

1) [7:146] Limitation—landowner bound by implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing: If given unchecked discretion, landowners would be free to solicit unreasonably onerous third party offers, which they knew the existing tenant would be unable to match, for the sole purpose of inducing a rejection from the tenant and a termination of the tenancy. This would deprive the tenant of any meaningful opportunity to extend its lease and thus effectively render the right of first refusal to renew a benefit without any substance.

However, the covenant of good faith and fair dealing, implied in every contract (¶ 4:275.5 ff.), limits the landowner's discretionary power in soliciting and negotiating a third party deal. One of the components of this covenant in the context of commercial leases is a duty on the part of the landowner "to promote the continued use and occupancy of the premises by an existing tenant" … at least where doing so would not be economically detrimental to the landowner. While the landowner need not be an "altruistic agent" in protecting the existing tenant's interests, it must keep those interests in mind; and this is especially true if the landowner has reason to know of the tenant's desire to renew the tenancy. [Mitchell v. Exhibition Foods, Inc. (1986) 184 CA3d 1033, 1044, 229 CR 535, 542 (emphasis added)]

a) [7:147] Application—unreasonable third party offer negotiated as pretext for eviction: Thus, as a result of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, the existing tenant is not obligated to match provisions in a third party offer that would "injure, frustrate or make impossible the tenant's continuing use of the property" where doing so holds no economic advantage for the landowner (e.g., tenant need not necessarily match an offer requiring a change of use or signage). [Mitchell v. Exhibition Foods, Inc. (1986) 184 CA3d 1033, 1045-1046, 229 CR 535, 543; and see Ellis v. Chevron, U.S.A., Inc. (1988) 201 CA3d 132, 142, 246 CR 863, 868—implied covenant does not absolutely require landlord to continue tenant's business after expiration of lease term, but does preclude landlord from selecting alternate use of property, not tied to any economic advantage, as pretext for ousting tenant upon expiration of term]

2) [7:148] Equitable relief if third party offer solicited in "bad faith": If a third party offer presents no economic advantage to the landowner (i.e., its enforcement would not preserve landowner's reasonable expectations), and is so unfair to the existing tenant that it can viewed only as a "bad faith" pretext for eviction, the tenant is not bound to match it on an "all or nothing basis." Invoking its equitable powers, the court can "piecemeal" the offer (excluding the "commercially unreasonable" components) so as to make it less burdensome for the tenant to match. [Mitchell v. Exhibition Foods, Inc. (1986) 184 CA3d 1033, 1045-1046, 229 CR 535, 543; but compare Ellis v. Chevron, U.S.A., Inc. (1988) 201 CA3d 132, 142, 246 CR 863, 868—court would not "red line" matching offer requirements where all terms of third party offer (including new use requirements) were clearly of economic advantage to landlord: landlord cannot be expected to continue expired lease to its economic disadvantage]

3) [7:148.1] Exercise of right of first refusal by "mirror image" terms not required where "commercially unreasonable": Without mentioning the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, one case concludes (in connection with a tenant's right of first refusal to purchase) that a tenant may properly exercise its right of first refusal without a literal matching of terms offered by the third party where "mirror image" matching would be commercially unreasonable under the facts. [Arden Group, Inc. v. Burk (1996) 45 CA4th 1409, 1414-1415, 53 CR2d 492, 495]

"Because the party exercising a right of first refusal is stepping into a contract made by a third party, the court must consider commercial realities and allow modifications consistent with the intent of the parties whose contract created the right of first refusal." [Arden Group, Inc. v. Burk, supra, 45 CA4th at 1414-1415, 53 CR2d at 495 (emphasis added)—gasoline station tenant with right of first refusal to purchase held to have sufficiently "matched" third party offer even though tenant's terms eliminated gasoline tank removal condition (it would have been commercially unreasonable to hold tenant to that condition, and inconsistent with parties' intent in negotiating right of first refusal, since property had been operated as gas station for past 50 years)]

Cross-refer: This point is discussed in greater detail in connection with options to purchase and preemptive purchase rights; see ¶ 8:212 ff.

(d) [7:149] Exercising options to extend—notice formalities: Generally, to invoke an option to extend, the tenant must apprise the landowner in unequivocal terms of its unqualified intent to exercise the option "within the time, in the manner and on the terms stated in the lease." Since the option binds the landowner, while the tenant is free to accept or reject it, courts hold the tenant to exact compliance with option formalities specified in the lease—i.e., those terms are strictly construed against the tenant. [Bekins Moving & Storage Co. v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America (1985) 176 CA3d 245, 250, 221 CR 738, 740]

1) Application

a) [7:150] Conduct not tantamount to "actual notice": Thus, when the lease requires written notice to the landowner of an election to extend, notice cannot be inferred by the tenant's conduct. Even if the tenant has spent substantial sums on improvements before the option date (arguably indicative of an intent to renew), unless actual notice is given per the terms and in the manner specified in the lease, the landowner can refuse to renew when the lease expires. It makes no difference that the landowner knew the improvements were being made and failed to inquire about the tenant's intent. [Bekins Moving & Storage Co. v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America (1985) 176 CA3d 245, 251, 221 CR 738, 741; see also Simons v. Young (1979) 93 CA3d 170, 179, 155 CR 460, 465]

b) [7:151] Compare—continued possession where actual notice not required: The rule set forth at ¶ 7:149 ff. applies only where the lease expressly requires actual notice of intent to renew. If, on the other hand, actual notice is not a specified condition, the tenant's continued possession of the property upon termination of the original term, coupled with payment of appropriate rent, is itself evidence of intent to extend the term and thus to exercise the option. [ADV Corp. v. Wikman (1986) 178 CA3d 61, 65-66, 223 CR 262, 264-265]

c) [7:152] Compare—mailed notice; landowner bears risk of transmittal loss: When the lease requires mailed notice of the exercise of an option to extend, the tenant satisfies the burden by timely deposit of the notice with the U.S. Post Office in accordance with the lease provisions (typically, certified or registered mail, return receipt requested, postage prepaid). The landowner bears the risk the notice might get lost in transmission; thus, if a properly-mailed notice never reaches the landowner, the option nonetheless will be deemed properly exercised. [See Jenkins v. Tuneup Masters (1987) 190 CA3d 1, 8, 235 CR 214, 217-218]

➪ [7:153] PRACTICE POINTER: To avoid this result, landowners should insist on a lease provision calling for actual delivery of notice of the tenant's election to extend (i.e., by personal delivery of written notice to the landowner or landowner's agent).

2) [7:154] Estoppel/waiver defense: Conduct by the landowner upon which the tenant relies in failing to follow specified formalities for invoking an option to extend may excuse literal compliance. In effect, the landowner's conduct may be construed to waive the option conditions or estop it from asserting the option formalities. [Leonhardi-Smith, Inc. v. Cameron (1980) 108 CA3d 42, 47-48, 166 CR 135, 137-138]

a) [7:155] Example—accepting rent after option period: Landowners are likely to be held to a waiver or estoppel where they accept rent from tenants after the option period with knowledge the tenants, through their conduct, intend to renew.

For example, in Leonhardi-Smith, supra, the lease required written notice of intent to renew more than 90 days before expiration of the term. The tenants gave oral notice before the 90 days and followed up with written notice within the 90-day period. The landowner had accepted rent in the meantime and knew the tenants were making substantial improvements to the premises under the assumption the lease was extended. The lease was held properly renewed (landowner deemed to have waived the 90-day written notice condition). [Leonhardi-Smith, Inc. v. Cameron (1980) 108 CA3d 42, 48, 166 CR 135, 138]

[7:155.1 - 7:155.4] Reserved.

(e) [7:155.5] Effect of conflicting lease cancellation provision: Where the lease contains both an option to extend the term and a provision allowing either party to cancel the lease upon occurrence of a specified contingency (such as destruction of the premises by fire or other disaster) within a certain period before expiration of the lease, the cancellation provision prevails over the tenant's option to renew. The tenant's exercise of the option cannot cut off the landlord's contractual right to cancel. [11382 Beach Partnership v. Libaw (1999) 70 CA4th 212, 216-218, 82 CR2d 533, 535-536]

(f) [7:156] "Dual" option to extend provisions (tenant/sublessor-sublessee): Where a tenant/sublessor with an option to extend gives an option to extend to its sublessee, the sublessor impliedly promises to exercise its option under the master lease so as not to injure the sublessee's rights (this is incident to the covenant of good faith and fair dealing implied in every contract, ¶ 4:275.5). If the sublessor fails to exercise its option, thus preventing the sublessee from extending the term of its sublease, the sublessee has a damages remedy for injury caused by the breach. [See Gilman v. Nemetz (1962) 203 CA2d 81, 90, 21 CR 317, 323; Northridge Hosp. Foundation v. Pic 'N' Save No. 9, Inc. (1986) 187 CA3d 1088, 1094-1095, 232 CR 329, 332—sublessor could not abridge subtenant's right to renew by agreeing with landlord to forfeit master lease]

➪ [7:157] PRACTICE POINTER: Verification of the term, options to extend, and various other provisions of the lease can—and should—be confirmed through a landowner estoppel certificate. See ¶ 7:292 ff.; Form 7:B.

[7:158 - 7:159] Reserved.

b. [7:160] Rent and rent escalations: Ground leases typically call for a "base" rent—i.e., a sum certain to be paid on a periodic (usually monthly) basis. Quite likely, the lease also includes provisions to increase (or adjust) the rent over time. There are a myriad of possible rent increase or rent adjustment formulas; but the following are the most common approaches:

(1) [7:161] Consumer price index (CPI) increases: A CPI approach increases rent periodically throughout the term by a percentage that parallels the increase in a particular consumer price index. (There can also be various minimums or maximums on the amount of the rent adjustment.) Although a variety of indexes can be used, the most common ones are the United States Department of Labor, Bureau of Labor Statistics, for either (a) the Consumer Price Index for All Urban Consumers; or (b) the Consumer Price Index for Urban Wage Earners and Clerical Workers.

However, even when one of these common indexes is selected, consideration should be given to the particular geographic location in which the property is located. (Each index is available for various regions throughout the country.) For example, it would be inappropriate to use a Northern California index when the subject property is located in Southern California.

(2) [7:162] Percentage of sales: Ground leases for retail premises frequently require the tenant to pay rent based on a percentage of sales generated from the property. (Although percentage rent is often said to be based upon the amount of "gross sales," there are usually a variety of exclusions from the definition of that term.)

There are a number of ways to calculate percentage rent. Some of the typical formulas are:

- A straight percentage of sales.
- A percentage of sales or the base (fixed) rent, whichever is greater. [See College Block v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1988) 206 CA3d 1376, 1378, 254 CR 179, 181 & fn. 2—service station lease called for rent based on percentage of price paid for gasoline delivered, but in no event less than fixed minimum]
- A percentage of sales above a fixed, agreed-upon figure (e.g., 5% of gross sales which exceed one million dollars in any given year). If sales are below the agreed-upon figure, the rent is a fixed, base rent.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

• Base rent plus a percentage of sales. [See Lippman v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1955) 44 C2d 136, 139, 280 P2d 775, 777—lease called for $285/month base rent plus percentage of lessee's annual sales]

➪ [7:163] PRACTICE POINTERS: The assignment of a lease which has a percentage rent component presents some unique issues. For example:

• Under a "consent clause" lease (wherein tenant's right to assign is subject to landowner's prior consent), the proposed assignee's sales volume becomes crucial. If the proposed assignee cannot generate the same level of sales as the assignor tenant, the landowner acts "reasonably" in withholding consent to the assignment. [John Hogan Enterprises, Inc. v. Kellogg (1986) 187 CA3d 589, 593, 231 CR 711, 713; see ¶ 7:95 ff.]

• A commonly-used provision designed to protect the landowner from an assignee's decreasing sales calls for any assignee to pay percentage rent (regardless of its actual sales) in an amount equal to the average percentage rent paid by the assignor over a 24-month period. If not carefully drafted, such a clause could backfire on the landowner. In one case, the court narrowly construed the provision, holding that, throughout the term, the assignee only had to pay the assignor's average monthly percentage rent (not a percentage of its actual sales) … even though the assignee's actual sales exceeded those of the assignor and would have yielded a higher percentage rent for the landowner. [Waterbury v. T.G. & Y. Stores Co. (9th Cir. 1987) 820 F2d 1479, 1481-1482]

(3) [7:164] Percentage of total sublease rent: Ground lease rent is sometimes calculated (in whole or in part) on the basis of total subtenant rents payable to the ground lease tenant. This arrangement is more typical where the tenant is a developer and the landowner and tenant contemplate the creation of subleases which will ultimately provide the business activity to support ground lease rent payments. In effect, the landowner shares in sublease rent increases, while the tenant/developer is under no independent burden to pay rent increases.

(4) [7:165] Percentage of "fair market value": A "fair market value" rent provision ties rent increases to appreciation in the fair market value of the property over the lease term.

(a) [7:166] "Highest and best use" or current rental use valuation? "Fair market value" rent increase provisions can be particularly problematic and impractical. Unless carefully drafted, such a clause is likely to generate dispute over the threshold issue of "fair market value."

Notably, does the term contemplate value based on the tenant's existing use or, instead, the "highest and best use" to which the property may be suited?

• [7:166.1] At least where the lease does not specify current use (or "rental"), market value in this context apparently must be determined by the property's "highest and best use" as if it were vacant and regardless of the fact the parties clearly contemplated the property would only be used for a particular purpose. [See, e.g., Eltinge & Graziadio Develop. Co. v. Childs (1975) 49 CA3d 294, 298, 122 CR 369, 371—parties contemplated use for shopping center] Therefore, if, for example, the highest and best use of the property is as an office building, the value will be established based on that use, not the actual use contemplated by the lease.

• [7:166.2] Another case qualifies the "highest and best use" approach when zoning and other governmental restraints are imposed on the property: While the appraiser may determine value based on the prospect that use can be changed, a particular use restricted by governmental regulations cannot be considered in assessing "highest and best use." [Humphries Investments, Inc. v. Walsh (1988) 202 CA3d 766, 773, 248 CR 800, 805] Nonetheless, that is little solace to a tenant when there are no governmental restraints to prevent an unanticipated "highest and best use" rent escalation.

• [7:166.3] At least in the context of rental rates for an option period, yet another case holds the "highest and best use" approach may not be used where the lease ties the rent determination to "fair market rental (or use) value" and also limits the tenant's use to a specified purpose. [See Wu v. Interstate Consolidated Industries (1991) 226 CA3d 1511, 1517, 277 CR 546, 550; ¶ 7:140]

➪ [7:167] PRACTICE POINTER: Courts are unlikely to "rewrite" a lease to adopt a "highest and best use" approach where that is clearly not what the parties intended. Consequently, to avoid later dispute and wholly unanticipated rent adjustments under a lease calling for "fair market value" increases, it behooves the parties to spell out in the lease exactly how "fair market value" will be determined. For example, if the tenant's current use, rather than the "highest and best use," is to be the yardstick, the lease should explicitly so state.

(5) [7:168] Pass-through to subtenants: Subleases sometimes include a provision allowing the ground lease tenant to pass along rent increases to the subtenants (usually pro rata among the subtenants). Therefore, a careful review of the various rent provisions in the subleases is important in assessing the net effect of rent increases under the ground lease. (See ¶ 7:246 ff.; and see ¶ 4:410 ff. regarding review of leases generally.)

(6) [7:169] Certainty as to amount of rent escalations: Certainty in the amount of (or method of determining) rent escalations should be a particular focal point for purchasing tenant's counsel. A prospective buyer will, of course, want to know what its future maximum rent exposure could be. In addition, any prospective leasehold mortgagee will require that rent increases be fixed, or at least tied to some objectively ascertainable standard (see ¶ 7:401 ff.).

c. [7:170] Use provisions: Though significant in any lease, use provisions and restrictions take on a heightened level of importance in a ground lease where, because of the extensive duration, a change in use is almost inevitable as years go by. Therefore, purchasing tenants will naturally be looking for broadly-worded use provisions, with optimum rights to initiate a change in use.

(1) [7:171] Validity and enforceability of use restrictions, generally: Generally, rental property may be used for any lawful purpose consistent with its "ordinary use," unless the lease confines use to a particular purpose. [Davidson v. Goldstein (1943) 58 CA2d Supp. 909, 136 P2d 665, 666; see also Eltinge & Graziadio Develop. Co. v. Childs (1975) 49 CA3d 294, 297, 122 CR 369, 370]

Most often, complex use restrictions are negotiated between parties to a commercial lease. As discussed at ¶ 7:172 ff., commercial lease use restrictions are governed by a statutory scheme (Civ.C. § 1997.010 et seq.) that is patterned after the Code sections regulating commercial rental property assignments and subleases (¶ 7:69 ff.).

These statutes apply to use restrictions in both a lease between landowner and tenant and a sublease between tenant and sublessee. They also apply to use restrictions contained in a modification or other agreement affecting a lease or sublease. Further, assignees are bound by these statutes to the same extent as are tenants and subtenants. [Civ.C. § 1997.020(a), (b) & (d)]

(a) [7:172] Contemplated use "restrictions": A "restriction on use" within the meaning of Civ.C. § 1997.010 et seq. is a lease provision restricting tenant use of commercial rental property by either:

- Limiting use to a specified purpose;
- Mandating use for a specified purpose;
- Prohibiting use for a specified purpose;
- Limiting or prohibiting a change in use;
- "Or otherwise" (i.e., any other provision regulating usage of the premises). [Civ.C. § 1997.020(c)]

(b) [7:173] No implied use restrictions: Unless the lease includes an express restriction on use, tenants have the right under the lease to engage in any "reasonable" use of the rented premises. [Civ.C. § 1997.210(b)]

(c) [7:174] Express use restrictions valid and enforceable: Subject to the limitations noted at ¶ 7:175 ff., a commercial property lease may include any restriction on the tenant's use of the property (whether "reasonable" or "unreasonable"). [Civ.C. § 1997.210(a); and see ¶ 7:172 re breadth of use restrictions]

1) Limitations

a) [7:175] Unlawful restrictions: Civ.C. § 1997.010 et seq. does not authorize a use restriction "that is otherwise prohibited by law" (e.g., a restriction on use that would effectively work an unlawful discrimination). [Civ.C. § 1997.030]

b) [7:176] Ambiguous provisions: Any ambiguity in a use restriction "shall be construed in favor of unrestricted use." [Civ.C. § 1997.220 (emphasis added)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

2) [7:177] Impact on Civ.C. § 1951.4 remedies: A use restriction does not affect the landowner's right to invoke the Civ.C. § 1951.4 remedy to continue an unexpired lease (recover rent as it becomes due) after the tenant's breach and abandonment of the premises. [Civ.C. § 1997.040(b)]

The use restriction is applied under § 1951.4 to limit the abandoning tenant's right to sublet or assign except to the extent the tenant proves enforcement of the restriction would be "unreasonable" under all the circumstances (including, but not limited to, circumstances involving both the leased property and any building or complex in which it is located). [Civ.C. § 1997.040(b); and see comprehensive treatment of Civ.C. § 1951.4 remedy in Friedman, Garcia & Hoy, Cal. Prac. Guide: Landlord-Tenant (TRG), Ch. 7]

3) [7:178] Impact on Civ.C. § 1951.2 remedy: A landowner's right under Civ.C. § 1951.2 to terminate a lease upon tenant breach and recover (in addition to other authorized damages) posttermination accruing rental losses is subject to a duty to mitigate damages by making reasonable efforts to relet the premises for the balance of the now-terminated tenant's unexpired term. [See Civ.C. § 1951.2; and detailed treatment in Friedman, Garcia & Hoy, Cal. Prac. Guide: Landlord-Tenant (TRG), Ch. 7]

For this purpose, the reasonably avoidable amount of rental loss is computed by taking into account any reasonable use of the leased property. However, if the lease contains a use restriction enforceable under Civ.C. § 1997.010 et seq., the computation must take into account the restricted use except to the extent the tenant proves enforcement of the restriction would be "unreasonable" under all the circumstances (including, but not limited to, circumstances involving the leased property and any building or complex in which it is located). [Civ.C. § 1997.040(a)]

(2) [7:179] Changes in use: Civ.C. § 1997.010 et seq. also governs change in use lease provisions.

Commercial property leases may either limit or prohibit a tenant's change in use (Civ.C. § 1997.020(c)) as follows:

(a) [7:180] Absolute bar: A use restriction may absolutely prohibit the tenant's (or subtenant's or assignee's) change in use. [Civ.C. § 1997.230]

• [7:181] Comment: Such a prohibition is common in large-scale commercial development leases (such as shopping centers) … where the landowner typically wants to maintain a particular "tenant mix," or ensure the maintenance of a particular business to preserve the value of a "percentage rent" lease, or ensure adherence to "exclusive use" or noncompetition rights of other tenants.

(b) [7:182] Conditional change in use, generally: A restriction on tenant use may provide that a change in use is subject to any express standard or condition. [Civ.C. § 1997.240]

1) [7:183] Whether "reasonable" or "unreasonable": The "reasonableness" of an express standard or condition on change in use has no impact on enforceability. The parties are free to agree to any conditional change in use—whether reasonable or unreasonable; courts will enforce the restriction according to its terms so as to give effect to the parties' expectations in negotiating the lease. [Civ.C. § 1997.240—"any express standard or condition"]

• [7:184] Comment: Civ.C. § 1997.240 parallels Civ.C. § 1995.240 regarding assignment/sublease restrictions. As with express standards or conditions on transferability of a leasehold interest (¶ 7:76), no "reasonableness" limitation will be implied in connection with a standard or condition on a change in use.

(c) [7:185] "Consent clause" change in use: The tenant's right to change its use of the leased property may be made subject to the landowner's prior consent. [Civ.C. §§ 1997.240 (subject to "any" express standard or condition), 1997.250]

1) [7:186] Express standard or conditions on consent: The lease may provide for express standards or conditions for the giving or withholding of landowner consent, including (but not limited to):

• That the landowner's consent may not "unreasonably" be withheld;

• That the landowner's consent may be withheld subject to express standards or conditions. [Civ.C. § 1997.250(a) & (b)]

2) [7:187] Implied "reasonableness" consent clause condition where no express standards: When a "consent clause" use restriction provides no express standard for giving or withholding landowner consent, it must be construed to include an implied standard that landowner consent to the change in use will not "unreasonably" be withheld. [Civ.C. § 1997.260 (applicable to use restrictions executed on or after 1/1/92; see Civ.C. § 1997.270(a) & (b))]

[7:188 - 7:189] Reserved.

3) [7:190] Determining whether withholding of consent "reasonable": On the question whether the landowner acted "reasonably" in withholding consent to a change in use, the statutes adopt the same approach utilized in connection with assignments and subleases requiring landowner consent (¶ 7:83 ff.).

a) [7:190.1] Case-by-case fact question: Reasonable vs. unreasonable withholding of consent raises a question of fact, to be decided on a case-by-case basis. [Civ.C. § 1997.260 (applicable only to post-1991 use restrictions, per Civ.C. § 1997.270)]

Though there is yet no known case law applying § 1997.260, presumably courts will defer to the Kendall "commercially reasonable" approach governing the issue in connection with assignments and subleases—i.e., the landowner properly withholds consent if it has a commercially reasonable justification. [See Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc. (1985) 40 C3d 488, 500, 220 CR 818, 826; and ¶ 7:87 ff.] Thus, e.g., if the ground lease calls for percentage rent based on tenant sales, the landowner's refusal to consent to a change in use generally will be considered "reasonable." [See John Hogan Enterprises, Inc. v. Kellogg (1986) 187 CA3d 589, 593, 231 CR 713; and ¶ 7:95 ff.]

b) [7:191] Tenant's burden of proof: The tenant bears the burden of proof on the issue of "unreasonable" withholding of consent. [Civ.C. § 1997.260 (applicable only to post-1991 use restrictions, per Civ.C. § 1997.270)]

1/ [7:192] Statutory method of meeting burden: A tenant claiming unreasonable withholding of consent may meet the burden of proof by showing that, in response to the tenant's written request for a statement of reasons for withholding consent, the landowner failed, within a "reasonable time," to state in writing a reasonable objection to the change in use. [Civ.C. § 1997.260 (applicable only to post-1991 use restrictions, per Civ.C. § 1997.270)]

(Note this provision simply facilitates meeting the tenant's burden of proof; it is not the sole method of carrying the burden on the unreasonable withholding of consent issue.)

(3) [7:193] Continuous operations/use issues: Counsel for the purchasing tenant should carefully scrutinize the ground lease for "continuous operations" or "continuous use" provisions. Landowners typically negotiate such provisions to optimize profitability and ensure maximum rents under a percentage rent lease. (For example, Landowner owns a shopping center and has ground leased a parcel to a major supermarket as "anchor tenant." A continuously-operated supermarket will attract patrons to the shopping center, thereby attracting other tenants, increasing business in the center, and benefiting the landowner's overall profitability.)

However, landowner and tenant are likely to have competing concerns on this issue. Most tenants do not want to be locked into a "continuous operations" covenant (indeed, they are usually reluctant to agree to operate for any specified minimum number of hours or days in a given period), because the obligation to maintain operations over an extended period of time could be economically disastrous. If a tenant's business is doing poorly, it may be less expensive simply to cease operations, close the building and continue paying rent, than to incur the cost of keeping the business running. (After closing down, the tenant would obviously seek to find a buyer for its leasehold interest.)

(a) [7:194] Tenant's implied covenant to continue business operations (percentage rent leases): If rent is based in whole or in part on a percentage of the tenant's sales or other revenue, purchasing tenants should also be cautioned that they may be obligated under an implied covenant of continued business operations throughout the term of the lease. "To make a commercial lease mutually profitable when the rent is a minimum plus a percentage, or is based totally on a percentage, a covenant to operate in good faith will be implied … if the minimum rent is not substantial." [College Block v. Atlantic Richfield Co. (1988) 206 CA3d 1376, 1380, 254 CR 179, 182 (emphasis added); see Lippman v. Sears, Roebuck & Co. (1955) 44 C2d 136, 141, 280 P2d 775, 781—covenant of continued operations implied in retail store lease because minimum base rent not "substantial or adequate"]

Whether the minimum base rent yields a "substantial" (or "adequate") amount for this purpose is a question of fact, determined on a case-by-case basis under the circumstances as they existed at the time the lease was entered into. Essentially, the court must decide if the specified base rent provides the landowner with what was reasonably expected when the lease was executed. [College Block v. Atlantic Richfield Co., supra, 206 CA3d at 1383, 254 CR at 184]

d. [7:195] Options and rights of first refusal to purchase: Ground leases sometimes grant the tenant an option to purchase or right of first refusal to purchase the fee interest in the property. Clearly, the existence of such provisions can enhance the value of the leasehold.

(1) Legal effect; distinctions

(a) [7:196] Option to purchase: An "option to purchase" gives the tenant an absolute right to buy the leased premises for the duration of the option and on specified terms. But the option is not itself a binding contract of sale. It is the landowner's (optionor's) irrevocable offer to sell to the tenant (optionee), giving the tenant the power to create a binding contract of sale upon performance of a specified condition precedent (i.e., manifesting acceptance of the offer to sell). Upon acceptance of the offer to sell, the option "ripens" into a bilateral contract of sale and purchase; but, until then, the optionor/landowner and optionee/tenant stand solely in a landlord-tenant relationship. [Palo Alto Town & Country Village, Inc. v. BBTC Co. (1974) 11 C3d 494, 502, 113 CR 705, 709; see Arden Group, Inc. v. Burk (1996) 45 CA4th 1409, 1414, 53 CR2d 492, 495; Marriage of Joaquin (1987) 193 CA3d 1529, 1532-1533, 239 CR 175, 176-177]

(b) [7:197] Right of first refusal: On the other hand, a "right of first refusal to purchase" simply gives the tenant the first opportunity, or privilege, to buy over another third party. The right of first refusal generally provides that the tenant may purchase the property on the same terms and conditions as any bona fide third party offer received by the landowner which the landowner intends to accept. The landowner retains the sole right to determine whether to sell the property; hence, a right of first refusal cannot ripen into a right of purchase unless the landowner elects to sell. [See generally, McCulloch v. M & C Beauty Colleges, Inc. (1987) 194 CA3d 1338, 240 CR 189; and Arden Group, Inc. v. Burk (1996) 45 CA4th 1409, 1414, 53 CR2d 492, 495 (distinguishing options to purchase)]

(2) [7:198] Assignable? From a purchasing tenant's perspective, it is vital to ascertain whether any option or right of first refusal to purchase is assignable—i.e., whether it is "personal" to the selling tenant and thus not transferable.

If the lease is silent on this issue, the option or right of first refusal apparently will be assignable. [Penilla v. Gertsenkorn (1927) 88 CA 668, 261 P 488, 489; see Maron v. Howard (1968) 258 CA2d 473, 484, 66 CR 70, 77—absent express restrictions, assignment of lease "also includes an assignment of the right to purchase"] However, the better practice is to obtain the landowner's confirmation of assignability in its estoppel certificate (and/or in the landowner's written consent to the assignment). (See Form 7:B.)

It may also be prudent to require a representation from the selling tenant (assignor) to the effect that an assignment of the option and/or right of first refusal is included within the transfer of interest in the ground lease.

(3) [7:199] Recordation: Purchasing tenants should verify that any assignable option to purchase is properly recorded in the office of the county recorder where the property is located. Proper recordation imparts constructive notice "to the world," thus ensuring the value of the option will not be jeopardized by intervening bona fide purchasers (see Civ.C. § 1214).

(a) [7:200] Possession alone not necessarily constructive notice of option to purchase: A tenant's possession of leased premises imparts constructive notice of the tenant's option to purchase contained in an unrecorded lease … so that subsequent purchasers (or encumbrancers) charged with such notice take subject to the tenant's right to complete the purchase. [Gates Rubber Co. v. Ulman (1989) 214 CA3d 356, 368, 262 CR 630, 638; see, e.g., Claremont Terrace Homeowners' Ass'n v. United States (1983) 146 CA3d 398, 408-409, 194 CR 216, 222-223]

However, the result is otherwise if the option is contained in a separate document not referenced in a recorded lease: Where a tenant is in possession pursuant to and consistent with a recorded lease which does not refer to an additional unrecorded option to purchase, and there are no circumstances indicating the tenant has additional rights, third parties have no duty to inquire about any other rights the tenant may possess; and, therefore, a subsequent purchaser (not otherwise on notice) takes free and clear of the tenant's unrecorded option to purchase. [Gates Rubber Co. v. Ulman, supra, 214 CA3d at 365-366, 262 CR at 636, 636—tenant only recorded short-form lease, which did not mention separately-negotiated option to purchase]

Cross-refer: For a detailed treatment of options to purchase and rights of first refusal, see Ch. 8.

e. [7:201] Scope of leased property and rights conveyed: It is essential to ascertain precisely what real property is the subject of the leasehold. Additionally, counsel should determine what other property and rights are to be conveyed along with the leasehold. Whereas the conveyance of a fee interest transfers all the benefits and burdens of the real property (see Ch. 4), a leasehold conveyance transfers something less; and certain rights, appurtenances, property and remedies may not be deemed to be conveyed unless expressly stated in the conveyancing instrument.

Generally, the following issues should be considered:

• [7:201.1] Personal/intangible property: What personal and/or intangible property should be included in the transfer of the ground leasehold? (For example, a bill of sale may be necessary.)

• [7:201.2] Easements and other appurtenances: Make certain that all appurtenances to the property—including easements, rights of way, etc.—were previously granted to the selling tenant and are specifically being transferred to the purchasing tenant.

• [7:201.3] Assignment: To ensure a transfer of the leasehold's full bundle of rights which puts the purchasing tenant in privity of estate with the landowner, the transaction should be structured as a true “assignment”; and the assignment documents should make clear the selling tenant is retaining no interest or rights in and to the leasehold; i.e., the conveyancing language should assign “all right, title and interest” of the assignor in the lease. See Forms 7:C & 7:D.

➪ [7:202] PRACTICE POINTER: When representing a purchasing tenant, always remember there are two other parties with whom you must be concerned: the landowner and the selling tenant. Both own certain rights that can be (and may need to be) conveyed; and, thus, the purchaser may have to look to both for the conveyance of various rights.

(1) [7:203] Reciprocal easement agreements: Because ground leases usually involve larger parcels of property and longer terms than other kinds of leases, reciprocal easement agreements are more likely to be germane in a ground lease situation than in an ordinary lease. A “reciprocal easement agreement” is a contractual arrangement created by property owners who own parcels that are adjacent (or within close proximity) to each other. Its general objective is essentially to combine two (or more) adjacent properties into one for the purpose of specified daily operations.

Reciprocal easement agreements are often used in connection with adjacent shopping centers, where the respective owners and tenants can benefit from combining the properties to create a larger retail environment while at the same time sharing costs (e.g., parking, traffic flow, security, etc.).

A reciprocal easement agreement can be broad or narrow in scope. For example, it may simply provide that adjacent owners, their respective tenants, guests and invitees, have reciprocal rights to use parking space on the property owned by the other; or, it could be broader in scope by also requiring joint construction and operation of substantial improvements, such as parking structures, loading areas, etc. Many reciprocal easements even provide that real estate taxes applicable to the combined properties are to be shared by all owners on a pro rata basis.

➪ [7:204] PRACTICE POINTERS: Typically, reciprocal easement agreements will be reflected in a preliminary title report. However, in reviewing the documents, bear in mind that reciprocal easement agreements are not necessarily titled as such; e.g., they may be identified as “joint ownership agreements,” “development agreements,” or “covenants, conditions and restrictions.”

Purchasing tenants should also consider that, where a reciprocal easement does not exist, it may have to be created to optimize productive and profitable use of the leasehold interest.

(2) [7:205] Development permits: Even if the improvements have been completed, major alterations or new improvements may have to be constructed in the future to suit the purchasing tenant's needs. Therefore, the purchasing tenant must have the right to acquire appropriate development permits. Because the tenant does not own the fee, this often requires a special grant or right under the ground lease. A tenant can, without the landowner's consent or involvement, seek variances or other government approvals if the lease provides for such. [Shell Oil Co. v. City & County of San Francisco (1983) 139 CA3d 917, 921, 189 CR 276, 278]

f. Security deposits

(1) [7:206] Transfer to purchaser: The purchasing tenant is typically assigned the benefit of the seller's security deposit, and the assignment documents should thus reflect a transfer of the deposit (see ¶ 7:360 ff.). (The selling tenant, of course, will receive a credit for such amount upon closing the leasehold sale.)

The precise amount of the deposit that remains should be confirmed in the landowner's estoppel certificate. (See Form 7:B.)

(2) [7:207] Increase: The purchasing tenant should also determine whether an increase in the security deposit will be required. Ground leases frequently call for a security deposit increase upon the happening of any number of events. For example:

(a) [7:208] New construction: An increase in the security deposit is often given in lieu of any construction performance or payment bond. Such an increase provides the landowner with additional monies to complete construction in the event the tenant defaults on its obligation to complete construction.

(b) [7:209] Rent raise: If the goal of a security deposit is to guarantee rent payment upon the tenant's default, an increase in the security deposit equal to incremental rent raises may be required.

(c) [7:210] "Subordinating fee" to secure tenant's leasehold financing: The tenant may request the landowner to secure the tenant's leasehold mortgage by pledging the fee interest in the property to the leasehold mortgagee. If that should occur, the landowner usually will reserve the right to require a substantial increase in the security deposit. The purpose is to give the landowner a source with which to cure any subsequent breach by the tenant under its loan and thus protect the fee from foreclosure. (See ¶ 7:392 ff.)

g. [7:211] Construction of improvements: Regardless of whether the selling tenant has completed construction of improvements, the purchasing tenant should always contemplate that additional improvements (or a major remodeling or rehabilitation) could become necessary or desirable in the future because of the long-term duration of the ground lease.

Naturally, the purchasing tenant will prefer that the ground lease grant the broadest possible latitude with respect to construction and alteration of improvements. Additionally, these important issues must be considered:

(1) [7:212] Ownership of improvements: Who owns the improvements will impact a host of other issues, such as rights to insurance proceeds upon damage or destruction (¶ 7:226 ff.), rights to condemnation awards (¶ 7:228 ff.), and tax benefits (¶ 7:51). Ownership of the improvements may be held by the tenant during the entire ground lease term (or any portion of it) (see ¶ 7:19).

(2) [7:213] Seller's compliance with ground lease construction requirements: If construction of the improvements has yet to be completed, the purchasing tenant should review the ground lease to ascertain the selling tenant's obligations on that issue. Provisions regarding construction obligations are unenforceable unless definite and certain. [See Sanders Const. Co., Inc. v. San Joaquin First Fed'l Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1982) 136 CA3d 387, 394-395, 186 CR 218, 222]

(a) [7:214] Permit issues: Other "due diligence" regarding construction should be a part of the purchasing tenant's review as well. For example, if the selling tenant has already obtained permits for the anticipated construction, the purchaser must verify that those permits can be assigned (¶ 7:205) and, if so, whether the permits remain valid even though construction has not yet commenced or been completed. Most permits have expiration dates and thus could lapse after the closing of the leasehold purchase. [See Baird v. Wendt Enterprises, Inc. (1967) 248 CA2d 52, 54-55, 56 CR 118, 119]

➪ [7:215] PRACTICE POINTER: The landowner should certify in its estoppel certificate whether the selling tenant has completed its construction obligations under the ground lease. See ¶ 7:292 ff.; and Form 7:B.

(3) [7:216] Assignability before completion of construction: Preliminarily, a determination must be made whether the lease prohibits assignment before the completion of required improvements. Such a provision is not uncommon, since many landowners are reluctant to have a stranger (whose identity, reliability and fiscal integrity the landlord would not have known when the ground lease was created) thrust upon them before the improvements are even built.

(4) [7:217] Existing contracts: The selling tenant may have entered into contracts with architects, contractors, engineers and others regarding the development of improvements. The purchasing tenant should determine to what extent it desires to acquire the selling tenant's rights, and assume the selling tenant's obligations, under those contracts.

Consider, e.g., who will own the plans, specifications and drawings for the improvements in the event a contract with the architect is not assumed. Additionally, there may be various construction warranties from contractors and suppliers of materials that should be assigned to the purchasing tenant.

(5) [7:218] Mechanic's liens: Every purchasing tenant should be concerned about mechanic's liens. This issue is particularly important if the improvements have not been completed because there are more likely to be mechanic's lien claimants prior to completion.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

If hired by the selling tenant, contractors can file a mechanic's lien against the selling tenant's leasehold interest. It follows that purchasing tenants should both (a) review the preliminary title report for the existence of mechanic's liens, and (b) obtain appropriate mechanic's lien coverage under a leasehold policy of title insurance (cf. ¶ 3:42, 3:258 ff.).

(6) [7:219] Obligation to remove: The tenant may have the contractual obligation to remove improvements at the end of the lease term. Such removal may simply involve the demolition of structures; but it could also be far more cumbersome, costly and fraught with potential liability—e.g., digging up underground storage tanks at the end of the lease term (see Ch. 5 regarding environmental liability considerations in the sale of real property).

h. [7:220] Insurance provisions: Either the purchasing tenant, or its insurance broker or attorney, should scrutinize provisions relating to insurance. Typically, the ground lease requires the tenant to carry casualty, liability and workers' compensation insurance (among other policies) for, and relating to, the entire property. The lease may also require the tenant to carry flood, earthquake and/or some form of rental income coverage (the latter to guarantee the landowner an uninterrupted flow of rental income throughout the term). Moreover, ground leases often permit the landowner to require the tenant to increase insurance limits at various times during the rental term.

➪ [7:221] PRACTICE POINTER: Two important points should be remembered regarding insurance:

• First, the cost of certain kinds of policies (such as earthquake coverage) could be so extraordinarily high as to make the ground lease economically unwise.

• Second, because of the cost and risks at stake, it is best to defer to appropriate insurance brokers (who have the requisite expertise in the matter) to advise your clients regarding insurance; and the purchasing tenant should be counseled accordingly.

i. [7:222] Damage and destruction: There is no “generic” damage and destruction provision suitable to every ground lease. However, because the landowner is desirous of an uninterrupted flow of rental income while at the same time having minimal involvement in the property, most damage and destruction provisions share certain typical characteristics: They usually require the tenant to repair any damage to (or destruction of) the improvements; and rarely give either party the right to terminate the lease upon damage or destruction. (Indeed, any present or future leasehold mortgagee will almost always require that the lease continue in effect notwithstanding damage or destruction.)

Typically, a ground lease, by its terms, will terminate because of damage or destruction to improvements only when substantial or total damage or destruction occurs close to the end of the term. Under such circumstances, the tenant certainly does not want to incur the cost of rebuilding. Likewise, the landowner probably does not want improvements resurrected near the end of the term, preferring instead to recoup the insurance proceeds. In these limited instances, the tenant is usually relieved of any obligation to rebuild, the insurance proceeds are paid over to the landowner (thereby providing a fund for the landowner to rebuild whatever it desires), and the lease terminates.

(1) [7:222.1] Cancellation provision preempts option to extend/renew: See ¶ 7:155.5.

(2) [7:223] Rent abatement upon damage or destruction: Leases generally grant the tenant some form of rent abatement after damage or destruction, to account for the fact the tenant cannot use the premises until repair or restoration. However, ground leases rarely provide for such rent abatement; there are several reasons:

• [7:223.1] A ground lease tenant functionally has most all of the rights and obligations of a fee owner; and the landowner has correspondingly few obligations with respect to the property and improvements. Thus, the landowner is depending on an uninterrupted flow of “net” rental income from the property.

• [7:223.2] The tenant typically builds and insures the improvements; logically, therefore, the tenant should have the obligation to rebuild them without the landowner incurring any loss.

➪ [7:224] PRACTICE POINTER: For these reasons, the purchasing tenant should consider buying business interruption insurance; or, if it is an owner/operator, rental income insurance; or some other form of insurance that would compensate the tenant for its loss of income while improvements are being rebuilt.

(a) [7:225] Compare—sublease rent abatement: The purchasing tenant should also scrutinize subleases on the question of rent abatement rights. Whereas the ground lease tenant may not be entitled to any rent adjustment upon damage or destruction, subtenants may have rent abatement rights under their subleases. If damage or destruction occurs, the ground lease tenant would then find itself in the difficult position of having to pay its ground lease rent, while its supply of sublease rent is cut off. In such situations, it is particularly important to secure appropriate insurance covering loss of sublease rental income.

(3) [7:226] Disposition of insurance proceeds: A well-drafted ground lease usually contains fairly extensive provisions about the disbursement of insurance proceeds upon damage or destruction (see Form 7:A). Indeed, both landowner and tenant are typically named as beneficiaries under the policy (as to their respective interests). (The leasehold mortgagee will also have to be a named insured; see ¶ 7:413.)

Sometimes an independent third party (such as the leasehold mortgagee) is designated to hold the insurance proceeds and/or control disbursement of the proceeds as and when reconstruction of the improvements progresses. Both landowner and tenant have an interest in seeing that neither has exclusive control of the funds. The landowner, in particular, is concerned that the proceeds be used to fund restoration of the improvements.

(a) [7:226.1] Result if no contractual provision: Absent a lease provision governing these issues, the parties' rights regarding insurance proceeds upon damage or destruction will depend upon who is the named insured under the policy. [See, e.g., Jones v. Aetna Cas. & Sur. Co. (1994) 26 CA4th 1717, 1722-1725, 33 CR2d 291, 294-296—where lease obligated lessor, at tenant expense, to maintain rental income insurance for damage/destruction of tenant's restaurant on leased premises, and stated proceeds would be payable to lessor with equitable abatement of tenant's rent, tenant was neither coinsured nor third party beneficiary with standing to sue insurer for wrongful withholding of benefits]

(b) [7:227] Upon termination of lease: If the ground lease permits termination of the lease upon damage or destruction (¶ 7:222), landowner and tenant will have competing interests in the insurance proceeds. Although ground leases vary markedly on these issues, the landowner is usually entitled to the proceeds if termination of the lease occurs close to the end of the term (because that is when ownership of the improvements would vest in the landowner anyway).

j. [7:228] Condemnation: On the issue of condemnation, counsel for the purchaser should review the lease for provisions regarding rent abatement, termination and allocation of a condemnation award in the event of a public taking of all or a portion of the ground leasehold estate (whether by eminent domain or inverse condemnation; see ¶ 7:236.5).

The parties' rights in and to a condemnation award are governed by the Eminent Domain Law (CCP § 1230.010 et seq.) unless they have otherwise agreed (CCP § 1265.160). [City of Vista v. Fielder (1996) 13 C4th 612, 617-618, 54 CR2d 861, 865-866—"[Eminent domain] rules may indeed be displaced by a provision of a lease to the contrary"; United States v. 1.377 Acres of Land (9th Cir. 2003) 352 F3d 1259, 1269 (applying Calif. law); see also ¶ 7:233.6]

(1) [7:229] Termination of lease by complete taking: Where all of the property subject to a lease is taken by eminent domain, the lease terminates as a matter of law; and the tenant is thereby released from liability for subsequently accruing rent. [CCP § 1265.110; City of Vista v. Fielder (1996) 13 C4th 612, 617, 54 CR2d 861, 865]

Termination of the lease does not, however, impair the tenant's right to compensation for the taking unless the lease otherwise provides. [CCP § 1265.150; see City of Vista v. Fielder, supra, 13 C4th at 617-618, 54 CR2d at 865-866; and discussion at ¶ 7:233.1 ff.]

(a) [7:230] Compare—partial taking: Where only part of the leased property is taken for public use, the lease ordinarily terminates only as to the condemned portion, and the lease remains in force as to the balance; but the rent obligation is adjusted accordingly (see ¶ 7:232 ff.). [CCP § 1265.120; Carlstrom v. Lyon Van & Storage Co. (1957) 152 CA2d 625, 632, 313 P2d 645, 649]

However, either party to the lease may petition the court to terminate the entire lease. A termination order may issue if the court determines an "essential" part of the property was taken or that the remainder not taken is "no longer suitable for the purpose of the lease." [CCP § 1265.130]

(b) [7:231] Effective date of termination: Condemnation effectively terminates a lease, in whole or in part (¶ 7:229 ff.), at the earlier of the following times:

• As of the time title to the property is taken by the person who will put it to public use; or

• The time an order for possession entitles the transferee to take possession. [CCP § 1265.140]

(2) [7:232] Rent abatement upon partial condemnation: A public taking of a portion of the improvements and/or leased land could make it impossible to rebuild the improvements or even operate any business or development as originally contemplated by the parties. Recognizing that partial condemnation leaves less of the land available for lease, the tenant's rent obligation is adjusted to account for the portion taken. [CCP § 1265.120—"rent reserved in the lease that is allocable to the part taken is extinguished"]

(Compare: The result is otherwise where the ground leasehold estate is diminished by damage or destruction. As indicated, there ordinarily is no rent abatement in such cases; see ¶ 7:223.)

(a) [7:233] Extent of abatement: Ground leases usually provide for a rent abatement upon a partial condemnation (see CCP § 1265.160—parties can provide for their rights and obligations upon condemnation) but the abatement methodology can be very complex. The rent adjustment is not necessarily equal to the percentage of land condemned.

For example, a 10% condemnation will not necessarily result in a 10% reduction in rent. If the 10% taken disproportionately affects the value of the property, a substantially greater reduction in rent would be justified. (Indeed, if a relatively minor condemnation affects a critical portion of the property, a termination of the lease might be justified; ¶ 7:230.)

(3) [7:233.1] Tenant's right to compensation: Unless the lease otherwise allocates or waives the tenant's interest in the condemnation proceeds, the tenant is entitled to compensation for the value of its leasehold interest taken and any of its property taken, including goodwill. [CCP §§ 1265.150, 1263.310, 1263.510; City of Vista v. Fielder (1996) 13 C4th 612, 617-618, 54 CR2d 861, 865-866; see also Galardi Group Franchise & Leasing, LLC v. City of El Cajon (2011) 196 CA4th 280, 286-288, 125 CR3d 394, 398-400—contractual lease provision waiving tenant's interest in condemnation award did not preclude tenant from subsequently assigning his interest in goodwill condemnation rights to landlord (lease provision interpreted to benefit landlord, not condemning agency); United States v. 1.377 Acres of Land (9th Cir. 2003) 352 F3d 1259, 1266—tenant operating business on condemned property entitled to recover goodwill regardless whether contractual lease provision confers such right]

(a) [7:233.2] Lease termination clause not a waiver of rights in condemnation award: A lease provision declaring that the lease terminates if all of the property is acquired for public use is not itself an agreement waiving the tenant's right to compensation. Indeed, such a provision is of no significant legal consequence because the same result (termination of the lease) obtains by operation of law pursuant to CCP § 1265.110 (¶ 7:229). [City of Vista v. Fielder (1996) 13 C4th 612, 618, 54 CR2d 861, 866; see Konig v. City of Hawaiian Gardens Redevelop. Agency (2002) 101 CA4th 1317, 1328-1329, 125 CR2d 1, 9-10 & fn. 5]

(b) [7:233.3] Contractual allocation of tenant's compensable interest to landlord: The parties may contractually agree to allocate the tenants share of the condemnation award to the landlord. [City of South San Francisco v. Mayer (1998) 67 CA4th 1350, 1354, 79 CR2d 704, 707; see also Galardi Group Franchise & Leasing, LLC v. City of El Cajon (2011) 196 CA4th 280, 287, 125 CR3d 394, 399—not only may tenant and landlord apportion condemnation award "any way they see fit," but tenant may assign tenant's condemnation rights; City of Beverly Hills v. Albright (1960) 184 CA2d 562, 564, 7 CR 706, 707—lease assigned to lessor lessee's right to damages for property taken by condemnation]

1) [7:233.4] Compare—leasehold held by condemning agency: A condemning agency that itself holds a leasehold interest in the subject property is not required to condemn its own leasehold interest. Thus, a public agency tenant can exercise its power of eminent domain to take the landlord's interest in the leasehold property without "taking" its own leasehold interest. In such cases, the landlord has no rights in a leasehold condemnation award notwithstanding the tenant's contractual allocation of the award to the landlord. [City of South San Francisco v. Mayer (1998) 67 CA4th 1350, 1356, 1361, 79 CR2d 704, 708, 711—City (as condemning authority and lessee) not required to condemn leasehold valued at $5.5 million even though it agreed to allocate its award to landlord]

➪ [7:233.5] PRACTICE POINTER: The scenario described at ¶ 7:233.4 raises a legitimate concern that a public agency contemplating condemnation of property encumbered by a lease containing a landlord-favorable condemnation clause could evade paying the value of the leasehold interest to the landlord by simply purchasing the leasehold interest from the tenant for a nominal amount. [City of South San Francisco v. Mayer (1998) 67 CA4th 1350, 1359, 79 CR2d 704, 710]

To avoid the possibility that a tenant might assign its leasehold interest to a potential condemning agency (thereby preempting a landlord-favorable condemnation clause), landlords should consider placing restrictions on a tenant's right to assign or sublet its leasehold (¶ 7:69 ff.). [See City of South San Francisco v. Mayer, supra, 67 CA4th at 1359, 79 CR2d at 710]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

[7:233.6 - 7:233.9] Reserved.

(c) [7:233.10] Contractual allocation to tenant directly from landlord: Pursuant to the so-called “undivided fee rule,” after the governmental authority provides just compensation for condemned property, the holders of possessory interests in the property apportion the award among themselves by either judicial intervention or contract. [United States v. 1.377 Acres of Land (9th Cir. 2003) 352 F3d 1259, 1269 (applying Calif. law)—“Once the government provides just compensation for the condemned property, its role is at an end”]

Accordingly, landlord and tenant may provide in their lease that in the event of a condemnation award paid to the landlord only, the tenant has the right to recover its proportionate amount of the award directly from the landlord. [United States v. 1.377 Acres of Land, supra, 352 F3d at 1270-1271]

[7:233.11 - 7:233.14] Reserved.

(d) [7:233.15] Contractual allocation to mortgagee: The leasehold mortgagee may also have some contractual interest in a condemnation award; see ¶ 7:414.

(4) [7:234] Compensable interests: The landlord ordinarily receives the greater share of the compensation award—the present worth of the future rental payments, plus the present value of the reversionary interest. [See County of Los Angeles v. American Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1972) 26 CA3d 7, 9, 102 CR 439, 441]

The tenant's share is based on its business interests (e.g., goodwill) and its leasehold interest—i.e., the value of the tenant's possessory rights for the lease term, less what the tenant is paying for those rights (“bonus value”) and for the value of the removable fixtures and improvements. [City of Vista v. Fielder (1996) 13 C4th 612, 617, 54 CR2d 861, 865, fn. 1; New Haven Unified School Dist. v. Taco Bell Corp. (1994) 24 CA4th 1473, 1478-1479, 30 CR2d 469, 471-472; United States v. 1.377 Acres of Land (9th Cir. 2003) 352 F3d 1259, 1266-1268]

➪ [7:234.1] PRACTICE POINTER: Technically, each affected party can independently pursue its claims against the condemning authority. However, to conserve resources, time and expense, it may be beneficial to include a provision in the ground lease indicating who, as between landowner and tenant, has the right to litigate or compromise any dispute between the condemning authority and owners of the interests taken.

(a) [7:235] Loss of goodwill: Compensable “goodwill” includes the “benefits that accrue to a business as a result of its location, reputation for dependability, skill or quality, and any other circumstances resulting in probable retention of old or acquisition of new patronage.” [CCP § 1263.510(b); see also Galardi Group Franchise & Leasing, LLC v. City of El Cajon (2011) 196 CA4th 280, 282, 125 CR3d 394, 395—only owners of businesses conducted on condemned property may claim compensation for lost goodwill; City & County of San Francisco v. Coyne (2008) 168 CA4th 1515, 1522, 86 CR3d 255, 259-260—statute's purpose is to provide monetary compensation for type of loss that typically occurs when small business is forced to move and give up benefits of former location; Chhour v. Community Redevelop. Agency of Buena Park (1996) 46 CA4th 273, 284-285, 53 CR2d 585, 591—despite lease's general assignment of tenant's interest in condemnation award to landlord, tenant retained right to seek compensation for loss of business goodwill and damage to business inventory]

1) [7:235.1] Compare—federal law: Under federal law, tenants are not entitled to compensation for loss of goodwill in eminent domain actions. [United States v. General Motors Corp. (1945) 323 US 373, 383, 65 S.Ct. 357, 362; United States v. 1.377 Acres of Land (9th Cir. 2003) 352 F3d 1259, 1266]

2) [7:235.2] Ongoing business required: There cannot be compensation for loss of goodwill in the absence of an ongoing business conducted on the condemned property. [CCP § 1263.510(b); see City & County of San Francisco v. Coyne (2008) 168 CA4th 1515, 1523-1525, 86 CR3d 255, 261-262—tenant not entitled to recovery for loss of goodwill in planned residential and retail development where no ongoing related business was located on undeveloped parcel taken]

3) [7:235.3] Amount lost; right to jury determination: A business owner has the right to a jury determination on the amount of goodwill lost. However, the right attaches only if the owner first meets the CCP § 1263.510(a) “qualifying conditions” (i.e., proves goodwill loss was caused by a taking (causation), cannot reasonably be prevented by relocating or taking other steps a reasonably prudent person would take to preserve goodwill (unavoidability), and will not be duplicated by government relocation payments or other compensation (no double recovery)). In addition, the business owner must establish as a "threshold matter" that the business had goodwill to lose. [See People ex rel. Dept. of Transp. v. Presidio Performing Arts Foundation, supra, 5 CA5th at 200-204, 209 CR3d at 469-472 (finding precise amount of lost goodwill is issue for jury to decide)—although nonprofit foundation not making profit even before taking, substantial evidence showed it suffered loss of goodwill where, among other things, it ended up with less desirable location, increased lease payments, diminished reputation, operational disruptions, declining patronage and shortfall in expected cash flow that could not be attributed to tangible assets or any factors other than decline in goodwill; People ex rel. Dept. of Transp. v. Dry Canyon Enterprises, LLC, supra, 211 CA4th at 491-493, 149 CR3d at 605-606 (raising but not deciding issue of business owner's precise burden of proof)—struggling winery that failed to present any competent evidence of preexisting goodwill not entitled to jury determination as to amount lost since it had none as "a matter of law"]

(b) [7:236] Improvements: Improvements to the property (fixtures, etc.) are properly taken into account in determining compensation only to the extent they remain on the premises after the condemnor takes possession. [See CCP § 1263.230; New Haven Unified School Dist. v. Taco Bell Corp. (1994) 24 CA4th 1473, 1483-1484, 30 CR2d 469, 474]

1) [7:236.1] Tenant's right of recovery: Traditionally, the tenant was entitled to compensation for improvements only if the tenant had the right to remove the improvements prior to or upon expiration of the term. [Los Angeles County v. Kling (1972) 22 CA3d 916, 921, 99 CR 642, 645]

However, that is not the touchstone for a right to compensation under current law, which recognizes that condemnation "may inevitably frustrate the tenant's expectations as to the economic value of the improvements constructed on the land." [See CCP § 1263.205 et seq. (compensation for improvements); Lanning v. City of Monterey (1986) 181 CA3d 352, 359, 226 CR 258, 262; Chhour v. Community Redevelop. Agency of Buena Park (1996) 46 CA4th 273, 282-283, 53 CR2d 585, 589-590—distinguishing compensable "improvements" from noncompensable "personal property" (which presumably "will, or should be, removed by its owner when the realty is acquired" and thus is not "taken" by condemnation)]

2) [7:236.2] Landlord's right of recovery: If the condemnation occurs close to the end of the term, the landowner undoubtedly will want all (or most) of the award relating to the improvements (because the improvements usually become the landowner's property at the end of the term).

For that reason, agreed-upon allocations commonly apportion an escalating percentage of the award to the landlord as years go by.

3) [7:236.3] Compare—partial condemnation: In the case of a partial condemnation, where the improvements are to be rebuilt on the remaining property, the award is often paid to an independent third party who disburses the proceeds to fund the cost of reconstruction. But if the proceeds (or a portion thereof) will not be used for rebuilding improvements, both landowner and tenant will have justifiable competing interests in the award:

• The landowner will want compensation for the taking of its fee interest; and may also expect remuneration for a taking of any present or inchoate interest it has in the affected improvements.

• On the other hand, the tenant will be seeking a portion of the award because it has typically built the improvements and the leasehold interest presumably has some value (CCP § 1265.150).

(c) [7:236.4] Relocation costs: In addition to compensation for the loss of real property, the condemnor may be required to pay reasonable expenses incurred by the ousted tenant in moving the tenant's business and personal property (plus compensation for loss of personal property that could not be relocated). [Gov.C. §§ 7260, 7262; see County of San Diego v. Cabrillo Lanes, Inc. (1992) 10 CA4th 576, 583, 12 CR2d 613, 616; Barthelemy v. Orange County Flood Control Dist. (1998) 65 CA4th 558, 568, 76 CR2d 575, 581—relocation expenses also recoverable under CCP § 1263.510; Konig v. City of Hawaiian Gardens Redevelop. Agency (2002) 101 CA4th 1317, 1326-1329, 125 CR2d 1, 7-10—displaced subtenant entitled to relocation benefits]

(d) [7:236.5] Application to inverse condemnation: The same rules apply to suits in inverse condemnation (where governmental action constitutes the "substantial equivalent" of condemnation even though government does not actually exercise its power of eminent domain). [See Langer v. Redevelopment Agency of City of Santa Cruz (1999) 71 CA4th 998, 1003, 84 CR2d 19, 22; Barthelemy v. Orange County Flood Control Dist. (1998) 65 CA4th 558, 568, 76 CR2d 575, 581; and San Diego Metropolitan Transit Develop. Bd. v. Handlery Hotel, Inc. (1999) 73 CA4th 517, 533, 535, 86 CR2d 473, 485, 487, fns. 16 & 19]

1) [7:237] Compare—breach of lease agreement cases: Inverse condemnation principles, including those related to compensable interests (¶ 7:236.5), have no application in suits for breach of contract or lease against governmental entities. This is so because the parties' rights, duties and liabilities "spring from the lease" itself. Indeed, "[t]here is no reason to impose extra-contractual liability for breach, simply because the breaching party is a governmental entity." [See County of Ventura v. Channel Islands Marina, Inc. (2008) 159 CA4th 615, 625, 71 CR3d 762, 768-769—county lessor's wrongful refusal to allow marina lessee to remove improvements following lease's expiration did not amount to inverse condemnation (tenant's rights re improvement removal arose from lease alone)]

k. [7:238] Default notice provisions: The default notice provisions under a ground lease (i.e., notice to "cure" or "perform" in event of nonpayment of rent or other default under the lease) should allow the tenant a longer period to cure than under a standard commercial lease (cf. CCP § 1161). A very short notice/cure period (often seen in standard commercial leases) is not appropriate in ground lease situations, given the tenant's substantial rights and investment in the leasehold estate. Moreover, the leasehold mortgagee will require an even longer notice period, as well as the specific right to step in and cure the tenant's default (see ¶ 7:415).

l. [7:239] Late charges: Leases typically assess tenants "late charges" for monetary defaults (e.g., late payment of rent). A late charge provision may call for (1) a flat fee (or, perhaps, a specified percentage of the overdue amount), and/or (2) an ongoing interest charge on the overdue amount. In any event, purchasing tenants should scrutinize the ground lease on this issue.

(1) [7:240] No usury problem: Late fees charged as interest on overdue accounts do not risk violating the state usury law, which limits interest payable "for any loan or forbearance of any money" (Cal.Const. Art. XV, § 1).

Reason: The rental of property is akin to the "transfer of property in a thing for a price in money"; as such, a late charge assessed on overdue rent (or other monetary obligations under the lease) does not involve payment for a "loan" (the delivery of a sum of money under a contract to return an equivalent amount at some future time) or a "forbearance of money" (the giving of further time for payment of a debt or an agreement not to enforce a claim at its due date). [See Southwest Concrete Products v. Gosh Const. Corp. (1990) 51 C3d 701, 704, 274 CR 404, 406]

Cross-refer: Usury issues are discussed in greater detail in connection with financing at ¶ 6:280 ff.

m. [7:241] Real estate broker commissions: Counsel should determine whether the ground lease requires the tenant to pay any real estate broker commissions (either for the initial term, or any extended term). Tenants rarely have the obligation to pay broker commissions; but if the lease provides otherwise, the purchasing tenant's assumption of the ground lease obligations (¶ 7:334 ff.) will include liability for the commissions.

[7:242 - 7:244] Reserved.

2. [7:245] Prior Assignments: It is possible (indeed, likely, if several years have passed since commencement of the lease term) that the selling tenant's leasehold interest has previously been transferred. Therefore, it may be advisable to review the prior assignment documents. (However, this step may not be necessary if a landowner's estoppel certificate is obtained and leasehold title insurance is acquired by the purchasing tenant—both of which are always recommended.)

The purchasing tenant's principal concern here is that the chain of title regarding various transfers of the tenant's interests over time is in order; and that the landowner and tenant are in agreement as to the state of ownership of the tenant's interest under the ground lease.

3. [7:246] Review of Subleases: A purchase of the ground leasehold will be subject to all existing subleases. Therefore, all subleases should be analyzed from both a business and legal perspective (see also ¶ 4:410 ff.).

a. [7:247] Subleases and rent roll: Just as the buyer of a fee interest in rental property should obtain and review a "rent roll" disclosing leases, security deposits, current rentals, etc., the purchasing tenant should obtain and review all subleases and a sublease rent roll (see ¶ 4:410 ff.).

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

b. [7:248] Tenant estoppel certificates: To the extent possible, an estoppel certificate should be obtained from each of the subtenants (see ¶ 4:418 ff.; and Form 4:J).

c. [7:249] Sublease terms: Subleases should be reviewed with the same scrutiny given the ground lease.

(1) [7:250] Rental rates: In particular, sublease rents should be compared with the rent to be paid under the ground lease. The motivation, of course, is to determine whether rental income from subtenants will be sufficient to at least cover the ground lease rent.

(2) [7:251] Pass-throughs: Another important point is whether the purchasing tenant will be able to pass through to the subtenants the costs of operating and maintaining the property (including taxes and insurance). (In other words, are the subleases essentially “triple net” leases (¶ 7:35), so that the purchasing tenant's rent and operating costs will be offset by the sublease rent?)

In some projects (usually office buildings), it is commonplace to find subleases which allow the sublessor (ground lease tenant) to pass through only the increases in operating costs (over a particular base year or over a particular amount). Subleases may also provide that any increase in the ground lease rent is to be passed through to subtenants on a pro rata basis.

(3) [7:252] Restrictive covenants: Any recorded sublease could create a restrictive covenant on future use of the land. These restrictions will be enforceable against the successor purchasing tenant. [Cf. Hudson Oil Co., Inc. v. Shortstop (1980) 111 CA3d 488, 493, 168 CR 801, 803]

Examples

(a) [7:253] Tenant exclusives: Such restrictions might include exclusive rights to operate a particular kind of business (e.g., exclusive rights given to subtenants in a retail center typically restrict the sublessor (ground lease tenant) from leasing space to a competing retailer). These “exclusive use” provisions are generally enforceable. [Keating v. Preston (1940) 42 CA2d 110, 122-124, 108 P2d 479, 486; Martikian v. Hong (1985) 164 CA3d 1130, 1133-1134, 211 CR 66, 68-69; see also Edmond's of Fresno v. MacDonald Group, Ltd. (1985) 171 CA3d 598, 607-608, 217 CR 375, 381—exclusive use rights in shopping center extended to newly acquired property later made part of center]

(b) [7:254] “Anchor-satellite” tenant leases: Restrictive covenants may provide subtenants with a basis for termination of their leases or a substantial damages action for breach of covenant. For instance, it has become popular for shopping center tenants to negotiate rights to terminate if (i) the center is not fully (or substantially) leased by a certain date; or (ii) a particular large (so-called “anchor”) tenant is not obtained or maintained.

“Anchor-satellite” leases are common in shopping centers where landowners have secured smaller tenants (the “satellites”) upon an express covenant to lease to a major tenant or tenants (the “anchors”) who are likely to attract business patrons for the satellites.

1) [7:255] Implied covenant to *maintain anchor: Such covenants could be a trap for the unwary. For example, in one case, the tenant signed a 20-year lease to operate a restaurant and the landlord expressly agreed to secure three major “anchors” (a supermarket, a department store and a drug store) for a minimum 20-year period before commencement of the tenant's term. The landlord secured the anchors as agreed; but two of the anchors vacated the next year and no replacements were obtained. When the tenant's business dropped off, it sued for breach of lease and lost business profits.

Although the lease expressly required that the landlord simply procure 20-year leases with the anchors prior to commencement of the tenant's term, the court held the tenant should be allowed to amend its complaint to allege the existence of an implied covenant that the landlord not only obtain but also exercise good faith to “maintain” the three anchors for the specified 20-year period. [Cordonier v. Central Shopping Plaza Associates (1978) 82 CA3d 991, 1001, 147 CR 558, 563]

➪ [7:256] PRACTICE POINTER: Cordonier, supra, points out the importance of analyzing the “hidden” implications of restrictive covenants; the purchasing tenant might be assuming difficult obligations under subleases.

Again, however, subtenant estoppel certificates confirming that the selling tenant is not in default under the respective subleases will alleviate some of the risks posed by restrictive covenants. (See ¶ 7:292 ff.)

(4) [7:257] Claims against subtenants: The selling tenant might have lawsuits pending against prior or existing subtenants for breach of the sublease. This issue should be investigated; and the purchase and sale documents should properly allocate who is entitled to pursue the claims and keep any damages recovery. [See Blumenfeld v. R.H. Macy & Co., Inc. (1979) 92 CA3d 38, 41, 154 CR 652, 653—claim against subtenant deemed assigned where sale documents did not specify whether selling tenant transferred or retained claim]

(The same concerns re allocation of leasehold rights and liabilities are presented in connection with the purchase and sale of a fee containing rental property; see ¶ 4:413.)

(5) [7:258] Assignment of subleases: The purchase and sale documents should include a specific assignment of subleases and should separately identify each of the leases. (See generally, Forms 7:C & 7:D.)

(6) [7:259] Representations/warranties; subtenant estoppel certificates: A selling tenant should provide the purchasing tenant with appropriate representations and warranties concerning the subleases (see ¶ 4:441); and also provide subtenant estoppel certificates similar to those given by tenants to the purchaser of a fee interest (see ¶ 4:418 ff.).

4. [7:260] Leasehold Financing: There may be a loan (or loans) encumbering the leasehold interest at the time of the sale. (This encumbrance would have been created by the selling tenant or any of its predecessors in interest.) The purchase documents should make clear whether the seller will be paying off the loan before the closing or, instead, whether the purchaser will be assuming or taking subject to the loan; in the latter case, counsel should advise the purchaser of the risks and benefits of such financing (see ¶ 4:295 ff.; and detailed discussion at ¶ 6:310 ff.).

In either case, counsel should review all recorded loan documents (deeds of trust, assignments of rents, etc.), as well as all available unrecorded documents pertinent to the financing (promissory notes, loan agreements, personal property security agreements, etc.).

a. [7:261] Due-on-sale provisions: In particular, scrutinize the loan documents to determine whether the leasehold mortgagee has the right to "call" the loan (demand payment in full) upon sale of the leasehold interest. If such a provision exists, consent to the transfer should be obtained from the mortgagee; otherwise, the purchasing tenant will bear the risk the loan might be called. [Miller v. Cote (1982) 127 CA3d 888, 895, 179 CR 753, 757; see also ¶ 6:388 ff. for detailed discussion of due-on-sale provisions]

b. [7:262] Restrictions on junior, subordinate financing: Also consider whether the purchasing tenant intends to obtain junior or subordinate leasehold financing (i.e., another loan secured by the leasehold which would create a second, junior deed of trust encumbering the purchaser's interest in the lease). If so, review the existing (first position) loan documents for a provision that might prohibit junior financing. If such a prohibition exists, consent to the junior financing should be obtained from the lender holding the senior (first position) deed of trust on the leasehold interest. Otherwise, a purchasing tenant who proceeds with junior financing risks the loan being called. (See ¶ 6:397 for further discussion of restrictions on junior financing ("due-on-encumbrance" provisions).)

c. [7:263] Personal property financing: If substantial personal property is involved in the leasehold transfer, a review of the California Secretary of State's records (UCC search) may be necessary to determine whether any of such property has been encumbered by the selling tenant. (See ¶ 4:36.)

5. [7:264] Title Insurance: It is essential that the purchasing tenant acquire a leasehold policy of title insurance insuring the existence and priority of the leasehold. (Title insurance is discussed in Ch. 3.)

6. [7:265] Taxes, Assessments and Bonds: The ground lease tenant is typically responsible for all real property taxes, bonds and assessments relating to the property. To determine the purchaser's future liability, a preliminary review should thus include inquiry into all applicable taxes, bonds and assessments.

a. [7:266] Proposition 13 reappraisal: The sale of a leasehold with at least 35 years remaining in the term (including options to extend) constitutes a "change in ownership" triggering property tax reassessment (and, hence, potentially increased taxes). [Rev. & Tax.C. § 61(c)]

In effect, the Legislature has declared such long-term leases substantially equivalent to the value of an ownership (fee) interest, the transfer of which falls under the Proposition 13 umbrella. [E. Gottschalk & Co., Inc. v. County of Merced (1987) 196 CA3d 1378, 1384, 242 CR 526, 529—§ 61 not violative of Cal.Const. Art XIIIA, § 2 (Prop. 13); see also Phelps v. Orange County Assessment Appeals Bd. No. 1 (2010) 187 CA4th 653, 658-661, 114 CR3d 463, 467-469—transfer of trust-held ground lease and improvements built thereon following income beneficiary's death constituted change in ownership sufficient to trigger property tax reassessment (lease provision requiring surrender of improvements when lease concluded showed that trust held fee interest)]

Cross-refer: Property taxation and assessment (Prop. 13) are discussed in detail at ¶ 13:65 ff.

b. [7:267] Documentary transfer tax: Likewise, the sale of a leasehold triggers a local documentary transfer tax (Rev. & Tax.C. § 11911) if the remaining term is for 35 years or more (including renewal options). [See Thrifty Corp. v. County of Los Angeles (1989) 210 CA3d 881, 885-886, 258 CR 585, 587-588—sale of leasehold is "realty sold" for purposes of § 11911 tax if it would trigger reassessment under Rev. & Tax.C. § 61(c)]

(1) [7:267.1] Compare—extension of existing lease: The extension of an existing lease will trigger a documentary transfer tax only if the prospective lease term—i.e., the balance of the existing term plus the extended term (including renewal options)—is at least 35 years. [McDonald's Corp. v. Board of Supervisors of Mendocino County (1998) 63 CA4th 612, 617, 74 CR2d 101, 104-105—documentary transfer tax not triggered by 15-year extension of 36-year lease with only 13 years remaining]

(2) [7:267.2] Sale of property subject to lease: The sale or transfer of property subject to a lease with a remaining term of 35 years or more does not result in a "change in ownership." Therefore, the lease is not subject to a documentary transfer tax for "realty sold." The "change in ownership" occurs when the lease is created. [731 Market Street Owner, LLC v. City & County of San Francisco (2020) 50 CA5th 937, 946-948, 264 CR3d 490, 496-497—where property subject to 45-year lease is sold 4 years after lease is created, city and county cannot impose new transfer tax based on value of rental payments due under lease; see Rev. & Tax.C. § 62(g); and ¶ 4:306a]

The sale or transfer of property subject to a lease with a remaining term of less than 35 years, however, does constitute a "change in ownership" and, therefore, rental payments due under the lease would be subject to a documentary transfer tax. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 61(c)(1)(D); 731 Market Street Owner, LLC v. City & County of San Francisco, supra, 50 CA5th at 946-948, 264 CR3d at 496-497; see also Equinix LLC v. County of Los Angeles (2024) 101 CA5th 1108, 1117, 320 CR3d 803, 809—sale of property subject to lease with remaining term of 26 years amounted to "change in ownership," permitting reassessment at property's current market value, discussed at ¶ 13:70]

c. [7:268] Other local taxes: There may also be other local tax obligations triggered by leasing transactions.

For example, certain municipal codes impose a tax based on the amount of the rent. Usually, such local taxes are assessed on the landowner's receipt of rental income. However, the ground lease might shift that obligation to the tenant.

d. [7:269] Tenant liability for increased taxes upon sale of fee interest (reassessment pass-through): Purchasing tenants should also beware of potential adverse economic consequences that may result from a provision passing through the landowner's real property tax liability to the tenant.

Ground leases frequently require the tenant to pay all real property taxes on the land—including increases caused by a reassessment when the landowner sells its fee interest. This could be particularly risky for tenants: First of all, the tenant cannot plan for the potential tax liability because it has no control over when the fee sale (and, thus, the reassessment) will occur. Moreover, the tenant receives no corresponding benefit from the sale of the property.

7. Obtaining Landowner's Consent to Sale

a. [7:270] Risk of lease termination: Do not proceed with a ground lease assignment before scrutinizing the lease to determine whether landowner consent is required. If the ground lease contains a transfer restriction permitting assignment only with landowner consent (¶ 7:80), the failure to request such consent may itself be ground for termination of the lease. [Thrifty Oil Co. v. Batarse (1985) 174 CA3d 770, 776, 220 CR 285, 289; see also Boston Properties v. Pirelli Tire Corp. (1982) 134 CA3d 985, 992-993, 185 CR 56, 60-61 (same re sublease); and ¶ 7:112]

➪ [7:271] PRACTICE POINTER: When the ground lease contains a "consent clause" transfer restriction, the purchase and sale documents should clearly provide the transaction is contingent upon obtaining the landowner's consent to the assignment.

It also behooves the purchasing tenant to include a provision in the purchase documents obligating the selling tenant to seek the landowner's consent and to proceed in "good faith" to obtain such consent, including taking all steps "reasonably necessary" in that regard. (Although such obligations may be somewhat vague, they close a loophole that might otherwise give the seller a way out of the deal—i.e., by deliberately taking no action to obtain consent in order to intentionally avoid satisfaction of a condition to the closing.)

Finally, out of an abundance of caution, consider including a provision in the sale documents allowing the purchasing tenant to deal directly with the landowner to obtain the requisite consent.

b. [7:272] Rescission remedy: If the selling tenant fails to procure the requisite landowner consent to the assignment, the purchasing tenant may rescind the purchase and sale agreement on the ground of fraud. [Bush v. Vernon (1955) 135 CA2d 33, 36-37, 286 P2d 903, 905; Civille v. Bullis (1962) 209 CA2d 134, 138, 25 CR 578, 581; and see ¶ 11:460 ff. for detailed discussion of rescission]

8. [7:273] Nondisturbance and Attornment Agreements: Tenants (and subtenants) are rightfully concerned that extinguishment of the greater estate under which they hold their interest will terminate their leasehold interest. For example, if the landowner were to lose its fee interest by foreclosure of a lien that is senior to the ground lease, the foreclosing lender will typically wipe out the ground lease, thereby extinguishing the tenant's interest (see ¶ 6:534, 6:542). Subtenants are similarly concerned that their subleases would be extinguished upon a termination of the (master) ground lease, such as by a rejection of the primary lease in the sublessor's bankruptcy (11 USC § 365(d)(4)).

To preserve tenant and subtenant leasehold interests, each can enter into a so-called “nondisturbance and attornment agreement” (sometimes called a “subordination, nondisturbance and attornment agreement” or “SNDA”) with the holder of the greater estate. Thus, a ground lease tenant would so agree with the holder of the deed of trust encumbering the fee interest (the fee mortgagee); and subtenants would so agree with the landowner (and, in some cases, the fee mortgagee as well).

a. [7:274] Features of agreement: A nondisturbance and attornment agreement has two principal components:

(1) [7:275] “Nondisturbance”: The holder of the senior interest (landowner/prime lessor or fee mortgagee) agrees that, notwithstanding a default under or termination of the prime lease, or a foreclosure upon the senior estate, the junior estate (leasehold) will be recognized by the holder of the senior estate (prime lessor or fee mortgagee) and the tenant's (or subtenant's) right of possession will remain undisturbed. [See Chumash Hill Properties, Inc. v. Peram (1995) 39 CA4th 1226, 1233, 46 CR2d 366, 369]

(a) [7:275a] Mortgagee/tenant agreements: In other words, pursuant to a nondisturbance agreement between a fee mortgagee and ground lease tenant, the fee mortgagee agrees that, upon foreclosure of its lien (deed of trust), it will nevertheless recognize the ground leasehold and tenant rights under the leasehold for so long as the tenant continues to comply with the terms of the lease and is not in default. [Miscione v. Barton Develop. Co. (1997) 52 CA4th 1320, 1327, 61 CR2d 280, 285]

(b) [7:275b] Landlord/mortgagee agreements: A tenant may also be able to negotiate a provision in its lease requiring that the landlord obtain from its lender a nondisturbance agreement. This can often be accomplished by conditioning an attornment provision (¶ 7:275.1) on receipt of the nondisturbance agreement. [See Principal Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Vars, Pave, McCord & Freedman (1998) 65 CA4th 1469, 1478, 77 CR2d 479, 483 (abrogation on other grounds recognized by City of Oakland v. Oakland Raiders (2022) 83 CA5th 458, 474, 299 CR3d 463, 475)]

(c) [7:275c] Landlord/subtenant agreements: See ¶ 7:280.

(2) [7:275.1] “Attornment”: Under an attornment provision, the tenant agrees with the original landlord that, upon foreclosure, it will recognize (“attorn to”) the landlord's successor in interest as the new landlord. [Vallely Investments, L.P. v. BancAmerica Comm'l Corp. (2001) 88 CA4th 816, 824, 106 CR2d 689, 696, fn. 3; Miscione v. Barton Develop. Co. (1997) 52 CA4th 1320, 1326, 61 CR2d 280, 284]

When a lease obligates a tenant to attorn to a new landlord in the event of foreclosure by a senior encumbrancer, the terms of the attornment provision govern how that is to occur and its effect on the existing lease. [Principal Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Vars, Pave, McCord & Freedman (1998) 65 CA4th 1469, 1478, 77 CR2d 479, 483 (abrogation on other grounds recognized by City of Oakland v. Oakland Raiders (2022) 83 CA5th 468, 299 CR3d 463)]

(a) [7:275.2] Foreclosure purchaser as third party beneficiary of attornment clause: One common form of attornment clause requires the tenant to agree to enter into a new lease on the same terms with any successor landlord or, at the successor's option, to have the existing lease remain effective as a new lease between the tenant and successor. [Principal Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Vars, Pave, McCord & Freedman (1998) 65 CA4th 1469, 1485-1486, 77 CR2d 479,

488-489 (abrogation on other grounds recognized by City of Oakland v. Oakland Raiders (2022) 83 CA5th 468, 299 CR3d 463)]

In this case, the tenant's existing lease is extinguished by the foreclosure, but the successor, as a third party beneficiary of the attornment clause, has the right to require the tenant to enter into a landlord-tenant relationship with the successor. [Principal Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Vars, Pave, McCord & Freedman, supra, 65 CA4th at 1485-1486, 77 CR2d at 488-489 (abrogation on other grounds recognized by City of Oakland v. Oakland Raiders (2022) 83 CA5th 468, 299 CR3d 463); see Vallely Investments, L.P. v. BancAmerica Comm'l Corp. (2001) 88 CA4th 816, 824, 106 CR2d 689, 696—contract obligations survive foreclosure when they do not impair foreclosing mortgagee's rights]

(b) [7:275.3] Attornment clause preventing extinguishment: Another form attornment clause requires the tenant to “attorn to” the purchaser at a foreclosure sale (i.e., accept the purchaser as the tenant's landlord) if the purchaser acquires and accepts the premises subject to the lease. [Miscione v. Barton Develop. Co. (1997) 52 CA4th 1320, 1331-1332, 61 CR2d 280, 287-288]

In this situation, the parties have simply contracted that, if the purchaser accepts the existing lease, the lease will not be extinguished by the foreclosure. [Principal Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Vars, Pave, McCord & Freedman (1998) 65 CA4th 1469, 1485, 77 CR2d 479, 488, fn. 8 (abrogation on other grounds recognized by City of Oakland v. Oakland Raiders (2022) 83 CA5th 468, 299 CR3d 463)]

(c) [7:275.4] Subtenant's attornment: See ¶ 7:280.

FORM: Nondisturbance and Attornment Agreement, see Form 7:E.

b. [7:276] Nondisturbance and attornment agreements between lender and ground lease tenant/subtenants: This kind of nondisturbance and attornment agreement can be classified in two ways, depending on what security is given for the loan:

(1) [7:277] Loan encumbering ground lease only: This is an agreement given to all subtenants providing that if the lender (leasehold mortgagee) forecloses on the leasehold interest: (a) the leasehold mortgagee (or any purchaser by or through the leasehold mortgagee) will recognize the sublease; (b) the sublease will remain in full force and effect; and (c) the subtenant will continue to enjoy all of its rights under the sublease. The subtenant's attornment requires it to perform all obligations under its sublease for the benefit of the leasehold mortgagee (or subsequent purchaser).

Without these agreements, the subleases could be terminated, adversely affecting both the subtenants and the leasehold mortgagee. Thus, this arrangement benefits both the leasehold mortgagee and the subtenant:

• The obvious advantage to subtenants is that their leases are preserved even though the ground lease has terminated.

• The advantage to the leasehold mortgagee is that, by preserving the sublease(s), it has preserved a rental income stream. (Clearly, the leasehold mortgagee would not have entered into a nondisturbance and attornment agreement unless it felt the sublease was economically favorable.)

(2) [7:278] Loan encumbering fee interest: This kind of nondisturbance and attornment agreement is a little more expansive. It protects the ground lease tenant from losing its rights in the event of foreclosure of a deed of trust encumbering the fee interest in the property. The agreement preserves the ground lease, thereby providing the party who takes title to the fee upon a foreclosure sale with the benefit of a continuation of the ground lease. (Occasionally, the agreement might include protection of the subleases as well; but this is not technically necessary since preservation of the ground lease necessarily preserves the sublease estates under it.)

➪ [7:279] PRACTICE POINTER: When the fee is encumbered by a deed of trust, it is extremely important to make certain the selling tenant has procured a nondisturbance and attornment agreement from the fee mortgagee. The purchasing tenant should not proceed with the ground lease acquisition until such agreement is obtained. Otherwise, the purchaser runs the risk of a termination of the ground lease by foreclosure upon the fee interest should the landowner default on its mortgage obligation.

c. [7:280] Nondisturbance and attornment agreement between landowner and subtenants: Under this kind of nondisturbance and attornment agreement, the landowner agrees that, if the ground lease terminates by reason of the ground lease tenant's default: (1) the landowner will recognize the subleases; (2) the subleases will remain in full force and effect; and (3) the subtenants will continue to enjoy all rights granted under their respective subleases. Correspondingly, the subtenants agree that in the event the ground lease terminates they will continue to perform their sublease obligations directly for the landowner's benefit. (In effect, this arrangement converts subleases into direct leases with the landowner.) [See Chumash Hill Properties, Inc. v. Peram (1995) 39 CA4th 1226, 1232-1233, 46 CR2d 366, 369-370]

Without such agreement, termination of the ground lease would, of course, terminate all junior subleases. [Fifth & Broadway Partnership v. Kimny, Inc. (1980) 102 CA3d 195, 201, 162 CR 271, 275]

d. [7:281] Other provisions in nondisturbance and attornment agreements: Because most nondisturbance and attornment agreements are drafted by, and principally for the benefit of, lenders, the purchasing tenant should be cognizant of several additional provisions that are typically included:

(1) [7:282] Offsets/defenses: The lender generally will not be subject to offsets or defenses the ground lease tenant might have against the landowner. For example, the tenant may be precluded from withholding rent from the lender if the landowner has defaulted under the lease (see also ¶ 7:286).

(2) [7:283] Rent prepayments: The lender is generally unwilling to be bound by any tenant prepayment of rent (for more than a limited period of time).

(3) [7:284] Security deposits: The lender may also be unwilling to take responsibility for the return of security deposits (since the lender has not received the deposits).

(4) [7:285] Improvements: Nor will the lender want responsibility for the completion of improvements or the payment of tenant improvement allowances for which the landowner would have been liable.

(5) [7:286] Landowner defaults: Further, the lender may be unwilling to assume any obligation to cure landowner defaults that occurred before the foreclosure was consummated, or may give itself an extended period of time to cure any such default.

(6) [7:286.1] Lease termination or amendment: The lender may prohibit the tenant from terminating or amending the lease without the lender's consent.

(7) [7:286.2] Environmental covenants: The lender may require that the tenant not hold the lender responsible under any environmental covenants binding the landowner.

9. [7:287] Subordination Agreements: Ground leases sometimes contain a provision permitting the landowner to further encumber its fee interest, while requiring the tenant to subordinate the ground lease to any future loan against the fee. A subordination "involves a change or reversal of the relative priority of two interests in the same property created as a matter of lien law." [Protective Equity Trust #83, Ltd. v. Bybee (1991) 2 CA4th 139, 148, 2 CR2d 864, 868, fn. 3; Miscione v. Barton Develop. Co. (1997) 52 CA4th 1320, 1327, 61 CR2d 280, 285; see also Aviel v. Ng (2008) 161 CA4th 809, 813, 74 CR3d 200, 203—clause subordinating lease to "mortgages" applied with equal force to trust deeds]

Cross-refer: Subordination agreements in real property purchase and sale transactions are also discussed at ¶ 6:450 ff.

a. [7:288] Certainty of terms required: Priority rights conferred by a subordination agreement "extend to and are limited strictly by the express terms and conditions of the agreement." [Miller v. Citizens Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1967) 248 CA2d 655, 663, 56 CR 844, 851] Thus, an agreement to subordinate in the future is not effective unless the terms are spelled out in detail. [See Handy v. Gordon (1967) 55 CR 769, 770-771, 422 P2d 329, 330-331; Roskamp Manley Associates, Inc. v. Davin Develop. & Inv. Corp. (1986) 184 CA3d 513, 520-521, 229 CR 186, 190]

b. [7:289] Nondisturbance and attornment agreement advisable: When the ground lease requires future subordination, the purchasing tenant should make certain there is a corresponding requirement that any new fee mortgagee agree (as a condition to and concurrently with the subordination) to enter into a nondisturbance and attornment agreement with the ground lease tenant. In this manner, although the ground lease will become subordinate to the new fee mortgage, the ground lease tenant's interest will nevertheless be protected (¶ 7:278 ff.).

10. [7:290] Conveyancing Instrument: The appropriate instrument for conveyance of a ground leasehold interest is an "assignment of lease." Occasionally, however, a grant deed (describing the real property as a leasehold interest) is used.

• FORMS: Alternate Forms of Assignment of Lease, see Forms 7:C & 7:D.

a. [7:291] Writing requirement (statute of frauds): The statute of frauds applies to lease assignments, just as it does to the conveyance of a fee interest (¶ 4:263 ff.). Specifically, an agreement to lease real property for more than one year or to sell an interest in real property is invalid unless "in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged or by the party's agent …" [Civ.C. §§ 1624(a)(3), 1091; Bed, Bath & Beyond of La Jolla, Inc. v. La Jolla Village Square Venture Partners (1997) 52

CA4th 867, 877, 60 CR2d 830, 836; see Maron v. Howard (1968) 258 CA2d 473, 485, 66 CR 70, 77—assignment of lease subject to statute of frauds must itself be by instrument in writing; but see also Signal Hill Aviation Co. v. Stroppe (1979) 96 CA3d 627, 637-638, 158 CR 178, 183-184—oral promise to assign enforceable under principal of promissory estoppel, notwithstanding statute of frauds]

11. [7:292] Estoppel Certificates: An "estoppel certificate" is a signed certification of various matters with respect to a lease (see ¶ 4:418). It reveals the present intent and understanding of the parties to a commercial lease agreement, thereby preventing any unwelcome post-transaction surprises. [Robert T. Miner, M.D., Inc. v. Tustin Avenue Investors, LLC (2004) 116 CA4th 264, 273, 10 CR3d 178, 183-184 (citing text); Plaza Freeway Ltd. Partnership v. First Mountain Bank (2000) 81 CA4th 616, 626, 96 CR2d 865, 871-872]

➪ [7:292.1] PRACTICE POINTER: Estoppel certificates are almost always used in commercial real estate transactions. They inform lenders and buyers of the tenant's understanding of the lease agreement; lenders and buyers rely upon the certificates in finalizing loans and purchases. [Plaza Freeway Ltd. Partnership v. First Mountain Bank (2000) 81 CA4th 616, 628-629, 96 CR2d 865, 874]

In the purchase and sale of a ground lease, obtaining estoppel certificates from both landowner and subtenants is vitally important to purchasing tenants … because the disclosures made will invariably impact desirability of the leasehold and assist the purchaser in evaluating whether subtenants nearing the end of their tenancy terms should be evicted or kept.

FORMS

• Tenant Estoppel Certificate, see Form 4:J. (Tenant and subtenant estoppel certificates are basically the same.)

• Landowner (Ground Lessor) Estoppel Certificate (With Consent to Assignment), see Form 7:B.

a. [7:292.2] Binding effect: An estoppel certificate is a "written instrument" triggering the Ev.C. § 622 conclusive presumption that the facts recited are "true as between the parties thereto, or their successors in interest" (Ev.C. § 622 (emphasis added)). [Plaza Freeway Ltd. Partnership v. First Mountain Bank (2000) 81 CA4th 616, 621, 626, 96 CR2d 865, 868, 871—although "written instrument" within meaning of § 622 usually refers to a contract, it also applies to estoppel certificates]

Thus, an estoppel certificate binds the signatories (and their successors in interest) to the statements made and estops them from claiming to the contrary at a later time. [Plaza Freeway Ltd. Partnership v. First Mountain Bank, supra, 81 CA4th at 626, 629, 96 CR2d at 872, 874 (quoting text)]

(1) [7:292.3] Conclusive statement of lease terms: An estoppel certificate may conclusively set forth the key terms of a lease agreement where the terms are ambiguous or wholly absent from the lease. [Plaza Freeway Ltd. Partnership v. First Mountain Bank (2000) 81 CA4th 616, 628, 96 CR2d 865, 873—tenant's estoppel certificate conclusively provided lease termination date where date was uncertain from terms of lease agreement]

(2) [7:292.4] Binding even if recitations erroneous: Moreover, the facts contained in an estoppel certificate are conclusively presumed to be true, and thus binding on the signatories, even if the certificate erroneously recites the lease terms. [Plaza Freeway Ltd. Partnership v. First Mountain Bank (2000) 81 CA4th 616, 628, 96 CR2d 865, 873 & fns. 10 & 11]

(3) [7:292.5] Effect of contradictory language: When an estoppel certificate refers to the lease as being "in full force and effect," the "contract" between the landowner and tenant consists of the lease and the estoppel certificate. Therefore, if the estoppel certificate contains language that contradicts a provision of the lease, both documents are considered together and general rules of contract interpretation apply: i.e., when the ambiguities cannot otherwise be resolved under the statutory rules of construction, the "contract" is interpreted against the party that drafted the documents (Civ.C. § 1654). [Robert T. Miner, M.D., Inc. v. Tustin Avenue Investors, LLC (2004) 116 CA4th 264, 271-272, 10 CR3d 178, 182-183—where lease clearly stated option right but estoppel certificate did not, trial court erred in ruling estoppel certificate presumptively established tenant had no option right]

➪ [7:292.6] PRACTICE POINTER FOR BUYER'S COUNSEL: It is recommended that counsel for the purchasing tenant (i) compare each sublease with the corresponding estoppel certificate to ensure the two are consistent and the certificate does not contain any ambiguities; and (ii) clarify and resolve any perceived inconsistencies and ambiguities before closing the transaction. In this way, should it later become necessary for the purchasing tenant to use an estoppel certificate as evidence against a subtenant (e.g., in an eviction proceeding), there will be less room for dispute as to what the subtenant intended to represent in the certificate.

b. [7:293] Matters covered: These are some of the most significant issues covered by an estoppel certificate (whether executed by landowner or subtenant) in connection with a ground leasehold purchase and sale:

• Date of lease;

• Parties to the lease;

• Amendments to the lease;

• Lease commencement and termination dates;

• Whether the tenant has rights of first refusal or options to purchase the property;

• Whether the tenant is in default under the lease;

• Confirmation that all improvements have been built in accordance with the terms of the ground lease (or sublease, as appropriate);

• Amount of the security deposit;

• Amount of rent.

➪ [7:294] PRACTICE POINTER: The landowner's estoppel certificate should also include a statement that all subleases were executed in conformity with the terms of the ground lease and have been approved by the landowner (where ground lease conditions tenant's right to sublet on obtaining landowner's prior consent).

c. [7:295] Alternative to estoppel certificates: Some leases are silent on the issue of landowner/subtenant estoppel certificates. If the ground lease and subleases do not require delivery of estoppel certificates (or they cannot be procured), the purchase and sale agreement should provide some mechanism to fill the gap.

One approach is to require the selling tenant to make various representations and warranties as to the status of the ground lease and subleases. However, unlike estoppel certificates, this alternative will not bind the landowner and subtenants; it simply gives the purchasing tenant the right to sue the seller for breach in the event the seller misstated the facts. (See ¶ 4:420.1.)

➪ [7:296] PRACTICE POINTER: Requesting an estoppel certificate from the landowner presents an opportune time to obtain clarifications, confirmations or consents under the ground lease.

For example, if any provisions in the ground lease are ambiguous, the landowner's estoppel certificate can be used to effectively amend the lease by providing appropriate clarifications (see ¶ 7:292.3). An estoppel certificate can also function as the landowner's written consent to a transfer of the selling tenant's interest (where the ground lease conditions the tenant's right to assign on obtaining the landowner's prior consent; see Form 7:B).

12. [7:297] Seller's Representations and Warranties: The purchasing tenant should obtain representations and warranties from the selling tenant concerning a wide range of issues. Most of these are the same representations and warranties sellers should give in connection with the transfer of a fee (see ¶ 4:431 ff.). However, a few representations are uniquely important to purchasers of a ground leasehold interest:

a. [7:298] No breaches: The seller is not presently in breach of the ground lease or any sublease; and no event has occurred which, with the passage of time or the giving of notice, would constitute such a breach.

b. [7:299] Options/rights of first refusal: The selling tenant has no options or rights of first refusal to lease or purchase which are not being conveyed to the purchasing tenant.

c. [7:300] Modifications/“side agreements”: There are no undisclosed agreements (whether written or oral) between the selling tenant and landowner or any subtenants which would modify the terms of the written ground lease or subleases.

d. [7:301] Improvements: All improvements have been constructed in a workmanlike manner and do not contain any material latent or patent defects.

e. [7:302] Claims: The selling tenant holds no claim against any subtenants, nor any claim against any other party that relates to the property, which is not being assigned to the purchasing tenant.

f. [7:303] Environmental hazards: The property is free of hazardous materials. (See Ch. 5.)

➪ [7:304] PRACTICE POINTER: As with the purchase and sale of a fee interest, counsel should anticipate intense negotiations over representations and warranties accompanying a ground leasehold sale. The seller, of course, typically prefers to transfer its interest on an "as is" basis, without any representations or warranties. (The impact of an "as is" sale in real property purchase and sale transactions generally is discussed at ¶ 4:351 ff.)

13. [7:305] Purchase and Sale Agreement and Use of an Escrow: The final consideration is the form of the purchase and sale agreement and the use of an escrow for the sale of a ground leasehold.

a. [7:306] Agreement: The basic form of purchase and sale agreement for the transfer of a fee interest can easily be modified for use in transferring a ground leasehold. While the conveyancing instrument will differ (i.e., an assignment rather than a deed, ¶ 4:59, 7:290), the issues pertaining to the purchase and sale are almost identical. See detailed discussion at ¶ 4:260 ff. (Selecting the Form of Written Agreement) and 4:280 ff. (Drafting the Purchase and Sale Agreement—Terms and Conditions).

• FORM: Sample Purchase and Sale Agreement, see Form 4:H.

b. [7:307] Escrow: The same considerations that make an escrow the preferred mechanism to effectuate closing and a completed transfer and in the purchase and sale of a fee apply as well to ground leasehold transactions. See detailed discussion at ¶ 4:560 ff.

a. [7:364] Sharing consideration with landowner
b. [7:365] Leasehold interest as security for purchase obligation

[7:310] The selling tenant should be concerned with most all of the issues that are of importance to the seller of a fee (see Ch. 4). In addition, however, the following matters are of particular concern to tenants assigning (selling) a leasehold interest:

• Obtaining the landowner's consent to the assignment (where the ground lease subjects transferability of the leasehold to the landowner's prior consent; see ¶ 7:80 ff.);

• Verifying that the assignment will not breach or jeopardize agreements with third parties; and

• Attempting to limit its continuing liability under the ground lease (and perhaps other contracts) after the assignment.

1. [7:311] Landowner's Consent to Assignment: If the ground lease requires the landowner's consent to the assignment, a sale of the ground leasehold would breach the lease unless such consent is requested (and obtained). The consequences of an assignment in breach of the lease can be drastic:

a. [7:312] Failure to seek landowner consent justifies withholding consent: The tenant's failure to request landowner consent in derogation of the lease itself breaches the lease and amounts to a per se justification for withholding consent, whether or not consent could properly have been withheld under the facts had the request been made. [Cf. Thrifty Oil Co. v. Batarse (1985) 174 CA3d 770, 776, 220 CR 285, 289; see ¶ 7:270]

b. [7:313] Purchaser's rescission remedy: Moreover, when the requisite consent is not obtained, the tenant who agreed to purchase the leasehold is entitled to rescind the assignment. [Bush v. Vernon (1955) 135 CA2d 33, 36-37, 286 P2d 903, 905; Civille v. Bullis (1962) 209 CA2d 134, 138, 25 CR 578, 581; ¶ 7:272]

c. [7:314] Damages and/or lease termination: And, having breached the lease, the selling tenant is subject to contract damages and/or termination of the ground lease (at landowner's election); see ¶ 7:112 ff., 7:270.

(For an example of the draconian consequences that may befall a selling tenant who fails to comply with assignment restrictions, see Artesia Med. Develop. Co. v. Regency Associates, Ltd. (1989) 214 CA3d 957, 960-961, 266 CR 657, 658—selling tenant not only lost benefits of attempted leasehold sale, but lost its lease as well.)

➪ [7:315] PRACTICE POINTER: Some selling tenants, in an effort to avoid a prohibition on “assignment” (which might not apply to a “sublease”), attempt to characterize an assignment of the ground lease as a “sublease.” (See ¶ 7:62 ff. regarding distinctions between “assignment” and “sublease.”) However, this practice can be dangerous because it might ultimately be construed as a mere subterfuge and artifice for an assignment, in violation of landowner consent provisions.

2. [7:316] Other Agreements to Which Selling Tenant is a Party: The selling tenant should make certain that an assignment of the ground lease will not violate other agreements (apart from the ground lease) to which it is a party.

a. [7:317] Options: For example, the selling tenant may have granted a prior option to purchase the leasehold interest (perhaps to a subtenant). Unless the preexisting option agreement has terminated, or the optionee thereunder elects not to exercise its option, an assignment to a third person would breach the option agreement and subject the selling tenant to substantial damages liability.

WESTLAW © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

b. [7:318] Mortgagee's consent: The seller's right to assign might also be subject to a leasehold mortgagee's prior consent. (In any event, the selling tenant should be concerned about a default in the leasehold mortgage after an assignment of its interest because it may still have continuing liability on the promissory note. See ¶ 6:310 ff.)

[7:319] Reserved.

3. Continuing Liability Under Ground Lease

a. [7:320] General rules—privity of contract notwithstanding assignment: As a general rule, unless the ground lease provides otherwise (or the landowner otherwise agrees to a release, ¶ 7:326), the selling tenant, as a party to the ground lease, remains liable under the lease despite its assignment of interest. [De Hart v. Allen (1945) 26 C2d 829, 832, 161 P2d 453, 455]

In other words, the selling tenant and landowner remain in privity of contract. The seller/assignor's contract liability continues for the duration of the lease term even though the purchaser/assignee expressly assumes the lease obligations and notwithstanding the landowner's consent to the assignment. [De Hart v. Allen, supra; Meredith v. Dardarian (1978) 83 CA3d 248, 252, 147 CR 761, 763; see Tsemetzin v. Coast Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1997) 57 CA4th 1334, 1345-1347, 67 CR2d 726, 732-733—where lease and assignment of lease specifically provided original tenant was not released from its lease obligations, original tenant remained liable notwithstanding that new tenant who expressly assumed lease was ultimately exonerated by reason of its insolvency; compare Standard Fireproof Bldg. Co. v. Carpenter (1947) 79 CA2d 330, 331, 180 P2d 53, 54—lease relieved assignor of postassignment obligations]

➪ [7:321] PRACTICE POINTER: Consequently, the selling tenant must make certain the purchaser has the ability (and the reliability) to perform its obligations under the ground lease for the entire balance of the term. This is especially important where a substantial term remains under a lengthy ground lease.

For example, if a ground lease is assigned in year five of a 99-year lease, the assignor tenant remains liable for another 94 years after it has relinquished all interest in the leasehold. Although the landowner might be willing to release the assignor of future liability (either when the assignment is executed or at some later time), that is a matter for negotiation; the landowner has no obligation to do so.

(1) [7:322] Selling tenant more than a "guarantor": It is often said that the effect of an assignment is to make the selling tenant a guarantor (or surety) for the purchaser/assignee's performance. [Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc. (1985) 40 C3d 488, 502, 220 CR 818, 827] This may be true as between seller/assignor and purchaser/assignee. However, as between seller/assignor and landowner, the selling tenant is more than a mere guarantor or surety: The selling tenant remains a primary obligor under the ground lease without the benefit of surety defenses. [De Hart v. Allen (1945) 26 C2d 829, 832, 161 P2d 453, 455; Meredith v. Dardarian (1978) 83 CA3d 248, 252, 147 CR 761, 764]

Indeed, whereas a surety is exonerated by a material alteration of the principal obligation without the surety's consent (Civ.C. § 2819, ¶ 6:586), a selling tenant/assignor effectively gives its purchaser/assignee the right to make modifications to the lease that will be binding on the assignor. [See Meredith v. Dardarian, supra, 83 CA3d at 252, 147 CR at 764; De Hart v. Allen, supra, 26 C2d at 832, 161 P2d at 455; compare Bennett v. Leatherby (1992) 3 CA4th 449, 453, 4 CR2d 340, 343—lease guarantors exonerated from guarantor liability when lessor settles with sublessees and executes all-encompassing release, thereby impairing guarantors' subrogation rights against sublessees]

➪ [7:323] PRACTICE POINTER: For this reason, unless the selling tenant will be released from its lease obligations upon the assignment (¶ 7:326 ff.), an agreement requiring the seller's prior written consent to any postassignment modification of the ground lease is crucial. See ¶ 7:336.

(2) [7:324] Continuing liability for option rent: Also, if the lease contains an option to extend the term, the selling tenant remains liable for accruing rent during the option period (as well as all other lease obligations during the option term) in the event the purchaser/assignee exercises the option. [Realty & Rebuilding Co. v. Rea (1920) 45 CA 673, 188 P 621, 622-623]

(a) [7:325] Compare—holdover rent: However, once the lease term (including renewal options) expires, the selling tenant's contractual obligations cease. The seller is not liable for rent during any period in which the purchasing tenant (or any successor) wrongfully holds over in violation of the lease. [Meredith v. Dardarian (1978) 83 CA3d 248, 253-255, 147 CR 761, 764-766]

b. [7:326] Exception—release from postassignment liability: The selling tenant's contractual obligations terminate after an assignment where either (1) the ground lease expressly so provides, or (2) the landowner separately agrees to release the seller/assignor from future liability (this may occur at the time of the assignment or at some point in the future).

In effect, under such circumstances, transfer of the leasehold interest is a novation—i.e., the creation of an entirely new lease that extinguishes and supersedes the original lease, leaving the landowner to look only to the new tenant (ground leasehold purchaser) for performance. [Civ.C. §§ 1530, 1531; see Wells Fargo Bank v. Bank of America NT & SA (1995) 32 CA4th 424, 431-432, 435, 38 CR2d 521, 525, 527-528; Fanucchi & Limi Farms v. United Agri Products (9th Cir. 2005) 414 F3d 1075, 1081 (applying Calif. law); and Tufeld Corporation v. Beverly Hills Gateway, L.P. (2022) 86 CA5th 12, 29-30, 302 CR3d 203, 215-216 (concluding 2003 assignment constituted "novation" that reset Civ.C. § 718's 99-year time limit (¶ 7:12)]

(1) [7:326.1] Three-party assent: Because it extinguishes the original lease and substitutes a new lease, a novation requires the assent of the landowner, the original (transferor) tenant and the new tenant. However, all the parties need not manifest their assent simultaneously or in the same document. [Wells Fargo Bank v. Bank of America NT & SA (1995) 32 CA4th 424, 435, 38 CR2d 521, 525]

Thus, if the ground lease provides that the tenant will be relieved of liability from the date of any assignment, an assignment by the tenant and assumption by the assignee will complete the novation. The landlord's contemporaneous consent is not required. [See Wells Fargo Bank v. Bank of America NT & SA, supra, 32 CA4th at 432, 38 CR2d at 525]

(2) [7:327] Limitation—"sham" assignments: A release-upon-assignment provision in the ground lease will not be enforceable where the assignment was effected as a mere subterfuge or "sham" to enable the selling tenant to escape its leasehold obligations. In other words, the exoneration provision will effectively release the tenant assignor only if the assignment is to a bona fide third party. [O'Donnell v. Weintraub (1968) 260 CA2d 352, 357-358, 67 CR 274, 278—assignment to "alter ego" corporation was mere sham undertaken to allow tenant to escape personal liability while retaining economic benefits of lease through control of "dummy" assignee]

➪ [7:328] PRACTICE POINTER: As a matter of prudence, it makes sense for the selling tenant to have the landowner reaffirm (in writing) any lease provision exonerating the selling tenant from liability upon assignment at the time the landowner grants its written consent to the assignment. Having approved the assignment and reaffirmed the exoneration provision, the landowner will be hard pressed to avoid the release by claiming a "sham" assignment.

(3) [7:329] Exoneration of seller's guarantors: An agreement to release the seller from its principal obligations will not itself terminate any third party guaranties given for the seller's leasehold liabilities (although the guarantors will be exonerated as a matter of law if the principal obligations are altered in any material respect without the guarantors' consent; see Civ.C. § 2819, ¶ 7:322). Thus, unless the lease expressly provides that third party guaranties (e.g., by the seller's principal or affiliate) are extinguished upon a bona fide assignment, the selling tenant will want to negotiate for a separate agreement to exonerate the guaranty obligations.

(4) [7:330] Exoneration of other contract liabilities: Likewise the selling tenant's liability under third party contracts independent of the lease (e.g., construction contracts, management agreements, reciprocal easement agreements and various other agreements concerning operation of the property) will not be affected by the landowner's agreement to release the seller from its lease obligations. Thus, the seller should also negotiate for the purchaser's assumption of these independent obligations (¶ 7:334 ff.) and a concurrent postassignment exoneration from the third parties (i.e., additional third party contract novations).

c. [7:331] Indemnification from purchasing tenant: Regardless of whether the selling tenant might be exonerated from its lease obligations upon an assignment, it behooves the seller to obtain a blanket indemnification from the purchasing tenant for all matters arising out of the ground lease or affecting the property, and/or relating to any of the subleases. The indemnification should be effective from and after the closing of the sale.

Though the scope of any indemnification is negotiable, the parties should specifically delineate its application to postassignment claims. This issue is important because postassignment claims might be predicated on acts or events that occurred before the leasehold transfer (in which event, the purchaser would not want to be held to an indemnification obligation).

Cross-refer: Indemnification issues facing seller and buyer in a ground lease transaction are the same as those that arise in connection with the purchase and sale of a fee interest. For a more detailed discussion, see ¶ 4:461 ff.

➪ [7:332] PRACTICE POINTER: In addition to an indemnity, the selling tenant should consider obtaining guaranties, whereby the principals of the purchasing tenant (or perhaps other creditworthy parties) agree to become secondarily liable for the purchaser's performance under the ground lease. Also pursue the possibility of securing indemnification and guaranty obligations with property of the purchasing tenant or guarantors.

The purchasing tenant is often a one-asset entity—e.g., a corporation or limited partnership established for the sole purpose of owning the tenant's ground lease interest. In such situations, adequate guaranties from solvent individuals or entities who can stand behind the purchaser's performance are a particularly important safeguard for the seller.

d. [7:333] No right of reentry to protect seller: Absent a release, an assignment does not disturb the selling tenant's and landowner's privity of contract relationship (¶ 7:320); however, an assignment does extinguish the parties' privity of estate relationship. Consequently, the tenant/assignor has no right of reentry following an assignment of its leasehold interest. [Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc. (1985) 40 C3d 488, 492, 220 CR 818, 820, fn. 2; see Vallely Investments, L.P. v. BancAmerica Comm'l Corp. (2001) 88 CA4th 816, 822, 106 CR2d 689, 694; and ¶ 7:63]

This is true even if the assignee abandons the property. Thus, upon an assignment, the selling tenant might not have the ability to cure the purchasing tenant's breach of the lease. [Flynn v. Mikelian (1962) 208 CA2d 305, 311-312, 25 CR 138, 142]

e. [7:334] Purchaser's assumption of lease obligations—privity of estate vs. privity of contract: As between purchaser/assignee and landowner, an assignment puts them in a privity of estate relationship for so long as the assignee retains possession. But the assignee is not contractually bound under the ground lease (no privity of contract relationship) unless it expressly agrees in writing to assume all of the selling tenant's lease obligations (see Forms 7:C and 7:D). [Kelly v. Tri-Cities Broadcasting, Inc. (1983) 147 CA3d 666, 676, 195 CR 303, 308; Vallely Investments, L.P. v. BancAmerica Comm'l Corp. (2001) 88 CA4th 816, 822, 106 CR2d 689, 694; see also Ellingson v. Walsh, O'Connor & Barneson (1940) 15 C2d 673, 676, 104 P2d 507, 509; see also BRE DDR BR Whittwood CA LLC v. Farmers & Merchants Bank of Long Beach (2017) 14 CA5th 992, 1000-1004, 222 CR3d 435, 440-444 (purchase of leasehold estate through foreclosure did not constitute express agreement to assume lease obligations)—commercial tenant's lender who purchased leasehold estate through foreclosure following tenant's default had no duty to continue paying rent to landlord after surrendering premises]

(1) [7:335] Consequences of purchaser's privity of estate: Being in privity of estate, the assignee takes all of the benefits and burdens of the tenant assignor's leasehold interest; and, for so long as it continues in possession, the assignee remains liable to the landowner under all tenant covenants "running with the land"—including the obligation to pay rent. [Realty & Rebuilding Co. v. Rea (1920) 184 C 565, 569, 194 P 1024, 1026; see Kelly v. Tri-Cities Broadcasting, Inc. (1983) 147 CA3d 666, 678-679, 195 CR 303, 310; see also Vallely Investments, L.P. v. BancAmerica Comm'l Corp. (2001) 88 CA4th 816, 822, 106 CR2d 689, 694; and ¶ 4:63 ff. for general discussion of "covenants running with the land"]

(2) [7:336] Consequences of purchaser's lack of contractual privity—seller's risk: Since most of the lease covenants "run with the land," the purchaser's/assignee's privity of estate may theoretically suffice to protect the seller/assignor (as well as the landowner). However, relying exclusively on the assignee's privity of estate to bind it to the lease obligations is a real risk for the seller … because, absent an express assumption (putting it in privity of contract), the assignee is bound to pay rent and perform the other lease obligations only for so long as it remains in possession of the property. Immediately upon cessation of its possession, the assignee's privity of estate terminates and it is no longer obligated under the lease. [See BRE DDR BR Whittwood CA LLC v. Farmers & Merchants Bank of Long Beach (2017) 14 CA5th 992, 1000-1004, 222 CR3d 435, 440-444 (¶ 7:334)]

In addition, where the "facts and circumstances" of the lease transaction dictate, the seller may continue to be bound by implied covenants (arising from the lease as a whole or from its express covenants) that could expose it to liability even after the transfer of its leasehold interest to the purchaser. [See Del Taco, Inc. v. University Real Estate Partnership V (2003) 111 CA4th 16, 27-28, 3 CR3d 311, 319-320—undisputed facts of lease transaction did not support inference of seller/assignor's implied promise to provide lifetime maintenance and repair of sewer line]

Consequently, it is extremely important to the selling tenant that the purchaser agree to an express assumption. Otherwise, the seller risks the possibility that the purchaser might abandon the property at some future time, leaving the seller as the only obligor under the ground lease. [See Realty & Rebuilding Co. v. Rea (1920) 184 C 565, 569, 194 P 1024, 1026; Kelly v. Tri-Cities Broadcasting, Inc. (1983) 147 CA3d 666, 678-679, 195 CR 303, 310]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

➪ [7:337] PRACTICE POINTER: The selling tenant should be similarly motivated to obtain the purchaser's agreement to assume all independent obligations affecting the property under agreements with third parties (construction contracts, management agreements, reciprocal easement agreements, etc.); see ¶ 7:330. And likewise as to the seller's sublease obligations; see ¶ 7:358.

f. [7:338] Protection from increased liability by postassignment ground lease modifications: If the selling tenant will remain liable under the ground lease following the assignment (and especially in the absence of the purchaser's assumption, ¶ 7:334), an agreement prohibiting the purchaser from modifying or amending the lease (including any extension of the term) without the seller's/assignor's prior written consent is crucial. Absent such a provision, the seller risks unanticipated and unpredictable increased liability under the ground lease.

(Recall that a seller/assignor is not a mere "guarantor" or "surety" for the purchaser's/assignee's liability and thus not protected by the rule that material alterations of the principal obligation without the guarantor's consent extinguish the guaranty; see ¶ 7:322.)

g. [7:339] Seller's right to notice of default: Remaining in postassignment contractual privity with the landowner (absent a novation or other express release from the landowner, ¶ 7:326 ff.), the selling tenant/assignor risks a termination of the lease and damages liability for breach of the lease should the purchaser/assignee default on the lease obligations; this could happen without prior notice of default to the seller/assignor and without a right to "cure" and recover possession. [Flynn v. Mikelian (1962) 208 CA2d 305, 311-312, 25 CR 138, 142] Depending on the language of the default provisions in the ground lease, such damages may include future rent. [Desert Plaza Partnership v. Waddell (1986) 180 CA3d 805, 812-813, 225 CR 775, 780; see also Danner v. Jarrett (1983) 144 CA3d 164, 166-167, 192 CR 535, 536-537]

Accordingly, a selling tenant who is unable to obtain the landowner's agreement to exonerate it from postassignment liability under the ground lease should negotiate for a provision requiring the landowner to give the seller both (1) notice of the purchasing tenant's default and (2) an opportunity to cure before the landowner may take action that could prejudice the leasehold interest. (Such a provision could be set forth in the document that evidences the landowner's consent to the assignment.)

h. [7:340] Additional seller protections: If the selling tenant will not be relieved of postassignment liability under the ground lease, consider these additional steps that may help protect it from future liability:

(1) [7:341] Sublessees pay rent directly to seller: The purchasing tenant's agreement that, in the event the purchaser defaults under the ground lease, all subtenant rents then due (and thereafter coming due) will be paid directly to the seller will provide the seller with a fund from which to discharge the ground lease rent obligations.

(2) [7:342] Seller's right to insurance proceeds: Another safeguard is the purchaser's agreement to assign insurance proceeds to the seller in the event the property is damaged by an insured peril and the purchaser refuses to make the necessary repairs.

(3) [7:343] Seller's right to reenter and take possession: The selling tenant may want to negotiate with the landowner for a right to reenter and retake possession of the property following a default and termination of the purchaser's interest.

Retaining a right of reentry technically converts the assignment into a sublease. [Kendall v. Ernest Pestana, Inc. (1985) 40 C3d 488, 492, 220 CR 818, 820, fn. 2; Barkhaus v. Producers' Fruit Co. (1923) 192 C 200, 205-206, 219 P 435, 437-438; Flynn v. Mikelian (1962) 208 CA2d 305, 310, 25 CR 138, 141; see ¶ 7:63] Nevertheless, it will give the selling tenant some protection as to the leasehold itself … whereas, without a right of reentry, the seller's only remedy would be a claim for damages against the purchasing tenant.

i. Structuring sale as sublease instead of assignment

(1) [7:344] Advantages to seller: Structuring a sale of the tenant's interest as a "sublease" rather than an "assignment" may offer advantages to the selling tenant (but see ¶ 7:68 regarding construction of sublease as assignment):

(a) [7:345] Preserving income over time: A sublease may make sense if one of the seller's goals is to receive a stream of income over time (instead of one lump-sum payment for a transfer of its leasehold interest). Although the same goal could be achieved through an assignment that requires the purchasing tenant's payment of an installment note secured by the leasehold interest, the grant of such a security interest may be prohibited by the terms of the ground lease or any existing (or future) leasehold financing.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(b) [7:346] Curing defaults: Ordinarily, following a true assignment, the selling tenant has no right of reentry to cure the purchaser's defaults (¶ 7:63). But a sublease effectively keeps the seller informed of the purchaser's failure to perform its obligations; as sublessor, the seller can readily step in to cure any nonfeasance that would be a default under the ground lease. [Barkhaus v. Producers' Fruit Co. (1923) 192 C 200, 219 P 435, 438]

(2) [7:347] Purchasing tenant's competing concerns: On the other hand, the purchasing tenant has competing concerns which may render it disinclined to treat the transaction as a "sublease":

(a) [7:348] Privity: As a sublessee, the purchaser is neither in privity of estate nor privity of contract with the landowner; thus, the ground lease covenants do not run to the purchaser's benefit. (The purchaser's rights and remedies lie solely against the seller/sublessor under the sublease.) [See generally, Hartman Ranch Co. v. Associated Oil Co. (1937) 10 C2d 232, 242, 73 P2d 1163, 1168]

(b) [7:349] Termination: The purchaser's/subtenant's rights can be no greater than those of the seller/sublessor. Thus, the purchaser's leasehold interest would be terminated upon a termination of the ground lease. (To avoid this result, the purchasing tenant would have to negotiate for notice and opportunity to cure, or a nondisturbance agreement, or both; ¶ 7:280.) [Fifth & Broadway Partnership v. Kimny, Inc. (1980) 102 CA3d 195, 201, 162 CR 271, 275; see also Buck v. Morrossis (1952) 114 CA2d 461, 466, 250 P2d 270, 274]

(c) [7:350] Financing: A sublease is likely to be more difficult to finance than a ground lease.

(d) [7:351] Renewal options: Not being in privity with the landowner, the purchasing tenant would not be entitled to exercise any options to extend the lease term granted by the ground lease (they would be exercisable only by the seller/sublessor). The purchaser would thus need to separately contract with the landowner for option rights. [Ablett v. Clauson (1954) 43 C2d 280, 283, 272 P2d 753, 754]

(e) [7:352] Purchase options: Likewise, a sublease will not automatically transfer any option to purchase the fee interest; the purchaser will acquire the seller's option to purchase only if it is specifically assigned.

[7:353 - 7:354] Reserved.

4. [7:355] Estoppel Certificates: Though critical for the purchasing tenant (¶ 7:292 ff.), "estoppel certificates" can also be beneficial to the selling tenant. Through an estoppel certificate, the seller can confirm it is not in breach at the time of the ground lease assignment (or, if it allegedly is in breach, the seller will know the extent of the claimed breach).

a. [7:356] From subtenants: Subtenant estoppel certificates can be used to verify that the seller is not presently in default under the subleases. Through appropriate language, the certificates can also effectively exonerate the selling tenant upon the transfer of its interest under the sublease (assuming the seller is not automatically exonerated under the sublease). (See more detailed discussion of tenant estoppel certificates at ¶ 4:418 ff.; see also Form 4:J.)

b. [7:357] From landowner: The landowner's estoppel certificate can be used to verify that the selling tenant is in compliance with the terms of the ground lease; it is also an appropriate vehicle to obtain the landowner's clarification of incidental issues important to the purchase and sale transaction—e.g., that the tenant has performed its construction obligations in accordance with the terms of the ground lease; that all subleases are in conformity with the landowner's requirements (and if consent to the subleases was required, that the landowner's consent has been given).

• FORM: Landowner (Ground Lessor) Estoppel Certificate (With Consent to Assignment), see Form 7:B.

5. [7:358] Assumption and Indemnifications Regarding Subleases: Absent its express assumption of the seller's sublease obligations, the purchaser might attempt to avoid any contractual obligations to the subtenants on the theory there is no privity of contract between them. [Kelly v. Tri-Cities Broadcasting, Inc. (1983) 147 CA3d 666, 676, 195 CR 303, 308; Ellingson v. Walsh, O'Connor & Barneson (1940) 15 C2d 673, 676, 104 P2d 507, 509; Treff v. Gulko (1932) 214 C 591, 594, 600, 7 P2d 697, 699, 701] Consequently, for both the seller's and subtenants' protection, the leasehold assignment (or separate agreement) should specifically provide that the purchasing tenant assumes all obligations of the selling tenant under each and all of the subleases. (See Forms 7:C & 7:D.)

6. [7:359] Purchaser's Representations and Warranties: Those representations and warranties which are important to the seller of a fee interest (see ¶ 4:431 ff.) are also important to sellers of a ground leasehold interest. In particular, however, because the selling tenant may have residual liability under the ground lease in the event the purchasing tenant subsequently defaults, the selling tenant should be acutely interested in the purchaser's representations and warranties regarding the purchaser's (a) financial condition; and (b) prior operating/business history.

7. [7:360] Handling Security Deposit: Counsel for the selling tenant should be aware of certain issues relating to security deposits.

a. [7:361] Seller's deposit to landowner: In all likelihood, the selling tenant will have paid a security deposit to the landowner. That deposit is usually transferred to the benefit of the purchasing tenant. Thus, it is essential that the seller obtain a credit from the purchasing tenant for the full amount of the deposit.

b. [7:362] Subtenant deposits to selling tenant: Appropriate provisions regarding the handling of subtenant security deposits should also be included in the purchase and sale documents. (The purchasing tenant will obviously want an assignment of, and credit for, the deposits.)

Like the owner of a fee interest in nonresidential rental property (¶ 4:421), the selling tenant will remain personally liable for its subtenants' security deposits unless it either:

- Transfers to its buyer that portion of the deposits remaining after lawful deductions and thereafter notifies the subtenants, by personal delivery or certified mail, of the transfer, of any claims made against the security deposit, and of the transferee's name and address; or

- Returns to the subtenants that portion of the security deposits remaining after lawful deductions. [See Civ.C. § 1950.7(d); see also Civ.C. § 1950.7(c) re "lawful deductions" from deposit]

8. [7:363] Payment of Purchase Price: Broadly, issues relating to payment of the consideration for a ground lease assignment are identical to those arising in connection with the purchase and sale of a fee interest (see ¶ 4:288 ff.). However, on this subject, a few points are peculiar to ground lease transactions:

a. [7:364] Sharing consideration with landowner: Seller's counsel should review the ground lease for any provision giving the landowner the right to share in a portion of the consideration paid to the selling tenant. (Although such a provision is more likely to be found in leases other than ground leases, there is no reason why it could not appear in a ground lease.)

b. [7:365] Leasehold interest as security for purchase obligation: Sellers willing to take some or all of the purchase price over time will naturally want security for the unpaid balance—typically, in the form of a deed of trust encumbering the purchaser's interest in the ground lease. This arrangement is feasible only if the ground lease permits encumbrancing of the leasehold interest. Seller's counsel should thus review the lease before committing to such an arrangement.

Also, in negotiations for such an installment transaction, bear in mind the purchaser may be seeking the seller's agreement to subordinate its deed of trust to any additional leasehold financing the purchaser may desire in the future.

7. [7:384] Seller's Estoppel Certificate
8. [7:385] "Clean-Up" Matters (Ground Lease Clarifications and Modifications)
9. [7:386] Consent Fee

1. [7:370] Threshold Issue—Right to Consent to Assignment: Upon a proposed ground lease assignment, the landowner's primary concern is with the new tenant's (assignee's) qualifications—notably, its creditworthiness, stability and reliability. However, a tenant's leasehold interest is freely transferable unless the lease contains an unambiguous restriction on transfer (Civ.C. §§ 1995.210(b), 1995.220; see ¶ 7:71, 7:74). Consequently, where the ground lease contains no restrictions on transferability of the tenant's interest, the landowner has no right to approve or disapprove a proposed assignment (regardless of the intended assignee's qualifications) and, hence, no right to be involved in the leasehold purchase and sale transaction.

It follows that the threshold task for landowner's counsel is to review the ground lease for language restricting the tenant's right to assign (or sublease):

• [7:371] A lease provision that absolutely prohibits any transfer of the tenant's interest is valid and enforceable according to its terms. [Civ.C. § 1995.230; ¶ 7:73, 7:75] Hence, unless the landowner is willing to negotiate an appropriate modification, the assignment cannot proceed.

(Of course, if the ground lease purchase and sale is consummated despite an absolute prohibition on transferability, the landowner has the right to pursue appropriate damages and/or termination remedies. See ¶ 7:112 ff.)

• [7:372] The lease might prohibit "assignment," but be silent on the right to "sublease." Here, counsel must determine whether the selling tenant's proposed "sublease" is, for all practical purposes, really a prohibited assignment (see ¶ 7:64, 7:68).

• [7:373] If the lease contains a landowner consent condition to transferability, it must next be determined under what circumstances consent may properly be withheld: This issue turns on the language of the lease; if the lease contains no express standards for the giving or withholding of consent, a "reasonableness" standard will be implied. [See Civ.C. §§ 1195.260 & 1995.270; and detailed discussion at ¶ 7:80 ff.]

➪ [7:374] PRACTICE POINTERS FOR LANDOWNERS: If (as landowner) you decline approval of a tenant's proposed assignment pursuant to a "consent clause" condition that is subject to a "reasonableness" standard, promptly respond in writing to the tenant's request for a statement of reasons for withholding consent. Failure to do so within a reasonable time (or to provide a "reasonable objection" to the transfer) effectively proves an unreasonable withholding of consent. [See Civ.C. § 1995.260; and ¶ 7:85]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

In any event, under a "consent clause" lease (or any lease restricting the tenant's right to transfer), landowners should not sit on their rights: Immediately object to an unauthorized assignment or risk waiving the right to do so. [Sexton v. Nelson (1964) 228 CA2d 248, 258, 39 CR 407, 413]

2. [7:375] Status of Construction: The status of construction will ordinarily have a significant impact on the landowner's decision to grant or withhold consent to the transfer. The landowner is more likely to have a reasonable basis for withholding consent when the tenant's construction of improvements has not been completed. In such event, the landowner may be concerned that the purchasing tenant will not have the ability (financial or otherwise) to complete the required construction.

Short of rejecting the purchaser outright, the landowner might consider requiring a performance bond from a surety, insuring that the construction will be completed in accordance with the terms of the ground lease.

3. [7:376] Due Diligence Regarding Purchasing Tenant: A "due diligence" review of the purchasing tenant's financial condition and operating history should be conducted in much the same way the original tenant's qualifications were reviewed. Of particular importance are the purchasing tenant's:

• Business—i.e., the nature and quality of its business.

• Operating history and reputation.

• Financial strength.

• Intended use.

• Contemplated alterations to the property.

• Ability to generate sufficient sales so as not to jeopardize rent payable under a percentage rent lease: i.e., if the ground lease calls for percentage rent (a specified percentage of the tenant's sales, perhaps coupled with a minimum base rent), the landowner must make certain the purchasing tenant's business operations on the property will generate sales at least equal to that of the selling tenant; otherwise, the landowner risks a decrease in rental income. (Here, the risk of receiving less rent would provide a "commercially reasonable" basis for rejecting the proposed purchaser; see ¶ 7:95 ff.)

➪ [7:377] PRACTICE POINTER: In lieu of exercising the right to withhold consent to a proposed purchaser/assignee who does not satisfy a due diligence review, the landowner may want to consider obtaining a guaranty from a financially sound third party (e.g., the purchasing tenant's principal) as a condition to its agreement to approve the assignment.

4. [7:378] Assignee's Assumption of Lease Obligations: To optimize its recourse against the purchasing tenant, the landowner should make certain the purchaser agrees to assume all of the selling tenant's obligations under the ground lease. Otherwise, landowner and purchaser/assignee will not be in privity of contract; the purchaser will be bound by the ground lease obligations (through privity of estate) only for so long as it remains in possession of the premises … effectively leaving the purchaser free to terminate its occupancy at will without further obligations to the landowner. [Kelly v. Tri-Cities Broadcasting, Inc. (1983) 147 CA3d 666, 676, 195 CR 303, 308-309]

Moreover, absent the purchaser's express assumption of all of the selling tenant's ground lease obligations, the purchaser may be able to avoid obligations under the ground lease in the event it subsequently mortgages the leasehold and a foreclosure of the mortgaged leasehold occurs. [See Vallely Investments, L.P. v. BancAmerica Comm'l Corp. (2001) 88 CA4th 816, 824, 106 CR2d 689, 696—landlord that required ground lease assignee to expressly assume all obligations thereunder successfully enforced rent payment provision against assignee even though assignee's mortgaged leasehold interest was extinguished by foreclosure; and more detailed discussion at ¶ 7:334 ff.]

5. [7:379] Release of Selling Tenant's Ground Lease Rights and Obligations: For all practical purposes, a true "substitution" of tenants under the ground lease—i.e., a novation (¶ 7:326 ff.)—facilitates and simplifies dealings between landowner and tenant for the balance of the term; i.e., the landowner may prefer to deal with one party, rather than two (or more).

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Thus, if the purchasing tenant will be assuming the ground lease obligations (¶ 7:378), and the landowner feels confident about the purchaser's qualifications, reliability and integrity, the landowner may be willing to release (exonerate) the selling tenant from both its ground lease obligations and its rights in the rental property—including the right to reenter or cure any postassignment default under the lease. Such release may be made a condition to the landowner's granting consent to the assignment. (See ¶ 7:326 ff.)

➪ [7:380] PRACTICE POINTER: While such a novation might simplify future dealings, it has at least one major drawback: When the selling tenant is completely substituted out of the picture, the landowner's sole recourse will be against the purchaser/assignee. Should the purchaser be unable to cure a future default, the landowner will be left only with a termination/damages remedy against the purchaser … and, perhaps, with the unwelcome prospect of having to find a new tenant. Therefore, the landowner may deem it more prudent to both keep the selling tenant liable under the ground lease and give the selling tenant the right to reenter and cure any default by the purchaser. (See ¶ 7:339, 7:343.)

6. [7:381] Confirmations: As a matter of prudence from the landowner's perspective, certain matters that could be affected by the landowner's consent to the assignment should be confirmed in writing by the selling and buying tenants:

a. [7:382] Nonwaiver of future assignment restrictions: Under current law, ground lease restrictions on the right to assign or sublet the leasehold interest are not extinguished by the landowner's consent to a prior transfer or waiver of a standard or condition for a prior transfer … unless (1) the lease expressly provides the transfer restriction is limited to the original tenant, or (2) the landowner expressly states in writing that its consent or waiver on one occasion applies to subsequent transfers as well. [Civ.C. § 1995.340; see ¶ 7:111]

Even so, to avoid misunderstandings, the selling and purchasing tenants should confirm in writing that the landowner's approval of the present assignment will not amount to a waiver of its right under the ground lease to approve or disapprove future proposed assignments of the ground lease.

b. [7:383] Seller's continuing liability: Unless the landowner has agreed to exonerate the seller from its postassignment contract liability, the documentation reflecting landowner consent to the assignment should also confirm that, notwithstanding the assignment, the selling tenant remains liable under the terms and conditions of the ground lease (see ¶ 7:320 ff.).

7. [7:384] Seller's Estoppel Certificate: The landowner should attempt to obtain an estoppel certificate from the selling tenant, confirming the status and various terms and conditions of the ground lease—including, the seller's confirmation that the landowner is not presently in default under the ground lease. (See generally, ¶ 4:418 ff.; and Form 4:J.)

8. [7:385] "Clean-Up" Matters (Ground Lease Clarifications and Modifications): Either because the ground lease was not properly drafted at its inception, or because of changed circumstances, various modifications to the lease may be desirable. Negotiations over landowner consent to the assignment may be an ideal opportunity for the landowner to require appropriate clarifications and amendments to the ground lease to clean up lingering problems, disputes and/or inconsistencies. (See ¶ 7:296.)

9. [7:386] Consent Fee: Ground leases sometimes require that a fee be paid to the landowner to cover its expenses (including legal fees) incurred in investigating a proposed purchaser/assignee under a "consent clause" provision. Landowner's counsel should, of course, review the lease for such a provision; depending upon the lease terms, it may be necessary to advise the parties at the inception of the transaction of the nature of the contemplated investigation and the fee amount likely to be due.

20. [7:422] Arbitration

1. [7:390] Overview: Extremely long-term ground leases can be almost as valuable as a fee interest, and in many instances just as mortgageable. Indeed, financeability of the leasehold interest is likely to be of great importance to prospective tenant purchasers:

WESTLAW © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

• The tenant often needs leasehold financing to obtain funds to build improvements.

• Also, quite apart from the question of financing for improvements, the leasehold is an asset which the tenant may wish to pledge at a future date to secure a loan for an independent purpose (unrelated to the property).
Therefore, before consummating the assignment, it is crucial for buyer's counsel to review the ground lease for financing provisions. If the lease is silent on the subject, or if the financing provisions are too restrictive or otherwise insufficient, appropriate amendments to the ground lease should be negotiated.
The sections set forth at ¶ 7:392 ff. provide a checklist of leasehold financing issues prospective tenants should consider before buying an interest in a ground lease.

• FORM: See Sample Ground Lease, Article 14, Form 7:A.
➪ [7:391] PRACTICE POINTER—PROSPECTIVE LENDER'S INVOLVEMENT*: The leasehold financing provisions must reflect the prospective lender's (contemplated leasehold mortgagee's) requirements. Consequently, to the extent feasible, the purchaser's prospective lender should be involved at the outset of negotiations.

2. [7:392] Subordinating the Fee (“Fee Joinder”): Subordinating the fee (sometimes called “fee joinder”) refers to a leasehold financing arrangement in which the landowner allows its fee interest in the property to serve as security for performance of the loan made to the ground lease tenant.
a. [7:393] Landowner's motivation: Since the landowner is not the beneficiary of the financing proceeds, such subordination agreements generally are the exception (not the norm). Nonetheless, a “fee joinder” provision is sometimes found in ground leases because:

• It is simply part of the deal struck with the tenant as an inducement to enter into the ground lease; and/or

• The landowner may recognize that fee subordination is the only way the tenant can secure financing for the construction of improvements.
b. [7:394] Consequences: When subordinated to a leasehold mortgage, the fee interest could be wiped out by a foreclosure of the deed of trust. However, if the leasehold financing proceeds will be used solely for purposes of constructing improvements, the landowner might not be giving up much by the subordination agreement; this is because, if the tenant defaults and the landowner has to step in and pay off the loan, the landowner will still have received the benefit of the loan proceeds—i.e., the completed improvements.
➪ [7:395] PRACTICE POINTER FOR LANDOWNER COUNSEL: If a fee subordination is required, counsel for the landowner should insist that it be conditioned upon all loan proceeds being used exclusively to construct required tenant improvements. This will ensure that the landowner ultimately receives the benefit of completed improvements. Otherwise, should the tenant borrow money for some other purpose, the landowner obtains no benefit in consideration of its “fee joinder” agreement.

3. [7:396] Threshold Inquiry—Ground Lease Provision Allowing Leasehold Mortgage: The initial task for buyer's counsel is to determine whether the ground lease addresses the subject of financing the leasehold interest and, if so, whether the lease permits such financing. On these issues, note the following points in particular:
a. [7:397] Transfer restrictions: A provision permitting leasehold financing is inextricably bound to, and governed by, provisions regarding transferability (assignment) of the leasehold … since a pledge of the leasehold is, in effect, a transfer (hypothecation) to the leasehold mortgagee. However, the ground lease should also clearly and specifically contemplate a leasehold mortgage.
b. [7:398] Restrictions on eligible lenders: Some ground leases only allow financing by an “institutional lender” (such as a bank, insurance company, savings and loan association or pension fund). Such a restriction would be unacceptable to a purchasing tenant who contemplates (1) private party financing or (2) taking back a deed of trust encumbering the leasehold when it transfers its interest in the ground lease to a subsequent assignee tenant.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

4. [7:399] Lease Term: At a minimum, the term of the lease must be as long as the term of the loan; but most lenders require that the lease term be even longer. Depending on the particular lender, options to extend the term may or may not be included in calculating sufficiency of the length of the term.

➪ [7:400] PRACTICE POINTER: Occasionally, commencement of the term might not occur until the happening of certain events (or satisfaction of certain conditions). In such cases, it is unlikely a lender will fund any loan until all conditions precedent have been satisfied.

5. [7:401] Ascertainable Rent: Any prospective lender will require that the amount of rent (including increases) be clearly ascertainable or certain. Otherwise, it will be difficult for a lender to determine (a) the fair market value of the leasehold (in order to evaluate the desirability of taking the leasehold as security for the loan), and (b) the financial burden the lease payments place on its borrower.

The problem here could be particularly acute with regard to periodic increases during the lease term or rent to be paid during option terms. Rent formula clauses may be a stumbling block to financeability unless keyed to readily ascertainable standards (see ¶ 7:136 ff., 7:160 ff.).

➪ [7:402] PRACTICE POINTER: Lender objections might be ameliorated by a provision setting forth a maximum ceiling on rent increases, thus enabling the lender to determine the "outside" obligation it would have to take over in the event it has to foreclose on the leasehold.

6. Use and Competing Use Provisions

a. [7:403] Lender's desire for liberal use clauses: Use restrictions in the lease may hamper financeability. The lender will be looking for optimum flexibility with regard to use because, in the event of foreclosure, it will want to assign the leasehold interest as quickly as possible (without regard to an eligible assignee's intended use). Hence, use restrictions in the ground lease may have to be renegotiated before a purchaser contemplating future financing can proceed with the transaction. (On the construction and enforceability of use restrictions, see ¶ 7:170 ff.)

b. [7:404] "Radius" restrictions: The lender will also be concerned about leasehold provisions restricting the tenant's right to engage in a certain kind of business within a specified radius of the property. These so-called "radius" provisions are generally designed to facilitate another tenant's "exclusive use" rights or to protect the landowner from business competition by a tenant.

Leasehold mortgagees generally object to such restrictions because, in the event of foreclosure, they want to be able to market the property to a broad base of prospective tenants. (For example, if the lease precludes the tenant from opening two fast-food restaurants within a five-mile radius, the lender will not be able to assign the lease to many of the most successful fast-food chains who frequently have two locations within any five-mile urban radius.) Again, the purchaser may have to renegotiate the objectionable restrictions before proceeding with the transaction.

7. [7:405] Alteration of Improvements: The lender will want the tenant to have the right to alter or modify the improvements with minimal (or no) restrictions. Its concern is the same as with liberal use rights—i.e., to ensure optimum choice of assignees in the event of a foreclosure (see ¶ 7:403).

8. [7:406] Assignment and Sublease Rights: Restrictions on transferability of the leasehold interest will undoubtedly hamper financeability of the leasehold. A lender will be looking for the broadest rights to assign and sublease so as to be assured of optimum transferability of the leasehold in the event of foreclosure. (Subtenants, however, will want a nondisturbance and attornment agreement; see ¶ 7:277.)

➪ [7:407] PRACTICE POINTER: If the landowner is unwilling to relieve the purchasing tenant of transfer restrictions in the ground lease, consider negotiating for an exception that will exempt the lender from the restrictions (or at least attempt to modify the restrictions to the lender's satisfaction).

9. [7:408] Provisions Affecting Subtenant Rents: A lender will want to be assured of a certain and steady stream of subtenant rental income. Thus, the subleases should not contain any provision allowing subtenants to reduce rent or offset their rent against monies due from the sublessor (ground lease tenant).

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

The lender will also require that the subleases contain provisions (a) precluding any modification, cancellation or early termination of the lease without the lender's prior written consent; and (b) precluding prepayment of rent (so as not to reduce future rent flows).

10. [7:409] Options: To the extent the ground lease grants options to extend or renew the term, lease additional space, or purchase the fee interest, a lender will require a provision expressly making such rights exercisable by the lender. Hence, language in the lease making such options "personal" to the ground lease tenant may have to be renegotiated.

11. [7:410] Cancellation, Surrender or Modification: The lender will want to be assured that the lease will not be modified in any manner that might adversely affect its security for the loan. Consequently, the ground lease should contain a provision barring cancellation, surrender or modification of the lease without the lender's prior written consent.

12. [7:411] Ground Lessor Estoppel Certificate: The lender will want to be able to verify at any given time whether the tenant is in compliance with its obligations under the ground lease. Thus, the lease should include a provision requiring the landowner to furnish an estoppel certificate from time to time during the rental term. (See ¶ 7:292 ff. on ground lessor estoppel certificates; and Form 7:B.)

13. Insurance

a. [7:412] Policy provisions: The lender typically will require that all insurance policies with regard to the premises and improvements thereon provide that (1) policy proceeds be paid to the lender to the extent of its interest (i.e., to the extent of the loan balance); and (2) the policies are cancellable only upon prior written notice to the lender.

b. [7:413] Proceeds: The lender will be looking for strict controls with respect to the disbursement of insurance proceeds —in particular, that (1) the proceeds be used to rebuild damaged improvements and, if not, (2) the proceeds be used to pay down the loan. (Typically, insurance proceeds are paid to a third party trustee, such as the lender (or a party controlled by the lender), who then disburses them to fund the repairs/rebuilding.) See ¶ 7:226.

Additionally, the lender will not want to have any obligation to rebuild improvements in the event the insurance proceeds are insufficient.

14. [7:414] Condemnation: The lender's concerns regarding condemnation generally parallel those of the ground lease tenant (see ¶ 7:228 ff.).

In particular, however, the lender will want the same control over disposition of any condemnation award as it has over disposition of insurance proceeds (¶ 7:412 ff.)—i.e., that the award be used to fund the rebuilding of improvements and, if not, to pay down the loan. [But see Milstein v. Security Pac. Nat'l Bank (1972) 27 CA3d 482, 486, 103 CR 16, 18—lender prohibited from enforcing provision allowing condemnation proceeds to pay down loan unless security impaired]
