15. Default Provisions

a. [7:415] Right to cure tenant's default: To protect itself against forfeiture of the leasehold interest, with the consequence that its collateral may become worthless, a lender must obtain a contractual right to receive notice of the tenant's defaults and an opportunity to cure the defaults. The lender can either reach a separate agreement with the landowner permitting it to cure any defaults; or may obtain an amendment of the tenant's lease so providing (¶ 7:421). Alternatively, the lender may obtain an option for a new lease in the event the tenant's lease is terminated by default. [See Glendale Fed'l Bank v. Hadden (1999) 73 CA4th 1150, 1153-1154, 87 CR2d 102, 104-105—nonpayment of rent unlawful detainer against tenants terminated lender's lien interest in the leasehold where lender had no contractual right to receive notice of tenant defaults and to cure those defaults]

The lender-protective contract should also specifically provide that any default can be cured by the lender in lieu of the tenant and that the lender has the right to enter upon the property for that purpose.

b. [7:415.1] Reasonable time to cure: In addition, the lender should insist upon a lengthier cure period than granted to the ground lease tenant. And, because it is often not feasible for the lender to obtain physical access to the property to cure nonmonetary defaults, its contractual rights should include protection from termination of the ground lease so long as it is diligently pursuing the requisite cure.

• [7:415.2] For example, assume the tenant is in default for failing to make required repairs to the improvements. Because the lender cannot get access to repair the property and cure the breach, it will want the right to have such additional time as may be necessary to complete its foreclosure, obtain possession and thereafter cure the default.

16. [7:416] Notices: Lenders require that all notices to the tenant (not limited to notices of default; e.g., notice of rent increases, of operating cost pass-throughs, etc.) also be given to the lender.

17. [7:417] Consequences of Tenant Bankruptcy: The lender will require certain provisions to protect its interests in the event of the tenant mortgagor's bankruptcy:

a. [7:418] Nontermination: The ground lease should contain a provision that the lease will not be terminated by the tenant's bankruptcy. (Even so, as a matter of bankruptcy law, rental payments will have to be kept current during the bankruptcy proceedings; see 11 USC § 365(d)(3)—bankruptcy trustee's duty to timely perform tenant's postpetition lease obligations as they come due (but court may extend time for performance if debtor experienced "material financial hardship" due directly or indirectly to COVID-19 pandemic).)

b. [7:419] "New lease" provision in event of rejection and surrender in bankruptcy: A nontermination provision in the lease (¶ 7:418) cannot supersede bankruptcy law, pursuant to which the lease may be rejected (requiring a surrender of the leasehold) by the trustee in bankruptcy (see 11 USC § 365(a)) or may be "deemed rejected" by operation of law (see 11 USC § 365(d)(4)—tenant debtor's unexpired nonresidential property lease deemed rejected and property must be surrendered if not assumed or rejected by trustee by earlier of 210 days after petition filed or entry of order confirming a plan, subject to court extension of time for cause).

There is a split of authority, however, whether rejection of the lease in bankruptcy also terminates a lender's security interest in the leasehold. [See Matter of Austin Develop. Co. (5th Cir. 1994) 19 F3d 1077, 1083-1084—bank's security interest in ground lease not extinguished by "deemed rejection" in bankruptcy; McLaughlin v. Walnut Properties, Inc. (2004) 119 CA4th 293, 300-301, 14 CR3d 369, 375-376 (collecting cases); contra, In re LCO Enterprises (9th Cir. 1993) 12 F3d 938, 941; and In re Giles Assocs., Ltd. (BC WD TX 1988) 92 BR 695, 696 (declined to follow by Matter of Austin Development Co. (5th Cir. 1994) 19 F3d 1077, 1081-1083)—rejection in bankruptcy terminates lease as to all parties, including tenant debtor's mortgagees] Lenders, therefore, will also want to reserve the right to enter into a new lease with the landowner upon a bankruptcy termination of the existing lease during the otherwise unexpired term.

Cross-refer: For a comprehensive treatment of the impact of tenant bankruptcy during an unexpired lease term, see Friedman, Garcia & Hoy, Cal. Prac. Guide: Landlord-Tenant (TRG), Ch. 10.

18. [7:420] No Merger: A "no merger" provision ensures that, should the fee and leasehold interests be acquired by the same party, the interests will not merge so as to destroy the leasehold (or the leasehold mortgage). In other words, the lender wants to be assured that if the ground lease tenant purchases the property, its leasehold mortgage will stay intact.

19. [7:421] Amendments: Because there may be several leasehold financings during a long-term ground lease, it is difficult to anticipate every protection the various leasehold mortgagees may require. To ensure optimum financeability, a provision should be included obligating the landowner to make certain modifications to the ground lease that will reasonably accommodate any leasehold mortgagee so long as the amendments do not materially change the landowner's rights or remedies or jeopardize the economics of the transaction.

20. [7:422] Arbitration: The lender will want the right to participate in any arbitration of disputes called for (or permitted) by the ground lease.

Chapter 7. Ground Leaseholds

Forms

[Form 7:A] Ground Lease

GROUND LEASE

This LEASE, dated as of this _____ day of ___________, ___, by and between ___________, a ___________ ("Landlord") and ___________, a ___________ ("Tenant"), is made with reference to the following facts:

A. Landlord is the owner of certain real property, situated in the County of ___________, State of California, more particularly described on attached Exhibit "A" (the "Premises"), including the building presently located thereon (which building is to be demolished as provided below), but excepting all buildings, structures and improvements hereafter located on the Premises (the "Improvements"), the ownership of which will be acquired and will be retained by Tenant, subject to the provisions of this Lease. (The Improvements and the Premises are sometimes referred to as the "Property.") It is the intention of Landlord and Tenant that the separation of title to the Premises and the Improvements is not to change the character of the Improvements as real property and that the same shall be and remain real property; and

B. Tenant desires to lease the Premises from Landlord, and Landlord desires to lease the Premises to Tenant upon the terms and conditions set forth below.

NOW, THEREFORE, for and in consideration of the rent, covenants and agreements contained in this Lease, Landlord hereby leases the Premises to Tenant and Tenant hereby leases the Premises from Landlord, and Landlord and Tenant hereby covenant and agree as follows:

CERTAIN DEFINITIONS

For all purposes of this Lease, unless the context otherwise requires, the following words and phrases shall have the following meanings:

(a) "Improvements" shall mean any structures or improvements now or hereafter erected or situated on the Premises, including without limitation, the foundations and footings thereof, title and ownership of which shall be in Tenant, any and all fixtures, equipment and machinery of every kind and nature whatsoever now or hereafter affixed or attached thereto, or now or hereafter used or procured for use in connection with the operation, use or occupancy thereof, and the appurtenances thereto, but excluding from the foregoing all fixtures and articles of personal property, title of which, pursuant to any lease of space in the Improvements shall be vested in the tenant under such lease;

(b) "Premises" shall mean the real property particularly described on Exhibit "A";

WESTLAW © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(c) "Termination of this Lease" shall mean the expiration of the term of this Lease or any sooner termination of the term of this Lease pursuant to any of the provisions of this Lease;

(d) "Leasehold Mortgage" shall mean any mortgage or deed of trust constituting a lien upon this Lease and the leasehold estate hereby created and Tenant's title to the Improvements;

(e) "Institution" shall mean a savings bank, a savings or building and loan association, a commercial bank or trust company (whether acting individually or in any fiduciary capacity), an insurance company, an educational institution or a state, municipal or similar public employees' welfare, pension or retirement fund or system, a charitable or other eleemosynary institution, a real estate investment trust or any other person or entity with assets (capital and surplus) in excess of Fifty Million Dollars ($50,000,000), whose principal businesses include interim or permanent financing secured by real estate;

(f) "Institutional Leasehold Mortgage" and "Institutional Leasehold Mortgagee" shall mean respectively, a Leasehold Mortgage held by an Institution and the holder of an Institutional Leasehold Mortgage;

(g) "Fee Mortgage" shall mean any mortgage or deed of trust constituting a lien upon the Premises subject to the encumbrance of this Lease and to any new lease made pursuant to Section 14.04 below and to the rights of Tenant hereunder and thereunder;

(h) "Event of Default" shall have the meaning set forth in Article 15;

(i) "Unavoidable Delays" shall mean the delays due to strikes, lockouts, acts of God, inability to obtain labor or materials, governmental restrictions, enemy action, civil commotion, fire, unavoidable casualties or similar causes beyond the control of Tenant;

(j) "Mortgage" shall include an indenture of mortgage and deed of trust and Institutional Leasehold Mortgagee shall include a bank or trust company acting as trustee under such indenture of mortgage or deed of trust; and

(k) "Initial Improvements" shall mean the first Improvements to be constructed by Tenant on the Premises and shall include a first-class [office, industrial, etc.] building of not less than ___ stories containing not less than ___________ (_____) net rentable square feet, together with parking facilities (subterranean or otherwise) for not less than the number of cars required by local governmental authorities having jurisdiction thereof, and such other facilities, improvements and appurtenances necessary or desirable in connection with such a development.

TERM

The term of this Lease shall commence ___________, (the "Commencement Date") and unless sooner terminated under any subsequent provision of this Lease, shall expire and terminate at 12:00 midnight, ___________.

RENT

Section 2.01. Tenant shall pay to Landlord as basic annual rent, without deduction, set-off, prior notice or demand, the sum of ___________ Thousand and no/100 Dollars ($________) per annum, which sum is subject to possible upward adjustment as provided in Section 2.02 below, in advance in equal monthly installments on the first day of each calendar month, commencing on the Commencement Date and continuing during the Lease term. Basic rent for the first month or portion of it shall be paid on the Commencement Date. Basic rent for any partial month shall be prorated on the basis of 1/360th of the basic annual rent, per day. All rent shall be paid to Landlord at the address to which notices to Landlord are given, or to such other person or such other place as directed from time to time by written notice to Tenant from Landlord.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Section 2.02. The basic annual rent provided for in Section 2.01 above shall be subject to adjustment at the commencement of the third year of the lease term and every third year thereafter (the “adjustment date”) as follows:

(a) The base for computing the adjustment is the Consumer Price Index for [select appropriate CPI Index] published by the United States Department of Labor, Bureau of Labor Statistics (the “Index”), which is published for the month nearest the Commencement Date (the “Beginning Index”). If the Index published nearest the adjustment date (the “Extension Index”) has increased over the Beginning Index, the basic annual rent until the next rent adjustment shall be set by multiplying the basic annual rent set forth in Section 2.02 above by a fraction, the numerator of which is the Extension Index and the denominator of which is the Beginning Index. In no case shall the basic annual rent be less than the basic annual rent set forth in Section 2.01 above. Upon adjustment of the basic annual rent as set forth in this Lease, the parties shall immediately execute an amendment to the Lease stating the new basic annual rent.

(b) If the Index is changed so that the base year differs from that used as of the month immediately preceding the month in which the Commencement Date occurs, the Index shall be converted in accordance with the conversion factor published by the United States Department of Labor, Bureau of Labor Statistics. If the Index is discontinued or revised during the Lease term, such other government index or computation with which it is replaced shall be used in order to obtain substantially the same result as would be obtained if the Index had not been discontinued or revised.

Section 2.03. It is the purpose and intent of Landlord and Tenant that the rent payable under this Article 2 shall be absolutely net to Landlord and this Lease shall yield, absolutely net to Landlord, the rent specified and provided in this Article 2, and that Tenant shall pay all costs, charges and expenses of every kind and nature whatsoever against the Property which may arise or become due during the term and which, except for the execution and delivery of this Lease, would or could have been payable by Landlord. However, nothing in this Lease shall require, or be construed to require, Tenant to pay any interest or principal payments or other payments on or required under any mortgage or trust deed on the fee of the Premises.

PAYMENT OF TAXES, ASSESSMENTS, ETC.

Section 3.01. Tenant covenants and agrees to pay, before any fine, penalty, interest or cost may be added thereto for the non-payment thereof, all property taxes, assessments, water and sewer rates and charges, and other governmental charges, general and special, ordinary and extraordinary, unforeseen as well as foreseen, of any kind and nature whatsoever (all of which taxes, assessments, water and sewer rates or charges, and other governmental charges are hereinafter referred to as “imposition”), which are assessed, levied, imposed or become a lien upon the Premises and/or the Improvements and the sidewalks or streets in front of or adjoining the Premises and the Improvements, or become payable, during the term of this Lease; provided, however, that if, by law, any such imposition may at the option of the taxpayer be paid in installments (whether or not interest shall accrue on the unpaid balance of such imposition), Tenant may exercise the option to pay the same (and any accrued interest on the unpaid balance of such imposition) in installments and shall pay only such installments as may become due during the term of this Lease as the same respectively become due and before any fine, penalty, interest or cost may be added thereto, for the non-payment of any such installment and interest; and provided, further, that any imposition relating to a fiscal period of the taxing authority, a part of which period is included within the term of this Lease and a part of which is included in a period of time after the termination of this Lease, other than a termination of this Lease pursuant to Article 15 below, shall (whether or not such imposition shall be assessed, levied, imposed or become a lien upon the Premises and/or the Improvements, or shall become payable, during the term of this Lease) be adjusted between Landlord and Tenant as of the expiration of the term of this Lease, so that Landlord shall pay that portion of such imposition which relates to that part of the fiscal period after the termination of this Lease, and Tenant shall pay that portion of which relates to the period prior to the termination of the Lease.

Section 3.02. Nothing contained in this Lease shall require Tenant to pay any franchise, corporate, estate, inheritance, succession, capital levy, stamp tax or transfer tax of Landlord, or any income, excess profits or revenue tax or any other tax, assessment, charge or levy upon the basic rent payable by Tenant under this Lease, nor shall any tax, assessment, charge or levy of the character hereinabove in this Section described be deemed to be included within the term "imposition" as defined in Section 3.01 above.

Section 3.03. Tenant covenants, upon request of Landlord, to furnish to Landlord for inspection by it within sixty (60) days after the date when any imposition is payable, official receipts of the appropriate taxing authority, or other evidence satisfactory to Landlord, evidencing the payment of such imposition.

Section 3.04. Tenant shall have the right to contest the amount or validity, or to seek a refund, in whole or in part, of any imposition by appropriate proceedings, and notwithstanding the provisions of Section 3.01 above, this shall not be deemed or construed in any way as relieving, modifying or extending Tenant's covenants to pay any such imposition at the time and in the manner as provided in this Article 3 unless Tenant shall have deposited with Landlord or a bank or trust company designated by Landlord, as security for the payment of such imposition, money or a corporate surety bond or other security acceptable to Landlord in the amount so contested and unpaid together with the estimated amount of all interest and penalties in connection therewith and all charges that may or might be assessed against or become a charge on the Premises and/or Improvements or any part thereof in said proceedings, whereupon Tenant may postpone or defer payment of such imposition. Upon the termination of such proceedings, Tenant shall pay the amount of such imposition or part thereof as finally determined in such proceedings, the payment of which may have been deferred during the prosecution of such proceedings, together with any costs, fees, interest, penalties or other liabilities in connection therewith, and upon such payment Landlord shall return, or cause such bank or trust company to return, the amount above referred to without interest. If, at any time during the continuance of such proceedings, Landlord shall deem the amount deposited with it insufficient, Tenant shall, upon demand, deposit with Landlord or such bank or trust company such additional sum as Landlord may reasonably request, and upon failure of Tenant to do so, the amount theretofore deposited may be applied by Landlord or such bank or trust company to the payment, removal and discharge of such imposition and the interest and penalties in connection therewith any costs, fees or other liability accruing in any such proceedings, and the balance, if any, shall be returned to Tenant. Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this Section, if an Institutional Leasehold Mortgagee shall be the tenant under this Lease, such Institutional Leasehold Mortgagee shall not be required to make the deposit required under this Section. Landlord agrees not to unreasonably withhold its consent to joining in any such proceedings or permitting the same to be brought in its name. Landlord shall not ultimately be subjected to any liability for the payment of any costs or expenses in connection with any such proceeding, and Tenant covenants to indemnify, save and hold harmless Landlord from any such costs or expenses. Tenant shall be entitled promptly to any refund of any such imposition and penalties or interest thereon, which have been paid by Tenant, or which have been paid by Landlord and for which Landlord has been fully reimbursed.

Section 3.05. The certificate, advice or bill of the appropriate official designated by law to make or issue the same or to receive payment of any imposition, of non-payment thereof, shall be prima facie evidence that such imposition is due and unpaid at the time of the making or issuance of such certificate, advice or bill.

INSURANCE

Section 4.01. At all times Tenant shall keep the Improvements insured for the mutual benefit of Landlord and Tenant against

(a) loss or damage by fire, and such other risks as may be included in the standard form of extended coverage insurance from time to time available, in an amount not less than one hundred percent (100%) of the then full insurable value of the Improvements; and

(b) claims for personal injury or property damage, under a policy of general public liability insurance, with such limits to be not less than ____________ Dollars ($_________) for any one (1) person and ____________ Dollars ($_________) for any one (1) occurrence in respect of bodily injury or death, and ____________ Dollars ($_________) for property damage.

The term "full insurable value" shall mean the actual replacement cost of the Improvements (excluding foundation and excavation costs) and said "full insurable value" shall be determined by an architect, appraiser, appraisal company or one of the insurers, reasonably acceptable to Landlord, selected by Tenant, which determination shall be made no less frequently than once every three (3) years.

Section 4.02. All insurance provided for under this Lease shall be effected under valid enforceable policies issued by insurers of recognized responsibility and licensed to do business in the State of California. The original policies shall be delivered to the holder of the first Leasehold Mortgage and certificates of such insurance shall be delivered to Landlord and to the holder of the Fee Mortgage, if any. If there is no Leasehold Mortgage, the original policies shall be delivered to the holder of the Fee Mortgage, or if there is none, to Landlord. At least ten (10) days prior to the expiration date of any policy, the original renewal policy for such insurance shall be delivered by Tenant to the holder of the expiring original policy, and certificates thereof shall be delivered as aforesaid, together with satisfactory evidence of payment of the premium on such policy. All such policies shall contain a non-cancellation clause except upon thirty (30) days prior written notice to each named insured and loss payee.

Section 4.03. All policies of insurance required under this Lease shall name Landlord and Tenant as the insureds as their respective interests may appear. Subject to the provisions and limitations hereinafter set forth in this Section 4.03 and Sections 4.04 and 4.05 below, all policies of the character referred to in Section 4.01 above shall also provide, if required by either Landlord or Tenant, for any loss thereunder to be payable to the holder of any Fee Mortgage and the holder of any Leasehold Mortgage, as the respective interests of such holders may appear, pursuant to a standard mortgagee clause or endorsement. The loss, if any, under the policies referred to in Section 4.01 above, shall be adjusted with the insurance companies by Tenant, except that in case of any particular casualty resulting in damage or destruction exceeding ____________ Dollars ($_________) in the aggregate, no adjustment shall be made with the insurance companies without the prior approval of Landlord, unless an Institutional Leasehold Mortgagee shall have approved the amount of the adjustment, in which event Landlord's prior approval shall not be required.

Section 4.04. The loss, if any, under all policies of the character referred to in Section 4.01 above shall be payable (a) in the case of any particular casualty resulting in a loss payment not exceeding ____________ Dollars ($_________) to Tenant, or (b) in case of any particular casualty resulting in a loss payment in excess of ____________ Dollars ($_________) to the Institutional Leasehold Mortgagee holding the first Leasehold Mortgage, or if there is none, to a bank or trust company, as insurance trustee, to be designated by Tenant in a notice given to the insurance companies and to Landlord promptly following the occurrence of the casualty, which bank or trust company shall have its principal office in ____________, California, and have a capital and surplus account according to its last published statement in excess of Fifty Million Dollars ($50,000,000). All policies of the character referred to in Section 4.01 above shall expressly provide that loss thereunder shall be adjusted and paid as provided in Section 4.03 and this Section 4.04.

Section 4.05. Any loss paid under any insurance policy to Tenant shall be held by Tenant in trust for application to the cost of restoring, repairing, replacing or rebuilding the Improvements. Any loss so paid to the Institutional Leasehold Mortgagee or the insurance trustee shall be disbursed by it in accordance with the provisions of Article 11 below.

Section 4.06. Nothing in this Article shall prevent Tenant form taking out insurance of the kind and in the amount provided for under Section 4.01 above under a blanket insurance policy or policies which can cover other properties owned or operated by Tenant, as well as the Premises and the Improvements; provided, however, that any such policy of blanket insurance of the kind provided for by Section 4.01 above (i) shall specify therein (or Tenant shall furnish Landlord and the holder of any Fee Mortgage and Leasehold Mortgage with a written statement from the insurers under such policies specifying) the amount of the total insurance allocated to the Improvements, which amount shall be not less than the amount required to be carried pursuant to Section 4.01 above, and (ii) shall not contain any clause which would result in the insured thereunder being required to carry insurance with respect to the property covered thereby in an amount not less than any specific percentage of the full insurable value of such property in order to prevent the insured therein named from becoming a co-insurer of any loss with the insurer under such policy. Tenant covenants to furnish to Landlord and to the holder of any Fee Mortgage and any Leasehold Mortgage, within thirty (30) days after the filing thereof with any insurance rate-making body, copies of the schedule or make-up of all property affected by any such policy of blanket insurance.

LANDLORD'S RIGHT TO PERFORM TENANT'S COVENANTS ADDITIONAL RENT

Tenant covenants and agrees that if it shall at any time fail, within the time limit in Section 15.01(b), below, after any notice of any default has been given thereunder, (except in the case of maintaining the insurance policies provided in Article 4 above for which such time limitation shall not apply for purposes of this Article 5), to pay any imposition in accordance with the provisions of Article 3, or to take out, pay for, maintain or deliver any of the insurance policies provided for in Article 4, or fail to cause any lien of the character referred to in Article 12 to be discharged as provided therein, or shall fail to perform any other act on its part to be performed, then Landlord may (but shall not be obligated to) and without further notice or demand upon Tenant and without waiving or releasing Tenant from any obligations of Tenant contained in this Lease contained, (a) pay any imposition payable by Tenant pursuant to the provisions of Article 3, or (b) take out, pay for and maintain any of its insurance policies provided for in Article 4, or (c) discharge any lien of the character referred to in Article 12 as provided therein, or (d) perform any other act on Tenant's part to be performed as provided in this Lease; provided, however, that so long as a Leasehold Mortgage shall be outstanding, (i) Landlord shall not take any action of the character specified in the foregoing clauses (a), (b), (c), or (d) (except in the case of an emergency) until after the expiration of the time limited in Section 14.04 after the notice specified therein has been given to the Leasehold Mortgagee, and (ii) with respect to any action of the character specified in the foregoing clause (d), Landlord shall not take any such action (except in the case of an emergency) if the holder of the Leasehold Mortgage, prior to the expiration of the time limited in Section 14.04 below, shall have given the notice provided for in clause (d) of Section 14.04. All sums so paid by Landlord and all necessary incidental costs and expenses paid or incurred by Landlord in connection with the performance of any such act by Landlord, together with interest thereon at the rate of ten percent (10%) per annum from the date of making of such expenditure by Landlord, shall be payable to Landlord on demand or, at the option of Landlord, may be added to any basic rent then due or thereafter becoming due under this Lease, and Tenant covenants to pay any such sum or sums payable by Tenant for impositions pursuant to Article 3, insurance premiums pursuant to Article 4 and all other charges and expenses of whatsoever nature which Tenant assumes or agrees to pay pursuant to this Lease, shall be deemed additional rent under this Lease and payable as provided in this Lease, and Landlord shall have (in addition to any other right or remedy of Landlord) the same rights and remedies in the event of the non-payment of any such sums by Tenant as in the case of default by Tenant in the payment of basic rent.

COVENANTS TO MAINTAIN THE PREMISES AND THE IMPROVEMENTS

Tenant, at its sole expense, shall keep the Improvements, the Premises and the adjoining sidewalks and curbs clean and in good condition free of accumulations of dirt and rubbish, and shall make all repairs (including structural repairs) and replacements necessary to maintain the Premises and the Improvements in a condition appropriate for buildings of similar construction, use or class in ____________, California; provided, that in any event Tenant shall make all repairs necessary to avoid any structural damage or injury to the Improvements. Landlord shall not be required to furnish any services or facilities or to make any repairs or alterations to the Premises or the Improvements and Tenant hereby assumes the full and sole responsibility for the condition, operation, repair, replacement, maintenance and management of the Premises and the Improvements.

COMPLIANCE WITH ORDERS, ORDINANCES, ETC.

Section 7.01. Tenant covenants throughout the term of this Lease, at Tenant's sole cost and expense, promptly to comply with all laws and ordinances and the orders, rules, regulations and requirements of all federal, state and municipal governments and appropriate departments, commissions, boards and officers thereof, and the orders, rules, and regulations of the California Board of Fire Underwriters, or any other body hereafter constituted exercising similar functions, which may be applicable to the Premises and the Improvements. Tenant shall likewise observe and comply with the requirements of all policies of public liability, fire, and all other policies of insurance at any time in force with respect to the Improvements.

Section 7.02. Tenant shall have the right to contest by appropriate legal proceedings, in the name of Tenant or Landlord or both, without costs or expense to Landlord, the validity or application of any law, ordinance, order, rule, regulation or requirement of the nature referred to in Section 7.01 above, and if by the terms of any such law, ordinance, order, rule, regulation or requirement, compliance therewith pending the prosecution of any such proceeding may legally be held in abeyance without the incurrence of a lien, charge or liability of any kind against the Premises or the Improvements or Tenant's leasehold interest therein and without subjecting Tenant or Landlord to any criminal liability of whatsoever nature for failure so to comply therewith, Tenant may postpone compliance therewith until the final determination of any proceedings, provided that all such proceedings shall be prosecuted with all due diligence and dispatch, and if any lien, charge or civil liability is incurred by reason of non-compliance, Tenant may nevertheless make such contest and delay compliance as provided above, provided that Tenant furnishes to Landlord security, reasonably satisfactory to Landlord, against any loss or injury by reason of such non-compliance or delay therein and prosecutes the contest aforesaid with due diligence. Notwithstanding the foregoing provisions of this Section, if an Institutional Leasehold Mortgagee shall be the tenant under this Lease, such Institutional Leasehold Mortgagee shall not be required to furnish the security required under this Section. Landlord agrees to execute and deliver any papers which may be necessary or proper to permit Tenant to contest the validity or application of any such law, ordinance, order, rule, regulation or requirement.

DAMAGE TO OR DESTRUCTION OF THE IMPROVEMENTS

Section 8.01. Tenant covenants that in case of damage to or destruction of the Improvements by fire or any other cause, similar or dissimilar, insured or uninsured, it will promptly, at its sole cost and expense, but subject to reimbursement to the extent provided in Article 11 below, restore, repair, replace or rebuild the Improvements as nearly as possible to the condition, quality and class it was in immediately prior to such damage or destruction, or with such changes or alterations as Tenant shall elect to make in conformity with Article 10 below. Such restoration, repairs, replacement or rebuilding shall be commenced promptly and prosecuted with reasonable diligence.

Section 8.02. If insurance proceeds, if any, recovered in respect of any insured damage or destruction, less any cost of recovery, shall be insufficient to pay the entire cost of such restoration, repairs, replacement or rebuilding, Tenant covenants to pay the deficiency.

Section 8.03. Tenant's obligation to make payment of the basic rent and all other charges on the part of Tenant to be paid and to perform all other covenants and agreements on the part of Tenant to be performed shall not be affected by any such damage to or destruction of the Improvements and Tenant hereby waives the provisions of Sections 1932(2) and 1933(4) of the California

Civil Code and of any other statute or law now or hereafter in effect contrary to such obligations of the Tenant as set forth in this Lease, or which relieves Tenant from such obligation.

CONDEMNATION

Section 9.01. If, at any time during the term of this Lease, there shall be a total taking or a constructive total taking of the fee title to the Premises and Improvements in condemnation proceedings or by any right of eminent domain, this Lease shall terminate on the date of such taking and the basic rent and other charges payable by Tenant under this Lease shall be apportioned and paid to the date of such taking. For the purposes of this Article, the term “a constructive total taking” shall mean a taking of such scope that the untaken portion of the Premises and Improvements is insufficient to permit the restoration of the existing Improvements so as to constitute a complete, economical project. In the event of a dispute between Landlord and Tenant as to whether or not there has been “a constructive total taking” within the meaning above set forth, such dispute shall be determined by arbitration in the manner provided in Article 21 below, except that Tenant may elect, at Tenant's sole option and notwithstanding the foregoing, that the same does not constitute “a constructive total taking”, in which event the provisions of this Article 9 subsequent to Section 9.02 hereof shall apply.

Section 9.02. In the event of any such total taking or constructive total taking and the termination of this Lease, the award or awards for such taking, less the costs of the determination and collection of the amount of the award or awards (“Condemnation Proceeds”), shall be distributed as follows:

(a) Landlord shall first be entitled to receive and retain as its own property, and Tenant hereby assigns to Landlord, such portion of the Condemnation Proceeds as shall equal the fair market value of the Premises as encumbered by this Lease including any untaken portion of the Premises, exclusive of the Improvements; however, to the extent Condemnation Proceeds on account of such total taking are available therefor, in no event shall Landlord receive less than:

(i) the sum of ___________ Dollars ($________) if such total taking or constructive total taking occurs prior to the last day of the tenth (10th) year of the Lease term;

(ii) the sum of ___________ Dollars ($________) if such total taking or constructive total taking occurs on or subsequent to the last day of the tenth (10th) year of the Lease term but prior to the last day of the twentieth (20th) year of the Lease term;

(iii) the sum of ___________ Dollars ($________) if such total taking or constructive total taking occurs on or subsequent to the last day of the twentieth (20th) year of the Lease term but prior to the last day of the Lease term.

(b) Tenant shall then be entitled to receive, and Landlord hereby assigns to Tenant, the balance of the Condemnation Proceeds, if any.

Section 9.03. In the event of a taking which is less than a total taking or constructive total taking (a “partial taking”), this Lease shall not terminate or be affected in any way, except as provided in Section 9.04, below, and Landlord shall first be entitled to receive and retain as its own property, that portion of the Condemnation Proceeds applicable to the Premises as encumbered by this Lease, equal to the fair market value of the portion of the Premises as encumbered by this Lease so taken exclusive of the Improvements (“Landlord's Proceeds”). Tenant shall then be entitled to receive the balance of the Condemnation proceeds (“Tenant's Proceeds”) and the same shall be payable, and Landlord hereby so assigns the same, if ___________ Dollars ($________) or less, in trust to Tenant for application by Tenant to the cost of restoring, repairing, replacing or rebuilding the Improvements, but if in excess of ___________ Dollars ($________), then to the Institutional Leasehold Mortgagee holding the first Leasehold Mortgage, or if there is none, to a bank or trust company designated by Tenant which shall have the same qualification as the insurance trustee referred to in the case of the payment of proceeds of insurance pursuant to Section 4.04 above. The portion of the Condemnation Proceeds so paid to the Institutional Leasehold Mortgagee holding the first Leasehold Mortgage or to such bank or trust company shall be disbursed by it in accordance with the provisions of Article 11 below.

Section 9.04. In the event of a partial taking, Tenant, at its sole cost and expense, but subject to reimbursement as provided in Article 11 below, and whether or not Tenant's Proceeds shall be sufficient for the purpose, shall proceed with due diligence to restore, repair, replace or rebuild the remaining part of the Improvements to substantially its former condition or with such changes or alterations as Tenant may elect to make in conformity with Article 10 below so as to constitute a complete, rentable project.

Section 9.05. In the event of a partial taking, this Lease shall terminate as to the portion of the Premises so taken and the basic rent payable for the balance of the term of this Lease shall be reduced by a sum equivalent to the portion of the Premises taken, such reduction to be effective as of the date of Landlord's receipt of such Condemnation Proceeds. Until the amount of the reduction of the basic rent shall have been determined, Tenant shall continue to pay to Landlord the basic rent provided for in Article 2 above.

Section 9.06. If, at any time during the Lease term, the whole or any part of the Premises, or of Tenant's leasehold estate under this Lease, or of the Improvements shall be taken in condemnation proceedings or by any right of eminent domain for temporary use or occupancy (a “temporary taking”) the foregoing provisions of this Article shall not apply and Tenant shall continue to pay, in the manner at the times specified in this Lease, the full amounts of the basic rent and all additional rent and other charges payable by Tenant under this Lease, and, except only to the extent that Tenant may be prevented from so doing pursuant to the terms of the order of the condemning authority, Tenant shall perform and observe all of the other terms, covenants, conditions and obligations of this Lease upon the part of Tenant to be performed and observed, as though such taking had not occurred. In the event of any such temporary taking, Tenant shall be entitled to receive the entire amount of the Condemnation Proceeds made for such taking, whether paid by way of damages, rent or otherwise unless such period of temporary use or occupancy shall extend beyond the termination of this Lease, in which case the Condemnation Proceeds shall be apportioned between Landlord and Tenant as of the date of termination of this Lease. Tenant covenants that, upon the expiration of any such period of temporary use or occupancy during the Lease term, it will, at its sole cost and expense, restore the Improvements, as nearly as may be reasonably possible, to the condition in which the same was immediately prior to such taking, wear and tear during such temporary use or occupancy excepted. To the extent that Landlord receives any portion of the Condemnation Proceeds as compensation for the cost of restoration or repair of the Improvements, Landlord shall, upon restoration of the Improvements by Tenant as provided above, pay such sum to Tenant. Any portion of the Condemnation Proceeds received by Tenant as compensation for the cost of restoration of the Improvements shall, if such period of temporary use or occupancy shall extend beyond the term of this Lease, be paid to Landlord on the date of termination of this Lease.

Section 9.07. If the order or decree in any condemnation or similar proceeding shall fail separately to state the amount to be awarded to Landlord and the amount to be awarded to Tenant under the provisions of Section 9.02 or 9.03, above, or the amount of the compensation for the restoration of the Improvements under Section 9.05, above, and if Landlord and Tenant cannot agree thereon within sixty (60) days after the final award or awards shall have been fixed and determined, any such dispute shall be determined by arbitration in the manner provided in Article 21 below.

Section 9.08. If Tenant shall assign to any Leasehold Mortgagee any Condemnation Proceeds to which it shall be entitled under the provisions of Section 9.02(b), above, Landlord shall recognize such assignment and shall consent to the payment of the Condemnation Proceeds to such assignee as its interest may appear.

Section 9.09. Tenant and the holder of any Leasehold Mortgage shall have the right to participate in any condemnation proceeding for the purpose of protecting their rights under this Lease, and in this connection, specifically and without limitation to introduce evidence independently of Landlord to establish the value of or damage to the Improvements.

ARTICLE 10
CONSTRUCTION OF INITIAL IMPROVEMENTS; CHANGES AND ALTERATIONS BY TENANT

Section 10.01. Tenant shall have the right, at any time and from time to time during the Lease term, to construct the Initial Improvements, to make such changes and alterations, structural or otherwise, to the Initial Improvements and/or other Improvements as Tenant shall deem necessary or desirable, including, without limiting the foregoing, the right to increase or reduce the height of any of the Improvements, or to demolish any of the Improvements or any part thereof. Such changes, alterations, demolition, new construction or construction of the Initial Improvements (collectively referred to as “Changes or Alterations” or “Changes and Alterations”) shall be made in all cases subject to the following conditions which Tenant covenants to observe and perform:

(a) No Change or Alteration shall be undertaken until Tenant shall have procured and paid for, so far as the same may be required, from time to time, all municipal and other governmental permits and authorizations of the various municipal departments and governmental subdivisions having jurisdiction and Landlord agrees, at no cost to Landlord, to join in the application for such permits or authorizations whenever such action is necessary;

(b) Any structural Change or Alteration shall be conducted under the supervision of an architect or engineer licensed as such in the State of California (who may be an employee of Tenant) selected by Tenant and plans therefore shall be submitted to Landlord, in order to give Landlord an opportunity to determine that such Changes or Alterations will comply with the provisions of this Article;

(c) All Changes and Alterations shall be of such a character that, when completed, the value and utility of the Improvements shall be not less than the value and utility of the Improvements immediately before any such Change or Alteration; except that in the case of a Change or Alteration involving demolition or the construction of any of the Improvements having a value in excess of ____________ Dollars ($_________), Tenant shall, prior to the commencement of demolition or construction submit to Landlord preliminary drawings and outline specifications to be approved by Landlord which approval shall not be unreasonably withheld and which shall have reference only to establishing that such new Improvements will be of a value not substantially less than the value of the Improvements to be demolished and that such new Improvements, when completed, will constitute all or a part of a completed rentable project capable of producing a fair and reasonable net annual income, after payment of all operating expenses. For purposes of this Section 10.01(c), “operating expenses” shall include all expenses of operation of the Improvements, the basic rent, additional rent and other charges reserved under this Lease and the cost of performance of all covenants and agreements of Tenant provided to be performed by Tenant under this Lease, and shall be deemed to exclude depreciation, income taxes and franchise taxes of Tenant. In the event of a dispute with respect to the foregoing, the same shall be determined by arbitration in the manner provided in Article 21 below, and in the event Landlord fails to approve or disapprove such demolition or construction as provided in this Section 10.01(c) within thirty (30) days after receipt of such drawings and specifications, the same shall be deemed approved for purposes of this Section 10.01(c);

(d) All work done in connection with any Change or Alteration shall be done in a good and workmanlike manner and in compliance with all applicable laws, ordinances, orders and requirements of all federal, state and municipal governments and their appropriate departments, commissions, boards and officers. The cost of any such Change or Alteration shall be paid in cash or its equivalent, so that the Premises and the Improvements shall at all times be free of liens for labor and materials supplied or claimed to have been supplied. The work of any Change or Alteration shall be prosecuted with reasonable dispatch, Unavoidable Delays excepted. Worker's compensation insurance covering all persons employed in connection with the work and with respect to whom death or bodily injury claims could be asserted against Landlord, Tenant or the Premises or the Improvements, and general liability and property damage insurance (which may be effected by indorsement, if obtainable, on the insurance required to be carried pursuant to Section 4.01 above) for the mutual benefit of Tenant and Landlord with limits of not less than those required to be carried pursuant to Section 4.01, above, shall be maintained by Tenant at Tenant's sole cost and expense at all times when any work is in process in connection with any Change or Alteration.

(e) If the estimated cost of any Changes or Alterations shall be in excess of ____________ Dollars ($_________), Tenant shall, prior to the commencement of any such Change or Alteration, at Tenant's sole cost and expense, furnish to Landlord a surety company performance and completion bond in form and substance acceptable to Landlord, issued by a surety company acceptable to Landlord, naming Landlord and any first lien Institutional Leasehold Mortgagee as the obligees thereunder, guaranteeing:

(i) the completion of construction of such Changes or Alterations in accordance with the approved plans and specifications within a reasonable time, subject to Unavoidable Delays, free and clear of all mechanic's liens or liens of a similar nature; or,

(ii) at the election of Landlord and the holders of any first lien Leasehold Mortgage, (A) to demolish and remove any Improvements not substantially completed, where the construction activities of which, except for Unavoidable Delays, has terminated for a continuous period of ninety (90) days, and (B) to place the Improvements and the Premises in substantially the same condition as they existed prior to the commencement of such demolition or construction, provided that Landlord, at its option, may elect within ninety (90) days from the expiration of such termination period to accept the Improvements in the condition that they then exist, thereby waiving any rights of demolition and restoration as provided in this Section 10.01(e).

Subsequent to completion of the Initial Improvements, no Changes or Alterations involving an expenditure in excess of ____________ Dollars ($_________) shall commence until Tenant shall have given Landlord twenty (20) days prior written notice of such work in order that Landlord may post and/or file notices of non-responsibility or notices of a similar nature.

Section 10.02. Tenant covenants that in performing any work or repairs to, or restoration, replacement or rebuilding of, any of the Improvements required to be performed by Tenant pursuant to the provisions of Article 6, Article 7, Article 8, or Article 9, it will observe and perform, insofar as the nature of such repairs, restoration, replacement or rebuilding make such observation and performance appropriate, the conditions relating to Changes and Alterations set forth in Section 10.01, above.

Section 10.03. [Describe any unique requirements regarding reconstruction.]

Section 10.04. Tenant covenants and agrees to construct the Initial Improvements, as approved by Landlord in accordance with the provisions of Section 10.01(c), above, and in accordance with all of the provisions of this Lease, with the demolition of existing Improvements and construction of the Initial Improvements to be commenced no later than _____ months following the date of this Lease, and to complete the same (as evidenced by a duly executed and recorded notice of completion for all such Improvements) subject to Unavoidable Delays, not later than _____ months following the date of this Lease, or such later date as diligent prosecution and pursuance of such construction, subject to Unavoidable Delays, would permit such completion. In the event demolition of the existing Improvements and construction of the Initial Improvements stops or is terminated for a continuous period of more than ninety (90) days after the commencement of such work, except for Unavoidable Delays, the same shall, at the option of Landlord, constitute an Event of Default as provided in Article 15, below.

DISBURSEMENT OF DEPOSITED MONEYS

Section 11.01. All sums of the character referred to in Section 4.04 or 9.03, above, (collectively referred to as “Deposited Sums”) paid to or deposited with a bank or trust company or paid to the Institutional Leasehold Mortgagee holding the first Leasehold Mortgage (the “Depositary”), shall be disbursed in the manner provided in this Article 11.

Section 11.02. From time to time as any Change or Alteration progresses, or as the restoration, repair, replacement or rebuilding of any Improvement or any portion thereof damaged or destroyed by fire or any other cause, or not taken in a proceeding of the character described in Section 9.03 progresses (collectively referred to as the "Work"), disbursement of any Deposited Sums shall be made upon receipt by the Depositary of the following:

(a) A certificate signed by an architect or engineer licensed as such in the State of California (who may be an employee of Tenant) selected by Tenant who shall be reasonably satisfactory to Landlord and also signed by Tenant, dated not more than thirty (30) days prior to the application for such disbursement, setting forth in substance the following:

(i) That the sum then requested to be disbursed either has been paid by Tenant and/or is justly due to contractors, subcontractors, materialmen, engineers, architects or other persons (whose names and addresses shall be stated) who have rendered and furnished certain labor and materials for the Work and giving a brief description of such services and materials and the principal subdivisions or categories of such Work, and the several amounts so paid or due to each of such persons in respect of such Work, and stating the progress of the Work up to the date of such certificate;

(ii) That the sum then requested to be disbursed, plus all sums previously disbursed, does not exceed the cost of the Work insofar as actually accomplished up to the date of such certificate, and that the balance of the Deposited Sums will be sufficient to pay in full for the completion of the Work, or Landlord shall have received other assurances reasonably satisfactory to it of payment in full for completion of such Work;

(iii) That except for the amounts, if any, stated in such certificate pursuant to Subsection 11.02(a)(i), above, to be due for services or materials, there is no outstanding indebtedness known to the person signing the certificate, after due inquiry, which is then due and payable for work, labor, services and materials in connection with the Work, which, if unpaid, might become the basis of a vendor's, mechanic's, laborer's or materialmen's statutory or similar lien upon Tenant's leasehold estate or Tenant's interest in the Improvements or Landlord's interest in the Premises or future interest in the Improvements or any part thereof.

(b) A certificate signed by an officer or other duly authorized representative of Tenant dated not more than thirty (30) days prior to the application for such disbursement, setting forth in substance that, to the best knowledge of the signer, after due inquiry:

(i) All materials and all property described in the certificate furnished pursuant to Subsection 11.02(a)(i), above, are free and clear of all mortgages, liens, charges or encumbrances, except (A) encumbrances, if any, securing indebtedness due to persons (whose names and addresses and the several amounts due then shall be stated) specified in such certificate, which encumbrances will be discharged upon payment of such indebtedness, (B) the leasehold estate created by this Lease, (C) any Mortgage on Tenant's interest under this Lease or the Improvements, (D) encumbrances created by Landlord, (E) impositions not due and delinquent, and (F) encumbrances to which this Lease is subject; and

(ii) That no Event of Default has occurred which has not been remedied.

Upon compliance with the foregoing provisions of this Section 11.02, the Depositary shall, out of the Deposited Sums, disburse to the persons named in the certificate pursuant to the foregoing Subsection 11.02(a)(i) the respective amounts stated in the certificate to be due to them and/or shall disburse to Tenant the amount stated in the certificate to have been paid by Tenant.

Section 11.03. At any time after the completion in full of the Work, the whole balance of the Deposited Sums not theretofore disbursed pursuant to the provisions of Section 11.02, above, shall be disbursed to Tenant upon receipt by the Depositary of:

(a) a certificate signed by an officer of Tenant, dated not more than thirty (30) days prior to the application for such disbursement, setting forth in substance the following: (i) that the Work has been completed in full; (ii) that all amounts which Tenant is or may be entitled to have disbursed under the foregoing provisions of this Section 11.02 on account of services rendered or materials

furnished in connection with the Work have been disbursed under such provisions; (iii) that all amounts for whose payment Tenant is or may become liable in respect of the Work have been paid in full; and (iv) that no Event of Default has occurred which has not been remedied, and

(b) an official search or a certificate of a title company reasonably satisfactory to Landlord showing that there has not been filed with respect to Tenant's leasehold estate or Tenant's interest in the Improvements or Landlord's interest in the Premises or any part thereof, any vendor's, mechanic's, laborer's, or materialmen's statutory or similar lien which has not been discharged of record, or if the same has not been discharged, Tenant has given Landlord security therefor in an amount equal to one and one-half (1-1/2) times the amount of the lien or claim of lien.

Section 11.04. If an Event of Default shall have occurred and be continuing prior to the disbursement of the Deposited Sums or any part thereof, Landlord may notify the Depositary and thereupon the Depositary shall have no further right or obligation to disburse any of the Deposited Sums to Tenant as provided in this Article 11, but shall disburse the same to or for the account of the Leasehold Mortgagee who shall have given the notice as provided in Section 14.04(d) below, or, in the event of the termination of this Lease, who shall have obtained a new lease pursuant to Section 14.04(f) below, or, if any such Leasehold Mortgagee shall not have elected within the period specified in Section 14.04 to obtain a new lease, to Landlord upon Landlord's direction to do so.

Section 11.05. Landlord and Tenant agree that the Depositary shall have the right to deduct from the Deposited Sums prior to any disbursement pursuant to Sections 11.02 or 11.03, above, its reasonable charges for acting as Depositary under this Lease. An executed copy of this Lease shall be deposited by Tenant with the Depositary and shall constitute authority to the Depositary to act as such in accordance with the provisions of this Article 11 without further direction from Landlord or Tenant.

MECHANIC'S LIENS

Tenant shall not suffer or permit any mechanic's, vendor's, laborer's, or materialman's statutory or similar liens (collectively “mechanic's liens”) to be filed against the Premises or the Improvements, nor against Tenant's leasehold interest in the Premises, by reason of work, labor, services or materials supplied or claimed to have been supplied to Tenant or anyone holding any interest in the Premises and/or the Improvements or any part thereof through or under Tenant. If any such mechanic's lien shall be filed, Tenant shall, within thirty (30) days after notice of the filing thereof, cause the same to be discharged of record by payment, deposit, bond, order of a court of competent jurisdiction or otherwise; provided, however, that Tenant shall have the right to contest, with due diligence, the validity or amount of any such lien or claimed lien, if Tenant shall give to Landlord security in an amount equal to one and one-half (1-1/2) times the amount of such lien or claimed lien. Subject to the foregoing provisions, if Tenant shall fail to cause such lien to be discharged within such 30-day period, then, in addition to any other right or remedy of Landlord, Landlord may, but shall not be obligated to, discharge the same either by paying the amount claimed to be due or by procuring the discharge of such lien by deposit or by bonding proceedings. Nothing in this Lease contained shall be deemed or construed in any way as constituting the consent or request of Landlord, express or implied by inference or otherwise, to any contractor, subcontractor, laborer or materialman for the performance of any labor or the furnishing of any materials for any specific improvements, alteration to or repair of the Premises or the Improvements or any part thereof, nor as giving Tenant a right, power or authority to contract for or permit the rendering of any services or the furnishing of any materials that would give rise to the filing of any mechanic's liens against the Premises.

ARTICLE 13
LAWFUL USE; SURRENDER OF IMPROVEMENTS AND THE PREMISES; INSPECTION OF IMPROVEMENTS AND THE PREMISES

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Section 13.01. Tenant shall not use or allow the Improvements or any part thereof, or the Premises, to be used or occupied for any unlawful purpose or for any dangerous or noxious trade or business. This restriction shall not apply during any period of governmental occupancy.

Section 13.02. Upon termination of this Lease, Tenant shall surrender to Landlord the Premises and the Improvements, in good order and repair, reasonable wear and tear excepted and also except as Tenant may have been prevented from maintaining the Improvements in good order and repair by occupation of the Improvements by any sovereign who shall have taken the temporary use of the Improvements and shall then be in possession of the Improvements. Upon such termination, Tenant shall also deliver to Landlord all leases, lease files, plans, records, registers and all other papers and documents which may be necessary or appropriate for the proper operation and management of the Premises and the Improvements.

Section 13.03. Tenant agrees to permit Landlord and the authorized representatives of Landlord and of the holder of any Fee Mortgage to enter the Premises or the Improvements at all reasonable times during usual business hours for the purpose of inspecting the same or exhibiting the same to prospective purchasers of the Premises.

ASSIGNMENT, SUBLETTING AND MORTGAGING

Section 14.01. Prior to the lien-free completion of construction of the Initial Improvements, this Lease and the interest of Tenant under this Lease may not be assigned without the prior written consent of Landlord in each instance. Subsequent to completion of such construction, and without the prior consent of Landlord, this Lease and the interest of Tenant under this Lease may be assigned on one or more occasions to any person, firm or corporation, provided that (a) no such assignment shall be effective for any purpose unless and until (i) the assignor's interest in the Improvements shall be transferred to the assignee of this Lease and (ii) there shall be delivered to Landlord (A) a duplicate original of the instrument or instruments of transfer of this Lease and of the assignor's interest in the Improvements in recordable form, containing the name and address of the transferee and (B) an instrument of assumption by the transferee of all of Tenant's obligations under this Lease; and (b) no such assignment and assumption shall operate or be deemed to operate as a release of the within-named Tenant and/or the duties, obligations and liabilities of Tenant (and/or any guarantor or guarantors of the duties, obligations and liabilities of the within-named Tenant) under this Lease.

Section 14.02. Without the prior consent of Landlord, Tenant shall have the right at any time during the term of this Lease to sublet the Premises or the Improvements or any portion thereof, provided that the term of any such sublease (including any options to extend the same as therein provided) shall not have a term extending beyond the then remaining term of this Lease.

Section 14.03. Landlord hereby agrees for the benefit of any tenant under any sublease made by Tenant covering a portion of the Improvements and, or the Premises made by Tenant, or by a tenant under a total sublease for occupancy by the tenant thereunder (such tenants being hereinafter in this Section called a "space tenant"), that, if (a) an Institutional Leasehold Mortgagee shall have agreed in writing not to join the space tenant as a party defendant in any foreclosure action or proceeding which may be instituted or taken by the Institutional Leasehold Mortgagee, nor to evict the space tenant from the portion of the Improvements demised to it, nor to affect any of the space tenant's rights under its sublease by reason of any default under such Institutional Leasehold Mortgage, or (b) Tenant shall deliver to Landlord a certificate of an independent real estate appraiser who is a member of the American Institute of Appraisers, or such other similar organization reasonably satisfactory to Landlord, stating in substance that the rent payable by the space tenant under its sublease, after taking into account any credits, offsets or deductions to which the space tenant may be entitled thereunder, constitutes the then fair rental value of the space demised thereunder at the time of execution of such sublease, then upon the termination of this Lease pursuant to any of the provisions of Article 15 below, Landlord will recognize the space tenant under such sublease as the direct tenant of Landlord; provided, however, that at the time of the termination of this Lease (w) not more than _____ (___) months' rent shall be prepaid under such sublease, (x) no default exists under the space tenant's sublease which at such time would then permit the landlord thereunder to terminate the same or to exercise any dispossess remedy provided for therein or under law, and (y) the space tenant shall deliver to Landlord an instrument confirming the agreement of such space tenant to attorn to Landlord and to recognize Landlord as the space tenant's landlord under its sublease.

Section 14.04. Without the prior consent of Landlord, Tenant shall have the right to mortgage this Lease and the leasehold estate hereby created and Tenant's interest in the Improvements; provided, however, that no such mortgage shall be valid for any purpose unless it shall constitute both a lien on the leasehold estate created by this Lease and on Tenant's interest in the Improvements. The execution and delivery of any Leasehold Mortgage shall not be deemed to constitute an assignment or transfer of this Lease nor shall the holder of any Leasehold Mortgage, as such, be deemed an assignee or transferee of this Lease so as to require such holder to assume the performance of any of the terms, covenants or conditions on the part of Tenant to be performed under this Lease. Landlord and Tenant agree that so long as any Leasehold Mortgage is a lien on the Improvements and the leasehold estate created by this Lease as follows:

(a) If Tenant or any Leasehold Mortgagee shall have delivered to Landlord prior written notice of the address of any Leasehold Mortgagee, Landlord will mail to such Leasehold Mortgagee a copy of any notice or other communication from Landlord to Tenant under this Lease at the time of giving such notice or communication to Tenant, and will give to such Leasehold Mortgagee notice of any rejection of the Lease by the trustee in bankruptcy of the Tenant or by Tenant as debtor in possession, and no termination of this lease or termination of Tenant's right of possession of the Premises or reletting of the Premises by Landlord predicated on the giving of any notice shall be effective unless Landlord gives to such Leasehold Mortgagee written notice or a copy of its notice to Tenant of such default or termination, as the case may be.

(b) In the event of any default by Tenant under the provisions of this Lease, any Leasehold Mortgagee will have the same periods as are given Tenant for remedying such default or causing it to be remedied, plus, in each case, an additional period of thirty (30) days after the expiration of the initial period or after Landlord has served a notice or a copy of a notice of such default upon the Leasehold Mortgagee, whichever is later.

(c) In the event that Tenant shall default under any of the provisions of this Lease, any Leasehold Mortgagee, without prejudice to its rights against Tenant, shall have the right to cure such default within the applicable grace periods provided for in the preceding Subsection 14.04(b), above, whether the same consists of the failure to pay rent or the failure to perform any other matter or thing which Tenant is hereby required to do or perform, and Landlord shall accept such performance on the part of such Leasehold Mortgagee as though the same had been done or performed by Tenant. For such purpose, Landlord and Tenant hereby authorize such Leasehold Mortgagee to enter upon the Premises and to exercise any of its rights and powers under this Lease and subject to the provisions of this Lease.

(d) In the event of any default by Tenant, and if prior to the expiration of the applicable grace period specified in Subsection 14.04(b), above, a Leasehold Mortgagee shall give Landlord written notice that it intends to undertake the curing of such default, or to cause the same to be cured, or to exercise its rights to acquire the leasehold interest of Tenant by foreclosure or otherwise, and shall immediately commence and then proceed with all due diligence to do so, whether by performance on behalf of Tenant of its obligations under this Lease, or by entry on the Premises and/or the Improvements by foreclosure or otherwise, then Landlord will not terminate or take any action to effect a termination of the Lease or re-renter, take possession of or relet the Premises or the Improvements or similarly enforce performance of this Lease in a mode provided by law so long as such Leasehold Mortgagee is with all due diligence and in good faith engaged in the curing of such default, or effecting such foreclosure; provided, however, that the Leasehold Mortgagee shall not be required to continue such possession or continue such foreclosure proceedings if such default shall be cured.

(e) In the event that Tenant's interest under this Lease shall be terminated by a sale, assignment or transfer pursuant to the exercise of any remedy of a Leasehold Mortgagee, or pursuant to judicial proceedings, and if (i) no rent or other charges shall then be due and payable by Tenant under this Lease, or (ii) the Leasehold Mortgagee shall have arranged to the reasonable satisfaction of Landlord for the payment of all rent and other charges (less a credit for any income received by Landlord during such period) due and payable by Tenant under this Lease as of the date of such termination, together with the rent and other charges which but for such termination would have become so due and payable from the date of such termination through the sixtieth (60th) day thereafter, and upon payment of all expenses, including attorneys' fees, incident thereto, Landlord will execute and deliver to such Leasehold Mortgagee or its nominee a new lease of the Premises. Such new lease shall be for a term equal to the remainder of the term of this Lease before giving effect to such termination and shall contain the same covenants, agreements, terms, provisions and limitations as this Lease, and shall be subject only to the encumbrances and other matters recited in this Lease and acts done or suffered by Tenant. Upon the execution and delivery of such new lease, the new tenant, in its own name or in the name of Landlord, may take all appropriate steps as shall be necessary to remove Tenant from the Premises and the Improvements, but Landlord shall not be subject to any liability for the payments of fees, including reasonable attorneys' fees, costs or expenses in connection with such removal; and such new tenant shall pay all such fees, including attorneys' fees costs and expenses or, on demand make reimbursements therefor to Landlord.

(f) In the event a default under a Leasehold Mortgage shall have occurred, such Leasehold Mortgagee may exercise with respect to the premises and the Improvements any right, power or remedy under the Leasehold Mortgage which is not in conflict with the provisions of this Lease.

(g) This Lease may be assigned, without the consent of Landlord, to or by any Leasehold Mortgagee or its nominee, or pursuant to foreclosure or similar proceedings, or the sale, assignment or other transfer of this Lease in lieu thereof, or the exercise of any other right, power or remedy of the Leasehold Mortgagee, and any Leasehold Mortgagee shall be liable to perform the obligations imposed on Tenant in this Lease only for and during the period it is in possession or ownership of the leasehold estate created by this Lease.

(h) There shall be no merger of this Lease or any interest in this Lease nor of the leasehold estate created by this Lease with the fee estate in the Premises, by reason of the fact that this Lease or such interest in this Lease or such leasehold estate may be directly or indirectly held by or for the account of any person who shall hold the fee estate in the Premises, or any interest in such fee estate, nor shall there be such a merger by reason of the fact that all or any part of the leasehold estate created by this Lease may be conveyed or mortgaged in a Leasehold Mortgage to a Leasehold Mortgagee who shall hold the fee estate in the Premises or any interest of the Landlord under this Lease.

(i) No surrender (except a surrender upon the expiration of the term of this Lease or upon termination by Landlord pursuant and subject to the provisions of this Lease) by Tenant to Landlord of this Lease, or of the Premises, or any part thereof, or of any interest therein, and no termination of this Lease by Tenant shall be valid or effective, and neither this Lease nor any of the terms of this Lease may be amended, modified, changed or cancelled and no consents of Tenant under this Lease shall be valid or effective without the prior written consent of any Leasehold Mortgagee who shall have previously given Landlord written notice of the existence of its Leasehold Mortgage.

(j) Landlord consents to a provision in Leasehold Mortgages or otherwise for an assignment of rents from subleases of the Property to the holder of any such Leasehold Mortgage, effective upon any default under such Leasehold Mortgage.

(k) If at any time there shall be more than one Leasehold Mortgage constituting a lien on this Lease and the leasehold estate created by this Lease and Tenant's interest in the Improvements, and the holder of the Leasehold Mortgage prior in lien to any other Leasehold Mortgage shall fail or refuse to exercise the rights set forth in this Article 14, each holder of a Leasehold Mortgage in the order of the priority of their respective liens shall have the right to exercise such rights and provided further, however, that with respect to the right of the holder of a Leasehold Mortgage under Section 14.04(e), above, to request a new lease, such right may, notwithstanding the limitation of time set forth in Section 14.04(e), be exercised by the holder of any junior Leasehold Mortgage, in the event the holder of prior Leasehold Mortgage shall not have exercised such right, more than sixty (60) days but not more than seventy-five (75) days after the giving of notice by Landlord of termination of this Lease as provided in said Section.

(l) [The Tenant will often request that a provision be added which states that the Landlord will enter into a Lease amendments "reasonably requested" by a prospective Leasehold Mortgagee, "as long as the request to changes do not change the rent to be received by the Landlord and do not materially or adversely affect the Landlord's rights or interests in the Premises."]

DEFAULT; BANKRUPTCY

Section 15.01. Tenant agrees that in the event all or substantially all of Tenant's assets are placed in the hands of a receiver or trustee, and such receivership or trusteeship continues for a period of thirty (30) days, or should Tenant make an assignment for the benefit of creditors or be finally adjudicated a bankrupt, or should Tenant institute any proceeding under the Federal Bankruptcy Code as the same now exists or under any amendment thereof which may hereafter be enacted, or under any other act relating to the subject of bankruptcy, or to be discharged of its debts, or to effect a plan of liquidation, composition or reorganization, or should any involuntary proceeding be filed against Tenant under any such bankruptcy laws and such proceeding is not dismissed within ninety (90) days thereafter, then this Lease or any interest of Tenant in and to the Property shall not become an asset in any of such proceedings and, in any such events and in addition to any and all rights or remedies of Landlord under this Lease or as otherwise provided by law, it shall be lawful for Landlord to declare the Lease term ended and to reenter the Property and take possession thereof and remove all persons therefrom, and Tenant shall have no further claim thereon or hereunder. The provisions of this Section 15.01 shall also apply to any guarantor of this Lease.

Section 15.02. (i) Should Tenant at any time be in default with respect to any rental payments or other charges payable by Tenant under this Lease, and should such default continue for a period of ten (10) days after written notice from Landlord to Tenant; or (ii) should Tenant default in the timely payment of rent or other charges payable by Tenant under this Lease so as to necessitate the issuance by Landlord of written notice of default, on two or more occasions within any consecutive six (6) month period (whether or not any such default is subsequently cured by Tenant within ten (10) days after any such notice; or (iii) should Tenant be in default in the prompt and full performance of any other of its promises, covenants or agreements contained in this Lease and should such default or breach of performance continue for more than a reasonable time (not to exceed thirty (30) days except as otherwise expressly provided in Section 15.08, below) after written notice thereof from Landlord to Tenant specifying the particulars of such default or breach of performance; or (iv) should Tenant abandon the premises; then Landlord may treat the occurrence of any one or more of the foregoing events as a breach of this Lease (an "Event of Default"), and in addition to any or all other rights or remedies of Landlord under this Lease or as otherwise permitted by law, it shall be, at the option of Landlord, without further notice or demand of any kind to Tenant or any other person, except as otherwise expressly provided in Article 14, above:

(a) The right of Landlord to declare the Lease term ended and to reenter the Property and take possession thereof and remove all persons therefrom, and Tenant shall have no further claim thereon or thereunder; or

(b) The right of Landlord without declaring this Lease ended to reenter the Property and occupy the whole or any part thereof for and on account of Tenant and to collect the rent and any other charges that may thereafter become payable.

(c) The right of Landlord, even though it may have reentered the Property, to thereafter elect to terminate this Lease and all of the rights of Tenant in or to the Property.

Section 15.03. Should Landlord have reentered the Property under the provisions of Subsection 15.02(b), above, Landlord shall not be deemed to have terminated this Lease, or the liability of Tenant to pay rent thereafter to accrue, or its liability for damages under any of the provisions of this Lease, by any such reenter or by any action in unlawful detainer, or otherwise, to obtain possession of the Property, unless Landlord shall have notified Tenant in writing that it has so elected to terminate this Lease. Tenant further covenants that the service by Landlord of any notice pursuant to the unlawful detainer statutes of the State of California and the surrender of possession pursuant to such notice shall not (unless Landlord elects to the contrary at the time of or at any time subsequent to the serving of such notices and such election is evidenced by a written notice to Tenant) be deemed to be a termination of this Lease. In the event of any entry or taking possession of the Property as provided above, Landlord shall have the right, but not the obligation, to remove from the Property all or any part of the personal property located therein and may place the same in storage at a public warehouse at the expense and risk of the owner or owners thereof.

Section 15.04. Should Landlord elect to terminate this Lease under the provisions of Subsections 15.02(a) or (c), above, Landlord may recover from Tenant as damages:

(a) the worth at the time of award of any unpaid rent which had been earned at the time of such termination; plus

(b) the worth at the time of award of the amount by which the unpaid rent which would have been earned after termination until the time of award exceeds the amount of such rental loss Tenant proves could have been reasonably avoided; plus

(c) the worth at the time of award of the amount by which the unpaid rent for the balance of the term after the time of award exceeds the amount of such rental loss that Tenant proves could be reasonably avoided; plus

(d) any other amount necessary to compensate Landlord for all the detriment proximately caused by Tenant's failure to perform its obligations under this Lease or which in the ordinary course of things would be likely to result therefrom, including, but not limited to, any costs or expenses incurred by Landlord in maintaining or preserving the Property after such default, preparing the Improvements for reletting to a new tenant, any repairs or alterations to the Improvements for such reletting, leasing commissions, or any other costs necessary or appropriate to relet the Property;

(e) at Landlord's election, such other amounts in addition to or in lieu of the foregoing as may be permitted from time to time by the laws of the State of California.

Section 15.05. As used in Subsections 15.04(a) and (b) above, the “worth at the time of award” is computed by allowing interest at the rate of ten percent (10%) per annum. As used in Subsection 15.04(c), above, the “worth at the time of award” is computed by discounting such amount at the discount rate of the San Francisco Federal Reserve Bank, at the time of award, plus one percent (1%).

Section 15.06. For all purposes of this Lease, “rent” shall be deemed to be the basic annual rent and all other sums required to be paid by Tenant pursuant to the terms of this Lease.

Section 15.07. In the event of default, all of Tenant's fixtures, furniture, equipment, improvements, additions, alterations, and other personal property shall remain on the Premises and in that event, and continuing during the length of such default, Landlord shall have the right to take the exclusive possession of same and to use same, rent or charge free, until all defaults are cured or, at its option, at any time during the Lease term, to require Tenant to forthwith remove same.

Section 15.08. Notwithstanding any other provisions of this Article 15, Landlord agrees that if the default complained of, other than for the payment of monies, is of such a nature that the same cannot be rectified or cured within the thirty (30) day period requiring such rectification or curing as specified in the written notice relating thereto, then such default shall be deemed to be rectified or cured if Tenant within such period of thirty (30) days shall have commenced the rectification and curing thereof and shall continue thereafter with all due diligence to cause such rectification and curing and does so diligently complete the same.

Section 15.09. Upon the expiration of the term of this Lease pursuant to any of the provisions of this Article, it shall be lawful for Landlord, without formal demand or notice of any kind, to re-enter the Premises and the Improvements by summary dispossess proceedings or any other action or proceeding authorized by law, or by force or otherwise and to remove Tenant therefrom without being liable for any damages therefor.

Section 15.10. Landlord shall not be deemed to be in default in the performance of any obligation required to be performed by it under this Lease until it has failed to perform such obligation within thirty (30) days after written notice by Tenant to Landlord specifying the nature of Landlord's default; provided, however, that if the nature of Landlord's obligation is such that more than thirty (30) days are required for its performance, then Landlord shall not be deemed to be in default if it shall commence such performance within such thirty (30) day period and thereafter diligently prosecute the same to completion.

INDEMNIFICATION OF LANDLORD

Tenant agrees to indemnify and save harmless Landlord against and from any and all claims by or on behalf of any person arising from the conduct or management of or from any work or thing whatsoever done in and on the Premises and/or Improvements and will further indemnify and save Landlord harmless against and from any and all claims arising during the term of this Lease from any condition of the Improvements or any street, curb, or sidewalk adjoining the Premises and/or Improvements, or passageways or space therein or appurtenant thereto, or arising from any breach or default on the part of Tenant in the performance of any covenant or agreement on the part of Tenant to be performed pursuant to this Lease, or arising from any act or negligence of Tenant or any subtenant or occupant of the Improvements or any part thereof, or of its or their agents, contractors, servants, employees or licensees, or arising from any accident, injury or damage whatsoever caused to any person or property occurring during the term of this Lease in or about the Premises and/or Improvements, or upon or under the sidewalks and the land adjacent thereto, and from and against all judgments, costs, expenses and liabilities incurred in or about any such claim or action or proceeding brought therein; and in case any action or proceeding is brought against Landlord by reason of any such claims, Tenant upon notice from Landlord covenants to resist or defend such action or proceeding by counsel reasonably satisfactory to Landlord.

LIMITATION OF LANDLORD'S LIABILITY

The term “Landlord” as used in this Lease so far as covenants or obligations on the part of Landlord are concerned shall be limited to mean and include only the owner or owners at the time in question of the fee of the Premises and in the event of any transfer or transfers of the title to such fee Landlord herein named (and in case of any subsequent transfers or conveyances the then grantor) shall be automatically freed and relieved from and after the date of such transfer or conveyance from all obligations on the part of Landlord contained in this Lease to be performed thereafter, provided that any prepaid rent or trust funds in the hands of such Landlord or the then grantor at the time of such transfer, shall be transferred to the grantee or transferee, who shall expressly assume, subject to the limitations of this Article, all of the terms, covenants and conditions in this Lease contained on the part of Landlord thereafter to be performed, it being intended by this Article that the covenants and obligations contained in this Lease on the part of Landlord shall, subject to the provisions of this Article 17, be binding on Landlord, its successors and assigns, only during and in respect of their respective successive periods of ownership.

INVALIDITY OF PARTICULAR PROVISIONS

If any term or provision of this Lease or the application thereof to any person or circumstance, shall to any extent be invalid or unenforceable, the remainder of this Lease, or the application of such term or provision to persons or circumstances other than those as to which it is invalid or unenforceable, shall not be affected thereby, and each term and provision of this Lease shall be valid and be enforced to the fullest extent permitted by law.

CERTIFICATES OF LANDLORD AND TENANT

Section 19.01. Tenant agrees at any time and from time to time upon not less than twenty (20) days prior notice by Landlord to execute, acknowledge and deliver to Landlord a statement in writing certifying that this Lease is unmodified and in full force and effect (or if there have been modifications that the Lease is in full force and effect as modified and stating the modifications), and the dates to which the basic rent has been paid, and stating whether or not to the best knowledge of the signer of such statement Tenant is then in default or may be in default with notice or the passage of time, or both, in keeping, observing or performing any term, covenant, agreement, provision, condition or limitation contained in this Lease, and, if in default, specifying each such default, it being intended that any such statement delivered pursuant to this Section may be relied upon by Landlord or any prospective purchaser of the fee or any Fee Mortgage thereof or any assignee of any Fee Mortgage but reliance on such statement may not extend to any default as to which the signer shall have had no actual knowledge.

Section 19.02. Landlord agrees at any time and from time to time upon not less than twenty (20) days prior notice by Tenant or any Leasehold Mortgagee to execute, acknowledge and deliver to Tenant a statement in writing certifying that this lease is unmodified and in full force and effect (or if there shall have been modifications that the Lease is in full force and effect as modified and stating the modifications) and the dates to which the basic rent has been paid, and stating whether or not to the best knowledge of the signer of such statement Tenant is then in default or may be with notice or the passage of time, or both, in keeping, observing or performing any term, covenant, agreement, provision, condition or limitation contained in this Lease and, if Tenant shall be in default, specifying each such default of which the signer may have knowledge, it being intended that such statement delivered pursuant to this Section may be relied upon by any prospective transferee of Tenant's interest in this Lease and the Improvements or any Leasehold Mortgagee or any assignee of any Leasehold Mortgage, but reliance on such certificate may not extend to any default as to which the signer shall have had no actual knowledge.

NOTICES

All written notices or demands of any kind which either party may be required or may desire to serve on the other in connection with this Lease must be served (as an alternative to personal service) by registered or certified mail, shall be deposited in the United States mail with postage thereon fully prepaid and addressed to the party to be served as follows:

If the party so to be served is Landlord, address Landlord at:

with a copy thereof to	....
	....
	....

If the party so to be served is Tenant, address Tenant at:

	....
with a copy thereof to	....

Service of any such notice or demand so made by mail shall be deemed completed on the day of actual delivery as shown by the addressee's registry or certification receipt or at the expiration of the second day after the date of mailing, whichever is earlier in time. If requested in writing by the holder of any Leasehold Mortgage (which request shall be made in the manner provided above as between the parties hereto and shall specify an address to which notices or demands shall be given or made) any such notice or demand shall also be given or made in the manner specified in this Article and contemporaneously to such holder. Either party, and the holder of any Leasehold Mortgage who shall have made the request referred to above, may designate by notice in writing given in the manner specified above a new or other address to which such notice or demand shall thereafter be so given or made. No Event of Default predicated on the giving of any notice to Tenant shall be complete unless like notice shall have been given contemporaneously therewith to each holder of a Leasehold Mortgage who shall have made a request for notices and demands as provided above.

ARBITRATION

Section 21.01. If at any time, or from time to time during the Lease term, any dispute shall occur between Landlord and Tenant or any assignee of Tenant pursuant to any provision of this Lease with respect to a matter which this Lease provides shall be settled by arbitration, such dispute shall be settled by arbitration in accordance with the Rules then obtaining of the American Arbitration Association and the law of the State of California, and judgment upon the award rendered in such arbitration may be entered in any court having jurisdiction thereof; provided, however, that in any arbitration proceeding conducted pursuant to this Section, at least one arbitrator shall be an attorney at law, admitted to practice in the State of California.

Section 21.02. In the event Tenant shall fail to proceed diligently with any matter which is the subject of arbitration under this Lease, Landlord agrees that the holder of any Leasehold Mortgage shall have the right in the place and stead of Tenant to arbitrate such dispute as provided in this Article and any award made in such arbitration proceeding shall be binding upon Tenant with the same force and effect as if Tenant had proceeded with such arbitration. The arbitrator or arbitrators may not change any of the terms of this Lease or deprive any party to this Lease of any right of remedy expressly or impliedly reserved under this Lease.

CUMULATIVE REMEDIES—NO WAIVER—NO ORAL CHANGE

Section 22.01. The specified remedies to which Landlord may resort under the terms of this Lease are cumulative and are not intended to be exclusive of any other remedies or means of redress to which Landlord may be lawfully entitled in case of any breach or threatened breach by Tenant of any provision of this Lease. The failure of Landlord to insist in any one or more cases upon the strict performance of any of the covenants of this Lease or to exercise any option contained in this Lease shall not be construed as a waiver or a relinquishment for the future of such covenant or option. A receipt by Landlord of rent with knowledge of the breach of any covenant of this Lease shall not be deemed a waiver of such breach, and no waiver by Landlord of any provision of this Lease shall be deemed to have been made unless expressly in writing and signed by Landlord. In addition to the other remedies provided in this Lease, Landlord shall be entitled to the restraint by injunction of the violation, or attempted or threatened violation, of any of the covenants, conditions or provisions of this Lease.

Section 22.02. This Lease cannot be changed orally, but only by an agreement in writing signed and acknowledged by Landlord and Tenant.

QUIET ENJOYMENT

Landlord covenants and agrees that Tenant, upon paying the rent provided for in this Lease and upon observing and keeping all of the covenants, agreements and provisions of this Lease on its part to be observed and kept, shall lawfully and quietly hold, occupy and enjoy the Premises during the term of this Lease, without hindrance by or from anyone claiming by, through or under Landlord.

REAL ESTATE BROKERS

Tenant hereby represents and warrants that it has dealt with no real estate broker, agent or party who may be entitled to a commission or fee on account of this Lease. Tenant hereby indemnifies and agrees to hold Landlord harmless from and against any loss, cost, liability and expense, including reasonable attorneys' fees, which may be incurred in the event the foregoing representation and warranty proves incorrect.

REPRESENTATIONS

Landlord hereby disclaims any warranty, guaranty or representation of the nature and condition of the Premises, including (but not by way of limitation) the soil and geology and suitability thereof for any and all activities and uses which Tenant may elect to conduct thereon at any time during the Lease term, the manner of construction and the conditions and state of repair or lack of repair of all improvements located thereon, and the nature and extent of the rights of others with respect to the Premises, whether by way of easement, right of way, lease, possession, lien, encumbrance, license, reservation, condition or otherwise.

MISCELLANEOUS

Section 26.01. All rent and other sums which may from time to time become due and payable by Tenant to Landlord under any of the provisions of this Lease shall bear interest from and after the due date thereof at the rate of ten percent (10%) per annum.

Section 26.02. In all cases the language in all parts of this Lease shall be construed simply, according to its fair meaning and not strictly for or against Landlord or Tenant.

Section 26.03. The word titles underlying the article designations contained in this Lease are inserted solely for convenience and under no circumstances are they or any of them to be treated or construed as any part of this instrument.

Section 26.04. Subject to the other provisions of this Lease, this Lease shall be binding upon and inure to the benefit of Landlord and Tenant and their respective successors and assigns, and wherever a reference in this Lease is made to either Landlord or Tenant, such reference shall be deemed to include, wherever applicable, also a reference to the successors and assigns of such party, as if in every case so expressed.

Section 26.05. At the request of either Landlord or Tenant, a Memorandum of Lease (in the form attached hereto as Exhibit “B”) shall be executed by Landlord and Tenant and recorded in the Office of the County Recorder of ____________ County, California. In no event shall this Lease be recorded.

WESTLAW © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Section 26.06. This Lease shall be governed by and construed in accordance with the laws of the State of California.

Section 26.07. This Lease, together with any written modifications or amendments hereafter entered into shall constitute the entire agreement between the parties relative to the subject matter of this Lease, and shall supersede any prior agreement or understanding, if any, whether written or oral, which Tenant may have had with Landlord relating to the subject matter of this Lease.

Section 26.08. This instrument may be executed in two or more counterparts, each of which shall be deemed an original but all of which together shall constitute one and the same instrument.

Section 26.09. In the event of any litigation or arbitration between Landlord and Tenant with respect to the subject matter of this Lease, the unsuccessful party to such litigation or arbitration shall pay to the prevailing party all costs and expenses, including reasonably attorneys' fees, incurred therein by the successful party, all of which shall be included in and as a part of the judgment rendered in such litigation or arbitration.

[To the extent the parties negotiate rights and liabilities with respect to environmental matters, they should be set forth in the Lease. See Chapter 5, generally.]

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, Landlord and Tenant have executed this Lease as of the day and year first above written.

[Form 7:B] Landowner (Ground Lessor) Estoppel Certificate (With Consent to Assignment)

The undersigned, ___________ ("Lessor") hereby certifies as of the date of this Estoppel Certificate as follows:

1. Lessor is the landlord under a certain Lease (the "Lease") described on Exhibit "A" leasing certain premises and more fully described on Exhibit "A" (the "Premises"), wherein ___________ is the lessee ("Lessee").

2. The document or documents described on Exhibit "A" correctly identify the document or documents comprising the Lease. The Lease described contains all of the terms and provisions of the Lease, except to the extent that the Lease refers to documents or instruments not a part thereof. The Lease is unmodified, except for those certain amendments dated ___________ (attached as part of Exhibit "A"). The Lease is in full force and effect and expresses the entire agreement between the Lessor and Lessee pertaining to the leasehold estate created by (and property covered by) the Lease.

3. Lessee presently occupies the Premises and is paying rent and all other charges to be paid under the Lease on a current basis. Except to the extent noted as "Exceptions" below, Lessor knows of no setoffs, claims, liens or defenses against Lessee or to the enforcement of the Lease.

4. The commencement date of the Lease was ___________. The termination date of the Lease, excluding options to renew, if any, is _____. There are ___________ options to extend the term for a period of _____ years each. [Indicate whether the Lessee holds a right of first refusal to lease additional space; or right to purchase of property; or option to purchase the property; or option to extend the Lease term. Also, indicate that all such options are assignable.]

5. The monthly rental under the Lease is $________ payable in advance on the first day of each month. Said rent has been paid through _____, and there has been no prepayment of rental for any period beyond said date.

6. To the best of Lessor's knowledge, all of the obligations of the Lessee for the construction of improvements to the property have been complied with as of the date hereof.

7. To the best of Lessor's knowledge, all of the subleases between Lessee and the subtenants set forth on Exhibit "B" are in compliance with the terms of the Lease and Lessor has consented thereto.

8. A security deposit in the amount of $________ is now held by Lessor.

9. Except and as to the extent noted as "Exceptions" below, to the best knowledge of Lessor, Lessee is not in default in the performance of the Lease and no event has occurred which, with the giving of notice or the passage of time (or both), would constitute a breach or default by Lessee under the Lease.

10. Lessor makes this Estoppel Certificate and Consent with the understanding that ___________ is contemplating acquiring the interest of Lessee in the Lease. Lessor acknowledges that ___________ is materially relying on this Estoppel Certificate in connection with said transaction.

Exceptions (if any):

CONSENT

Lessor hereby consents to the assignment of the Lessee's interest of the Lease to ___________, reserving all rights of Lessor:

(a) In and to any security held by Lessor pursuant to the Lease; and

(b) Against assignor and all predecessors in interest of assignor; and

(c) Relating to the provisions of the Lease regarding assignment or subletting as such provision may apply to any future assignment or subletting.

Whenever by the terms of the Lease any notice shall or may be given, such notice shall be given in accordance with the terms of the Lease and shall be given to the Assignee at ___________, ___________, California.

AGREEMENT
ASSIGNMENT, ASSUMPTION AND CONSENT

THIS AGREEMENT is entered into as of this ___ day of _____, ___, by and between ___________ referred to as "Tenant" in this Agreement; ___________ referred to as "Tenant's Assignee" in this Agreement; and ___________ referred to as "Landlord" in this Agreement.

ASSIGNMENT OF LEASE

1.0 Tenant hereby assigns, sells, and conveys and otherwise transfers to Tenant's Assignee all of Tenant's right, title and interest as tenant or lessee in and to that certain Lease (including but not limited to any security deposit, prepaid rent and all options and rights contained therein, and all subleases of the Premises) which is dated ___________, ___ for the premises commonly known as ___________ and more particularly described therein. Said Lease has subsequently been amended by those certain amendments dated ___________. Said lease and all amendments thereto are referred to as the "Lease" and the premises therein demised is referred to as the "Premises" in this Agreement. A copy of the Lease (including all amendments thereto, if any) is attached as Exhibit "A" to this Agreement and Tenant warrants such copy to be a true and correct copy of the entire agreement between Landlord and Tenant with respect to the Premises. This assignment of Tenant's right, title and interest in the Lease to Tenant's Assignee shall be effective on ___________, ___ (the "Effective Date"), provided that Landlord consents thereto as evidenced by its execution of this Agreement in the space set forth below. Notwithstanding this assignment of Tenant's right, title and interest in the Lease to Tenant's Assignee and the corresponding acceptance thereof and assumption hereby by Tenant's Assignee of all of Tenant's obligations, terms, covenants, conditions and agreement under the Lease, Tenant shall continue to remain liable for the performance of all of such obligations, terms, covenants conditions and agreements and hereby agrees and guarantees to perform the same upon written notice of the default in the performance thereof by Tenant's Assignee. Service of such notice shall be deemed given forty-eight (48) hours after the same has been deposited in the U.S. Mail, with first class postage prepaid, addressed to Tenant at the address stated below or, if personally served, upon delivery thereof to Tenant.

ASSUMPTION OF LEASE

2.0 Tenant's Assignee hereby accepts all of Tenant's right, title and interest in and to the Lease and assumes and agrees to perform all of Tenant's corresponding obligations, terms, covenants, conditions and agreements under the Lease on, from and after the Effective Date. Tenant's Assignee acknowledges that Tenant's Assignee has inspected the Premises and knows the present condition thereof and accepts the Premises in the condition disclosed by such inspection. Further, Tenant's Assignee acknowledges that Landlord has made no representation concerning the condition of the Premises, expressed or implied, and Tenant's Assignee does not accept the Premises in reliance upon any such representation or any nondisclosure on the part of Landlord or Landlord's agents or employees.

CONSENT

3.0 Landlord hereby consents to the foregoing assignment of Tenant's right, title and interest in the Lease to Tenant's Assignee and the corresponding acceptance thereof and assumption of Tenant's obligations, terms, covenants, conditions and agreements made under the Lease by Tenant's Assignee subject to all of the terms, covenants, conditions and agreements set forth in this Agreement, and provided that Tenant shall not default in the performance of its obligations, terms, covenants, conditions and agreements under the Lease at any time prior to the Effective Date. Landlord shall in no event be required to charge or credit or make any other adjustment, as between Tenant and Tenant's Assignee, on account of any other sums paid either before or after the Effective Date under the Lease by Tenant or Tenant's Assignee. Landlord's consent to the assignment of Tenant's right, title and interest in and to the Lease set forth herein shall not be construed as a waiver of Landlord's right to reasonably refuse consent to any future proposed assignment nor as a waiver of any other rights which Landlord is provided under the Lease upon the occurrence of any proposed or purported future assignments or subletting of the Premises.

NONDISTURBANCE AND ATTORNMENT AGREEMENT

This NONDISTURBANCE AND ATTORNMENT AGREEMENT (this "Agreement") is made and entered into as of the _____ day of ___________, ___, by and among ______________________ ("Landlord"), whose address is ___________, California _____, ___________ ("Tenant"), whose address is ___________, California _____ and _____ ("Lender"), whose address is ___________, California _____.

RECITALS

WHEREAS, Tenant is the tenant under that certain Lease dated on or about ___________, ___ ("the Lease") by and between Landlord and Tenant, pertaining to and covering that certain real property which is legally described on Exhibit "A" attached hereto and the buildings and improvements located thereon (the "Property"); and

WHEREAS, Lender is the holder of a note in the original principal amount of ___________ DOLLARS ($________) executed by Landlord, as maker (the "Loan"), secured by that certain Deed of Trust, Assignment of Rents and Security Agreement of dated ___________ in favor of Lender encumbering the Property (the "Deed of Trust"); and

WHEREAS, Tenant desires that, subject to the conditions and limitations stated below, Lender consent to the Lease and recognize Tenant's rights under the Lease in the event that Lender (or any Successor Landlord, as defined below) succeeds to the interest of Landlord under the Lease, and in consideration therefor, Tenant is willing to agree to attorn to Lender (or any Successor Landlord) in the event that Lender (or any Successor Landlord) succeeds to the interest of Landlord under the Lease, and to acknowledge and agree that Tenant's leasehold interest is subordinate in all respects to Lender's interest under the Deed of Trust.

NOW, THEREFORE, for valuable consideration, receipt whereof is hereby acknowledged, and for and in consideration of their respective covenants herein made, the parties agree as follows:

WESTLAW © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

1. The Lease, all extensions, modifications, replacements and renewals thereof, and all the provisions thereof, and all of Tenant's rights and interests thereunder, shall be, are hereby made, and shall remain completely subject and subordinate to the Deed of Trust and the rights of Lender thereunder, including any renewals, modifications, replacements, consolidations or extensions of the Deed of Trust. The provisions of this Section 1 shall be effective notwithstanding any provisions to the contrary in the Lease. Without limiting the foregoing, Landlord and Tenant agree to comply with provisions of the Deed of Trust related to disbursement of insurance proceeds.

2. Landlord agrees that the rentals payable under the Lease shall, at Lender's demand, be paid directly by Tenant to Lender upon the occurrence of a default by Landlord under the Deed of Trust. Accordingly, after notice is given by Lender to Tenant that the rentals under the Lease shall be paid to Lender, Tenant shall pay to Lender (or otherwise in accordance with the directions of Lender) all rentals and other monies due and to become due to Landlord under the Lease. Tenant shall have no responsibility to ascertain whether such demand by Lender is authorized, and any such payment to Lender shall discharge the obligations of Tenant to make such payment to Landlord. Lender shall not be liable for any claims, damages or set-offs arising out of the Lease or Landlord's interest in the Property.

3. Notwithstanding the fact that the Lease is subordinate to the Deed of Trust as stated above, in the event that Lender or any other party (collectively a “Successor Landlord”) succeeds to the rights of Landlord under the Lease, whether through foreclosure, the acceptance of a deed in lieu of foreclosure or any possession, surrender, assignment, judicial action or any other action taken by Lender, then Tenant agrees that it shall attorn to, be liable to and recognize Successor Landlord as the lessor under the Lease for the balance of the term of the Lease upon and subject to all the terms and conditions of this Agreement and of the Lease, with the same force and effect as if the Successor Landlord was the original lessor under the Lease, and Tenant waives provisions of any statute or rule of law giving it the right to elect to terminate the Lease. Such attornment shall be self-operative without the execution of any further documents; however, at the Successor Landlord's request, Tenant agrees to execute any instruments to confirm the foregoing provisions, including a new lease directly with the Successor Landlord.

4. So long as Tenant shall pay, when due, the rent, impositions and other amounts owing under the Lease and otherwise perform such other tenant obligations as set forth in the Lease, Tenant shall not be joined as an adverse party defendant in any action or proceeding which may be instituted or commenced by Lender to foreclose or enforce the Deed of Trust (unless Lender is legally required to so join Tenant to protect Lender's ability to foreclose against Landlord), Tenant shall not be evicted from the Property, nor shall any of Tenant's rights under the Lease, including but not limited to the right to use and possession, be affected in any way by reason of being subordinate to the Deed of Trust, and Tenant's leasehold estate under the Lease shall not be terminated or disturbed during the term of the Lease by reason of any default under the Deed of Trust. Notwithstanding the foregoing, Successor Landlord shall not be:

(a) liable for any action or omission, representation or warranty of any prior lessor, including Landlord;

(b) subject to any offsets or defenses which Tenant may have against any prior lessor, including Landlord;

(c) bound by any payment of rent or any other amounts which Tenant may have paid to any prior lessor, including Landlord;

(d) liable for any security deposit or any other such payments;

(e) liable for paying (or giving Tenant a credit) for any construction allowance or any other allowance;

(f) bound by any modifications or amendment of the Lease made without Lender's prior written consent;

(g) bound by any notice of termination given by any lessor, including Landlord, to Tenant without Lender's prior written consent; and

(h) personally liable under the Lease (provided that Lender's liability shall be limited to its ownership interest as Successor Landlord in the premises demised by the Lease (the “Premises”)).

(i) liable for representations, warranties or indemnities given by Landlord to Tenant whether under the Lease or implied or expressly provided by law.

5. Notwithstanding anything stated in the Lease or this Agreement to the contrary, Tenant agrees that, if Successor Landlord, including Lender, should succeed to the interest of Landlord under the Lease, then the Lease shall be modified to provide that the entirety of any condemnation award, settlement or compromise, whether for a total or partial condemnation and whether such award shall be made as compensation for diminution in value of the leasehold, or for the taking of the fee, or severance damages, or any other claims, shall belong to and be the property of Successor Landlord; and Tenant shall be entitled only to recover such compensation as may be separately awarded to Tenant for the taking of Tenant's trade fixtures and for relocation expenses.

6. Notwithstanding anything stated in the Lease, Tenant agrees not to subordinate the Lease to any other lien or encumbrance without Lender's prior written consent. Additionally, before any assignment or sublease under the Lease shall become effective, such assignee or sublessee must be approved by Lender in writing.

7. Tenant agrees to give written notice to Lender of any default by Landlord (or other lessor) under the terms of the Lease and Lender shall have the right (but not the obligation) to cure any default of Landlord (or other lessor). Tenant shall not take action with respect to such default under the Lease, including without limitation, any action in order to terminate, rescind or void the Lease, or to withhold any rental thereunder, for a period of twenty (20) calendar days after receipt of such written notice by Lender with respect to any such default capable of being cured by the payment of money and for a period of thirty (30) calendar days after receipt of such written notice by Lender with respect to any other such default (provided, that in the case of any default which cannot be cured by the payment of money and cannot with due diligence be cured within such thirty (30) calendar day period because of the nature of such default or because Lender requires time to obtain possession of the Premises in order to cure the default, if Lender shall proceed promptly to attempt to obtain possession of the Premises, where possession is required, and to cure the same thereafter, and shall prosecute the curing of such default with diligence and continuity, then the time within which such default may be cured shall be extended for such period as may be necessary to complete the curing of the same with diligence and continuity).

8. Tenant declares, agrees and acknowledges that Lender, in making disbursements pursuant to any agreement relating to the Deed of Trust, is under no obligation or duty to, nor has Lender represented that it will, see to the application of such proceeds by the person or persons to whom Lender disburses such proceeds, and any application or use of such proceeds for purposes other than those provided for in the Deed of Trust shall not defeat the subordination acknowledged and agreed to herein in whole or in part.

9. This Agreement shall inure to the benefit of, and shall be binding upon, Tenant and Lender and each of their respective heirs, personal representatives, successors and assigns. In the event that any one or more of the provisions contained in this Agreement shall for any reason be held to be invalid, illegal or unenforceable in any respect, such invalidity, illegality or unenforceability shall not affect any of the provisions of this Agreement, but this Agreement shall be construed as if such invalid, illegal or unenforceable provision was not contained herein. This Agreement may not be modified orally or in any manner other than by a written agreement signed by the parties hereto or their respective successors or assigns. This Agreement shall be governed by and construed according to the internal laws of the State of California without resort to choice of law principles.

10. Nothing contained in this Agreement shall be deemed to amend, modify or otherwise limit the provisions of the Deed of Trust, which shall remain in full force and effect. The parties hereto agree that (i) any inconsistency between this Agreement and the Lease shall be governed by this Agreement; (ii) any inconsistency between the Deed of Trust and this Agreement shall be governed by the Deed of Trust; and (iii) any inconsistency between the Deed of Trust and the Lease shall be governed by the Deed of Trust.

11. This Agreement may be executed in counterparts, all of which when taken together shall constitute one and the same instrument.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the parties hereto have caused this Agreement to be duly executed in manner and form sufficient to bind them, as of the day and year first above written.

[8:1] Prospective buyers are sometimes interested in acquiring a piece of property but, for various reasons, not yet willing or able to commit to a binding obligation to purchase. For example, the prospective buyer might not be entirely convinced the property is suitable for the buyer's purposes, or might not have sufficient funds to purchase the property; or the prospective buyer's interest in purchasing the property might hinge on the ability to acquire an adjoining parcel as well.

Under such circumstances, acquiring the right to purchase the property without any corresponding obligation to purchase can be extremely valuable. An option to purchase or some form of preemptive purchase right may be a viable alternative. This Chapter discusses those alternatives to an outright purchase.

1. Nature of Options and Preemptive Rights—In General

a. [8:2] Options to purchase: An "option to purchase" is a unilateral contract under which a property owner, for consideration, agrees to sell its property to another (optionee) if, within a specified time period, the optionee elects to exercise the right to purchase. [Steiner v. Thexton (2010) 48 C4th 411, 418, 106 CR3d 252, 258; Erich v. Granoff (1980) 109 CA3d 920, 927-928, 167 CR 538, 542; see also Cyr v. McGovran (2012) 206 CA4th 645, 648, 142 CR3d 34, 36—option to purchase, if exercised, gives optionee proverbial "bundle of rights" equated with ownership]

Fundamentally, an option to purchase is not a sale of the property but, rather, a sale of the right to purchase. It consists of the owner's irrevocable offer to sell on specified terms for the term of the option in return for a separate consideration paid by the optionee. The optionee has no binding obligation to purchase; but if the option is timely exercised, it is effectively converted into a binding bilateral purchase and sale agreement. [Wachovia Bank v. Lifetime Indus., Inc. (2006) 145 CA4th 1039, 1049-1050, 52 CR3d 168, 175-176] See detailed discussion at ¶ 8:40 ff.

(1) [8:3] Tantamount to purchase and sale agreement liquidating seller's damages: In practical effect, options to purchase are virtually identical to a binding purchase and sale agreement with a liquidated damages clause for the seller's benefit:

Under an option to purchase, the optionee pays consideration for the right to purchase the property but has no obligation to purchase. Under a purchase and sale agreement in which the buyer's only liability is a specified amount of liquidated damages, the buyer essentially has the right, but not the obligation, to refuse to close so long as the buyer pays the seller the stipulated liquidated sum (see ¶ 4:310 ff.). Thus, in both transactions, the buyer pays a fixed amount for the right to buy the property but, in effect, without any corresponding obligation to purchase.

Nonetheless, the consideration given for a true option contract does not constitute liquidated damages in legal effect and is not subject to restrictions on enforceable liquidated damages provisions. [Allen v. Smith (2002) 94 CA4th 1270, 1279, 114 CR2d 898, 904] See further discussion at ¶ 8:156 ff.

b. [8:4] Preemptive purchase rights—"rights of first refusal" and "rights of first offer": There are two predominant types of "preemptive purchase rights"—a "right of first refusal" and a "right of first offer" (discussed in detail at ¶ 8:200 ff.). [Bill Signs Trucking, LLC v. Signs Family Ltd. Partnership (2007) 157 CA4th 1515, 1523, 69 CR3d 589, 595 (citing text)]

(1) [8:5] Right of first refusal: A "right of first refusal" grants the prospective buyer the right of first opportunity to "match" any third party purchase offer the owner is willing to accept. Upon receiving a satisfactory third party offer, the owner is obligated to notify the party holding the right of first refusal and to allow them the right, for an agreed-upon time, to purchase the property on the same terms and conditions offered by the third party. See ¶ 8:206, 8:212 ff.

(2) [8:6] Right of first offer: A "right of first offer" also gives the prospective buyer a preemptive right to purchase: The owner is required to first offer to sell the property to the holder of the right of first offer before offering the property for sale to anyone else. The owner is permitted to sell the property to a third party on terms identical to, or better than, those proposed to the holder of the right of first offer only if the holder does not elect to purchase the property on the owner's proposed terms. See ¶ 8:208.

c. Similar application in leasing transactions

(1) [8:7] Options to lease and preemptive lease rights: Options to lease and preemptive lease rights are (with the exception of the interest to be conveyed) almost identical to options to purchase and preemptive purchase rights. Therefore, although many of the cases cited in this chapter relate to options and preemptive rights with respect to a leasehold interest, they are equally applicable to options and preemptive rights with respect to a fee interest.

(2) [8:7.1] Compare—right to purchase after lease expires (holdover tenancy): Options to purchase and preemptive purchase rights (¶ 8:4 ff.) can be included in lease agreements. After the lease expires, the tenant might remain in possession and a "holdover" tenancy would be created. [See Smyth v. Berman (2019) 31 CA5th 183, 192, 242 CR3d 336, 344]

Unless the parties specifically agree in writing (see ¶ 8:41, 8:75 ff.), however, options to purchase and preemptive purchase rights do not continue after a lease expires. Indeed, options to purchase and preemptive purchase rights are not "essential" lease terms and, therefore, do not automatically carry forward into a holdover tenancy. [Spaulding v. Yovino-Young (1947) 30 C2d 138, 143-144, 180 P2d 691, 694—option to purchase not "essential" term and did not continue after lease expired and holdover tenancy began; Smyth v. Berman, supra, 31 CA5th at 192-193, 242 CR3d at 344 (concluding Spaulding's logic applies "with equal force" to preemptive right of first refusal)—right of first refusal to purchase not "essential" term and did not presumptively carry forward into holdover tenancy]

Cross-refer: For a detailed discussion on "holdover" tenancies, see Friedman, Garcia & Hoy, Cal. Prac. Guide: Landlord-Tenant (TRG), Chs. 2, 7.

2. Advantages to Buyer

a. [8:8] Buyer not bound: From a buyer's perspective, the principal advantage of options to purchase and preemptive purchase rights is that the buyer is not legally obligated to consummate a purchase and sale, and has complete discretion to decide whether to exercise the option and proceed with the purchase of the property. Thus, questions of good faith and satisfaction of conditions do not arise. [See Allen v. Smith (2002) 94 CA4th 1270, 1280, 114 CR2d 898, 905]

Unless and until the option is exercised, the prospective buyer's only commitment is the consideration paid for the option or preemptive right; and that commitment may be relatively negligible in practical effect because the seller is often willing to apply the consideration to the ultimate purchase price.

b. [8:9] Fixing purchase price: Under options to purchase, the prospective buyer is able to fix the purchase price for the duration of the option (although sometimes the seller will require an increase in the purchase price over the term of the option). [See County of San Diego v. Miller (1975) 13 C3d 684, 692, 119 CR 491, 495—option "freezes" maximum sale price at optioned price]

In an appreciating real estate market, this feature will work toward a prospective buyer's advantage. On the other hand, in a depreciating market, a fixed purchase price is likely to offer no real advantage from the buyer's perspective (who, instead, is more apt simply to decline to exercise the option when it calls for an above-market price; see ¶ 8:21 ff. re seller's disadvantages).

c. [8:10] Additional time to investigate property: An option to purchase gives prospective buyers time to investigate the property at a more leisurely pace than is typically permitted under a purchase and sale agreement. This is particularly important when the buyer is considering developing or otherwise changing the use of the subject property and needs time to apply for (and perhaps obtain) various governmental permits; or the buyer needs time to conduct various investigations and feasibility studies (e.g., traffic surveys, geological and excavation studies, and the procurement of environmental impact reports). [See County of San Diego v. Miller (1975) 13 C3d 684, 692, 119 CR 491, 496]

d. [8:11] Ability to assemble parcels: Developers, in particular, find options advantageous because they often want to combine adjoining or nearby parcels but do not want to commit to the purchase of one parcel until they have acquired the right to buy all of the properties in which they have an interest. Acquiring options to purchase can be a relatively inexpensive method of tying up adjoining or nearby properties pending confirmation of the right and/or ability to purchase the entire package.

e. [8:12] Flexibility: The duration of an option to purchase can be structured flexibly so that the optionee need only pay for that period of the option term which it uses. For example, the agreement may call for a fixed sum for the initial term of the option, but allow the optionee the right to extend the term on a periodic basis by paying the optionor (prospective seller) additional consideration for each extension.

Alternatively, the agreement may provide for an allocation of a fixed option fee based on the time at which the optionee exercises the option. (For example, if optionee pays $50,000 for a six-month option, but exercises the option half-way through the term, $25,000 would be applied toward the purchase price.)

3. Pros and Cons for Seller

a. [8:13] Seller advantages: Sellers naturally are interested in procuring a committed, rather than simply a "potential," buyer. Consequently, it is somewhat unusual for sellers to propose an option or preemptive right agreement. Nevertheless, options or preemptive rights can offer considerable advantages to sellers:

(1) [8:14] Fee to seller: The seller is given consideration for the grant of the option or preemptive right, separate and apart from the purchase price. (Sometimes, however, the consideration might simply be the prospective buyer's agreement to enter into a related transaction, such as a lease; see ¶ 8:18.)

(2) [8:14.1] Avoiding liquidated damages restrictions: Although similar in practical effect to a liquidated damages provision in a purchase and sale contract, the consideration paid for an option does not constitute liquidated damages and is not subject to restrictions on valid liquidated damages. Payment of a freely-negotiated option price avoids any possibility that the seller's retention of a prospective buyer's purchase deposit might be unenforceable liquidated damages (see ¶ 4:315 ff.). For that reason, many sellers prefer to structure a purchase and sale agreement as an option. [Allen v. Smith (2002) 94 CA4th 1270, 1279, 114 CR2d 898, 904]

(3) [8:15] Seller sacrifices little: Under an option agreement wherein the seller negotiates a favorable purchase price for the duration of the option term, the seller does not really give up much other than its ability to market the property (and thus liquidate its equity) during the term.

Under a preemptive right agreement, the seller gives up even less … because the seller is still free to market its property whenever it chooses and upon whatever price and terms it desires. (The seller simply has to give the holder of the preemptive right the paramount right of purchase by matching a third party offer procured during the term; see ¶ 8:206 ff.)

(4) [8:16] Alternative where no present sale likely: If the owner cannot presently sell the property on desirable terms, the grant of an option or preemptive right for present consideration is often better than no present sale at all.

(5) [8:17] Satisfaction of contingencies and expedited closing: Usually (but not necessarily), under an option to purchase, the buyer's contingencies will have been satisfied by the time the buyer elects to exercise its option. The transaction then often becomes one in which the buyer has no right to withdraw from the purchase contract and the time period for closing should be relatively short.

(6) [8:18] Effecting related transactions: Sometimes, the owner must grant options to purchase and preemptive purchase rights in order to induce a prospective buyer to enter into a related transaction (usually a lease). Frequently, a prospective tenant is unwilling to enter into a lease unless it is also granted an option to purchase and/or preemptive purchase rights.

These rights are also often granted to partners of a partnership which owns real property, giving the partners (or some of them) the right to purchase the partnership real property. Similarly, options and preemptive rights may frequently arise in real property coownership agreements (see ¶ 12:40).

b. [8:19] Disadvantages to seller: Notwithstanding the potential advantages (¶ 8:13 ff.), from the seller's perspective, the grant of options and preemptive purchase rights is a "two-edged sword." Again, having decided to sell, owners naturally want buyers who are legally bound to close the transaction—not mere "prospects" who have the right, but not the obligation, to buy. In particular, sellers should weigh the following disadvantages:

(1) [8:20] Inability to market property: Once an option or preemptive purchase right is granted, it is exceedingly difficult to market the subject property to other prospective buyers. Third parties (prospective buyers as well as brokers) are unlikely to be interested in property subject to an option to purchase because they will have to wait until the option term expires before learning whether the owner will be able to sell the property free and clear of the option.

Similarly, third party buyers and brokers are reluctant to pursue property subject to a preemptive purchase right because their offer might be second in line behind the preemptive right grantee.

Again, holders of options and preemptive rights are not legally bound to consummate a purchase and sale. Hence, for the term of the option or preemptive right the owner's property is effectively off the market with no guarantee that a sale can or will be concluded.

(2) Risks from fluctuating market values

(a) [8:21] Loss of appreciation in value: As indicated, options typically grant the optionee the right to purchase on specified terms at a specified (fixed) price. Consequently, unless the owner (optionor) has reserved the right to increase the purchase price during the term to reflect escalating market values, the owner (optionor) risks not obtaining the benefit of appreciation. (And if the option builds in a right to increase the purchase price, the optionee may be less likely to exercise the option; see ¶ 8:22.)

(b) [8:22] Certainty of sale diminished by depreciating market: On the other hand, if the property decreases in value, the optionee is unlikely to exercise an option calling for a higher fixed price. Thus, in a depreciating market, the owner will have lost its prospective sale to the optionee and also have missed a "window opportunity" to sell to someone else when the market was stronger.

(3) [8:23] Clearing cloud on title upon expiration of option/preemptive right: The rights of an optionee or grantee of a preemptive right are perfected as against subsequent lienholders and encumbrancers by recording a document evidencing the option or preemptive right (see ¶ 8:123 ff.). The recordation, of course, creates a cloud on the owner's title (see County of San Diego v. Miller (1975) 13 C3d 684, 688, 119 CR 491, 493) and thus may interfere with the property's marketability upon expiration of the option or preemptive right—i.e., there is always the possibility that a recalcitrant optionee or holder of a preemptive right will refuse to deliver (or delay delivery of) a quitclaim deed or other recordable written release even though the option or preemptive right has terminated unexercised.

Though the grantee may have no lawful basis for refusing to deliver the necessary release, the owner's title will nonetheless remain clouded, leaving the owner at the grantee's mercy with no immediate recourse other than to file a lawsuit (all the while impeding marketability).

➪ [8:24] PRACTICE POINTER: As will be discussed, steps can be taken to help avoid this problem (see ¶ 8:141 ff.). In addition, by statute, unexercised options automatically expire "of record" within a specified period of time (see Civ.C. §§ 884.010 & 884.020, discussed at ¶ 8:144 ff.).

4. [8:25] General Drafting Considerations: In the context of consummating a purchase and sale, options to purchase and preemptive purchase rights can be viewed as two-step (if not two separate) transactions: The first step is the grantee's exercise of its right (in effect, the grantee's acceptance of the owner's offer to sell); the second step is the actual consummation of the purchase and sale … which involves all of the terms of the sale (including everything from the parties' respective representations and warranties to the closing mechanics; see comprehensive discussion in Ch. 4).

Therefore, when negotiating, structuring, drafting and/or reviewing options to purchase or preemptive purchase rights, counsel must keep in mind that those rights constitute only the initial step in the targeted purchase and sale transaction. All of the terms and conditions of the sale must be documented to the greatest extent possible. In particular, consider the following points:

a. [8:26] Memorialize all purchase and sale terms in option agreement: A properly-drafted option to purchase should, upon exercise, be practically self-executing in the sense that no further negotiation (and very little documentation) should be required to consummate the purchase and sale. Thus, an option agreement that reflects only the purchase price and other economic terms of the sale (leaving to a later date the negotiation of a definitive purchase and sale agreement) may be insufficient.

(1) [8:27] Compare—preemptive purchase rights: By contrast, preemptive purchase rights, by their nature, do not lend themselves to full negotiation of all purchase and sale terms … since most (if not all) of the sale terms are subject to those set by a third party offer that is not in existence when the preemptive right is granted.

b. [8:28] Perfection by recordation: A grantee's rights under an option or preemptive right of purchase could be cut off by liens that are senior in the chain of title. Therefore, grantees should perfect their option or preemptive rights by promptly recording the document granting those rights (or a memorandum of such document). See discussion at ¶ 8:123 ff.

c. [8:29] Title insurance: Options and preemptive rights are insurable interests; hence, the grantee should consider obtaining title insurance insuring the priority of its interest.

Of course, hand-in-hand with obtaining title insurance is a review of existing senior liens and encumbrances which might impact the value of the option or preemptive right. For example:

- If the owner has already granted an option or preemptive purchase right that is senior to the option or preemptive right now being granted, the new option or preemptive right could be valueless should the senior purchase right be exercised.

- If the property is encumbered by a senior monetary lien which exceeds the purchase price under an option to purchase, the option may be worthless as a practical matter because, even if exercised, there will not be sufficient sale proceeds for the seller to pay off the senior lien.

Chapter 8. Options to Purchase and Preemptive Purchase Rights

B. Options to Purchase

- 1. [8:40] Definition
  - a. [8:41] Contract law applies
  - b. [8:42] Not a sale of real property
  - c. [8:43] Dual nature
    - (1) [8:44] Grant of option—unilateral contract to convey
    - (2) [8:45] Bilateral purchase and sale agreement upon proper exercise of option
  - d. [8:46.1] Compliance with Subdivision Map Act (SMA)
  - e. [8:46.2] Compare—right to purchase in expired lease (holdover tenancy)
- 2. Optionee's Rights
  - a. [8:47] Right of purchase pursuant to irrevocable offer to sell
    - (1) [8:48] Compare—not an “exclusive right” to purchase
  - b. [8:48.5] Option not terminable without optionee's consent
  - c. [8:49] Optionee not bound to purchase
    - (1) [8:50] Distinguish—option as enforceable contract
  - d. [8:51] Exercise of option within optionee's discretion
  - e. Optionee's interest
    - (1) [8:52] Compensable property right
    - (2) [8:53] Compare—no inherent right to use or occupy optioned property
- 3. [8:55] Consideration for Option
  - a. [8:56] “Sufficient” consideration
    - (1) [8:57] Application
      - (a) [8:58] Examples—sufficient consideration
      - (b) [8:65] Compare—insufficient consideration
  - b. [8:70] Presumption of sufficient consideration
  - c. [8:71] Effect of lack of consideration
- 4. [8:75] Compliance With Statute of Frauds
  - a. [8:76] “Material” terms
  - b. [8:77] Certainty of terms
    - (1) [8:78] “To be agreed upon” fatally uncertain
    - (2) [8:79] Time and manner of payment
    - (3) [8:79.1] Application of option to unidentified after-acquired property
- 5. [8:80] Assignability
  - a. [8:81] Agreements barring assignment
  - b. [8:82] Assignment of tenant's option to purchase
  - c. [8:84] Effect of assignment

6. [8:85] Exercise of Option to Purchase
    - a. [8:85.1] Contract principles apply
    - b. [8:86] Method of exercise
        - (1) [8:87] Specific contract terms control
            - (a) [8:88] Waiver of contractual terms
        - (2) [8:89] Effect where contract silent on mechanics
            - (a) [8:90] Manner of giving notice
                - 1) [8:91] Provision for “notice”
                - 2) [8:92] Provision for “written notice”
                - 3) [8:93] Compare—conduct not tantamount to “actual notice”
            - (b) Tender of performance
                - 1) [8:94] Notice without tender of performance
                - 2) [8:95] Tender of performance without notice
        - (3) [8:96] Impact of optionee's conditional or qualified “acceptance”
            - (a) [8:97] View that option terminates
            - (b) [8:98] View that option remains effective for specified option term
    - c. [8:100] Time for exercise
        - (1) [8:101] Effect if no time limit specified
            - (a) [8:102] Rule against perpetuities no bar
                - 1) [8:102.1] Option term rarely exceeds perpetuities deadlines
                - 2) [8:102.2] Statutory exemptions
                - 3) [8:102.4] Implied reasonable deadline for exercise
        - (2) [8:104] Effect of expiration of deadline
            - (a) [8:105] “Minor” delays may be excused
            - (b) [8:106] Waiver of time limit
        - (3) [8:106.5] Effect of “time of essence” clause
    - d. [8:107] Optionor's interference as defense to defective exercise of option
    - e. Effect of optionee's proper exercise
        - (1) [8:108] Bilateral purchase and sale contract created
        - (2) [8:109] Payment of purchase price
            - (a) [8:110] “Reasonable time” if no time stated
            - (b) [8:111] Waiver of delay
        - (3) [8:112] Effect on intervening claimants (“relation-back” rule)
        - (4) [8:113] Compare—exercise of option does not pass title

7. Termination/Expiration of Option
    - a. [8:115] Default by optionee or lapse of option term
        - (1) [8:116] Optionor's offer effectively revoked
        - (2) [8:117] No notice required
        - (3) [8:118] Optionor's remedy to clear title upon expiration
    - b. [8:119] Compare—option not terminated by optionor's or optionee's death
    - c. [8:120] Damage, destruction or condemnation of property
        - (1) [8:120.1] Effect of provision authorizing cancellation of optionee's lease?
        - (2) [8:122] Optionee's “compensable” interest in condemnation proceedings (before exercising option)
        - (3) [8:122.1] Optionee's “burden” in condemnation proceedings (after exercising option)

8. [8:123] Priority and Perfection; “Relation-Back”
    - a. [8:125] “Relation-back” triggered by title transfer pursuant to option
        - (1) [8:125.1] Effect where optionee obtains title outside option purview
    - b. [8:126] Recordation to perfect priority
        - (1) [8:127] Priority rights of subsequent “bona fide” encumbrancers who record first in time

(a) [8:128] Compare—subordination by actual notice of prior option
(2) [8:130] Contents of recorded document
(a) [8:131] Subsequent recordation of extensions
(b) [8:132] Compare—nonessential terms
9. [8:135] Title Insurance
a. [8:136] Policy limit
b. [8:137] Who pays
10. Removing Options of Record
a. [8:140] Optionee's quitclaim deed
(1) [8:141] Advance execution of quitclaim deed to avoid dilemma of unwilling optionee; drawbacks
(a) [8:142] Comment—escrow impediments to recordation of grant deed
b. [8:144] Statutory expiration "of record"
(1) [8:145] Six-month expiration of record
(2) [8:146] Effect of statutory expiration—"constructive notice" terminates
(a) [8:147] Compare—rights as between optionee and optionor; extension agreements
11. [8:150] Tax Concerns—Risk of "Disguised Sale"
12. [8:151] Use of Option as Financing Device—Risk of "Disguised Mortgage"
a. [8:152] Example—sale and leaseback with option
(1) [8:153] "Disguised mortgage" drawback
b. [8:154] Example—lender as optionee
(1) [8:155] "Disguised mortgage" drawback; risk of invalidity
13. Purchase Agreement With Liquidated Damages Clause Compared
a. [8:156] Distinction
(1) [8:156.1] Option vs. purchase and sale agreement tested by "mutuality of obligation"
b. [8:157] Pros and cons for seller
(1) [8:158] Disadvantages
(a) [8:159] Liquidated damages enforcement dependent on proving buyer's breach
(b) [8:159.1] Restrictions on validity of liquidated damages
(c) [8:160] Escrow impediments to collection of liquidated sum
(2) [8:161] Advantages

1. [8:40] Definition: An "option to purchase" real property is a unilateral contract under which a property owner (optionor), for consideration, grants a prospective buyer (optionee) the irrevocable right to purchase the owner's property (or an interest therein) within a specified period of time and upon specified terms. [See Steiner v. Thexton (2010) 48 C4th 411, 418, 106 CR3d 252, 258; Wachovia Bank v. Lifetime Indus., Inc. (2006) 145 CA4th 1039, 1049, 52 CR3d 168, 175; see also Corrie v. Soloway (2013) 216 CA4th 436, 444, 156 CR3d 709, 715—option binds owner/optionor in advance to make contract if optionee accepts upon terms and within time designated in option]

a. [8:41] Contract law applies: Because it is a contract giving the optionee the right (but not the obligation) to purchase an interest in real property, an option is subject to general rules of contract law, the statute of frauds (Civ.C. § 1624(a)(3), ¶ 8:75) and other principles germane to real property purchase agreements. [See generally, Robert T. Miner, M.D., Inc. v. Tustin Avenue Investors, LLC (2004) 116 CA4th 264, 270, 10 CR3d 178, 181—"In determining whether [optionee] has any option rights, … we apply contract principles"; Arden Group, Inc. v. Burk (1996) 45 CA4th 1409, 1414, 53 CR2d 492, 495—contract rules of offer and acceptance apply in deciding whether option has been validly exercised (¶ 8:85.1); Torlai v. Lee (1969) 270 CA2d 854, 858, 76 CR 239, 241—"irrevocable option based on consideration is a contract as defined by … [Civ.C. §§ 1549 & 1550]"]

b. [8:42] Not a sale of real property: An option to purchase real property is not itself a sale of property; rather, it is a sale of a right to purchase. [Wachovia Bank v. Lifetime Indus., Inc. (2006) 145 CA4th 1039, 1049, 52 CR3d 168, 175; San Jose Parking, Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (City of San Jose Redevelop. Agency) (2003) 110 CA4th 1321, 1326, 2 CR3d 505, 509; see also Cyr v. McGovran (2012) 206 CA4th 645, 650, 142 CR3d 34, 38—option to purchase constitutes mere offer to sell, vesting no estate in optioned property]

Thus, the option conveys no interest in land, but only a personal right in the optionee to buy at the optionee's election. [Warner Bros. Pictures v. Brodel (1948) 31 C2d 766, 772, 192 P2d 949, 952; Palo Alto Town & Country Village, Inc. v. BBTC Co. (1974) 11 C3d 494, 503, 113 CR 705, 710; Wachovia Bank v. Lifetime Indus., Inc., supra, 145 CA4th at 1050, 52 CR3d at 176]

c. [8:43] Dual nature: In legal effect, an option is of a dual nature, contemplating two separate contracts or transactions. [Palo Alto Town & Country Village, Inc. v. BBTC Co. (1974) 11 C3d 494, 502-503, 113 CR 705, 709-710; see also Glovis America, Inc. v. County of Ventura (2018) 28 CA5th 62, 68, 238 CR3d 895, 900 (applying same analysis to option to extend lease term)]

(1) [8:44] Grant of option—unilateral contract to convey: The first contract is the grant of the option itself for a separate consideration. It is the optionor's binding promise to sell (on specified terms) subject to the condition precedent of acceptance by the optionee (within the time and in the manner specified by the option). The option contract sets forth the terms and conditions under which the optionee can create a bilateral purchase and sale agreement (¶ 8:45); but since an option binds only the optionor, it is a unilateral contract. [Palo Alto Town & Country Village, Inc. v. BBTC Co. (1974) 11 C3d 494, 503, 113 CR 705, 710; Allen v. Smith (2002) 94 CA4th 1270, 1279, 114 CR2d 898, 904; see also Glovis America, Inc. v. County of Ventura (2018) 28 CA5th 62, 68, 238 CR3d 895, 900 (applying same analysis to option to extend lease term)]

(2) [8:45] Bilateral purchase and sale agreement upon proper exercise of option: The second contract is the mutually enforceable bilateral purchase and sale agreement into which the option "ripens" upon its timely and proper exercise by the optionee. In effect, by properly exercising the option, the optionee "accepts" the optionor's offer to sell (on specified terms), thus transforming what was a unilateral contract into a contract of sale binding on both parties. [Palo Alto Town & Country Village, Inc. v. BBTC Co. (1974) 11 C3d 494, 503-504, 113 CR 705, 710; see also Steiner v. Thexton (2010) 48 C4th 411, 418, 106 CR3d 252, 258—if offer is accepted upon terms and in time specified, bilateral contract that arises may become basis for specific performance suit should either party thereafter refuse to perform]

➪ [8:46] PRACTICE POINTER: As indicated earlier, an effective option agreement should set forth in detail both the "option" portion of the contract (consideration for the option, terms and conditions for exercise of the option, how option exercised, etc.) and the terms and conditions of the contemplated purchase and sale (giving due consideration to all issues important to a well-drafted purchase and sale agreement; see Ch. 4). Leaving to later negotiations and drafting that portion of the agreement relating to the terms and conditions of the purchase and sale defeats the "self-executing" feature of an option to purchase (see ¶ 8:25 ff.).

d. [8:46.1] Compliance with Subdivision Map Act (SMA): An option to purchase a portion of real property must comply with the SMA (Gov.C. § 66410 et seq.), which expressly conditions the purchase of divided land on the approval and recordation of a final map. Nonetheless, parties may enter into option contracts without first filing subdivision maps so long as their contracts are expressly conditioned on SMA compliance before the close of escrow. [See Gov.C. § 66499.30(a), (b) & (e); Corrie v. Soloway (2013) 216 CA4th 436, 439-440, 156 CR3d 709, 712—option agreement conditioning property's sale on SMA compliance deemed valid replacement for previous unlawful agreement]

e. [8:46.2] Compare—right to purchase in expired lease (holdover tenancy): See discussion at ¶ 8:7.1.

2. Optionee's Rights

a. [8:47] Right of purchase pursuant to irrevocable offer to sell: Technically, an option to purchase is simply the property owner's irrevocable offer to sell to the optionee during the term of the option. In other words, during the option term, the optionee has an enforceable contract right to accept or reject the optionor's present offer to sell on specified terms by timely exercise of the option. [Warner Bros. Pictures v. Brodel (1948) 31 C2d 766, 772, 192 P2d 949, 952; County of San Diego v. Miller (1975) 13 C3d 684, 688, 119 CR 491, 493; Arden Group, Inc. v. Burk (1996) 45 CA4th 1409, 1414, 53 CR2d 492, 495]

(1) [8:48] Compare—not an "exclusive right" to purchase: Some cases refer to an option as granting the optionee the "exclusive right" to purchase. [County of San Diego v. Miller (1975) 13 C3d 684, 688, 119 CR 491, 493; Wachovia Bank v. Lifetime Indus., Inc. (2006) 145 CA4th 1039, 1049, 52 CR3d 168, 175; Allen v. Smith (2002) 94 CA4th 1270, 1279, 114 CR2d 898, 904] This is not technically correct inasmuch as a seller can grant any number of options, and no one option truly gives the optionee the "exclusive" right to purchase. (However, the option that is the first to be perfected by proper recordation has priority over all options junior thereto; see ¶ 8:124.)

Additionally, owners can sell their property to whomever they desire without necessarily breaching an option agreement … although any buyer with actual or constructive knowledge of the option will take subject thereto. [Civ.C. § 1213; see ¶ 8:124]

b. [8:48.5] Option not terminable without optionee's consent: Because it is an irrevocable offer to sell (on specified terms for a specified duration), an option may not be terminated during the option period without the optionee's consent. [Allen v. Smith (2002) 94 CA4th 1270, 1279, 114 CR2d 898, 904]

c. [8:49] Optionee not bound to purchase: The optionee has no contractual obligation to purchase unless and until the optionee accepts the optionor's irrevocable offer to sell (i.e., timely exercises the option on terms specified in the option). Thus, from the optionee's perspective, the option is not a binding contract, but simply an irrevocable offer (¶ 8:47 ff.) that the optionee can convert into a binding bilateral contract by accepting the offer. [Palo Alto Town & Country Village, Inc. v. BBTC Co. (1974) 11 C3d 494, 503, 113 CR 705, 710; see City of Turlock v. Paul M. Zagaris, Inc. (1989) 209 CA3d 189, 194, 256 CR 902, 904—option is a "unilateral contract under which the optionee, for consideration, receives the right and the power to create a contract of purchase during the life of the option" (emphasis added)]

On the other hand, upon granting an option, the landowner thereby becomes contractually bound to sell subject to the optionee's proper exercise of the option. In this respect then, an option creates only a unilateral obligation on the part of the seller. [Palo Alto Town & Country Village, Inc. v. BBTC Co., supra, 11 C3d at 502, 113 CR at 709]

This feature distinguishes an option from a purchase and sale agreement, which constitutes a true "bilateral" contract binding both parties (even though their performance may be subject to certain conditions precedent). [See Menzel v. Primm (1907) 6 CA 204, 209, 91 P 754, 756; Palo Alto Town & Country Village, Inc. v. BBTC Co., supra, 11 C3d at 502-503, 113 CR at 709-710]

(1) [8:50] Distinguish—option as enforceable contract: Though it creates only a one-sided obligation, an option is nonetheless a binding unilateral contract, since it is a promise (irrevocable offer by seller) supported by separate consideration (see ¶ 8:55 ff.). [See Palo Alto Town & Country Village, Inc. v. BBTC Co. (1974) 11 C3d 494, 502, 113 CR 705, 709]

d. [8:51] Exercise of option within optionee's discretion: Again, an option does not bind the optionee to purchase. The optionee may exercise the option (i.e., accept the optionor's "offer") or let the option lapse unexercised (i.e., not accept the optionor's "offer") in its discretion and without legal consequences. [See Steiner v. Thexton (2010) 48 C4th 411, 419, 106 CR3d 252, 259—buyer's "absolute and sole" right to withdraw means agreement is an option; Beran v. Harris (1949) 91 CA2d 562, 564, 205 P2d 107, 108—option terms "may or may not be complied with at the election of the optionee"]

e. Optionee's interest

(1) [8:52] Compensable property right: An optionee's rights are akin to those of a buyer under a purchase and sale agreement. Like a purchase agreement, an option does not itself effect a sale of property or create in the optionee any "estate" in land. [County of San Diego v. Miller (1975) 13 C3d 684, 691, 119 CR 491, 495; Cyr v. McGovran (2012) 206 CA4th 645, 650, 142 CR3d 34, 38; see ¶ 8:42]

However, at least for due process purposes upon condemnation of the subject property for public use, the owner of an unexercised (but as yet unexpired) option to purchase possesses a valuable property right that is compensable to the extent the condemnation award exceeds the optioned purchase price. [County of San Diego v. Miller, supra, 13 C3d at 693, 119 CR at 496—based on optionee's expectation of realizing any value in excess of optioned price and increased importance of options in the marketplace, considerations of "fairness" and "public policy" require that optionee be compensated; San Jose Parking, Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (City of San Jose Redevelop. Agency) (2003) 110 CA4th 1321, 1326-1327, 2 CR3d 505, 509]

(2) [8:53] Compare—no inherent right to use or occupy optioned property: Because optionees basically acquire no more than an irrevocable right to accept the optionor's offer to sell during the option term—not any interest or estate in the land—they have no greater rights to use, occupy or possess the subject real property than would a prospective buyer under a purchase and sale agreement. Accordingly, prior to the conveyance of title, the optionee (as prospective buyer) has a right to use, occupy and/or possess the property only to the extent specifically granted in the option agreement.

➪ [8:54] PRACTICE POINTER: Often, a prospective buyer's primary motivation in acquiring an option to purchase is to tie up the property (effectively take it off the market) while the prospective buyer investigates possibilities for future development. These investigations frequently entail taking soil samples and conducting other geological tests (as well as processing various applications for development) which require access to the property.

In such cases, it is imperative that the option agreement specifically confer the necessary rights of access and entry, as well as perhaps require the optionor to cooperate with the optionee in pursuit of development permits. (See ¶ 8:174 ff.; and Form 8:A.)

3. [8:55] Consideration for Option: An option to purchase is an enforceable contract only if supported by legally sufficient consideration. [See generally, Civ.C. § 1550, subd. 4—"sufficient cause or consideration" is essential to existence of contract; Steiner v. Thexton (2010) 48 C4th 411, 420, 106 CR3d 252, 260; Torlai v. Lee (1969) 270 CA2d 854, 858-859, 76 CR 239, 241-242—option without consideration is not a contract in traditional sense or a contract under Civ.C. § 1550]

a. [8:56] "Sufficient" consideration: "Sufficient" consideration need not necessarily be "substantial" or even "adequate"; nor need it be in cash. The consideration need simply be "valuable." [Kowal v. Day (1971) 20 CA3d 720, 727-728, 98 CR 118, 122; Wheat v. Morse (1961) 197 CA2d 203, 206, 17 CR 226, 228; Stough v. Hanson (1941) 46 CA2d 504, 116 P2d 77, 78]

(1) [8:57] Application: Broadly, the optionee gives legally "sufficient" consideration by performing an act, incurring a detriment or rendering a return promise that is bargained for in exchange for the optionor's irrevocable offer to sell. [Steiner v. Thexton (2010) 48 C4th 411, 420-421, 106 CR3d 252, 260; Prather v. Vasquez (1958) 162 CA2d 198, 204-205, 327 P2d 963, 967-968]

Good consideration is statutorily defined as "[a]ny benefit conferred, or agreed to be conferred, upon the promisor, by any other person, to which the promisor is not lawfully entitled, or any prejudice suffered, or agreed to be suffered, by such person, other than such as he is at the time of consent lawfully bound to suffer, as an inducement to the promisor …" [Civ.C. § 1605; see also Steiner v. Thexton, supra—benefit or prejudice must induce promisor's promise]

(a) [8:58] Examples—sufficient consideration: Virtually any consideration, however small, is "sufficient" to support an option contract. [Kowal v. Day (1971) 20 CA3d 720, 727, 98 CR 118, 122]

For example:

• [8:59] An option given for 25 cents is supported by "sufficient" consideration. [Marsh v. Lott (1908) 8 CA 384, 389-390, 97 P 163, 165; see also Wheat v. Morse (1961) 197 CA2d 203, 206, 17 CR 226, 228—$1 consideration suffices; Stough v. Hanson (1941) 46 CA2d 504, 116 P2d 77, 78 (same)]

• [8:60] The optionee's transfer of valuable property for the optionor's use during the option period "satisfies the consideration requirement for the option contract" … even though the optionee has the right to return of the property if the option is not exercised. [Kowal v. Day (1971) 20 CA3d 720, 728, 98 CR 118, 122]

"In the event that the optionee does not exercise the option and he regains the thing deposited, the optionor has received the benefit of the use of the thing, and the optionee has suffered the detriment of not having the use of the thing deposited. The consideration requirement is thereby satisfied." [Kowal v. Day, supra, 20 CA3d at 728, 98 CR at 122—optionee's transfer of possession of automobile for optionor's use and benefit sufficient consideration though optionee had right to return of auto upon disaffirmance of purchase transaction; but see ¶ 8:66 ff.]

• [8:61] Likewise, if bargained for in exchange for the optionor's promise, the optionee's activities in taking steps toward consummation of an eventual purchase (e.g., consulting with lending institutions regarding financing of proposed development, commencing surveys of the property, etc.) may be sufficient consideration. [Cf. Kelley v. Rouse (1961) 188 CA2d 92, 96-98, 10 CR 235, 238-239 (not sufficient consideration under the facts because not bargained for between the parties)]

• [8:62] And an optionee's part performance of a bargained-for promise to seek a parcel split created sufficient consideration to render an option to purchase a 10-acre parcel irrevocable even though the optionee was entitled to revoke the transaction at any time and for any reason. [See Steiner v. Thexton (2010) 48 C4th 411, 421-422, 106 CR3d 252, 261]

"It is true that [the optionee's] promise to undertake the burden and expense of seeking a parcel split may have been illusory at the time the agreement was entered into, given the language of the escape clause. However, there can be no dispute that [the optionee] subsequently undertook substantial steps toward obtaining the parcel split and incurred significant expenses doing so. . [T]he only possible conclusion is that [the optionee] both conferred a bargained-for benefit on [the optionor] and suffered bargained-for prejudice unaffected by his power to cancel, making up for the initially illusory nature of his promise." [Steiner v. Thexton, supra, 48 C4th at 422, 106 CR3d at 261]

[8:63 - 8:64] Reserved.

(b) [8:65] Compare—insufficient consideration: On the other hand, legally-"sufficient" consideration was found lacking in the following cases:

• [8:66] A purported option agreement that gives the optionee the right to a full refund of a cash deposit in the event the optionee decides not to exercise the option is not based on any consideration and thus is not an enforceable option contract. [See Torlai v. Lee (1969) 270 CA2d 854, 859, 76 CR 239, 242—no consideration where optionee's $2,000 deposit was contingent on his approval of subject building and leases and fully refundable if optionee did not approve; Allen v. Smith (2002) 94 CA4th 1270, 1280, 114 CR2d 898, 905—option not supported by independent consideration where optionee entitled to return of deposit if inspection contingencies not satisfied]

—. [8:67] Comment: The cases at ¶ 8:66 may seem at odds with the result in Kowal v. Day, supra (where optionee's giving optionor use of its auto during the option period was sufficient consideration even though optionee had the right to a return of the auto upon electing not to exercise the option).

The distinction probably rests in the fact that the optionor in Kowal had the benefit of the use of the optionee's property until the optionee elected not to exercise the option; in the other cases, by contrast, because the optionees' cash consideration was fully refundable, the optionor obtained no benefit at all. [See also Seymour v. Shaeffer (1947) 82 CA2d 823, 825, 187 P2d 95, 97 (disapproved on other grounds by Ellis v. Mihelis (1963) 60 C2d 206, 216, 32 CR 415, 421 & distinguished in Kowal)—prospective buyer's transfer of refundable deposit by check to escrow holder insufficient consideration because check could not be cashed by optionor]

• [8:68] A purported option agreement fails as an enforceable contract when the optionee's alleged consideration was neither bargained for nor given in exchange for the optionor's continuing offer to sell. Thus, e.g., a prospective buyer's effort in endeavoring to obtain approval for rezoning and subdivision is not consideration for an option agreement when the seller never agreed to accept it as such. [Prather v. Vasquez (1958) 162 CA2d 198, 205, 327 P2d 963, 967-968]

Similarly, a prospective buyer's acts of canceling another lease, contracting to lease a portion of a building to another, ordering blueprints for remodeling, purchasing business stationery for a new address, etc., are "not the type of detrimental reliance that satisfies the consideration requirement because they were not bargained for …" [Kowal v. Day (1971) 20 CA3d 720, 726, 98 CR 118, 121 (emphasis added)]

b. [8:70] Presumption of sufficient consideration: By statute, "a written instrument is presumptive evidence of a consideration." [Civ.C. § 1614; see Hersh v. Garau (1933) 218 C 460, 467, 23 P2d 1022, 1025—presumption applies to written options]

But the mere written recital of a consideration is not conclusive; the statutory presumption is rebuttable, although the burden of showing a lack of sufficient consideration lies with the party seeking to avoid the option contract (Civ.C. § 1615; Hersh v. Garau, supra, 218 C at 467, 23 P2d at 1025). [See Prather v. Vasquez (1958) 162 CA2d 198, 204, 327 P2d 963, 967—"The true consideration or lack of consideration for a contract may always be shown"]

c. [8:71] Effect of lack of consideration: Absent consideration, a purported option agreement is no more than a continuing offer to sell that, like any other offer, is revocable by the offeror-owner at any time (prior to communication of an effective acceptance). [See Steiner v. Thexton (2010) 48 C4th 411, 420, 106 CR3d 252, 260; Torlai v. Lee (1969) 270 CA2d 854, 858-859, 76 CR 239, 241-242—"option without consideration is not binding on either party until actually exercised and is not a contract ..." (emphasis added)]

[8:72 - 8:74] Reserved.

4. [8:75] Compliance With Statute of Frauds: Like a purchase and sale agreement, an option to purchase real property falls within the statute of frauds and therefore must be in writing, signed by the "party to be charged" (Civ.C. § 1624(a)(3)—agreement "for the sale of real property, or of an interest therein"). [Pacific Southwest Develop. Corp. v. Western Pac. R.R. Co. (1956) 47 C2d 62, 66, 301 P2d 825, 828; see Woods v. Bradford (1967) 254 CA2d 501, 505, 62 CR 391, 393; see also Chevron U.S.A. Inc. v. Schirmer (9th Cir. 1993) 11 F3d 1473, 1477 (decided under Ariz. statute of frauds)—oral agreement ineffective to extend duration of expired option or to create new enforceable option]

Cross-refer: For a detailed discussion of the statute of frauds in connection with real property purchase and sale agreements, see ¶ 4:263 ff.

FORM: Option Agreement, see Form 8:A.

a. [8:76] "Material" terms: Broadly, to satisfy the statute of frauds (as well as general contract law), all "material" terms of the option agreement must be identified in the written instrument. Notably, the written option agreement must:

- Identify the parties (Malerbi & Associates v. Seivert (1961) 191 CA2d 760, 762, 12 CR 852, 853);

- Identify the property (Ganiats Const., Inc. v. Hesse (1960) 180 CA2d 377, 384, 4 CR 706, 710—option must sufficiently describe the property, "in terms or by reference," so that it can be ascertained without resort to parol evidence; and see ¶ 4:270.7 re sufficiency of description in purchase and sale agreement);

- Specify the duration of the option term;

- State the purchase price for the property (Stockwell v. Lindeman (1964) 229 CA2d 750, 755-756, 40 CR 555, 558; see ¶ 8:77); and

- State the terms and conditions of the contemplated purchase and sale (Roven v. Miller (1959) 168 CA2d 391, 399, 335 P2d 1035, 1041).

b. [8:77] Certainty of terms: The material terms must be sufficiently definite and certain to render the option capable of enforcement by specific performance (see generally, Civ.C. § 3390(e)). Notably, a statement of the purchase price, or an ascertainable standard for determining the price, is essential (e.g., option stating purchase price to be "fair market value" is sufficiently definite and certain). [See Goodwest Rubber Corp. v. Munoz (1985) 170 CA3d 919, 921, 216 CR 604, 605—option enforceable if purchase price specifically stated in agreement or if "practicable mode is provided for the court to determine price without any new expression by the parties themselves"]

(1) [8:78] "To be agreed upon" fatally uncertain: If all the material terms are not identified or, if material terms are left for future negotiation or agreement (e.g., option offering right to purchase on terms "to be agreed upon"), the option is fatally uncertain and thus not enforceable. [Ablett v. Clauson (1954) 43 C2d 280, 284, 272 P2d 753, 756]

When an essential element is reserved for the parties' future agreement, no enforceable contract arises until such future agreement. "Since either party by the terms of the promise may refuse to agree to anything to which the other party will agree, it is impossible for the law to affix any obligation to such a promise." [Ablett v. Clauson, supra, 43 C2d at 284, 272 P2d at 756; see Roven v. Miller (1959) 168 CA2d 391, 399, 335 P2d 1035, 1041—option agreement leaving essential term to future agreement "is not enforceable"]

For example:

- [8:78.1] Option provisions requiring future agreement as to what improvements would be required in development of property retained by sellers and as to their cost and its apportionment were fatally uncertain. [Roven v. Miller (1959) 168 CA2d 391, 399, 335 P2d 1035, 1041]
- [8:78.2] An option to purchase for a sum certain "payable as mutually agreed by both parties" was unenforceable since the payment terms were defectively uncertain. [Roberts v. Adams (1958) 164 CA2d 312, 314-320, 330 P2d 900, 901-906]
- [8:78.3] An option agreement leaving the amount of monthly payments "to be agreed upon at the time of the purchase" was fatally "incomplete, uncertain or indefinite in its material terms." [Bonk v. Boyajian (1954) 128 CA2d 153, 156, 274 P2d 948, 950-951]

(2) [8:79] Time and manner of payment: Like a real estate purchase and sale agreement (see ¶ 4:270.3), a real estate purchase option contract is enforceable even if the time and manner of payment are not specified. Absent express provisions in the option contract itself, custom and reason determine such nonessential terms. [See Patel v. Liebermensch (2008) 45 C4th 344, 346, 86 CR3d 366, 367—straightforward real estate option contract fully enforceable despite fact manner and time of payment left open]

(3) [8:79.1] Application of option to unidentified after-acquired property: Property acquired by the optionor after execution of the option agreement may be deemed within its scope, although not specifically described therein, so long as the agreement provides the "means or key" by which the property can be identified through parol evidence. [Alameda Belt Line v. City of Alameda (2003) 113 CA4th 15, 22, 5 CR3d 879, 884—contractual provision giving buyer option to purchase property "including all extensions thereof" was sufficient "means or key" by which parol evidence could be used to define subject property (discussed further at ¶ 4:270.8)]

5. [8:80] Assignability: Generally, options to purchase are fully assignable unless (a) the option agreement specifically bars or limits assignability (see ¶ 8:180); or (b) the optionee's "performance involves elements personal to the parties." [Masterson v. Sine (1968) 68 C2d 222, 229-230, 65 CR 545, 549; see also Altman v. Blewett (1928) 93 CA 516, 525, 269 P 751, 755]

a. [8:81] Agreements barring assignment: An option expressly prohibiting assignment may not be assigned without the optionor's prior approval (Prichard v. Kimball (1923) 190 C 757, 764-765, 214 P 863, 866) or the optionor's subsequent ratification (Ray Thomas, Inc. v. Cowan (1929) 99 CA 140, 145, 277 P 1086, 1088—ratification when optionor delivered to escrow holder deed executed in favor of assignee).

b. [8:82] Assignment of tenant's option to purchase: An option to purchase is sometimes granted in leasing transactions as part of the tenant's benefits under the lease. Unless the lease provides otherwise, the option to purchase may be transferred by the tenant independent of the tenant's leasehold interest. [Spaulding v. Yovino-Young (1947) 30 C2d 138, 141, 180 P2d 691, 692]

Of course, unless the parties otherwise agree, a tenant's assignment of its interest in a lease also transfers any option rights the tenant may have within the lease.

Cross-refer: For a detailed discussion of assignability of leasehold interests (Civ.C. § 1995.010 et seq.), see ¶ 7:60 ff.

➪ [8:83] PRACTICE POINTER: A tenant optionee's rights pursuant to an option to purchase are often conditioned on the tenant not being in default under the lease. Therefore, assignees of the option should be aware that the tenant's (assignor's) breach of the lease could effectively terminate the option after it has been assigned.

By the same token, the landlord's acceptance of rent (or of other performance by the tenant) after the tenant's breach may be deemed to waive the prior breach; in such event, the option remains fully enforceable despite the prior breach. [See Jeong Soon v. Beckman (1965) 234 CA2d 33, 36, 44 CR 190, 192—lessors waived tenants' nonpayment of rent default by continuing to accept tenants' "percentage income" payments and thus could not rest on breach to rescind tenants' option to purchase contained in lease]

c. [8:84] Effect of assignment: An effective assignment by the optionee transfers to the assignee all benefits under the option (including the benefit of all payments toward the contemplated purchase made by the optionee-assignor); and, if the optionor breaches, the assignee is entitled to recover the money paid the optionor by the optionee assignor. [Tatum v. Levi (1931) 117 CA 83, 88, 3 P2d 963, 966]

6. [8:85] Exercise of Option to Purchase: An option to purchase gives the optionee the right to elect to purchase the property —i.e., the right to accept the optionor's offer to sell on specified terms. Whether to accept the offer lies within the optionee's sole discretion. [Steiner v. Thexton (2010) 48 C4th 411, 419, 106 CR3d 252, 259; Beran v. Harris (1949) 91 CA2d 562, 564, 205 P2d 107, 108; see ¶ 8:51]

By electing to accept the optionor's offer and, thus, to purchase the property, the optionee is said to "exercise" its option. An option to purchase turns into an enforceable bilateral purchase and sale agreement only upon its proper exercise within the specified option period (¶ 8:108). [Steiner v. Thexton, supra, 48 C4th at 418, 106 CR3d at 258]

a. [8:85.1] Contract principles apply: Proper exercise of an option is determined by reference to the rules of offer and acceptance … which means, under general contract law, the terms of the exercise (optionee's acceptance) must ordinarily be identical to the terms of the offer. [Arden Group, Inc. v. Burk (1996) 45 CA4th 1409, 1414, 53 CR2d 492, 495]

Consequently, the optionee must give the optionor unconditional and unqualified notice of acceptance on the terms, in the manner and within the time period specified by the option provisions (the optionor's offer to sell). [Erich v. Granoff (1980)

109 CA3d 920, 928, 167 CR 538, 542; see Peebler v. Seawell (1954) 122 CA2d 503, 507, 265 P2d 109, 112—where option required optionee/tenant to pay 1/3 of purchase price down, purported exercise of option without downpayment could not give rise to binding sale contract]

b. [8:86] Method of exercise: Generally, the optionee's exercise of its option can occur by any act or words sufficient under the terms of the option contract. [Murfee v. Porter (1950) 96 CA2d 9, 17-18, 214 P2d 543, 549-550; Callisch v. Farnham (1948) 83 CA2d 427, 430, 188 P2d 775, 777]

(1) [8:87] Specific contract terms control: When the option agreement specifically prescribes a method for exercising the option, the optionee's attempted exercise will be effective only if it complies with the prescribed mechanics (e.g., prescribed method for giving notice of exercise of option). [Palo Alto Town & Country Village, Inc. v. BBTC Co. (1974) 11 C3d 494, 498, 113 CR 705, 706-707; see also United States Postal Service v. Ester (9th Cir. 2016) 836 F3d 1189, 1195-1196 (applying Wash. state law as applicable federal common law to lease with federal government); Callisch v. Farnham (1948) 83 CA2d 427, 430, 188 P2d 775, 777—where contract specifies particular manner of exercising option, optionee's election "must be strictly so made in order to constitute a valid acceptance"; Landberg v. Landberg (1972) 24 CA3d 742, 752, 101 CR 335, 341—"The language of the contract itself controls as to what act or acts constitute an election"]

(a) [8:88] Waiver of contractual terms: However, the optionor, by words or conduct, can waive a contractual provision calling for a specific manner of exercise of the option. [Collins v. Marvel Land Co. (1970) 13 CA3d 34, 40, 91 CR 291, 293-294; see also Lawrence v. Settle (1960) 182 CA2d 386, 389, 6 CR 49, 51]

For example, an optionor waives specified formalities for invoking the option by accepting the exercise of the option without objection or reservation. [Collins v. Marvel Land Co., supra, 13 CA3d at 40, 91 CR at 293-294—oral notice of exercise effective despite provision for written exercise because optionor did not object]

(2) [8:89] Effect where contract silent on mechanics: If the option agreement simply "suggests," but does not explicitly "require," a particular method for exercise of the option, or if it otherwise is silent on the mechanics for exercise, any reasonable method of exercise will be deemed sufficient (see generally, Civ.C. § 1582). [Palo Alto Town & Country Village, Inc. v. BBTC Co. (1974) 11 C3d 494, 498-499, 113 CR 705, 707 & fn. 6; Riverside Fence Co. v. Novak (1969) 273 CA2d 656, 661, 78 CR 536, 539; but see Allen v. Smith (2002) 94 CA4th 1270, 1281, 114 CR2d 898, 905—absence of terms specifying option period and manner of exercise deemed indicia of parties' intent not to create option]

At a minimum, however, some notice or act by the optionee to the optionor is required to the effect that the optionee is in fact electing to exercise the option. "Whatever method the optionee uses to convey to the optionor [that] knowledge …, it must convey the information to the optionor that the option is, in fact, exercised, and the acceptance must correspond with the offer, meeting the offer at all points as it is made." [Schmidt v. Beckelman (1960) 187 CA2d 462, 469, 9 CR 736, 740-741]

(a) [8:90] Manner of giving notice: Many disputes over the proper method of exercising an option concern the manner in which the optionee gives its notice to the optionor:

1) [8:91] Provision for "notice": Where the agreement simply requires "notice" of the optionee's election to exercise the option, the optionee need simply communicate its election to accept. Unless otherwise required by the agreement, the acceptance may be written or oral; "an oral acceptance of a written option to convey real property is valid." [Riverside Fence Co. v. Novak (1969) 273 CA2d 656, 661, 78 CR 536, 539; Lawrence v. Settle (1960) 182 CA2d 386, 388-389, 6 CR 49, 51]

2) [8:92] Provision for "written notice": Where the agreement provides simply that the optionee's notice must be in writing, but neither specifies the manner in which the written notice must be transmitted nor indicates it must be "received" by the optionor within a specified time, the option is properly exercised by depositing the notice of acceptance in the mail (i.e., general "effective upon posting" rule under ordinary contract law regarding communication of offeree's acceptance). The optionor's actual receipt of the optionee's notice is not a prerequisite to effective exercise of the option; in other words, the optionor bears the risk the optionee's notice (once properly deposited in the mail) might never be received. [See Palo Alto Town & Country Village, Inc. v. BBTC Co. (1974) 11 C3d 494, 500-505, 113 CR 705, 708-711 (concerning option to extend lease term); United States Postal Service v. Ester (9th Cir. 2016) 836 F3d 1189, 1196-1197—purchase option remained valid despite minor errors in service of earlier renewal options as lease only required notices be given in writing; compare Wapato Heritage, L.L.C. v. United States (9th Cir. 2011) 637 F3d 1033, 1040 (concerning option to renew lease by giving notice by certified mail, return receipt requested); Jenkins v. Tuneup Masters (1987) 190 CA3d 1, 8, 235 CR 214, 217-218 (same)]

3) [8:93] Compare—conduct not tantamount to "actual notice": On the other hand, where the agreement calls for "written notice" or "actual notice" of the exercise of the option, the requisite notice cannot be inferred by the optionee's conduct. Even if the optionee has spent substantial sums in contemplation of "accepting" the offer and thus creating a binding purchase and sale agreement, unless actual notice is given per the terms and in the manner specified in the option contract, the optionor can refuse to go through with the transaction upon expiration of the option period. [Cf. Bekins Moving & Storage Co. v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America (1985) 176 CA3d 245, 251, 221 CR 738, 740-741 (same re exercise of option to renew lease)]

(b) Tender of performance

1) [8:94] Notice without tender of performance: Unless the option agreement specifies that the optionee buyer's tender of performance (e.g., tender of purchase price or any part thereof) is a condition precedent (or condition concurrent) to exercise of the option, the optionee's notice (in proper form and method) of election to accept the offer suffices to create a bilateral purchase and sale contract even though performance has not yet been tendered. [Abadjian v. Sup.Ct. (Gulf Oil Corp.) (1985) 168 CA3d 363, 373, 214 CR 234, 240; Riverside Fence Co. v. Novak (1969) 273 CA2d 656, 661, 78 CR 536, 539; Erich v. Granoff (1980) 109 CA3d 920, 928-929, 167 CR 538, 542-543]

On the other hand, where the option contract expressly makes tender of performance (e.g., payment of the purchase price or a specified downpayment) a condition precedent to exercise of the option, mere notice of exercise cannot give rise to a binding purchase and sale agreement (absent the optionee's tender of performance, the purported "acceptance" is not a valid acceptance under contract law because it varies from the terms of the offer). [See Wilson v. Ward (1957) 155 CA2d 390, 395, 317 P2d 1018, 1021—exercise of option expressly conditioned on payment of purchase price on or before specified date; Peebler v. Seawell (1954) 122 CA2d 503, 507, 265 P2d 109, 112—exercise of option expressly made subject to 1/3 downpayment]

2) [8:95] Tender of performance without notice: Conversely, unless the option agreement expressly requires actual notice of exercise of the option, the optionee's "acceptance" may be made by a tender of actual performance. [Riverside Fence Co. v. Novak (1969) 273 CA2d 656, 661-663, 78 CR 536, 539-541]

(3) [8:96] Impact of optionee's conditional or qualified "acceptance": Because the law of offer and acceptance applies (¶ 8:85.1), an option clearly is not properly exercised unless the optionee unconditionally "accepts" the terms specified in the option agreement. [See Arden Group, Inc. v. Burk (1996) 45 CA4th 1409, 1414, 53 CR2d 492, 495—"terms of the exercise must ordinarily be identical to terms of the offer"]

However, there is an apparent split of authority on the effect of an optionee's "conditional" or "qualified" acceptance:

(a) [8:97] View that option terminates: Viewing the exercise of an option as the optionee's "acceptance" of the optionor's continuing "offer" to sell, one line of authority strictly adheres to general contract law: Like any conditional or qualified acceptance, an attempt to exercise an option upon terms varying from those offered "is tantamount to the rejection of the original offer and the making of a counteroffer" (see Civ.C. § 1585); consequently, the optionee cannot subsequently accept the rejected offer and convert the same into a binding contract. [Landberg v. Landberg (1972) 24 CA3d 742, 756-758, 101 CR 335, 345-346 (dealing with option to buy stock)—purported unconditional acceptance after prior qualified acceptance, held "a nullity" because prior qualified acceptance constituted rejection of option and "put an end to it"; see also Niles v. Hancock (1903) 140 C 157, 161, 73 P 840, 841-842]

The only exception is where the optionor, in its original offer, or the optionee in its counteroffer, expressly states that, despite the counteroffer, the original offer shall not be terminated. [Landberg v. Landberg, supra, 24 CA3d at 757, 101 CR at 345]

(b) [8:98] View that option remains effective for specified option term: However, arguably better-reasoned authority is contra: A purported exercise of an option that is qualified or made conditional or that introduces new terms, "does not in and of itself terminate the option" if there still remains time during the specified option term in which the "unauthorized qualification or condition may be removed and the option exercised absolutely." [C. Robert Nattress & Assocs. v. CIDCO (1986) 184 CA3d 55, 67, 229 CR 33, 39 (emphasis added)]

The theory is that, in the case of an option (unlike an offer and acceptance in the formation of contracts generally) a "contract" already exists in the form of the optionor's binding obligation to keep the "offer" open for a specified period of time—i.e., "the so-called 'offer' is truly irrevocable during the term of the option." Thus, while an attempted exercise of an option on new or different terms cannot amount to an "acceptance" of the offer, the irrevocable offer itself remains in existence unless otherwise expired by its terms. [C. Robert Nattress & Associates v. CIDCO, supra, 184 CA3d at 67, 229 CR at 39; see also Riverside Fence Co. v. Novak (1969) 273 CA2d 656, 662, 78 CR 536, 540-541—option properly exercised by timely good faith tender of performance (though allegedly at variance with option terms) where optionor purposefully refused to apprise optionee of deficiencies in order to prevent timely exercise of option]

c. [8:100] Time for exercise: The time-frame within which the option must be exercised is as important as the method of exercise (¶ 8:86 ff.) and is considered an essential term of the option agreement. [Allen v. Smith (2002) 94 CA4th 1270, 1280, 114 CR2d 898, 905] The optionor's continuing, irrevocable offer to sell expires by its own terms on the date specified in the option agreement (or, within a reasonable time if no date is specified; see ¶ 8:101).

It follows that the optionee bears the burden of exercising the option both in the manner specified and within the time permitted by the option agreement. [Bourdieu v. Baker (1935) 6 CA2d 150, 159-161, 44 P2d 587, 590-591]

(1) [8:101] Effect if no time limit specified: An option agreement is enforceable despite its failure to specify an expiration date; but in that event, the option must be exercised within a "reasonable time" under the circumstances. [Bergin v. Van Der Steen (1951) 107 CA2d 8, 13-14, 236 P2d 613, 617; Murfee v. Porter (1950) 96 CA2d 9, 18, 214 P2d 543, 549; but see Allen v. Smith (2002) 94 CA4th 1270, 1281, 114 CR2d 898, 905—absence of terms specifying option period and manner of exercise indicia of parties' intent not to create option]

(a) [8:102] Rule against perpetuities no bar: The Uniform Statutory Rule Against Perpetuities (Prob.C. § 21200 et seq.) generally voids any "nonvested property interest" unless (a) when the interest is created, it is "certain to vest or terminate no later than 21 years after the death of an individual then alive"; or (b) the interest "either vests or terminates within 90 years after its creation." [Prob.C. § 21205]

Nonetheless, as a practical matter, this should not affect the validity of most option agreements:

1) [8:102.1] Option term rarely exceeds perpetuities deadlines: First of all, option agreements rarely provide for so extensive a term of exercise as to implicate the perpetuities limitations.

2) [8:102.2] Statutory exemptions: Most nonvested property interests arising out of nondonative transfers are exempted from the statutory rule against perpetuities (see Prob.C. § 21225).

• [8:102.3] Comment: Loose drafting of Prob.C. § 21200 et seq. has raised some question whether, by exempting specified transactions from the statutory rule, the Legislature meant for those transactions to remain subject to the common law rule against perpetuities. No reported California decision to date has addressed the issue. [Cf. Shaver v. Clanton (1994) 26 CA4th 568, 574, 31 CR2d 595, 599—commercial lease granting perpetual options to renew exempt from statutory rule against perpetuities pursuant to Prob.C. § 21225(a) (court never considered whether common law rule should apply)]

3) [8:102.4] Implied reasonable deadline for exercise: Moreover, even if no fixed deadline for exercise or termination is specified, the "reasonable time" outside limit (¶ 8:101) necessarily will be construed to mandate an option term within the perpetuities period. [See generally, Prob.C. § 21220—court reformation of "disposition" to avoid violating rule against perpetuities]

➪ [8:103] PRACTICE POINTER—SPECIFY CALENDAR DATE DEADLINE: While the failure to fix a deadline for exercise is not necessarily fatal to enforcement of an option agreement, it makes sense to specify a precise outside date and thereby foreclose the possibility of dispute over timeliness of the optionee's "acceptance"; i.e., what is a "reasonable time" in the circumstances may itself invite litigation.

Prudence suggests that the agreement set forth a specific calendar date as the deadline for exercise of the option (rather than expressing the deadline in terms of days or months—e.g., "90 days" or "three months"), after which the option will terminate. This approach will avoid dispute as to whether the first day, last day or a holiday is included when counting days or months for exercise of the option; it also circumvents dispute over arguably ambiguous contract language. [See, e.g., Wilson v. Gentile (1992) 8 CA4th 759, 760-761, 768, 10 CR2d 713, 718-719—lease required purchase option to be exercised "within 30 days prior to the expiration" of option period: optionor argued such language required exercise of option "no later than" 30 days before option period expires (so that optionee's exercise would have been untimely); court concluded language instead allowed exercise of option during 30-day period immediately preceding expiration of option (so that option was timely exercised 7 days before option period expired)]

Also, though not legally required, it makes sense to clarify in the agreement that if the option is not exercised within the specified option term, it will expire automatically and without further notice by any party.

(2) [8:104] Effect of expiration of deadline: If a specified deadline for exercise of the option passes without the optionee's exercise or if, though no deadline is specified, the option is not exercised within a "reasonable time," the option terminates and the optionee has no rights under the agreement. [Plaza Freeway Ltd. Partnership v. First Mountain Bank (2000) 81 CA4th 616, 629, 96 CR2d 865, 874—defendant who failed to exercise option to renew lease within contractually-specified one-year period before termination date guilty of unlawful detainer]

A tardy or belated attempt to exercise the option is ineffective to create a binding bilateral purchase and sale agreement. [Wightman v. Hall (1923) 62 CA 632, 634, 217 P 580, 580-581; Rice Lands & Products Co. v. Blevins (1923) 61 CA 536, 541, 215 P 402, 405; see also Chevron U.S.A. Inc. v. Schirmer (9th Cir. 1993) 11 F3d 1473, 1477 (same under Ariz. law)]

(a) [8:105] "Minor" delays may be excused: However, there are cases excusing "minor" delays in the exercise of an option so long as the optionor will not incur any hardship thereby and has been compensated by the optionee for the delay. [Holiday Inns of America, Inc. v. Knight (1969) 70 C2d 327, 331, 74 CR 722, 725 (relief from forfeiture, see below)]

This result is consistent with Civ.C. § 3275, which provides that when one party would incur a forfeiture "by reason of his failure to comply with … [the contract's] provisions, he may be relieved therefrom, upon making full compensation to the other party." [Holiday Inns of America, Inc. v. Knight, supra, 70 C2d at 329-330, 74 CR at 724]

(b) [8:106] Waiver of time limit: In any event, strict compliance with a deadline for exercise of the option will be deemed waived if the optionor, by words or conduct, led the optionee to believe the deadline would not be enforced. [See Leonhardi-Smith, Inc. v. Cameron (1980) 108 CA3d 42, 47-48, 166 CR 135, 137-138 (option to renew lease)]

(3) [8:106.5] Effect of "time of essence" clause: A "time of the essence" clause (¶ 4:535 ff.) is of no legal consequence in an option contract. Rather, on lapse of the option period, the optionor's irrevocable offer to sell terminates (¶ 8:115), completely ending the matter. [Allen v. Smith (2002) 94 CA4th 1270, 1281, 114 CR2d 898, 905]

d. [8:107] Optionor's interference as defense to defective exercise of option: An optionor cannot defeat the irrevocable feature of its option contract (irrevocable offer to sell on specified terms) by taking action to preclude or impede the optionee from timely exercising the option. "The optionor's good faith is a relevant consideration; his evasion or prevention of exercise of the option may excuse tender of performance and other conditions precedent to acceptance." The optionee's remedy in such event is an action for specific performance. [Riverside Fence Co. v. Novak (1969) 273 CA2d 656, 662-663, 78 CR 536, 540 (emphasis added)—optionor's evasive conduct calculated to prevent timely exercise of option barred optionor from asserting untimely or improper exercise of option; Murfee v. Porter (1950) 96 CA2d 9, 18, 214 P2d 543, 549]

e. Effect of optionee's proper exercise

(1) [8:108] Bilateral purchase and sale contract created: Timely and proper exercise of an option (the optionee's unconditional, unqualified acceptance of the offer in accordance with the terms of the option and within the time span stated in the option contract) converts the unilateral option agreement into a bilateral contract of purchase and sale under which the optionor is obligated to sell and the optionee is obligated to purchase the property on the terms and conditions set forth in the option agreement (¶ 8:45). [See Steiner v. Thexton (2010) 48 C4th 411, 418, 106 CR3d 252, 258; Wachovia Bank v. Lifetime Indus., Inc. (2006) 145 CA4th 1039, 1049-1050, 52 CR3d 168, 175-176; Auslen v. Johnson (1953) 118 CA2d 319, 322, 257 P2d 664, 666]

Upon exercise, the option technically ceases to exist and is merged into the purchase and sale agreement. [Schomaker v. Osborne (1967) 250 CA2d 887, 893, 58 CR 827, 830]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(2) [8:109] Payment of purchase price: Creation of the bilateral purchase and sale agreement obligates the optionee buyer to pay the specified purchase price. However, unless the option agreement expressly provides otherwise (¶ 8:94), the purchase price is not required to be paid upon exercise of the option. [See Erich v. Granoff (1980) 109 CA3d 920, 928-929, 167 CR 538, 542-543] Instead, the option agreement usually contains a provision specifying the mechanics for consummating the purchase and sale—e.g., the creation of an escrow.

(a) [8:110] "Reasonable time" if no time stated: If the option agreement does not fix a deadline for tendering the purchase price, a reasonable time is allowed. [Patel v. Liebermensch (2008) 45 C4th 344, 346, 86 CR3d 366, 367 & fn. 2—time of payment may be determined by reference to "custom and reason" when contract is silent; Crocker v. Grandi (1961) 189 CA2d 431, 437, 11 CR 330, 334—payment must be tendered within "reasonable time after exercise of the option"; see also Civ.C. § 1657—in absence of specified time for performance, reasonable period is allowed]

(b) [8:111] Waiver of delay: The burden is on the optionor to object to any purported delay in tender of payment. Otherwise, delay in the tender will be deemed waived. [Crocker v. Grandi (1961) 189 CA2d 431, 436-437, 11 CR 330, 334]

(3) [8:112] Effect on intervening claimants ("relation-back" rule): When the option is properly exercised, the optionee's right to purchase relates back to the time the option was granted: Subsequent purchasers and encumbrancers with notice of the option take subject to the optionee's right to complete the purchase; the title received upon consummation of the purchase and sale agreement extinguishes the interests of intervening parties. [Wachovia Bank v. Lifetime Indus., Inc. (2006) 145 CA4th 1039, 1050, 52 CR3d 168, 176; see further discussion at ¶ 8:123 ff.]

(4) [8:113] Compare—exercise of option does not pass title: Proper exercise of the option does not itself pass title to the property and thus does not itself extinguish intervening interests (see ¶ 8:112). The optionee/buyer obtains title, and thus the benefit of the "relation-back" rule (¶ 8:112), only when the purchase and sale transaction is completed pursuant to exercise of the option. [Wachovia Bank v. Lifetime Indus., Inc. (2006) 145 CA4th 1039, 1053, 52 CR3d 168, 178; see also ¶ 8:123 ff.]

[8:114] Reserved.

7. Termination/Expiration of Option

a. [8:115] Default by optionee or lapse of option term: The right to exercise an option terminates upon either (1) a default by the optionee which, pursuant to the terms of the option agreement, extinguishes the optionee's rights; or (2) expiration of the option term before the optionee's exercise.

In other words, like any "offer" in the formation of a contract, an option expires by its own terms upon the optionee's (offeree's) failure to communicate a timely acceptance. [See generally, Civ.C. § 1587, subd. 2—"A proposal is revoked … [b]y the lapse of time prescribed in such proposal for its acceptance, or if no time is so prescribed, the lapse of a reasonable time without communication of the acceptance"]

(1) [8:116] Optionor's offer effectively revoked: Termination/expiration of the option effectively "revokes" the optionor's continuing offer to sell on the stated terms because the offer has not been properly/timely accepted. [Auslen v. Johnson (1953) 118 CA2d 319, 322, 257 P2d 664, 666; Rosenaur v. Pacelli (1959) 174 CA2d 673, 676-677, 345 P2d 102, 105-106]

(2) [8:117] No notice required: Pursuant to the optionee's default or lapse of the option term (¶ 8:115 ff.), the option expires by its own terms, by operation of law. No special notice need be given by the optionor upon lapse of the option term. [Auslen v. Johnson (1953) 118 CA2d 319, 322, 257 P2d 664, 666; Rosenaur v. Pacelli (1959) 174 CA2d 673, 676-677, 345 P2d 102, 105-106]

(3) [8:118] Optionor's remedy to clear title upon expiration: In the event an option has not been timely exercised and the optionee refuses or fails to remove its option of record, the optionor's remedy to clear title to the property is to maintain a quiet title action (¶ 11:526 ff.). [See, e.g., Krobitzsch v. Middleton (1946) 72 CA2d 804, 165 P2d 729, 730]

b. [8:119] Compare—option *not terminated by optionor's or optionee's death: Unless the option agreement otherwise provides, the optionor's death does not terminate the option; the optionee may still exercise the option against the optionor's estate (see Prob.C. § 9860 et seq.). [Bard v. Kent (1942) 19 C2d 449, 451, 122 P2d 8, 10—so long as consideration given, option "is a contract binding upon the offeror and upon his successors in interest after death"; see also Bewick v. Mecham (1945) 26 C2d 92, 95-96, 156 P2d 757, 759-760; O'Donnell v. Lutter (1945) 68 CA2d 376, 385, 156 P2d 958, 962]

Likewise, an optionee's rights survive the optionee's death; the option becomes an asset of the deceased optionee's estate and may be exercised by the personal representative. [Prob.C. § 9734; see also Ross & Cohen, Cal. Prac. Guide: Probate (TRG), Ch. 13]

c. [8:120] Damage, destruction or condemnation of property: Although there appears to be no case law directly on point, presumably the rights of the parties in the event the property is damaged, destroyed or condemned pending exercise of the option are governed by the Uniform Vendor and Purchaser Risk Act (Civ.C. § 1662) … unless the parties have otherwise agreed. Thus, material damage to or destruction of the property may effectively terminate the option agreement, the optionor seller bearing the risk of loss until title or possession is transferred (Civ.C. § 1662(a)). See more detailed discussion at ¶ 4:475 ff.

(1) [8:120.1] Effect of provision authorizing cancellation of optionee's lease? In an analogous situation, it has been held that a lease provision giving the landowner/lessor the right to cancel the lease in the event of damage to or destruction of the property at or near the end of the lease term prevails over the tenant's right to exercise an agreed-upon option to extend the term. [11382 Beach Partnership v. Libaw (1999) 70 CA4th 212, 216-218, 82 CR2d 533, 535-536; see ¶ 7:155.5]

Whether the landowner's contractual right to cancel the lease would also preempt the exercise of a companion option to purchase held by the tenant is unclear. (The most prudent step, of course, is to account for such a contingency in the option agreement; see ¶ 8:121.)

➪ [8:121] PRACTICE POINTER: As in drafting a purchase and sale agreement, it always makes sense to expressly account for the possibility of damage, destruction or condemnation and explicitly spell out the parties' respective rights under such circumstances. See ¶ 4:480 ff.

(2) [8:122] Optionee's "compensable" interest in condemnation proceedings (*before exercising option): Even if the option agreement does not address the issue, case law indicates an optionee under an unexercised option may have a valuable property right that is compensable in condemnation proceedings. [See County of San Diego v. Miller (1975) 13 C3d 684, 693, 119 CR 491, 496; and ¶ 8:52]

(3) [8:122.1] Optionee's "burden" in condemnation proceedings (*after exercising option): In what turned out to be an unusual situation, an optionee sought specific performance of a commercial lease agreement that gave it the option to purchase the underlying property at its fair market value. The optionee and seller disagreed as to the property's value and requested a judicial determination so the transaction could be completed. After years of litigation and an appeal, the trial court determined the property's fair market value, provided the optionee and seller with various credits for rents paid and loss of use of the sale proceeds, and ordered the parties in an amended judgment to complete the transaction. The court's amended judgment also required the seller to deliver title to the property "free and clear of all encumbrances." The optionee filed a second appeal from the amended judgment, arguing it was entitled to certain additional financial reductions and offsets. The court rejected this argument and affirmed the amended judgment. [Petrolink, Inc. v. Lantel Enterprises (2022) 81 CA5th 156, 159-160, 296 CR3d 731, 732-733]

Eleven days later, Caltrans filed an eminent domain action against the property and the optionee refused to close escrow unless the seller deposited into escrow unencumbered title to the property (an impossibility since the seller had no control over Caltrans' action). The trial court granted the seller's motion to compel performance notwithstanding the encumbrance on title. [Petrolink, Inc. v. Lantel Enterprises, supra, 81 CA5th at 160-161, 296 CR3d at 733-734]

In yet a third appeal, the appellate court determined the trial court, by exercising its equitable powers, properly modified the amended judgment to require the optionee to complete the transaction despite the encumbrance on title. The optionee had been in possession of the property during the entire litigation, and "if the parties had not been litigating this case for approximately a decade, [optionee] would not only have been in possession of the property, but would also have been the owner of record of the property at the time the Caltrans action was filed." [Petrolink, Inc. v. Lantel Enterprises, supra, 81 CA5th at 161, 171, 296 CR3d at 732-734, 742]

8. [8:123] Priority and Perfection; "Relation-Back": The optionee's rights as against intervening purchasers, encumbrancers, etc. are fixed as of the date the option is recorded (¶ 8:126); the intervening claimants take subject to the first-in-time optionee's right to complete the purchase. Thus, the title received pursuant to valid exercise of the option relates back and extinguishes the interests of intervening parties who (by recordation of the option) had notice of the option. [Wachovia Bank v. Lifetime Indus., Inc. (2006) 145 CA4th 1039, 1050, 52 CR3d 168, 176; Claremont Terrace Homeowners' Ass'n v. United States (1983) 146 CA3d 398, 406, 194 CR 216, 221; see Civ.C. § 1213]

➪ [8:124] PRACTICE POINTER: The optionee's priority rights as against subsequent claimants are perfected upon recordation of the option. Technically, therefore, the fact the optionor might have the power to grant subsequent liens or encumbrances should be immaterial to the optionee. Nonetheless, many optionees insist on an express provision in the option agreement barring the landowner from further encumbering the property during the option term. Such a provision will avoid the possibility of dispute with junior encumbrancers as to competing rights of priority.

a. [8:125] "Relation-back" triggered by title transfer pursuant to option: Implicit in the "relation-back" rule (¶ 8:123) is the fact that the optionee actually has received title to the property pursuant to proper exercise of the option. Until title is so transferred, the optionee has only a right to complete the purchase, and intervening interests, while subject to this right (¶ 8:125.1), are not yet extinguished. [Wachovia Bank v. Lifetime Indus., Inc. (2006) 145 CA4th 1039, 1050, 1054-1055, 52 CR3d 168, 176, 179-180 (also discussing rationale for "relation-back" rule)]

(1) [8:125.1] Effect where optionee obtains title outside option purview: If the optionee takes title to the property outside the purview of the option (as where the option had expired, there was a failure of conditions under the option, or there was a material breach by the optionee that would preclude specific performance), the "relation-back" rule does not apply, and the title obtained by the optionee does not extinguish the intervening interests. [Wachovia Bank v. Lifetime Indus., Inc. (2006) 145 CA4th 1039, 1055-1056, 52 CR3d 168, 180]

b. [8:126] Recordation to perfect priority: California recording statutes (Civ.C. § 1213 et seq.) are of the "race-notice" variety (i.e., "first in time, first in right"):

With respect to real property, a conveyance recorded first generally has priority over any later-recorded conveyance. Recordation imparts constructive notice "to the world"; and whoever records first in time has priority as against subsequent encumbrancers of record. [Civ.C. §§ 1213, 1214; see Thaler v. Household Finance Corp. (2000) 80 CA4th 1093, 1099, 95 CR2d 779, 783]

An option to purchase is a "conveyance" under Civ.C. §§ 1213 and 1214. [See Civ.C. § 1215—"conveyance" as used in §§ 1213 and 1214 is "every instrument in writing by which any estate or interest in real property is created, aliened, mortgaged, or incumbered, or by which the title to any real property may be affected, except wills"]

Consequently, it is of paramount importance to optionees that the option agreement, or some memorandum thereof, be recorded as soon as possible after its execution.

(1) [8:127] Priority rights of subsequent "bona fide" encumbrancers who record first in time: Any purchaser or encumbrancer who takes its interest without actual knowledge of the option and who records its conveyancing instrument prior to the optionee's recordation of the option, is a "bona fide" purchaser/encumbrancer who takes free and clear of the option. [Civ.C. § 1214—"Every conveyance of real property … is void as against any subsequent purchaser or mortgagee of the same property … in good faith and for a valuable consideration, whose conveyance is first duly recorded"]

(a) [8:128] Compare—subordination by actual notice of prior option: Notwithstanding the optionee's failure to record its interest, any subsequent transferee who has actual knowledge of the option is not a "bona fide" purchaser/encumbrancer and thus is subordinated to the option created first in time. Reason: Once the option is exercised, the optionee's title "relates back" to the date of the giving of the option. [Anthony v. Enzler (1976) 61 CA3d 872, 876, 132 CR 553, 557]

➪ [8:129] PRACTICE POINTER: It is risky for optionees to rely on any other party's "actual notice" of the option. Again, recording imparts constructive notice to all subsequent purchasers/encumbrancers, regardless of whether they otherwise have reason to know of a preexisting option agreement affecting the property.

(2) [8:130] Contents of recorded document: The optionee's priority rights are perfected by properly recording either the option agreement or a memorandum thereof. In either case, the document should be prepared with the same degree of diligence used in the preparation of any conveyancing instrument. Notably, the optionee should make certain that:

- The purported grantor of the option is, in fact, the holder of the entire fee interest in the property and has the authority to grant the option (see ¶ 4:130 ff.).

- The document completely and correctly states the legal description of the property.

• The document contains an affirmative "grant" to the optionee.

• The option term is specified.

(a) [8:131] Subsequent recordation of extensions: In addition, any agreement to extend the option term should be reduced to a signed writing and itself be recorded before expiration of the initial term.

(b) [8:132] Compare—nonessential terms: It is not important to perfection of the optionee's priority rights that the recorded option agreement or memorandum specify the purchase and sale terms (price, financing, etc.).

➪ [8:133] PRACTICE POINTER—RECORDING OPTION AGREEMENT VS. MEMORANDUM OF AGREEMENT: It is a judgment call whether the optionee should record the entire option agreement or simply a memorandum thereof noting the essential terms mentioned at ¶ 8:130. The advantage of recording a mere memorandum of the option is that the specific terms of the underlying purchase and sale transaction (set forth in the option agreement) will not become a public record (as they would if the entire option agreement were recorded). As a practical matter, most prospective sellers and buyers do not want the terms of their deal made public.

• Option Agreement, see Form 8:A.

• Memorandum of Option to Purchase, see Form 8:B.

[8:134] Reserved.

9. [8:135] Title Insurance: Title insurance insuring the priority of the option is available and, indeed, advisable. (See detailed discussion of title insurance in Ch. 3.)

a. [8:136] Policy limit: The difficult issue is what policy limit the optionee should obtain.

The most logical method for determining an appropriate policy limit is to calculate the optionee's loss should the option be deemed entirely unenforceable. Ultimately, the policy limit amount is subject to negotiation between title insurer and optionee; but, in any event, a title carrier generally will never insure an option for an amount in excess of the stated purchase price.

b. [8:137] Who pays: In connection with purchase and sale transactions, who pays the cost of a buyer's title insurance policy is typically a matter of customary regional practice (in Northern California, the buyer pays; in Southern California, the seller pays). However, there is no apparent customary practice in connection with title policies insuring the priority of an option. Consequently, the subject is typically left to negotiation between the parties.

➪ [8:138] PRACTICE POINTER: Title insurance insures the optionee's priority only as against subsequent purchasers, lienholders and encumbrancers; if the option is exercised, the optionee purchaser will acquire the property subject to preexisting liens. Thus, the optionee should be satisfied with the existing condition of title before entering into the option agreement so as to make certain the option will be subject only to those liens and encumbrances that are acceptable to the optionee. (For example, an option may be valueless if it is subject to a senior right of first refusal or a senior option.)

[8:139] Reserved.

10. Removing Options of Record

a. [8:140] Optionee's quitclaim deed: For so long as an option remains of record, it clouds the property owner's title; naturally, therefore, the optionor will want the cloud removed as soon as possible after an option expires unexercised. This may be accomplished by the optionee's executing a quitclaim deed, or some other form of written relinquishment of the option interest (or written confirmation of termination of the option) which can then be recorded.

(1) [8:141] Advance execution of quitclaim deed to avoid dilemma of unwilling optionee; drawbacks: Of course, the optionor may encounter a recalcitrant optionee who delays or refuses to execute the deed or other appropriate instrument releasing its interest in a timely manner. In such cases, the optionor may have to file a quiet title action (see ¶ 8:118). However, this dilemma can be avoided at the outset when the option is first negotiated:

One approach is to have the optionee execute a quitclaim deed at the time the option is granted. The deed could be held by the optionor or some independent third party, such as an escrow, with instructions that it be recorded upon expiration of the option.

(a) [8:142] Comment—escrow impediments to recordation of grant deed: Even this approach, however, has its drawbacks: In all likelihood, the escrow holder will not record the quitclaim deed should there be some dispute between the parties as to whether the option has expired. In this situation, the escrow holder usually will commence an interpleader action, resulting in increased costs and delays for all parties (see ¶ 4:326, 4:576, 4:591 & 4:647).

➪ [8:143] PRACTICE POINTER: The parties sometimes ask counsel for one or the other to hold the quitclaim deed. From counsel's standpoint, this is not advisable, generally: If any dispute arises between the parties, a lawyer holding the quitclaim deed will become embroiled in the controversy (and, perhaps, made a party to the dispute) and be placed in a conflict of interest position (see generally, CRPC 1.7).

b. [8:144] Statutory expiration "of record": In lieu of initiating a quiet title action to remove the option of record, optionors may rely on a statutory mechanism that automatically expunges unexercised options from the chain of record title (Civ.C. §§ 884.010 & 884.020):

(1) [8:145] Six-month expiration of record: A recorded option expires "of record" six months after its expiration date, provided that date is ascertainable from the recorded instrument, or if no expiration date is specified in or ascertainable from the recorded instrument, then six months following the date the instrument was recorded, unless another instrument extending the option is recorded before such expiration. [Civ.C. § 884.010]

(2) [8:146] Effect of statutory expiration—"constructive notice" terminates: Upon expiration of an option to purchase real property pursuant to Civ.C. § 884.010 (¶ 8:144 ff.), the recorded instrument creating the option ceases to be notice to any person or to put any person on inquiry with respect to the exercise or existence of the option or any contract, conveyance or other writing that may have been executed pursuant to the now-expired option. [Civ.C. § 884.020]

(a) [8:147] Compare—rights as between optionee and optionor; extension agreements: As between optionor and optionee, the option itself does not terminate under Civ.C. §§ 884.010 & 884.020; rather, the option simply expires "of record" (Civ.C. § 884.010). In effect, the statutes simply provide for a statutory expungement of the recorded option, thereby nullifying "constructive notice" as against subsequent "bona fide" purchasers/encumbrancers.

It follows that, if the optionee is able to negotiate an extension of the option agreement, written evidence of the extension should be recorded so as to again ensure the optionee's priority rights over subsequent intervening claimants (see ¶ 8:131).

➪ [8:148] PRACTICE POINTER—TIMELY RECORDATION OF CONVEYANCING INSTRUMENT*: Bear in mind that once a recorded option is exercised, some instrument (conveyancing instrument, purchase contract or some other document evidencing the purchase and sale agreement) should be recorded before the Civ.C. § 884.010 expiration date (¶ 8:145). If the termination date is ascertainable from the recorded option (or memorandum), the additional transfer instrument should be recorded within six months after that date. If no termination date is specified in or ascertainable from the recorded option, the additional transfer instrument should be recorded within six months after the option's recordation date. Otherwise, notwithstanding proper exercise of the option, the optionee will not be protected by the recording statutes as against intervening purchaser/lien claimants.

[8:149] Reserved.

11. [8:150] Tax Concerns—Risk of "Disguised Sale": In reviewing a proposed option, counsel should carefully consider whether it might be deemed a mere "disguised" or "delayed" sale of the property. If a substantial portion of the purchase price is "disguised" as consideration for an option, the transaction might be treated as the consummation of a purchase and sale. This could have a substantial impact on the parties' tax situation. [Cf. Scarbery v. Bill Patch Land & Water Co. (1960) 184 CA2d 87, 99-103, 7 CR 408, 415-417—option may be treated as specifically enforceable purchase and sale agreement where optionee paid more than 75% of agreed value for property as "consideration" for option; see also ¶ 13:50]

12. [8:151] Use of Option as Financing Device—Risk of "Disguised Mortgage": Options to purchase are sometimes structured as mere financing devices:

a. [8:152] Example—sale and leaseback with option: One such scenario occurs where an owner sells their property but leases it back with an option to purchase the fee. In this situation, the original owner/seller (who has now become the tenant/optionee) ultimately pays off what is really a loan from the buyer/optionor when the original owner exercises its option and pays the option price.

Under this arrangement, the buyer/optionor ("lender") has ownership of the property (for purposes of securing payment of the "disguised loan"), while the seller (who is really a borrower and becomes the tenant/optionee) can redeem its ownership interest by paying the loan in the form of the option purchase price. Thus, the seller (borrower) obtains the advantage of a loan and the buyer (lender) obtains the advantage of holding fee title to the property as security. (Under a conventional loan, the lender would, of course, only hold the lien of a trust deed on the property.) Upon the borrower's failure to pay the amount due, the lender will not have to go through the burden of a foreclosure to realize on its collateral.

(1) [8:153] "Disguised mortgage" drawback: The problem with this arrangement is that the buyer/optionor (lender) runs the risk the transaction will be adjudicated a "disguised mortgage" instead of an option to purchase. In that event, the buyer/optionor will be deemed a secured creditor—not an owner. Such claim is typically made by the seller/optionee (borrower) in an effort to hinder or delay the rights of the buyer/optionor (lender). Disputes of this sort can easily escalate into complicated, expensive and time-consuming litigation.

b. [8:154] Example—lender as optionee: Another method of using an option to purchase as a financing device is for the borrower to grant the lender an option to purchase at a reduced price, exercisable upon the borrower's default under its loan.

(1) [8:155] "Disguised mortgage" drawback; risk of invalidity: Where the option is given to a lender who also has a security interest (under trust deed) in the real property collateral, the lender faces a "disguised mortgage" problem; and, at least where the lender's right to exercise the option is dependent on the borrower's default, there is a risk the option will be declared invalid as impairing the borrower's "equity of redemption" (Civ.C. § 2906). [See Wachovia Bank v. Lifetime Indus., Inc. (2006) 145 CA4th 1039, 1057-1059, 52 CR3d 168, 181-183]

Cross-refer: For a detailed discussion of this scenario and its implications under applicable law, see ¶ 6:425 ff.

13. Purchase Agreement With Liquidated Damages Clause Compared

a. [8:156] Distinction: An option to purchase is conceptually similar to a purchase and sale agreement under which the seller's sole remedy in the event of a buyer's breach is the right to recover stipulated liquidated damages. When the parties have liquidated the seller's damages under a purchase and sale agreement, the buyer effectively has the right to refuse to close and walk away from the deal by paying the specified finite sum (i.e., the "liquidated damages" amount); similarly, under an option to purchase, the optionee has paid a finite amount (the "consideration" for the option) for the right to elect whether to purchase the property. [See Allen v. Smith (2002) 94 CA4th 1270, 1278-1279, 114 CR2d 898, 903-904]

Nonetheless, a freely-negotiated option does not constitute liquidated damages in legal effect because the payment obligation does not arise upon a breach of contract by the optionee (prospective buyer) but as an alternative to performance under the option (i.e., the optionee has paid the upfront consideration for the right to purchase instead of entering into a binding bilateral agreement to purchase). [Allen v. Smith (2002) 94 CA4th 1270, 1279, 114 CR2d 898, 904]

(1) [8:156.1] Option vs. purchase and sale agreement tested by "mutuality of obligation": Whether a particular document is a purchase and sale agreement with a liquidated damages clause or an option to purchase supported by independent consideration depends on the nature and terms of the document and the parties' obligation, regardless of how it is identified or labeled. The test is whether there is "mutuality of obligation": If both parties are obligated to perform, it is a purchase and sale agreement; if only one party (the optionor/seller) is obligated to perform, it is an option. [Allen v. Smith (2002) 94 CA4th 1270, 1279, 114 CR2d 898, 904]

b. [8:157] Pros and cons for seller: From a seller's perspective, there are practical advantages and disadvantages to the use of a liquidated damages purchase agreement as a substitute for an option to purchase:

(1) [8:158] Disadvantages: Sellers should consider these drawbacks:

(a) [8:159] Liquidated damages enforcement dependent on proving buyer's breach: To realize the benefit of a liquidated damages clause in a purchase agreement, the seller must still prove the buyer breached the agreement.

By contrast, under an option agreement, the seller has already received consideration in payment for its irrevocable offer; and need not prove a breach of contract as a condition to retaining the consideration.

(b) [8:159.1] Restrictions on validity of liquidated damages: There are both common law and statutory restrictions on the validity of a liquidated damages provision and the maximum sum that may be liquidated (see ¶ 4:315 ff.). The consideration paid for an option, on the other hand, is entirely negotiable; its validity is not tested under the law governing liquidated damages. [See Allen v. Smith (2002) 94 CA4th 1270, 1279, 114 CR2d 898, 904—for that reason, many sellers insist on structuring sale agreement as an option]

(c) [8:160] Escrow impediments to collection of liquidated sum: Also, whereas a seller optionor usually receives the option consideration by advance cash payment, liquidated damages under a purchase agreement are usually deposited with a third party (typically, an escrow holder). Therefore, even if the buyer breaches, the seller faces the practical obstacle of collecting the liquidated sum from the escrow holder. (See ¶ 4:326, 4:633 ff.)

(2) [8:161] Advantages: By the same token, use of a liquidated damages purchase agreement (rather than an option) offers at least one benefit to the seller: Whereas options usually are recorded and thus cloud the seller's title (¶ 8:126 ff., 8:140 ff.), under a purchase contract, there is customarily no recorded encumbrance on the seller's title. Although the buyer under a liquidated damages purchase agreement could commence a specific performance action and record a lis pendens against the property (CCP § 405 et seq., see ¶ 11:300 ff.), unless and until that event occurs, the seller's title remains unclouded.

16. [8:185] Execution and Recordation of Exercise of Option
17. [8:186] Confidentiality
18. [8:187] “Boilerplate” Provisions

[8:165] The sections at ¶ 8:167 ff. summarize the more significant provisions that should, as a matter of prudence, be included in options to purchase. The discussion generally tracks the sample option agreement included at the close of this Chapter as Form 8:A.

➪ [8:166] PRACTICE POINTER: Again, counsel drafting or reviewing proposed options to purchase should bear in mind that the agreement should, if accepted, effectively give rise to an enforceable bilateral purchase and sale agreement without the need for further negotiation. The goal should be to include specific terms, conditions and mechanics applicable to actual consummation of the purchase and sale. Thus, everything from the simple designation of an escrow company to potentially complex issues of seller representations and warranties should be covered in the option agreement. Diligent consideration of the issues discussed in Ch. 4 regarding purchase and sale agreements is therefore equally important when negotiating, structuring and preparing an option agreement.

1. [8:167] Property Description: All property—whether real, personal or intangible—should be described with particularity. [See Ganiats Const., Inc. v. Hesse (1960) 180 CA2d 377, 384, 4 CR 706, 710; and ¶ 8:76]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(For recordation purposes, specification of a complete and accurate legal description of the real property is essential; ¶ 8:130.)

2. Option Term

a. [8:168] Term and date for exercise: The option term should be stated clearly and definitively; and, for the seller's benefit, should provide the option automatically terminates on a fixed date without further notice, documentation or act by any party (see ¶ 8:103).

Similarly, the last calendar (business) day for exercise of the option should be specified so as to leave no room for debate as to when the option term expires (see ¶ 8:103).

➪ [8:169] PRACTICE POINTER: Notwithstanding such provisions, it may still behoove the seller to notify the optionee in writing upon expiration of the option term, thereby foreclosing any argument the option was impliedly extended. (But such notice is not required by law.)

b. [8:170] Release of cloud on title upon termination: Notwithstanding a provision in the option providing for automatic termination, title insurance companies often require that an option be removed of record by a recorded document confirming termination (otherwise, the title company will not issue a title policy). Consequently, for the seller's benefit, the optionee should be required to provide a quitclaim deed, or other written confirmation of termination of the option that can be recorded in the event the option lapses unexercised.

Sellers may want to consider having such a conveyancing instrument held by an independent escrow for recording upon expiration of the option term (although this approach could itself give rise to litigation; see ¶ 8:141 ff.).

3. [8:171] Option Consideration: The consideration to be paid for the option should be stated, along with the time for and method of payment (cash or otherwise). (See ¶ 8:55 ff. regarding legally-“sufficient” consideration.)

4. [8:172] Method of Exercise: Failure to delineate a precise method for exercising the option is one of the most common pitfalls giving rise to optionor-optionee disputes. Therefore, the contemplated manner for exercising the option should be carefully spelled out with particularity (otherwise, any “reasonable manner” of communicating an election to exercise the option will be deemed sufficient; see ¶ 8:89 ff.).

Preferably, the agreement should call for written notice to be delivered (by private courier, telecopier, mail, etc.) to the optionor by a designated date. For example, if mailed noticed is agreed upon, the option should call for delivery by certified mail, return receipt requested; and should also specify such notice is deemed received an agreed-upon number of days after mailing.

5. [8:173] Purchase Price: The purchase price must be clearly identified; and, if applicable, the agreement should reflect what amount of the option consideration is to be applied toward the purchase price. A provision identifying the time for and manner of tender of the purchase price also is advisable, though not essential (see ¶ 8:110).

6. [8:174] Optionee's Access to Property: The optionee's interest in exercising the option will often depend on the results of various tests and studies of the subject property, necessarily requiring extensive and continuing access rights. However, since an option by its nature does not itself give the optionee any interest in or right to possession of the property (¶ 8:53), the agreement should expressly confer appropriate entry and access rights … with the proviso that the optionee indemnify the seller for damage and against any and all liability attributable thereto.

7. [8:175] Optionee's Development Work: Optionees are sometimes interested in obtaining extended option terms in order to commence the processing of various applications for development of the property. The optionee might therefore request the seller's consent and cooperation in applying for various permits and approvals.

For example, since the optionee is not the record owner, the optionee may not be entitled to apply for building permits, zoning variances and other governmentally-issued approvals. The seller may be willing to cooperate by executing appropriate documents to be filed with governmental entities, provided (a) doing so does not bind the seller to any additional obligations and (b) that the mere filing or processing of such applications will not irrevocably commit the property to a particular use or otherwise adversely affect the property's existing use or zoning. (See also ¶ 4:423, 4:540.)

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

8. [8:176] Date for Opening Escrow and Consummating Purchase and Sale: In addition to fixing the time-frame for exercising the option, the agreement should specify the time within which the escrow must be opened and, ultimately, closed. From the seller's perspective, the escrow term should be fairly short, since the optionee has presumably had sufficient time to make its investigation of the property (including the state of title), arrange financing, and otherwise put the transaction in a position to close.

9. [8:177] Escrow and Title Insurance: The escrow company, title insurance company and parties responsible for costs therefor should be identified. The option agreement should also identify those liens and encumbrances to be removed by the seller at the close of escrow. However, the seller may want to reserve the right to encumber the property in any way it desires up until the time the option is exercised.

10. [8:178] Representations and Warranties: The parties should negotiate specific representations and warranties and indicate whether those warranties will be effective after exercise of the option—i.e., whether they will "survive" merger of the option agreement into the bilateral purchase and sale agreement, effectively becoming part of the ultimate purchase contract.

Cross-refer: Representations and warranties are discussed at length in Ch. 4; see ¶ 4:431 ff.

11. [8:179] Leases and Other Recorded Encumbrances and Agreements: Although a recorded option will be senior to subsequent recorded and unrecorded agreements affecting the property (¶ 8:124 ff.), the optionee may wish to have some control over interim leasing or other encumbrancing of the property. Thus, just as with purchase and sale agreements, the optionee may want the right to approve any new leases or other new liens or encumbrances affecting the property (see ¶ 4:410 ff., 4:430).

12. [8:180] Assignability: Generally, an option is freely assignable by the optionee (¶ 8:80). However, if the transaction will be seller-financed, the seller may wish to limit assignability to an assignee of at least equal financial strength to the optionee. In any event, it is always advisable to specifically state whether, and under what conditions, the option is assignable (otherwise, it will be deemed freely assignable without restriction).

13. [8:181] Broker's Commission: The identity of the broker(s) should be disclosed and the parties' respective obligations to pay broker commissions (if any) should be spelled out.

Cross-refer: Listing agreements and broker commissions are treated in detail in Ch. 2.

14. [8:182] Damage, Destruction or Condemnation of Property: The risk of loss due to intervening damage, destruction or condemnation of the optioned property should be negotiated and addressed in the option agreement (see ¶ 8:120 ff., 4:475 ff.).

15. [8:183] Option Extensions: The parties may want to negotiate at the outset for an extension of the option in the event the optionee might still be interested in purchasing the property notwithstanding lapse of the initial option term. In such event, the option agreement should specifically state the consideration to be paid for any right of extension; the method for noticing exercise of the extension; and the deadline for giving notice of such exercise.

Any extension so executed should be promptly recorded (see ¶ 8:131, 8:147).

• [8:184] Comment: Of course, the failure to address a right of extension in an initial option agreement does not foreclose the execution of a new option agreement upon lapse of the former. However, that itself will entail additional negotiations and, undoubtedly, new (and perhaps more onerous) terms. Consequently, it makes sense to address the subject of extension rights at the outset and incorporate appropriate provisions into the initial option agreement.

16. [8:185] Execution and Recordation of Exercise of Option: Because anyone who reviews the chain of title will not otherwise know if an option has been exercised, it may be advisable to require the parties to execute and record a written confirmation of the exercise. This will moot problems that might otherwise arise by the mistaken assumption an option of record has expired pursuant to statute (Civ.C. §§ 884.010 & 884.020, ¶ 8:144 ff.).

17. [8:186] Confidentiality: The parties may be interested in keeping the terms of the ultimate purchase and sale confidential; e.g., such secrecy may be important to an optionee who will soon be negotiating for the purchase of adjoining parcels from different owners. In such event, a confidentiality clause should be included in the agreement; and the optionee should be sure to record only a memorandum of the agreement (rather than the verbatim option agreement; see ¶ 8:133 and Form 8:B).

18. [8:187] "Boilerplate" Provisions: Like purchase and sale contracts, option agreements typically incorporate standardized "boilerplate" provisions (e.g., integration, attorney fees, notice, severability, "further acts," governing law and venue, and definitional provisions). See ¶ 4:525 ff.

Chapter 8. Options to Purchase and Preemptive Purchase Rights

D. Preemptive Purchase Rights—Rights of First Refusal and Rights of First Offer

1. [8:200] Nature and Effect of Preemptive Rights
  a. Option to purchase contrasted
    (1) [8:201] No unilateral right to compel sale
    (2) [8:202] Sale terms set by owner upon election to sell
    (3) [8:203] Owner's election to sell creates option in effect
  b. [8:204] Two types of preemptive purchase rights
    (1) [8:206] "Right of first refusal"
      (a) [8:207] Marketability concerns
      (b) [8:207.1] Modifies statutory right to partition tenancies in common
      (c) [8:207.5] Limited to voluntary sales
        1) [8:207.6] May be triggered by deed in lieu of foreclosure
        2) [8:207.7] Not triggered by condemnation
      (d) [8:207.8] "Bona fide" third party offer required
      (e) [8:207.15] "One-time right"?
      (f) [8:207.16] Right of first refusal in expired lease (holdover tenancy)
    (2) [8:208] "Right of first offer"
      (a) [8:209] Pros and cons for seller
      (b) [8:209.1] Combined with "right of first refusal"
      (c) [8:209.2] Changed conditions and forfeiture doctrine
  c. [8:210] Preemptive rights usually tied to underlying transaction
2. [8:211] Requirements for Enforceable Preemptive Purchase Rights

5. [8:215] Priority, Recordation and Title Insurance
a. [8:216] Title review
b. [8:217] Recordation
c. [8:218] Title insurance
6. [8:220] Removing Preemptive Right of Record
7. [8:221] Drafting Preemptive Purchase Rights

1. [8:200] Nature and Effect of Preemptive Rights: As noted earlier, a "preemptive" purchase right is a grant from a landowner (seller) giving the grantee the "first opportunity" to purchase the property provided the landowner elects to sell (¶ 8:4 ff.). [Bill Signs Trucking, LLC v. Signs Family Ltd. Partnership (2007) 157 CA4th 1515, 1522, 69 CR3d 589, 595 (citing text); Campbell v. Alger (1999) 71 CA4th 200, 206, 83 CR2d 696, 699]

a. Option to purchase contrasted

(1) [8:201] No unilateral right to compel sale: Unlike an option agreement (where the optionee can trigger a sale by its unilateral election), a preemptive right of purchase does not entitle the grantee to unilaterally compel the owner grantor to sell the property. Rather, the preemptive right is triggered only if the owner elects to sell. [Campbell v. Alger (1999) 71 CA4th 200, 206, 83 CR2d 696, 699; Hartzheim v. Valley Land & Cattle Co. (2007) 153 CA4th 383, 389, 62 CR3d 815, 820]

Thus, the grantee loses any preemptive right to purchase if the landowner decides not to sell prior to expiration of the preemptive right term.

(2) [8:202] Sale terms set by owner upon election to sell: Moreover, the buyer's preemptive right to purchase is limited to terms and conditions set by (or otherwise acceptable to) the owner at the time the owner elects to sell the property (this is in contrast to an option agreement, wherein the sale terms and conditions are negotiated in advance).

(3) [8:203] Owner's election to sell creates option in effect: In effect, an option is the next stage after the owner elects to sell its property pursuant to the grant of a preemptive purchase right: i.e., upon the owner's election to sell, the grantee's preemptive right is converted to an option to purchase (on terms set forth in the proposed sale). [Campbell v. Alger (1999) 71 CA4th 200, 206-207, 83 CR2d 696, 699; see Bill Signs Trucking, LLC v. Signs Family Ltd. Partnership (2007) 157 CA4th 1515, 1522, 69 CR3d 589, 595—right of first refusal does not become option to purchase until property owner voluntarily decides to sell and receives bona fide third party offer to purchase (¶ 8:207.8 ff.); Hartzheim v. Valley Land & Cattle Co. (2007) 153 CA4th 383, 389, 62 CR3d 815, 820 (same)]

b. [8:204] Two types of preemptive purchase rights: A preemptive purchase right takes one of two forms: either a "right of first refusal" or a "right of first offer." [Bill Signs Trucking, LLC v. Signs Family Ltd. Partnership (2007) 157 CA4th 1515, 1523, 69 CR3d 589, 595 (citing text)—ordinarily both rights not included in parties' agreement (but see ¶ 8:209.1)]

• [8:205] Comment: Preemptive rights may involve purchase or lease rights; and cases involving preemptive lease rights are generally equally applicable to preemptive purchase rights.

(1) [8:206] "Right of first refusal": Under a "right of first refusal," the landowner seller first procures a bona fide offer to purchase from a third party on terms and conditions acceptable to the seller. The seller must then present the third party offer to the grantee of the right of first refusal who, in turn, has a limited period of time to either match the offer or reject it. [Bill Signs Trucking, LLC v. Signs Family Ltd. Partnership (2007) 157 CA4th 1515,1523, 69 CR3d 589, 595 (citing text); Smyth v. Berman (2019) 31 CA5th 183, 192-193, 242 CR3d 336, 344—right of first refusal is "conditional option," entitling holder "to make an offer that meets or beats" third party's acceptable, bona fide offer]

(a) [8:207] Marketability concerns: Unlike an option to purchase, the grant of a right of first refusal does not completely tie up marketability of the seller's property. However, property subject to a right of first refusal generally is more difficult to market to other prospective buyers. Indeed, prospective buyers want to know their offers are "first in line" rather than subject to the grantee's review (which essentially provides the grantee with the benefit of the other prospective buyer's negotiating efforts).

Marketability also may be impaired as a practical matter because brokers often are unwilling to market property subject to a right of first refusal (unless they are promised a commission upon sale to the holder of the preemptive right). [See Enea v. Coldwell Banker/Del Monte Realty (ND CA 1998) 225 BR 715, 717]

(b) [8:207.1] Modifies statutory right to partition tenancies in common: A right of first refusal in a tenancy in common agreement modifies the absolute statutory right to partition afforded co-owners, but does not permanently waive it. Thus, if the nonselling owner refuses or fails to exercise their right to purchase within a reasonable period of time after the selling owner first offers to sell on terms as favorable as those offered by a prospective buyer, the selling owner may proceed with partition (¶ 12:40). [See LEG Investments v. Boxler (2010) 183 CA4th 484, 493-497, 107 CR3d 519, 525-528; Schwartz v. Shapiro (1964) 229 CA2d 238, 253, 40 CR 189, 199—selling owner must first offer his interest to co-owner "before partition can be had"]

(c) [8:207.5] Limited to voluntary sales: A right of first refusal is triggered only when the landowner voluntarily elects to sell the property. [See Campbell v. Alger (1999) 71 CA4th 200, 206, 83 CR2d 696, 699]

In other words, the right is conditional in nature, depending on the property owner's willingness to market their property. [Hartzheim v. Valley Land & Cattle Co. (2007) 153 CA4th 383, 389, 62 CR3d 815, 820; Campbell v. Alger, supra]

1) [8:207.6] May be triggered by deed in lieu of foreclosure: Under appropriate circumstances, a transfer by deed in lieu of foreclosure may trigger a right of first refusal. [Pellandini v. Valadao (2003) 113 CA4th 1315, 1319, 7 CR3d 413, 416; but see ¶ 8:207.9]

2) [8:207.7] Not triggered by condemnation: Because condemnation is an involuntary taking of land by a public agency (as opposed to a private sale), it does not trigger a private right of first refusal. [Campbell v. Alger (1999) 71 CA4th 200, 208, 83 CR2d 696, 701—condemnation preempts private rights of first refusal]

In these circumstances, the sole remedy of the holder of the preemptive right is just compensation in the eminent domain proceedings. [Campbell v. Alger, supra, 71 CA4th at 210, 83 CR2d at 702; see also ¶ 8:52]

(d) [8:207.8] "Bona fide" third party offer required: Unless the agreement creating the preemptive right provides otherwise, a right of first refusal to purchase is triggered only by a "bona fide" third party offer to purchase the entire interest in the property. [Pellandini v. Valadao (2003) 113 CA4th 1315, 1322, 7 CR3d 413, 418; see also Hartzheim v. Valley Land & Cattle Co. (2007) 153 CA4th 383, 389, 62 CR3d 815, 820—contract terms dictate particular circumstances that trigger right of first refusal]

Generally, a third party offer is considered "bona fide" only when "marked by arms' length dealing and a change in control of the property." [Hartzheim v. Valley Land & Cattle Co., supra, 153 CA4th at 393, 62 CR3d at 822-823 (emphasis added; internal quotes omitted)]

• [8:207.9] A right of first refusal on property owned by two tenants in common was not triggered when cotenant "A" deeded her interest in the property to cotenant "B" in lieu of foreclosure after cotenant "A" defaulted on a loan secured by the property. Under the terms of the agreement creating the right of first refusal, the preemptive purchase right was triggered only by a sale of the cotenants' combined interest to a third party. [Pellandini v. Valadao, supra]

• [8:207.10] Similarly, a tenant's right of first refusal under a commercial lease was not triggered by conveyance of an interest in the property between copartners of a family limited partnership that owned the property. "The Lease intends a sale to a third party by all partners of [the family limited partnership], and does not intend to make [tenant] a co-owner of the property with one of the partners." [Bill Signs Trucking, LLC v. Signs Family Ltd. Partnership (2007) 157 CA4th 1515, 1528, 69 CR3d 589, 599—transfer merely adjusted co-owners' interests and did not introduce new party with control over lease]

• [8:207.11] A lessee's right of first refusal to purchase property owned by a family partnership was not triggered by transfer of the property to the partners' grandchildren, even though the transfer was made pursuant to a sales contract and was reported to the taxing authorities as a sale. The transfer was not made pursuant to a bona fide third party offer, as required by the parties' agreement: The grandchildren never made an offer; the transfer was not marked by arms' length dealing (there were no negotiations and the grandchildren were not even consulted) and did not alter actual control of the property; and the conveyance in reality was made only for legitimate tax and estate planning reasons. [Hartzheim v. Valley Land & Cattle Co. (2007) 153 CA4th 383, 390-394, 62 CR3d 815, 820-824]

(e) [8:207.15] "One-time right"? A right of first refusal may be drafted to give the grantee an opportunity to purchase the property the first time there is a potential sale, as opposed to the first opportunity each time there is a potential sale. [See San Diego Watercrafts, Inc. v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2002) 102 CA4th 308, 317, 125 CR2d 499, 505—triable issue whether lease provision provided only "one-time right" of first refusal]

(f) [8:207.16] Right of first refusal in expired lease (holdover tenancy): See discussion at ¶ 8:7.1.

(2) [8:208] "Right of first offer": Because rights of first refusal can adversely affect an owner's ability to sell its property (¶ 8:207), a preemptive purchase right often takes the form of a "right of first offer." Here, the seller, upon deciding to market its property, must first make an offer to the grantee of the right of first offer. If the grantee does not accept that offer, the seller is then free to sell to anyone else on the terms rejected by the grantee or on terms that are better—but not worse—for the seller; in other words, no other buyer can get a better deal than that which was presented to the grantee. [Bill Signs Trucking, LLC v. Signs Family Ltd. Partnership (2007) 157 CA4th 1515, 1523, 69 CR3d 589, 595 (citing text)]

(a) [8:209] Pros and cons for seller: The advantage of using a right of first offer rather than a right of first refusal is that once the grantee has rejected the seller's offer, the seller is free to proceed with a sale to another buyer without having to go back to the grantee (provided the sale is on terms no better than those offered to the grantee). Also, once the grantee elects not to accept the seller's offer, brokers are inevitably more willing to undertake a listing of the property. [Bill Signs Trucking, LLC v. Signs Family Ltd. Partnership (2007) 157 CA4th 1515, 1523, 69 CR3d 589, 595 (citing text)]

On the other hand, the seller will (at least theoretically) have to present to the grantee its "rock-bottom" price (and best terms), since the seller will not be able to accept any price lower than that offered to the grantee. If other prospective buyers happen to discover the price offered by the seller to the grantee, they will be in a better negotiating position because they will know the minimum price the seller is willing to accept. [Bill Signs Trucking, LLC v. Signs Family Ltd. Partnership, supra (citing text)]

(b) [8:209.1] Combined with "right of first refusal": Ordinarily, a preemptive purchase right is either a right of first offer or a right of first refusal. Occasionally, however, both rights are granted simultaneously to the same person (typically, a lessee), each preemptive right having its own distinct purpose and enforcement criteria. [See Bill Signs Trucking, LLC v. Signs Family Ltd. Partnership (2007) 157 CA4th 1515, 1523, 69 CR3d 589, 595]

(c) [8:209.2] Changed conditions and forfeiture doctrine: In some cases, the right of first offer may set the terms that must be offered, which may be below fair market value. Even if there is a significant difference between the predetermined terms and current fair market value, however, price differences alone are not "changed conditions" that invalidate an otherwise enforceable right of first offer. [Southern Calif. School of Theology v. Claremont Graduate Univ. (2021) 60 CA5th 1, 8-9, 274 CR3d 180, 186—right of first offer requiring property owner to offer to sell property for $36 million less than current fair market value not "changed condition"]

Likewise, a significant price difference between a right of first offer's predetermined terms and current fair market value does not result in a "forfeiture." [Southern Calif. School of Theology v. Claremont Graduate Univ., supra, 60 CA5th at 9-10, 274 CR3d at 187—forfeiture doctrine did not apply to right of first offer (property owner "was to bear the risk that the property either increased in value or decreased " and "each party would receive that for which they bargained, and that to which they agreed") (emphasis in original)]

c. [8:210] Preemptive rights usually tied to underlying transaction: Preemptive purchase rights are almost always a component of a related transaction. For example, they are typically granted to a tenant under a lease (to purchase the lessor's fee interest); to a partner in a partnership (to buy partnership real property); or to a co-owner under a real property co-ownership agreement (to buy the jointly-owned realty).

2. [8:211] Requirements for Enforceable Preemptive Purchase Rights: Like options, preemptive purchase rights must satisfy legally required elements of an enforceable contract (¶ 8:41). In particular, they must be supported by consideration (Mercer v. Lemmens (1964) 230 CA2d 167, 171-172, 40 CR 803, 806; ¶ 8:55 ff.); and must satisfy the statute of frauds ("material terms" to be in signed writing; ¶ 8:75 ff.).

Indeed, "[b]ecause they are a species of an option to purchase, rights of first refusal to purchase real property must satisfy the statute of frauds." [Smyth v. Berman (2019) 31 CA5th 183, 197, 242 CR3d 336, 348—although "writing" may be cobbled together from various documents, email exchange re right of first refusal did not satisfy statute of frauds due to "equivocal and non-confirmatory responses" that failed to show parties agreed on material contract terms with reasonable certainty]

Theoretically, preemptive purchase rights could also be subject to the statutory rule against perpetuities (Prob.C. § 21205); but, like option agreements, perpetuities problems should rarely if ever be an impediment to enforceability (see ¶ 8:102 ff.).

[8:211.1 - 8:211.4] Reserved.

3. [8:211.5] Holder's Enforcement Remedies: The landowner's attempt to sell the property to a third party without affording the holder of the preemptive purchase right an opportunity to exercise its preemptive right constitutes a breach of contract enforceable by specific performance. [Campbell v. Alger (1999) 71 CA4th 200, 207, 83 CR2d 696, 700 (but no breach of contract remedy where condemnation preempts right of first refusal, ¶ 8:207.5)]

Similarly, a preemptive purchase right normally is enforceable against third persons who enter into a contract to purchase the property with notice of the holder's preemptive right. [Hartzheim v. Valley Land & Cattle Co. (2007) 153 CA4th 383, 389, 62 CR3d 815, 820; see also Campbell v. Alger, supra, 71 CA4th at 207, 83 CR2d at 700 (but holder's sole remedy against intervening condemning agency is just compensation in the eminent domain proceedings, ¶ 8:207.7)]

a. [8:211.6] Statute of limitations; tolling under "delayed discovery" rule: The four-year statute of limitations for breach of a written contract (CCP § 337(a)) generally runs from the date of the breach. However, the "delayed discovery" rule applies to toll the statute where the breach and resulting harm are not reasonably discoverable by plaintiff until some future time because the breach was "committed in secret." [April Enterprises, Inc. v. KTTV (1983) 147 CA3d 805, 832, 195 CR 421, 436-437]

Under this authority, the statute of limitations is tolled on an action for breach of a right of first refusal to purchase where the landowner (grantor of the right) fails to notify the preemptive right holder of a third party offer, concluding the conveyance to the third party without giving the holder the opportunity to purchase on the same terms (see ¶ 8:212 ff.). Here, the limitations period does not commence to run until the plaintiff holder knows of, or reasonably should have discovered, the breach of the right of first refusal. [Gryczman v. 4550 Pico Partners, Ltd. (2003) 107 CA4th 1, 4-6, 131 CR2d 680, 681-682—preemptive right holder did not learn of "secret" conveyance to third party until he "chanced to drive by the property and noticed the store which had been there was closed" (triable issue whether P exercised due diligence in discovering the breach)]

(1) [8:211.7] Delayed discovery despite constructive notice: The result is the same even though the grantor recorded a document evidencing the breach: The delayed discovery rule applies when the wrongful act (the breach) is difficult, not necessarily "impossible," to detect; and, unless the contract otherwise provides, the holder has no duty to continually monitor public records to determine if the holder's preemptive right has been breached. [Gryczman v. 4550 Pico Partners, Ltd. (2003) 107 CA4th 1, 6, 131 CR2d 680, 683 (grantor had recorded option agreement with third party to purchase property)]

4. [8:212] Exercising Right of First Refusal: A right of first refusal is triggered when the owner (grantor of the right) elects to sell and obtains a third party offer to buy (¶ 8:206). The grantee's right of first refusal then becomes exercisable and is properly exercised by the grantee's matching the purchase terms proposed by the third party offer.

a. [8:212a] Third party terms must be presented to grantee: The grantee must be presented with the opportunity to match the same offer made by the third party. If the landowner (grantor) proposes terms to the grantee that are different from those offered by the third party, the landowner's offer is in "bad faith" and the grantee's right of first refusal is not extinguished by a failure to match the third party proposal. [San Diego Watercrafts, Inc. v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2002) 102 CA4th 308, 317, 125 CR2d 499, 505]

(1) [8:212b] Application: A commercial tenant sought to exercise its right of first refusal to purchase the brewery portion of a large commercial parcel after discovering its landlord agreed to sell the property to a third party. In addition to initiating legal action against its landlord, the tenant filed a notice of lis pendens. The trial court granted the landlord's motion to expunge the lis pendens and the tenant filed a writ petition challenging the court's ruling. [J&A Mash & Barrel, LLC v. Sup.Ct. (Tower Theater Properties) (2022) 74 CA5th 1, 10, 289 CR3d 110, 118]

On appeal, the expungement motion was deemed flawed "in several respects," including the fact that evidence presented below indicated the landlord engaged in "bad faith." Among other things, the landlord's bad faith involved (i) failing for months to disclose that a third party sale of the entire parcel was in escrow; (ii) refusing to provide the commercial tenant with the purchase agreement or the amount of the third party's offer even after the tenant became aware of the sale; (iii) overstating the sales price; (iv) only setting unilateral terms of sale for the brewery premises; (v) ignoring the language in the commercial tenant's right of first refusal regarding a matching price; and (vi) asserting the price it was offering was "fair and reasonable." [See J&A Mash & Barrel, LLC v. Sup.Ct. (Tower Theater Properties), supra, 74 CA5th at 10, 37-38, 41-42, 289 CR3d at 118, 140-141, 143-144 (also concluding tenant's right of first refusal was neither invalid nor unenforceable based on (i) difficulty in determining property's value and (ii) trial court's unsupported conclusion parcel split was unlikely to occur)]

b. [8:212.1] Exercise by mirror image terms not necessarily required: On the other hand, unlike an option to purchase, a right of first refusal may be exercised without a literal matching of terms. "Because the party exercising a right of first refusal is stepping into a contract made by a third party, the court must consider commercial realities and allow modifications consistent with the intent of the parties whose contract created the right of first refusal." [Arden Group, Inc. v. Burk (1996) 45 CA4th 1409, 1414-1415, 53 CR2d 492, 495 (emphasis added)]

(1) [8:212.2] Different buyers: Obviously, were identical matching required, a grantee of the right could never properly exercise its right of first refusal because it would be substituting itself for the third party as named buyer. "We reject that notion as absurd …" [Arden Group, Inc. v. Burk (1996) 45 CA4th 1409, 1415, 53 CR2d 492, 496]

(2) [8:212.3] Different conditions precedent: Where consistent with the parties' intent, a grantee of the right may be deemed to have unconditionally exercised its right of first refusal although its offer to purchase omits certain conditions precedent proposed by the third party deal:

• [8:212.4] Example: Third Party offered to purchase property that had been used as a gas station for the past 50 years; Tenants in possession of the property, who themselves were operating a gas station, had a right of first refusal. Landowner/Seller's agreement with Third Party required hazardous waste clean-up (removal of the gas tanks). Tenants were deemed to have unconditionally exercised their right of first refusal even though their purchase terms did not require removal of the gasoline tanks. [Arden Group, Inc. v. Burk (1996) 45 CA4th 1409, 1415, 53 CR2d 492, 496]

"Here, the only differences in the two deals are those made necessary by the fact that the [Tenants] are buying as tenants in possession who will continue to use the property in the same manner it has been used for more than 50 years. The removal of the tanks … became non-issues when the [Tenants] became the buyers, and the modification of the [Third Party] deal acknowledged that fact, no more and no less …" [Arden Group, Inc. v. Burk, supra, 45 CA4th at 1415, 53 CR2d at 495-496 (emphasis in original)]

(3) [8:212.5] Terms impossible to match: There are also situations where it is not only impractical (as in Arden, supra) but also impossible for the grantee of a right of first refusal to literally match the terms of the third party offer. For example:

• The third party submits a purchase offer conditioned on seller financing. If the grantee of the right of first refusal is not as creditworthy as the third party, the grantee cannot literally match the third party's offer.

• Or, the third party is willing to give security for a seller-financed loan which is different—and better—than the security the grantee of the right of first refusal is able to offer. Here again, the grantee cannot literally match the third party's offer.

c. [8:212.10] Comparing unidentical offers: In determining whether a right of first refusal has been properly exercised by a nonmatching offer, it becomes necessary to compare the offers to determine if the third party terms are "better."

(1) [8:213] "Reasonable person" standard: In determining which offer is better, for purposes of triggering or defeating the grantee's preemptive purchase rights, the seller must apply a "reasonable person" standard. [McCulloch v. M & C Beauty Colleges, Inc. (1987) 194 CA3d 1338, 1346, 240 CR 189, 194]

Thus, e.g., where a grantee cannot offer security identical to that offered by a third party buyer for a seller-financed loan, the grantee must be permitted to offer reasonably comparable security; otherwise, the right of first refusal would be "illusory." [McCulloch v. M & C Beauty Colleges, Inc., supra, 194 CA3d at 1346, 240 CR at 194]

(2) [8:214] Net proceeds approach: Similarly, when comparing the two offers, a court may pierce through the particular details and look to the net proceeds to be paid the seller to ascertain which offer is better. For example, if the third party offer entails the payment of a broker's commission by the owner, an offer made by the grantee of a right of first refusal which has a lower purchase price but does not require the seller to pay a broker's commission is arguably a better "net" offer which the seller must accept. [See C. Robert Nattress & Assocs. v. CIDCO (1986) 184 CA3d 55, 70-72, 229 CR 33, 42-43]

(3) [8:214.1] "Social benefits" as factor: Where the two offers are otherwise matching, the fact the third party offer contains a condition that might benefit society at large, but which is impractical or impossible for the grantee of the right of first refusal to meet, does not make the third party offer "better"—at least where that condition was not within the owner's and grantee's reasonable expectations when they negotiated the right of first refusal. [Arden Group, Inc. v. Burk (1996) 45 CA4th 1409, 1415, 53 CR2d 492, 496]

• [8:214.2] For example, a third party offer to purchase gasoline station property was not "better" than the present tenants' offer to purchase even though the third party offer provided for clean-up and removal of the gasoline tanks whereas the tenants' offer did not. The property had been operated as a gas station for over 50 years; it would have been unreasonable to require such a matching condition from the grantee of the right, buying as tenant in possession who would continue to use the property in the same manner it had been used for decades.

"[W]e reject as self-serving nonsense [third party's] suggestion that its proposal was 'better' because it has an element of social utility by requiring the immediate clean-up of the property. There is absolutely nothing illegal, unlawful or immoral about the [tenants'] exercise of a right they bargained and paid for, and the fact that they will not be replacing the existing tanks until they are required by law to do so … has nothing to do with the price of tomatoes." [Arden Group, Inc. v. Burk (1996) 45 CA4th 1409, 1415, 53 CR2d 492, 496]

5. [8:215] Priority, Recordation and Title Insurance: Just like optionees, the grantee of a preemptive purchase right has a valuable, insurable interest. Therefore, the following steps are important to preserve the value of preemptive purchase rights:

a. [8:216] Title review: The grantee should review the current state of title to determine (1) that the grantor is, in fact, the holder of the entire fee interest in the property; and (2) what liens and encumbrances will be senior to the preemptive right.

b. [8:217] Recordation: The grantee should protect its interest by recording the preemptive right agreement (or a memorandum thereof). Like an option agreement, the recorded instrument of preemptive purchase right should include a complete and correct legal description; contain an affirmative "grant" of the preemptive right; and state the term of the preemptive right. (See ¶ 8:130 ff.)

c. [8:218] Title insurance: The grantee should obtain appropriate title insurance insuring the priority of its preemptive right.

6. [8:220] Removing Preemptive Right of Record: Civ.C. §§ 884.010 and 884.020 (regarding automatic termination of record) refer exclusively to options to purchase real property; the statutes do not specifically cover preemptive purchase rights. Consequently, there is no statutory mechanism by which expired/terminated preemptive rights will automatically be removed from record title, thereby clearing the cloud on the seller's title.

To fill the gap, sellers should consider obtaining a quitclaim deed or other appropriate recordable release from the grantee of the preemptive right in advance (when the preemptive right agreement is executed), to be held by an escrow or other third party for recordation in the event the preemptive right lapses. This approach will give the seller assurance the recorded preemptive right will be cleared from title upon its expiration; and should circumvent the potential need to bring a quiet title action in the event of a recalcitrant grantee. (See ¶ 8:140 ff.)

7. [8:221] Drafting Preemptive Purchase Rights: Unlike an option to purchase, which should include all of the terms and conditions of the potential sale (¶ 8:25 ff., 8:46, 8:166), a preemptive purchase right necessarily cannot be drafted to identify all possible sale terms since none of them are fixed at the time the right is granted (¶ 8:202). However, the terms and conditions of the grant itself should be precisely stated.

➪ [8:222] PRACTICE POINTERS: When negotiating, drafting or reviewing a preemptive right of purchase agreement, keep these general points in mind:

• A well-drafted preemptive purchase right agreement usually provides that the right may not be exercised by the grantee if the grantee is in default on its obligations in the underlying transaction (e.g., under a lease, or a partnership or co-ownership agreement).

• Clearly state the duration of the preemptive right, after which it will expire by its own terms. Use a calendar date as the outside deadline (rather than specifying the term by weeks or months) so as to preclude room for dispute over the exact day of its expiration (see ¶ 8:103).

Also delineate a specific time period within which the grantee must notify the seller of its intent to accept the proposed offer (after which the offer will be deemed to have expired and the seller can sell on the same or better terms to a third party free of the preemptive right restriction).

• Likewise, specify a precise method by which the grantee must notify the seller of its intent to accept the proposed offer (see ¶ 8:86 ff. in connection with drafting option agreements).

• For so long as the term has not otherwise lapsed, the grantee's preemptive right should continue to be revived if the seller does not consummate a purchase with a third party offeror. For example, if a grantee of a right of first refusal does not match a third party offer, but the seller does not actually consummate a sale with such third party, the right of first refusal should continue in existence for any subsequent third party offers made during the term of the preemptive right.

Forms

[Form 8:A] Option Agreement

OPTION AGREEMENT

This OPTION AGREEMENT ("this Agreement") is made as of ___________, by and between, ___________ a ___________ (hereinafter called "Optionor" and ___________, a ___________ (hereinafter called "Optionee").

RECITALS:

This Agreement is entered into with reference to the following facts:

A. Optionor is the owner of all that certain real property (hereinafter called the "Property"), located in the County of ___________, State of California, described as follows:

B. Optionee desires to obtain an option to purchase the Property from Optionor on the terms and conditions set forth herein and Optionor is willing to grant such option to Optionee.

NOW, THEREFORE, in consideration of the mutual covenants and promises of the parties, and other good and valuable consideration, the receipt and sufficiency of which is hereby acknowledged, the parties hereto agree as follows:

1. Grant of Option to Purchase. Optionor grants to Optionee an option to purchase (this "Option") the Property from Optionor for the term and upon all of the terms, covenants and conditions hereinafter set forth.

2. Option Consideration. As consideration for this Option, Optionee has delivered to Optionor the sum of _____ Thousand Dollars ($________), and Optionor acknowledges the receipt thereof.

3. Memorandum of Option to Purchase. Optionor has duly executed, acknowledged and delivered to Optionee a Memorandum of Option to Purchase in the form attached hereto as Exhibit "A," and agrees that Optionee may cause such Memorandum of Option to Purchase to be recorded. Optionee agrees to execute, acknowledge and deliver to Optionor a Quitclaim Deed to the Property promptly at the request of Optionor if Optionee does not exercise the option hereunder if such is necessary to clear Optionor's title. Optionor shall bear any expense of recording such instrument.

4. Term of Option and Exercise. The term of this Option shall commence upon the date of this Agreement and expire at midnight on ___________, _____. If not exercised during the term of this Option, this Option shall automatically and without further notice, act or documentation by any party expire on the date aforesaid. Optionee may exercise this Option at any time during the term of this Option by giving Optionor written notice of its intention to exercise the Option. [OPTIONAL: In the event this Option is exercised, the consideration paid by Optionee for this Option (as stated in Paragraph 2, above) shall be applied against and be deemed to be a payment credited against the purchase price.] In the event that Optionee does not exercise this Option, the consideration paid by Optionee for this Option may be retained by Optionor without deduction or offset. As soon as reasonably practicable after exercise of this Option, the parties shall execute and cause to be recorded a Notice of Exercise of Option, in the form as Exhibit "B" attached hereto.

5. Existing Leases. Optionee acknowledges that the following leases (hereinafter called the "Leases"), have been entered into between Optionor with the following named tenants. This Option and Optionee's purchase of the Property shall be subject to the rights of the tenants thereunder:

Name of Tenant	Property Affected	Date of Expiration of Lease
1. ____________	____________	....
2. ____________	____________	....
3. ____________	____________	....
4. ____________	____________	....
5. ____________	____________	....

Optionee acknowledges receipt from Optionor of a copy of each of the Leases and that Optionee has read the same. Optionor agrees not to enter into or permit any extension of the term of any of the Leases or any modification of any terms thereof, or waive or otherwise relinquish any optional right of termination thereof during the term of this Option, or after exercise thereof, without the prior written consent of Optionee.

6. Purchase Price. The purchase price which Optionee agrees to pay for the Property upon the exercise of this Option is the sum of _____ Dollars ($________). Said price payable as follows:

a. _____ Dollars ($________) deposited in escrow upon the opening thereof. [Optional: The consideration paid for the Option shall be credited against the purchase price.]

b. The balance due shall be paid in full on the Closing Date.

7. Escrow. Within ten (10) calendar days after exercise of this Option, Optionee and Optionor shall open an escrow for this transaction at ____________. The purchase and sale shall be consummated at the aforesaid escrow within _____ (_____) days after the exercise of this Option by Optionee (the "Closing Date").

This transaction shall be consummated and the escrow closed in the following manner:

(1) Optionor shall deposit (a) a duly executed and acknowledged Grant Deed conveying the Property to Optionee in the form attached hereto as Exhibit "C," and (b) a duly executed and acknowledged Assignment of Lessor's Interest in Leases in the form attached hereto as Exhibit "D."

(2) Optionee shall deposit the portion of the purchase price to be paid pursuant to Paragraph 6, above in cash.

(3) Escrow shall close when the escrow is in a position to issue the title insurance policy described in Paragraph 8, below, showing title to the Property vested of record in Optionee (or its assignee or nominee). Escrow shall be consummated by delivering the cash deposited by Optionee to Optionor after deduction of Optionor's share of escrow costs and prorations. Closing shall be deemed to have occurred when the Grant Deed is recorded.

(4) Real estate taxes and any cash rentals accruing from the Property shall be prorated between the parties as of the Closing Date.

WESTLAW © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

8. Condition of Title Upon Closing Date. Optionor shall deliver marketable title to Optionee on the Closing Date subject only to (i) the then current real estate taxes and assessments constituting liens not then due or payable; and (ii) those exception nos. _____-_____, as shown on that certain preliminary title report issued by ___________, dated _____, attached hereto as Exhibit "E." Optionee's title shall be insured by a [ALTA or CLTA] policy of title insurance insuring that as of the Closing Date the Property is vested of record in Optionee (or its assignee or nominee).

9. Possession. Possession of the Property shall be delivered to Optionee upon the Closing Date, subject to the rights of any tenants under the Leases.

10. Extensions of Option Term. Optionee may extend the term of this Option for a first extension period of _____ (_____) months by paying to Owner additional option consideration in the amount of _____ Dollars ($________), and Optionee may further extend the term of this Option for _____ (_____) additional extension periods of _____ (_____) month(s) each by paying to Owner additional option consideration of _____ _____ Dollars ($________), for each of the _____ extensions; each such payment to be delivered before the expiration of this Option or the expiration of any extension period of this Option that may then be in effect, and by concurrently providing to Owner written notice of Optionee's intent to extend the term of this Option. As soon as practicable after Optionee's election to extend the Option term (and payment of the corresponding amount due), Optionor and Optionee shall promptly execute and cause to be recorded a written notice of the extension of the term of this Option.

11. Damage or Destruction. Except for any damage or destruction attributable to the activities of Optionee or Optionee's agents, employees or contractors, in the event that prior to Closing Date the Property or any improvements thereon are destroyed or materially damaged, Optionor shall bear the risk of loss therefor, and Optionee may elect to cancel this Agreement and receive back from Optionor all consideration previously paid to Optionor for this Option or may purchase the Property at the purchase price set forth herein less the amount by which such damage or destruction has decreased the fair market value of the Property.

12. Condemnation. If, before the Closing Date, either Optionor or Optionee receives notice of any condemnation or eminent domain proceeding, the party receiving the notice shall promptly notify the other party of that fact. Optionee may elect either to proceed with the purchase contemplated by this Option or to terminate this Option within _____ (_____) days after the date the notice is received. If Optionee proceeds with the purchase in accordance with all the terms of this Option, all condemnation proceeds shall be paid to Optionee (or assigned to Optionee if not then yet collected).

13. Right to Enter. During the term of this Option and prior to the Closing Date, Optionee and its designated agents and independent contractors shall have the right to enter upon the Property to the extent necessary for the purpose of conducting soils tests and engineering studies and planning Optionee's development of the Property. Optionee agrees to repair any damage it or its agents or independent contractors cause to the Property and further agrees to indemnify and hold Optionor harmless from any and all costs, expenses, losses, attorney's fees, and liabilities, including, but not limited to, claims of mechanic's liens, incurred or sustained by Optionor as a result of any acts of Optionee, its agents or independent contractors pursuant to this Paragraph. Optionee further agrees that in the event Optionee fails to exercise this Option, any and all soils tests, engineering studies, environmental reports, and any other documentation developed, prepared or submitted for the purpose of obtaining rezoning or development of the Property, tentative subdivision maps, tentative parcel maps or other development approvals, shall be delivered to Optionor at no expense to Optionor and shall become Optionor's property. Optionee further agrees to submit all development proposals to Optionor during the term of this Option or any extension thereof and obtain Optionor's written approval of such proposals prior to presenting same to any governmental agency, which approval shall not be unreasonably withheld. Optionor agrees to assist Optionee in any reasonable manner to obtain any necessary rezoning, maps, or other necessary permits for Optionee's proposed development as long as such assistance is in no way at any cost or expense to Optionor and in no way commits or binds the Property to a change in the use or zoning of the Property.

14. Time of Essence; Failure To Exercise Option. Time is of the essence of this Option agreement. If this Option is not exercised in the manner provided in Paragraph 4, above, before expiration of the Option term, Optionee shall have no interest whatever in the Property and this Option may not be revived by any subsequent payment or further action by Optionee.

Chapter 8. Options to Purchase and Preemptive Purchase Rights

Forms

[Form 8:C] Right of First Refusal/ Right of First Offer

[Because most preemptive purchase rights emanate from an underlying transaction and are incorporated in the underlying transactional document (such as a lease), the following provisions should be incorporated in the appropriate related transactional document. However, in those situations when the preemptive purchase right is not related to any other transaction, the following can simply be embodied in an agreement complete with appropriate recitals, recitation of consideration, boilerplate and other provisions.]

SAMPLE RIGHT OF FIRST REFUSAL:

Grantor hereby grants to Grantee a right of first refusal to purchase the Property as hereinafter set forth in this Paragraph. Upon Grantor's receipt of a bona fide offer to purchase (“Offer”) from a party who is not affiliated with Grantor (“Third Party”), which Offer Grantor is willing to accept, Grantor shall give notice to Grantee (“Notice”) that Grantor intends to accept the Offer, and concurrently therewith provide Grantee with a copy of the Offer. If Grantee elects to exercise its right of first refusal, it shall do so by delivering to Grantor written notice of its election to purchase the Property on terms and conditions identical to those set forth in the Offer, within ___________ (___) days after the receipt of the Notice. If the Grantee does not so notify Grantor within said ___ days, Grantee shall be deemed to have rejected the Offer and Grantor may proceed to sell the Property (free and clear of this right of first refusal) to the Third Party on the terms and conditions set forth in the Offer, or on terms which are better for Grantor, but not worse for the Grantor. Upon the consummation of such purchase and sale to the Third Party, this right of first refusal shall automatically and without further notice terminate. If, however, Grantor does not consummate a sale to the Third Party as aforesaid, this right of first refusal shall not terminate, but shall be revived and continue for the then remaining balance of term of this right of first refusal. The term of this right of first refusal commences on the date of this agreement and terminates on ___________. [OPTIONAL: If the right of first refusal is part of an underlying transaction, the Grantee's rights under the right of first refusal should be conditioned upon Grantee not being in default in its obligations under the underlying transaction (e.g. if the Grantee is a tenant under a lease, the Grantee must not be in default under the lease).]

SAMPLE RIGHT OF FIRST OFFER:

Before Grantor offers the Property for sale to any Third Party or on the open market, Grantor shall first offer the Property for sale to Grantee in writing upon all terms and conditions which Grantor is willing to offer to any third person or on the open market (“Notice”). Grantee shall notify the Grantor of its acceptance of the offer to purchase set forth in the Notice within _____ (___) days after delivery of the Notice (“Deadline Date”). If Grantee fails to so notify Grantor of its acceptance by the Deadline Date, Grantee's right of first offer shall be deemed to have automatically and without further notice expired and Grantor shall thereafter have the right to offer the Property to any third person or on the open market on terms and conditions stated in the Notice (or on terms which are better, but not worse, for the Grantor). If Grantor does not consummate a sale of the Property on the terms and conditions set forth in the Offer (or on terms which are better, but not worse, for the Grantor) within ___________ (_____) days after the Deadline Date, this right of first offer shall revive. If, however, Grantor consummates the sale of the Property to a Third Party within said ___________ (_____) days after the Deadline Date, this right of first refusal shall thereupon automatically without further notice terminate. [OPTIONAL: If the right of first offer is part of an underlying transaction, the Grantee's rights under the right of first offer should be conditioned upon Grantee not being in default in its obligations under the underlying transaction (e.g. if the Grantee is a tenant under a lease, the Grantee must not be in default under the lease).]

Chapter 9. Opinion Letters

A. Introduction

1. [9:2] Practical Considerations
    a. [9:3] Points of friction
    b. [9:4] No settled law
    c. [9:5] Necessity and purpose unclear
    d. [9:6] Extent of attorney's liability unclear
2. [9:7] “Opinion letter” defined
    a. [9:8] Real estate bar's commonly-accepted definition
    b. [9:9] Not contractual
3. [9:10] Customary Practice
    a. [9:11] “Customary practice” defined
    b. [9:12] General applicability

[9:1] The delivery of a formal legal opinion by one party's counsel to other interested parties is increasingly becoming a customary requirement in certain kinds of real estate transactions.

Theoretically, opinion letters may be appropriate to many different phases of a real estate purchase and sale transaction. However, as discussed in this Chapter, they are most commonly utilized in connection with commercial loan transactions, wherein a third party institutional lender requires an opinion letter by borrower's counsel. (Opinion letters are not required in single family residential loan transactions.)

1. [9:2] Practical Considerations: Many clients and lawyers are apt to view the subject of opinion letters as a mere inconsequential detail. This can be a serious misjudgment; in practice, opinion letters are frequently one of the most controversial and frustrating aspects of a real estate transaction.

a. [9:3] Points of friction: The opinion letter process can be a fertile source of disagreement between the lawyer issuing the opinion (the “opinion giver”) and the other party to the transaction (the “opinion recipient”), and also between the opinion giver and their own client.

• Opinion letter issues often arise after the client has fully negotiated the business terms of the transaction and the client therefore feels the opinion letter is simply a drafting concern or closing detail. In any event, clients tend to view the matter as a lawyer-to-lawyer issue with which they need not be involved.

• Most clients do not understand the purpose or contents of an opinion; nor can they appreciate the cost, timing and difficulty associated with the negotiation, preparation and issuance of an opinion letter.

• Because clients regard the opinion letter process as a matter between lawyers, they often view counsel as holding up consummation of the transaction if disputes arise over counsel's willingness to issue an opinion.

• By issuing a third party opinion, attorneys subject themselves and their firms to a new dimension of liability (see ¶ 9:215 ff.).

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

b. [9:4] No settled law: The subject of opinion letters constitutes an emerging area of the law yet to be fully formed.

To date, there are no California statutes or cases defining a third party legal opinion letter, and no settled law as to when it is appropriate to request an opinion or what should or should not be included in an opinion.

Indeed, few cases deal with opinion letters; and only a handful of articles offer instructive analysis and interpretation. (Although various bar associations have promulgated reports on opinion letters, those reports are not law and are somewhat conflicting. See ¶ 9:15 ff.)

c. [9:5] Necessity and purpose unclear: There is considerable debate among practitioners and legal scholars as to whether opinion letters are necessary to a purchase and sale transaction; and there is little consensus over what useful purpose they should serve.

d. [9:6] Extent of attorney's liability unclear: While case law offers some guidance, the legal theories under which attorney opinion givers might incur liability, and the extent of such liability, are not well defined. See ¶ 9:215 ff.

2. [9:7] “Opinion letter” defined: Although there is no formal statutory or judicial definition of an “opinion letter,” the term is commonly understood as a document that contains a lawyer's “understanding of the law that applies to a particular case.” [Black's Law Dictionary (11th ed. 2019) (also defining “legal opinion” as “[a] written document in which an attorney provides [their] understanding of the law as applied to assumed facts”); see also Rest.3d Law Governing Lawyers § 95(1) (“In furtherance of the objectives of a client in a representation, a lawyer may provide to a nonclient the results of the lawyer's investigation and analysis of facts or the lawyer's professional evaluation or opinion on the matter”); Corporations Committee, State Bar of California, 1989 Report of the Committee on Corporations of the Business Law Section of the State Bar of California Regarding Legal Opinions in Business Transactions, 45 Bus. Law. 2169, 2173 (1990) (defining “legal opinion” as “a formal writing prepared by a lawyer, expressing the lawyer's informed understanding of the legal principles generally applicable to a specific transaction or applicable to a particular aspect of such a transaction”)]

a. [9:8] Real estate bar's commonly-accepted definition: The general understanding among the real estate bar is that an opinion letter is a formal, written opinion (usually in letter form) from an attorney for one party to a transaction that is delivered to or for the benefit of another party to the transaction (i.e., not the opinion giver's client) regarding certain aspects of the opinion giver's client and/or the transaction.

Also note that the terms “legal opinion,” “written opinion” and “opinion letter” are used interchangeably by practitioners.

b. [9:9] Not contractual: Opinion letters are not bilateral contracts. Rather, they may be viewed as an inducement to the opinion recipient in consummating a transaction.

3. [9:10] Customary Practice: Because so little law exists on the subject of opinion letters, and because the various bar association reports discussed at ¶ 9:15 ff. are not binding authority (and, indeed, are rarely relied upon by practitioners), the opinion-giving process has been guided principally by customary practice. [See Legal Opinions Committee, American Bar Association, and Working Group on Legal Opinions Foundation, Statement of Opinion Practices (and Related Materials), 74 Bus. Law. 801, 807 (2019) (the “2019 Statement of Opinion Practices,” ¶ 9:19)—opinion letters “are prepared and understood in accordance with the customary practice of lawyers who regularly give those opinions and lawyers who regularly review them for opinion recipients”]

a. [9:11] “Customary practice” defined: “Customary practice” generally refers to (i) “the work lawyers are expected to perform to give opinions” (i.e., “customary diligence”), and (ii) “the way certain words and phrases commonly used in closing opinions are understood” (i.e., “customary usage”). [2019 Statement of Opinion Practices, supra, 74 Bus. Law. at 807]

b. [9:12] General applicability: Customary practice applies to an opinion letter regardless of whether the opinion letter refers to it. [2019 Statement of Opinion Practices, supra, 74 Bus. Law. at 807, 811—“An opinion giver is entitled to presume that the opinion recipient is familiar with, or has obtained advice about, customary practice as it applies to the opinions it is receiving from the opinion giver”]

Comment: Based on the foregoing (¶ 9:10 ff.), much of what follows in this Chapter is not a summary of binding law but, rather, an admixture of conventional wisdom on the subject. (However, to the extent law develops on this subject, third party legal opinions may change dramatically.)

Chapter 9. Opinion Letters

B. Bar Association Reports

1. [9:15] Value as Analytical/Resource Tools
a. [9:16] Applicability to real property transactions
b. [9:17] Persuasive authority only
2. [9:18] Applicable California reports
3. [9:19] Applicable national reports

1. [9:15] Value as Analytical/Resource Tools: Various bar associations and committees have published reports on third party legal opinion letters. The reports represent attempts at attaining broad consensus and common understanding on key aspects of third party legal opinion letter practice. In the absence of governing statutory or case law regulating the practice (¶ 9:4), these reports offer the best guidance on negotiating, preparing and interpreting third party legal opinion letters. [See Rest.3d Law Governing Lawyers § 95, Comment "a." ("Custom and practice determining the scope of diligence in represented situations is articulated in bar-association reports, treatises, and articles")]

Indeed, by specifically adopting a particular bar report in an opinion letter, the parties can incorporate definitions of certain terms; create rules regarding due diligence and other standards of care; define the scope of the opinion giver's liability; incorporate certain qualifications and limitations in the opinion; include assumptions permitted to be made by the opinion giver; and cover a host of other matters.

a. [9:16] Applicability to real property transactions: Third party legal opinion letters are requested and delivered in a wide range of business transactions. While reviewing bar association reports (which often emphasize corporate law issues), it is important to keep in mind that opinion letters in real property transactions are different from those issued in other kinds of transactions. Although certain principles are generally applicable, others may not apply.

b. [9:17] Persuasive authority only: Bar association reports are not law, but merely compromise analyses and suggestions. Nor are they dispositive of issues relating to opinion letters. Legal opinions comprise an evolving area in both customary practice and legal precedent. There is great diversity of thought on opinion letters and even the various bar association reports are not entirely consistent. Still unsettled are such questions as which kinds of opinions are appropriate, the scope of opinions, the due diligence the opinion giver must conduct, the reliance the opinion recipient may place on an opinion, the standard of care applicable to the opinion giver, the extent of the opinion giver's liability, etc.

2. [9:18] Applicable California reports: The following bar association reports are most directly applicable to California law and practice. Copies of the California reports can be ordered from the California State Bar Association.

Chapter 9. Opinion Letters

C. Purpose of Opinion Letters

1. [9:31] Ascertaining and Solving Problems
    - a. [9:32] Example—entity's authority to engage in transaction and signer's authority to bind entity
2. [9:33] Shifting “Due Diligence” Onus Between Parties
    - a. [9:33.1] Due diligence concerning parties
    - b. [9:33.2] Due diligence concerning subject property
3. [9:35] Educating Out-of-State Parties
    - a. [9:35.1] Limited to law covered in opinion letter
    - b. [9:35.2] Customary diligence caveat
4. [9:36] Confirming Contract Formation, Parties' Legal Relationship and Mutual Agreement
5. [9:38] Confirming Remedies/Enforceability
6. [9:39] Confirming Legal Status of Property
7. [9:40] Impact of Other Contracts and Obligations
8. [9:41] Creating Estoppel Against Borrower
9. [9:42] Satisfaction of Regulatory Requirements
10. [9:43] Satisfaction of Lender's Internal Requirements
11. [9:44] Creating Source of Recovery in Event of Litigation

[9:30] Opinion recipients may have a variety of reasons for requiring an opinion letter in real property transactions. As developed at ¶ 9:31 ff., some reasons are rational, justifiable and fair; occasionally, however, the stated (or unstated) reason may be unfair and entirely inappropriate.

1. [9:31] Ascertaining and Solving Problems: Parties to a transaction intend and assume certain factual and legal matters. Requiring counsel to render an opinion on particular matters forces the attorney to carefully examine those issues. In the course of that examination, unknown or unanticipated problems can be identified and rectified.

a. [9:32] Example—entity's authority to engage in transaction and signer's authority to bind entity: For example, each party assumes it and the other party have the ability to enter into the contemplated transaction and that the individuals signing the documents have the authority to bind their respective entities. Therefore, when a corporation, partnership, limited liability company, trust or other entity enters into a contract, it is important to make certain (a) the transaction is within the permissible parameters of the entity's governing documents (i.e., that the partnership agreement, limited liability articles of organization or operating agreement, trust instrument or corporate articles and bylaws permit the entity to engage in the contemplated transaction); and (b) the individuals signing the transactional documents have been properly granted the authority to do so.

An attorney compelled to issue an opinion on these issues will presumptively verify these matters; and, if the particular entity's governing documents need to be amended (or specific resolutions need to be adopted to grant individuals the authority to sign), the attorney will prepare the appropriate paperwork.

2. [9:33] Shifting "Due Diligence" Onus Between Parties: Each party to a transaction usually wants to conduct a certain amount of "due diligence" about the other party and the property involved. Requiring the other party's counsel to give an opinion letter on these matters can effectively shift the cost and burden of conducting the pertinent due diligence.

a. [9:33.1] Due diligence concerning parties: For example, one party might be concerned whether the other party is a defendant in any litigation or subject to any contracts which might preclude it from entering into and performing the contemplated agreement. If the other party is an entity, due diligence may also require investigation whether the entity is properly formed, whether it has the authority to enter into the transaction under its governing documents, and whether the individuals signing the transactional documents have authority to bind the entity (¶ 9:32).

b. [9:33.2] Due diligence concerning subject property: A contracting party in a real estate transaction might also be concerned about matters pertaining to the subject realty—e.g., whether the property is the subject of a condemnation proceeding and whether it is in compliance with zoning or other applicable laws.

➪ [9:34] PRACTICE POINTER: Sometimes it is appropriate for the opinion giver to undertake such due diligence and sometimes it is completely inappropriate.

If the opinion is limited to matters about the opinion giver's client—e.g., whether the client is a properly-formed legal entity authorized to enter into the particular transaction—it is reasonable to presume the opinion giver (who knows more about their client than does the other party) will be the most efficient in conducting the appropriate investigation. Disputes between opinion givers and opinion recipients typically arise, however, when the opinion recipient asks for factual or other opinions which the opinion giver is not qualified to give. (See ¶ 9:94 ff.)

3. [9:35] Educating Out-of-State Parties: In certain instances, an out-of-state party (usually, an institutional lender) will have specific questions about California law that it will want borrower's counsel to address. (Of course, borrowers typically argue the out-of-state party should hire its own California counsel.)

a. [9:35.1] Limited to law covered in opinion letter: If an opinion letter states that it covers a specific jurisdiction's laws or particular laws, the opinion does not cover any other laws. [2019 Statement of Opinion Practices, 74 Bus. Law. 807, 810, § 6.1]

b. [9:35.2] Customary diligence caveat: An opinion letter on a jurisdiction's laws covers only those laws that lawyers practicing in that jurisdiction and exercising customary diligence (¶ 9:11) would reasonably recognize as applying to the client or transaction that is the subject of the opinion letter. [2019 Statement of Opinion Practices, supra, 74 Bus. Law. at 810, § 6.2]

4. [9:36] Confirming Contract Formation, Parties' Legal Relationship and Mutual Agreement: Parties to a transaction contemplate they are entering into a binding contract that creates a particular kind of legal relationship and represents their mutual intent and agreement. The opinion recipient wants the opinion giver to confirm the contract is a binding expression of the parties' mutual assent.

➪ [9:37] CAVEAT: Rendering an opinion confirming contract formation, the parties' legal relationship and their mutual agreement may seem straightforward. However, it should be approached cautiously, as there are several potential adverse consequences for both the opinion giver and the client. See ¶ 9:71 ff. re conflicts of interest.

5. [9:38] Confirming Remedies/Enforceability: One party's counsel is often asked to render an opinion that the other party has certain rights or remedies. This is one of the most controversial aspects of an opinion letter. See ¶ 9:156 ff.

6. [9:39] Confirming Legal Status of Property: Some opinion requests are directed at confirming whether a particular piece of property is in compliance with building, zoning, environmental and other laws. Though such opinions are occasionally given, this is not an appropriate subject for an opinion letter. See ¶ 9:147 ff.

7. [9:40] Impact of Other Contracts and Obligations: The opinion recipient wants to know whether the other party is subject to contracts or other restrictions which might prohibit or limit its ability to perform its obligations under the transactional agreements. See ¶ 9:136 ff.

8. [9:41] Creating Estoppel Against Borrower: Conceivably, when an attorney renders a particular opinion, the attorney's client could subsequently be deemed to have waived certain rights or defenses and/or be estopped from taking a position in subsequent litigation with the opinion recipient that is contrary to that stated in the opinion letter. (Although opinion recipients rarely admit this, one of their goals is to create such a waiver or estoppel.)

Whether a third party opinion can bind the client to a waiver or estoppel has not been addressed by the courts. Nonetheless, an opinion letter might at least be used as evidence of certain matters which could weaken the client's case. See ¶ 9:73.

9. [9:42] Satisfaction of Regulatory Requirements: Certain regulatory agencies require the issuance of an attorney's opinion as a condition to the transaction. For example, legal opinions are sometimes required in securities transactions; or in loan transactions if the lender intends to sell the loan in the secondary mortgage market.

10. [9:43] Satisfaction of Lender's Internal Requirements: Many institutional commercial lenders require an opinion from borrower's counsel as part of their required closing documentation. This is often a nonnegotiable requirement and the lender will provide neither reasons nor logic for its insistence on the matter. (In such situations, the analysis is simple: Either issue the opinion or look for another lender.)

11. [9:44] Creating Source of Recovery in Event of Litigation: Perhaps the most improper reason for requiring an opinion is to make the opinion giver a potential liability target. Although opinion recipients rarely acknowledge this, some view the attorney rendering the opinion as a source of recovery if that attorney's client is somehow able to lawfully avoid its obligations under the transactional agreements. In other words, if a particular agreement (or provision therein) is unenforceable against the client, the opinion recipient believes it might nevertheless be able to recover against the opinion giver.

For example, the attorney might render an opinion that a contract is valid, binding and enforceable. If the opinion giver's client is subsequently able to prove the contract is not binding, or is invalid or unenforceable, the opinion giver might have liability to the opinion recipient even though its own client would not. See ¶ 9:215 ff. re attorney liability.

b. [9:86] Sum-of-the-parts opinion

[9:50] Before negotiating or drafting an opinion, attorneys should keep in mind several preliminary practical considerations:

1. [9:51] Propriety of Opinion: The threshold issue is whether an opinion is even appropriate for the contemplated transaction. Consider these points:

a. [9:52] Custom: Is it customary to render an opinion in the transaction at hand? And even if customary, does the nature of the transaction justify the requirement of an opinion? (An opinion is not always necessary simply because customarily requested.)

b. [9:53] Materiality: Is there a material legal issue that requires an opinion? No opinion should be requested or given if there is no legal issue of material significance to the transaction.

c. [9:54] Size of transaction: Does the size of the transaction justify the requirement of an opinion?

d. [9:55] Cost: Is the cost of the opinion manageable or would it be prohibitive? Bear in mind that additional legal fees will be incurred to negotiate and draft the opinion, as well as to conduct the due diligence necessary to support the opinion.

e. [9:56] Timing: Is there sufficient time within which to negotiate and prepare the opinion, as well as complete the underlying due diligence?

f. [9:57] Reason for opinion: Are the proffered reasons for the desired opinion sufficiently clear? All too often, opinions are requested and given without the parties or their counsel fully understanding the underlying reasons. If the purpose of the opinion is vague, everything from scope of the opinion giver's due diligence to the quality of the opinion itself will be compromised.

➪ [9:58] PRACTICE POINTER: If you're uncertain about the purpose of the requested opinion, ask the other side to explain its specific concerns. Your opinion should then be responsive only to those specific concerns, and no other issues.

Of course, it is sometimes overly optimistic to assume the requesting party will provide a rational justification. In many transactions, the response is either: (i) "Receipt of an opinion letter is simply one of our required closing documents and the matter is not negotiable"; or (ii) "What's your problem? We customarily get opinion letters in these kinds of transactions." Where no concrete reasons are given, you and your client should carefully decide how to proceed—if at all—in rendering an opinion.

g. [9:59] Necessity of opinion: As early as possible in the negotiations, attempt to ascertain whether an opinion letter is an absolute requirement of the other party (without which the other party will not close the transaction) or simply desirable. If an opinion is required (and many institutional lenders of commercial loans adamantly insist on an opinion by borrower's counsel), quickly resolve the issue of whether you are willing and able to issue the requested opinion.

On the other hand, if the opinion is not a "make or break" requirement in the deal, whether to give it and, if so, the scope of the opinion, simply become a matter of negotiation.

2. [9:60] Your Policy: Evaluate your firm's policy regarding the issuance of opinion letters. Some attorneys issue opinion letters only in very limited circumstances (if at all). Their argument is that the party requesting the opinion should get it from its own counsel. Moreover, many attorneys feel the potential liability exposure incurred in the opinion process is not worth the fee.

If it is your policy not to issue the requested opinion, your client (and perhaps the intended opinion recipient) should be advised of your position at the earliest possible stage of the transaction.

➪ [9:61] PRACTICE POINTER: Even if no opinion is initially requested, but you know (or even suspect) the other party will require an opinion as a condition to closing the transaction, advise your client accordingly. Discuss with your client whether you would be willing to issue an opinion and, if so, what kind of an opinion you would render (as well as the additional fee for doing so).

You will have a very unhappy client if, shortly before the transaction is scheduled to close, the other side suddenly insists on an opinion and your client then first learns you won't issue the requested opinion.

3. [9:62] Your Role in the Transaction: Whether it is appropriate for you to render an opinion will depend in part on the scope of your representation. If your role is peripheral to the transaction—e.g., you are retained only to work on one aspect of the transaction, or you only occasionally represent the client, or you are simply acting as local counsel in the transaction—all or a portion of the opinion might more properly be the responsibility of the client's outside (or in-house) general counsel.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

For example, an opinion relating to the client's due organization, power to enter into the contemplated transactions and authority of designated individuals to sign documents, is central to most opinion letters. If the client's general counsel is familiar with the entity's books and records (and you have only been retained to document and/or consummate one particular transaction), it is perhaps more appropriate to have the general counsel render the opinion.

Other pertinent factors are cost and timing. If you would need to conduct expensive and time-consuming due diligence to render an opinion, whereas the client's general counsel would not, it may make better sense to have the general counsel issue the opinion. (See ¶ 9:83 ff. re multiparty opinions.)

4. [9:63] Feasibility: Some requested opinions simply are not feasible to give.

For example, lenders sometimes request an opinion from borrower's counsel that the property is in compliance with all environmental laws, zoning laws and building codes. For an attorney to conduct the due diligence necessary to render such an opinion, a legion of environmental, land use and construction experts would have to be hired, and counsel would have to review almost all applicable laws relating to zoning, environmental standards, construction and real property development. Such an investigation could take months and involve astronomical fees. To issue an opinion of such magnitude is simply not feasible.

5. [9:64] Competence to Render Opinion: If the requested opinion is outside the area of your expertise, or involves the law of a jurisdiction you are not qualified to analyze, you owe it to your client (and yourself) to advise your client you cannot issue the opinion. (See also ¶ 9:65 ff. re ethical issues; and ¶ 9:83 ff. re multiparty opinions.) [See 2019 Statement of Opinion Practices, 74 Bus. Law. 807, 811, § 7.2—"Opinion givers should not be expected to give opinions on matters that are not within the expertise of lawyers" (e.g., financial statement analysis, economic forecasting, and valuation)]

6. [9:65] Ethical Concerns: Opinion letters raise several important ethical issues:

a. [9:66] ABA Model Rule: The California Rules of Professional Conduct (CRPC) do not specifically address attorney opinion letters. However, the American Bar Association Model Rules of Professional Conduct ("ABA Model Rules") provide an explicit rule dealing with "[a]n evaluation … performed at the client's direction … for the primary purpose of establishing information for the benefit of third parties …" [See ABA Model Rule 2.3, Comment [1]]

Rule 2.3 ("Evaluation for Use by Third Persons") states:

> "(a) A lawyer may provide an evaluation of a matter affecting a client for the use of someone other than the client if the lawyer reasonably believes that making the evaluation is compatible with other aspects of the lawyer's relationship with the client.
> (b) When the lawyer knows or reasonably should know that the evaluation is likely to affect the client's interests materially and adversely, the lawyer shall not provide the evaluation unless the client gives informed consent.
> (c) Except as disclosure is authorized in connection with a report of an evaluation, information relating to the evaluation is otherwise protected by Rule 1.6." [ABA Model Rule 2.3]

(1) [9:67] Comment: Complying with ABA Model Rule 2.3(b) (mandating the client give informed consent before counsel can provide an opinion that is likely to materially and adversely affect the client's interests) is not difficult. Making certain a third party opinion is "compatible with other aspects of the lawyer's relationship with the client" (ABA Model Rule 2.3(a)), however, can be more problematic.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Indeed, "… since such an evaluation involves a departure from the normal client-lawyer relationship, careful analysis of the situation is required. The lawyer must be satisfied as a matter of professional judgment that making the [opinion] is compatible with other functions undertaken in behalf of the client." [ABA Model Rule 2.3, Comment [3]]

Thus, for example, the opinion should not take a position incompatible with that taken on behalf of the client in some other aspect of the lawyer's representation. (See ¶ 9:69 re confidentiality rules alluded to in ABA Model Rule 2.3(c).)

b. [9:68] Competence: It is a breach of both the CRPC and the ABA Model Rules for a lawyer to accept (or continue) employment in a matter that the lawyer is not competent to handle by reason of legal knowledge and skill. [See CRPC 1.1(a) & (b); ABA Model Rule 1.1; and more detailed discussion at ¶ 1:46 ff.] Therefore, issuing an opinion letter you are not competent to render risks both malpractice exposure and professional discipline.

c. [9:69] Breach of client confidences: Rule 1.6(a) of the ABA Model Rules provides "[a] lawyer shall not reveal information relating to the representation of a client unless the client gives informed consent, the disclosure is impliedly authorized in order to carry out the representation or the disclosure is [otherwise] permitted. . ." (e.g., to prevent reasonably certain death or substantial bodily harm, etc.). [See ABA Model Rule 1.6(b) for complete list of permitted disclosures; CRPC 1.6(a) & (b)]

This Rule could create problems in the context of opinion letters if the client refuses to give the attorney access to information pertinent to the requested opinion; or if the client refuses to allow the attorney to disclose information essential to rendition of the opinion. [See Rest.3d Law Governing Lawyers § 95, Comment "d."—if disclosure in opinion letter is "reasonably likely to affect the client's interests materially and adversely," lawyer must consult with client and obtain client's consent before "undertaking or continuing the evaluation" ("Alternatively, the lawyer and client may determine it appropriate to negotiate with the intended addressee of the evaluation to modify its scope or terms, thus removing the adverse effect to the client")]

➪ [9:70] PRACTICE POINTER: Although Comment [5] to ABA Model Rule 1.6 states lawyers generally are impliedly authorized to make disclosures about their clients in order to carry out their representation, it is always better practice to specifically advise your client of, and obtain the client's consent to, the issuance of an opinion letter. If the opinion might involve the disclosure of specific confidential information, discuss that with your client as well.

d. [9:71] Conflicts of interest: Both the CRPC and the ABA Model Rules deal extensively with conflict of interest issues (see detailed discussion at ¶ 1:70 ff.). Several potential conflicts of interest could arise in connection with opinion letters.

(1) [9:72] Inherent conflicts: Issuing an opinion letter to third parties raises certain inherent potential conflicts of interest.

(a) [9:72.1] Compromising duty of loyalty to *client: Counsel's duty of undivided loyalty to an existing client precludes the attorney from assuming any relation that would prevent the attorney from devoting their entire energies to the client's interest. [Flatt v. Sup.Ct. (Daniel) (1994) 9 C4th 275, 289, 36 CR2d 537, 545; see also CRPC 1.7] Counsel therefore cannot assume any duty to a nonclient third party—e.g., by issuing an opinion letter with the intent the third party rely thereon—when the third party is in an actual or potentially adverse position to the client. [B.L.M. v. Sabo & Deitsch (1997) 55 CA4th 823, 838-839, 64 CR2d 335, 344-345; see also Freedman v. Brutzkus (2010) 182 CA4th 1065, 1070, 106 CR3d 371, 375 (citing B.L.M. with approval)—"An attorney cannot approve an agreement or give a legal opinion on behalf of an opposing party"]

1) [9:72.2] Compare—advancing client's interests: Generally, an attorney's duty of loyalty to a client (¶ 9:72.1) should not prevent the attorney from delivering an appropriate opinion letter to a third party in a real property transaction. Indeed, the attorney would be advancing the client's interests "by making it possible for the third person to proceed with the transaction on the basis of the evaluation." [Rest.3d Law Governing Lawyers § 95, Comment "b."]

2) [9:72.3] Compare—lawyer's duty to third-party recipients: In delivering an opinion letter, the attorney's duty is to provide "a fair and objective opinion." By doing so, the third-party recipient of the attorney's opinion letter "does not thereby become the client of the lawyer, and the lawyer does not thereby undertake all duties owed to a client. . ." [Rest.3d Law Governing Lawyers § 95, Comment "c."; see ¶ 9:111 ff.]

3) [9:72.4] Reliance by third-party recipients: In California, there is precedent holding that a third-party recipient is not entitled to rely on an attorney's opinion letter: "In light of the fact that an attorney is prohibited from representing one who holds a position adverse or antagonistic to an existing client, it would be anomalous to hold that a person in an adverse or antagonistic position could nonetheless rely on a legal opinion of the attorney … This would in fact amount to creating a duty of professional care on the part of the attorney toward a person with whom the attorney would be prohibited from maintaining a professional relationship." [B.L.M. v. Sabo & Deitsch (1997) 55 CA4th 823,

838, 64 CR2d 335, 344-345—attorney cannot be held liable to third party for legal opinion that third party could not, under CRPC, have contracted to obtain from attorney]

Compare—Restatement and ABA's approach: Both the Restatement and the ABA's 2019 Statement of Opinion Practices allow third-party recipients to rely on an attorney's opinion letter. [See Rest.3d Law Governing Lawyers § 95, Comment "b." (recognizing instances where parties intend for opinion letter to be "relied on by the addressee"); 2019 Statement of Opinion Practices, 74 Bus. Law. 807, 808, § 4.5 ("An opinion recipient is entitled to rely on an opinion, without taking any action to verify the opinion, unless it knows that the opinion is incorrect or unless its reliance on the opinion is otherwise unreasonable under the circumstances"); and see ¶ 9:111 ff.]

(b) [9:72.5] Potential liability when client's position contradicts counsel's opinion: Arguably, an inherent conflict of interest is also implicated because the attorney opinion-giver might draw a lawsuit from the third party recipient if the client subsequently takes a position contrary to that stated in the attorney's opinion. (E.g., counsel renders an opinion that a contract is valid, binding and enforceable, but the client thereafter contends it has a defense to the validity or enforceability of the agreement.)

• [9:72.6] Comment: No known reported decisions deal explicitly with this situation. Indeed, the trend in case law seems to be moving away from any such liability—i.e., the third party nonclient is not justified in relying on the attorney's opinion as a statement of fact because ethical rules bar the attorney from assuming any professional duty to the third party (¶ 9:72.1, 9:228). [See B.L.M. v. Sabo & Deitsch (1997) 55 CA4th 823, 838-839, 64 CR2d 335, 344-345]

Nonetheless, having taken a position now adverse to the client, the lawyer who issued such an opinion might be barred from representing the client in the client's dispute with the opinion recipient. [See generally, CRPC 1.7]

(2) [9:73] Opinions resulting in client waivers or estoppel: No known reported cases to date hold an attorney's opinion letter will constitute a waiver of the client's rights or defenses or estop the client from subsequently taking a position contrary to that stated in the opinion. But this does not mean a court would not hold a client bound (estopped) by its lawyer's opinion. [Cf. Lakeview Meadows Ranch v. Bintliff (1973) 36 CA3d 418, 424-425, 111 CR 414, 418—borrower's lawyer drafted loan modification, which in turn estopped borrower from later arguing loan was usurious (court held borrower's counsel had obligation to advise lender if lawyer believed it was usurious and, failing to do so, lawyer's conduct "created an estoppel against [client] to claim that the modification agreement was usurious")]

In any event, the opinion letter might be admissible as evidence against the client; and the opinion giver could likely be called as a witness against their own client, itself creating a potential conflict of interest. [See CRPC 3.7]

(3) [9:74] Other potential conflicts: Other less obvious conflict issues should also be considered. For example:

• There may be a conflict of interest if the attorney has taken a position on behalf of other, unrelated clients in other matters (but involving similar issues) that is inconsistent with the opinion issued in the transaction at hand.

• By rendering an opinion that a contract is enforceable, the attorney may increase malpractice exposure for not discovering (in advance) the client might have a defense to enforceability.

• Conceivably, there could be a conflict of interest if the lawyer's fee is dependent upon issuance of the opinion.

➪ [9:75] PRACTICE POINTER: While there are no definitive answers to many of the conflict of interest issues, it is prudent to explain to your client the potential adverse impact of your opinion on the client's subsequent rights and/or defenses. Indeed, prudence suggests you put these disclosures in writing and obtain the client's signed acknowledgment that the client has been fully informed. [See CRPC 1.7 generally re conflicts of interest and client's "informed written consent"]

7. [9:76] Limiting Scope of Opinion: Whenever you are called upon to issue an opinion, always be mindful of possible methods of limiting the scope of your opinion. The most effective approach is to tailor the opinion to the requesting party's specific concerns. Indeed, the other party's specific concerns often can be satisfied without the issuance of an opinion, or by crafting an extremely narrow opinion. For example, consider the following alternatives:

a. [9:77] Corporate certificates and resolutions: If you do not want to issue an opinion about the legal status of your corporate client, perhaps you can obtain a "Certificate of Status" (so-called "good standing certificate") from the office of the California Secretary of State. Additionally, the delivery of appropriate corporate resolutions will sometimes mollify the other party's concern about the authority of the individuals who sign the transactional documents (see ¶ 9:133 ff.).

b. [9:78] Client representations and warranties: In lieu of giving an opinion on a specific issue, you might be able to provide representations and warranties by your client. For example, if you are asked for an opinion about pending or threatened claims and litigation against your client, perhaps you can provide your client's written declaration (signed under penalty of perjury) stating the client is not aware of any pending or threatened claims or litigation (other than those specifically disclosed). (See ¶ 9:138 ff.; see also ¶ 4:444 ff., 4:456 re inherent ambiguities concerning "threatened" litigation.)

c. [9:79] Government certificates: With respect to whether the subject property complies with applicable law, some governmental entities will issue so-called "compliance certificates" confirming the property is in compliance with zoning and certain other laws. (As the 1987 Real Property Report states, at fn. 23, "[d]epending on the nature of the project and the legal issues involved, additional comfort to the lender may be provided by certificates from architects and engineers, letters from city officials, [etc.] …")

d. [9:80] "Best knowledge" limitations: Another method of limiting the opinion is to state it is given on your "best knowledge," "current actual knowledge" (or similar language). But this approach is not foolproof; such terms are inherently vague and there is always a question of not only what you knew, but what you should have known. (See ¶ 9:185 ff.)

8. [9:81] Time for Negotiating Opinion: Although an opinion letter is typically delivered concurrent with closing of the transaction, it is best to negotiate the opinion as early as possible. If the last remaining unsatisfied condition to closing is the issuance of your opinion, your client's negotiating leverage will be severely diminished on the eve of the closing. Additionally, every opinion involves a certain amount of due diligence and, therefore, lead time for both conducting due diligence and drafting the opinion must be factored in.

#. [9:82] PRACTICE POINTERS:

- Try to prevent your client from committing to an opinion letter until you have discussed it with your client.

- If possible, obtain a copy of the other side's proposed form (or description) of the required opinion. (However, it is sometimes better to present your own form of opinion than to negotiate for a modification of the other side's form.)

- Clients have little patience, understanding or interest in the opinion letter process and any controversy or frustration about your opinion may be directed at you by your own client. Therefore, keep your client apprised of major issues concerning your opinion.

9. [9:83] Multiparty Opinions: Multiparty opinions are commonly rendered in complex transactions and those involving multijurisdictional law. For example, specialized counsel are sometimes required to deal with unique issues relating to tax, securities, bankruptcy, environmental laws and the like; or it may be necessary to rely on the client's in-house counsel's opinion with respect to issues such as due organization, good standing, power and authority, etc. Sometimes these different counsel will render separate, independent opinions. In other instances, one counsel will be the lead opinion giver and will issue a "global" opinion based on the other opinions of counsel.

Whether a multiparty opinion is appropriate for the transaction and how the various opinions will be coordinated should be considered at the inception of the opinion-giving process.

a. [9:84] Global opinion: A "global opinion" typically states the lead counsel has specifically relied on the legal opinions of other lawyers (and copies of those other opinions are usually attached).

(1) [9:85] Concerns for lead opinion giver: Although use of a multiparty opinion may often be less expensive, faster and easier if you are the lead opinion giver (and your opinion thus relies on other legal opinions), you may nevertheless have certain obligations with respect to the opinions upon which you rely. The 1987 Real Property Report suggests reliance on other opinions implies a certain amount of due diligence by the lead opinion giver with respect to those other opinions; and indicates three possible areas of concern for the lead opinion giver:

- By relying on other opinions, the lead opinion giver might be impliedly representing it is reasonable to do so. (This may be particularly true if the lead opinion giver selected the other opinion givers.)

- The lead opinion giver might be implicitly representing that the other opinion givers understand the transaction and the legal issues covered in the opinion.

- The lead opinion giver need not independently investigate the legal conclusions in any other opinion; however, the opinion giver should at least evaluate assumptions, limitations and qualifications in the other opinions to make certain they are reasonable and consistent with the facts.

b. [9:86] Sum-of-the-parts opinion: In a "sum-of-the-parts" opinion format, the various opinion givers render their opinions independent of each another. There is no lead opinion giver and no opinion giver necessarily relies on another lawyer's opinion. It is then up to the opinion recipient to piece together the various opinions to determine if they are responsive to the requested opinion.

  - c. [9:160] Bankruptcy/creditors' rights and equitable principles limitations
  - d. [9:161] “Accord remedies opinion”
  - e. [9:163] “California Understanding”
  - f. [9:164] Qualification by “laundry list approach”
    - (1) [9:165] Drawbacks
    - (2) [9:166] Typical exceptions
  - g. [9:167] “Generic” approach
    - (1) [9:168] Drawback
    - (2) [9:169] ACREL generic remedies opinion
      - (a) [9:170] Advantage
    - (3) [9:171] “Practical realization of principal benefits of loan documents”
      - (a) [9:172] Ambiguity issues
    - (4) [9:172.5] 1995 Real Property Report generic exception
- 17. [9:175] Opinion Giver's “Due Diligence”
  - a. [9:176] Entity formation documents
  - b. [9:177] Certificates/declarations by public officials and private parties
  - c. [9:179] Laws and regulations
  - d. [9:180] Your firm's files/lawyers in your firm
  - e. [9:181] Transactional documents
- 18. [9:185] Opinion Giver's “Knowledge”
  - a. [9:186] 1989 Business Law Report “current actual knowledge” standard
  - b. [9:187] Accord “conscious awareness” standard

c. [9:187.1] ABA 2012 Report standard
19. [9:188] Adopting Accord or Other Bar Reports
20. [9:189] Tactic to Avoid Opinions by Implication
21. [9:190] Effective Date of Opinion
22. [9:191] Updating Opinion
23. [9:192] Signature and Internal Procedures

1. [9:91] Form of Opinion: "There is no prescribed form for a legal opinion." [1989 Business Law Report, pg. 9]

a. [9:92] Typically by letter: Opinions need not necessarily be given in letter form. However, that is the commonly-preferred method for issuing third party legal opinions.

FORM: Sample Opinion Letter (by Borrower's Counsel), see Form 9:A.

2. [9:93] Kinds of Opinions: Before undertaking to draft an opinion, it is important to understand the generic kind of opinion you have been asked to prepare:

a. [9:94] Factual opinions: A "factual opinion" relates solely to factual matters and generally is not an appropriate form of legal opinion.

"Lawyers should be cautious in agreeing to render opinions as to purely factual issues … Such opinions are often requested in an effort to force the lawyer to make a more thorough investigation than the client may be inclined to make and thereby place the lawyer in the uncomfortable position of potentially becoming an additional warrantor of the facts as represented." [1989 Business Law Report, pg. 6; see also 2019 Statement of Opinion Practices, 74 Bus. Law. 807, 810, § 5.6 ("An opinion giver ordinarily should not be asked to confirm factual matters, even if the confirmation is limited to the knowledge of the opinion preparers")]

While scholars can argue at length whether something is a factual matter or a legal conclusion, the opinion giver's job should be to present "informed judgment and analysis regarding matters of law, not factual statements which the parties are in a better position to verify." [1989 Business Law Report, pg. 6; see also 2005 Corporations Report, pg. 15]

➪ [9:95] PRACTICE POINTER: Absent some unique ability to verify the accuracy of factual matters, counsel should avoid giving factual opinions. Indeed, representations of fact in an opinion letter may open the door to professional liability to the third party recipient where such liability would not otherwise exist. [See B.L.M. v. Sabo & Deitsch (1997) 55 CA4th 823, 839, 64 CR2d 335, 345—"A review of cases suggests that courts … have limited recovery by a third party against an attorney under a negligent misrepresentation theory to those cases involving misrepresentations of fact rather than legal opinions" (emphasis added)]

(1) [9:96] Examples: The most commonly requested factual opinions are those relating to the client's representations and warranties; the status of certain documents and reports (e.g., financial reports, statistical information, the client's filing of tax returns, etc.); and the existence of pending or threatened claims or litigation against the client or which affect the subject property (see ¶ 9:138 ff.).

(2) Limiting factual opinions

(a) [9:97] "Best knowledge" approach: Some attorneys attempt to qualify their factual opinions by stating such portions of the opinion are to their "best knowledge" (or similar standard). However, this approach may offer minimal protection for the opinion giver (see ¶ 9:185 ff. re knowledge).

(b) [9:97.1] Statement of "belief": Representing the opinion as a reasonable statement of "belief" rather than an assertion of fact may provide greater protection. "Under certain circumstances, expressions of professional opinion are treated as representations of fact. When a statement, although in the form of an opinion, is not a casual expression of belief but a deliberate affirmation of the matters stated, it may be regarded as a positive assertion of fact." [Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 C4th 370, 408, 11 CR2d 51, 74 (internal quotes omitted); see B.L.M. v. Sabo & Deitsch (1997) 55 CA4th 823, 834, 64 CR2d 335, 342]

(c) [9:97.2] Discounting superior expertise: To the extent possible, the opinion giver should not represent the opinion is offered from a position of specialized knowledge or expertise on the subject. "[W]hen a party possesses or holds itself out as possessing superior knowledge or special information or expertise regarding the subject matter and a plaintiff is so situated that it may reasonably rely on such supposed knowledge, information, or expertise, the [opinion giver's] representation may be treated as one of material fact." [Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 C4th 370, 408, 11 CR2d 51, 74]

(d) [9:98] Reliance on independent certificates/declarations: Alternatively, some opinion givers will render a factual opinion, but state it is based solely on written statements or certificates issued by others (such as the client or a public official). Sometimes those statements/certificates might take the form of declarations under penalty of perjury (either attached to or specifically identified in the opinion letter). This approach is likewise problematic:

• If the declaration is wrong, the opinion giver might nonetheless be deemed to have had an obligation to investigate the basis upon which the declarant made such a statement. (There is no known law on this issue, but a court might hold the opinion giver impliedly represents it is reasonable to rely on the declaration.)

• Of what value is your opinion to the opinion recipient if it is based solely on a representation made by someone else? An opinion based exclusively on a third party declaration or certificate (without any express or implied representation that it is reasonable to do so) is really no opinion at all. It would make more sense simply to deliver the declaration or certificate to the opinion recipient and not opine on the issue in any way.

b. [9:99] Reasoned opinions: A so-called "reasoned opinion" renders an analysis of a legal issue and the likelihood of a certain outcome if the issue were to be adjudicated by a court. This form of opinion involves situations in which the parties are uncertain about the applicability or consequence of particular laws to the transaction at hand; it usually concludes by stating a court either (1) "would" hold a particular way; (2) "should" hold a particular way; or (3) "is more likely than not" to hold a certain way.

Reasoned opinions are among the most difficult to give because (among other things) if the particular issue is in any way legally uncertain, then by definition the opinion giver is probably not in a position to offer the other side much assurance that a particular legal result will follow. (Reasoned opinions are rarely required in connection with commercial real property loan transactions.)

c. [9:100] "Negative assurance" statements (comfort opinions): In a "negative assurance" statement (also referred to as a "comfort opinion"), a lawyer represents (usually to a "best knowledge" standard) that the lawyer is not aware of any misstatement or omission in the client's disclosure document. When providing a negative assurance statement, the opinion giver commonly includes express limitations on the statement's scope based on the opinion giver's role in the transaction and the extent of their factual investigation. The negative assurance statement is often provided in a separate letter instead of in the text of the opinion letter itself. [See 2005 Corporations Report, pgs. 16-17 (¶ 9:18, 9:185 ff.)]

d. [9:101] Perfection opinions: A "perfection opinion" is basically an opinion that the security interest (typically, the deed of trust) is in appropriate form for recordation and, when recorded, will create a lien on the encumbered property.

e. [9:102] Priority opinions: A "priority opinion" opines as to the priority of a particular lien or encumbrance. Because California lawyers do not render title opinions (and the opinion recipient relies instead on title insurance coverage for title and priority matters), a priority opinion should never be given. (See ¶ 9:149.)

[9:103 - 9:104] Reserved.

3. [9:105] Identifying Transaction, Parties and Documentation: Opinion letters should always be created and interpreted with reference to the specific factual circumstances, transactions and documents involved. It is therefore essential that the opinion giver carefully describe the factual and legal matters pertinent to the opinion. Specifically, the opinion letter should delineate:

• the pending transactions;

• the parties involved;

• the particular documentation pertinent to the opinion; and

• any other material information that has a bearing on the opinion.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

It is sometimes beneficial to attach the particular documentation to which you refer but, in any event, all relevant documents should be clearly identified (preferably by title, date and the parties thereto).

4. Your Client and Your Role in Transaction

a. [9:106] Identifying client: Typically, the identity of your client is an elementary matter; but there can be situations where, for purposes of the opinion, the client's identity is unclear.

Examples

(1) [9:107] Partnership and individual partners: For example, when you represent a partnership, you might want to clarify you do not represent any of the partners individually (i.e., the partnership entity is your client). You might also find yourself in a situation where you have previously represented one of the partners, but you are now being asked to render an opinion on behalf of the partnership entity. (This commonly happens when the lawyer's representation has historically been of the general partner of a limited partnership and the limited partnership itself has never had occasion to hire separate counsel.) Under those circumstances it may be more expedient (and yet still ethical, see Ch. 1) for the general partner's lawyer to undertake representation of the partnership for the limited purpose of rendering the opinion. You may therefore need to disclose that, for purposes of the opinion, your client is only the partnership.

(2) [9:108] Borrower and guarantor: The identity of your client can be problematic when you represent the borrower but a guaranty of the loan is issued by a nonclient third party. Here, the lender usually wants the opinion to cover not only the borrower's obligations under the loan documents, but the guaranty as well. Because your opinion letter might include an opinion about the guaranty, it might be beneficial to clarify you do not represent the guarantor.

b. [9:109] Disclosing your role: The opinion giver's specific role in the transaction should be identified: e.g., whether the opinion giver has acted as general counsel, special counsel, local counsel, or in some other capacity in rendering the opinion.

c. [9:110] Disclosing special relationship with client: Also consider disclosing any special relationship you or anyone in your firm has with the client.

For example, it may be advisable to disclose that a lawyer in your firm is a director or officer of the corporate client involved, that you or a lawyer in the firm has some close family relationship with an officer, director or equity holder, that the opinion giver has a direct financial interest in the client, or that there is some other significant business relationship between the client and opinion giver. [See 1989 Business Law Report, pg. 23; 2005 Corporations Report, pg. 38 (¶ 9:18)]

5. [9:111] Opinion Recipient(s): The parties must decide to whom the opinion will be issued—i.e., who is to be the beneficiary of, and be entitled to rely upon, the opinion letter.

➪ [9:112] PRACTICE POINTER: The opinion is usually issued to the other party (or parties) to the transaction. However, keep in mind that an opinion appropriate for one recipient may be inappropriate or unnecessary for another recipient. Strive to limit the number of opinion recipients and, to the extent there will be multiple recipients, consider whether it is more prudent to issue separate, different opinions to each of them.

a. [9:113] Other counsel: One of the most frequently negotiated issues regarding opinion recipients is whether counsel for the opinion recipient should also be an opinion recipient. Opposing counsel often want to be opinion recipients because they are sometimes required to issue opinions to their own clients and may want to expressly rely on your opinion in doing so.

b. [9:114] Other third parties: Carefully consider the extent to which the opinion recipient intends to use or rely on your opinion. For example, if the recipient will cite or rely on your opinion in a prospectus to sell securities, each of the investors might conceivably claim to be a third party beneficiary of your opinion. (Under certain circumstances, opinion givers may owe a duty of care to third party intended beneficiaries of the opinion. See ¶ 9:219 ff.)

Section 20 of the Accord provides some clarification by stating (1) only the opinion recipient is entitled to rely upon or assert any legal right based on the opinion letter; and (2) the opinion recipient is permitted to rely on the opinion only for the purpose contemplated by the transactional documents. Section 20 further provides that if a different arrangement is intended, the opinion letter should specify any other person who is so entitled to rely on the opinion and under what circumstances, and to what extent, they may so rely. [See 2019 Statement of Opinion Practices, 74 Bus. Law. 807, 812, § 11—opinion letter “may be relied on only by its addressee and any other person the opinion giver expressly authorizes to rely”]

➪ [9:115] PRACTICE POINTERS: When deciding on the number and identities of the opinion recipients, keep the following points in mind:

• It is sometimes beneficial to specifically state in the opinion (i) who may rely on the opinion; (ii) the permissible extent of such reliance; (iii) that no one other than the named opinion recipient may rely on the opinion; and (iv) that you have no obligation to update the opinion. [See Accord § 9; and ¶ 9:191 re obligation to update opinions]

• Be careful how you describe the addressee of the opinion. It is one thing to deliver your opinion to the other party "in care of" opposing counsel. It is something else to actually address your opinion to opposing counsel. By addressing your opinion to opposing counsel, you might inadvertently imply you have rendered an opinion to opposing counsel.

6. [9:116] Scope of Opinion Giver's Inquiry: The extent to which the opinion giver has reviewed documents, conducted an investigation or performed a factual or legal analysis should be explicitly stated in the opinion. Whenever possible, identify the specific documents, certificates, statutes, cases and information upon which you relied in rendering your opinion. You may even want to state you relied on certain documents or information with the opinion recipient's express permission.

7. [9:117] Assumptions: Every opinion makes certain express or implied assumptions. As a general rule, the broader the assumptions, the narrower the opinion.

Moreover, under customary opinion letter practice, stated assumptions shift to opinion recipients the responsibility for confirming the assumed facts for themselves or taking the risk that the assumptions may turn out to be untrue. [See GemCap Lending, LLC v. Quarles & Brady, LLP (CD CA 2017) 269 F.Supp.3d 1007, 1035 (applying Calif. law)]

a. [9:118] Unstated assumptions: The specific assumptions opinion givers should make will be determined by the facts of each transaction. Some factual assumptions do not need to be stated because they generally apply in all types of transactions, regardless of their nature or the parties. Examples of ordinary unstated assumptions include:

• the documents reviewed are accurate, complete, and authentic;

• copies are identical to the originals;

• signatures are genuine;

• the parties to the transaction other than the opinion giver's client (or a non-client whose obligations are covered by the opinion) have the power and have taken the necessary action to enter into the transaction; and

• the agreements those parties have entered into with the opinion giver's client (or the non-client) are enforceable against them. [2019 Statement of Opinion Practices, 74 Bus. Law. 807, 809, § 5.5]

b. [9:119] Impact: Section 4 of the Accord enumerates many assumptions which may automatically be made by the opinion giver without investigation. However, § 5 of the Accord states reliance on assumptions may be unwarranted if you have in-formation that is contrary to the assumptions you have made. [See also 2019 Statement of Opinion Practices, supra, 74 Bus. Law. at 809-810, § 5.5—"An opinion should not be based on an unstated assumption if the opinion preparers know that the assumption is incorrect or know of facts that they recognize make their reliance under the circumstances otherwise unwarranted"]

8. [9:120] Entity Status: One of the most basic aspects of an opinion letter concerns the status of an entity. Lenders commonly require an opinion that the borrower has been "duly organized," is "validly existing" and is in "good standing."

a. [9:121] Corporate entity "duly incorporated": "Duly incorporated" means that "at the time the corporation was formed, the legal steps necessary to perfect its formation were completed (that is, its articles were signed and filed with the Secretary of State) and that the articles contained all information required to perfect its formation (and did not contain any provisions prohibitive) under the applicable corporate law as then in effect." [1989 Business Law Report, pg. 25]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Since the "duly incorporated" opinion only covers the company's status at the time of incorporation and does not cover the company's subsequent actions, it "never stands alone." Instead, it is routinely paired with an opinion about the company's current status—e.g., "validly existing" (¶ 9:124) or "good standing" (¶ 9:125). [2005 Corporations Report, pg. 40 (¶ 9:18)]

b. "Duly organized"

(1) [9:122] Corporations: With respect to a corporation, "duly organized" means steps beyond the mere execution and filing of the articles have been taken—e.g., directors have been elected, officers have been appointed, and the directors have authorized initial issuance of the corporation's capital stock.

(Because a "duly organized" corporation has, by definition, been "duly incorporated," the opinion as to due organization subsumes an opinion as to "due incorporation.")

(2) [9:123] Partnerships and other entities: The 1989 Business Law Report does not deal directly with the issue of due organization of partnerships, limited liability companies, limited liability partnerships or other entities. Even so, one can fairly conclude due organization with respect to such other entity means the entity has been lawfully formed under applicable law.

For example, with respect to limited partnerships, due organization would mean at least a Certificate of Limited Partnership has been filed with the California Secretary of State (Corps.C. § 15902.01; see ¶ 4:209). And due organization of a limited liability company would minimally mean the entity has filed executed Articles of Organization with the California Secretary of State (Corps.C. § 17702.01; see ¶ 4:214).

c. [9:124] "Validly existing": An opinion that a corporation is "validly existing" means the corporation has not dissolved (and no proceedings for dissolution have been commenced) and it has not ceased to exist by reason of merger or otherwise. The adverb "validly" means that the corporation is a "de jure" corporation, and not a "de facto" corporation. [1989 Business Law Report, pg. 26; 2005 Corporations Report, pg. 41 (¶ 9:18)]

With respect to other entities, "validly existing" should mean they likewise exist and dissolution proceedings have not been commenced.

d. [9:125] "Good standing": A corporation is in "good standing" if its charter has not been suspended or forfeited. Customarily, this can be determined by obtaining a "Certificate of Status" from the Secretary of State, or a good standing certificate from the Franchise Tax Board (if time permits and/or there is reason to believe the company may be delinquent on its tax filings). [See 2005 Corporations Report, pg. 42 (¶ 9:18)]

➪ [9:126] PRACTICE POINTER: When issuing an opinion as to good standing, many attorneys rely solely on the Secretary of State's Certificate of Status (so-called "good standing" certificate). Indeed, whenever possible, the good standing certificate should be delivered to the other party to the transaction in lieu of an opinion.

e. [9:127] Compare—other jurisdictions: The issue of due incorporation, organization, valid existence and good standing in other jurisdictions is a delicate subject because you should not be rendering an opinion on the law of another jurisdiction unless you are qualified to practice in that jurisdiction (or unless you rely on local counsel's opinion or have some other satisfactory basis for your opinion).

9. [9:130] Entity Power and Individual Authority: Another central element of most opinion letters is an opinion that the entity has the power and authority to conduct business, and to enter into the contemplated agreements and transactions; and that the individuals executing and delivering the documents have the authority to bind their respective entities.

a. [9:131] Power to conduct business: This is a fairly rudimentary opinion that simply states the entity has the power to carry on its business.

b. [9:132] Power and authority re agreement and contemplated transactions: This is a more substantial opinion to the effect that entering into the agreement and consummating the contemplated transactions are not outside the entity's permissible scope of activity. With respect to a corporation, such an opinion means the agreement and contemplated transactions would not be ultra vires. With respect to a partnership or trust, this opinion means the agreement and contemplated transactions are not outside the business contemplated by the partnership or trust agreement.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

c. [9:133] Authorization: Opinions as to authorization relate to the entity's specific authority to engage in the contemplated transaction and the authority of the individuals who purport to bind the entity.

(1) [9:134] Entity authority: Such an opinion means all entity action required to have taken place before execution and delivery of the documents has in fact taken place.

Specifically, with respect to a corporation, this opinion means any required corporate resolutions have been adopted by the board of directors. With respect to a partnership, it means any required vote or consent of the partners has been obtained.

(2) [9:135] Individual authority: With regard to the authority of the individuals who sign and deliver documents, this opinion means those individuals have been properly authorized by their entities to bind the entity (either pursuant to the governing documents, specific resolutions or otherwise).

10. [9:136] No-Conflict Opinion: The purpose of a "no-conflict" opinion is to assure one party (usually, the lender) that the other party (the borrower) is not legally bound in a manner inconsistent with the transactions at hand. In particular, the lender is concerned the borrower might be subject to an agreement, court order or law that would prohibit the borrower from entering into or performing its obligations under the agreements. Therefore, an opinion covering the following issues is sometimes requested:

• The execution and delivery of the agreements, and the performance by the client of its obligations thereunder, will not conflict with or result in a violation of:

— the corporation's articles of incorporation (or, in the case of a different kind of entity, that entity's governing documents);

— any judgment, order or decree of any court or arbitrator to which the client is a party; or — any law, rule or regulation applicable to the client.

• The execution and delivery of the agreements, and performance by the client of its obligations thereunder, will not constitute a material breach under the terms of any agreement or obligation to which the client is bound.

• No governmental or other consent is required as a condition to the client entering into, or performing its obligations under, the agreements.

➪ [9:137] PRACTICE POINTER: These "no-conflict" opinions are the subject of much controversy because of their breadth. Conceivably, such an opinion would require the opinion giver to review virtually all of the client's contracts and files and analyze almost all applicable laws.

One method for avoiding an overly broad no-conflict opinion is to identify and limit your opinion to the specific agreements, court orders and laws which you have reviewed and to which the opinion is limited. [See Accord §§ 15 & 16, with particular reference to § 15.3 Commentary]

11. [9:138] Litigation, Condemnation and Other Claims and Proceedings: One of the most often requested factual opinions relates to the existence of pending or threatened litigation, proceedings (such as condemnation proceedings) and claims against the client or concerning the subject property. However, the opinion giver is not necessarily the most competent person to render an opinion on such matters. Although the opinion giver will be familiar with certain specific pending or threatened litigation, proceedings and claims for which it is then providing representation, the opinion giver does not necessarily have any unique, expedient ability to determine what other pending or threatened matters exist.

a. Pending litigation affecting client

(1) [9:139] Litigation against client: The only certain way of ascertaining litigation pending against your client is to conduct a search of court records. (You cannot safely rely on what your client supposedly knows because your client may have been sued but not yet served; or, your client might have been lawfully served by way of service upon an authorized third party who accepted the summons but forgot to advise the client—e.g., as where an employee accepts service upon an entity employer without telling the supervisor.)

In any event, it seems that if the opinion recipients want to know what litigation is pending against the client, they (or you) can simply conduct a search of the court records and the opinion recipients can then review the pleadings in the pending litigation and draw their own conclusions.

(2) [9:140] Litigation against client's principals: Another difficulty in rendering an opinion concerning matters “affecting” the client is determining whether a claim that involves one of the client's principals also “affects” the client.

For example, if the general partner of a limited partnership (who owns a majority interest in the partnership) is a defendant in a major piece of litigation, does that “affect” the limited partnership? Such a suit against an individual should not be relevant to an opinion about claims affecting the entity, but the opinion recipient might disagree.

b. [9:141] Pending litigation affecting property: It is also difficult to render an opinion regarding litigation that “affects the property.” You could obtain a title report from a title insurance company (which would show actions filed against the subject property); but there seems no reason why you should issue an opinion when a title insurance policy can be purchased.

Another problem arises when there is litigation that could affect the property, but neither the property owner nor the property is the direct subject of the lawsuit. For example, the 1987 Real Property Report presents the hypothetical of when a citizen's group has filed a lawsuit against a governmental entity, contending the applicable general plan is invalid. The outcome of such a suit could certainly affect the subject property, but neither counsel nor the client would necessarily be aware of such litigation and a title company's title report would not necessarily reflect the suit.

c. [9:142] Threatened claims and litigation: Crafting an opinion with respect to “threatened” claims and litigation is exceptionally difficult. (As discussed in Ch. 4, it is very difficult to define a “threatened” claim; see ¶ 4:444 ff., 4:456.)

(1) [9:143] Among many other issues is the question of how current a threat must be to qualify as a “threatened” claim. (For example, is a threat made four years ago too dated? What about one made a year ago?)

(2) [9:144] An opinion regarding threatened claims is also problematic because of the scope of investigation the opinion giver might have to undertake on the matter. Presumptively, the opinion giver would have to review many of the client's files and perhaps interview many of the client's employees to ascertain what threatened third party claims have been made.

d. [9:145] Your knowledge: Most opinion recipients will tell you they do not expect you to review your client's files or otherwise undertake a massive investigation with respect to pending or threatened claims and litigation. Instead, they often say they are only interested in “your knowledge.” Unfortunately, there is no clear definition of “knowledge” in this context (see ¶ 9:185 ff.; see also ¶ 4:456).

e. [9:146] Limiting opinion by “materiality” standard: One way of limiting opinions in this area is to utilize a “materiality” standard. However, this approach can also create problems:

• The parties might disagree as to what is “material” (unless a fixed dollar amount is identified as a threshold).

• The claim or litigation may not be for money damages and, therefore, not readily quantifiable on a materiality scale.

12. [9:147] Compliance With Law: Lenders often request an opinion that the subject property is in compliance with all zoning, subdivision, building code, environmental and other laws. However, borrower's counsel typically will have a very difficult time satisfying such a request:

• Because they are so voluminous, it is virtually impossible to identify all laws applicable to the property.

• Likewise, it is almost impossible to determine whether the property is in compliance with the law without investigating every aspect of the property.

• Also, certain laws (particularly environmental laws) are complex, in a state of flux and subject to varying interpretations (see Ch. 5).

➪ [9:148] PRACTICE POINTER: The best approach for counsel asked to render a “compliance with law” opinion is to determine whether some form of compliance certificate is available from a governmental entity having jurisdiction over the property.

Alternatively, consider providing the opinion recipient with some written certification from the client that, to the client's best knowledge, the property is in compliance (or at least materially in compliance) with applicable laws; and/or that the client has not received any formal written notice of violation of law from any public authority.

Because you cannot know with certainty whether the property is in fact in compliance with all applicable laws, either (or both) of these methods should preferably be used in lieu of (and not in addition to) a legal opinion on the issue.

13. [9:149] Title and Transferability: California lawyers should not issue opinions with respect to title or transferability of real property. Though the practice may be different in other jurisdictions, California lawyers neither research the state of title nor issue opinions regarding title, transferability or priority of liens. Instead, the opinion recipient's title insurance policy should provide sufficient comfort on these issues. (See Ch. 3.)

14. [9:150] Usury: A usury opinion is often an important part of borrower's counsel's legal opinion. When the interest rate (and various other charges that may be construed as interest, see ¶ 6:283 ff.) is well within the usury limit, the opinion giver should have little difficulty in rendering the opinion. However, it may be more difficult to render a usury opinion when the loan appears subject to a usury exemption (¶ 6:290 ff.).

For example, many loan transactions are exempt from the usury laws by virtue of the status of the lender (e.g., the lender is exempt because it holds a particular kind of license; see ¶ 6:291 ff.). If the loan is exempt by reason of the lender's status, it seems unfair to require borrower's counsel to render an opinion on the usury issue (after all, the lender knows the status of its own license better than does borrower's counsel).

➪ [9:151] PRACTICE POINTER—CHOICE OF LAW IMPLICATIONS*: If the parties have selected the law of another jurisdiction to govern the loan transaction, your usury opinion necessarily must reflect the governing out-of-state law. In those circumstances, you should obtain local counsel's opinion on the issue, and your opinion should state you have assumed a court would uphold the parties' choice of foreign law.

15. [9:152] Opinion Qualifications: Every opinion is qualified (conditional) in some fashion and the specific qualifications must be stated with clarity.

In addition to any unique qualifications applicable to the transaction at hand, there are at least three commonly-accepted general qualifications:

a. [9:153] Jurisdictional scope of opinion: The opinion should delineate the jurisdictional law under which the opinion is rendered and further state no opinion is expressed with respect to any other law.

b. [9:154] Bankruptcy and creditors' rights: A "bankruptcy and creditors' rights exception" excludes from the opinion the effect of bankruptcy and insolvency laws (which would include fraudulent transfer issues) and similar laws affecting the rights and remedies of creditors generally.

This exception is regularly permitted by opinion recipients because "[t]he area of federal bankruptcy and state creditors' rights law is complex and makes the giving of a bankruptcy-related opinion a perilous task." [1988 UCC Report; 44 The Business Lawyer 803 (1989); see also Accord § 12]

c. [9:155] Equitable principles limitation: Almost every opinion is expressly qualified by, and subject to, general principles of equity. Both the 1992 Business Law Report (at pg. 16) and the Accord (§ 13) discuss the propriety of an "equitable principles limitation."

An equitable principles limitation recognizes there are certain judicially-developed rules concerning the rights of one party to enforce an agreement. (For example, laches, estoppel, waiver, breach of the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, materiality and reasonableness standards, are all subject to judicial discretion.)

The equitable principles limitation most often relates to an "enforceability" (or "remedies") opinion (see ¶ 9:156 ff.). However, some form of qualification with respect to equitable principles is important in every opinion regardless of whether an enforceability opinion is included.

16. [9:156] "Enforceability" ("Remedies") Opinion: One of the most intensively negotiated issues in an opinion letter relates to enforceability of the agreements and the opinion recipient's remedies. This portion of the opinion is popularly referred to as the "enforceability" or "remedies" opinion.

In loan transactions, an enforceability opinion is probably the most important section of borrower's counsel's opinion letter. The lender typically requests an opinion to the effect that "the agreement(s) constitute legal, valid, binding obligations of the borrower, enforceable in accordance with its (their) terms."

a. [9:157] Justifications: Lenders usually recite one or more reasons for asking for an enforceability opinion:

• To advise the lender of any material limitations on enforcement of the lender's rights which the opinion giver believes exist. (Opinion recipients are often of the belief that opinion givers will be less inclined to draft agreements which include a hidden "escape hatch" for their clients if the opinion giver is required to issue an enforceability opinion.)

• To confirm that the documents reflect the parties' mutual agreement and that they are binding agreements.

• To confirm the legal relationship between the parties—i.e., that the relationship is between a lender and borrower and that the loan documents do not create a joint venture or partnership between the parties.

• To comply with the lender's underwriting practice (i.e., an enforceability opinion may be one of the lender's required closing documents whether or not there is a good reason for it).

b. [9:158] Fundamental problems: There are several reasons why an enforceability opinion is difficult to render:

• Lawyers do not agree on the meaning of "enforceable." (Even the various bar association reports differ on this issue.) Indeed, most lenders will admit that certain provisions in their loan agreements are onerous and not enforceable under many circumstances.

• Because lender's counsel most likely drafted the agreements (and may have litigated those documents over the years), it seems rather odd, if not unnecessary, to require borrower's counsel to render an opinion as to their enforceability. After all, the author of the documents should know better than anyone else whether the agreements are enforceable.

• Future circumstances are not predictable. Therefore, defenses, exceptions and limitations affecting enforceability which are not contemplated at the time of the making of the contract might subsequently apply.

• Although various bar associations have crafted different proposals for a standard remedies opinion, each one suffers from ambiguity.

➪ [9:159] PRACTICE POINTER—IMPLIED USURY OPINION*: An enforceability opinion can be construed as including an opinion that the loan is not usurious.

[See Accord, Commentary § 18.1] Therefore, be aware that, by adopting the Accord, you may unintentionally issue an implied opinion the loan is not usurious.

c. [9:160] Bankruptcy/creditors' rights and equitable principles limitations: As noted at ¶ 9:154 ff., the bankruptcy exception and equitable principles limitation are standard exceptions to an enforceability opinion. The 1990 Real Property Addendum provides that the equitable principles limitation includes at least the following three concepts with respect to enforceability opinions:

• No opinion is intended with respect to whether performance includes traditional equitable remedies (e.g., specific performance, injunction, etc.);

• No opinion is intended with respect to whether enforcement may be limited by traditional equitable defenses (e.g., waiver, laches, estoppel, etc.); and

• No opinion is intended with respect to whether enforcement may be limited by other substantive or procedural rules affecting enforcement of contractual obligations generally (without regard to whether such limitations arise out of traditional "equitable" principles).

d. [9:161] "Accord remedies opinion": Section 10 of the Accord provides that a "remedies opinion" means (1) a contract has been formed; (2) a remedy will be available with respect to each agreement; and (3) any remedy expressly provided for in the contract will be given effect as stated.

➪ [9:162] PRACTICE POINTER—INAPPROPRIATE FOR SECURED LOAN TRANSACTIONS*: An "Accord remedies opinion" takes the approach that each and every obligation of the agreement is enforceable. However, the Accord is not specifically designed for real estate transactions, much less real property secured loan transactions. Thus, the Accord approach would be inappropriate when rendering a borrower's counsel's opinion in a commercial loan transaction.

The better practice is to render an opinion that the lender generally will have the right to enforce the agreement, but no opinion should be rendered to the effect that any particular (or all) provision(s) are enforceable (see ¶ 9:167 ff.).

e. [9:163] "California Understanding": The "California Understanding" of the Accord § 10 remedies opinion is published in the 1992 Business Law Report. It expressly excludes certain kinds of legal issues from an Accord remedies opinion. However, although the 1992 Business Law Report discusses some aspects of real estate secured loan documentation, it is primarily a business law (not a real estate law) report. (Indeed, the 1992 Business Law Report notes it is not intended to preempt any analysis the Real Property Law Section of the State Bar of California might publish in the future as a supplement to the Accord.)

More specific recommendations for remedies opinions in California real property secured transaction are discussed in the 1995 Real Property Report (¶ 9:18).

f. [9:164] Qualification by "laundry list approach": One method of qualifying an enforceability opinion is to describe specific exceptions to enforceability. This is popularly known as the "laundry list approach."

(1) [9:165] Drawbacks: Unfortunately, the laundry list approach makes opinions long and sometimes confusing; it implies that those exceptions which are not excluded are fully enforceable; and it causes much negotiation over which exceptions are permissible and the precise wording of those exceptions. For these reasons, "the laundry list approach appears to be increasingly disfavored." [See 1990 Real Property Addendum at p. 5]

(2) [9:166] Typical exceptions: Among the many exceptions typically enumerated in a laundry list approach are: the right to enforce late charges and penalties; enforceability of due-on-sale and due-on-encumbrance clauses; provisions for indemnification of the lender by the borrower; subordination clauses; provisions conflicting with California's antideficiency, fair value, right of redemption and one-action rules; materiality standards; the requirement of reasonableness, etc.

g. [9:167] "Generic" approach: A "generic" enforceability opinion basically opines that, while certain rights and remedies of the lender may not be enforceable, the loan documents are not unenforceable as a whole and the lender is not precluded from (1) enforcing the borrower's obligation to pay the principal and interest, and (2) foreclosing its security interest. The 1995 Real Property Report (¶ 9:18) refers to the generic opinion as the "essential benefits approach."

(1) [9:168] Drawback: Although a generic enforceability opinion avoids the agony of negotiations over specific exceptions (which are endemic to the laundry list approach), it suffers from ambiguity. [See 4 The ACREL Papers 165 (1992)—generic opinion "is vague and does not provide certainty or specifics"]

(2) [9:169] ACREL generic remedies opinion: In July, 1991, the Attorneys' Opinions Committee of the American College of Real Estate Lawyers issued a Draft Statement of Policy on Enforceability Opinions in Mortgage Loan Transactions. That Draft Statement proposes the following generic qualification to a borrower's counsel's enforceability opinion:

> "Certain remedies, waivers, and other provisions of the Loan Documents may not be enforceable, but such unenforceability will not render the Loan Documents invalid as a whole or preclude (i) the judicial enforcement of the obligation of the borrower to repay the principal, together with interest thereon, as provided in the note (to the extent not deemed a penalty), and (ii) the foreclosure of the mortgage (or deed of trust) [and/or any security agreements]."

(a) [9:170] Advantage: The advantage of the ACREL proposal is that it essentially limits the scope of the opinion to two remedies—enforcement of the note and foreclosure of the security interest.

(3) [9:171] "Practical realization of principal benefits of loan documents": Another generic approach to an enforceability opinion opines that the lender's remedies are adequate for the "practical realization of the principal benefits" intended to be provided by the loan documents. Such a generic qualification would be similar to the following:

> "Certain rights, remedies and waivers contained in the loan documents may be limited or rendered ineffective or unenforceable by applicable laws and judicial decisions governing such provisions, but such laws and judicial decisions do not make the loan documents legally inadequate for (or substantially interfere with) the practical realization of the principal benefits and/or security intended to be provided by the loan documents."

(a) [9:172] Ambiguity issues: There are problems with this form of generic qualification. For example, what is "practical" realization of the "principal" benefits? (Some believe the word "substantial" should be substituted for the word "practical.")

In addition, this generic qualification speaks of the security "intended" to be provided by the loan documents. Whose intent is envisioned? Thus, this form of generic enforceability opinion also lacks clarity.

[9:172.1 - 9:172.4] Reserved.

(4) [9:172.5] 1995 Real Property Report generic exception: The 1995 Real Property Report, as modified by the 1998 Supplement (¶ 9:18), also includes language for a generic exception to an enforceability opinion (which is somewhat longer than the ACREL language). (This optional language is included in the sample opinion letter included at the end of this Chapter; see Form 9:A.)

[9:173] Comment: Inevitably, borrower's counsel will be required to issue enforceability opinions. Nonetheless, there is still no consensus among lawyers as to the purpose or meaning of such an opinion. It is difficult to conceive of how there can ever be a meeting of the minds between opinion giver and opinion recipient when the real estate bar does not even have a definitive understanding of the scope of an enforceability opinion.

17. [9:175] Opinion Giver's "Due Diligence": The kind and quantity of "due diligence" investigation that should be conducted by the opinion giver is one of the most problematic issues in the opinion process. Generally, the quantity and quality of your investigation should be tailored to the specific opinion to be given. While there is no formalized approach, the following should be considered.

a. [9:176] Entity formation documents: Any opinion with respect to the formation of your client as a legal entity or its power and authority to enter into the transactions (see ¶ 9:120 ff.) requires your review of the entity's governing documents (e.g., articles of incorporation, bylaws and directors' resolutions for corporations; partnership agreements for partnerships; operating agreements for limited liability companies, etc.).

b. [9:177] Certificates/declarations by public officials and private parties: Determine what certificates and/or written statements you need to obtain from public officials or private parties to support your opinion.

➪ [9:178] PRACTICE POINTER: Section 3 of the Accord permits the opinion giver to rely on information from public entities without further investigation and without conducting any analysis of underlying data supporting a public official's certificate. Even so, if you have knowledge the information received or assumptions you have made are incorrect, you may have engaged in unwarranted reliance. [See Accord § 5]

c. [9:179] Laws and regulations: Determine what case law, statutes and administrative regulations are implicated by the requested opinion and thus essential to review before rendering your opinion.

d. [9:180] Your firm's files/lawyers in your firm: Your "knowledge" may extend to all of the lawyers in your firm (see ¶ 9:185 ff.). Consequently, you may need to canvas all lawyers in your firm before rendering an opinion. You may also need to review your firm's files with respect to your client to make certain nothing therein conflicts with your opinion.

e. [9:181] Transactional documents: Your opinion will relate primarily to the transactional documents. Thus, the most important part of your investigation is understanding all aspects of the transactional documents and making certain your opinion is consistent with them. (If the transactional documents refer to or incorporate other documents, you may need to review those as well.)

18. [9:185] Opinion Giver's "Knowledge": The opinion giver's "knowledge" is an important element in every opinion. Many attorneys try to narrow their opinions by limiting certain aspects to their "best," "actual" or "current" knowledge. Unfortunately, the use of a "best knowledge" (or similar) standard is dangerous because it defies clear definition (see ¶ 4:456).

a. [9:186] 1989 Business Law Report "current actual knowledge" standard: The 1989 Business Law Report "recommends that the phrase 'current actual knowledge' be used"; and includes a paragraph that attempts to define "current actual knowledge." [See 1989 Business Law Report, pgs. 20-21] However, even the language suggested by that Report is unclear and potentially subject to differing interpretations.

b. [9:187] Accord "conscious awareness" standard: Section 6-A of the Accord provides that the term "opinion giver's actual knowledge or a phrase having equivalent wording … means the conscious awareness of facts or other information …" This "conscious awareness" concept recognizes that "what is 'known' at one time may not be in the mind or may be forgotten altogether at another time." [See Accord Commentary § 6.2(iv)]

This definition of actual knowledge appears to be the most narrow because it does not require the opinion giver to canvas all lawyers (or review all files) in the opinion giver's organization. [See Accord Commentary § 6.2(i) & (ii)]

c. [9:187.1] ABA 2012 Report standard: The sample Real Estate Finance Opinion contained in the ABA 2012 Report recommends including a definition specifying whose knowledge is relevant and incorporates sample language. [See ABA 2012 Report, pgs. 257-258.]

19. [9:188] Adopting Accord or Other Bar Reports: Because there is little binding authority on the subject of opinion letters, the analysis or language used in one of the bar association reports might be beneficial in explaining or interpreting your opinion. If your opinion references a particular bar report, the discussion in that report might be admissible as evidence to explain any ambiguity in the opinion or otherwise interpret the scope of the opinion.

However, of the various bar association reports, only the Accord (¶ 9:19) specifically contemplates it can be adopted by the opinion giver. (The provisions and definitions of the Accord can be adopted by using the language set forth in § 22 of the Accord.)

The 1991 ACREL Statement of Policy on Mortgage Loan Enforceability Opinions (see ¶ 9:169) can also be specifically adopted. But keep in mind the ACREL Statement relates only to the enforceability portion of the opinion.

20. [9:189] Tactic to Avoid Opinions by Implication: To avoid the implication of unintended opinions (e.g., a usury opinion implied by an enforceability opinion), it may be advisable to specify that no opinions may be inferred other than those expressly stated in your opinion. (Section 18 of the Accord specifically states there are no implied opinions unless (i) an underlying opinion is essential to the legal conclusion reached by the express opinion; or (ii) it is reasonable to imply an opinion under the circumstances, based on prevailing norms among experienced lawyers in the applicable jurisdiction.)

21. [9:190] Effective Date of Opinion: Most real estate opinions are signed, delivered and effective as of the closing of a particular transaction (usually a commercial loan). Therefore, the opinion letter should either state the date upon which it becomes effective or specify the conditions precedent to the opinion becoming effective.

In a loan transaction, the opinion typically is not effective until all parties have executed and delivered certain documents (the promissory note, deed of trust, etc.); the security interests have been perfected by the lender as required by law; and the transaction has otherwise closed.

22. [9:191] Updating Opinion: Opinion givers have no implied obligation to update their opinions to advise the opinion recipients of any changes in law or fact that may subsequently render any portion of the opinion incorrect. (Section 9 of the Accord expressly provides the opinion giver has no obligation to update the opinion.)

Some attorneys, however, prefer to specifically state they have no obligation to update the opinion. (The sample Real Estate Finance Opinion contained in the ABA 2012 Report suggests including a specific disclaimer of any obligation to advise the opinion recipient of any changes; see pg. 273.)

23. [9:192] Signature and Internal Procedures: If the opinion letter is rendered by a law firm (rather than a sole practitioner), it should be signed by an individual lawyer on behalf of the firm.

Before executing the opinion, any internal procedures of the law firm should be followed. Some firms have extensive internal procedures and policies regarding opinion letters—e.g., that the opinion must be approved by at least two lawyers; that only certain kinds of opinions may be given; or that certain specific due diligence must be conducted prior to issuance of an opinion (and that the supporting, backup research and documentation must be contained in the opinion letter file).

F. Special Concerns Re Ground Lease Opinions

1. [9:201] Assignment/Subletting Provisions
2. [9:202] Landlord's Remedies
3. [9:203] Rent Control
4. [9:204] Tax Treatment
5. [9:205] Use Restrictions
6. [9:206] Indemnifications
7. [9:207] Other Enforceability Issues

[9:200] Although rare, tenant's counsel under a ground lease (Ch. 7) may occasionally be asked to issue an opinion on the leasehold transaction. These are some of the particular issues tenant's counsel should be concerned with:

1. [9:201] Assignment/Subletting Provisions: The opinion should be qualified and limited with respect to the enforceability of assignment and subletting provisions (which are often governed by standards of reasonableness but subject to Civ.C. § 1995.210 et seq. and applicable case law; see ¶ 7:60 ff.).

2. [9:202] Landlord's Remedies: Enforcement of the landlord's remedies will be subject to the limitations set forth in Civ.C. § 1951.2 et seq. (see detailed treatment in Friedman, Garcia & Hoy, Cal. Prac. Guide: Landlord-Tenant (TRG), Chs. 7, 8 & 9).

3. [9:203] Rent Control: Existing rent control laws and regulations may adversely impact or supersede the landlord's rights under the lease. (See detailed discussion in Friedman, Garcia & Hoy, Cal. Prac. Guide: Landlord-Tenant (TRG), Ch. 5.)

4. [9:204] Tax Treatment: No opinion should be rendered with respect to the tax treatment of the transaction. (Long-term leases with options to purchase can sometimes be construed as delayed sales; see Ch. 13.)

5. [9:205] Use Restrictions: The enforceability of use restrictions in the lease are subject to statutory limitations (Civ.C. § 1997.010 et seq.; see ¶ 7:170 ff.).

6. [9:206] Indemnifications: Provisions requiring the tenant to indemnify the landlord can be limited. (For example, as a matter of public policy, an indemnitor cannot be required to indemnify the indemnitee for the indemnitee's own fraud or negligence. See generally, ¶ 4:461 ff.)

7. [9:207] Other Enforceability Issues: In all other respects, tenant's counsel asked to issue an “enforceability opinion” should be concerned with the limitations regarding enforceability of contracts and documents generally. See ¶ 9:156 ff.

            (a) [9:263] Relevant factors
        (3) [9:264] Affirmation of client's misrepresentations

1. [9:215] In General: The introduction to the Accord states “[a] third-party legal opinion is an expression of professional judgment on the legal issues explicitly addressed. By rendering a professional opinion, the opinion giver does not become an insurer or guarantor of the expression of professional judgment, of the transaction or of the future performance of the client.” (Lucas v. Hamm (1961) 56 C2d 583, 15 CR 821, essentially confirms this statement.)

Nevertheless, as developed in this section, there are theories under which an opinion recipient might pursue a claim against the opinion giver (including negligence, misrepresentation or fraud).

Cross-refer: For further discussion of an attorney's liability for professional malpractice, see Tuft, Peck & Mohr, Cal. Prac. Guide: Professional Responsibility & Liability (TRG), Ch. 6.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

2. [9:216] Legal Standard of Care: Attorneys owe a general duty of care in providing opinion letters, as well as a duty to disclose facts that materially qualify their representations. [GemCap Lending, LLC v. Quarles & Brady, LLP (CD CA 2017) 269 F.Supp.3d 1007, 1030-1031 (applying California law) (¶ 9:235.1, 9:246)]

"There is currently no case law or Bar canon that clearly articulates the standard of care imposed upon attorneys under California law in rendering opinions. Generally speaking, a lawyer is expected to be well informed and to exercise 'such skill, prudence and diligence as lawyers of ordinary skill and capacity commonly possess and exercise in the performance of the tasks which they undertake.' In addition, a lawyer is expected to discover 'rules of law which, although not commonly known, may readily be found by standard research techniques.'" [1989 Business Law Report, pgs. 3-4; see also Kirsch v. Duryea (1978) 21 C3d 303, 308, 146 CR 218, 222—"[t]he attorney is not liable for every mistake he may make … he is not, in the absence of an express agreement, an insurer of the soundness of his opinions"; Davis v. Damrell (1981) 119 CA3d 883, 889, 174 CR 257, 260-261; Metzger v. Silverman (1976) 62 CA3d Supp. 30, 39, 133 CR 355, 361-362; and ¶ 1:46 ff. re attorney competence]

3. [9:217] To Whom Duty of Care Owed; Actionable Third Party Claims: An attorney's duty of care in the rendition of professional services extends to clients and also, under certain circumstances, to nonclients. [Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 C4th 370, 411-412, 11 CR2d 51, 77; Pavicich v. Santucci (2000) 85 CA4th 382, 395, 102 CR2d 125, 135]

Whether nonclients can prevail in an action against an attorney depends upon the underlying circumstances and the theory of recovery:

a. [9:218] No professional negligence (malpractice) liability to nonclients: An attorney's liability for professional negligence is confined to the client—i.e., the person who contracted for the attorney's services. Third party nonclients therefore cannot prevail against counsel on a pure negligence theory. [See Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 C4th 370, 411-412, 11 CR2d 51, 77; B.L.M. v. Sabo & Deitsch (1997) 55 CA4th 823, 830-831, 64 CR2d 335, 339; and Mariani v. Price Waterhouse (1999) 70 CA4th 685, 694, 82 CR2d 671, 676]

(1) [9:219] Compare—third party beneficiary as "client": A nonclient can state a professional negligence cause of action against the attorney if the nonclient is the practical and legal equivalent of a client. For example, an express third party beneficiary of the attorney-client contract may be considered the equivalent of a "client" if the attorney's services were sought for the purpose of creating a benefit in favor of the nonclient. [See Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 C4th 370, 406-407, 11 CR2d 51, 73-74 & fn. 16; Mariani v. Price Waterhouse (1999) 70 CA4th 685, 697, 82 CR2d 671, 678]

(a) [9:220] Not extended to incidental beneficiaries: It is not enough, however, that third parties "incidentally" stood to benefit from the attorney's services.

Courts will not impose a duty in favor of a third party unless the third party can show that the "prime purpose" for retaining the attorney was to create a benefit in favor of the third party. [See Johnson v. Sup.Ct. (Sheppard, Mullin, Richter & Hampton) (1995) 38 CA4th 463, 472, 45 CR2d 312, 317—no duty of professional care owed to limited partners on third party beneficiary theory where general partner hired attorney for purpose of "swindling his partners" rather than to create benefit in their favor; B.L.M. v. Sabo & Deitsch (1997) 55 CA4th 823, 832-833, 64 CR2d 335, 340-341—attorney appointed special bond counsel in public housing development project for city owed no professional duty on third party beneficiary theory to project's developer]

b. [9:225] Liability for negligent misrepresentation: Under certain circumstances, "expressions of professional opinion are treated as representations of fact" and may give rise to liability for negligent misrepresentation, a species of the tort of deceit (see Civ.C. § 1572(2)). [Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 C4th 370, 407-408, 11 CR2d 51, 74 (emphasis added); B.L.M. v. Sabo & Deitsch (1997) 55 CA4th 823, 834-835, 64 CR2d 335, 342]

(1) [9:226] Essential elements of third party cause of action: An attorney may be liable for negligent misrepresentations made to nonclients who, as intended beneficiaries, justifiably rely on the misrepresentations in a particular transaction or type of transaction that the attorney intended to influence. [See Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 C4th 370, 376, 11 CR2d 51, 53]

(a) [9:227] Intended beneficiaries: There must have been some manifestation on the part of the attorney who offers the opinion, information, or advice "that [they are] acting to benefit a third party or defined group of third parties in a specific and circumscribed transaction." [Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 C4th 370, 411-412, 11 CR2d 51, 77; see B.L.M. v. Sabo & Deitsch (1997) 55 CA4th 823, 835, 64 CR2d 335, 342]

(b) [9:228] Intent to influence: Intent to influence the third party is a threshold issue. In its absence, there can be no negligent representation liability notwithstanding the third party's reliance on the attorney's opinion and even if that reliance was reasonably foreseeable. [See Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 C4th 370, 412, 11 CR2d 51, 77; B.L.M. v. Sabo & Deitsch (1997) 55 CA4th 823, 835, 64 CR2d 335, 342-343]

Where intent to influence is present, the attorney's duty of care arises because the third party's anticipated reliance upon the opinion or legal advice is "the end and aim of the transaction." [See Goodman v. Kennedy (1976) 18 C3d 335, 343, 134 CR 375, 381, fn. 4 (emphasis added); Bily v. Arthur Young & Co., supra, 3 C4th at 411, 11 CR2d at 76; Pavicich v. Santucci (2000) 85 CA4th 382, 395, 102 CR2d 125, 135]

1) [9:229] Knowledge of plaintiff's specific identity not required: It need not be shown that the attorney, when hired, knew the names or specific identities of the third parties. Liability may be imposed where the attorney "knows with substantial certainty that plaintiff, or the particular class of persons to which plaintiff belongs, will rely on the representation in the course of the transaction." [Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 C4th 370, 414, 11 CR2d 51, 78 (emphasis added); see also Rest.2d Torts § 552, comm. "h"]

2) [9:230] Direct communication between attorney and third party not required: Nor is it essential that the opinion or legal advice be communicated directly from the attorney to the third party. Attorneys may be liable if they knew their client would forward the opinion or advice to a particular class of persons. [See Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 C4th 370, 393, 11 CR2d 51, 64]

3) [9:231] Compare—no liability where attorney ignorant of intended purpose/use: On the other hand, there can be no misrepresentation liability to third persons where there is no evidence indicating the attorney knew what purpose their opinion or advice was intended to serve. [See Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 C4th 370, 408, 11 CR2d 51, 74]

(c) [9:235] Justifiable reliance: The gravamen of a cause of action for negligent misrepresentation is actual, justifiable reliance on the information supplied by the attorney. Without such reliance, there can be no recovery for negligent misrepresentation. [See Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 C4th 370, 413, 11 CR2d 51, 78; Mariani v. Price Waterhouse (1999) 70 CA4th 685, 694, 82 CR2d 671, 676, fn. 2—"in a negligent misrepresentation action, justifiable reliance on the false statement is indispensable"]

1) [9:235.1] Plaintiff's knowledge; burden of proof: Reasonable reliance is judged in light of the plaintiff's intelligence and experience. If the plaintiff knows facts demonstrating that a representation is "patently and obviously false," reliance is "manifestly unreasonable" and the misrepresentation was not the cause of the plaintiff's injury. [GemCap Lending, LLC v. Quarles & Brady, LLP (CD CA 2017) 269 F.Supp.3d 1007, 1038-1039 (internal quotes omitted)—attorneys did not breach duty to lender in opinion letters by misrepresenting or concealing pending or threatened litigation against borrower because lender received reports and warning that such litigation was ongoing (¶ 9:246)]

It is the plaintiff's burden to prove justifiable reliance. [GemCap Lending, LLC v. Quarles & Brady, LLP, supra, 269 F.Supp.3d at 1039]

2) [9:236] Effect where opinion recipient represented by counsel: It is not enough for third parties to establish their reliance on the attorney's legal opinion. The reliance must have been justifiable under the circumstances. This can be a particularly difficult hurdle where third parties are represented by their own counsel in the transaction (especially if that counsel has offered their own legal opinion on the subject). [B.L.M. v. Sabo & Deitsch (1997) 55 CA4th 823, 836-837, 64 CR2d 335, 343—reliance on defendant attorney's opinion not justified where third party had been given contrary legal opinion from own counsel]

3) [9:237] Effect of adversarial position: Moreover, reliance can rarely be justified where the third party is in an adverse or antagonistic position to the attorney's client. "This would in fact amount to creating a duty of professional care on the part of the attorney toward a person with whom the attorney would be prohibited from maintaining a professional relationship … We conclude that it would be inappropriate to hold an attorney liable to a third party for a legal opinion which the third party could not, under the Rules of Professional Conduct, have contracted to obtain from that attorney." [B.L.M. v. Sabo & Deitsch (1997) 55 CA4th 823, 838-839, 64 CR2d 335, 344-345 (emphasis added)]

(2) Application

(a) Negligent misrepresentation liability upheld

• [9:240] Lender loaned money to a partnership. When the loan was not repaid, Lender sued partnership's lawyers, alleging they had negligently prepared and delivered to their client for transmission to Lender an opinion letter expressing the erroneous view that the partnership was a general partnership composed of 14 general partners. The lawyers did not disclose, however, that a large number of the partners believed they were limited partners.

Lender's complaint, alleging that the lawyers "knew and understood that [the opinion letter] was to be shown to [Lender] in order to induce [it] to make loans to [the partnership]" stated a viable negligent misrepresentation cause of action against the lawyers. [Roberts v. Ball, Hunt, Hart, Brown & Baerwitz (1976) 57 CA3d 104, 107-108, 128 CR 901, 903-904—"legal opinion intended to secure benefit for the client … must be issued with due care"]

• [9:241] Similarly, Attorney who prepared a franchise prospectus that failed to disclose material information was held liable to prospective franchisees because Attorney "knew that the prospectus would be shown to prospective franchisees and that the information contained in it would be used to induce these persons to purchase … franchises." [Courtney v. Waring (1987) 191 CA3d 1434, 1443-1444, 237 CR 233, 239]

• [9:242] Borrower sued Mortgage Broker and Mortgage Broker cross-complained against Borrower's Attorney, alleging negligent misrepresentation and seeking indemnification. Attorney was held to owe a duty to Mortgage Broker because Attorney knew Broker would rely upon Attorney's representation that Borrower understood the transaction. [Home Budget Loans, Inc. v. Jacoby & Meyers Law Offices (1989) 207 CA3d 1277, 1284-1285, 255 CR 483, 486-487]

(b) No negligent misrepresentation liability

• [9:245] Attorney erroneously informed corporate officer clients they could sell stock without jeopardizing the corporation's exemption from securities laws. Plaintiffs purchased the stock and were damaged when the exemption was suspended, resulting in a loss in the stock's value. Plaintiffs could not state a negligent misrepresentation cause of action against Attorney because there was no allegation Attorney's opinion was given with the intention that it be communicated to plaintiffs (i.e., no intent to influence). [Goodman v. Kennedy (1976) 18 C3d 335, 343-344, 134 CR 375, 381, fn. 4; see Koehler v. Pulvers (SD CA 1985) 606 F.Supp. 164, 172 (construing Calif. law)—no intent to influence nonclient plaintiffs where advice affecting trust deed transactions not communicated to investors]

• [9:246] Attorneys were not liable for failing to disclose in opinion letters to lender that borrower was subject to multiple pending lawsuits (in which the attorneys allegedly represented the borrower). Attorneys' opinion letters only required attorneys to disclose lawsuits affecting the "validity or enforceability" of the lender's loan to the borrower. The pending lawsuits did not have any effect on the loan's validity or the lender's ability to enforce it, despite potentially subjecting the borrower to significant monetary damages that might adversely impair the loan's collateral. [GemCap Lending, LLC v. Quarles & Brady, LLP (CD CA 2017) 269 F.Supp.3d 1007, 1016, 1037 (¶ 9:235.1)]

(3) [9:250] Effect of bar against professional negligence liability to nonclients? At least one case suggests that recognizing a nonclient's negligent misrepresentation cause of action based solely on an attorney's legal opinion violates the bar against professional negligence liability to third party nonclients (¶ 9:218):

WESTLAW © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

"Extending liability for legal opinions under [a negligent misrepresentation] theory seems to us to undercut the holding of Bily [v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 C4th 370, 11 CR2d 51] that liability for legal malpractice extends only to clients and to those identified as third party beneficiaries of the professional employment agreement. [¶] To hold that reliance by a nonclient on an attorney's professional opinion, in combination with an inference that the attorney intended such reliance, is sufficient to hold the attorney liable for unknown errors in that opinion, seems to extend professional liability beyond what was approved in Bily." [See B.L.M. v. Sabo & Deitsch (1997) 55 CA4th 823, 839, 64 CR2d 335, 345, fn. 8 (dictum)]

The B.L.M. court found apparent support in existing case law: "A review of cases suggests that courts already make this distinction and have limited recovery by a third party against an attorney under a negligent misrepresentation theory to those cases involving misrepresentations of fact rather than legal opinions." [B.L.M. v. Sabo & Deitsch, supra, 55 CA4th at 839, 64 CR2d at 345 (emphasis added)]

(a) [9:251] Comment: B.L.M.'s observations seem contrary to the Cal. Supreme Court's conclusion that where attorneys give their clients a written opinion intending that it be transmitted to and relied upon by a third party, the attorneys owe the third party a duty of care in providing the advice and, under such circumstances, may be held liable for negligent misrepresentation. [See Bily v. Arthur Young & Co. (1992) 3 C4th 370, 411, 11 CR2d 51, 76 (approving Roberts v. Ball, Hunt, Hart, Brown & Baerwitz (1976) 57 CA3d 104, 107-108, 128 CR 901, 903-904, discussed at ¶ 9:240)]

Also, the B.L.M. criticism seems to ignore the principle, which the court itself stated elsewhere in its decision, that expressions of opinion by persons with special knowledge of the subject may be treated as representations of fact (¶ 9:7, 9:97.1, 9:225).

c. [9:260] Fraud liability: The general rule that an attorney's professional duty of care extends only to clients and intended beneficiaries of the legal work performed limits an attorney's liability for negligence (¶ 9:218 ff.); it does not relieve an attorney from fraud (intentional misrepresentation) liability to nonclient third parties when the elements of that tort are otherwise established. "Responsibility for a fraudulent act is independent of any contractual relation between the guilty party and the one injured." [Shafer v. Berger, Kahn, Shafton, Moss, Figler, Simon & Gladstone (2003) 107 CA4th 54, 69-72, 131 CR2d 777, 789-791 (internal quotes omitted); see also Vega v. Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue (2004) 121 CA4th 282, 291, 17 CR3d 26, 31-32]

(1) [9:261] Elements of third party fraud claim: The normal elements of the tort of fraud apply:

- defendant's misrepresentation of material fact;
- defendant's knowledge of the falsity (i.e., "scienter," which distinguishes the tort of fraud from the tort of negligent misrepresentation);
- defendant's intent to defraud (to induce reliance);
- plaintiff's justifiable reliance; and
- resulting damage (see ¶ 11:354 ff.). [Shafer v. Berger, Kahn, Shafton, Moss, Figler, Simon & Gladstone (2003) 107 CA4th 54, 74, 131 CR2d 777, 792; Vega v. Jones, Day, Reavis & Pogue (2004) 121 CA4th 282, 291, 17 CR3d 26, 32]

(2) [9:262] Misrepresentation of fact vs. nonactionable opinion: A knowing misrepresentation of fact, as opposed to an opinion reflecting the speaker's state of mind, is required for a viable fraud cause of action. Whether a particular statement should be characterized as an actionable misrepresentation of fact or a nonactionable opinion depends on "whether it is reasonably apparent that the person to whom the statement is addressed would regard [it] as one of fact[,] or based on the speaker's knowledge of facts reasonably implied by the statement[,] or as merely an expression of the speaker's state of mind." [Shafer v. Berger, Kahn, Shafton, Moss, Figler, Simon & Gladstone (2003) 107 CA4th 54, 75, 131 CR2d 777, 793 (emphasis omitted)]

(a) [9:263] Relevant factors: Courts consider the following factors in determining whether a particular statement made by a lawyer during negotiations is an actionable misrepresentation of fact or a nonactionable opinion:

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

- The negotiating parties' past relationship and apparent sophistication;
- The plausibility of the statement on its face;
- The phrasing of the statement;
- Related communications between the persons involved;
- The known negotiating practices of the community where the negotiations occurred; and
- Other "similar circumstances." [See Rest.3d Law Governing Lawyers § 98, Comm. "c"; Shafer v. Berger, Kahn, Shafton, Moss, Figler, Simon & Gladstone (2003) 107 CA4th 54, 75, 131 CR2d 777, 793]

(3) [9:264] Affirmation of client's misrepresentations: Actionable misrepresentations by an attorney can occur through the attorney's direct statements or the attorney's knowing affirmation of their client's false statements. [Rest.3d Law Governing Lawyers § 98, Comm. "c"; Shafer v. Berger, Kahn, Shafton, Moss, Figler, Simon & Gladstone (2003) 107 CA4th 54, 69, 131 CR2d 777, 789]

Chapter 9. Opinion Letters

Forms

[Form 9:A] Sample Opinion Letter (By Borrower's Counsel)

___________ Bank
____
___________, California ___
Attention: ___________
RE: Loan in the amount of $________ (the “Loan”), by _____ (the “Bank”) to ___________ (the “Borrower”)
Ladies and Gentlemen:

We have acted as _ [state scope of representation; e.g., special, local, etc.] counsel for the Borrower in connection with the above-referenced Loan and have examined the documents prepared by you or on your behalf and listed on Exhibit A attached hereto in connection with the Loan. (The documents listed on Exhibit A are collectively referred to herein as the “Loan Documents.”) We have also examined such _ [state kind of entity: corporate, partnership, etc.] records, documents and instruments of the Borrower and certificates of public officials as we have deemed necessary for the purpose of rendering the opinions set forth herein.

The opinions hereinafter expressed are subject to the following qualifications:

(i) You have informed us that Bank is an “exempt” lender as that term is defined and used in Article XV of the California Constitution and § 1916-1 et seq. of the California Civil Code, and therefore is not bound by the usury restrictions set forth therein, that the Loan Documents to be signed by the Bank have been duly-executed on behalf of the Bank, and that we may rely on such information without any independent investigation of same;

(ii) The effect of bankruptcy, insolvency, reorganization, moratorium or other similar laws now or hereafter in effect, affecting generally the enforcement of creditors' rights;

(iii) The opinions rendered in this letter are subject to the general principles of equity, whether applied by a court at law or in equity, and the use of the term “enforceable” in this opinion shall not imply any opinion as to the availability of equitable remedies.

(iv) We do not express any opinion as to the enforceability of any particular provision or provisions in any of the Loan Documents; nevertheless, subject to the limitations set forth herein and provided the Bank proceeds in accordance with California law _ [set forth your generic enforceability opinion at this point; either (a), (b) or (c), below]*:

(a) Certain remedies, waivers and other provisions of the Loan Documents may not be enforceable, but such unenforceability will not render the Loan Documents invalid as a whole or preclude (i) judicial enforcement of the Borrower's obligation to repay the principal, together with interest thereon, as provided in the Note (to the extent not deemed a penalty), and (ii) foreclosure of the mortgage (or deed of trust) [and/or any security agreement].

[OR]

(b) Certain rights, remedies and waivers contained in the Loan Documents may be limited or rendered ineffective or unenforceable by applicable laws and judicial decisions governing such provisions, but such laws and judicial decisions do not make the Loan Documents legally inadequate for (or substantially [or materially] interfere with) the practical realization of the principal benefits and/or security intended to be provided by the Loan Documents.

[OR]

(c) Certain remedies, waivers and other provisions of the Loan Documents may not be enforceable; nevertheless, subject to the limitations expressed elsewhere in this opinion or incorporated by reference into this opinion, upon a material default by the Borrower in the payment of principal or interest thereon as provided in the Note or upon a material default by the Borrower in the performance of any other material covenant of the Loan Documents, such unenforceability will not preclude (i) acceleration of the Borrower's obligation to repay such principal and interest, (ii) enforcement in accordance with applicable law of the assignment of rents set forth in the Loan Documents, (iii) foreclosure in accordance with applicable law of the security interest in the collateral created by the Loan Documents, and (iv) judicial enforcement in accordance with applicable law of the Borrower's obligation to repay such principal or such interest as provided in the Note. [Ed. Note: This language in (c) is suggested by the 1995 Real Property Report, as modified by the 1998 Supplement (¶ 9:18).]

Without limiting any aspect of the foregoing limitation, we caution that a California court may not enforce certain covenants in the Loan Documents or allow acceleration of the maturity of the indebtedness evidenced by the Promissory Note if the court concludes it would be unreasonable under the then-existing circumstances.

(v) We have not made or undertaken to make any investigation of the state of title to the subject property, either real or personal, described in the Loan Documents and we express no opinion with respect to the title thereto or the priority of any liens thereon or security interests therein.

(vi) We have assumed that the Loan Documents will be recorded and/or filed as contemplated and that the closing of the Loan will otherwise occur as contemplated by the Loan Documents and the various agreements executed by the parties in connection therewith.

(vii) We express no opinion as to the validity or enforceability of any provisions of the Loan Documents that:

(a) require a borrower to provide hazard insurance coverage against risks in an amount exceeding the replacement value of any improvements to real property;

(b) impose requirements respecting impound accounts in conflict with applicable law;

(c) provide for the application of insurance or condemnation proceeds to reduce indebtedness;

(d) purport to assign rents, issues and profits absolutely and not as security;

(e) contain a waiver of any party's statutory right to reinstate a secured obligation by paying the delinquent amounts of the fully accelerated debt at any time prior to the time provided by statute;

(f) are in conflict with any laws governing foreclosure and disposition procedures regarding any collateral or in conflict with any limitations on attorneys' or trustees' fees;

(g) indemnify any party against its own negligence or willful misconduct;

(h) are in conflict with the real property antideficiency, fair value, and one form of action provisions of California law; [Ed. Note: The 1995 Real Property Report (¶ 9:18) suggests that it may be useful to provide a general description of California's

“one action rule” and antideficiency laws, especially when the opinion recipient is from out of state. If so, additional paragraphs should be added discussing CCP §§ 580b, 580d, 726, 726.5, 736 and Civ.C. § 2924c.

(i) provide for the acceleration of any indebtedness upon any transfer or further encumbrance of any of the collateral for any loan, or upon a change of ownership of any entity which directly or indirectly owns any interest in any such collateral, except to the extent that (i) such provisions are made enforceable pursuant to the federal preemption afforded by the Garn-St. Germain Depository Institutions Act of 1982, as set forth at 12 USC § 1701j-3 and the regulations adopted pursuant thereto or (ii) enforcement is reasonably necessary to protect against impairment of lender's security or an increase in the risk of default;

(j) select any jurisdiction's laws to govern any of the Loan Documents;

(k) provide for penalties, liquidated damages, acceleration of future amounts due (other than principal) without appropriate discount to present value, late charges, prepayment charges, and increased interest rates upon default;

(l) provide that time is of the essence;

(m) provide for the confession of judgment;

(n) contain a waiver of (i) broadly or vaguely stated rights, (ii) the benefits of statutory, regulatory or constitutional rights, unless and to the extent the statute, regulation or constitution explicitly allows waiver, (iii) unknown future defenses, and (iv) rights to damages;

(o) attempt to change or waive rules of evidence or fix the method or quantum of proof to be applied in litigation or similar proceedings;

(p) select the forum for the resolution of any disputes or provide for a consent to the jurisdiction of any jurisdiction (both as to personal jurisdiction and subject matter jurisdiction);

(q) appoint one party as an attorney-in-fact for an adverse party.

Based upon and subject to the foregoing, WE ARE OF THE OPINION THAT:

(1) Borrower is a _ [corporation, partnership, etc.] duly formed and validly existing under the laws of the State of California, _ [in good standing] with authority to conduct its business in the State of California.

(2) Borrower has full power, authority and legal right to execute and deliver and to perform its obligations under the Loan Documents.

(3) The Loan Documents have each been duly authorized, executed and delivered by the Borrower.

(4) Subject to the limitations and qualifications set forth elsewhere in this letter, the Loan Documents constitute legal, valid and binding obligations of the Borrower, enforceable in accordance with their respective terms, and no registration with, or consent or approval of, or notice to, or other action by any person or entity with respect to the execution, delivery or enforceability of the Loan Documents is required [or, if required, such registration has been made, such consent or approval given, such notice given, or such other appropriate action taken].

This opinion is rendered solely to the Bank in connection with this Loan, and may not be relied upon for any other purpose or furnished to, used, circulated, quoted or referred to by any other party. This opinion applies only insofar as the existing laws of the State of California may be concerned, and we express no opinion with respect to the laws of any other jurisdiction. We shall have no obligation to advise you of any facts, circumstances and/or changes in the law which would in any way subsequently render any portion of this opinion incorrect, or to otherwise update this opinion in any way. No opinions shall be implied or inferred from this letter and the only opinions rendered by us are those expressly stated herein. This opinion shall be effective upon the closing of the Loan.

Very truly yours,
[LAW FIRM]

5. [10:50] Institute of Real Estate Management (IREM)
a. [10:51] "Certified Property Manager" (CPM)
b. [10:52] "Accredited Management Organization" (AMO)
c. [10:53] "Accredited Residential Manager" (ARM)

1. [10:1] Necessity for Experienced Property Manager: Property management skills are highly specialized and unique. Consequently, many (if not most) larger income-producing real property developments—residential, office, retail and industrial—are managed and operated by a professional property manager who holds no equity interest in the property.

Quality property management can often make the difference between an economically successful project and an unsuccessful one. But the advantages to be realized by competent property management are not limited to large-scale projects. Every real property development must be well managed.

This Chapter principally focuses on the use of an independent property manager. However, most of the issues discussed are important for the effective and profitable self-ownership and operation of income-producing properties.

a. [10:2] Relevant factors: Generally, the decision to utilize an outside property manager should turn on consideration of the following factors:

• The time and energy savings for the owner;

• The owner's lack of management expertise;

• The owner's absenteeism from the project; and

• The staffing, services, technology and materials resources a professional manager can bring to the project.

2. [10:3] Purchaser's Considerations re Existing Management Agreements: If recorded, an existing property management agreement may operate as an encumbrance upon the property and thus be construed as a "covenant running with the land"; in such event, a purchaser would be subject to the seller's ongoing obligations under the agreement (see ¶ 4:63 ff.). Prospective purchasers should keep this point in mind; notably, counsel representing the buyer must carefully review the preliminary title report to ascertain whether a property management agreement has been recorded (see ¶ 4:334 ff., 4:404 ff.).

3. [10:4] Specific Property Management Issues—Checklist: Many buyers do not think about management issues until after the closing. This is unfortunate because some management or operational plan should be in place well before ownership changes hands in order to accurately evaluate the economics of the project. In fact, a good property manager can be helpful in reviewing various aspects of a project during the buyer's due diligence period (e.g., reviewing leases; determining insurance requirements; analyzing income and expenses, etc.).

The sections set forth at ¶ 10:5 ff. provide a checklist of the more significant management issues and manager functions, which are equally applicable to self-managed and independently-managed properties.

a. Property maintenance

• [10:5] Itemizations: Prepare list of various components requiring maintenance, the type of maintenance, and the frequency with which each procedure is to be conducted.
• [10:6] Inspections: Conduct inspections and prepare and maintain ongoing inspection reports.
• [10:7] Preventive maintenance programs: Propose and implement preventive maintenance programs.
• [10:8] Repairs: Make repairs required by law (or otherwise).

• [10:9] Emergency services: Have 24-hour capacity for emergency repairs.

• [10:10] Service contracts and claims: Select maintenance contractors; negotiate maintenance contracts; supervise maintenance work; and process claims under maintenance or construction warranties.

• [10:11] On-site management: Maintain on-site maintenance staff (if necessary).

b. Accounting for rents, other revenues and expenses

(1) [10:12] Calculating and collecting rents, operational expense and other charges due: Tenants in office, retail and other commercial projects are often required to pay more than a simple "base" (fixed monthly) rent. Their leases typically also require the payment of a specified share of project operating costs (utilities, common area maintenance, janitorial services, taxes, insurance, etc.), as well as parking and other miscellaneous charges.

The property manager should calculate all such operating expenses and other charges and properly allocate them among the various tenants in accordance with the terms of their respective leases. This task will also entail giving the tenants timely notice of the amounts due and collecting those sums.

(2) [10:13] Accounting for security deposits: The property manager must account for all tenant security deposits, credit appropriate security deposit deductions (e.g., for cleaning/repairs, rent defaults, etc.), and return security deposits as required by law. (This obligation includes giving statutorily-required notice to departing tenants. See Civ.C. §§ 1950.5(g) & 1950.7(d); and ¶ 4:421.)

(3) [10:14] Monitoring periodic rent increases: Leases often provide for fixed periodic increases in base rent, or periodic adjustments commensurate with changes in the Consumer Price Index. The property manager should monitor all leases, calculate the increases and timely notify tenants of rent adjustments.

(4) [10:15] Monitoring rent and other lease defaults; initiating appropriate eviction steps: The property manager should monitor tenant compliance with lease obligations and notify the owner upon the occurrence of rent or other lease defaults. Frequently, the manager and owner will agree upon a general timetable and procedure for commencement of eviction proceedings by the manager (service of notice of termination and commencement of ensuing unlawful detainer action) against defaulting tenants, perhaps in coordination with the owner's legal counsel.

(5) [10:16] Preparing income, expense and other reports for owner, owner's accountant, prospective lenders and prospective buyers: Periodic income statements (usually accompanied by expense statements and other operational reports) will be required by the owner on an ongoing basis and may also be required by various third parties—e.g., lenders, accountants, prospective buyers and prospective lenders. The property manager may be required to compile these reports in varying formats for delivery to such parties.

(6) [10:17] Creating capital reserves: It is often prudent to have the property manager set up a fund (or reserve) for payment of future major capital improvements or repair work.

c. Marketing/leasing plans and tenant management

(1) [10:18] Comparability studies: Prepare market analyses of comparable properties.

(2) [10:19] Marketing and leasing proposals: Make recommendations concerning leasing, marketing and/or development of the property. This might include suggestions for rental rates, "tenant mix" (in shopping center/retail projects) and related market planning.

(3) [10:20] Advertising: Create and conduct advertising programs for leasing of space.

(4) [10:21] Leasing, lease management and terminations: Screening prospective tenants; negotiating and preparing leases; monitoring lease defaults; and taking appropriate steps to terminate (and evict) for a tenant's breach of lease.

(5) [10:22] Preparing rental units for new occupants: Ordinarily, several steps must be taken to prepare vacated rental units for reletting—including cleaning and repairs. This is particularly important in residential projects (vacated apartments must be cleaned, painted and refurbished before a new tenant moves in).

(6) [10:23] Supervising tenant improvement construction: Commercial leases usually contemplate considerable tenant improvement work to conform to the tenant's particular usage, space and layout needs (construction of walls and partitions, electrical, utility and phone access placements, etc.). The lease will address how the improvement costs are to be allocated. (The landlord may agree to a "tenant improvement allowance" or otherwise to absorb the expense; or might allocate all or part of the cost to the tenant.)

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Regardless of how the expense is apportioned, the landlord is concerned that the tenant improvement work be completed as specified and in accordance with agreed-upon deadlines. (Delay may postpone inception of the tenant's rent obligations and excessive delay might even give the tenant a basis for terminating its lease.) The property manager may be required to supervise (or hire a construction supervisor) to oversee or monitor timely and proper improvement construction.

(7) [10:24] Obtaining tenant estoppel certificates: Tenant "estoppel certificates" are often required by prospective buyers or lenders (see ¶ 4:418 ff., 6:120, 6:143, 7:292 ff.; and Form 4:J). The property manager usually is best equipped to expeditiously obtain these documents.

(8) [10:25] Acting as tenant liaison: A property manager performs an invaluable function by serving as liaison between tenants and project owner (which may also include interfacing with tenant or merchant associations). In particular, the manager should be prepared to address periodic tenant complaints and settle tenant disputes.

(9) [10:26] Overseeing tenant "goodwill" activities: Shopping centers and other large commercial developments frequently plan community and cultural events which promote goodwill and advertising for the project. A property manager should assist in organizing these programs.

d. Preparation of budgets and payment of expenses

(1) [10:27] Preparing project operational budget: A complete and realistic operational budget is key to a successful project. This is perhaps one of the property manager's most important functions.

(2) [10:28] Reconciling and paying operating expenses: A property manager is also indispensable to the tedious process of overseeing, reconciling and paying project operating expenses—including:

• Utility, water and sewer service bills.

• Landscaping, groundskeeping, rubbish removal and other maintenance, service and supply bills.

• Project personnel salaries.

• Mortgage and other loan payments.

• Property taxes and assessments.

• Insurance premiums (see ¶ 10:133).

• Advertising and promotional costs.

• Legal, accounting, administrative and management fees.

e. [10:29] Overseeing insurance coverage and claims: The property manager can perform several insurance-related activities for the project:

• Analyzing various insurance packages and recommending appropriate coverage and carriers.

• Procuring appropriate policies and keeping them current.

• Acting as liaison with the carrier on insurance claims.

f. [10:30] Brokerage services: Many property managers are licensed under the California Real Estate Licensing Law to act as leasing and/or sales agent and can offer a project owner important brokerage services on an ongoing basis. If the owner wants to contract for a property manager's brokerage services, the applicable terms and conditions should be set forth in the management agreement or in a separate listing agreement. (See generally, Ch. 2; and ¶ 10:113 ff.)

(In larger residential projects, the property manager frequently acts as the exclusive leasing agent.)

g. [10:31] Other issues: A variety of other services and functions can be performed by an experienced property manager. For example, many property managers are skilled at conducting modernization programs for the project and cost-benefit analyses in contemplation of possible project modifications; and otherwise are able to take a so-called “proactive” (instead of a “reactive”) approach to property management, ownership and operational issues.

[10:32 - 10:34] Reserved.

4. [10:35] Selecting a Property Manager: General considerations bearing on the selection of any professional apply as well to the process of choosing an appropriate real property manager: The owner should focus fundamentally upon reputation, experience, responsiveness, staffing and fee structure.

More particularly, however, the owner should evaluate the following characteristics peculiar to a good property manager:

a. [10:36] Cost effectiveness: The decision to hire a particular property manager should of course make good economic sense. Therefore, the owner should consider whether the proposed services justify the cost; i.e., an overall cost-benefit approach to the decision is recommended.

b. [10:37] Trustworthiness: A property manager will be collecting substantial sums of money on behalf of the owner, accounting for and keeping operational income and expense records, and paying insurance and operational expenses. Thus, it is crucial that the manager chosen be trustworthy.

c. [10:38] Interrelational skills: The property manager represents the owner in dealings with third parties. Thus, a good property manager must be skilled in dealing with others—including, in particular, the tenants.

d. [10:39] Experience: The manager selected should have experience with the owner's particular type of project. For example, a manager whose experience has been limited to residential projects is probably not well-suited to oversee a shopping center or office building.

Bear in mind that retail and other commercial projects require computation and allocation of various kinds of rent and operational charges among the tenants, and also require expertise in supervising tenant improvement work. These features are not common to residential apartment projects.

e. [10:40] On-site vs. off-site management: Certain kinds of projects require full-time on-site management; e.g., large apartment projects usually require a resident manager.

Conversely, some projects can be competently managed entirely off-site, or may only require the presence of on-site maintenance personnel during business hours (e.g., a smaller office building or retail project).

f. [10:41] Size of management organization: The support staff backing up the property manager may be an important concern.

(1) [10:42] Advantages of large-firm organizations: A larger management organization naturally has a larger staff to attend to the owner's immediate needs. Moreover, the larger the staff, the greater the likelihood of a broader range of skills that can be brought to the project.

Large-firm management organizations also offer these features not likely to be matched by small-firm counterparts:

(a) [10:43] Technological support: Larger organizations usually have better infrastructures and more sophisticated technology at their disposal (e.g., state-of-the-art computer equipment). The analysis and administration of leases (calculation of common area maintenance costs, etc.) may require a larger organization with greater technical capabilities.

Similarly, full-service technical support facilitates the ability to generate complete reports for accountants, lenders and prospective buyers (although the owner will have to assess whether such sophisticated services makes sense from a cost-benefit perspective).

(b) [10:44] Supplier and resource discounts: Larger management organizations tend to regularly and extensively deal with the same suppliers and contractors; in turn, they are often in a position to obtain better, faster service at a quantity-volume (discount) price.

(c) [10:45] Brokerage services: Larger management organizations can often provide a broader range of real estate brokerage services for leasing and sale.

[10:46] Simply put, the more complex the project, the more complicated are the management issues and legal relationships (with tenants and other third parties), and the more likely the project will require a highly specialized, full-service management team.

(2) [10:47] Disadvantages of large-firm organizations: Of course, hiring a large-firm property manager poses the same disadvantages encountered in dealing with any large organization. Unless the owner is one of the firm's biggest accounts, it can get "lost in the shuffle."

More importantly, however, many projects simply do not require the full range of services offered by a large management firm; therefore, the owner might end up "overpaying" for services rendered. For example, small (or medium) office and residential projects are not necessarily management-intensive, and use of a larger management company may not make good economic sense.

(a) [10:48] Resident manager alternative: Depending on the extent of management responsibility the owner is willing to undertake, many residential projects can be managed quite effectively simply by providing a tenant with free (or reduced) rent in return for certain management services (such as coordinating maintenance and repair and handling tenant complaints). If additional services are needed (such as the collection of rents, payment of expenses, screening of tenants, arranging for landscaping and cleaning of the project), an additional fee might be added to the free rent given to a resident custodian-manager.

➪ [10:49] PRACTICE POINTER—TAX CONCERNS RE RESIDENT MANAGERS*: Owners utilizing a resident manager should consult with their accountants to make certain the resident manager will not be deemed an "employee" for income tax purposes. Hiring a resident manager as an employee (as opposed to an independent contractor) may require the owner to withhold income tax and social security tax, as well as pay unemployment insurance and carry workers' compensation insurance. (These concerns also apply to the staff of an outside management company; see ¶ 10:71.)

5. [10:50] Institute of Real Estate Management (IREM): The Institute of Real Estate Management (IREM) is the leading property management organization in the United States. IREM is an affiliate of the National Association of Realtors and maintains close ties with local realty associations.

IREM has various designations which acknowledge experience and professional achievement:

a. [10:51] "Certified Property Manager" (CPM): The most notable designation is that of "certified property manager" (CPM). To receive a CPM designation, a manager must satisfy several requirements—including the completion of various property management courses; working as a property manager for a prescribed number of years; maintaining a minimum size portfolio; and adhering to a Code of Professional Ethics.

b. [10:52] "Accredited Management Organization" (AMO): An AMO designation accredits management firms (as opposed to individuals) and, among other things, requires that at least one executive of the firm be a CPM (¶ 10:51).

c. [10:53] "Accredited Residential Manager" (ARM): An ARM designation by IREM recognizes expertise and achievement in residential property management.

d. [10:81] General management issues

1. [10:55] Licensing Requirements: California has no special regulatory scheme for the regulation or licensing of property managers per se. Rather, whether property management activities require a license is determined by the Real Estate Licensing Law and regulations promulgated thereunder (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10130 et seq.; see Ch. 2).

a. [10:56] Management activities requiring real estate license: Bus. & Prof.C. § 10130 sets forth certain acts that may be performed only by real estate licensees. A property manager who solicits tenants, negotiates leases or collects rents is performing brokerage activities for which a real estate license is required. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131; see ¶ 2:24]

On the other hand, property managers do not need to hold a real estate brokerage license if they do not engage in either leasing activities or the collection of rents. However, other than managers for community associations, it is difficult to imagine any owner hiring a property manager who, minimally, will not be responsible for collecting rents. (See ¶ 10:75 regarding issues unique to community association management.)

b. [10:57] Exceptions to licensing requirements: Certain exemptions from the real estate licensing requirements (¶ 2:86 ff.) are germane to real property managers:

(1) [10:58] Resident managers: The licensing requirements do not apply to "the manager of a hotel, motel, auto and trailer park, to the resident manager of an apartment building, apartment complex, or court, or to the employees of that manager …" [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131.01(a); ¶ 2:97]

Also exempt from the real estate licensing law are certain activities of employees of a licensed property manager in connection with residential apartment projects. [Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131.01(a)] Those activities include:

• showing rental units and common areas to prospective tenants;

• providing or accepting preprinted rental applications, or responding to inquiries from prospective tenants concerning completion of rental applications;

• accepting deposits or fees for credit checks or administrative costs and accepting security deposits and rents;

• providing information about rental rates and other terms and provisions of a lease or rental agreement as set out in a schedule provided by an employer; or

• accepting signed leases and rental agreements from prospective tenants. [See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131.01(a)(3)(A)-(E); ¶ 2:97.3]

(These particular exemptions are directed at lower-level employees who engage in activities marginally related to leasing activities. Nonetheless, a licensed broker or salesperson is required to exercise "reasonable supervision and control" over persons performing these exempt activities. See Bus. & Prof.C. § 10131.01(b).)

(2) [10:59] Other exemptions: There are various other statutory exemptions from the real estate broker licensing requirements, although these will rarely apply to property management (see ¶ 2:86 ff.).

For example, attorneys at law rendering legal services to a client (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133(a)(3), ¶ 2:91); a receiver, trustee in bankruptcy or other person acting under order of a court of competent jurisdiction (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133(a)(4), ¶ 2:92); a regular officer of a corporation or a general partner of a partnership in connection with real property owned or leased by the corporation or partnership if the acts are not performed in expectation of special compensation (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133(a)(1), ¶ 2:88); a person holding a duly executed power of attorney (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133(a)(2), ¶ 2:89); and clerical exemptions for bookkeepers, receptionists and other clerical help (Bus. & Prof.C. § 10133.2, ¶ 2:96).

2. Regulatory Requirements

a. [10:60] Real estate licensing regulations: Because real estate broker licensing requirements will almost always apply to a property manager (¶ 10:55 ff.), the entire panoply of regulatory requirements applicable to real estate brokers applies as well to brokers acting as property managers (see Ch. 2). (But see ¶ 10:75 ff. regarding community association management.)

b. [10:61] Identification of managers and owners for service of process, etc.—residential structures: Additionally, the owner of a dwelling structure containing one or more units offered for rent or lease as a residence, or a party signing a rental agreement or lease on such owner's behalf, must disclose in the lease or rental agreement the name and "usual street address" at which personal service may be effected on each person who is (1) authorized to manage the premises, and (2) an owner of the premises (or person authorized to act on the owner's behalf for purposes of service of process and receiving and receipting all notices and demands). [Civ.C. §§ 1961, 1962(a)(1) & (2)]

If the rental agreement is oral, the above information must be furnished in writing to all tenants who make a written request for same. [Civ.C. § 1962(b)]

(1) [10:62] Alternative disclosure methods: Alternatively, the identifying information described at ¶ 10:61 may be disclosed by (a) posting notice of the information in every elevator in the dwelling structure and "in one other conspicuous place"; or (b) if the structure does not contain an elevator, by posting notice of the information "in at least two conspicuous places"; or (c) in the case of a single unit structure, by either of the former two methods of posting notice. [Civ.C. § 1962.5(a)(1), (2) & (3)]

(2) [10:63] Duty to update: The required information must be kept current. Successor owners or managers must comply within 15 days of succeeding to the previous owner or manager. [Civ.C. § 1962(c)]

(3) Effect of noncompliance

(a) [10:64] Manager deemed owner's agent: A party who enters into a rental agreement on the owner's behalf and who fails to comply with the Civ.C. §§ 1962, 1962.5 disclosure requirements will be deemed the agent of each owner for purposes of (i) service of process and receiving and receipting notices and demands; and (ii) performing the owner's obligations "under law and under the rental agreement." [Civ.C. § 1962(d)(1) & (2)]

(b) [10:65] Service of process at place where rent paid: Further, if the owner fails to make the requisite disclosures, tenants may properly serve process, with respect to a dispute arising out of the tenancy, by registered or certified mail sent to the address where rent is paid (CCP § 1013 then applies). [Civ.C. § 1962.7]

Cross-refer: For further discussion of service of notices, demands and process on landlords, see Friedman, Garcia & Hoy, Cal. Prac. Guide: Landlord-Tenant (TRG), Ch. 2.

3. Manager-Owner Legal Relationship

a. [10:66] Agency and fiduciary duties: To the extent the property manager is performing activities requiring a broker's license (¶ 10:56), and unless the manager is exempt from the licensing requirements (¶ 10:57 ff.), property managers are bound by the rules of agency and the fiduciary obligations of a broker to its principal (as well as by the corresponding standards of conduct for brokers).

The agency relationship between broker and principal is discussed in detail in Ch. 2 (see ¶ 2:122 ff., 2:155 ff.). However, there are two fundamental rules to keep in mind:

(1) [10:67] Owner's liability for manager's acts: First, the principal (owner) is almost always liable to third persons for the misfeasance of its agent (the property manager). [Civ.C. §§ 2330, 2338, 2339; see also ¶ 2:241 ff., 2:244 ff.; and ¶ 10:73 ff.]

(2) [10:68] Manager's independent liability: Second, the property manager is independently liable to third persons for its actions, even if taken on the principal's (owner's) behalf. [Civ.C. § 2343; see also Rest. Torts 2d § 387; and ¶ 2:225 ff.]

[10:69] Notwithstanding manager's "status": The foregoing basic principles generally apply even if the property manager is deemed to be an "independent contractor" rather than the owner's "employee" (¶ 10:74).

b. [10:70] "Employee" vs. "independent contractor" status: The owner should make clear that any property manager (or resident manager in a residential project) is not an "employee" of the owner but, rather, an "independent contractor." There are three primary reasons for this distinction:

(1) [10:71] Minimizing employment taxes and related withholdings: If the property manager is an employee, the owner will be responsible for withholding federal and state taxes, unemployment insurance, social security taxes, and the like.

(2) [10:72] Substance over form: Ordinarily, the substance of the owner's relationship with a property manager is truly that of hirer and independent contractor; the owner rarely supervises (or reserves the right to supervise) a property manager's day-to-day activities the way a true employer would. (Moreover, except for resident managers, most property managers generally work for several different clients. Conceptually, therefore, such managers cannot be considered true "employees" of any particular project owner.)

(3) [10:73] Limiting owner's liability for manager's acts: Hiring a property manager as an "independent contractor" rather than "employee" may, to a certain extent, also limit the owner's liability for the manager's acts.

As a general rule, one who hires an "independent contractor" is not liable for the acts of the independent contractor. This principle rests on "the want of control and authority of the employer over the work, and the consequent apparent harshness of a rule which would hold one responsible for the manner of conducting an enterprise over which he wants the authority to direct the operations." [Van Arsdale v. Hollinger (1968) 68 C2d 245, 250, 66 CR 20, 23 (overruled on other grounds by Privette v. Sup.Ct. (Contreras) (1993) 5 C4th 689, 701-702, 21 CR2d 72, 80, fn. 4); see also Gonzalez v. Mathis (2021) 12 C5th 29, 37, 57, 282 CR3d 658, 661, 229 (affirming California's "strong presumption" that hirer of independent contractor delegates to contractor "all responsibility for workplace safety")]

(a) [10:74] Exceptions imposing derivative liability for independent contractor's acts: Even so, the general rule of nonliability (¶ 10:73) is so riddled with exceptions (e.g., "nondelegable duty" exception, "peculiar risk" exception) that, as a practical matter, it may be next-to-impossible to completely insulate the owner from liability for its property manager's misfeasance notwithstanding the manager's "independent contractor" status. [See Privette v. Sup.Ct. (Contreras) (1993) 5 C4th 689, 693, 702, 21 CR2d 72, 74, 81 (concluding "peculiar risk" exception does not extend to contractor employees who sustain injuries performing inherently dangerous work because workplace injuries are covered by workers' compensation); Gonzalez v. Mathis (2021) 12 C5th 29, 41-47, 282 CR3d 658, 663-669 (providing overview of Privette's principles and those of its progeny)—landowner not liable for injuries to independent contractor or its workers stemming from known hazard on premises that neither contractor nor its workers could avoid through adoption of reasonably safety precautions; compare Van Arsdale v. Hollinger (1968) 68 C2d 245, 252-253, 255, 66 CR 20, 24-26 (overruled on other grounds by Privette v. Sup.Ct. (Contreras) (1993) 5 C4th 689, 701-702, 21 CR2d 72, 80, fn. 4) (concluding city's "nondelegable duty" applied to independent contractor's employee)—"It is clear that the liability of an employer of an independent contractor for the latter's tortious conduct is broad …"; Caudel v. East Bay Mun. Util. Dist. (1985) 165 CA3d 1, 5-6, 211 CR 222, 224 (summary judgment reversed where nature of risk—"peculiar" or otherwise—remained triable issue of fact)—general rule "is subject to so many exceptions that … the so-called 'general rule' will be followed only where no good reason is found for departing from it"]

Cross-refer: For a comprehensive discussion of a hirer's liability for the torts of its employees and independent contractors, see Haning, Flahavan, Cheng & Wright, Cal. Prac. Guide: Personal Injury (TRG), Ch. 2.

4. [10:75] Concerns Unique to Community Association Management: Property management for community associations (condominium associations, etc.) is unique for several reasons:

- The property manager generally is not involved in leasing activities or the collection of rents. Therefore, the manager need not necessarily be a licensed real estate broker (¶ 10:56).

- The association's governing board hires the property manager on behalf of the community association. Because individual board members do not own the project but yet have a fiduciary obligation to all community association members, the board members are usually quite concerned about entrusting a property manager with certain matters. (Of course, an individual project owner is also concerned about its property manager's ability and conduct, but the owner generally has no fiduciary obligation to any other owner.)

  Consequently, a few special issues (developed at ¶ 10:76 ff.) should be considered when approaching the subject of property management for a community association.

  a. [10:76] Board's enabling powers: As a threshold matter, the governing board must determine whether it has the authority—either under its articles of incorporation or the community association bylaws—to retain a management company. On this point, the board must carefully scrutinize the articles and bylaws for provisions making certain duties nondelegable.

  b. Scope of duties to be assigned to manager

(1) [10:77] Board and membership meetings: It may be desirable for the manager to attend, and take minutes at, board and membership meetings. The board might also find it expedient to delegate to a manager the tasks of sending out meeting notices, handling meeting registration, circulating and processing proxies, and/or perhaps conducting member meetings (e.g., annual homeowner meetings).

➪ [10:78] PRACTICE POINTER: Department of Real Estate regulations require certain periodic association meetings (subject to specified advance notice and other requirements). Additionally, the meetings should be conducted in accordance with association rules of parliamentary procedure. The articles, bylaws and rules and regulations will typically contain detailed specifications regarding quorum requirements, sufficiency of proxies, voting rights of various classes of association membership and cumulative voting.

Because of these formalities, many board members will prefer to have an experienced property manager assist in conducting association meetings.

(2) [10:79] Financial records and bank accounts: It may be beneficial to have the manager retain the association financial records. However, because the board is ultimately accountable to its members, it is probably advisable not to give a property manager exclusive control over bank accounts.

(3) [10:80] Indemnification, bonding and insurance: Because board members are exposed to substantial potential liability (without any corresponding compensation), fidelity bonds for the manager, insurance for the board members, and a strong indemnification provision (from the manager to the individual board members) are vitally important.

(Volunteer officers and directors of associations that manage residential and mixed use common interest developments, who are either tenants of residential separate interests or owners of no more than two separate interests and whose ownership in the development consists exclusively of residential separate interests, enjoy limited statutory immunity from liability, subject to specified insurance requirements. See Civ.C. § 5800; see also Civ.C. § 5805.)

c. [10:80.5] Written disclosure statement by prospective managing agent: A prospective managing agent of a common interest development must provide a statutorily-prescribed written statement to the board "as soon as practicable," but in no event more than 90 days before entering into a management agreement. [Civ.C. § 5375]

(1) [10:80.6] Which "managing agents": A "managing agent" subject to the Civ.C. § 5375 disclosure requirements means a person who, for compensation or in expectation of compensation, exercises control over a common interest development's assets. [Civ.C. § 4158(a)]

A "managing agent" for this purpose does not include (a) a regulated financial institution operating within the normal course of its regulated business practice; (b) an attorney at law acting within the scope of the attorney's license; or (c) a full-time employee of the association. [See Civ.C. §§ 4158(b) & 5385]

(2) [10:80.7] Contents of statement: The statement must contain all of the following information concerning the managing agent (Civ.C. § 5375):

(a) [10:80.8] Identification of owners/partners: The names and business addresses of the managing agent's owners or general partners. [Civ.C. § 5375(a)]

If the managing agent is a corporation, the statement must include the names and business addresses of the directors, officers and shareholders holding greater than 10% of the corporation's shares. [Civ.C. § 5375(a)]

(b) [10:80.9] Licenses: Whether relevant licenses (such as architectural design, construction, engineering, real estate or accounting licenses) have been issued by the State of California and are currently held by the managing agent's owners or general partners (or, in the case of a corporate managing agent, its directors, officers or more-than-10% shareholders). [Civ.C. § 5375(b)]

If a license is currently held by any of those persons, the statement must also specify:

- What license is held;
- The dates the license is valid; and
- The name of the licensee appearing on the license. [Civ.C. § 5375(b)(1), (2) & (3)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(c) [10:80.10] Professional certifications: Whether relevant professional certifications or designations (such as architectural design, construction, engineering, real property management or accounting) are currently held by the managing agent's owners or general partners (or, in the case of a corporate managing agent, its directors, officers or more-than-10% shareholders), including, but not limited to, a professional common interest development manager. [Civ.C. § 5375(c)]

If any professional certification or designation is held, the statement must also specify:

• What the certification or designation is and what entity issued it;

• The dates the certification or designation is valid; and

• The names in which the certification or designation is held. [Civ.C. § 5375(c)(1), (2) & (3)]

(d) [10:80.11] Ownership interests in businesses/companies: Any business or company in which the common interest development manager or management firm has any ownership interests, profit-sharing arrangements or other monetary incentives provided to the management firm or managing agent. [Civ.C. § 5375(d)]

(e) [10:80.12] Referral fees: Whether the common interest development manager or management firm receives a referral fee or other monetary benefit from a third-party provider distributing documents as statutorily specified. [Civ.C. § 5375(e)]

d. [10:81] General management issues: The issues unique to community association management supplement, but do not displace, issues central to all property manager-owner relationships—including the property management agreement. Therefore, the sections set forth at ¶ 10:90 ff. should be reviewed when negotiating and preparing community association management agreements.

1. [10:90] Form of Agreement—Written vs. Oral: Except to the extent a signed writing is required by law (statute of frauds and "equal dignities rule," ¶ 10:91 ff., 10:94), owner and property manager are free to formalize their arrangement by written or oral agreement. Nonetheless, a comprehensive written agreement is always the most prudent approach, as it minimizes room for dispute over the operative terms.

a. [10:91] Statute of frauds: So long as the services to be performed consist entirely of management functions—exclusive of brokerage activities—the statute of frauds does not apply and an oral management agreement will be enforceable.

(1) [10:92] Writing required if manager to perform brokerage services: On the other hand, if the agreement contemplates the manager's performance of brokerage services, it must be reduced to a signed writing that meets all requirements of the statute of frauds. [Civ.C. § 1624(a)(4); see generally, ¶ 2:281 ff. & 4:263 ff.]

(2) [10:93] Additional statutory requirements if listing agreement contemplated: In addition, if the management agreement includes a listing agreement, it must comply with various other statutory requirements. See ¶ 2:173 ff., 2:376 ff.

b. [10:94] Evidence of agent's authority—"equal dignities rule": The so-called "equal dignities rule" is a derivative of the statute of frauds. Specifically, an agent's authority to enter into a contract must be in writing whenever the contract itself is required by the statute of frauds to be in writing. [Civ.C. § 2309; see ¶ 2:134, 4:226.1]

2. [10:95] Compensation: Perhaps the most important issue in any management agreement is the amount of the manager's compensation.

a. [10:96] General management fee: Management fees usually take one of two forms:

• A flat, fixed fee (rarely utilized); or

• A percentage of gross rents or revenues (approximately 5% of gross rents/revenues is probably the norm).

b. [10:97] Leasing commissions and related fees: A second component of management compensation arises where the manager will also be serving as a leasing broker.

(1) [10:98] Commission amount: The commission amount is of course negotiable. However, because a property manager will be receiving an ongoing management fee, the leasing commission might be somewhat less than would be paid to an independent leasing broker. (See detailed discussion of broker compensation at ¶ 2:270 ff.)

(2) [10:99] Construction supervision fee: Unlike independent real estate brokers whose job is completed once the lease is executed, a property manager might also be involved in ongoing tenant leasing activities— such as supervising construction improvement work to the let space. Therefore, a manager might receive not only a management fee and a leasing commission, but an "add-on" construction supervision fee as well. (The construction supervision fee generally ranges between 5%-10% of the construction costs.)

3. [10:100] Specific Management Agreement Provisions: The sections set forth at (¶ 10:101 ff.) address the particular terms of a well-drafted property management agreement. The discussion generally tracks the sample form at the close of this Chapter.

• FORM: Sample (Attorney Drafted) Property Management Agreement, see Form 10:A.

a. [10:101] Parties and property: The parties should be identified and the property subject to the agreement carefully described.

➪ [10:102] PRACTICE POINTER: Be precise about the scope of property within the purview of the management agreement. For example, if the parking area is on a separate lot or in a separate structure, care must be taken to include (or exclude) the parking area from the scope of the manager's obligations.

Or, if the owner owns two adjacent parcels which are subject to a reciprocal easement (or parking) agreement, but the manager will be hired to manage only one parcel, the agreement should identify the scope of the manager's responsibility for the easement area and/or administration of the terms of the easement agreement.

b. [10:103] Retention and status of manager: The specific hiring of the manager and the manager's acceptance of the appointment should be clearly stated. Also include a recital whether the manager is an "employee" or "independent contractor" (see ¶ 10:70 ff.).

c. [10:103.1] Management fees: See discussion at ¶ 10:95 ff.

d. [10:104] Term of agreement: The agreement should have a definitive termination date. In addition, the owner should reserve the right to terminate the agreement if (1) the manager does not meet specified performance standards (¶ 10:104 ff.); or (2) the property is sold. (In the latter event, it may be necessary to pay the manager a so-called "buy-out" fee; see ¶ 10:154.)

e. [10:105] Management performance standards: The manager should agree to furnish their services (or, if applicable, the services of the management organization) in a competent and professional manner.

➪ [10:106] PRACTICE POINTER: Though commonly found in legal documents, language referring to standards of "first-class" or "professional" competence generally defies any objective measurement and thus rarely provides meaningful definitions of the anticipated standards of conduct. Therefore, a preferable approach might be to carefully set forth in the management agreement specific, identifiable criteria for the definition of "first class" or "professional," or refer to specific buildings as examples of "first-class" standards.

By the same token, a property manager should not be expected to improve or upgrade the owner's property. While the anticipated management services should be "first class," the manager should not be required to maintain as "first-class" property an owner's building that is not currently in "first-class" condition. (This may seem like a distinction without a difference, but an owner's right to terminate a manager frequently hinges on whether the manager is fulfilling its function in accordance with the specific contract standards of professional competence.)

➪ [10:107] FURTHER PRACTICE POINTER: It sometimes makes sense to base performance standards on economic levels of achievement (e.g., gross rents or net profitability). However, because a property can be profitable in spite of the manager's incompetence, such economic benchmarks should be only one of several yardsticks by which to measure a manager's performance.

(1) [10:108] Compliance with law: Apart from issues of competence, the manager should specifically undertake to conduct its business, and manage and operate the property in accordance with all laws, statutes and regulations.

f. [10:109] Scope of manager's authority: The scope of the manager's authority over project operations and any particular restrictions on the manager's powers should be stated in the agreement (such as limiting the right to execute certain kinds of contracts or otherwise restricting the right to take certain actions).

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(1) [10:110] Entering into contracts: Management agreements commonly prohibit the manager from executing any contract, other than a lease, that lasts more than one year, absent the owner's prior written consent. In any event, the agreement should prohibit the manager from unilaterally entering into contracts that will last longer than the term of the management agreement (¶ 10:104).

(2) [10:111] Advertising and promotion: If the manager will be expected to plan, implement and/or oversee advertising and promotional activities, the particular activities, and a corresponding suitable budget, should be specified. Where appropriate or desirable, the agreement might identify the scope of advertising, the particular media, the advertising brochures, and perhaps even a particular advertising agency.

➪ [10:112] PRACTICE POINTER: Advertising and promotion are generally most important in retail projects such as shopping centers, and some agenda for such activities should be outlined in the agreement. (A tenants or merchants association is often involved in promotional activities for such projects.)

The advertising and promotion provisions of the management agreement require special attention. The owner and manager may want to delineate the “target market,” how much advertising will physically occur on the project site, and how much advertising will be placed through various media (newspapers, radio and television, etc.).

(3) [10:113] Leasing: If the manager is also to serve as a leasing broker, all terms and conditions of a listing agreement should be included in the management agreement (see detailed discussion at ¶ 2:350 ff.).

(a) [10:114] Residential projects: In residential projects, the property manager customarily handles virtually all leasing activities—from initial showing of units, through screening of prospective tenants (credit checks, etc.) and ultimate execution of leases. (The owner should have already provided the manager with the rental rates and an appropriate form lease.)

(b) [10:115] Commercial projects: On the other hand, the owner of a commercial project will usually want to take a more personally active role in lease negotiations. Typically, lease terms are intensely negotiated in commercial projects; indeed, the entire leasing process is usually quite complex because commercial leases involve several issues neither encountered nor negotiated in residential rental agreements. For example, commercial leases usually involve varying lengths of term, the grant of tenant rent concessions (e.g., rent-free periods), the lessor's payment of certain improvement allowances, etc.

➪ [10:116] PRACTICE POINTER: In addition to the leasing activities set forth at ¶ 10:113 ff., the owner may want the manager/broker to provide various market surveys and analyses to assist in pricing rental rates, analyzing demographics, structuring an appropriate “tenant mix” (most important in shopping centers) and conducting related tenant planning.

(4) [10:117] Handling tenant defaults and evictions: A manager who is to be responsible for monitoring and following through on tenant defaults should be vested with the power to deliver formal tenant default notices (three-day notices to “pay or quit,” etc.). In addition, the owner and manager may want to work out an arrangement whereby the manager coordinates directly with the owner's legal counsel for the processing of unlawful detainer actions or other lawsuits against defaulting tenants.

Cross-refer: For a comprehensive treatment of notice of default, notice to terminate, and eviction procedures, see Friedman, Garcia & Hoy, Cal. Prac. Guide: Landlord-Tenant (TRG), Chs. 7, 8 and 9.

(5) [10:118] Dealing with tenants/merchants association: Tenants in larger projects (particularly large shopping centers) often form a tenants (or merchants) association; the manager should be the party delegated to interface with any such association.

The collection of dues for association members should also be the manager's responsibility.

g. [10:119] Employment of personnel: The manager should be required to hire all managerial and executive personnel necessary for efficient discharge of the manager's duties; and the manager should be required to pay all such employees.

Likewise, the manager should be required to hire, pay, supervise and discharge custodians, security and maintenance personnel, and such other personnel as are reasonably necessary to properly operate and maintain the project.

The subject of personnel may raise a variety of issues to be addressed in the agreement. For example:

(1) [10:120] Particular employees; on-site managers: Any particular employees the owner wants involved in management or operation of the project should be identified. Likewise, contemplated on-site managers should be identified, along with the specific time periods they will be required to be on-site.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

• [10:121] Comment: Tenants tend to favor consistency in personnel and frequently develop fruitful ongoing relationships with on-site managers. Thus, specifying a particular on-site manager offers the advantage of promoting continuity in on-site management, thereby facilitating good owner/manager-tenant relations.

➪ [10:122] PRACTICE POINTER: To narrow the owner's liability exposure for management misfeasance, management personnel should be specifically characterized as employees of the manager, not employees of the owner.

(2) [10:123] Fidelity bonds; licenses: The owner should consider whether it wants the employees to be bonded; and, if so, the surety and bond amount should be stated. (Appropriate fidelity bonds are particularly important where management personnel will be handling project rents and other revenues.) A fidelity bond will typically cover employee theft, embezzlement and/or other fraudulent acts.

Similarly, the owner may want any contractors which the manager might use to be bonded.

In any event, all contractors and employees of the manager should be licensed as required by law.

(3) [10:124] Employee taxes and benefits: Federal and state employment taxes and any employee benefits—e.g., workers' compensation, unemployment insurance, disability benefits and social security—should be the manager's responsibility in regard to personnel who are the manager's (rather than the owner's) employees.

(4) [10:125] Affiliates of manager: A prohibition against the use of "affiliates" of the manager is ordinarily included … except when the fees, terms and conditions for the use of any such affiliates are consistent with community standards based on arm's-length negotiations.

h. [10:126] General rights of approval and control in management affairs: The owner should reserve ultimate authority and control with respect to management affairs generally and, in particular, over leasing, marketing and promotional plans and activities. Indeed, specific parameters for the manager should be set forth in the budget or some annual (or other periodic) plan incorporated in the management agreement.

➪ [10:127] PRACTICE POINTER: On the other hand, the owner generally should not reserve the right to control and supervise the manager's day-to-day responsibilities; reserving detailed control is more likely to clothe the manager with "employee" rather than "independent contractor" status—broadening the owner's exposure for taxes, withholdings and management misfeasance (see ¶ 10:70 ff.).

i. [10:128] Maintenance, repair and capital improvements: The manager should be responsible for ongoing maintenance, repair and operational matters, including: arranging for utility services, pest extermination, security, trash removal; elevator maintenance, window washing, landscaping/groundskeeping, parking, and all other services essential to efficient operation of the project.

(1) [10:129] Responsibility for service charges: Typically, utility services will be in the owner's name, as the manager does not want legal responsibility for such charges. However, contracts for other services are often more efficiently arranged in the manager's name. (But the manager may insist otherwise out of concern over the risk of personal exposure on the service contracts: i.e., should the property be operating at a loss, the manager would be independently responsible to contractors and trades with whom it personally contracted because the property will not be generating sufficient monies to pay the bills.)

(2) [10:130] Preapproval of capital improvements: Minor and emergency repairs can be (and almost always should be) handled by the property manager without owner involvement. On the other hand, capital improvements should only be permitted subject to a preapproved budget.

➪ [10:131] PRACTICE POINTER: Some expenses fall between the category of routine repairs/maintenance and capital improvements. So as not to make management operations unrealistically cumbersome, the agreement should include some arrangement empowering the manager to make certain expenditures not exceeding a specified sum within a stated period of time; and, conversely, requiring the owner's prior written approval for expenditures in excess of such amounts.

j. [10:132] Inspections and reports: The manager should be required to make periodic project inspections, maintain service reports and deliver periodic inspection and maintenance reports to the owner. If appropriate, the manager might also be required to institute preventive maintenance programs.

k. Insurance

(1) [10:133] Procuring/maintaining appropriate coverage: During the course of a term, a property manager is often required to purchase and maintain casualty and liability insurance in specified amounts for specified risks. Automobile, workers' compensation and rental loss insurance might also be advisable.

If there is a trust deed encumbering the property, the trust deed holder will need to be named as a loss payee under at least the casualty portion of the insurance policies.

➪ [10:134] PRACTICE POINTER: The property manager may want to be named as a coinsured on certain policies. It is unclear whether the manager has any insurable interest but, in any event, all insurance coverage and the provisions in the management agreement relating to insurance should be reviewed by the owner's insurance broker.

It may also be advisable to include coverage for the manager's contractual indemnification obligations (arising from damage or loss caused by management misfeasance; ¶ 10:149).

➪ [10:135] FURTHER PRACTICE POINTER: If the manager fails to obtain necessary insurance, the owner will bear the ultimate (potentially devastating) economic consequences. Hence, it is crucial that the owner keep tabs on insurance coverage. In all events, the owner should make certain that it receives the original insurance certificates and policies.

(2) [10:136] Claims handling: The manager should be required to investigate all accidents or damage claims relating to project operations or management; submit a written investigation report to the owner; and cooperate with, and make any reports required by, the insurance company (but such reports should first be submitted to the owner for its written approval before submission to any insurance company).

(3) [10:137] Subrogation waivers: The manager might insist on a requirement that the respective insurance carriers waive subrogation rights. This is because the manager will want the insurance proceeds to be the sole source of recovery. The owner will not care so long as the insurance carrier is willing to agree.

By agreeing to a subrogation waiver, the carrier gives up its right to pursue covered claims against third parties. For example, if the owner's insurance policy covers damages caused by the manager, the carrier generally has the right to be “subrogated to” the owner's claim against the manager (or manager's insurer)—i.e., the owner's carrier stands in the owner's shoes with the concomitant right to file the claim in its own name. A waiver of subrogation forfeits the carrier's right to pursue the manager or (or manager's carrier).

(4) [10:138] Monitoring tenant insurance compliance: The owner might also want the manager to monitor compliance with tenant insurance obligations under the respective leases, ensuring that tenants procure and maintain required coverage.

l. [10:139] Expense reimbursements: The manager will, of course, be entitled to reimbursement for certain management and operational costs advanced.

Routine operational expenses usually are paid directly from property income revenues and thus will not create issues of reimbursement (see ¶ 10:140). However, the owner may require the rendition of certain services that involve additional expenses—such as travel, messenger charges, etc. Therefore, it is important to specifically designate any miscellaneous expenses to be reimbursed to the manager.

There may also be an issue of manager “add-on” administrative or supervision fees (e.g., for overseeing tenant improvement work), which should be addressed in the compensation section of the agreement. See ¶ 10:99.

m. [10:140] Payment of expenses: Those expenses which the manager is required to pay directly should be itemized in the agreement.

The manager will also want to receive its management fee in advance. The issue of when the fee should be deducted by the manager from gross revenues should be negotiated (i.e., at the beginning of the month or end of the month; and whether it is to be paid before other expenses are paid). However, if the management fee is based on a percentage of rents received or net income, it cannot be calculated until the end of each month.

n. [10:141] Allocation (pass-through) of management fee: Depending on the terms of the various leases, the property management fee can often be passed on to commercial tenants as part of the project operating costs; indeed, commercial leases often call for such pass-throughs.

If the manager is given an on-site office, the rent the owner otherwise would have received for that space is sometimes included in management fees to be passed on to the tenants.

o. [10:142] Financial records and reports; periodic statements: The manager should be required to keep accurate, complete and separate records in accordance with generally-accepted bookkeeping procedures and standards, showing income and expenditures, accounts payable, cash, accounts receivable and other assets. The owner should reserve the right to inspect and audit these records.

The manager should also be required to prepare whatever periodic (monthly, quarterly and/or annual) financial reports and statements the owner desires. Typically, monthly statements should be prepared detailing all receipts and disbursements for the preceding month; itemizing all delinquent accounts, vacant space, amounts held in security deposits and amounts held for capital reserves. To the extent the manager is to create a capital reserve, the parameters should be specified.

➪ [10:143] PRACTICE POINTER: If a particular form of report or statement is anticipated, a sample form should be attached as an exhibit to the management agreement.

p. [10:144] Time-frame for excess income remittance to owner: A time-frame for payment to the owner of the excess income after payment of expenses (including a capital reserve) should be stated. Typically, the excess income is remitted monthly.

q. Maintenance of bank accounts

(1) [10:145] Owner's concerns: The owner may want to specify where the manager will maintain project bank accounts; and may want to require that separate accounts be kept for tenant security deposits and reserve funds (the latter being for future unanticipated expenses).

All bank accounts should be federally insured and the owner will want to be informed if the balance in any account exceeds the federally-insured limit. In no event should the manager be entitled to commingle funds pertaining to the subject property with funds pertaining to any other property.

It is also prudent to expressly provide that all funds earned (directly or indirectly) in respect of the property belong solely to the owner and no party claiming by or through the manager shall be entitled to any interest on such accounts.

Finally, all accounts to which the manager has access should be closed upon termination of the management agreement.

(2) [10:146] Manager's concerns: The manager will want the owner to advance the first month's expenses. In addition, the manager may require that the owner maintain a minimum balance in the operating account at all times (so as not to deplete the availability of operating funds).

(3) [10:147] Late fee and nsf charges: Both manager and owner may want to authorize fee assessments against tenants for late payments or checks returned for non-sufficient funds (nsf). (Indeed, these fees might be additional compensation for the manager, since the manager has to engage in additional administrative work to process late payments and bounced checks.)

r. [10:148] Miscellaneous manager cooperation: The manager should be required to cooperate in connection with any audit of the owner's project; proposed sale or refinance of the property; and any other matter as to which the owner will require additional assistance from the manager.

s. [10:149] Indemnification: Both parties will want indemnification agreements from the other: The manager will want to be indemnified for any liability not caused by its own gross negligence or willful acts; and the owner will want to be indemnified for any loss or damage caused by the manager's negligence or willful misconduct.

Indemnification provisions usually are the subject of intense negotiation (see generally, ¶ 4:461 ff.). It may facilitate negotiations on the subject to consider conditioning indemnification rights and obligations on "comparative negligence" concepts (apportionment of liability according to fault).

t. [10:150] Notification procedures: The agreement should provide generally for the mechanics of giving required notices between manager and owner (addresses, manner of delivery, etc.). In addition, the manager should be required to expedite delivery to the owner of certain kinds of notices (such as notification by governmental entities for condemnation, abatement orders, new assessments and the like; threats of litigation; service of process at the project site; notice of cancellation of insurance, etc.).

u. Renewals and termination

(1) [10:151] Mechanics for renewal: If the parties wish to provide for renewal of the agreement upon expiration of its term, the renewal mechanics and deadlines should be specifically set forth.

(2) [10:152] Automatic termination upon sale: In addition, it is to the owner's advantage to expressly provide for automatic termination of the agreement upon a sale of the property (also specifying the property may be sold at any time in the owner's sole discretion).

➪ [10:153] PRACTICE POINTER: Owners should in all events avoid granting a property manager ongoing "exclusive" management rights (although it is questionable whether any such "exclusive" would be enforceable against a new owner unless it constitutes a "covenant running with the land"; see ¶ 4:63 ff.).

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(3) [10:154] “Buy-out” fee: If the manager is concerned the owner might sell the property shortly after commencement of the management agreement (resulting in automatic termination, ¶ 10:152), the parties might want to agree to a so-called “buy-out” or “termination” fee to be paid the manager. The buy-out clause would be triggered if the owner sells the property before a certain period of time has elapsed.

(4) [10:155] Return of books and records: The agreement should require that, upon its termination, all books, records, reports, studies, advertising materials, equipment, property, supplies, computer disks and tapes, leases and other project documents be delivered to the owner.

v. [10:156] Restriction on assignment: Since the owner is contracting for a particular manager's (or management firm's) personal services, it behooves the owner to include a provision expressly precluding assignment of the management agreement (or, at least, barring assignment without the owner's prior written consent).

w. [10:157] No recordation of agreement: If recorded, the management agreement will become an encumbrance on the property and impede its marketability. Consequently, the owner usually will want to specify that the agreement is not to be recorded. (In any event, unless a subsequent owner is to be bound by the agreement, there is no reason to record it.)

x. [10:158] No obligations of future owner: Unless the parties intend that a future owner be bound by the management agreement, the agreement should expressly state the manager will not make any claim against the property or a subsequent owner. In turn, any claims the manager might have under the agreement will not adversely affect sale of the property to a prospective buyer.

• [10:159] Comment: It is rare that a subsequent owner would be bound by a former owner's property management agreement. Such a scenario would occur only if the new owner expressly assumed the existing property management agreement (¶ 4:60 ff.); or, if the agreement was recorded and amounted to a “covenant running with the land” (¶ 4:63 ff.).

y. [10:160] Boilerplate: The “boilerplate” provisions in a management agreement are typically similar to those found in a purchase and sale agreement (attorney fee recovery provisions, “entire agreement” and “severability” clauses, choice of law provisions, etc.). See discussion at ¶ 4:513 ff.

Chapter 10. Management of Real Property

Forms

[Form 10:A] Sample Property Management Agreement (Attorney-Drafted)

Property Management Agreement

This Property Management Agreement (this "Agreement") is made this _____ day of _____, _____, by and between ___________, a ___________ having an office at ___________, California, _____, ("Owner"), and _____, a ___________ having an office at ___________, California, _____ ("Manager").

RECITALS

I. WHEREAS, Owner is the owner of that certain real property, together with improvements thereon, located in the County of _____, State of California, commonly known as ________________ (the "Property").

II. WHEREAS, Manager is a duly licensed real estate broker under the laws of the State of California (License No. _____) and engages in the business of managing, operating and maintaining property similar to the Property; and

III. WHEREAS, Owner desires to engage and appoint Manager as its exclusive managing agent for the Property and Manager desires to accept such appointment, all upon and subject to the terms and conditions set forth in this Agreement.

NOW, THEREFORE, in consideration of the mutual covenants and agreements set forth below, Owner and Manager agree as follows:

1. Appointment. Owner hereby hires and appoints Manager as the exclusive managing agent for the Property, and Manager hereby accepts such appointment.

2. Term.

2.1. Initial Term. Subject to the renewal provisions set forth in Paragraph 2.2, below, this Agreement shall commence as of _____, ___ and shall remain in full force and effect until the sooner of (i) _____, ___; (ii) the date Owner sells its interest in the Property (whereupon this Agreement shall immediately terminate); or (iii) upon the termination of this Agreement pursuant to the provisions of this Agreement hereinafter provided.

2.2. Automatic Renewal Term. If this Agreement shall be in full force and effect on ___________, _____, the term of this Agreement shall automatically be renewed on a calendar quarter-to-quarter basis, until either party shall terminate this Agreement on at least thirty (30) days written notice to the other.

3. Manager's Duties and Powers.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

3.1. General. Manager shall manage, coordinate and supervise the ordinary and usual business and affairs pertaining to the operation, maintenance and management of the Property. Without limiting the foregoing or any other provision in this Agreement, Manager shall have such responsibilities and obligations, and shall perform and take, or caused to be performed or taken, all services and actions customarily performed or taken by property managers of properties which are similar in nature, location and character to the Property. Manager shall perform all of its duties in an efficient and economical manner, subject to Owner's direction and pursuant to the terms and provisions of this Agreement.

3.2. Collections of Rents and Other Monies.

(a) Manager shall prepare and deliver to all parties occupying space in the Property ("Tenants") bills which set forth all base rent, common area charges and other amounts payable by Tenants under their respective leases or licenses, occupancy agreements or similar agreements ("Leases"). All such monthly bills shall be accompanied by such other information and materials as Owner is required or elects to furnish such Tenants under their respective Leases. Manager shall use its best, diligent efforts to collect all rents and other charges due from Tenants and shall promptly pay over such collections to Owner or, to the extent directed by Owner, deposit such monies in one or more bank accounts.

(b) Except as otherwise directed in writing by Owner, Manager shall take all such actions as Manager shall deem necessary or advisable to collect the aforesaid rents and other charges and to enforce all rights and remedies of Owner under the Leases or to protect the interests of Owner, including, without limitation, the preparation and delivery to Tenants of all "late payment", default and other appropriate notices, requests, bills, demands and statements. Manager may retain legal counsel, collection agencies and such other persons and firms as Manager shall deem appropriate or advisable to enforce (after notification to Owner), the rights and remedies of Owner against any Tenant in default in the performance of its obligations under a Lease. Manager shall periodically (but not less frequently than monthly), notify Owner of the progress of any such legal action.

3.3. Tenant Relations. Manager shall develop and maintain good relations with Tenants in the Property. Manager shall receive and respond to all Tenant complaints and shall attempt in good faith to resolve and settle such complaints subject to the parameters set forth in this Agreement. Manager shall also coordinate the moving in and moving out of Tenants from the Property. In addition, Tenant shall oversee all construction, alteration and decoration which Owner is required to perform under its Leases so as to ensure a minimum of disruption to the operation of the Property and to other Tenants of the Property.

3.4. Compliance with laws. Manager shall, at Owner's expense, use its diligent best efforts to see to it that the Property is at all times in compliance with applicable laws, rules and regulations and Manager shall renew, as necessary, all permits and licenses which are legally required for the operation and maintenance of the Property.

3.5. Personnel.

(a) Manager shall, at _____'s expense, employ, retain, supervise and discharge such employees as may be necessary for the proper and efficient management and maintenance of the Property. [ALTERNATE: If any employee does not work exclusively for the benefit of the Property, the expense of such employee will be prorated accordingly.] All such employees shall be employees of the Manager and not the Owner. Owner agrees that at no time will Owner attempt to employ an employee of Manager during the term of this Agreement, or within one hundred eighty (180) days thereafter.

(b) Manager shall (i) pay all wages and other benefits properly payable to the employees hired by Manager under subparagraph 3.5(a), above; (ii) maintain adequate payroll records; (iii) remit to the proper authorities all required income and social security withholding taxes, unemployment insurance payments, workmen's compensation payments and such other amounts with respect to the wages and other benefits payable to such employees as may be required under applicable laws, together in each case with all required reports or other filings; and (iv) obtain, maintain and administer all medical, disability and other insurance benefits and other fringe benefits as may from time to time be required under any union or other agreements or arrangements applicable to the Manager's employment of such personnel. Manager shall cause all of Manager's employees who handle or are responsible for Owner's monies to be bonded by a fidelity bond, which bond shall be in an amount sufficient to totally cover loss or theft of said monies.

3.6. Professionals and Contractors. Manager shall (i) identify and, upon the prior approval of Owner, enter into contracts with architects, engineers, accountants, attorneys, tradesmen and other independent contractors to perform services; and (ii) supervise the administration and monitor the performance of all work to be performed and services to be rendered under all such contracts. Manager shall use due care in the selection of all such professionals and other independent contractors. Manager shall not enter into any agreement with any such professional or other independent contractor which would require the payment of more than ___________ Dollars ($________) in any twelve (12) month period unless such agreement is provided for in the Approved Budget. In addition, each such agreement shall be terminable upon thirty (30) days prior written notice by Owner and, in any event, such agreements shall automatically terminate upon Owner's sale of the Property.

3.7. Equipment and Supplies. Manager shall, at Owner's expense, purchase all maintenance, janitorial supplies, equipment and tools (such as restroom supplies, light bulbs, paint and office supplies) necessary for the proper and efficient operation and management of the Property. All such equipment and supplies shall be delivered to and stored at the Property and may only be used in connection with the Property. Manager shall attempt to purchase all goods, supplies or services at the lowest cost available from dependable sources in the city in which the Property is located.

3.8. Maintenance.

(a) Manager shall cause the Property to be maintained in good and safe condition, comparable to that of other properly maintained properties similar in type and location to that of the Property.

(b) To the extent of the capacity of all equipment and systems located in or servicing the Property, Manager shall cause all such equipment and systems to be operated effectively and maintained in good repair and Manager shall cause to be provided or made available to Tenants those services which Owner is required to provide or make available under the Leases.

(c) Manager shall enter into such service and maintenance contracts as Manager shall deem necessary or appropriate for the operation and maintenance of the Property, including the equipment and systems located in or servicing the Property, contracts for utilities, elevator maintenance, telephone service, office cleaning, window cleaning, landscape maintenance, rubbish removal, fuel, security, food vending and vermin extermination.

3.9. Repairs. Manager shall cause such ordinary and necessary repairs to be made to the Property and all equipment and systems located in or servicing the Property, and shall cause such interior alterations and decorations to be made to the Property, as Manager shall deem necessary or advisable for its proper operation and maintenance. Notwithstanding the cost limitations set forth in this Agreement, Manager may cause to be made all repairs which are immediately necessary for the preservation or protection of the Property or the safety of Tenants and other persons in or on the Property or which repairs are otherwise required to avoid the suspension of any necessary services in the Property. Manager may take such steps without Owner's prior approval and without limitation as to cost; provided, however, that in each such instance Manager shall, before causing any such emergency repair to be made, use reasonable efforts under the circumstances to notify Owner of the emergency situation and obtain its approval of such repair. In any event, Manager shall conduct all repairs so as to involve the least amount of disturbance to Tenants in the Property.

3.10. Tenant Disputes.

(a) Manager shall receive, and use its best efforts to attend to and resolve, all complaints of Tenants and shall attempt to resolve any complaints, disputes or disagreements by or among Tenants, but shall not expend more than ___________ Thousand Dollars ($________) to settle any dispute with a Tenant without the prior written consent of Owner.

(b) Manager shall monitor the occupancy of all Tenants to insure their compliance with the terms and provisions of their respective Leases, including, without limitation, the rules and regulations of the Property from time to time established by Owner. Manager shall notify the respective Tenants and Owner of any violations of such Leases and use reasonable efforts to cause such Tenants to correct such violations promptly.

3.11. Insurance. Manager shall obtain and maintain all such insurance coverage as required under Paragraph 8 of this Agreement, as well as such other insurance as is provided for by the Approved Budget. Manager shall prepare and file all reports, claims, notices and other documents required in connection with such policies of insurance and any claims thereunder.

3.12. Advertising—Public Relations.

(a) Manager, at the expense of Owner and with the prior written approval of Owner, shall hire such advertising services, shall place such advertisements and shall generally supervise and attend to all promotional matters pertaining to the operation of the Property as Manager shall deem advisable.

(b) Manager shall represent Owner in connection with all matters of general public interest which pertain to the Property and shall attempt to amicably resolve any complaints, disputes or disagreements in connection therewith as promptly as is reasonably possible; all of the foregoing actions to be taken by Manager after notice to and discussion with Owner.

3.13. Payment of Expenses. Manager shall pay, with funds from the Property Account (defined below), all expenses which Manager properly incurs under the terms of this Agreement including, without limitation, Manager's compensation under this Agreement. Manager shall at all times use its best efforts to obtain for Owner, and shall credit to the account of Owner in each case, all discounts, rebates and other favorable financial terms which may be available in connection with any costs or expenses Manager shall incur under this Agreement.

3.14. Property Account. Manager shall, within ____________ (_) days after execution of this Agreement, open a commercial checking account at _____ Bank (“Property Account”). The Property Account shall be in the name of Manager, but shall be designated as a trust account in favor of Owner. Upon the opening of such Property Account, Owner shall advance to Manager the sum of ____________ Dollars ($_________) for deposit in said Property Account to be used for working capital. All expenses of the Property paid by Manager shall be paid from the Property Account, except that Manager shall have the right to maintain petty cash funds not in excess of ____________ Dollars ($_________). Manager shall pay (out of the funds of Owner) all expenses and costs of operating the Property which under the terms of this Agreement it is authorized to pay, by check, drawn on such Property Account. In addition, Manager shall remit to Owner at the end of each calendar month, all unexpended funds, except for a reserve for contingencies which shall remain in the Property Account in an amount determined by the Manager, but in no event exceeding ____________ Dollars ($_________). The designation of those employees of Manager authorized to sign checks on said account shall be subject to the written approval of Owner, which shall not be unreasonably withheld. Owner agrees that the following sequence of payments is acceptable: payroll; compensation of Manager; utilities; vendor invoices; construction; and any remaining invoices. If at any time the amount in the Property Account shall exceed the federally-insured limit, an additional account shall be opened at a local, federally-insured bank acceptable to Owner. Should the expense of operating the Property at any time show that the sums deposited by Manager in the Property Account are less than the amount needed to provide sufficient cash on hand to pay all recurring expenses, plus any known nonrecurring expenditures anticipated to occur within the next thirty (30) days, Manager will give written notice to Owner of the sum actually needed. Owner shall, as soon practicable thereafter, advance said sum to Manager.

3.15. Payroll and Other Taxes and Contributions. Manager shall be solely responsible and liable for payment of all federal, state and local payroll taxes and for contributions for unemployment insurance, social security and other benefits imposed or assessed under any provision of law or by regulation, and which are measured by salaries, wages or other remuneration paid or payable by Manager to its employees engaged in any work in connection with this Agreement or the Property. Manager shall be solely responsible for the withholding and payment of any income tax required to be withheld from the wages and salaries of said employees under any applicable law or regulation. Manager agrees to save and hold Owner harmless from all claims, penalties, interest or costs which may be assessed under any law, rule or regulation with respect to Manager's failure or inability to perform the aforesaid responsibilities.

3.16. Miscellaneous Expenditures. At Owner's expense, Manager shall pay the following expenses: cost of collection of delinquent rentals collected through an attorney or collection agency; cost of printed checks for each bank account required by Owner; cost of an on-site office (if required) including, but not limited to, office furniture and equipment; cost of reproduction, telephone, postage or express mail service, supplies, and printed forms required to manage the Property; mileage reimbursement for on-site personnel as stated in the Approved Budget; reasonable travel costs and incidental expenses necessitated through the normal or routine management of the Property or due to request by Owner which requires travel; cost of any other item or items associated with the operation of the Property not specifically set out herein but which are consistent with the Approved Budget.

3.17. Financial Services. Manager shall: i) calculate and bill rent and other tenant charges; ii) maintain accounts receivable and delinquency records; iii) maintain rent rolls; iv) process and pay operating and capital invoices; v) record activity and compare such activity to Approved Budget amounts; vi) reconcile the Property Account; vii) remit excess funds to Owner and request needed funds from Owner (as provided in Paragraph 3.13, above); viii) process payroll for personnel employed in the discharge of the contract and compliance with taxing authorities and other reporting requirements associated with that payroll; ix) maintain books of account for Owner's funds (as more specifically provided elsewhere in this Agreement); and x) submit periodic financial reports to Owner (as more specifically provided in this Agreement).

4. Limitations of Manager's Powers and Authority.

4.1. Expenditures. Except to the extent provided for in the Approved Budget or as otherwise specifically provided for in this Agreement with respect to emergency situations or otherwise, Manager shall not, without the prior written approval of Owner, incur any single expense for a repair, alteration, service, supply or other matter whatsoever which would involve a cost in excess of _____ Thousand Dollars ($________).

4.2. Debt Service, Refinancings and Sale of the Property. Manager shall not be responsible for the payment of any debt service, ground lease rents or other amounts due under mortgages or ground leases which may from time to time affect the Property. In addition, Manager shall not be required to represent Owner in connection with any refinancings or sale of the Property. Any capital expenditure must be specifically authorized by Owner in writing. With respect to purchase and installation of major items of new or replacement equipment, the Manager shall recommend that Owner purchase these items when Manager believes such purchase to be necessary. All new or replacement equipment or other capital expenditures exceeding ___________ Thousand Dollars ($________) shall be awarded on the basis of competitive bidding. If Owner requires, Owner may communicate to Manager its acceptance or rejection of bids; otherwise Manager shall accept or reject applicable bids. Owner may pay capital expenses from its own resources or may authorize payment by Manager out of the Property Account.

5. Budgets.

5.1. Budget for first Operating Year. Manager shall prepare and submit to Owner prior to _____, ___ for Owner's written approval a pro forma budget for the operation and maintenance of the Property covering the period from _____ through _____. Manager shall manage the Property consistent with and subject to the cost limitations set forth in such budget as the same may be adjusted in accordance with the provisions of this Paragraph 5.

5.2. Annual Budgets after First Operating Year. Manager shall prepare and submit to Owner for its approval at least thirty (30) days prior to the beginning of each Operating Year (defined below) a proposed pro forma budget for all costs pertaining to the operation and maintenance of the Property during such Operating Year. Each such budget shall be substantially in the same form as the Approved Budget (defined below) in effect for the prior Operating Year. Each such budget shall set forth expenditures on an annual and a monthly basis and shall not, except for informational purposes, include estimates for costs and expenses for which Owner will be reimbursed by Tenants under Leases. Manager shall make such reasonable modifications to each proposed pro forma budget it prepares in accordance with this Paragraph 5.2 until Owner shall have approved such budget in writing. Owner agrees not to unreasonably withhold or delay its review and approval thereof.

5.3. Approved Budgets and Operating Years. Each pro forma operating budget approved by Owner in accordance with Paragraph 5.2, above, and the pro forma budget referred to in Paragraph 5.1, above, together with any adjustments thereto, is referred to in this Agreement and shall be deemed to be the “Approved Budget” for the period covered by such budget. Each Approved Budget shall cover a period which shall begin on ___________ and end ___________, which is referred to in this Agreement as an “Operating Year.”

5.4. Limitations of Approved Budgets. Except as otherwise specifically provided in this Agreement, Manager shall incur costs and expenses in connection with the operation and maintenance of the Property during any Operating Year within the limitations established by the Approved Budget for such Operating Year. Further, Manager shall not, without Owner's prior written consent, incur costs and expenses with respect to any calendar month which would result in the budget for such month, (or in any major category thereof) as shown in the Approved Budget then in effect being exceeded by more than _____ percent (____%). The calculation of any such overage shall not take into consideration any costs and expenses for which Owner shall be reimbursed by Tenants or any additional costs and expenses of which Owner shall have approved. Notwithstanding the foregoing, Manager shall not be required to obtain Owner's prior approval with respect to, and the calculation of any Approved Budget overages shall not take into consideration, the following: costs and expenses relating to utility charges, real estate taxes, insurance or otherwise which are not within Manager's reasonable control and which, if not incurred, would or might, in Manager's reasonable judgment, adversely and materially affect the operation and maintenance of the Property. In addition, if any Operating Year shall commence before Owner shall have approved the proposed pro forma budget for such year, Manager shall use its reasonable judgment in incurring costs and expenses relating to the operation and maintenance of the Property until an Approved Budget for such Operating Year shall be in effect and in doing so shall be guided by the Approved Budget for the prior Operating Year. In such a case, Manager shall be subject to the same financial limitations established by the last effective Approved Budget as if such budget had been in effect for the then current Operating Year, increasing, however, the amount of funds set aside for each category of such budget by _____ percent (____%).

6. Books, Records, Reports and Accounting.

6.1. Books and Records. Manager shall establish and maintain such books of account, records and other documentation pertaining to the operation and maintenance of the Property as are customarily maintained by managing agents of properties similar in location and size to that of the Property. Manager shall prepare or cause to be prepared and file all returns and other reports relating to the Property (other than income tax returns and any reports or returns which may be required of any foreign owner of United States real property) as may be required by any governmental authority or as otherwise may be required under this Agreement.

6.2. Security Deposits. Manager shall deposit and maintain in separate accounts approved by Owner in accordance with applicable laws and Leases all security deposits, if any, of Tenants.

6.3. Monthly Reports. Manager shall prepare and deliver to Owner a monthly report setting forth detailed statements of collections, disbursements, delinquencies, uncollectible accounts, balances of account, accounts payable and other matters relating to the management and operation of the Property. Such statements shall, upon Owner's request, be accompanied by appropriate documentation of all expenditures made by Manager under this Agreement.

6.4. Quarterly Statements. Manager shall prepare and deliver to Owner on a quarterly basis Manager's written estimates of the amounts, if any, by which any major categories of the Approved Budget must be adjusted to adequately fund the operation and maintenance of the Property for the then current quarter. Manager shall also furnish Owner with such further information covering the operation and maintenance of the Property as Owner may reasonably require.

6.5. Year-End and Final Reports. As soon as practicable after the end of each Operating Year and after the expiration or termination of this Agreement, Manager shall prepare and deliver to Owner statements pertaining to the operation and maintenance of the Property during the preceding Operating Year (or applicable portion thereof).

6.6. Inspection and Audit of Records. Owner shall have the right during reasonable business hours and upon reasonable notice to inspect, audit, examine and make copies of or extracts from the books of account and records maintained by Manager pursuant to this Agreement. Such rights may be exercised through an employee of Owner or qualified agent designated by Owner, and Owner shall bear all expenses in connection with such examination.

6.7. Accounting Matters. The books of account will be maintained on a _____ [CASH OR ACCRUAL] basis.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

6.8. Property of Manager. The records, reports, books of account and other documents and materials relating to the management, operation and maintenance of the Property shall be the property of Manager and, upon the termination of this Agreement, Owner may make copies of all or portions thereof as Owner shall deem pertinent to Owner's future operation and ownership of the Property.

6.9. Final Accounting. Within thirty (30) days after the date of termination of this Agreement, Manager shall deliver to Owner a final accounting for all Owner funds handled by Manager and shall pay to Owner the balance of all monies in the Property Account or in the possession of Manager.

7. Owner's Duties.

7.1. Plans, Specifications and Documents. Owner shall make readily available to Manager copies of the plans and specifications of the Property and a recent survey of the Property (if available) and shall provide Manager with such information and materials pertaining to the layout and construction of the Property, the elevators and lighting of the Property and the heating, air conditioning, ventilating, plumbing, electrical and other mechanical systems and equipment in or servicing the Property as Manager may reasonably request. Owner also shall provide Manager with copies of or convenient access to all agreements, licenses, certificates, contracts, bills, notices and other documents pertaining to the Property.

7.2. Office and Other Space. Owner shall provide Manager, on a rent-free basis, suitable space in the Property. Owner shall provide such space with such furniture and furnishings, including office machines, furniture, equipment and supplies as may be reasonably required for Manager to properly perform its duties. Notwithstanding the foregoing, with the exception of a small staff as Manager may reasonably deem necessary to be located on the Property for the proper performance of the Manager's duties under this Agreement, Manager shall, to the extent practicable, perform administrative, clerical and accounting functions pertaining to the management of the Property in Manager's own general offices.

8. Insurance.

8.1. Manager shall procure and maintain during the term of this Agreement, comprehensive public liability insurance in amount specified by Owner and fidelity bonds in amounts specified by Owner covering all personnel of Manager.

8.2. Manager shall procure and maintain during the term of this Agreement all other forms of insurance as may be required by (i) law, (ii) Owner, or (iii) the holder of any mortgage or deed of trust covering the Property; all with such companies, in such amounts and with such beneficial interests appearing therein as may be required.

8.3. All policies of insurance required pursuant to Paragraph 8 of this Agreement shall be procured and maintained in the name of and at the sole expense of Owner. Owner may elect by notice in writing to Manager to procure and maintain any of such policies directly in which event Manager shall have no obligation to procure and maintain the insurance which Owner has so elected to procure and maintain.

8.4. Manager shall investigate all accidents or claims for damage relating to the operation and maintenance of the Property, submit a written report of the results of such investigation to Owner, and cooperate with and make any reports required by any insurance company; provided, however, that such reports shall be submitted to and approved by Owner in writing prior to being submitted to any insurance company.

8.5. Without in any way limiting the other provisions of this Paragraph 8 regarding insurance, Manager shall maintain worker's compensation insurance and all other insurance necessary to meet federal and state requirements in accordance with the laws of the State of California and employer's liability insurance applicable to and covering all persons engaged in performance of the work to be performed under this Agreement.

8.6. Manager shall secure and maintain such other insurance policies as Owner may desire such as elevator liability, steam boiler insurance and the like.

8.7. Manager shall be named as co-insured in all policies of insurance required pursuant to this Paragraph 8. All original certificates evidencing any insurance policy shall be delivered to Owner.

9. Compensation—Management Fee.

9.1. Amount and Payment. Owner shall pay Manager an annual fee for its performance of the duties under this Agreement in an amount equal to _____ percent (____%) of the gross income from the operation of the Property for the Operating Year with respect to which such fee shall be payable. Such fee shall be payable in monthly installments in arrears in accordance with Paragraph 3.14, above.

9.2. Gross Income. For the purposes of this Paragraph 9, the term “gross income from the operation of the Property” shall mean all sums which Owner derives or is entitled to receive under Leases.

9.3. Construction and Remodeling Supervision. In addition to the compensation set forth above, Manager shall receive a fee for the supervision of all remodeling and construction in excess of ___________ Dollars, ($________) in any Operating Year which occurs on the Property (including tenant and common areas). Such fee for supervision of remodeling and construction shall be equal to _____ percent (____%) of the total cost of the work performed. Manager shall have responsibility for the completion of such improvements within the guidelines specified in any bid proposal and Manager shall exercise due diligence so that said construction and/or remodeling is completed within the time frame so specified; however, Manager shall not be financially liable for delays which cause the construction completion date to be exceeded.

10. Default—Termination.

10.1. Optional Termination. Owner and Manager may immediately terminate this Agreement at any time if the other shall default in the performance of any of its obligations under this Agreement. In such event, the party declaring the default shall provide the other party (“Defaulting Party”) with written notice thereof setting forth the nature of the default, and the Defaulting Party shall have (i) three (3) days to cure a monetary default or (ii) fifteen (15) days to cure a non-monetary default; provided, however, that if the nature of the alleged default is such that it cannot reasonably be cured within fifteen (15) days, the Defaulting Party may cure such default by commencing in good faith to cure such default promptly after its receipt of such written notice and prosecuting the cure of such default to completion with diligence and continuity within a reasonable time thereafter.

10.2. Automatic Termination. This Agreement shall terminate automatically if:

i) all or substantially all of the Property is condemned or acquired by eminent domain;

ii) all or substantially all of the Property is destroyed by fire or other casualty as a result of which all or substantially all of the Tenants are unable to continue the normal conduct of their business in their respective occupied spaces;

iii) Owner or Manager files a petition for bankruptcy, reorganization or arrangement under any state statute, or makes an assignment for the benefit of creditors, or takes advantage of any insolvency statute; or

iv) The Property is sold or otherwise transferred by Owner, whether voluntarily or involuntarily.

10.3. Survival of Obligations. Upon the expiration or termination of this Agreement, (i) Owner's appointment of Manager hereunder shall cease and terminate and, except as otherwise specifically provided hereunder, Owner and Manager shall have no further obligation or liability to the other; (ii) Manager shall no longer have any authority to represent Owner or take or cause to be taken any actions on Owner's behalf; and (iii) Owner shall pay Manager all fees which shall have accrued through the date of termination.

10.4. Return of Owner's Property. Immediately after the expiration or termination of this Agreement, Manager shall deliver to Owner (i) the balance of any funds then held by Manager on Owner's account pursuant to this Agreement; and (ii) all books, records, Leases, agreements and other documents which are necessary or materially pertinent to the management and operation of the Property.

11. Indemnification.

11.1. Scope. Owner shall indemnify and hold harmless Manager, its principals, officers, directors, shareholders, partners, employees and agents (individually and collectively, the “Indemnitees”) from and against all liabilities, claims, suits, damages, judgments, costs and expenses of whatever nature, including reasonable counsel fees and disbursements, to which the Indemnitees may become subject by reason of or arising out of any injury to or death of any person(s), damage to property, loss or use of any property or otherwise in connection with the performance of Manager's obligations under this Agreement. [OPTIONAL: or connected in any way to the existence of Hazardous Materials (defined below) in, or under the Property]. Owner shall promptly reimburse the Indemnitees who become liable for matters indemnified hereunder and Owner shall promptly reimburse the Indemnitees for all amounts, including reasonable attorney fees and disbursements, which they or any of them are required to pay in connection with or in defense of any of the matters for which they or any of them are entitled to indemnification as set forth above.

11.2. [OPTIONAL: HAZARDOUS MATERIALS]. The term “Hazardous Materials” shall mean (a) any “hazardous waste” as defined by the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act of 1976 (42 U.S.C. Section 6901 et seq.), as amended from time to time, and regulations promulgated thereunder; (b) any “hazardous substance” as defined by the Comprehensive Environmental Response, Compensation and Liability Act of 1980 (42 U.S.C. Section 9601 et seq.), as amended from time to time, and regulations promulgated thereunder; (c) asbestos; (d) petroleum products and polychlorinated biphenyls; (e) any substance the presence of which on the Property is prohibited by any governmental requirement; and (f) any other substance which by any governmental requirement requires special handling in its collection, storage, treatment, or disposal or is declared to be hazardous or toxic under any law or regulation now or hereafter enacted or promulgated by any governmental authority.

11.3. Conditions. The obligations for Owner to indemnify, hold harmless and reimburse the Indemnitees above under this Paragraph 11 are subject to the following conditions:

i) the Indemnitees shall promptly notify Owner of any matter with respect to which Owner is required to indemnify, hold harmless or reimburse the Indemnitees; and

ii) the Indemnitees shall not take any actions, including an admission of liability, which would bar Owner from enforcing any applicable coverage under policies of insurance held by Owner or would prejudice any defense of Owner in any appropriate legal proceedings pertaining to any such matter or otherwise prevent Owner from defending itself with respect to any such matter.

11.4. Excluded Matters. Notwithstanding the foregoing, Owner shall not be required to indemnify, hold harmless or reimburse the Indemnitees with respect to any matter to the extent the same resulted from the gross negligence or willful malfeasance of the Indemnitees or actions taken by the Indemnitees outside of the scope of the Manager's authority under this Agreement or any express or implied direction of Owner.

11.5. Survival. The provisions of this Paragraph 11 shall survive the expiration and any termination of this Agreement.

12. Independent Contractor Status. Manager is and shall at all times remain an independent contractor of Owner and under no circumstance shall Manager be deemed to be the employee of Owner.

13. Suits and Claims. Manager shall notify Owner and Owner's insurance carrier in writing as soon as possible after receipt of notice of (i) any injury occurring on the Property; (ii) any claim against Owner and/or Manager; and (iii) any claim which involves said Property. Manager shall take no steps (such as the admission of liability) which would operate to bar Owner from obtaining any protection afforded by any policies of insurance it may hold, or which would operate to prejudice the defense in any legal proceeding involving Owner or said Property, or which would otherwise prevent Owner from protecting itself against any such claims, demand, or legal proceeding. Manager shall fully cooperate with Owner in the defense of any such claim, demand, or proceeding. Owner shall have the sole and exclusive right to conduct the defense of any such claim, demand, or legal proceeding.

14. Sale of the Property. Owner shall inform Manager of its intention to sell the herein described Property and furnish the terms and conditions of such sale before listing the Property with a broker other than Manager. If Owner executes a listing agreement with a broker (other than Manager) for sale of the Property, Manager shall cooperate with such broker to the end that the respective activities of Manager and broker may be carried on without friction and without interference with Tenants and occupants. Manager will permit the broker to exhibit the Property during reasonable business hours. In such case, Owner agrees to notify Manager in writing of the date of closing, the progress of the closing process, and what measures and steps Owner wishes Manager to take in preparation for such closing. Owner agrees to provide written documentation pertaining to the distribution of funds held by Manager and the parties agree that Manager will not release such funds without written authorization from Owner.

15. No Third-Party Beneficiary Rights/No Interest in Property Account or Other Owner's Funds. This Agreement is made solely for the benefit of the Manager and Owner and no third party is intended to or shall have any third party beneficiary rights under this Agreement against either Manager or Owner. All funds and revenues relating to the Property, including but not limited to the Property Account, shall solely be those of Owner, and Manager shall have no interest in or lien against any such monies.

16. No Recordation. Neither this Agreement nor any memorandum thereof shall be recorded by any party at any time.

17. Timely Performance. Owner and Manager shall each perform all of their respective obligations under this Agreement in a proper, prompt and timely manner. Each shall furnish the other with such information and assistance as the other may from time to time reasonably request in order to perform its responsibilities hereunder. Owner and Manager each shall take such actions as the other may from time to time reasonably request and otherwise cooperate with the other so as to avoid or minimize any delay or impairment of either party's performance of its obligations under this Agreement.

18. Assignment.

18.1. Permissible Assignments. Neither Owner nor Manager may assign this Agreement without the prior written consent of the other (which may be given or withheld in such party's sole and absolute discretion); provided, however, that either party may assign this Agreement to a successor corporation or partnership, a parent company, a wholly-owned subsidiary corporation or an entity which controls, is controlled by or is under common control with Owner or Manager, as the case may be.

18.2. Assumption and Release. Each permitted assignee of this Agreement shall agree in writing to personally assume, perform and be bound by all of the terms, covenants, conditions and agreements contained in this Agreement, and thereupon the assignor of this Agreement shall be relieved of all obligations hereunder except those which shall have accrued prior to the effectiveness of such assignment.

19. Notices.

19.1. General. Any and all notices or other communications given under this Agreement shall be deemed to have been properly given when delivered, if personally delivered, or three (3) days after the date mailed if sent certified or registered mail, return receipt requested and postage prepaid, and addressed to the parties at the following addresses:

i) If to Manager, to:

Any notices delivered by either party in any manner other than those described above shall be deemed properly given when received. Either party may change its address for the giving of notices under this Agreement by delivering to the other party ten (10) days prior written notice of such change of address.

19.2. Emergency Notices. Either party may give the other notice of emergency situations orally (personally, by telephone or otherwise) or by telecopy, telex, telegram or other method, provided that the party giving any emergency notice as provided above in this Paragraph 19 shall confirm the same by written notice in accordance with Paragraph 19.1, above.

20. Affiliates. Manager shall not retain or use any person or entity who is an affiliate of Manager unless such retention is on terms which are arm's-length and no worse than those which would be obtainable from unrelated third parties. The term "affiliate" as used in this Paragraph shall mean and refer to any entity in which the Manager, or any shareholder, partner, officer or director of Manager has a financial interest, or any person who is related by blood or marriage to Manager or any shareholder, partner, officer or director of Manager.

21. No Obligations of Future Owner. Notwithstanding anything set forth in this Agreement, no future owner of the Property shall have any obligations under this Agreement, nor shall the Property at any time be subject to any claim by Manager in respect of this Agreement.

22. Miscellaneous. [See also, Boilerplate Provisions Discussed in Chapter 4]

This Agreement shall be construed and enforced in accordance with and governed by the laws of the State of California. This Agreement embodies the entire agreement and understanding between the parties and supersedes all prior agreements and understandings relating to the subject matter hereof. This Agreement may not be modified, amended or terminated, nor may any term or provision hereof be waived or discharged, except in writing signed by the party against whom such amendment, modification, termination, waiver or discharge is sought to be enforced. All of the terms of this Agreement, whether so expressed or not, shall be binding upon the respective successors and permitted assigns of the parties hereto and shall inure to the benefit of and be enforceable by the parties hereto and their respective successors and permitted assigns. If any of the provisions of this Agreement shall to any extent be invalid or unenforceable, the remaining provisions of this Agreement shall not be affected thereby and every provision of this Agreement shall be valid and enforceable to the fullest extent permitted by law. The headings of this Agreement are for purposes of reference only and shall not limit or otherwise affect the meaning hereof. This Agreement may be executed in several counterparts, each of which shall be deemed an original, but all of which together shall constitute one and the same instrument. Any references in this Agreement to any one gender, masculine, feminine or neuter, includes the other two, and the singular includes the plural, and vice versa, unless the context otherwise requires.

[OPTIONAL: PROVISIONS FOR LEASING COMMISSION. These can be set forth within the body of the Agreement or in a separate listing agreement. (See Chapter 2 for requirements for listing agreement.)]

[11:1] Scope Note:

Ordinarily, parties do not negotiate a real property purchase and sale transaction with the expectation something will go wrong. Nonetheless, any number of events can, and quite often do, occur after execution of the agreement that either impede or abort the transaction. This Chapter focuses on the various remedies available to buyers and sellers upon the breach (or apparent breach) of a purchase and sale agreement; the Chapter also addresses the parties' potential remedies to avoid their obligations under a legally "imperfect" contract. Other remedies tangentially bearing on the rights of parties aggrieved in a purchase and sale transaction are treated briefly in the final sections of this Chapter.

• [11:2] Compare—land sale contracts

Compare—land sale contracts: As discussed in Ch. 4, land sale contracts are quite different from the typical purchase and sale agreement (see ¶ 4:112 ff.). Thus, the remedies addressed in this Chapter do not necessarily apply to installment land contracts. A seller's remedy under an installment land contract is usually to foreclose; and a buyer's remedy is typically to seek specific performance. (As a practical matter however, installment land contracts are rarely used in modern practice.)

Chapter 11. Remedies in Purchase and Sale Transactions

A. Factors Affecting Choice of Remedies

1. [11:4] General Considerations—Client's Goals and Litigation Posture
2. [11:5] Planning Considerations During Transactional Stages
    - a. [11:6] Create, limit and preclude remedies in transactional documents
        - (1) [11:7] Clarity of terms
    - b. [11:8] Preserve remedies during course of transaction
    - c. [11:9] Act timely
3. [11:10] Affirmance or Disaffirmance of Contract
    - a. [11:11] Pleading inconsistent remedies
        - (1) [11:12] Consistent factual allegations required
    - b. [11:13] Election of remedies
4. [11:20] Determining Whether Enforceable Contract Exists
    - a. [11:21] Essential elements
        - (1) [11:22] Material terms
            - (a) [11:23] Missing terms indicating nonbinding "agreement to agree"
                - 1) [11:23.1] Compare—independent contract to negotiate
            - (b) [11:23.2] Parol evidence
                - 1) [11:23.3] Admissible to establish third-party professional's distinct obligations
        - (2) [11:24] Writing requirement (statute of frauds)
            - (a) [11:24.1] Electronic messages
            - (b) [11:24.2] Distinguish—executed contracts
    - b. [11:25] Consent/acceptance
        - (1) [11:25a] Negotiation not required; objective test
        - (2) [11:25.1] Effect of qualified acceptance or counteroffer
            - (a) [11:25.2] Mistakenly-labeled counteroffers
        - (3) [11:25.3] Signature deemed consent
            - (a) [11:25.3a] Exception—document not presented as contract
            - (b) [11:25.3b] Effect of no signatures
        - (4) [11:25.5] Voidable consent
            - (a) [11:25.6] Compare—ratification by subsequent conduct
    - c. [11:25.10] Lawful and ascertainable purpose
    - d. [11:26] Sufficient consideration
        - (1) [11:27] Mutual obligations
            - (a) [11:28] No mutuality of obligation where unrestricted right to cancel
            - (b) [11:29] Compare—satisfaction clauses
            - (c) [11:29.1] Compare—illusory contract rendered enforceable by partial performance

(d) [11:29.2] Compare—promissory estoppel
(2) [11:29.10] Challenging sufficiency of consideration
(3) [11:29.11] Limitation—illegal consideration
e. [11:30] Certainty of property description
f. [11:31] Contractual capacity
(1) [11:32] Minors/persons of unsound mind
(a) [11:32.1] Presumption of unsound mind
(2) [11:33] Spouses/domestic partners with regard to community property
(3) [11:34] Partnerships, corporations and other entities
g. [11:35] Failure of conditions precedent
h. [11:35.5] Adhesion contracts
i. [11:36] Unconscionability defense
(1) [11:36.1] Establishing unconscionability
(2) [11:37] Not basis for affirmative relief

[11:3] The basic remedies most directly related to a purchase and sale agreement include damages for breach of contract or fraud, specific performance, reformation and rescission. As discussed at ¶ 11:4 ff., the appropriate choice of remedies depends on several factors, some of which are necessarily personal to the client and others of which are a product of contract law and the terms of the parties' agreement.

1. [11:4] General Considerations—Client's Goals and Litigation Posture: In many cases, the type of remedy to pursue will be influenced, in part, by considerations personal to your client, including:

- The client's ultimate goal (e.g., obtaining the property in kind vs. obtaining monetary relief vs. backing out of the transaction altogether);
- The cost of pursuing the particular remedy;
- The length of time necessary to pursue the remedy;
- The likelihood of success; and
- How a particular remedy fits into the client's overall litigation (or arbitration) strategy.

2. [11:5] Planning Considerations During Transactional Stages: Negotiations and events that occur in the early stages of the transaction will often have a bearing on available remedies. Counsel for both parties should focus on the need to create and preserve their respective clients' remedies (and limit the other party's remedies) from the inception of the purchase and sale negotiations. In particular, the parties and their counsel should be aware of the following considerations throughout the course of the transaction:

a. [11:6] Create, limit and preclude remedies in transactional documents: The parties should negotiate (and counsel should make certain the transactional documents embody) the creation or limitation of certain remedies. For example:

- The parties may wish to agree on liquidated damages (see ¶ 4:310 ff.);
- The buyer may be required to waive its right to seek specific performance (see ¶ 4:506);
- The parties might agree that any disputes arising out of the transaction be decided by binding arbitration instead of litigation (see ¶ 4:490 ff.); or
- The parties might otherwise contract for certain exclusive remedies in the event of a breach.

(1) [11:7] Clarity of terms: Provisions limiting certain remedies must be clear and precise. A contract will not be construed to preclude either party from electing among available remedies unless the language used in the agreement clearly indicates an intent to make specified remedies exclusive. [Nelson v. Spence (1960) 182 CA2d 493, 497, 6 CR 312, 315—provision stating "buyer at his option may rescind" agreement for breach of warranty not effective to limit buyer's remedies to rescission; see also Michel & Pfeffer v. Oceanside Properties, Inc. (1976) 61 CA3d 433, 443, 132 CR 179, 184 (distinguished on other grounds by Wm. R. Clarke Corp. v. Safeco Ins. Co. (1997) 15 C4th 882, 891, 64 CR2d 578, 583)—right to rescind foreclosed by language expressly prescribing another remedy as "sole remedy"]

b. [11:8] Preserve remedies during course of transaction: The parties should be careful to preserve their remedies during the course of the transaction by avoiding conduct or statements that would be inconsistent with the remedy they seek. For example, a party who ultimately wishes to seek specific performance (an affirmance of the contract) should not engage in conduct that suggests there is no binding agreement or that the party will seek to rescind the contract (a disaffirmance of the contract).

c. [11:9] Act timely: The parties should also act timely to preserve their remedies. For example, the contract may set deadlines for various actions by a party as a condition to the enforcement of certain remedies. Moreover, a party's right to pursue a particular remedy might be subject to defenses based on that party's untimely conduct (e.g., waiver, laches and estoppel).

3. [11:10] Affirmance or Disaffirmance of Contract: One of the threshold issues in assessing the availability of any remedy is whether the contract should be affirmed or disaffirmed. A remedy seeking the benefits of the contract (e.g., an action for specific performance or a damages suit for breach of contract) requires the client to affirm the contract. Conversely, if the client's goal is to avoid its obligations under the contract, the remedy is one to disaffirm the contract (i.e., rescission). [Alder v. Drudis (1947) 30 C2d 372, 381-382, 182 P2d 195, 201; Akin v. Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's London (2006) 140 CA4th 291, 296, 44 CR3d 284, 287]

The distinction has important consequences when it comes to damages. Parties who sue for breach of contract (i.e., affirming the contract's existence) may be compensated for the loss of their "expectational interest"—the benefit of their bargain that full performance would have brought. In contrast, a suit for relief based on rescission (i.e., disaffirming the contract's existence) seeks to extinguish the contract, terminate further liability and restore the parties to their former positions by requiring them to return whatever consideration they received; benefit of the bargain damages are not available in rescission cases (¶ 11:508.1). [Sharabianlou v. Karp (2010) 181 CA4th 1133, 1144-1146, 105 CR3d 300, 310-311]

a. [11:11] Pleading inconsistent remedies: Disaffirmance and affirmance of a contract are, of course, inconsistent and, therefore, so are the remedies of damages (or specific performance) and rescission (see ¶ 11:10). [Akin v. Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's London (2006) 140 CA4th 291, 296, 44 CR3d 284, 287; Karapetian v. Carolan (1948) 83 CA2d 344, 347, 188 P2d 809, 811]

Nevertheless, a party may plead inconsistent, mutually exclusive theories, some that affirm the contract and others that disaffirm it. [Karapetian v. Carolan, supra, 83 CA3d at 351-352, 188 P2d at 813—"it is now well settled that the innocent party may set forth in his complaint against the fraudulent party a cause of action for rescission, and in a second cause of action ask for damages, if for any reason rescission is not granted"; see Stevens Group Fund IV v. Sobrato Develop. Co. (1991) 1 CA4th 886, 889, 2 CR2d 460, 461—buyer's action against seller for breach of contract for sale of real property sought damages or, in the alternative, specific performance; Walton v. Walton (1995) 31 CA4th 277, 292, 36 CR2d 901, 908 (breach of contract damages and quasi-specific performance)]

Indeed, Civ.C. § 1692 provides that "[a] claim for damages is not inconsistent with a claim for relief based upon rescission." [Civ.C. § 1692; Sharabianlou v. Karp (2010) 181 CA4th 1133, 1144, 105 CR3d 300, 309; see ¶ 11:461, 11:499]

(1) [11:12] Consistent factual allegations required: However, pursuing remedies based on alternative theories of affirmance and disaffirmance can be difficult because, although inconsistent remedies may be sought, the underlying facts to be pled and proved must be consistent. [Baran v. Goldberg (1948) 86 CA2d 506, 511-512, 194 P2d 765, 768-769—specific performance cause of action alleging no difference between agreed-upon price and value of property at time of breach precluded breach of contract damages award]

For example, a plaintiff who seeks damages for breach of contract must allege and prove facts evidencing that a binding contract exists. Yet, if the complaint also seeks, in the alternative, relief based upon rescission, plaintiff will have to allege and prove facts evidencing that no valid contract exists. (Nonetheless, though seemingly difficult to conceptualize, such alternative pleading is allowed. See Williams v. Marshall (1951) 37 C2d 445, 455-457, 235 P2d 372, 379; Karapetian v. Carolan (1948) 83 CA2d 344, 351-352, 188 P2d 809, 813; ¶ 11:11 & 11:461.)

b. [11:13] Election of remedies: Where the underlying facts support inconsistent remedies, plaintiff is not required to "elect" the appropriate remedy at the pleading stage. Absent plaintiff's waiver or other conduct evidencing an irrevocable election of remedies, plaintiff may pursue inconsistent theories and need not finally elect between the remedies until after the evidence is presented at trial (i.e., prior to judgment). [See Raedeke v. Gibraltar Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1974) 10 C3d 665, 671, 111 CR 693, 696; Denevi v. LGCC (2004) 121 CA4th 1211, 1218-1221, 18 CR3d 276, 281-284; compare City of Orange v. San Diego County Employees Retirement Ass'n (2002) 103 CA4th 45, 58-59, 126 CR2d 405, 415-416—where plaintiffs brought restitution and breach of contract claims in same action but were precluded from pursuing restitution by summary judgment, they effectively had no choice of remedies and election of remedies doctrine not applicable]

Indeed there is even authority that an election of remedies should not be compelled before satisfaction of judgment ... unless plaintiff has gained some benefit other than the judgment that would make it inequitable to permit continued pursuit of an otherwise available remedy. [Denevi v. LGCC, supra, 121 CA4th at 1221, 18 CR3d at 283-284]

However, once made, the election of one remedy bars recovery under the other(s). [Akin v. Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's London (2006) 140 CA4th 291, 296, 44 CR3d 284, 287]

• [11:13.1] A buyer's notice of rescission based on the seller's fraud does not preclude pursuing a damages remedy for breach of contract unless the seller has accepted the buyer's offer to rescind (or the facts otherwise show the buyer waived a damages remedy by inconsistent conduct following discovery of the fraud); the right to breach of contract damages exists unless and until the transaction is effectively disaffirmed. [Walters v. Marler (1978) 83 CA3d 1, 15-16, 147 CR 655, 664 (disapproved on other grounds by Gray v. Don Miller & Assocs., Inc. (1984) 35 C3d 498, 507, 198 CR 551, 556); Karapetian v. Carolan (1948) 83 CA2d 344, 351-355, 188 P2d 809, 813-815; see further discussion at ¶ 11:352, 11:461]

[11:14 - 11:19] Reserved.

4. [11:20] Determining Whether Enforceable Contract Exists: Also fundamental to the appropriate choice of remedies is whether a binding, enforceable contract was ever formed. The "existence of a contract is a necessary element to an action based on contract, regardless whether the plaintiff seeks specific performance or damages for breach of contract." [Roth v. Malson (1998) 67 CA4th 552, 558-559, 79 CR2d 226, 230; see also Harris v. Rudin, Richman & Appel (1999) 74 CA4th 299, 307, 87 CR2d 822, 828—"To state a cause of action for breach of contract, a party must plead the existence of a contract …"]

Some of the issues pertinent to that determination are the same as those relevant to whether there are grounds to disaffirm a contract. For example, failure of consideration is a basis for disaffirmance (i.e., rescission, see ¶ 11:477), but it is also a basis for arguing no binding agreement ever came into existence (¶ 11:21, 11:26).

a. [11:21] Essential elements: The following are the minimal essential elements of a binding contract (Civ.C. § 1550):

• The parties to the contract must have contractual capacity (¶ 11:31);

• The parties must consent to the contract (¶ 11:25);

• The contract must have a lawful purpose (¶ 11:25.10 ff.); and

• The contract must be supported by sufficient consideration (see Civ.C. § 1605, defining "good consideration"; and ¶ 11:26 ff.). [Civ.C. § 1550; Garcia v. World Savings, FSB (2010) 183 CA4th 1031, 1038, 107 CR3d 683, 690—consideration is necessary for "true breach of contract claim"]

(1) [11:22] Material terms: In addition, like any contract, an enforceable purchase and sale contract must set forth with "reasonable certainty" all material terms—including, at a minimum, the identity of the parties (Civ.C. § 1558), the purchase price, and a sufficient description of the property. [Sterling v. Taylor (2007) 40 C4th 757, 772, 55 CR3d 116, 128; see further discussion at ¶ 4:270 ff.]

Other incidental terms of the transaction—such as opening of an escrow and escrow fees, furnishing deeds, title insurance policies, proration of taxes, etc.—need not be stated with precision or, for that matter, even addressed. The court may determine the nonessential terms based on local custom. [King v. Stanley (1948) 32 C2d 584, 589, 197 P2d 321, 324 (disapproved on other grounds by Patel v. Liebermensch (2008) 45 C4th 344, 351, 86 CR3d 366, 371, fn.4)]

(a) [11:23] Missing terms indicating nonbinding "agreement to agree": When the resolution of a material term is left to a later date, the purported contract will be deemed a mere "agreement to agree" and thus unenforceable against either party. [Ablett v. Clauson (1954) 43 C2d 280, 284-285, 272 P2d 753, 756; see also Daniels v. Select Portfolio Servicing, Inc. (2016) 246 CA4th 1150, 1174, 201 CR3d 390, 413 (disapproved on other grounds by Sheen v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2022) 12 C5th 905, 943, 290 CR3d 834, 860, fn.12)—"[p]reliminary negotiations or agreements for future negotiations—so-called agreements to agree—are not enforceable contracts"]

Thus, e.g., a provision in an oral or informal written agreement stating the "agreement" is not intended to be binding until a formal written contract is executed is considered a material term; and there is no binding contract until the formal written contract is executed. [Harris v. Rudin, Richman & Appel (1999) 74 CA4th 299, 307, 87 CR2d 822, 828 (settlement letter); see also Daniels v. Select Portfolio Servicing, Inc., supra, 246 CA4th at 1176, 201 CR3d at 414—servicer's alleged oral promise to issue loan modification agreement in exchange for monthly trial payments deemed unenforceable "agreement to agree"; Elyaoudayan v. Hoffman (2003) 104 CA4th 1421, 1429-1430, 129 CR2d 41, 46-47 (oral in-court settlement); and ¶ 4:264.5]

1) [11:23.1] Compare—independent contract to negotiate: Parties to a contemplated transaction sometimes enter into a separate contract to negotiate. Such a contract does not bind the parties to reach an ultimate agreement, but it obligates them to bargain in good faith. [See Copeland v. Baskin Robbins U.S.A. (2002) 96 CA4th 1251, 1257, 117 CR2d 875, 880-881; and ¶ 4:275.8]

Cross-refer: "Nonbinding" agreements (letters of intent, memoranda, etc.) are discussed in greater detail at ¶ 4:275 ff.

(b) [11:23.2] Parol evidence: Parol evidence may not be used to supply omitted essential terms. However, in appropriate circumstances, extrinsic evidence may be admissible to (i) clarify the terms of an ambiguous agreement, (ii) complete the incidental terms of a purchase contract that otherwise complies with the statute of frauds or (iii) establish illegality or fraud. [See CCP § 1856; Riverisland Cold Storage, Inc. v. Fresno-Madera Production Credit Ass'n (2013) 55 C4th 1169, 1172, 1182, 151 CR3d 93, 94-95, 103 (overruling prior contrary authority)—extrinsic evidence of fraudulent promises at variance with writing's terms deemed admissible; see also Thompson v. Asimos (2016) 6 CA5th 970, 987-989, 212 CR3d 158, 174-176 (construing two ambiguous standard form independent contractor agreements)—contracts' language combined with undisputed parol evidence supported trial court's implied finding that broker promised to comply with real estate broker regulations and thus breached agreements with founder of highly specialized real estate consulting firm by failing to register firm with DRE; West v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2013) 214 CA4th 780, 798, 154 CR3d 285, 299-300 (construing ambiguous HAMP Trial Plan Agreement)—construction given by parties' acts and conduct before any controversy arose entitled to "great weight" and "will, when reasonable, be adopted and enforced by the court"; Marin Storage & Trucking, Inc. v. Benco Contracting & Engineering, Inc. (2001) 89 CA4th 1042, 1051, 107 CR2d 645, 652 (construing contractual indemnification clause)—parties' prior course of dealings may determine meaning of contract term or add agreed but unstated term; compare Hot Rods, LLC v. Northrop Grumman Systems Corp. (2015) 242 CA4th 1166, 1175-1177, 196 CR3d 53, 59-61—integration clause stating "no extrinsic evidence whatsoever may be introduced" to interpret contract was fully enforceable as express indication of "sophisticated" parties' intent to bypass general rule; see also ¶ 4:270.4, 4:529]

Parol evidence also is admissible to show whether the parties intended several written instruments to constitute a single contract. [Versaci v. Sup.Ct. (Palomar Community College Dist.) (2005) 127 CA4th 805, 814-815, 26 CR3d 92, 98; see also Civ.C. § 1642—several contracts relating to same subject matter between same parties and made as part of substantially one transaction are to be taken together; see also R.W.L. Enterprises v. Oldcastle, Inc. (2017) 17 CA5th 1019, 1027-1032, 226 CR3d 677, 683-687—for one agreement's terms to be incorporated into another per § 1642, reference must be "clear and unequivocal" (parties' dealer agreement which contained no attorney fee provision and their subsequent credit application which did were not part of same transaction, could not be construed together and thus prevailing party in breach of dealer agreement action could not rely on credit application's fee provision as basis for fee award); Vons Cos., Inc. v. Lyle Parks, Jr., Inc. (2009) 177 CA4th 823, 834-835, 99 CR3d 562, 570-572 & fn. 5—whether Civ.C. § 1642 applies in particular case is question of fact (prevailing party on claim for breach of warranty that contained no attorney fee clause could not rely on related construction contract that did contain attorney fee clause as basis for Civ.C. § 1717 fee award)]

1) [11:23.3] Admissible to establish third-party professional's distinct obligations: Parol evidence is admissible to establish a third-party professional's distinct obligations relative to, but separate from, the parties' contractual obligations under a real property purchase and sale agreement. Indeed, while "[t]he parol evidence rule prevents reconstruction of the parties' contractual obligations[,] it does not immunize real estate agents, attorneys, or other professionals from liability arising from their misconduct in drafting a document." [See Thomson v. Canyon (2011) 198 CA4th 594, 599, 129 CR3d 525, 528—extrinsic evidence admissible to establish third-party real estate agent/broker's obligation to prepare reconveyance documentation in conjunction with parties' buy/sell agreement]

(2) [11:24] Writing requirement (statute of frauds): All material terms of a real property purchase agreement must be reduced to a writing that is signed by the party to be charged. [Civ.C. § 1624; Lee v. Lee (2009) 175 CA4th 1553, 1556, 97 CR3d 516, 519—statute of frauds' purpose is to prevent fraud or perjury by requiring reliable evidence of contract's existence and terms; compare Daniels v. Select Portfolio Servicing, Inc. (2016) 246 CA4th 1150, 1176, 201 CR3d 390, 414 (disapproved on other grounds by Sheen v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2022) 12 C5th 905, 943, 290 CR3d 834, 860, fn.12)—complaint alleging oral agreement to modify loan terms not barred by statute of frauds where borrowers included allegations reflecting their "full performance"; see also Chavez v. Indymac Mortg. Services (2013) 219 CA4th 1052, 1058, 162 CR3d 382, 386 (noting equitable estoppel may preclude using statute of frauds as a defense); and see detailed discussion at ¶ 4:263 ff.]

(a) [11:24.1] Electronic messages: Electronic messages of an "ephemeral" nature that are not designed to be retained or to create a permanent record (e.g., text messages and instant message format communications) are insufficient to constitute a contract to convey real property unless confirmed in writing as statutorily described. [See Civ.C. § 1624(d)]

(b) [11:24.2] Distinguish—executed contracts: The statute of frauds does not apply to an executed contract—e.g., a deed that is signed by the grantor and delivered to the grantee is an executed purchase and sale contract. [See Lee v. Lee (2009) 175 CA4th 1553, 1557-1558, 97 CR3d 516, 519-520—quitclaim deed executed and delivered to grantee before deed was altered by third party was an executed contract outside statute of frauds]

b. [11:25] Consent/acceptance: There cannot be a binding contract unless the parties intended by the particular document to create binding obligations and there is a meeting of the minds—i.e., a manifestation of mutual assent to the same thing (ordinarily evidenced by a valid offer and acceptance). [Civ.C. §§ 1550, 1565, 1580; Bustamante v. Intuit, Inc. (2006) 141 CA4th 199, 208, 45 CR3d 692, 698-699; Alexander v. Codemasters Group Ltd. (2002) 104 CA4th 129, 141, 127 CR2d 145, 151-152 (declined to follow on other grounds by Reid v. Google, Inc. (2010) 50 C4th 512, 524, 113 CR3d 327, 337); see Elyaoudayan v. Hoffman (2003) 104 CA4th 1421, 1430, 129 CR2d 41, 47—"California law is clear that there is no contract until there has been a meeting of the minds on all material points" (emphasis in original; internal quotes omitted); see also Rest.2d Contracts § 26]

(1) [11:25a] Negotiation not required; objective test: Actual negotiation of the essential terms is not required. The existence of mutual assent is determined under an objective standard applied to the parties' outward manifestations or expressions (not their unexpressed intentions or understanding). The test is whether a reasonable person would conclude from the parties' conduct that there was a mutual agreement on the essential terms. [Alexander v. Codemasters Group Ltd. (2002) 104 CA4th 129, 141, 150, 127 CR2d 145, 151, 159; Marin Storage & Trucking, Inc. v. Benco Contracting & Engineering, Inc. (2001) 89 CA4th 1042, 1050, 107 CR2d 645, 652; Bustamante v. Intuit, Inc. (2006) 141 CA4th 199, 208, 45 CR3d 692, 699]

(2) [11:25.1] Effect of qualified acceptance or counteroffer: An alleged acceptance forms a binding contract only if its terms exactly, precisely and unequivocally match the essential terms proposed in the offer. [Civ.C. § 1585; Roth v. Malson (1998) 67 CA4th 552, 558-559, 79 CR2d 226, 230; Marcus & Millichap Real Estate Invest. Brokerage Co. v. Hock Invest. Co. (1998) 68 CA4th 83, 89, 80 CR2d 147, 150]

A conditional or qualified acceptance, or one that adds additional terms, is a counteroffer that, if it materially varies from the original offer, terminates the offer. [Roth v. Malson, supra, 67 CA4th at 558-559, 79 CR2d at 230]

Unless the counteroffer is accepted (by the original offeror), there has been no "meeting of the minds" (mutual assent) and no binding contract has been formed. [See Panagotacos v. Bank of America (1998) 60 CA4th 851, 855-856, 70 CR2d 595, 597—buyers' purported acceptance of seller's offer never gave rise to binding contract because it proposed payment occur at place other than as specified by offeror (an essential term of the offer); see also Devereaux v. Harper (1962) 210 CA2d 519, 524-525, 26 CR 837, 841]

(a) [11:25.2] Mistakenly-labeled counteroffers: A purported acceptance written in the section of a form contract labeled "counteroffer" or "changes/amendments" most likely will be treated as a counteroffer—even if the terms match the original offer. Since contract law turns on the parties' objective manifestation of intent (¶ 11:25a), courts generally are reluctant to compare and contrast terms to determine whether there is a material variance when a response to an offer is facially presented as a counteroffer. [Roth v. Malson (1998) 67 CA4th 552, 558-559, 79 CR2d 226, 230; see also ¶ 4:264.3]

(3) [11:25.3] Signature deemed consent: Ordinarily, one who signs a contract is deemed to consent to all of its terms. [Marin Storage & Trucking, Inc. v. Benco Contracting & Engineering, Inc. (2001) 89 CA4th 1042, 1049, 107 CR2d 645, 651; see also ¶ 11:431]

(a) [11:25.3a] Exception—document not presented as contract: The result may be otherwise where the instrument presented for signature does not appear to be a contract and its terms are not called to the other (signing) party's attention. Here, no contract is formed with respect to undisclosed terms. [Marin Storage & Trucking, Inc. v. Benco Contracting & Engineering, Inc. (2001) 89 CA4th 1042, 1049, 107 CR2d 645, 651]

(b) [11:25.3b] Effect of no signatures: When it is clear from a provision in a proposed written contract and any other relevant evidence that the parties contemplated that acceptance of the proposed contract's terms would be signified by signing the contract, no binding contract comes into existence until it is signed. [Basura v. U.S. Home Corp. (2002) 98 CA4th 1205, 1215, 120 CR2d 328, 335]

(And even if the contract is legally formed without signatures, it may be unenforceable under the statute of frauds. See ¶ 4:266 ff.)

[11:25.4] Reserved.

(4) [11:25.5] Voidable consent: Assent to the essential terms of an offer brings about a binding contract so long as it is "free," "mutual" and "communicated" to the other party. [Civ.C. § 1565; Roth v. Malson (1998) 67 CA4th 552, 557, 79 CR2d 226, 228]

By contrast, contractual consent is voidable, and thus ground for rescission (or defense to enforcement of the contract), if induced by duress, menace, fraud, undue influence or mistake of fact or law (see ¶ 11:469 ff.). [Civ.C. §§ 1566-1579, 1689(b)(1); Filet Menu, Inc. v. C.C.L. & G., Inc. (2000) 79 CA4th 852, 861-862, 94 CR2d 438, 444]

(a) [11:25.6] Compare—ratification by subsequent conduct: But the result is otherwise if the contract was thereafter ratified by the party who allegedly gave the voidable consent. A contract voidable solely because lacking due consent may be ratified by subsequent conduct—e.g., by voluntarily accepting and retaining the benefits of the contract. [See Civ.C. §§ 1588, 1589; Saret-Cook v. Gilbert, Kelly, Crowley & Jennett (1999) 74 CA4th 1211, 1225-1226, 88 CR2d 732, 742-743; see also ¶ 11:496 ff.]

However, subsequent conduct consistent with the contract can amount to an effective ratification only if the "ratifying party" fully knew of the right to void the contract due to lack of consent. "It is an inherent element of ratification that the party to be charged with it must have fully known what he was doing." [Fergus v. Songer (2007) 150 CA4th 552, 571, 59 CR3d 273, 289 (internal quotes omitted)]

c. [11:25.10] Lawful and ascertainable purpose: The object of a contract must be lawful when made, and possible and ascertainable by the time it is to be performed. [Civ.C. § 1596; see also Civ.C. § 1667—persons not permitted to enter into contracts contrary to public policy and "good morals"; compare Corrie v. Soloway (2013) 216 CA4th 436, 439-440, 447, 156 CR3d 709, 712, 718 (noting there is "no bright line rule" that parties' subsequent conduct cannot save their intended transaction from illegality)—amended option agreement conditioning property's sale on Subdivision Map Act compliance deemed valid replacement for prior unlawful agreement (¶ 8:46.1)]

A contract is void in its entirety when its single object is unlawful or wholly impossible of performance, but only partially void if it has several distinct lawful and unlawful objects. [Civ.C. §§ 1598, 1599; Kashani v. Tsann Kuen China Enterprises Co., Ltd. (2004) 118 CA4th 531, 541, 13 CR3d 174, 180; Yoo v. Jho (2007) 147 CA4th 1249, 1255, 55 CR3d 243, 247 (contract for purchase of retail business dealing in counterfeit goods)—"no principle of law is better settled than that a party to an illegal contract cannot come into a court of law and ask to have his illegal objects carried out" (internal quotes omitted); Baeza v. Sup.Ct. (Castle & Cooke Calif., Inc.) (2011) 201 CA4th 1214, 1230, 135 CR3d 557, 568-569 (real estate purchase agreement containing severability clause)—unlawful contractual damages limitation provision did not invalidate entire contract because illegal provision was collateral to contract's main purpose and could be severed without obstructing enforcement of lawful terms (¶ 4:534); see also ¶ 11:29.11 (unlawful consideration)]

d. [11:26] Sufficient consideration: A written contract is presumptive evidence that it is supported by consideration. [Civ.C. § 1614]

The lack, inadequacy or failure of consideration is ground for rescission of the contract (Civ.C. § 1689(b)(2), (3) & (4), ¶ 11:477); and is also a defense to an action for specific performance (Civ.C. § 3391(1), ¶ 11:221). [See Mussler v. Nash (1953) 118 CA2d 494, 496, 258 P2d 108, 109] On the other hand, absent fraud, alleged inadequacy of consideration may not itself support an action for damages. [See Rice v. Brown (1953) 120 CA2d 578, 582, 261 P2d 565, 567]

(1) [11:27] Mutual obligations: A contract may be supported by consideration consisting of the exchange of promises (i.e., an expression of commitment to act, or to refrain from acting, in a specified way, or to bring about a specified future result, or to take responsibility that the result has occurred or will occur, communicated in such a way that the promisee may justly expect performance and reasonably rely on it). [Sully-Miller Contracting Co. v. Gledson/Cashman Const., Inc. (2002) 103 CA4th 30, 36, 126 CR2d 400, 403-404; see also Orcilla v. Big Sur, Inc. (2016) 244 CA4th 982, 1006, 198 CR3d 715, 734—mere submission of HAMP application did not provide adequate consideration for lender's unsolicited promise to delay foreclosure (¶ 6:511.20); Garcia v. World Savings, FSB (2010) 183 CA4th 1031, 1039-1040, 107 CR3d 683, 690-691—gratuitous oral promises to postpone foreclosure sales or to allow borrowers to delay monthly mortgage payments generally are unenforceable (borrowers in return promise nothing more than lenders are already due under original loan agreements—i.e., monthly payments plus interest and late fees); compare ¶ 11:29.2 re promissory estoppel]

However, the promises must impose "mutuality of obligation"—i.e., the promises on each side must be binding obligations in order to be consideration for each other. If one of the parties is free to perform or withdraw from the agreement at that party's sole option, the contract is illusory and voidable by either party for lack of consideration. [Mattei v. Hopper (1958) 51 C2d 119, 122, 330 P2d 625, 626; see also Sully-Miller Contracting Co. v. Gledson/Cashman Const., Inc., supra, 103 CA4th at 36, 126 CR2d at 404; Money Store Invest. Corp. v. Southern Calif. Bank (2002) 98 CA4th 722, 728, 120 CR2d 58, 62]

An ostensible "contract" that lacks "mutuality of obligation" is often treated as a mere offer, revocable until accepted, but binding if accepted prior to revocation or other termination. [See Sully-Miller Contracting Co. v. Gledson/Cashman Const., Inc., supra, 103 CA4th at 36, 126 CR2d at 404]

(a) [11:28] No mutuality of obligation where unrestricted right to cancel: For example, a contract giving the buyer the unilateral right to cancel at the buyer's sole unrestricted discretion is lacking in mutuality of obligation and thus unenforceable as not supported by sufficient consideration. [See Kowal v. Day (1971) 20 CA3d 720, 723-724, 98 CR 118, 119-120]

(b) [11:29] Compare—satisfaction clauses: On the other hand, a contract is not illusory simply because one party's covenant is conditioned on that party's "satisfaction" or "approval" of a specified act or event (e.g., buyer's obligation to pay purchase price conditioned on "satisfactory" inspection and approval of physical condition of the property or on satisfaction with title to the property). There is mutuality of obligation because the "satisfaction"/"approval" condition is subject to the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing, thereby obligating the covenantor by an objectively reasonable good faith standard. [See Storek & Storek, Inc. v. Citicorp Real Estate, Inc. (2002) 100 CA4th 44, 61, 122 CR2d 267, 281; Converse v. Fong (1984) 159 CA3d 86, 90, 205 CR 242, 245; Jacobs v. Freeman (1980) 104 CA3d 177, 190, 163 CR 680, 687; see also ¶ 11:80.1]

(c) [11:29.1] Compare—illusory contract rendered enforceable by partial performance: An agreement that is illusory nonetheless may be enforced where the promisor has partially performed under the contract. [Steiner v. Thexton (2010) 48 C4th 411, 423-425, 106 CR3d 252, 263-264—optionee's part performance of bargained-for promise to seek parcel split cured initially illusory nature of promise and thereby constituted sufficient consideration to render option to purchase 10-acre parcel irrevocable (¶ 8:62); Money Store Invest. Corp. v. Southern Calif. Bank (2002) 98 CA4th 722, 728-729, 120 CR2d 58, 62—despite language reserving lender's right to amend contract, contract not illusory because lender provided funds to complete transaction]

(d) [11:29.2] Compare—promissory estoppel: The absence of consideration does not defeat a claim based on promissory estoppel. Indeed, a promisor may be bound when the promisor should reasonably expect a substantial change of position, either by act or forbearance, in reliance on the promisor's promise, if injustice can be avoided only by its enforcement. [See Youngman v. Nevada Irrig. Dist. (1969) 70 C2d 240, 249, 74 CR 398, 404; Garcia v. World Savings, FSB (2010) 183 CA4th 1031, 1040-1041, 1044, 107 CR3d 683, 691-692, 695—promise must be "clear and unambiguous in its terms"; see also Bustamante v. Intuit, Inc. (2006) 141 CA4th 199, 209, 45 CR3d 692, 699—promise must be definite enough for court to determine scope of duty and performance limits must be sufficiently defined to provide rational basis for damages assessment]

• [11:29.3] A lender's oral promise to postpone a residential foreclosure sale in order to allow the owners time to procure funds to cure the default was deemed sufficiently clear and unambiguous to support a claim based on promissory estoppel where the owners, in reliance thereon, procured a high cost, high interest loan by using other property they owned as security. [Garcia v. World Savings, FSB (2010) 183 CA4th 1031, 1041-1045, 107 CR3d 683, 692-696]

• [11:29.4] Borrowers' detrimental reliance allegations were sufficient to support a promissory estoppel cause of action against their loan servicer for failure to honor its alleged oral promise to modify borrowers' home loan. The allegations included borrowers' repeated contacts with the servicer, their preparation of documents at the servicer's request and the fact they did not avail themselves of other means to avoid foreclosure. [Daniels v. Select Portfolio Servicing, Inc. (2016) 246 CA4th 1150, 1179, 201 CR3d 390, 416 (disapproved on other grounds by Sheen v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2022) 12 C5th 905, 943, 290 CR3d 834, 860, fn.12)]

• [11:29.5] Compare: A lender's refusal to honor an alleged oral promise to postpone a foreclosure sale did not result in an unconscionable injury sufficient to support a claim based on promissory estoppel where the sale was conducted only 10 days earlier than promised and evidence showed the borrowers' statutory right to cure would have expired before they planned to contact the lender to request another postponement. Indeed, the borrowers failed to show any change in position based on the lender's oral agreement. Instead, they merely claimed they could have brought the loan current had the lender honored the agreement. [See Jones v. Wachovia Bank (2014) 230 CA4th 935, 944-948, 179 CR3d 21, 28-31—by choosing to do nothing, borrowers failed to establish detrimental reliance]

• [11:29.6] Similarly, a cause of action for promissory estoppel based on a lender's unsolicited promise to delay foreclosure failed because the borrowers neglected to allege reliance on the lender's promise and any injuries sustained as a result of that reliance. For example, "they do not allege that they could and would have cured their default before the sale had they known it was going to proceed." [Orcilla v. Big Sur, Inc. (2016) 244 CA4th 982, 1007, 198 CR3d 715, 735]

[11:29.7 - 11:29.9] Reserved.

(2) [11:29.10] Challenging sufficiency of consideration: As long as a contract is supported by some consideration, the law will not attempt to measure the amount thereof. [6 Angels, Inc. v. Stuart-Wright Mortg., Inc. (2001) 85 CA4th 1279, 1288, 102 CR2d 711, 717]

The burden of showing lack of sufficient consideration is on the party seeking to avoid or invalidate the contract. [Civ.C. § 1615]

(3) [11:29.11] Limitation—illegal consideration: If any part of the consideration is unlawful, the entire contract is void. [Civ.C. § 1608; Yoo v. Jho (2007) 147 CA4th 1249, 1255-1256, 55 CR3d 243, 248—contract for purchase of business substantially involved in sale of counterfeit goods was void (immaterial whether counterfeit goods accounted for 30% or 70% of sales receipts)]

e. [11:30] Certainty of property description: An enforceable purchase and sale agreement must describe the subject property with sufficient precision that it can be identified. [Beverage v. Canton Placer Mining Co. (1955) 43 C2d 769, 774, 278 P2d 694, 698; Alameda Belt Line v. City of Alameda (2003) 113 CA4th 15, 20-21, 5 CR3d 879, 883; see also ¶ 4:270.7, 4:286 ff.]

It is preferable that the written agreement contain a description that is itself definite and certain. But a description meets the test of reasonable certainty, satisfying the statute of frauds, if:

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

- it "furnishes the 'means or key' by which the description may be made certain and identified with its location on the ground" (Alameda Belt Line v. City of Alameda, supra, 113 CA4th at 21, 5 CR3d at 883);
- a competent surveyor can locate the property and establish its boundaries from the description given (Carlson v. Richardson (1968) 267 CA2d 204, 207, 72 CR 769, 771); or
- there is uncontradicted evidence indicating the location of the property (Vezaldenos v. Keller (1967) 254 CA2d 816, 823-824, 62 CR 808, 814).

f. [11:31] Contractual capacity: The parties must have had the legal capacity to enter into the contract (generally, not a minor, of "unsound mind" or deprived of civil rights). The contract is subject to disaffirmance for lack of contractual capacity … unless thereafter ratified at a time when the party has contractual capacity. [Civ.C. §§ 1550, 1556, 1557; see Saret-Cook v. Gilbert, Kelly, Crowley & Jennett (1999) 74 CA4th 1211, 1225, 88 CR2d 732, 742—"Ratification when the actor possesses the capacity to contract has the same effect as valid contract formation"]

(1) [11:32] Minors/persons of unsound mind: Minors (under age 18) lack capacity to contract with regard to real property (Civ.C. § 1556; Fam.C. § 6701(b)) unless emancipated pursuant to Fam.C. § 7000 et seq. [See Fam.C. § 7050(e)(2) & (3); and ¶ 4:131, 4:215]

A contract made by a person of "unsound mind" before the person's incapacity has been judicially determined is subject to rescission; and, after a judicial determination of incapacity (establishment of a conservatorship), such person "can make no [binding] conveyance or other contract … until his or her restoration to capacity." [Civ.C. § 1556; see Civ.C. §§ 38, 39(a) & 40; and ¶ 4:220 ff.]

(a) [11:32.1] Presumption of unsound mind: A person is rebuttably presumed to be of unsound mind if the person is "substantially unable to manage his or her own financial resources or resist fraud or undue influence"; but "substantial inability" cannot be proved solely by "isolated incidents of negligence or improvidence." [Civ.C. § 39(b) (presumption affecting burden of proof)]

(2) [11:33] Spouses/domestic partners with regard to community property: A contract for the sale of community real property must be executed by both spouses or registered domestic partners (see Fam.C. § 297.5). If lacking both parties' joinder, the contract is subject to avoidance by the nonconsenting spouse/domestic partner. [Fam.C. § 1102; Droeger v. Friedman, Sloan & Ross (1991) 54 C3d 26, 33-34, 46-47, 283 CR 584, 587-589, 597; see ¶ 4:201 ff.; and detailed discussion in Hogoboom & King, Cal. Prac. Guide: Family Law (TRG), Ch. 8]

(3) [11:34] Partnerships, corporations and other entities: A business entity necessarily must act through its principals. Nonetheless, if the persons acting on behalf of partnerships, corporations, limited liability companies or other entities lack the authority to bind the entity to a contract, the contract may be voidable by the entity. (See detailed discussion at ¶ 4:203 ff.)

g. [11:35] Failure of conditions precedent: A party's obligations under a contract may be excused if material conditions precedent (which were created for that party's benefit) have not been satisfied or waived by that party. [Civ.C. §§ 1436 & 1439; see further discussion at ¶ 11:80]

h. [11:35.5] Adhesion contracts: A standardized contract imposed (typically by a party of superior bargaining strength) on the subscribing party without an opportunity to negotiate the terms (i.e., on a "take-it-or-leave-it" basis) is generally considered a contract of adhesion. A contract will not be invalidated, however, solely on the ground that it is a contract of adhesion; indeed, adhesion contracts are commonplace. [Graham v. Scissor-Tail, Inc. (1981) 28 C3d 807, 817-818, 171 CR 604, 610; Intershop Communications, AG v. Sup.Ct. (Martinez) (2002) 104 CA4th 191, 201, 127 CR2d 847, 855]

However, a finding of "adhesion" begins another inquiry that may well affect a contract's enforceability—whether the contract or a particular provision thereof should be denied enforcement on the ground that it is unconscionable (¶ 11:36 ff.). [Graham v. Scissor-Tail, Inc., supra, 28 C3d at 819-820, 171 CR at 611-612; see also Lennar Homes of Calif., Inc. v. Stephens (2014) 232 CA4th 673, 688, 181 CR3d 638, 651—unconscionability is comprised of two judicially imposed limitations (i.e., contract may not fall outside weaker party's reasonable expectations or be unduly oppressive)]

i. [11:36] Unconscionability defense: The court may refuse to enforce a contract, or any part thereof, found to be "unconscionable" at the time it was made; or may limit the application of an "unconscionable" clause to avoid an unconscionable result. [Civ.C. § 1670.5; Lennar Homes of Calif., Inc. v. Stephens (2014) 232 CA4th 673, 688, 181 CR3d 638, 651]

(1) [11:36.1] Establishing unconscionability: Though lacking precise legal definition, "unconscionability" as a defense to enforcement generally is limited to adhesion contracts (see ¶ 11:35.5). Both "procedural" and "substantive" unconscionability must be present—i.e., essentially oppression and surprise, plus objectively unreasonable one-sided terms. Ultimately, the issue is to be decided on the basis of evidence of the commercial setting and the purpose and effect of the contract provision. [See generally, Sanchez v. Valencia Holding Co., LLC (2015) 61 C4th 899, 910-911, 190 CR3d 812, 820-821; see also Lennar Homes of Calif., Inc. v. Stephens (2014) 232 CA4th 673, 688-690, 693, 181 CR3d 638, 651-653, 655 (unconscionable indemnity clause in residential buy-sell agreement; ¶ 7:73.8d, 7:73.10c); Bruni v. Didion (2008) 160 CA4th 1272, 1288-1289, 1293-1294, 73 CR3d 395, 409-410, 413-414 (unconscionable arbitration provisions in residential warranty contracts; ¶ 7:73.8b, 7:73.10b)]

Cross-refer: The elements of an unconscionability defense are explored further at ¶ 7:73.5 ff. in connection with transfer restrictions in a commercial lease.

(2) [11:37] Not basis for affirmative relief: Unconscionability is strictly a defense to enforcement of a contract. It does not provide a basis for affirmative relief (e.g., damages or rescission). [Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Abascal) (1989) 211 CA3d 758, 766, 259 CR 789, 794]

Chapter 11. Remedies in Purchase and Sale Transactions

B. Determining Breach

- 1. [11:50] Nature and Effect of Breach of Contract
  - a. Material vs. nonmaterial breach
    - (1) [11:51] Material breach
      - (a) [11:52] Reciprocal performance excused
      - (b) [11:53] Fact question
      - (c) [11:53.1] Partial breach
    - (2) [11:54] Nonmaterial breach
  - b. [11:55] Compare—justified nonperformance
  - c. [11:56] Breach based on time for performance
    - (1) [11:57] Question of fact
    - (2) [11:57.5] Compare—indefinite deadline
    - (3) [11:58] Effect of "time of the essence" provision
  - d. [11:59] Anticipatory breach/repudiation
    - (1) [11:60] Manner of breach—express or implied
      - (a) [11:61] Anticipatory breach by conduct
      - (b) [11:62] Fact question
    - (2) [11:63] Consequences
    - (3) [11:64] Election of remedies
    - (4) [11:65] Nullification
    - (5) [11:66] Effect of unperformed executory covenants
    - (6) [11:67] Cancellation of contract by injured party to finalize repudiation and establish claim for damages
- 2. Breach Distinguished From Failure of Conditions
  - a. [11:70] Nature of conditions
    - (1) [11:71] Conditions precedent, concurrent and/or subsequent
    - (2) [11:75] Occurrence and/or nonoccurrence conditions
    - (3) [11:78] Identifying covenants vs. conditions
    - (4) [11:79] Compare—conditions as covenants
  - b. [11:80] Effect of conditions precedent
    - (1) [11:80.1] "Satisfaction" as condition precedent
    - (2) [11:80.5] Statutory compliance as condition precedent
      - (a) [11:80.6] Delivery of transfer disclosure statement
  - c. [11:81] Mutual/concurrent conditions
    - (1) [11:82] Effect of nonperformance
      - (a) [11:83] Discharge of duties to perform
    - (2) [11:84] Performance or tender of performance triggering other party's breach

d. [11:85] Waiver of conditions
(1) [11:86] Who can waive
(2) [11:87] Express or implied waiver
(3) [11:88] Effect—unqualified obligation to perform
(4) [11:88.1] Limitation—nonwaivable conditions
(a) [11:88.2] Delivery of transfer disclosure statement
(5) [11:88.5] Compare—conditions restored by retracting waiver
e. [11:89] Effect of anticipatory breach/repudiation on satisfaction of conditions
3. [11:90] Statute of Limitations
a. [11:91] Tolling during settlement negotiations
b. [11:92] Contractual provision shortening limitations period
(1) [11:92.1] Application to representations and warranties "survival clause"

1. [11:50] Nature and Effect of Breach of Contract: Nonperformance of a contractual obligation, unless justified (¶ 11:55), breaches the contract. The nonperformance may take the form of a defective performance as well as an absence of performance in whole or in part; and amounts to a breach whether intentional or inadvertent. [Linden Partners v. Wilshire Linden Assocs. (1998) 62 CA4th 508, 531-532, 73 CR2d 708, 722 (seller breached purchase and sale agreement by providing buyer with tenant estoppel certificate that overstated tenant's monthly rent)]

However, a breach does not necessarily render the contract a nullity. The nonbreaching party will have a damages cause of action but, depending on the nature of the breach, will not necessarily be relieved of its contractual obligations. [See Brown v. Grimes (2011) 192 CA4th 265, 278, 120 CR3d 893, 903—determining whether promise constitutes independent covenant so that its breach by one party does not excuse performance by other party is based on parties' intentions as deduced from agreement]

a. Material vs. nonmaterial breach

(1) [11:51] Material breach: A buyer's or seller's failure to perform a material covenant in the purchase contract constitutes a breach of contract. [Louison v. Yohanan (1981) 117 CA3d 258, 266, 172 CR 602, 606; see also Brown v. Grimes (2011) 192 CA4th 265, 278, 120 CR3d 893, 903—material breach of one aspect of contract generally constitutes material breach of whole contract]

The nonbreaching party may either cease performance and assume the contract is avoided or continue its performance and sue for damages (¶ 11:52). Under no circumstances, on the other hand, may the nonbreaching party both stop performance and continue to take advantage of the contract's benefits. [Jay Bharat Developers, Inc. v. Minidis (2008) 167 CA4th 437, 443, 84 CR3d 267, 272]

(a) [11:52] Reciprocal performance excused: One party's material breach of contract gives rise to a damages cause of action and also excuses the performance of the nonbreaching party, giving them a right of rescission. [Gold Mining & Water Co. v. Swinerton (1943) 23 C2d 19, 33, 142 P2d 22, 29; Filet Menu, Inc. v. C.C.L. & G., Inc. (2000) 79 CA4th 852, 861, 94 CR2d 438, 444; compare Brown v. Grimes (2011) 192 CA4th 265, 281, 120 CR3d 893, 906—although attorney A's partial breach of fee-sharing agreement was deemed material and excused further performance by Attorney B, it did not entitle Attorney B to rescind and seek restitution of fees previously paid (failure to perform gives rise to restitution claim only when there has been total breach)]

(b) [11:53] Fact question: Whether a breach is "material" is a question of fact and is determined with reference to the effect of the breach on the nonbreaching party. [Coughlin v. Blair (1953) 41 C2d 587, 599, 262 P2d 305, 312; see also Brown v. Grimes (2011) 192 CA4th 265, 277-278, 120 CR3d 893, 903—although normally a question of fact, if reasonable minds cannot differ on issue of materiality it may be resolved as "matter of law"; Associated Lathing & Plastering Co. v. Louis C. Dunn, Inc. (1955) 135 CA2d 40, 49-51, 286 P2d 825, 830-831—timing of breach also relevant]

(c) [11:53.1] Partial breach: Whether a partial breach is material depends on how important or serious the breach is and the probability of the injured party getting substantial performance. [Brown v. Grimes (2011) 192 CA4th 265, 278, 120 CR3d 893, 903; see also Superior Motels, Inc. v. Rinn Motor Hotels, Inc. (1987) 195 CA3d 1032, 1051, 241 CR

487, 495—purposes to be served, desires to be gratified, excuses for deviation, etc., all must be weighed in determining whether breach is material]

(2) [11:54] Nonmaterial breach: Either party's nonperformance of a nonmaterial term of the contract also breaches the contract. The nonbreaching party has a damages cause of action but, unlike the case of a material breach (¶ 11:51 ff.), is not excused from performing its obligations under the contract and, hence, is not entitled to rescind the contract. [Karz v. Department of Professional & Vocational Standards (1936) 11 CA2d 554, 557, 54 P2d 35, 36]

Thus, a nonbreaching party must continue to perform its contractual obligations unless there has been a material breach or repudiation by the other party. [Sackett v. Spindler (1967) 248 CA2d 220, 229-232, 56 CR 435, 441-442]

b. [11:55] Compare—justified nonperformance: A party's legally excused or justified failure to perform a material covenant of a contract is not a breach of contract and thus does not give the other party any affirmative cause of action. [See Consolidated World Investments, Inc. v. Lido Preferred, Ltd. (1992) 9 CA4th 373, 382, 11 CR2d 524, 528-529—seller's cancellation of contract not an anticipatory breach where buyer defaulted under time of essence provision by failing to request opening of escrow; Fairchild v. Park (2001) 90 CA4th 919, 933, 109 CR2d 442, 452 (J. Ortega concur. and dissent.opn.)]

However, a justified nonperformance of a material covenant will nonetheless excuse the other party's performance under the contract (see ¶ 11:80 re conditions precedent).

c. [11:56] Breach based on time for performance: If a contract does not specify a time for performance, the obligations must be performed within a "reasonable" period of time. A party's unreasonable delay in performance (without lawful excuse) will thus amount to a breach of contract. [Civ.C. § 1657; Henry v. Sharma (1984) 154 CA3d 665, 669, 201 CR 478, 480; Kersch v. Taber (1945) 67 CA2d 499, 506, 154 P2d 934, 938]

(1) [11:57] Question of fact: What constitutes a "reasonable time" for performance is a question of fact and depends on the circumstances of each case. [Consolidated World Investments, Inc. v. Lido Preferred, Ltd. (1992) 9 CA4th 373, 381, 11 CR2d 524, 528]

However, unless the contract clearly specifies that "time is of the essence" (see ¶ 11:58), a minimal delay in performance is not likely to be deemed a material breach. [See, e.g., Katemis v. Westerlind (1953) 120 CA2d 537, 544-545, 261 P2d 553, 559, appl. after new trial (1956) 142 CA2d 799, 299 P2d 383—buyer's 3-day delay in paying balance due under sale contract held a "technical and unintentional" default that did not defeat buyer's right to specific performance]

So too, even a lengthy delay may be deemed "reasonable" under the facts where the contract contains no "time of the essence" provision. [See Henry v. Sharma (1984) 154 CA3d 665, 672-673, 201 CR 478, 483—buyer's 63-day delay not unreasonable where contract called for performance within 30 days of escrow or sooner and buyer's broker was authorized, at broker's discretion, to "extend all time limits, including escrow time limits, 30 days"]

(2) [11:57.5] Compare—indefinite deadline: A "reasonable time" provision is read into a contract only where no time for performance is fixed. A reasonable time will not be implied simply because the deadline stated in the contract is indefinite. [Resolution Trust Corp. v. First American Bank (9th Cir. 1998) 155 F3d 1126, 1128—agreement stating act should be done "as soon as possible" was not silent as to time for performance and thus did not trigger Civ.C. § 1657 implied "reasonable time"]

(3) [11:58] Effect of "time of the essence" provision: Many purchase and sale contracts contain a "time of the essence" clause. Generally, such language is deemed to constitute a material term of the contract, the nonperformance of which breaches the contract and excuses the other party's performance. [Galdjie v. Darwish (2003) 113 CA4th 1331, 1337-1338, 7 CR3d 178, 182—where contract specified time was of essence, buyer's failure to deposit funds for purchase price within specified time deprived buyer of right to specifically enforce seller's obligation to convey; Consolidated World Investments, Inc. v. Lido Preferred, Ltd. (1992) 9 CA4th 373, 381-382, 11 CR2d 524, 528-529—buyer's failure to request opening of escrow as required by contract within specified 60-day escrow period, coupled with time of the essence provision, extinguished seller's obligation to convey]

However, the failure to promptly object to the other party's untimely performance may be deemed to waive a time of the essence clause, precluding rights and remedies for a breach of contract based thereon. [Chan v. Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1952) 39 C2d 253, 258, 246 P2d 632, 635; McCown v. Spencer (1970) 8 CA3d 216, 222-224, 87 CR 213, 217-218—seller estopped to assert buyer's failure to timely perform]

Cross-refer: "Time of the essence" clauses in a purchase and sale agreement are discussed in greater detail at ¶ 4:535 ff.

d. [11:59] Anticipatory breach/repudiation: A party's repudiation of a contract before performance is due ("anticipatory breach") relieves the other party of its contractual obligations. The nonbreaching party need not remain ready and willing to tender performance and may immediately pursue breach of contract remedies (¶ 11:64). [Jeppi v. Brockman Holding Co. (1949) 34 C2d 11, 18, 206 P2d 847, 851; Howard S. Wright Const. Co. v. BBIC Investors, LLC (2006) 136 CA4th 228, 243, 38 CR3d 769, 780; see also Central Valley Gen. Hosp. v. Smith (2008) 162 CA4th 501, 516-517, 75 CR3d 771, 783—injured party may immediately seek damages but is not required to do so (noting right to treat repudiation as anticipatory breach is not lost unless and until repudiation is nullified; ¶ 11:65)]

(1) [11:60] Manner of breach—express or implied: An anticipatory repudiation can occur expressly, where a party unequivocally refuses to perform (i.e., party notifies the other that they do not intend to fulfill their contractual obligations); or impliedly by conduct, where the party "puts it out of [their] power to perform so as to make substantial performance of [their] promise impossible" (e.g., seller transfers property to unrelated third person, making it impossible to transfer title to buyer). [County of Solano v. Vallejo Redevelopment Agency (1999) 75 CA4th 1262, 1276, 90 CR2d 41, 50; see also Central Valley Gen. Hosp. v. Smith (2008) 162 CA4th 501, 514, 75 CR3d 771, 781]

(a) [11:61] Anticipatory breach by conduct: A party may safely assume there has been an anticipatory breach by the other party's conduct (i.e., an implied repudiation) only if it is affirmatively clear from the latter's actions that it will be impossible for such party to perform at the time performance is required. [Crane v. East Side Canal & Irrig. Co. (1935) 6 CA2d 361, 367, 44 P2d 455, 458; Lloyd v. Locke-Paddon Land Co. (1935) 5 CA2d 211, 42 P2d 367, 368-369]

For example, a seller would not necessarily commit an anticipatory breach of contract if, before the closing date, the seller transfers title to an entity that it owns and/or controls; the seller's performance is not "impossible" because the seller can still cause the entity it controls to transfer the property to the buyer.

(b) [11:62] Fact question: Whether a party has effectively repudiated a contract so as to relieve the other of its contractual obligations is a question of fact. [Gold Mining & Water Co. v. Swinerton (1943) 23 C2d 19, 28, 142 P2d 22, 27]

(2) [11:63] Consequences: When repudiation of a contract happens before any breach by nonperformance, the repudiation may (a) give rise to a damages claim for total breach; (b) discharge the other party's duty to render performance; and (c) excuse the nonoccurrence of a condition to a duty of the repudiating party. [Central Valley Gen. Hosp. v. Smith (2008) 162 CA4th 501, 514, 75 CR3d 771, 781]

(3) [11:64] Election of remedies: The injured party may treat the repudiation as an anticipatory breach and immediately seek damages for breach of contract, thereby terminating the parties' contractual relationship. Or, the injured party may treat the repudiation as an "empty threat," wait until the time for performance arrives and then exercise the party's remedies for actual breach (assuming a breach in fact occurs). [Taylor v. Johnston (1975) 15 C3d 130, 137, 123 CR 641, 646; Ferguson v. City of Cathedral City (2011) 197 CA4th 1161, 1168-1169, 128 CR3d 514, 520; Central Valley Gen. Hosp. v. Smith (2008) 162 CA4th 501, 515, 75 CR3d 771, 781-782]

(4) [11:65] Nullification: An anticipatory breach of contract is nullified when (a) the injured party disregards the repudiation; (b) the injured party treats the contract as still in force; and (c) the repudiation is retracted prior to the time for performance. In this event, the injured party is "left with his [or her] remedies, if any, invocable at the time of performance." [Taylor v. Johnston (1975) 15 C3d 130, 137-138, 123 CR 641, 646-647; Ferguson v. City of Cathedral City (2011) 197 CA4th 1161, 1168-1169, 128 CR3d 514, 520; see also Central Valley Gen. Hosp. v. Smith (2008) 162 CA4th 501, 515-517, 75 CR3d 771, 782-783—all 3 conditions must exist before repudiation is nullified]

(5) [11:66] Effect of unperformed executory covenants: Again, one consequence of a repudiation is that it may discharge the other party's duties to render performance (¶ 11:63). Thus, a damages claim for anticipatory breach is not precluded even if executory covenants in the contract remain unperformed. [See Central Valley Gen. Hosp. v. Smith (2008) 162 CA4th 501, 520-521, 75 CR3d 771, 786]

(6) [11:67] Cancellation of contract by injured party to finalize repudiation and establish claim for damages: By canceling a contract, the injured party may make its repudiation final and establish a damages claim. Indeed, canceling the contract (or commencing an action claiming damages for total breach) is sufficient to indicate to the repudiating party that the injured party considers the repudiation final. Moreover, notifying the repudiating party of the cancellation serves to discharge the injured party's duties under the contract. [See Central Valley Gen. Hosp. v. Smith (2008) 162 CA4th 501, 522, 75 CR3d 771, 787-788; Rest.2d Contracts § 256, p. 294-295]

"The real operation of a declaration of intention not to be bound appears to give the promisee the right … to act upon the declaration and treat it as a final assertion by the promisor that he is no longer bound by the contract, and as a wrongful renunciation of the contractual relation into which he has entered. If [the promisee] elects to pursue the latter course, it becomes a breach of contract, excusing performance on his part and giving him an immediate right to recover upon it as such. Upon such election the rights of the parties are to be regarded as then culminating, and the contractual relation ceases to exist …" [Ferguson v. City of Cathedral City (2011) 197 CA4th 1161, 1169, 128 CR3d 514, 520-521 (emphasis and brackets in original; internal quotes omitted)]

2. Breach Distinguished From Failure of Conditions

a. [11:70] Nature of conditions: Unlike the nonperformance of a contractual covenant (which is a promise), the failure of a condition (unless it is also a covenant, ¶ 11:79) is not a breach of contract and does not give either party any breach of contract remedies. [Bennett v. Carlen (1963) 213 CA2d 307, 310-311, 28 CR 647, 649]

Rather, contractual conditions effectively qualify a party's duty to perform its contractual obligations; and a failure of conditions may excuse the duty to perform, thereby terminating the contract. [See Brown v. Grimes (2011) 192 CA4th 265, 278, 120 CR3d 893, 903—regardless whether Attorney A's promise to compensate third party was viewed as condition or dependent covenant, breach of that promise excused Attorney B's further performance of fee-sharing agreement]

(1) [11:71] Conditions precedent, concurrent and/or subsequent: Contractual conditions may be either "precedent," "concurrent," or "subsequent." [Civ.C. § 1435; see JMR Const. Corp. v. Environmental Assessment & Remediation Mgmt., Inc. (2015) 243 CA4th 571, 593-595,198 CR3d 47, 65-66 (discussing contractual conditions generally)]

• [11:72] A covenant subject to a condition precedent means the party for whose benefit the condition was created (covenantor) is obligated to perform only if and when the condition occurs. [Civ.C. § 1436; see also Richman v. Hartley (2014) 224 CA4th 1182, 1192, 169 CR3d 475, 483—party's failure to perform condition precedent generally will preclude breach of contract action; Barroso v. Ocwen Loan Servicing, LLC (2012) 208 CA4th 1001, 1009, 146 CR3d 90, 97—condition precedent is either a party's act that must be performed or an uncertain event that must occur before a contractual right accrues or contractual duty arises; Realmuto v. Gagnard (2003) 110 CA4th 193, 199, 1 CR3d 569, 573 (same); and ¶ 11:80]

• [11:73] A covenant subject to a condition concurrent means neither party is obligated to perform unless and until the other party has performed (or properly tendered performance). Conditions concurrent essentially are conditions precedent that are mutually dependent and are to be performed simultaneously (e.g., buyer's covenant to pay purchase price is dependent upon seller's covenant to transfer title; see ¶ 11:81 ff.). [Civ.C. § 1437; Pittman v. Canham (1992) 2 CA4th 556, 559-560, 3 CR2d 340, 342; see also Rutherford Holdings, LLC v. Plaza Del Rey (2014) 223 CA4th 221, 228, 166 CR3d 864, 870 (¶ 11:82); Rubin v. Fuchs (1969) 1 C3d 50, 53-54, 81 CR 373, 376—absent express language indicating condition precedent, contractual provisions construed as mutually dependent conditions concurrent]

"[T]he only important difference between a concurrent condition and a condition precedent is that a condition precedent must be performed before another duty arises, while a tender of performance is sufficient in the case of a concurrent condition." [Ninety Nine Investments, Ltd. v. Overseas Courier Service (Singapore) Private, Ltd. (2003) 113 CA4th 1118, 1133, 6 CR3d 891, 902]

• [11:74] A condition subsequent gives a party a "way out" of its contractual obligations; i.e., if a specified future event occurs, the party for whose benefit the condition was created is no longer bound to perform under the contract. [Civ.C. § 1438]

(As a practical matter, real estate purchase and sale transactions are rarely made subject to conditions subsequent.)

(2) [11:75] Occurrence and/or nonoccurrence conditions: A contractual condition may be the affirmative happening of an act or event or the nonoccurrence of an act or event.

• [11:76] For example, a provision obligating the buyer to pay the purchase price only in the event the buyer obtains specified financing is conditioned on the occurrence of the specified event. [Pease v. Brown (1960) 186 CA2d 425, 427, 8 CR 917, 918—conditions precedent included buyer's obtaining approximate $11,000 construction loan; see also Sosin

v. Richardson (1962) 210 CA2d 258, 264, 26 CR 610, 613—seller's duty to transfer title conditioned on obtaining title by foreclosure; and Britschgi v. McCall (1953) 41 C2d 138, 144, 257 P2d 977, 979—seller's duty to convey conditioned on ability to eliminate interest of lessee and option holder]

• [11:77] Conversely, a contractual provision obligating the seller to transfer title only in the event its existing mortgagee does not demand a prepayment penalty conditions the seller's promise upon the nonoccurrence of the specified event. [Whiteman v. Leonard Realty Co. (1961) 189 CA2d 373, 376, 11 CR 211, 213]

(3) [11:78] Identifying covenants vs. conditions: Because the failure of a condition does not itself give rise to breach of contract remedies, contracts should be carefully drafted to clearly identify which provisions are "covenants" (contractual promises) and which are simply "conditions." The word "agree" generally signifies that a party has covenanted to perform (or not to perform) the specified action; while the words "subject to," "provided," "on condition that" or "in the event of" generally signify a condition precedent for the benefit of the party referenced in the provision. [Rubin v. Fuchs (1969) 1 C3d 50, 54, 81 CR 373, 376; WYDA Assocs. v. Merner (1996) 42 CA4th 1702, 1713, 50 CR2d 323, 329; see also Barroso v. Ocwen Loan Servicing, LLC (2012) 208 CA4th 1001, 1009, 146 CR3d 90, 97—existence of condition precedent normally depends on parties' intent as determined by words used in their contract]

Thus, contractual provisions generally will be construed as conditions precedent only when the language clearly and unambiguously so indicates; otherwise, the provisions will be construed as covenants. [Rubin v. Fuchs, supra, 1 C3d at 53, 81 CR at 376; Barroso v. Ocwen Loan Servicing, LLC, supra, 208 CA4th at 1010, 146 CR3d at 97; Realmuto v. Gagnard (2003) 110 CA4th 193, 199, 1 CR3d 569, 573]

(4) [11:79] Compare—conditions as covenants: A condition for the benefit of one party may also be a covenant by the other party (i.e., a promise that the specified act or event will occur). Here, failure of the condition both excuses the other party from performing its contractual obligations and gives the other party breach of contract remedies. [See Britschgi v. McCall (1953) 41 C2d 138, 144, 257 P2d 977, 980 (distinguishing condition precedent not stated as covenant)]

As explained at ¶ 11:81 ff., mutually dependent conditions concurrent in purchase and sale contracts are also covenants.

b. [11:80] Effect of conditions precedent: A condition precedent effectively qualifies or suspends the contractual obligations of the party for whose benefit the condition was created. Until the specified act or event occurs and absent an effective waiver (¶ 11:85), the party for whose benefit the condition was created is not obligated to perform its part of the contract and the nonperformance cannot constitute a breach of contract. [Britschgi v. McCall (1953) 41 C2d 138, 144, 257 P2d 977, 980; Pittman v. Canham (1992) 2 CA4th 556, 559, 3 CR2d 340, 342 (distinguishing concurrent conditions)—condition precedent must be performed before another duty arises; see Consolidated World Investments, Inc. v. Lido Preferred, Ltd. (1992) 9 CA4th 373, 380-381, 11 CR2d 524, 527-528—where buyer failed to request opening of escrow as required by contract (condition precedent), seller could not be in breach of contract for failure to complete sale]

Similarly, upon the failure of a condition precedent, the party for whose benefit the condition was created is excused from further performance under the contract. [Britschgi v. McCall, supra; see also Richman v. Hartley (2014) 224 CA4th 1182, 1192, 169 CR3d 475, 483—seller's failure to fulfill statutory condition precedent (delivery of real estate transfer disclosure statement) excused buyer's performance as a "matter of law"]

Thus, ordinarily, a party cannot recover for breach of a contract subject to conditions precedent without alleging and proving performance or waiver of the conditions. [Consolidated World Investments, Inc. v. Lido Preferred, Ltd., supra, 9 CA4th at 380, 11 CR2d at 527; Pittman v. Canham, supra, 2 CA4th at 559, 3 CR2d at 342; Sosin v. Richardson (1962) 210 CA2d 258, 264, 26 CR 610, 613]

(1) [11:80.1] "Satisfaction" as condition precedent: Contracts often condition one party's performance on its "satisfaction" with a certain event or occurrence. Under such circumstances, the promisor may decide that it is "satisfied" under either an objective standard of reasonableness, or a subjective "good faith" standard, depending on the parties' intent as expressed in the language of the contract. In this context, a decision is unreasonable when it is "arbitrary, capricious, or lacking in evidentiary support," while a decision lacking "good faith" implicates "dishonesty, deceit, or unfaithfulness to duty." [Storek & Storek, Inc. v. Citicorp Real Estate, Inc. (2002) 100 CA4th 44, 59, 122 CR2d 267, 279-280]

Absent a specific expression in the contract or one implied from the subject matter regarding how the promisor's satisfaction should be determined, the objective "reasonableness" standard is preferred, particularly when "factors of commercial value or financial concern are involved, as distinct from matters of personal taste." [Storek & Storek, Inc. v. Citicorp Real Estate, Inc., supra, 100 CA4th at 60, 122 CR2d at 280—where loan agreement freely negotiated by sophisticated business entities, jury incorrectly instructed to evaluate lender's decision that conditions precedent to its disbursement of funds were not satisfied for both reasonableness and good faith (lender only required to act reasonably)]

(2) [11:80.5] Statutory compliance as condition precedent: Compliance with a statutory requirement incorporated into a contract may constitute a condition precedent to a party's performance thereunder.

(a) [11:80.6] Delivery of transfer disclosure statement: For instance, the seller's delivery to the buyer of a Civ.C. § 1102 et seq. "real estate transfer disclosure statement" (¶ 4:354 ff.) has been held to be a condition precedent to the buyer's duty to perform under the purchase contract. [Richman v. Hartley (2014) 224 CA4th 1182, 1192, 169 CR3d 475, 483; Realmuto v. Gagnard (2003) 110 CA4th 193, 201, 1 CR3d 569, 575; see also ¶ 11:80 & 11:88.2]

c. [11:81] Mutual/concurrent conditions: A covenant by one party can be a condition to the other party's performance. When each party's covenants are mutually dependent, they are conditions concurrent which must be performed at the same time. [Civ.C. § 1437]

For example, performance of the buyer's covenant to pay the purchase price is a condition to the seller's obligation to convey title and vice-versa. The respective covenants operate as mutually dependent/concurrent conditions. [King v. Stanley (1948) 32 C2d 584, 590, 197 P2d 321, 325 (disapproved on other grounds by Patel v. Liebermensch (2008) 45 C4th 344, 351, 86 CR3d 366, 371, fn.4); Diamond v. Huenergardt (1959) 175 CA2d 214, 220, 346 P2d 37, 41; see Fogarty v. Saathoff (1982) 128 CA3d 780, 785, 180 CR 484, 487]

(1) [11:82] Effect of nonperformance: When covenants are mutually dependent concurrent conditions, neither party is obligated to perform until the other has performed or properly tendered performance; and neither is in breach simply by reason of its nonperformance. [Rubin v. Fuchs (1969) 1 C3d 50, 54, 81 CR 373, 376—"neither party can place the other in default unless he is fully able to perform or make a tender of the promised performance"; Ninety Nine Investments, Ltd. v. Overseas Courier Service (Singapore) Private, Ltd. (2003) 113 CA4th 1118, 1133-1135, 6 CR3d 891, 902-903]

Thus, e.g., a buyer is not in breach for nonpayment of the purchase price where the seller has not yet performed its mutually dependent covenant by tendering the deed (and other necessary documents specified by the contract). Likewise, a seller is not in breach for failure to convey title until the buyer has deposited the purchase price in escrow or unconditionally tendered payment to the seller. [See Landis v. Blomquist (1967) 257 CA2d 533, 539, 64 CR 865, 869-870; Galdjie v. Darwish (2003) 113 CA4th 1331, 1340, 7 CR3d 178, 184-185; see also Rutherford Holdings, LLC v. Plaza Del Rey (2014) 223 CA4th 221, 228, 166 CR3d 864, 870— buyer could not recover its deposit based on seller's contractual failure to tender deed before closing where buyer also failed to perform its duty to tender full payment]

(a) [11:83] Discharge of duties to perform: Where neither party has tendered performance of concurrent conditions during the time specified for performance (or within a reasonable time if no time is specified), both parties are discharged from their contractual obligations and the contract ceases to exist. "Thus where the parties have made time the essence of the contract, at the expiration of time without tender by either party, both parties are discharged … Neither party can hold the other in default and no cause of action to enforce the contract arises." [Pittman v. Canham (1992) 2 CA4th 556, 559-560, 3 CR2d 340, 342—where purchase and sale contract made time of essence, both parties' failure to tender timely performance of concurrent conditions (seller to deliver recordable deed into escrow and buyer to deposit money, note and deed of trust) terminated contract so that seller could not thereafter be in breach for selling to other buyers; compare Galdjie v. Darwish (2003) 113 CA4th 1331, 1342-1343, 7 CR3d 178, 186 (same, but seller ordered to specifically perform because seller waived time of essence condition; see ¶ 11:85 ff.)]

(2) [11:84] Performance or tender of performance triggering other party's breach: Once one party has performed or unconditionally tendered performance of that party's dependent covenants, the other party's duty to perform ripens; at that point, the latter's failure to perform within a reasonable time breaches the contract, entitling the party who performed or tendered performance to recover damages or specific performance. [Civ.C. §§ 1437, 1439, 1498; Diamond v. Huenergardt (1959) 175 CA2d 214, 220, 346 P2d 37, 41-42; Groobman v. Kirk (1958) 159 CA2d 117, 126, 323 P2d 867, 873]

d. [11:85] Waiver of conditions: A failure of conditions does not excuse performance of contractual obligations if the conditions have effectively been waived. [Pease v. Brown (1960) 186 CA2d 425, 429, 8 CR 917, 920]

(1) [11:86] Who can waive: A contractual condition can be waived only by the party for whose benefit the condition was created (hence, the reason why it is prudent for the contract to specifically state for whose benefit conditions precedent are created; see ¶ 4:390). [See Galdjie v. Darwish (2003) 113 CA4th 1331, 1339, 7 CR3d 178, 183—trial court properly found seller waived time of essence provision based on communications between parties]

The failure of a condition that is included in a contract for the benefit of both parties will excuse both parties' performance unless it is waived by both of them. [Britschgi v. McCall (1953) 41 C2d 138, 143-144, 257 P2d 977, 980; Isaacson v. G.D. Robertson & Co. (1948) 85 CA2d 71, 77, 192 P2d 486, 489]

(2) [11:87] Express or implied waiver: A waiver of conditions may be express (party for whose benefit the condition was created voluntarily elects to eliminate the condition; see, e.g., Doryon v. Salant (1977) 75 CA3d 706, 712-713, 142 CR 378, 381-382—buyer's waiver of specified financing condition); or it may be implied by a party's actions (Parsons v. Bristol Develop. Co. (1965) 62 C2d 861, 868-869, 44 CR 767, 772).

An implied waiver occurs by operation of law where the party for whose benefit the condition was created prevents the occurrence of the condition or makes its occurrence impossible. [See Orton v. Embassy Realty Assocs. (1949) 91 CA2d 434, 438-439, 205 P2d 427, 429-430—party who prevents fulfillment of condition of own obligation commits a breach and cannot rely on such condition to defeat liability]

An implied waiver can also occur by conduct inconsistent with insistence on satisfaction of the condition— e.g., where the buyer for whose benefit conditions were created brings an action against the seller for specific performance. [See Pease v. Brown (1960) 186 CA2d 425, 429, 8 CR 917, 920]

(3) [11:88] Effect—unqualified obligation to perform: Upon a waiver of all conditions, the party (or parties) for whose benefit they were created must perform under the contract (i.e., the contractual obligation becomes unqualified) and otherwise is in breach of contract. [Galdjie v. Darwish (2003) 113 CA4th 1331, 1339, 7 CR3d 178, 183—party's waiver of condition makes party's contractual duty "independent, binding himself to perform unconditionally" (emphasis and internal quotes omitted); Wesley N. Taylor Co. v. Russell (1961) 194 CA2d 816, 828-829, 15 CR 357, 365]

(4) [11:88.1] Limitation—*nonwaivable conditions: Certain conditions precedent rooted in a statutory obligation may be deemed nonwaivable as a matter of statute.

(a) [11:88.2] Delivery of transfer disclosure statement: Notably, the Civil Code expressly makes the seller's delivery of a real estate transfer disclosure statement (a statutory condition precedent to the buyer's contractual performance, ¶ 11:80.6) nonwaivable even in an "as is" sale (Civ.C. §§ 1102(c) (waiver is "void as against public policy"), 1102.1(a)). "[T]he Legislature plainly contemplated that buyers would never be irrevocably committed to performing the contract without having received the required disclosures. This legislative purpose would be defeated if a seller could enforce a contract without having complied with the disclosure requirements." [Realmuto v. Gagnard (2003) 110 CA4th 193, 201-202, 1 CR3d 569, 575; see also Richman v. Hartley (2014) 224 CA4th 1182, 1192, 169 CR3d 475, 483 (¶ 11:80.6)]

(5) [11:88.5] Compare—conditions restored by retracting waiver: Under general principles of contract law, a waiver of conditions may be retracted and the conditions restored at any time. [Storek & Storek, Inc. v. Citicorp Real Estate, Inc. (2002) 100 CA4th 44, 58, 122 CR2d 267, 279, fn. 11—lender's exercise of option under loan agreement to waive conditions precedent to disbursing funds to borrower on several occasions did not constitute waiver of conditions precedent to subsequent disbursements]

e. [11:89] Effect of anticipatory breach/repudiation on satisfaction of conditions: As discussed, one party's anticipatory breach (unequivocal repudiation) of the contract excuses the other party's duty to perform (or to tender performance of) its contractual obligations and entitles the latter (nonrepudiating party) to immediately pursue breach of contract remedies (¶ 11:59 ff.). [Civ.C. §§ 1440, 1511; Beverage v. Canton Placer Mining Co. (1955) 43 C2d 769, 777, 278 P2d 694, 700; Harris v. Rudin, Richman & Appel (2002) 95 CA4th 1332, 1344, 116 CR2d 552, 561—parties were negotiating language of releases when defendants took settlement agreement "off the table," thereby excusing plaintiff's further performance]

3. [11:90] Statute of Limitations: The statute of limitations for an action on a written contract is four years, commencing with accrual of the cause of action. [CCP § 337; Union Oil Co. of Calif. v. Greka Energy Corp. (2008) 165 CA4th 129, 138, 80 CR3d 738, 744]

The action generally accrues at the time of the breach—i.e., when performance is due under the terms of the contract but is not forthcoming (but see ¶ 11:59 ff. re anticipatory breach). [See generally, Romano v. Rockwell Int'l, Inc. (1996) 14 C4th 479, 488, 59 CR2d 20, 25]

a. [11:91] Tolling during settlement negotiations: The statute may be tolled pending settlement negotiations between the parties. [Union Oil Co. of Calif. v. Greka Energy Corp., supra—statute tolled when oil company filed its claim and defendant requested settlement negotiations (noting defendants who induce plaintiffs not to sue pending settlement discussions may not assert statute of limitations defense if their conduct caused untimely filing of action); see also Shaffer v. Debbas (1993) 17 CA4th 33, 43, 21 CR2d 110, 115—unreasonable to expect plaintiff to jeopardize potential settlement by filing suit when potential defendant promises to remedy portion of damages suffered by plaintiff]

b. [11:92] Contractual provision shortening limitations period: The parties to a contract may stipulate therein to a limitations period for bringing suit on the contract (or certain provisions therein) shorter than the otherwise applicable statute of limitations. Such stipulations are enforceable under California law so long as "not so unreasonable as to show imposition or undue advantage in some way." But because such stipulations are in derogation of the statutory limitation, they are also disfavored and thus will be construed strictly against the party invoking them. [Western Filter Corp. v. Argan, Inc. (9th Cir. 2008) 540 F3d 947, 952 (applying Calif. law) (internal quotes omitted)]

(1) [11:92.1] Application to representations and warranties "survival clause": Absent a "survival clause" (below), representations and warranties in a purchase and sale agreement merge into the deed and are thereby extinguished by the closing; after the conveyance, they have no independent existence. [Linden Partners v. Wilshire Linden Assocs. (1998) 62 CA4th 508, 524, 73 CR2d 708, 717; Western Filter Corp. v. Argan, Inc. (9th Cir. 2008) 540 F3d 947, 952 (applying Calif. Law); but see also Ram's Gate Winery, LLC v. Roche (2015) 235 CA4th 1071, 1079-1081, 185 CR3d 935, 940-942 (limiting merger doctrine's applicability to cases where contractual terms are inconsistent with deed or where parties clearly intend all contractual obligations to be subsumed in recorded deed's recitals); and ¶ 4:16, 4:434]

The parties may specify in their contract that certain representations and warranties will survive the closing for a specified period of time. But language stating only that the representations and warranties "shall survive" for a specified duration operates solely to extend their life past the closing date—i.e. it serves simply to specify when a breach of the representations and warranties may occur. Such general survival language does not also unambiguously disclose an intent to create a shorter statute of limitations for an action alleging a postclosing breach of those representations and warranties—i.e., it does not itself specify when an action must be filed. [Western Filter Corp. v. Argan, Inc., supra, 540 F3d at 953-954—one-year "survival" provision did not itself shorten applicable 4-year statute of limitations for suit charging breach of representations/warranties that survived closing]

3. [11:164] Other Seller Remedies

[11:100] A seller has two basic alternative remedies for a buyer's breach of a real property purchase agreement: a damages action for breach of contract, or an action for specific performance. As a practical matter however, sellers rarely seek specific performance, because even in the event they were to prevail (which is generally unlikely), the remedy granted probably would not be satisfactory (see ¶ 11:150 ff.).

1. Seller's Breach of Contract Damages

a. [11:101] Amount of damages—in general: A seller's recoverable damages for the buyer's breach of contract are determined either (a) by the terms of the contract (a liquidated damages clause); or (b) pursuant to Civ.C. § 3307.

Pursuant to Civ.C. § 3307, for a buyer's breach of a real property purchase agreement, the seller is entitled to recover:

- the excess (if any) of the amount that would have been due to the seller under the contract over the value of the property to the seller (this is the seller's "general damages," ¶ 11:107 ff.); plus

- consequential damages according to proof (¶ 11:116 ff.); and

- interest (¶ 11:134). [Civ.C. § 3307; Kuish v. Smith (2010) 181 CA4th 1419, 1425-1426, 105 CR3d 475, 480—seller's main measure of damages is difference between contract price and property's value at time of breach]

(1) [11:102] Practical considerations for seller: The "value of the property" to the seller is calculated as of the date of the breach (usually the closing date specified in the contract; see ¶ 11:109 ff.). Therefore, other than consequential damages and interest, a seller can recover damages under Civ.C. § 3307 only in two circumstances: (a) when the purchase price was higher than the value of the property at the time the contract was entered into (i.e., buyer agreed to pay an "above-market" price); or (b) when the purchase price equaled the property's fair market value at the time the contract was entered into, but the property has depreciated in value as of the time of the buyer's breach. [Allen v. Enomoto (1964) 228 CA2d 798, 803-804, 39 CR 815, 819]

(a) [11:103] Stable or appreciating values foreclose general damages recovery: Thus, in a stable or appreciating real estate market, a seller is unlikely to have suffered damages by reason of the buyer's breach and will not have a general damages remedy. [Royer v. Carter (1951) 37 C2d 544, 550, 233 P2d 539, 543; see Allen v. Smith (2002) 94 CA4th 1270, 1278, 114 CR2d 898, 903; Kuish v. Smith (2010) 181 CA4th 1419, 1425-1429, 105 CR3d 475, 480-483—in rising market, seller's recovery against defaulting buyer is limited to consequential damages and interest (seller's retention of contractually designated "nonrefundable" deposit constituted invalid forfeiture)]

➪ [11:103.1] PRACTICE POINTER: It has been suggested that, in a rising market, a seller's best course of action against a breaching buyer may be simply to remarket the property and proceed with an advantageous resale. The seller's consequential damages will often be minimal, and the seller's out-of-pocket expenses typically would have been incurred in the second transaction as well. [See Kuish v. Smith (2010) 181 CA4th 1419, 1426, 105 CR3d 475, 480, fn. 3]

(b) [11:104] Ineffective general damages despite declining values: Moreover, because general damages under Civ.C. § 3307 are measured by the value of the property as of the date of the buyer's breach (¶ 11:109), a seller's general damages remedy may be unsatisfactory even in a declining real estate market: i.e., if the seller is unable to consummate a quick resale, the property's value will continue to decline after the intended closing date, yet the seller will be limited under Civ.C. § 3307 to damages measured by the value of the property as of the intended closing date.

(2) [11:105] Compare—liquidated damages recovery: If the purchase agreement contains a valid liquidated damages provision, the seller's damages remedy is fixed solely by the contract; and Civ.C. § 3307 is irrelevant. (This may be a savior for sellers in a declining market where, as indicated at ¶ 11:104, Civ.C. § 3307 general damages may leave the seller with a shortfall. Conversely, in an appreciating market, a liquidated damages provision can be a boon for sellers, who may be able to resell for a premium over and above the liquidated sum.)

Cross-refer: Liquidated damages are discussed in detail at ¶ 4:310 ff.

(3) [11:106] Compare—specific performance: Civ.C. § 3307 does not preempt a seller's right to seek specific performance. Likewise, the seller may have a specific performance remedy notwithstanding a liquidated damages provision (Civ.C. § 1680) … unless the contract states the liquidated damages are the seller's sole remedy.

However, while the complaint may seek alternate remedies for specific performance or breach of contract damages, the seller cannot be awarded both remedies because that would amount to a "double recovery."

b. [11:107] General damages: The seller can recover "general damages" to the extent the contract price (amount buyer was supposed to pay pursuant to the contract) exceeds the "value of the property." [Civ.C. § 3307]

(1) [11:108] Value of property: The "value of the property" for this purpose is usually defined as the fair market value as of the date of the buyer's breach. [Askari v. R & R Land Co. (1986) 179 CA3d 1101, 1106, 225 CR 285, 289; Major-Blakeney Corp. v. Jenkins (1953) 121 CA2d 325, 333, 263 P2d 655, 660]

"Fair market value" is the best price obtainable for the property, in cash, from a ready, willing and able buyer. [Major-Blakeney Corp. v. Jenkins, supra; Glendale Fed. Sav. & Loan Ass'n v. Marina View Heights Develop. Co., Inc. (1977) 66 CA3d 101, 141-142, 135 CR 802, 826]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(a) [11:109] Value fixed as of date of breach: In a seller's damages action, the property's value is fixed as of the date of the buyer's breach—usually the intended closing date. [Wade v. Lake County Title Co. (1970) 6 CA3d 824, 829, 86 CR 182, 185] Thus, a decline in the property's value after the buyer's breach is not recoverable. [Royer v. Carter (1951) 37 C2d 544, 548, 233 P2d 539, 542; Bouchard v. Orange (1960) 177 CA2d 521, 525-526, 2 CR 388, 391]

Moreover, despite a decline in value as of the date of the buyer's breach, a subsequent appreciation in value may preclude the seller's general damages recovery on the theory the seller has no longer suffered any “loss of bargain” and would otherwise realize a “double recovery.” [Spurgeon v. Drumheller (1985) 174 CA3d 659, 664, 220 CR 195, 197; see Allen v. Smith (2002) 94 CA4th 1270, 1278, 114 CR2d 898, 903; Kuish v. Smith (2010) 181 CA4th 1419, 1426, 105 CR3d 475, 480]

1) [11:110] Exception—buyer's conduct impeding resale: The rule fixing the valuation date as of the date of the buyer's breach is premised on the assumption the seller is free to resell the property on that date. If the buyer interferes with the seller's ability to resell (e.g., by withholding possession), the valuation date may be extended to the date the buyer's actions no longer impede a resale. [Honey v. Henry's Franchise Leasing Corp. of America (1966) 64 C2d 801, 805, 52 CR 18, 21; Askari v. R & R Land Co. (1986) 179 CA3d 1101, 1111, 225 CR 285, 292]

For example, if the buyer files an action for specific performance and records a lis pendens against the property (¶ 11:600 ff.), the valuation date should be extended until either (i) the date the action for specific performance is abandoned (and the lis pendens is removed); or (ii) the date a judgment is rendered in favor of the seller, thus extinguishing the cloud on the seller's title. [See Askari v. R & R Land Co., supra, 179 CA3d at 1111, 225 CR at 292 (dictum)—“If the property is lower in value when the lis pendens is lifted, the buyer may have to pay more damages”]

(b) [11:111] Evidence probative of value: In determining the property's value, courts may look to a variety of factors, including: the resale price; the time the property was on the market; expert testimony; the owner's testimony; the rental value of the property; any diminution in value resulting from a resale; any stigma that attaches to the property as a result of the buyer's breach of contract; market activity in the vicinity of the property; the condition of title; and the value of any subsequent improvements made to the property. [See, e.g., Smith v. Mady (1983) 146 CA3d 129, 133, 194 CR 42, 45; Fleischer v. Cosgrove (1956) 145 CA2d 14, 17-18, 301 P2d 911, 913-914; Newhart v. Pierce (1967) 254 CA2d 783, 788-792, 62 CR 553, 558-560; Bouchard v. Orange (1960) 177 CA2d 521, 525-526, 2 CR 388, 391-392; Mathews v. MacArthur (1953) 119 CA2d 196, 197-198, 258 P2d 1068, 1068-1069; and Major-Blakeney Corp. v. Jenkins (1953) 121 CA2d 325, 334, 263 P2d 655, 660-661]

➪ [11:112] PRACTICE POINTER—PROMPT APPRAISAL*: For evidentiary purposes, it behooves the aggrieved seller to obtain an appraisal of the property as soon as possible after the buyer's breach (whether by a qualified appraiser or by a local, knowledgeable real estate broker).

(2) [11:113] Determining “excess” of contract price over value: The theory of general damages is to put the seller in the position it would have been in had the buyer not breached the purchase agreement—i.e., to give the seller the “benefit of its bargain.” [Civ.C. § 3307] That is why the seller's general damages are limited to the excess of the contract price over the property's value on the date of the breach. (If the property has appreciated in value or its value has remained consistent with the contract price, the seller has not suffered general damages; ¶ 11:103.) [See Civ.C. § 3358—breach of contract damages cannot exceed what injured party would have received if contract had been fully performed; and generally, Lewis Jorge Const. Management, Inc. v. Pomona Unified School Dist. (2004) 34 C4th 960, 967-968, 22 CR3d 340, 344]

(a) [11:114] Cash basis conversion of contract price required (discounting): To properly calculate the extent to which the contract price exceeds the property's value, the contract price must be converted into an all-cash value. [Abrams v. Motter (1970) 3 CA3d 828, 841, 83 CR 855, 864; Spurgeon v. Drumheller (1985) 174 CA3d 659, 664, 220 CR 195, 197—seller's loss of bargain damages measured by comparing cash value of contract to cash fair market value at time of breach]

Therefore, the contract price will be discounted by risks incurred by the seller in connection with the specific transaction. Notably, such discounting will be required where the contract calls for seller financing, “including but not limited to the value of the real property securing the note, the amount of prior encumbrances, the terms of the note, risk of economic changes during the term of the note, risk of expense of foreclosure and risk of change in interest rates.” [Abrams v. Motter, supra, 3 CA3d at 841, 83 CR at 864 (internal cites omitted)]

This discounting of the contract price may reduce (or possibly even eliminate) the seller's right to a general damages award … because the seller is only entitled to the excess of the contract price over the value of the property (Civ.C. § 3307).

(3) [11:115] Seller's tender of performance: The buyer's obligation to pay the purchase price and the seller's obligation to convey title are mutually dependent concurrent conditions (¶ 11:81). Thus, until the closing date arrives, a seller generally should remain in a position to tender the deed (or other conveyancing instrument) and otherwise be ready, willing and able to consummate the transaction. [See Baird v. Barton (1958) 163 CA2d 502, 505-506, 329 P2d 492, 495]

However, if the buyer anticipatorily repudiates the contract (e.g., by giving notice of rescission), the seller's tender of performance is excused. A breach of contract occurs with the anticipatory repudiation, giving the seller an immediate breach of contract damages remedy. [McKinley v. Lagae (1962) 207 CA2d 284, 293, 24 CR 454, 459; see ¶ 11:89]

c. [11:116] Consequential damages: Civ.C. § 3307 also permits a seller to recover "consequential damages according to proof" (¶ 11:101).

"Consequential damages" are those damages suffered by a seller that result from the "natural consequence" of the buyer's breach and that are reasonable, foreseeable and necessary to make the seller "whole." [Royer v. Carter (1951) 37 C2d 544, 550, 233 P2d 539, 543; see also Lewis Jorge Const. Mgmt., Inc. v. Pomona Unified School Dist. (2004) 34 C4th 960, 968, 22 CR3d 340, 345—consequential damages are losses not arising "directly and inevitably" from similar breach of similar agreement, but "secondary and derivative" losses arising from circumstances particular to subject contract or parties]

Such damages are recoverable if the circumstances from which they arise were actually communicated to or known by the breaching party (a subjective test), or were matters of which the breaching party should have been aware at the time of contracting (an objective test). [Lewis Jorge Const. Mgmt., Inc. v. Pomona Unified School Dist., supra, 34 C4th at 968-970, 22 CR3d at 345-346—such damages are not presumed; see also Ash v. North American Title Co. (2014) 223 CA4th 1258, 1270, 168 CR3d 499, 507—consequential (or special) damages are limited to losses either actually foreseen or "reasonably foreseeable" when contract was formed; Greenwich S.F., LLC v. Wong (2010) 190 CA4th 739, 751, 754, 118 CR3d 531, 540, 543-544—consequential (or special) damages are "foreseeable" losses "proximately caused" by breach of contract]

(1) [11:117] Recoverable despite no general damages: In a stable or appreciating market, the seller will not be able to recover general damages (because the property value on the date of the buyer's breach will equal or exceed the contract price; ¶ 11:103). Nonetheless, the seller may still be entitled to consequential damages. [Royer v. Carter (1951) 37 C2d 544, 550, 233 P2d 539, 543; Wade v. Lake County Title Co. (1970) 6 CA3d 824, 830, 86 CR 182, 186]

(a) [11:118] Buyer's offset rights in event of appreciated value: However, because the theory of consequential damages is simply to make the seller "whole," any appreciation in value after the buyer's breach will be offset against the seller's consequential damages to prevent "unjust enrichment" (otherwise, the seller would be reaping a windfall). [Askari v. R & R Land Co. (1986) 179 CA3d 1101, 1112, 225 CR 285, 292-293; Smith v. Mady (1983) 146 CA3d 129, 133, 194 CR 42, 45]

(2) [11:119] Limitation—seller's duty to mitigate damages: The seller is not entitled to recover reasonably avoidable consequential damages. Thus, a consequential damages recovery is dependent on the seller's duty to mitigate damages by using reasonable diligence to resell the property. [Nielsen v. Farrington (1990) 223 CA3d 1582, 1589-1590, 273 CR 312, 317; Askari v. R & R Land Co. (1986) 179 CA3d 1101, 1107, 225 CR 285, 289; Smith v. Mady (1983) 146 CA3d 129, 132, 194 CR 42, 44]

(3) Items of consequential damages

(a) [11:120] Expenses incurred in selling to new buyer: The aggrieved seller is entitled to recover as consequential damages expenses incurred in holding and reselling the property after the buyer's breach. [Nielsen v. Farrington (1990) 223 CA3d 1582, 1586-1588, 273 CR 312, 314-315] But such damages are limited to the expenses that exceed the costs the seller otherwise would have incurred under the original contract. [Barton v. White Oak Realty, Inc. (1969) 271 CA2d 579, 585, 76 CR 587, 591]

1) [11:121] Hypothetical sale costs: If the property is not resold as of the time of trial, despite the seller's reasonable efforts to effect a new sale (¶ 11:119), such consequential damages may be calculated on the basis of a hypothetical resale. [Barton v. White Oak Realty, Inc. (1969) 271 CA2d 579, 585, 76 CR 587, 591]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

For example, the seller will be entitled to recover escrow fees, title insurance charges and brokers' commissions based on a hypothetical resale at market value at the time of the buyer's breach, less those expenses the seller would have incurred in connection with the original purchase agreement. [Abrams v. Motter (1970) 3 CA3d 828, 848, 83 CR 855, 869]

In most cases, courts will conclude that the wasted expenses of the first sale are equivalent to the hypothetical expenses of a second sale. [See Royer v. Carter (1951) 37 C2d 544, 551, 233 P2d 539, 543 (but expenses not equal); and Barton v. White Oak Realty, Inc., supra, 271 CA2d at 585, 76 CR at 591, fn. 7]

2) [11:122] Broker commissions: Following a resale, the seller is entitled to recover from the buyer the amount of any broker's commission the seller paid or owes in connection with the original contract, whether or not the seller pays a commission on the resale. [Caplan v. Schroeder (1961) 56 C2d 515, 521, 15 CR 145, 148-149]

(b) [11:123] Miscellaneous costs: So long as a "reasonably foreseeable"/"natural consequence" of the buyer's breach, aggrieved sellers may also recover various other types of consequential expenses, including:

• [11:124] Lost rent suffered as a result of the seller's eviction of a tenant in reliance upon closing of the purchase transaction. [McKinley v. Lagae (1962) 207 CA2d 284, 395, 24 CR 454, 460]

• [11:125] Other lost income that would have been generated from the property but for the buyer's breach. [Yocum v. Taylor (1920) 50 CA 294, 195 P 62 (profit seller would have realized had crop been planted during growing season)]

• [11:126] Operating expenses, including insurance premiums, mortgage payments and real property taxes that would not have been incurred had the transaction closed as intended. [Allen v. Enomoto (1964) 228 CA2d 798, 803-804, 39 CR 815, 819]

• [11:127] Expenses of commuting between a new house and the property that was to have been sold. [Jensen v. Dalton (1970) 9 CA3d 654, 658, 88 CR 426, 428—recoverable to extent reasonably foreseeable at time of contracting]

• [11:128] Attorney fees incurred as a result of the buyer's recordation of a lis pendens (CCP § 405.38). [Yackey v. Pacifica Develop. Co. (1979) 99 CA3d 776, 786, 160 CR 430, 435]

d. [11:134] Interest: "Interest" is expressly recoverable by the seller in a Civ.C. § 3307 damages action (Civ.C. § 3307, ¶ 11:101). This includes prejudgment interest on the seller's general damages measured by the difference between the contract price and the fair market value of the property. [Rifkin v. Achermann (1996) 43 CA4th 391, 396-397, 50 CR2d 661, 664—pre-1983 cases denying prejudgment interest on benefit of bargain damages impliedly overruled by 1983 amendment to Civ.C. § 3307]

The purpose of a prejudgment interest award is to compensate plaintiff for the loss of use of plaintiff's property. [Bullis v. Security Pac. Nat'l Bank (1978) 21 C3d 801, 815, 148 CR 22, 30; see also Great Western Drywall, Inc. v. Roel Const. Co., Inc. (2008) 166 CA4th 761, 767-768, 83 CR3d 235, 238-239—prejudgment interest on liquidated damages is element of compensatory damages; North Oakland Med. Clinic v. Rogers (1998) 65 CA4th 824, 828, 76 CR2d 743, 745; and ¶ 11:395]

(1) [11:134.1] Subject to Civ.C. § 3287—trial court discretion: However, the generally applicable provisions of Civ.C. § 3287 regarding prejudgment interest apply. Thus, the seller's recovery of prejudgment interest on Civ.C. § 3307 loss-of-bargain damages (and/or consequential damages) will ordinarily be subject to the trial court's discretion (see Civ.C. § 3287(b)—court may, in its discretion, award prejudgment interest on damages based upon contract cause of action, where claim was unliquidated). [Rifkin v. Achermann (1996) 43 CA4th 391, 398, 50 CR2d 661, 665; see also North Oakland Med. Clinic v. Rogers (1998) 65 CA4th 824, 828-829, 76 CR2d 743, 746]

(a) [11:134.2] Compare—where damages "certain": Where plaintiff's damages are "certain" or "capable of being made certain by calculation," the absolute (nondiscretionary) entitlement to prejudgment interest applies; i.e., prejudgment interest must be awarded upon timely request. [Civ.C. § 3287(a); see Thompson v. Asimos (2016) 6 CA5th 970, 992-993, 212 CR3d 158, 178-180—where plaintiff's damages were "readily ascertainable" but not in amount awarded, case remanded to recalculate damages, including prejudgment interest ordered thereon; Watson Bowman Acme Corp. v. RGW Const., Inc. (2016) 2 CA5th 279, 284, 206 CR3d 281, 286—price adjustment owed supplier for change in order deemed "sufficiently certain" for § 3287(a) prejudgment interest award; Great Western Drywall, Inc. v. Roel Const. Co., Inc. (2008) 166 CA4th 761, 767, 83 CR3d 235, 238—prejudgment interest allowable under § 3287(a) only where amount is fixed by contract or reference to "well-established market values"; compare Roodenburg v. Pavestone

Co., L.P. (2009) 171 CA4th 185, 190-191, 89 CR3d 558, 562-563—prejudgment interest recoverable despite uncertainty as to damages amount when contract expressly provides for such award]

However, the "certainty" standard for § 3287(a) "mandatory" prejudgment interest is not satisfied when damages must be determined by the trier of fact based on conflicting evidence of the property value. That will almost always be the case in a seller's suit seeking damages pursuant to Civ.C. § 3307. [County of Los Angeles v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (2003) 112 CA4th 1108, 1123, 5 CR3d 575, 587; Great Western Drywall, Inc. v. Roel Const. Co., Inc., supra—interest not allowable where damages amount depends upon judicial determination based on conflicting evidence; see also Rifkin v. Achermann (1996) 43 CA4th 391, 398, 50 CR2d 661, 665—"The discretionary authority conferred by [Civ.C. § 3287(b)] will ordinarily apply to loss-of-bargain damages"]

(2) [11:134.3] Accrual rate: Unless the contract provides for another legal rate of interest, interest on contract damages accrues at the rate of 10% per annum (applicable to contracts entered into after 1/1/86; see Civ.C. § 3289(b)).

(a) [11:134.3a] Exception—note secured by deed of trust: By its terms, Civ.C. § 3289(b) does not apply to a note secured by a deed of trust on real property. In such a case, absent a contractual provision setting the rate, the prejudgment interest rate is 7%. [Cal.Const. Art. XV, § 1; Soleimany v. Narimanzadeh (2022) 78 CA5th 915, 924, 294 CR3d 191, 197 (deciding case of apparent first impression)]

(3) [11:134.4] Accrual date: When awarded under the discretionary authority of Civ.C. § 3287(b), the interest commences to run from whatever date before entry of the judgment that the court, in its discretion, fixes. But the earliest date from which § 3287(b) interest may accrue is the date the action was filed (not the date of the breach). [Civ.C. § 3287(b); Rifkin v. Achermann (1996) 43 CA4th 391, 398, 50 CR2d 661, 665; North Oakland Med. Clinic v. Rogers (1998) 65 CA4th 824, 829, 76 CR2d 743, 746]

(a) [11:134.5] Compare—accrual date for § 3287(a) interest: Prejudgment interest awarded under Civ.C. § 3287(a) (¶ 11:134.2) commences to run from the first day there exists both a breach and a liquidated claim. [See Civ.C. § 3287(a); North Oakland Med. Clinic v. Rogers (1998) 65 CA4th 824, 828, 76 CR2d 743, 746; see also Thompson v. Asimos (2016) 6 CA5th 970, 992, 212 CR3d 158, 179, fn. 7 (noting one of main difficulties in applying § 3287(a) is determining when sum owed on contract becomes liquidated, i.e., readily ascertainable)—§ 3287(a) interest awardable from date parties settled with third party litigant; Collins v. City of Los Angeles (2012) 205 CA4th 140, 150, 139 CR3d 880, 888—§ 3287(a) interest awardable from date right to recover damages arose; and ¶ 11:400 (tort actions involving damages "certain, or capable of being made certain by calculation")]

(4) [11:134.10] Procedure for requesting prejudgment interest: An entitlement to prejudgment interest does not make the award automatic; plaintiff must make a timely request for interest in the trial court. [North Oakland Med. Clinic v. Rogers (1998) 65 CA4th 824, 829, 76 CR2d 743, 746; see County of Los Angeles v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (2003) 112 CA4th 1108, 1123, 5 CR3d 575, 587]

A general prayer in the complaint (for "such other and further relief as may be proper") is sufficient to support an award of prejudgment interest. [North Oakland Med. Clinic v. Rogers, supra, 65 CA4th at 829, 76 CR2d at 746; see Jones v. Wagner (2001) 90 CA4th 466, 481, 108 CR2d 669, 680—prayer in cross-complaint for "such other relief as the court deems just and proper" sufficient request for prejudgment interest]

However, a separate request for the court to determine whether plaintiff is entitled to CCP § 3287 prejudgment interest is required where damages have been awarded but no interest was included in the verdict and neither the court nor the jury determined whether the damages were liquidated or unliquidated. [North Oakland Med. Clinic v. Rogers, supra, 65 CA4th at 829, 76 CR2d at 746]

(a) [11:134.11] Timing of request: No statute or rule of court specifies when prejudgment interest must be sought or a particular procedure for making the request. At least one court has concluded, however, that the request must be made before entry of judgment or, at the very latest, by way of a timely motion for new trial (on the ground of inadequate damages, CCP § 657(c)). [North Oakland Med. Clinic v. Rogers (1998) 65 CA4th 824, 830, 76 CR2d 743, 747—prejudgment interest may not be sought postverdict and after postjudgment motions for new trial and to tax costs have been heard and decided; see also Watson Bowman Acme Corp. v. RGW Const., Inc. (2016) 2 CA5th 279, 298, 206 CR3d

281, 296—supplier's prejudgment interest request, made less than 15 days after judgment was filed, deemed timely because it fell within time limit for CCP § 657 motions (¶ 11:134.2)]

1) [11:134.12] Not by cost bill: On the other hand, since Civ.C. § 3287 prejudgment interest is awarded as an element of damages, not as costs, a cost bill is not an appropriate vehicle for making the request. [North Oakland Med. Clinic v. Rogers (1998) 65 CA4th 824, 830, 76 CR2d 743, 747]

[11:134.13 - 11:134.14] Reserved.

(b) [11:134.15] Compare—stipulation for postjudgment adjudication: The important point is that the opposing party be on notice that prejudgment interest is in issue. Thus, at least where the complaint specifically requested interest, prejudgment interest may be adjudicated in a postjudgment hearing pursuant to prejudgment stipulation of the parties. [See Steiny & Co., Inc. v. California Elec. Supply Co., Inc. (2000) 79 CA4th 285, 294, 93 CR2d 920, 926 (distinguishing North Oakland, supra)—"(t)he present case bears no resemblance to the extreme facts in North Oakland"]

(5) [11:134.16] Objections to prejudgment interest; waiver: Objections to a prejudgment interest award (the propriety of the award or the amount thereof) must be raised in the trial court or are waived. The objections cannot be raised for the first time on appeal. [Jones v. Wagner (2001) 90 CA4th 466, 481-482, 108 CR2d 669, 680—failure to object to proposed judgment containing prejudgment interest provision waived objections to prejudgment interest award]

e. [11:135] Compare—punitive damages: Punitive damages are not recoverable in an ordinary breach of contract action. [See Civ.C. § 3294(a)—authorizing punitive damages only "(i)n an action for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract …" (emphasis added)] However, if the aggrieved seller can plead and prove a tort cause of action (e.g., fraud), punitive damages might be recoverable upon proof by "clear and convincing evidence" that the buyer acted with "oppression, fraud, or malice" (as defined by Civ.C. § 3294(c)). (See ¶ 11:390 in connection with damages for fraud.)

f. [11:136] Attorney fees: Except as specifically provided by statute, "the measure and mode of compensation of attorneys … is left to the agreement … of the parties." [CCP § 1021; Jackson v. Homeowners Ass'n Monte Vista Estates-East (2001) 93 CA4th 773, 778-779, 113 CR2d 363, 366; see also Mountain Air Enterprises, LLC v. Sundowner Towers, LLC (2017) 3 C5th 744, 751, 220 CR3d 650, 656—§ 1021 permits parties to "contract out" of the "American rule" by executing agreements that allocate attorney fees]

No statute expressly provides for the recovery of attorney fees in a seller's breach of contract suit. [See Civ.C. § 3307 (defining seller's damages in breach of contract action); and Jensen v. Dalton (1970) 9 CA3d 654, 658, 88 CR 426, 428—seller's offer to prove attorney fees as damages caused by buyers' breach properly rejected because no showing of statutory or contractual authority for allowance of fees]

Thus, attorney fees are recoverable in suits on real property purchase agreements only if the contract includes an attorney fees provision. [See CCP § 1021; Xuereb v. Marcus & Millichap, Inc. (1992) 3 CA4th 1338, 1340, 5 CR2d 154, 156]

(1) [11:137] Civ.C. § 1717 applies to actions "on the contract": Contractual attorney fees sought in an action "on the contract" or to enforce the contract are awarded pursuant to Civ.C. § 1717 (¶ 11:138 ff.). [Santisas v. Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 608, 71 CR2d 830, 836; Jackson v. Homeowners Ass'n Monte Vista Estates-East (2001) 93 CA4th 773, 779, 113 CR2d 363, 366—§ 1717 "covers only contract actions, where the theory of the case is breach of contract"; Exxess Electronixx v. Heger Realty Corp. (1998) 64 CA4th 698, 706-707, 75 CR2d 376, 382—where action is "on the contract," § 1717 cannot be circumvented by seeking fees under general costs provisions (CCP §§ 1021, 1032-1033.5); see also Andrade v. Western Riverside Council of Governments (2024) 99 CA5th 1020, 1029-1030, 318 CR3d 396, 403-404 (distinguishing between § 1717 fees available to party who recovered greater relief in contract action (i.e., party "prevailing on the contract") and CCP § 1032 fees available to party who received net monetary recovery (i.e., "prevailing party," discussed at ¶ 11:394.3)]

(a) [11:137.1] Compare—tort actions: Civ.C. § 1717 (¶ 11:137) applies only where the theory of the case is essentially breach of contract; it does not apply when the underlying cause of action rests exclusively in tort. [Santisas v. Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 615, 71 CR2d 830, 840; see also Xuereb v. Marcus & Millichap, Inc. (1992) 3 CA4th 1338, 1342, 5 CR2d 154, 157; Brown Bark III, L.P. v. Haver (2013) 219 CA4th 809, 828, 162 CR3d 9, 24—distinction between contract and tort claims is that tort claims are not "on a contract" and therefore are outside § 1717 's ambit]

Even so, agreed-upon attorney fees may still be awardable under the general authority of CCP § 1021 (¶ 11:136). Nothing in § 1021 limits its application to contract actions; quite the contrary, pursuant to § 1021, "parties may validly agree that the prevailing party will be awarded attorney fees incurred in any litigation between themselves, whether such litigation sounds in tort or contract." [Mountain Air Enterprises, LLC v. Sundowner Towers, LLC (2017) 3 C5th 744, 751, 220 CR3d 650, 656 (quoting Santisas, supra, 17 C4th at 608, 71 CR2d at 836, and Xuereb, supra, 3 CA4th at 1341, 5 CR2d at 156-157 (emphasis added); Santisas v. Goodin, supra, 17 C4th at 608, 71 CR2d at 836, quoting Xuereb v. Marcus & Millichap, Inc., supra, 3 CA4th at 1341, 5 CR2d at 156-157 (emphasis added); see also Maynard v. BTI Group, Inc. (2013) 216 CA4th 984, 993, 157 CR3d 148, 153—agreement to award fees based on outcome of "any dispute" encompasses all claims, "whether in contract, tort or otherwise"]

Thus, provided the contractual attorney fees provision is worded broadly enough, "prevailing party" fees may be awardable in tort actions arising out of the contract under the general authority of CCP §§ 1021, 1032 and 1033.5 (see discussion at ¶ 4:518 ff.). [Santisas v. Goodin, supra, 17 C4th at 608, 71 CR2d at 836 (real estate purchase agreement provided for prevailing party fee recovery in actions "arising out of the execution of the agreement or the sale"); Silver v. Boatwright Home Inspection, Inc. (2002) 97 CA4th 443, 449, 118 CR2d 475, 479 (same—"in any dispute arising out of this agreement, the inspection, or report(s)"); see also Maynard v. BTI Group, Inc., supra, 216 CA4th at 988, 157 CR3d at 150—party who prevailed on tort rather than contract theory awarded fees pursuant to listing agreement that entitled party who prevailed in "overall dispute" to recover fees; compare Hasler v. Howard (2004) 120 CA4th 1023, 1027, 16 CR3d 217, 220—fees not awardable in action alleging fraud, breach of fiduciary duty, and breach of duty to disclose where fee provision applied only to actions regarding obligation to pay compensation under, instead of any action or lawsuit arising from, broker listing agreement]

1) [11:137.2] Limitation—no fee recovery "reciprocity" under CCP § 1021: CCP § 1021, unlike Civ.C. § 1717, does not contain a "reciprocity" provision (where the underlying contract only gives one party the right to an attorney fee award, Civ.C. § 1717 establishes a reciprocal right to attorney fees in favor of whichever party prevails, see ¶ 11:138 ff.). [Exxess Electronixx v. Heger Realty Corp. (1998) 64 CA4th 698, 708, 75 CR2d 376, 383]

Thus, where the party claiming fees prevails on a tort (rather than a contract) cause of action, so that CCP § 1021 (and not Civ.C. § 1717) applies, the right to an attorney fee award is based on the terms of the underlying contract. If reciprocal rights are not provided under the contract, the unnamed party will not recover a fee award upon prevailing. [Exxess Electronixx v. Heger Realty Corp., supra, 64 CA4th at 708, 75 CR2d at 383; Moallem v. Coldwell Banker Comm'l Group, Inc. (1994) 25 CA4th 1827, 1831-1833, 31 CR2d 253, 255-256—despite attorney fee clause in underlying brokerage agreement, tenant who prevailed only on tort claims in action arising out of real estate transaction could not recover fees against real estate agent because attorney fee clause ran only in named agent's favor]

2) [11:137.3] Conditions precedent to reciprocal fee recovery: Even if the contract provides for reciprocal prevailing party attorney fee rights, the party who prevails on a tort claim arising out of the agreement must satisfy any specified condition precedents to a fee recovery.

- [11:137.3a] For example, where a real estate purchase agreement contained a provision requiring the initiation of mediation before filing suit as a condition precedent to the recovery of attorney fees, the prevailing party would have forfeited his right to recover fees if he filed suit before commencing mediation. [Johnson v. Siegel (2000) 84 CA4th 1087, 1100-1101, 101 CR2d 412, 421]

On the other hand, because the condition precedent (seeking mediation) was expressly attached to the party who initiated the action, it was not a condition on prevailing party fee recovery by the successful defendant. [Johnson v. Siegel, supra, 84 CA4th at 1100-1101, 101 CR2d at 421-422—fact plaintiff buyer lost right to recover attorney fees by not initiating mediation before filing suit did not forfeit successful seller's right to prevailing party fee recovery; see also ¶ 11:138.18]

(b) [11:137.5] Application where contract and noncontract causes of action joined: Where a cause of action based on a contract providing for attorney fees is joined with other causes of action beyond the contract, prevailing party attorney fees are recoverable under Civ.C. § 1717 only as they relate to the contract action. [Reynolds Metals Co. v. Alperson (1979) 25 C3d 124, 129-130, 158 CR 1, 3-4; see also PM Group, Inc. v. Stewart (2007) 154 CA4th 55, 68, 64 CR3d 227, 238—plaintiffs who prevailed on defendants' contract claim by establishing its nonexistence were entitled to § 1717 attorney fees in addition to their recovery on tort claims, in quasi-contract and on common counts; Carver v.

Chevron U.S.A., Inc. (2002) 97 CA4th 132, 147-148, 118 CR2d 569, 581-582—attorney fees incurred to defend against statutory claims should have been deleted from total fees awarded under attorney fees clause in parties' lease]

1) [11:137.6] No apportionment when fees incurred on common issues: Attorney fees need not be apportioned between contract and noncontract causes of action to the extent the fees were incurred for representation on issues common to both causes of action, making it "impracticable, if not impossible" to allocate the attorney's time between the contract and noncontract claims. [Reynolds Metals Co. v. Alperson (1979) 25 C3d 124, 129-130, 158 CR 1, 4; see also Brown Bark III, L.P. v. Haver (2013) 219 CA4th 809, 829-830, 162 CR3d 9, 25—governing standard is whether issues are so interrelated that it is "impossible to separate them into claims for which attorney fees are properly awarded and claims for which they are not"; PM Group, Inc. v. Stewart (2007) 154 CA4th 55, 69, 64 CR3d 227, 238—where plaintiffs' tort theories and defendants' contract claim were completely interrelated, requiring presentation of virtually identical evidence, 10% decrease in total attorney fees awarded deemed sufficient to reflect time attributable to noncontract causes of action]

- Recovery of attorney fees in a tort action is discussed further at ¶ 11:392 ff.

- For a discussion of matters to consider when drafting contractual attorney fee provisions, see ¶ 4:513 ff.

(2) [11:138] Civ.C. § 1717 reciprocal prevailing party right of recovery in actions "on the contract": In any action on a contract specifically providing that attorney fees incurred to enforce the contract shall be awarded to one of the parties, or to the prevailing party, whichever party prevails in the contract action is entitled to recover reasonable attorney fees as costs. [Civ.C. § 1717(a); Santisas v. Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 610, 71 CR2d 830, 837—primary purpose of § 1717 is to ensure mutuality of remedy under contractual attorney fee provisions; Wong v. Thrifty Corp. (2002) 97 CA4th 261, 263, 118 CR2d 276, 277; compare Khajavi v. Feather River Anesthesia Med. Group (2000) 84 CA4th 32, 62, 100 CR2d 627, 649, fn. 16—§ 1717 cannot be bootstrapped to provide for attorney fees for breach of contract that has no attorney fees provision]

Moreover, a contractual fee provision in one section of the contract applies to the entire contract unless the agreement specifies each party was represented by counsel in the agreement's negotiation and execution and that fact is stated in the contract. [See Andrade v. Western Riverside Council of Governments (2024) 99 CA5th 1020, 1026-1027, 318 CR3d 396, 401-402 (finding Civ.C. § 1717's goal is to avoid "lopsided arrangements" where one party can limit the other's attorney fee recovery to particular claims)—error to deny § 1717 fees to homeowner seeking rescission of loan agreements that impermissibly limited fee provisions to judicial foreclosure actions, discussed further at ¶ 11:138.2a]

Thus, where the purchase agreement contains an attorney fees recovery provision, whichever party—buyer or seller—successfully pursues a breach of contract suit (or other action "on the contract") against the other is entitled to an attorney fees as costs award. [Civ.C. § 1717(a); CCP § 1033.5(a)(10)(A); Sessions Payroll Management, Inc. v. Noble Const. Co., Inc. (2000) 84 CA4th 671, 678, 101 CR2d 127, 131; see also Pueblo Radiology Med. Group, Inc. v. Gerlach (2008) 163 CA4th 826, 829, 77 CR3d 880, 882—defendants who prevailed on alter ego issue essential to breach of contract action were entitled to § 1717 attorney fees even though breach itself had yet to be decided (reciprocal prevailing party right triggered once final determination is made in party's favor); see also Burkhalter Kessler Clement & George LLP v. Hamilton (2018) 19 CA5th 38, 228 CR3d 154 (citing Pueblo Radiology with approval)—sublessee's managing partner who prevailed on alter ego claim in sublessor's breach of contract action entitled to § 1717 attorney fees even though she was not a party to sublease (¶ 11:139.25a); Pacific Custom Pools, Inc. v. Turner Const. Co. (2000) 79 CA4th 1254, 1270, 94 CR2d 756, 767—attorney fees provision will be given effect under § 1717 "whether the action is commenced by the obligor or the obligee"; and ¶ 4:514]

(a) [11:138.1] Actions "on the contract": The Civ.C. § 1717 "reciprocal" right to fees applies only in an action on the contract or to enforce the contract containing a prevailing party attorney fees provision (Civ.C. § 1717(a)). A damages action for breach of the agreement clearly is within the contemplation of Civ.C. § 1717. Beyond that, courts construe the term "on the contract" liberally. [See Hjelm v. Prometheus Real Estate Group, Inc. (2016) 3 CA5th 1155, 1168, 1170, 208 CR3d 394, 402, 404 (noting courts have found claims "on a contract" in various circumstances extending beyond direct breach of contract claims); Turner v. Schultz (2009) 175 CA4th 974, 980, 96 CR3d 659, 663—prevailing party entitled to § 1717 fees for any action "on the contract," whether fees incurred offensively or defensively; compare California Union Square L.P. v. Saks & Co. LLC (2021) 71 CA5th 136, 142-144, 286 CR3d 115, 119-121—no attorney fees awarded tenant for successful judicial challenge to arbitration award setting property's fair market value (FMV) because one fee clause specifically required parties to bear their own costs for all FMV proceedings (also, lease's other, general attorney fee provision deemed inapplicable because a judicial challenge to an FMV determination is not an "action or proceeding to enforce the lease" or to obtain a "declaration of rights" thereunder); Orien v. Lutz (2017) 16 CA5th 957, 962-963, 224 CR3d 736, 739-741 (noting co-owners of property have absolute, statutory right to partition independent of any agreement restating their right to do so)—plaintiff sibling's statutory right to partition two inherited properties, although reiterated in prior settlement agreement with her defendant siblings, was not a contractual provision she "enforced" through her partition action and therefore did not entitle her to attorney fees per said agreement's reciprocal fee provision]

Whether an action is based on contract or tort depends on the nature of the right sued upon, not the form of pleading or relief demanded. Broadly, "if based on breach of promise, it is contractual; if based on breach of a noncontractual duty, it is tortious." [Kangarlou v. Progressive Title Co., Inc. (2005) 128 CA4th 1174, 1178-1179, 27 CR3d 754, 756 (internal quotes omitted); Turner v. Schultz, supra, 175 CA4th at 979-980, 96 CR3d at 663—"As long as the action involves a contract it is 'on the contract'" for § 1717 purposes (internal quotes and brackets omitted); see also Hjelm v. Prometheus Real Estate Group, Inc., supra, 3 CA5th at 1168-1170, 208 CR3d at 402-404—although tenants' lawsuit against landlord included both tort and contract claims, coupled with prayer for emotional distress and economic damages, claim for breach of lease agreement's warranty of habitability and for constructive eviction deemed "on the contract" for § 1717 purposes; Kachlon v. Markowitz (2008) 168 CA4th 316, 347, 85 CR3d 532, 556—equitable claims based on promissory note and trust deed containing unilateral attorney fee clauses deemed actions "on the contract" (discussed at ¶ 6:242.2)]

1) [11:138.2] Declaratory relief actions: A declaratory relief action seeking an interpretation of the contract is an "action on the contract" triggering a right to Civ.C. § 1717 fees. Such an action is "clearly one to enforce the parties' rights" under the contract. [Harbour Landing-Dolfann, Ltd. v. Anderson (1996) 48 CA4th 260, 263, 55 CR2d 640, 642 (declaratory relief action seeking interpretation of lease containing attorney fees clause); Turner v. Schultz (2009) 175 CA4th 974, 980, 96 CR3d 659, 663 (declaratory relief action re enforceability of arbitration provision in agreement containing attorney fees clause); Kachlon v. Markowitz (2008) 168 CA4th 316, 347-348, 85 CR3d 532, 556-557 (declaratory relief action seeking declaration that trust deed containing attorney fees clause must be reconveyed because foreclosure violated terms of trust deed)]

Rationale: If, instead of bringing the declaratory relief suit, one party refused to perform under the disputed contract provision, and the other party responded with a breach of contract action, the attorney fee clause would "surely apply." That one party preempts a breach of contract suit with a declaratory relief suit "does not defeat the attorney fee clause." [Harbour Landing-Dolfann, Ltd. v. Anderson, supra, 48 CA4th at 263, 55 CR2d at 642]

2) [11:138.2a] Rescission actions: An action seeking to enforce the rescission of a contract is an action "on the contract" for purposes of Civ.C. § 1717. [Hastings v. Matlock (1985) 171 CA3d 826, 840-841, 217 CR 856, 866-867; see Andrade v. Western Riverside Council of Governments (2024) 99 CA5th 1020, 1025-1026, 318 CR3d 396, 400—homeowner fraudulently enrolled in Property Assessed Clean Energy (PACE) program could recover attorney fees in action to rescind PACE loan documents because said documents provided for lender's recovery of fees and enforcement costs (¶ 11:138)]

3) [11:138.3] Action on several contracts: If the parties entered into several contracts as part of a single relationship or transaction, an attorney fee recovery provision contained in one of the documents may be applied to the other documents in the transaction because the documents will be construed together. [Mountain Air Enterprises, LLC v. Sundowner Towers, LLC (2017) 3 C5th 744, 759, 220 CR3d 650, 662-663; Boyd v. Oscar Fisher Co., Inc. (1989) 210 CA3d 368, 378-380, 258 CR 473, 478-479; South Bay Transp. Co. v. Gordon Sand Co. (1988) 206 CA3d 650, 660-661, 253 CR 753, 759-760]

But the result is otherwise where the several contracts, although related, are entered into by different parties (e.g., purchase and sale agreement between buyer and seller and separate escrow instructions with escrow company)—here, an attorney fee provision in one of the contracts does not apply to the other. [See Paul v. Schoellkopf (2005) 128 CA4th 147, 153-154, 26 CR3d 766, 770-771—where purchase and sale agreement (between buyer and seller) and escrow instructions (between escrow company and buyer and seller) were executed as part of single transaction, but only escrow instructions contained attorney fee provision, buyer could not invoke provision in instructions to recover fees from seller]

4) [11:138.4] Distinguish—affirmative defenses: An affirmative defense does not equate to or constitute an "action" even though it is encompassed within the latter. Indeed, "while an affirmative defense is a 'real part of any action' … , it does not, in and of itself, constitute an 'action' for purposes of recovering attorney fees." [See Mountain Air Enterprises, LLC v. Sundowner Towers, LLC (2017) 3 C5th 744, 747, 753, 756-760, 220 CR3d 650, 653, 658, 660-664 (italics in original) (resolving split of authority)—although buyer's affirmative defense of novation based on parties' option contract did not constitute an "action" within the meaning of said contract's attorney fee provision, buyer nonetheless was entitled to its fees pursuant to said provision because seller's action for specific performance and breach of the parties' repurchase agreement was brought "because of" an "alleged dispute … in connection with" the option agreement]

5) [11:138.5] Distinguish—*not pursuant to indemnification clause: The inclusion of attorney fees as an item of loss in an indemnity contract does not constitute a provision for the award of attorney fees in an action on the contract triggering the operation of Civ.C. § 1717. Because an indemnity agreement is intended by the parties to unilaterally benefit the indemnitee by holding it harmless against liabilities and expenses incurred in defending against third-party claims, "application of reciprocity principles would defeat the very purpose of the agreement." [Baldwin Builders v. Coast Plastering Corp. (2005) 125 CA4th 1339, 1344, 24 CR3d 9, 12-13; see Rideau v. Stewart Title of Calif., Inc. (2015) 235 CA4th 1286, 1301-1302, 185 CR3d 887, 897-898—buyer could not recover § 1717 fees against escrow holder based on escrow instruction's indemnity provision (clause provided escrow company with "one way" protection against third party lawsuits and did not apply to fees incurred in litigation between buyer and escrow holder based on their contract); Carr Business Enterprises, Inc. v. City of Chowchilla (2008) 166 CA4th 14, 22-23, 82 CR3d 128, 134-135—prevailing party contractor not entitled to § 1717 fees pursuant to contract provision stating contractor would indemnify city against claims, including attorney fees, arising out of performance of work (standard indemnity clause obligating contractor to pay litigation expense in third party action arising out of performance of contract); see also Alki Partners, LP v. DB Fund Services, LLC (2016) 4 CA5th 574, 600-602, 209 CR3d 151, 170-173 (finding language in parties' indemnity clause indistinguishable from Carr's provision)—standard indemnity clause in hedge fund administrator's contract with fund's operator did not grant administrator right to recover attorney fees as prevailing party in operator's breach of contract suit]

a) Application

• [11:138.6] Escrow instructions authorized the escrow holder to withhold and stop all further escrow proceedings without liability and/or to sue in interpleader where conflicting demands were made on the escrow holder or any dispute or controversy arose between the principals or with any third person relating to the escrow. The instructions further required the principals to pay, indemnify and hold the escrow holder harmless against all litigation and interpleader costs, including reasonable attorney fees, incurred by the escrow holder "which arise, result from or relate to this escrow."

Construed together, these sentences provided for attorney fees in the event of litigation arising out of conflicting demands against the escrow holder or any dispute arising between the principals or with any third person regarding the terms of the escrow. The language was a standard indemnity clause that did not provide for the recovery of prevailing party attorney fees in actions between a principal and the escrow holder to enforce the general escrow instructions. [Campbell v. Scripps Bank (2000) 78 CA4th 1328, 1335-1338, 93 CR2d 635, 642-644 & fn. 5]

• [11:138.7] Compare: By the same token, there is "no magic formulation for a fees provision." Indeed, use of the words "promise to reimburse" (for legal fees) does not compel the conclusion the attorney fee clause is simply an indemnity provision. Cases deciding whether given language comprises an indemnity clause consider whether the language was intended to operate between the contracting parties or only as against nonparties. [See International Billing Services, Inc. v. Emigh (2000) 84 CA4th 1175, 1183, 101 CR2d 532, 537—"promise to reimburse Company for any legal fees, liability or loss which Company incurs as a result of …" construed as contractual fee recovery provision governed by Civ.C. § 1717]

b) [11:138.8] Compare—provision for fees incurred to enforce indemnity agreement: By contrast, the Civ.C. § 1717 reciprocity principles apply where the indemnity agreement's unilateral attorney fee clause is not included as an item of loss or expense but instead separately provides for the recovery of attorney fees incurred in enforcing the indemnity agreement. [Baldwin Builders v. Coast Plastering Corp. (2005) 125 CA4th 1339, 1344-1346, 24 CR3d 9, 13-14; see also Alki Partners, LP v. DB Fund Services, LLC (2016) 4 CA5th 574, 602, 209 CR3d 151, 172 (acknowledging such fees are recoverable where contract includes express language authorizing same in action to enforce indemnity agreement)]

6) [11:138.14] No § 1717 fees for successful contract defense to tort action: The successful assertion of a contract defense to a tort action is not "an action brought to enforce the contract" for purposes of entitlement to Civ.C. § 1717 prevailing party attorney fees. [Gil v. Mansano (2004) 121 CA4th 739, 743-745, 17 CR3d 420, 423-425]

(b) [11:138.15] Subject to contractual conditions precedent: Just as a prevailing party's contractual right to a fee award in a tort action may be subject to restrictions or conditions precedent specified in the contract (¶ 11:137.3 ff.), so may a right to Civ.C. § 1717 fees in a contract action: "[W]e construe … [Civ.C. § 1717] to permit parties to a contract to set forth with specificity the circumstances in which attorney fees are recoverable, provided any such specific contractual provisions do not otherwise conflict with the requirements of section 1717." [Leamon v. Krajkiewcz (2003) 107 CA4th 424, 436, 132 CR2d 362, 370]

In other words, conditions restricting the prevailing party's entitlement to a Civ.C. § 1717 fee award are enforceable so long as they do not defeat the statute's underlying "mutuality of remedy" purpose—i.e., so long as the specified restrictions do not favor one party over the other and cannot be manipulated for tactical advantage in the litigation by one of the parties. [Leamon v. Krajkiewcz, supra, 107 CA4th at 436, 132 CR2d at 370]

The contractual conditions precedent to a fee award are enforceable even against a party who prevails by establishing the contract itself is invalid. [Leamon v. Krajkiewcz, supra, 107 CA4th at 432-433, 132 CR2d at 367-368]

1) Application

• [11:138.16] A standard form residential purchase agreement provided that the prevailing Buyer or Seller in any action, proceeding or arbitration arising out of the agreement "shall be entitled to reasonable attorney's fees and costs … except as provided in Paragraph 21A." Pursuant to Paragraph 21A, mediation had to be attempted before resorting to court action on the contract and attorney fees entitlement would be forfeited by a party who commenced an action on a dispute arising out of the agreement without first attempting mediation.

Although Seller subsequently prevailed against Buyers in her quiet title suit claiming the contract was not valid, she was properly denied Civ.C. § 1717 attorney fees because she did not satisfy the contractual condition precedent of seeking mediation before filing suit. Enforcing the condition would not conflict with the § 1717 mutuality of remedy concept because Buyers could not have commenced suit and recovered attorney fees without seeking mediation. [Leamon v. Krajkiewcz (2003) 107 CA4th 424, 433, 132 CR2d 362, 367-368; see also Frei v. Davey (2004) 124 CA4th 1506, 1511-1520, 22 CR3d 429, 433-441—pursuant to provision in standard form residential purchase agreement, fees not awarded in specific performance action to prevailing parties who refused request to mediate]

• [11:138.16a] The prevailing buyer was not entitled to Civ.C. § 1717 attorney fees in an action for failure to disclose, etc., brought against sellers of a lake house where the buyer did not attempt mediation before commencing litigation, in violation of the parties' residential purchase agreement. The court was not persuaded by the buyer's contention his actions were justified because he was unable to locate the sellers before filing suit:

"After filing his complaint, [buyer] hired an investigator and, two weeks later, when the investigator discovered the sellers' mailing address, [buyer] mailed them the complaint … [Buyer] could have readily complied with the requirements of the [mediation provision] by simply hiring the investigator, learning sellers' whereabouts, and mailing an offer of mediation to them before filing his complaint." [Lange v. Schilling (2008) 163 CA4th 1412, 1416-1418, 78 CR3d 356, 359-360 (emphasis in original)—because parties' agreement unambiguously required attempt at mediation before filing suit, "doctrine of substantial compliance" inapplicable even though buyer offered to mediate after locating sellers; see also Cullen v. Corwin (2012) 206 CA4th 1074, 1079, 142 CR3d 419, 423—because parties' agreement unambiguously required attempt at mediation before filing suit or after a request therefor, fact that buyers initiated court action before requesting mediation did not allow prevailing sellers to reject buyers' subsequent mediation request and still recover fees (nor were sellers entitled to condition mediation on receipt of discovery responses)]

• [11:138.17] Compare: A contract provision that required a prevailing party to attempt mediation before filing suit to recover attorney fees specifically exempted from the prefiling mediation requirement an action commenced to enable the recordation of a lis pendens. Sellers who prevailed in their premediation specific performance action filed for lis pendens purposes were thus entitled to recover their fees. [Blackburn v. Charnley (2004) 117 CA4th 758, 767-768, 11 CR3d 885, 892-893; see also Greif v. Sanin (2022) 74 CA5th 412, 455-456, 289 CR3d 484, 517-518; Frei v. Davey, supra, 124 CA4th at 1517-1518, 22 CR3d at 438]

• [11:138.18] Seller filed a cross-complaint against Buyer and his broker, later dismissed Buyer from the cross-complaint, and then sought attorney fees incurred only in defending the complaint and not for prosecuting the cross-complaint. Because the condition precedent of seeking mediation was expressly required of the party who initiated the action (Buyer), Seller was entitled to a prevailing party fee award. [Van Slyke v. Gibson (2007) 146 CA4th 1296, 1299, 53 CR3d 491, 493-494]

(c) [11:138.20] Recovery generally not limited to particular kinds of claims under contract: See discussion at ¶ 4:516.

(d) [11:138.21] Not limited to recovery by individuals: See discussion at ¶ 4:517.

(e) [11:139] "Prevailing party" determination: Except where the action has been voluntarily dismissed (¶ 11:139.10), the party receiving the "greater relief" in a contract action is the "prevailing party" entitled to attorney fees. [Civ.C. § 1717(b)(1); see Silver Creek, LLC v. Blackrock Realty Advisors, Inc. (2009) 173 CA4th 1533, 1538, 93 CR3d 864, 868; Carole Ring & Assocs. v. Nicastro (2001) 87 CA4th 253, 261, 104 CR2d 519, 524; Zintel Holdings, LLC v. McLean (2012) 209 CA4th 431, 439, 147 CR3d 157, 163 (also noting court may determine there is no prevailing party)]

1) [11:139a] Mandatory application: For purposes of a Civ.C. § 1717 fee award, the Civ.C. § 1717(b)(1) definition of "prevailing party" is mandatory and cannot be avoided or altered by contract. Conflicting provisions in the parties' contract are void. [Wong v. Thrifty Corp. (2002) 97 CA4th 261, 264, 118 CR2d 276, 278—attorney fee provision in lease restricting fee recovery to party who prevails upon a "determination" of liability in action to enforce the lease (thus purporting to preclude § 1717 fee award when action on lease results in judgment by CCP § 998 settlement) void as conflicting with § 1717 "prevailing party" definition; see also ¶ 11:139.11]

2) [11:139.1] Recovery by party establishing "inapplicable, invalid, unenforceable or nonexistent" contract: A party is entitled to Civ.C. § 1717 attorney fees pursuant to contract when the party "prevails" by establishing the underlying contract is "invalid, inapplicable, unenforceable or nonexistent," so long as the other party would have been entitled to recover attorney fees under the alleged contract had they prevailed. [Santisas v. Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 611, 71 CR2d 830, 838 (emphasis added); Brown Bark III, L.P. v. Haver (2013) 219 CA4th 809, 819, 162 CR3d 9, 17; see also Andrade v. Western Riverside Council of Governments (2024) 99 CA5th 1020, 1025-1026, 318 CR3d 396, 400 (discussed at ¶ 11:138.2a); Douglas E. Barnhart, Inc. v. CMC Fabricators, Inc. (2012) 211 CA4th 230, 234, 149 CR3d 440, 443—subcontractor entitled to § 1717 fees from contractor after proving contract's nonexistence following bid submission; Hsu v. Abbara (1995) 9 C4th 863, 870-871, 39 CR2d 824, 828-829—seller sued by buyer on alleged real estate purchase contract became entitled to § 1717 fees by proving no contract was formed; and ¶ 11:139.26]

a) [11:139.2] Effect of joining contract and noncontract causes of action: The rule set forth at ¶ 11:139.1 means that a party who joins both contract and noncontract causes of action and wins only on the noncontract causes of action might end up paying attorney fees to the opposing party who otherwise lost the lawsuit. [Webber v. Inland Empire Investments, Inc. (1999) 74 CA4th 884, 919, 88 CR2d 594, 617-618]

Although a plaintiff succeeds on a noncontract claim, defendant is the "prevailing party" entitled to Civ.C. § 1717 fees if defendant defeated plaintiff's contract claim (provided plaintiff would have been allowed § 1717 fees had plaintiff won on the contract cause of action, ¶ 11:139.1). [See Douglas E. Barnhart, Inc. v. CMC Fabricators,

Inc. (2012) 211 CA4th 230, 246, 149 CR3d 440, 453—despite winning promissory estoppel claim (held to be a noncontract claim), plaintiff-contractor had to pay § 1717 fees to defendant-subcontractor who prevailed on plaintiff's contract claim by proving its nonexistence (¶ 11:139.1); Korech v. Hornwood (1997) 58 CA4th 1412, 1419-1422, 68 CR2d 637, 641-643—despite winning mechanic's lien claim, plaintiffs had to pay § 1717 fees to defendants who prevailed on plaintiffs' contract claim by proving they were not parties to contract sued upon]

b) [11:139.2a] Subject to contractual conditions precedent: See discussion at ¶ 11:138.15 ff.

c) [11:139.2b] Compare—recovery where contract unenforceable because of illegality: A different rule ordinarily applies where the contract containing an attorney fee clause is held unenforceable because of illegality: "[T]here is no need for a mutual right to attorney fees since neither party can enforce the agreement." [Yoo v. Jho (2007) 147 CA4th 1249, 1256, 55 CR3d 243, 248 (emphasis added; internal quotes omitted); Bovard v. American Horse Enterprises, Inc. (1988) 201 CA3d 832, 843, 247 CR 340, 346; see also San Luis Obispo Local Agency Formation Comm'n v. Central Coast Develop. Co. (2022) 78 CA5th 363, 365, 293 CR3d 471, 473—public agency's contract that exceeds agency's statutory powers is void and therefore cannot support Civ.C. § 1717 fee award]

But the right to invoke the contractual attorney fee clause is defeated only where the contract is entirely unenforceable by either party due to its illegal object. When the object of the contract is legal but the contract is "illegal"—and thus voidable (but not void)—only because it does not comply with a statute, the party for whose benefit the statute was meant to protect may "disaffirm" the contract (void it) and yet still enforce the contract's attorney fee clause. [Yuba Cypress Housing Partners, Ltd. v. Area Developers (2002) 98 CA4th 1077, 1082-1083, 120 CR2d 273, 277-278—plaintiff choosing to "void" contract to purchase land from defendant who violated Subdivided Lands Act entitled to recover attorney fees under contract's attorney fee clause]

3) [11:139.3] "Prevailing" without net monetary recovery: The party receiving the "greater relief" (Civ.C. § 1717(b)(1)) is not necessarily the party receiving the greater monetary judgment. The statute vests trial courts with broad equitable discretion to determine the "prevailing party" in particular cases, and thus to determine that one party has "prevailed" for Civ.C. § 1717 purposes even though that party receives no net monetary judgment. [Sears v. Baccaglio (1998) 60 CA4th 1136, 1154-1155, 70 CR2d 769, 781; see also Poseidon Develop., Inc. v. Woodland Lane Estates, LLC (2007) 152 CA4th 1106, 1120, 62 CR3d 59, 69—"greater relief" does not necessarily mean greater monetary relief (also noting "prevailing party" determination can be made only after comparing extent to which each party succeeded and failed in its contentions)]

Thus, a party who pays only a nominal net judgment may be the "prevailing" party entitled to Civ.C. § 1717 fees if the party received earlier payments, settlements, insurance proceeds or other recovery. [Sears v. Baccaglio, supra, 60 CA4th at 1154-1155, 70 CR2d at 781]

a) [11:139.3a] Compare—fee-shifting statutes: A party also need not receive a "net monetary recovery" (¶ 11:139.3) to be the "prevailing party" under a fee-shifting statute, unless the statute expressly so provides or the parties otherwise agree. [See Canyon View Ltd. v. Lakeview Loan Servicing, LLC (2019) 42 CA5th 1096, 1118, 256 CR3d 233, 251 (rejecting argument that under Mobilehome Residency Law "prevailing party" must receive "net economic recovery")—statute's "plain language" mandates party with "judgment in its favor" is "prevailing party" (¶ 4:518.13)]

b) [11:139.4] Compare—defendant may "prevail" simply by tendering and depositing full amount owed: A defendant who does not cross-complain, and therefore is not entitled to monetary or any other affirmative relief, still may "prevail" as a matter of law if defendant (i) alleges in the answer that defendant tendered to the plaintiff the full amount owed; (ii) deposits that amount with the court; and (iii) proves the amount tendered and deposited was the full amount of the contractual debt. [See Civ.C. § 1717(b)(2); David S. Karton, a Law Corp. v. Dougherty (2014) 231 CA4th 600, 608, 180 CR3d 55, 60 (applying statute's logic to D who actually paid entire debt to P before trial, including interest, leaving nothing for D to deposit with court)]

4) [11:139.5] Mixed results—court discretion: Where the litigation results are otherwise mixed (e.g., victories and losses in the contract action are evenly divided), the court has discretion to decide which party "prevailed" or that neither prevailed for fee recovery purposes. [Hsu v. Abbara (1995) 9 C4th 863, 875, 39 CR2d 824, 832; see also Harris v. Rojas (2021) 66 CA5th 817, 824, 281 CR3d 452, 457 (noting prevailing party determination requires assessing whether party achieved "litigation objectives")—plaintiff lessee not entitled to $300,000 in prevailing party attorney fees where (i) plaintiff was awarded less than $6,000 in damages, (ii) record did not provide basis for assessing plaintiff's litigation objectives, and (iii) defendant lessor was awarded $13,000 in related unlawful detainer action; Zintel Holdings, LLC v. McLean (2012) 209 CA4th 431, 439-440, 147 CR3d 157, 164—court obligated to determine whether Civ.C. § 1717 prevailing party even existed when, as between two litigants, there was "no absolute or complete winner"; Jackson v. Homeowners Ass'n Monte Vista Estates-East (2001) 93 CA4th 773, 788, 113 CR2d 363, 374—no abuse of discretion in awarding plaintiffs attorney fees where substantial arguments supported both sides' claims of victory; compare Silver Creek, LLC v. Blackrock Realty Advisors, Inc. (2009) 173 CA4th 1533, 1540, 93 CR3d 864, 869—abuse of discretion to deny attorney fees to commercial property seller that achieved main litigation objective (disposition of subject properties) and thus recovered "greater relief" (buyer prevailed only on secondary claim for return of escrow deposit)]

5) [11:139.6] Mandatory fee award to clear "winner": On the other hand, where the results of the litigation on the contract claims are clear—i.e., when the decision is purely good news for one party and bad news for the other—the trial court has no discretion to deny attorney fees to the successful litigant. [Hsu v. Abbara (1995) 9 C4th 863, 875, 39 CR2d 824, 832; see also Brown Bark III, L.P. v. Haver (2013) 219 CA4th 809, 826, 162 CR3d 9, 23—party who obtains "unqualified victory" is entitled to Civ.C. § 1717 attorney fees as a "matter of law"; Burkhalter Kessler Clement & George LLP v. Hamilton (2018) 19 CA5th 38, 43, 46, 223 CR3d 154, 158, 160—defendant's managing partner obtained "unqualified victory" by obtaining judgment of dismissal without prejudice, entitling her to Civ.C. § 1717 attorney fees as a "matter of law" (¶ 11:139.25a); Carole Ring & Assocs. v. Nicastro (2001) 87 CA4th 253, 261, 104 CR2d 519, 524—defendant seller was prevailing party "as a matter of law" because he defeated broker's claim for commission based on alleged breach of listing agreement]

a) [11:139.6a] Receiving less than requested relief: A party who establishes an opposing party's liability and wins a monetary judgment is the "prevailing party" even if they win less relief than they requested. This factor, however, can be relevant in a damages-only trial if the opposing party stipulates to liability. [See Regency Midland Const., Inc. v. Legendary Structures Inc. (2019) 41 CA5th 994, 1000, 254 CR3d 624, 629 (citing Olive v. General Nutrition Ctrs., Inc. (2018) 30 CA5th 804, 822-829, 242 CR3d 15, 29-34, with approval)]

6) [11:139.7] No prevailing party pending full resolution of underlying claims: Section 1717 contemplates that only one side in a lawsuit can be the prevailing party. Thus, the prevailing party determination cannot be made until the parties' requests for relief have been fully resolved. [See Roberts v. Packard, Packard & Johnson (2013) 217 CA4th 822, 841-843, 159 CR3d 180, 193-195—error to award interim Civ.C. § 1717 attorney fees to law firm for filing successful petition to compel arbitration in pending lawsuit]

7) [11:139.10] No prevailing party after voluntary dismissal of contract claim: There is no prevailing party for Civ.C. § 1717 fee recovery purposes if the contract action is voluntarily dismissed or dismissed pursuant to settlement. [Civ.C. § 1717(b)(2); Santisas v. Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 615, 71 CR2d 830, 842; see also CDF Firefighters v. Maldonado (2011) 200 CA4th 158, 164, 132 CR3d 544, 548-549—§ 1717(b)(2) 's underlying policy is to encourage settlements and discourage maintenance of pointless litigation]

a) Application

- [11:139.10a] A settlement dismissal of a lessee's declaratory relief claim against a broker barred the broker's right to Civ.C. § 1717 fees. [Exxess Electronixx v. Heger Realty Corp. (1998) 64 CA4th 698, 707, 75 CR2d 376, 382]
- [11:139.10b] Dismissal of a landlord's action against its tenant's alter ego for breach of a commercial lease while the tenant's motion for judgment was pending barred the tenant's right to Civ.C. § 1717 fees: Section 1717(b)(2) "bars recovery of … attorney fees regardless of when the dismissal is filed." [Glencoe v. Neue Sentimental Film AG (2008) 168 CA4th 874, 877, 85 CR3d 800, 803; see also CDF Firefighters v. Maldonado (2011) 200 CA4th 158, 164-165, 132 CR3d 544, 549—Civ.C. § 1717(b)(2) provides no temporal limitation]

• [11:139.10c] A pretrial voluntary dismissal of a buyer's complaint against the seller of a dental practice barred the seller's right to Civ.C. § 1717 fees on the buyer's contract claims (but not for his defense against buyer's tort claims; see ¶ 11:394.1 ff.). [Khan v. Shim (2016) 7 CA5th 49, 58, 212 CR3d 292, 299]

b) [11:139.11] Mandatory application: Just as the parties cannot alter the Civ.C. § 1717(b)(1) definition of "prevailing party" (¶ 11:139a), they cannot contract around the Civ.C. § 1717(b)(2) prohibition. Conflicting contractual provisions are void. [Santisas v. Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 615, 71 CR2d 830, 841-842; Exxess Electronixx v. Heger Realty Corp. (1998) 64 CA4th 698, 707, 75 CR2d 376, 383-383; see also Khan v. Shim (2016) 7 CA5th 49, 56, 212 CR3d 292, 298—Section 1717(b)(2) "'overid[es] and nullif[ies] conflicting contractual provisions, such as provisions expressly allowing recovery of attorney fees in the event of voluntary dismissal … '" (brackets in original)]

c) [11:139.13] Compare—fee recovery after settlement: Resolution of a contract action by settlement does not itself trigger the Civ.C. § 1717(b)(2) bar. So long as there has been no dismissal, a settling party may move for contractually-based attorney fees under Civ.C. § 1717 unless the right thereto was waived in the settlement agreement. [Wong v. Thrifty Corp. (2002) 97 CA4th 261, 264, 118 CR2d 276, 278 (party prevailed by judgment entered on CCP § 998 settlement); see also Jackson v. Homeowners Ass'n Monte Vista Estates-East (2001) 93 CA4th 773, 783-785, 113 CR2d 363, 370-371—Civ.C. § 1717(b)(2) bar inapplicable where parties' agreed settlement would not result in dismissal of case until court determined whether there was a prevailing party and, if so, which party prevailed and then awarded Civ.C. § 1717 fees accordingly]

d) [11:139.14] Compare—invalid voluntary dismissals: The Civ.C. § 1717(b)(2) bar to prevailing party attorney fees is triggered by a valid voluntary dismissal. However, plaintiff's right to voluntarily dismiss an action before commencement of trial is not absolute; exceptions to that right generally arise where the action has proceeded to a determinative adjudication or to a decision that is tantamount to an adjudication. Any purported voluntary dismissal of the action by plaintiff acting unilaterally on and after that point is invalid and does not, therefore, bar a Civ.C. § 1717 attorney fees award to defendant. [Bank of America, N.A. v. Mitchell (2012) 204 CA4th 1199, 1209-1210, 139 CR3d 562, 569-570 (disapproved on other grounds by Black Sky Capital, LLC v. Cobb (2019) 7 C5th 156, 165, 246 CR3d 583, 591)]

• [11:139.14a] Section 1717 attorney fees were properly awarded against a bank that dismissed its contract action after the defendant/debtor's demurrer was sustained without leave to amend: "[T]he Bank sought to dismiss after the court made a dispositive ruling against it, not before. To allow the Bank to dismiss at that late stage would permit procedural gamesmanship inconsistent with the trial court's authority to provide for the orderly conduct of proceedings before it." [Bank of America, N.A. v. Mitchell (2012) 204 CA4th 1199, 1211-1212, 139 CR3d 562, 570-571 (disapproved on other grounds by Black Sky Capital, LLC v. Cobb (2019) 7 C5th 156, 165, 246 CR3d 583, 591) (emphasis in original)—Civ.C. § 1717 fee award to defendant affirmed because Civ.C. § 1717(b)(2) bar inapplicable]

e) [11:139.15] Compare—voluntary dismissal of less than all distinct contract claims: Civ.C. § 1717(b)(2) does not bar a prevailing party attorney fees recovery in favor of a party who prevails on one contract claim, even though the remaining claims are voluntarily dismissed, provided the dismissed claims are separate and distinct from the adjudicated contract claim. [CDF Firefighters v. Maldonado (2011) 200 CA4th 158, 165-166, 132 CR3d 544, 549-550—dismissal of one contract claim did not bar recovery on another claim where claims were separate and distinct, they could have been filed as separate causes of action, and claim on which fees were sought was adjudicated prior to dismissal of other claim]

f) [11:139.16] Compare—*noncontract causes of action: The Civ.C. § 1717(b)(2) bar applies only to contract causes of action. [Santisas v. Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 622, 71 CR2d 830, 845; Silver v. Boatwright Home Inspection, Inc. (2002) 97 CA4th 443, 450, 118 CR2d 475, 479]

Thus, if the contractual fee recovery clause is worded broadly enough to apply to both contract and noncontract (tort) causes of action (¶ 11:137), the court has discretion to determine defendant is a prevailing party following plaintiff's voluntary dismissal, entitled to recover fees incurred to defend tort and other noncontract claims.

[Santisas v. Goodin, supra, 17 C4th at 622, 71 CR2d at 845 (buyers voluntarily dismissed suit against sellers for breach of contract, negligence and deceit based on alleged defects in home; purchase agreement provided for prevailing party fees in any action "arising out of" the agreement); see also Khan v. Shim (2016) 7 CA5th 49, 55, 59-62, 212 CR3d 292, 297, 300-303 (discussed at ¶ 11:394.1 ff.); compare Exxess Electronixx v. Heger Realty Corp. (1998) 64 CA4th 698, 712-713, 75 CR2d 376, 386—no postdismissal prevailing party fee recovery on noncontract causes of action because underlying contract provided for fee recovery only in contract actions]

1/ [11:139.17] Factors considered in determining "prevailing party" after dismissal: In deciding "prevailing party" status on noncontract claims after a voluntary dismissal, the court first looks to the parties' contractual attorney fees provision to determine if it defines who is a "prevailing party" or addresses voluntary pretrial dismissals. When the contract does not provide such guidance, the court "should be pragmatic," examining the reason for the dismissal and the extent to which the parties realized their litigation objectives (dismissed defendants are not automatically "prevailing parties" for fee recovery purposes). [Santisas v. Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 621-622, 71 CR2d 830, 845; Silver v. Boatwright Home Inspection, Inc. (2002) 97 CA4th 443, 452, 118 CR2d 475, 481—dismissed defendant not prevailing party because plaintiffs attained their litigation objective by recovering settlement moneys from parties other than defendant]

g) [11:139.20] Compare—*statutory fees: The Civ.C. § 1717(b)(2) bar likewise does not apply to fees awarded under a fee-shifting statute (not based on contract) that authorizes attorney fee awards regardless of whether the parties had a prior agreement. [Parrott v. Mooring Townhomes Ass'n, Inc. (2003) 112 CA4th 873, 878-880, 6 CR3d 116, 120-122 (prevailing party award under statutory action to enforce CC&Rs); Del Cerro Mobile Estates v. Proffer (2001) 87 CA4th 943, 948-949, 105 CR2d 5, 8 (Civ.C. § 798.85 prevailing party fee award under Mobilehome Residency Law)]

8) [11:139.21] Effect of success on appeal: Civ.C. § 1717 fees awardable in an action on the contract include the prevailing party's fees incurred on appeal. [Sixells, LLC v. Cannery Business Park (2008) 170 CA4th 648, 655-656, 88 CR3d 235, 240]

However, a party who prevails on appeal in the action is not necessarily the "prevailing party" entitled to a Civ.C. § 1717 attorney fees award. Section 1717 fees are awardable to the party who prevailed in the lawsuit as a whole. Thus, where the appeal does not decide who wins the lawsuit, but only a separate issue in the case, winning the appeal does not ipso facto confer § 1717 prevailing party status warranting a fee award for the successful appeal, and this is so even if no further (post-appeal) trial court proceedings are required. [See de la Carriere v. Greene (2019) 39 CA5th 270, 276-277, 251 CR3d 795, 800 (finding defendant recovered "greater amount" on contract action both before and after appeal)—defendant who voluntarily dismissed appeal challenging his damage award remained "prevailing party," resulting in plaintiff losing her bid for appellate attorney fees (¶ 4:514.2); Wood v. Santa Monica Escrow Co. (2009) 176 CA4th 802, 804, 97 CR3d 909, 910—plaintiff's success on defendant's appeal of denial of attorney fees in main action did not entitle plaintiff to fees incurred on appeal because appeal did not decide who won lawsuit (defendant was prevailing party in lawsuit because plaintiff had voluntarily dismissed it); Mustachio v. Great Western Bank (1996) 48 CA4th 1145, 1149, 56 CR2d 33, 35; Presley of Southern Calif. v. Whelan (1983) 146 CA3d 959, 961, 196 CR 1, 2]

9) [11:139.23] Recovery by nonsignatories: A person not a party to the contract containing the attorney fees clause may recover Civ.C. § 1717 fees as the prevailing party in an action on the contract only if that person would have been liable for the opposing party's fees had that person lost the action. [Reynolds Metals Co. v. Alperson (1979) 25 C3d 124, 128, 158 CR 1, 3; Loduca v. Polyzos (2007) 153 CA4th 334, 341, 62 CR3d 780, 784; see also Cargill, Inc. v. Souza (2011) 201 CA4th 962, 966, 134 CR3d 39, 42—nonsignatories are entitled to § 1717 fees if they stand "in the shoes" of a party or are third-party beneficiaries of contract]

This rule applies not only where a nonsignatory prevails in the original contract action, but also when the nonsignatory prevails in post-judgment proceedings by the judgment creditor. [See Westwood Homes, Inc. v.

a) Application

• [11:139.24] A cooperating broker successfully sued to obtain a commission under a listing agreement between the listing broker and seller; the listing agreement contained an attorney fee provision. Although not a party to the listing agreement, the cooperating broker was entitled to a Civ.C. § 1717 prevailing party fee recovery because he would have been liable for fees under the listing agreement had he lost the suit. [Steve Schmidt & Co. v. Berry (1986) 183 CA3d 1299, 1315-1317, 228 CR 689, 699-700]

• [11:139.25] Plaintiff entered into a construction contract with defendant, and obtained a line of credit from Bank to finance the construction by executing a promissory note and security agreement in favor of Bank, both of which contained attorney fees clauses. Plaintiff sued defendant and Bank intervened to assert claims against defendant.

Defendant obtained a judgment against Bank on one claim. Even though defendant was not a signatory to the promissory note and security agreement, defendant was entitled to an attorney fee award against Bank because it would have been liable for Bank's attorney fees, consistent with the terms of the security agreement, had Bank prevailed on the claim against defendant. [Dell Merk, Inc. v. Franzia (2005) 132 CA4th 443, 450-456, 33 CR3d 694, 699-704]

• [11:139.25a] Plaintiff subleased a portion of its office space to defendant. The sublease provided for a reasonable attorney fee award to the prevailing party in the event of a lawsuit. Plaintiff later filed a lawsuit against defendant for breach of contract and named defendant's managing partner as an alter ego defendant.

Plaintiff prevailed against the defendant sublessee on the breach of contract claim, but the defendant's managing partner prevailed against plaintiff on the alter ego claim (i.e., she was dismissed with prejudice). Thus, although defendant's managing partner was not a party to the contract, she was entitled to recover her attorney fees because plaintiff would have been entitled to recover its attorney fees against her had it prevailed on its alleged alter ego theory. "In some lawsuits involving more than two parties, there may be more than one 'prevailing party' entitled to contractual attorney fees under Civil Code section 1717." [Burkhalter Kessler Clement & George LLP v. Hamilton (2018) 19 CA5th 38, 40-41, 46, 228 CR3d 154, 156, 160]

b) [11:139.26] Recovery despite baseless contract claim against nonsignatory: A nonsignatory is entitled to a Civ.C. § 1717 prevailing party fee award under the Reynolds Metals standard (¶ 11:139.23) even if the contractual claim asserted against it is baseless. [Dell Merk, Inc. v. Franzia (2005) 132 CA4th 443, 455, 33 CR3d 694, 703 & fn. 13; Sessions Payroll Management, Inc. v. Noble Const. Haver (2013) 219 CA4th 809, 819, 162 CR3d 9, 17—nonsignatory company sued on successor liability theory entitled to § 1717 prevailing party fee award after it defeated signatory's efforts to enforce contract; and ¶ 11:139.1]

c) [11:139.27] Nonsignatory fee recovery on successful tort claims: A nonsignatory's entitlement to Civ.C. § 1717 attorney fees under Reynolds Metals (¶ 11:139.23) arises only to the extent the nonsignatory prevails in an action on the contract containing the attorney fee clause. The underlying § 1717 "mutuality of remedy" rationale has no application to a nonsignatory who prevails on a tort or other noncontract cause of action; and because the nonsignatory is not a party to the contract containing the attorney fees clause, the nonsignatory in such cases is not eligible for a contractual attorney fee award. [Topanga & Victory Partners, LLP v. Toghia (2002) 103 CA4th 775, 786-787, 127 CR2d 104, 111-112—shareholder sued by landlord as tenant corporation's alter ego not entitled to attorney fees after prevailing on tort causes of action because attorney fee provision was expressly limited to named landlord and tenant; see also Brown Bark III, L.P. v. Haver (2013) 219 CA4th 809, 827-829, 162 CR3d 9, 24-25—nonsignatory who sued for breach of contract, fraud, and conversion as tenant's successor not entitled to attorney fees for defending tort causes of action since Civ.C. § 1717 does not apply to tort actions and attorney fee clause did not identify nonsignatory as party entitled to benefit therefrom; compare Hom v. Petrou (2021) 67 CA5th 459, 471-472, 282 CR3d 209, 219 (distinguishing Topanga and Brown Bark)—lessee's lenders who had encumbrance on leasehold entitled to recover prevailing party attorney fees on landlord's tort causes of action because (i) lenders were third party beneficiaries of lease, and (ii) lease's attorney fee provision covering "any dispute" arising from lease or tenancy was sufficiently broad and not limited to disputes between contracting parties]

10) [11:139.28] Recovery against nonsignatories: A party prevailing in a contract action may enforce an attorney fees provision in the contract against a nonsignatory party only if the nonsignatory would have been entitled to recover its fees under the contractual provision had it prevailed. Thus, a court must interpret the underlying contract to determine whether the contracting parties intended the attorney fees provision to benefit the nonsignatory (i.e., whether the nonsignatory is a third-party beneficiary of the attorney fees clause). [In re Bennett (9th Cir. 2002) 298 F3d 1059, 1071 (applying Calif. law); see also Apex LLC v. Korusfood.com (2013) 222 CA4th 1010, 1017-1018, 166 CR3d 370, 375-376 (discussed at ¶ 11:139.28e); and Cargill, Inc. v. Souza (2011) 201 CA4th 962, 967, 134 CR3d 39, 42-43—third-party beneficiary need not be named in contract where agreement reflects contracting parties' intent to benefit unnamed party (discussed further at ¶ 11:139.28d)]

• [11:139.28a] A nonsignatory broker was obligated to pay the prevailing party's attorney fees in an action on a real estate purchase agreement where the fee provision therein "unambiguously" included the broker within the ambit of its benefits and performance obligations. • [11:139.28b] A nonsignatory plaintiff was obligated to pay attorney fees to the prevailing signatory defendant in an action on a contract where the contract contained a reciprocal prevailing party attorney fee provision that was assigned to the nonsignatory plaintiff by a signatory to the contract. [California Wholesale Material Supply, Inc. v. Norm Wilson & Sons, Inc. (2002) 96 CA4th 598, 608, 117 CR2d 390, 396-397]

• [11:139.28c] Decedent's successor in interest was liable for attorney fees in an action he commenced on a contract decedent previously entered into with her bank. The court determined decedent and the prevailing defendant bank intended the contract's reciprocal attorney fee provision to extend to decedent's successor in interest—i.e., her successor in interest effectively "stepped" into decedent's position. [See Exarhos v. Exarhos (2008) 159 CA4th 898, 906-907, 72 CR3d 409, 416-417 (also noting court need only determine whether successor in interest would be entitled to fees if he prevailed, not whether he could prevail on merits)]

• [11:139.28d] A nonsignatory plaintiff was liable for attorney fees in an action it commenced on a contract previously entered into between the signatory defendants and the nonsignatory plaintiff's debtors. The signatory defendants had made loans to the debtors secured by an interest in their cattle and farm equipment. Upon the debtors' default, the signatory defendants and the debtors entered into an agreement by which the debtors transferred their cattle and equipment to the signatory defendants in exchange for their agreement not to sue and to pay the debtors' creditors as listed on an exhibit to the agreement, although the exhibit was left blank.

The nonsignatory plaintiff (one of the debtors' unnamed creditors) filed a complaint against the signatory defendants to reform and enforce the agreement as a third-party beneficiary. The signatory defendants prevailed on summary judgment and moved for an award of Civ.C. § 1717 fees under the agreement's attorney fees clause. Because the nonsignatory plaintiff would have been entitled to fees as a third-party beneficiary of the agreement had it prevailed, the signatory defendants were entitled to their fees. [See Cargill, Inc. v. Souza (2011) 201 CA4th 962, 964-965, 970, 134 CR3d 39, 40-41, 45—even though nonsignatory plaintiff not expressly named in transfer agreement, contract clearly reflected intent to benefit unnamed creditors]

• [11:139.28e] A nonsignatory exporter was bound by an attorney fees provision in a signatory exporter's credit applications with a merchandiser because the nonsignatory exporter formerly did business under the name the signatory exporter currently used and the same person verified the answer to the merchandiser's complaint as an officer of both exporters. [Apex LLC v. Korusfood.com (2013) 222 CA4th 1010, 1017-1018, 166 CR3d 370, 375-376—nonsignatory exporter "stepped into the shoes" of signatory exporter]

• [11:139.28f] Compare: A nonsignatory to a construction-related subcontract was not liable for fees in an action for breach of the contract because the contract expressly disclaimed any third-party rights or benefits. (f) [11:139.30] Role of judicial estoppel: At least where both parties are signatories to the contract, the doctrine of judicial estoppel may preclude one party from defending a Civ.C. § 1717 fee recovery claim on the ground the contract does not contain an attorney fee clause.

Under the doctrine of judicial estoppel, a party who pleads entitlement to contractual attorney fees at the outset of the contract litigation and later loses on that issue may not assert that the contract does not authorize a prevailing party fee award (in an effort to defend against the other party's right to Civ.C. § 1717 fees). "Where a party claims that a contract allows fees and proves it, that party gets fees. Where a party claims that a contract allows fees and does not prove it, the opponent gets fees." [*M. 1) [11:139.31] Compare—no estoppel vis-à-vis nonsignatories: The judicial estoppel doctrine will not operate, however, as between a contracting party and nonsignatories to the contract who themselves would not have been liable for contractual attorney fees had they lost the litigation nor, conversely, entitled to contractual attorney fees upon winning the litigation. [See M. Perez Co., Inc. v. Base Camp Condominiums Ass'n No. One (2003) 111 CA4th 456, 470, 3 CR3d 563, 574; *Sessions Payroll Management, Inc. v. Noble Const. [11:139.32 - 11:139.35] Reserved.

(g) [11:139.36] "Fees incurred" requirement: Civ.C. § 1717 applies when the contract specifically provides that attorney fees "incurred to enforce that contract" shall be awarded to one of the parties or the prevailing party (Civ.C. § 1717(a)). Attorney fees are "incurred" within the meaning of § 1717 when a party "actually pays or becomes liable to pay" for legal representation in the contract litigation. [Trope v. Katz (1995) 11 C4th 274, 280, 45 CR2d 241, 245-246; see also Dzwonkowski v. Spinella (2011) 200 CA4th 930, 935, 133 CR3d 274, 277—"fees incurred" are evidenced by obligation to pay, existence of attorney-client relationship and distinct interests between attorney and client]

This includes:

• [11:139.37] Parties who retained counsel on a contingent fee basis. [Gonzales v. Personal Storage, Inc. (1997) 56 CA4th 464, 480, 65 CR2d 473, 483]

• [11:139.38] Parties whose defense costs are paid by a third party (nonparty or otherwise). [Staples v. Hoefke (1987) 189 CA3d 1397, 1409-1410, 235 CR 165, 172—paid by insurer; International Billing Services, Inc. v. Emigh (2000) 84 CA4th 1175, 1192-1193, 101 CR2d 532, 543-544—paid by employer]

• [11:139.38a] Parties represented by in-house counsel. [PLCM Group, Inc. v. Drexler (2000) 22 C4th 1084, 1091-1094, 95 CR2d 198, 203-205]

• [11:139.38b] Attorney litigants represented by other members of their law firms in personal matters. [Gilbert v. Master Washer & Stamping Co., Inc. (2001) 87 CA4th 212, 220, 104 CR2d 461, 466; Gorman v. Tassajara Develop. Corp. (2009) 178 CA4th 44, 96, 100 CR3d 152, 194 (¶ 11:139.43)]

• [11:139.38c] Coparty attorneys who hire each other to litigate an action for the recovery of fees from a client they formerly represented as co-counsel. [Farmers Ins. Exchange v. Law Offices of Conrado Joe Sayas, Jr. (9th Cir. 2001) 250 F3d 1234, 1238-1239 (applying and predicting Calif. law)]

• [11:139.38d] Attorney litigants represented by "of counsel." [See Dzwonkowski v. Spinella (2011) 200 CA4th 930, 936, 133 CR3d 274, 278—retained lawyer's "of counsel" title not dispositive of attorney litigant's eligibility to recover fees ("key" factors were nature of relationship and whether fees were incurred); compare Sands & Assocs. v. Juknavorian (2012) 209 CA4th 1269, 1273, 147 CR3d 725, 726 (¶ 11:139.41)]

1) [11:139.39] Application to pro per litigants: A party litigating in pro per (whether a nonattorney or attorney) ordinarily is not entitled to a Civ.C. § 1717 fee award. A self-represented party neither pays nor becomes liable to pay for legal representation in the contract action for § 1717 purposes, significantly because of the absence of an attorney-client relationship. [Trope v. Katz (1995) 11 C4th 274, 292, 45 CR2d 241, 254 (attorney pro per litigant)]

It is immaterial that the opposing party, if represented by counsel, would have been entitled to a § 1717 fee award had the opposing party prevailed in the litigation. A pro per litigant "necessarily assumes the risk" of that result. [Trope v. Katz, supra, 11 C4th at 289, 45 CR2d at 252]

a) Application

• [11:139.40] A law firm represented by its own employee-associates effectively represented itself and therefore could not recover Civ.C. § 1717 fees after prevailing in an action against its former client: "The teaching of Trope and its progeny is that law firms and attorney litigants are precluded from recovering attorney fees for self-representation." [See Soni v. Wellmike Enterprise Co. Ltd. (2014) 224 CA4th 1477, 1488, 169 CR3d 631, 639 & fn. 4 (noting firm would have been entitled to recover reasonable prevailing party fees had it hired outside counsel)]

• [11:139.41] A law firm could not recover Civ.C. § 1717 fees when represented by its "of counsel" due to their "close, personal, regular, and continuous" relationship that amounted to a "single, de facto firm." [Sands & Assocs. v. Juknavorian (2012) 209 CA4th 1269, 1273, 147 CR3d 725, 726 (distinguishing Dzwonkowski, where fees actually were incurred, ¶ 11:139.38d)]

• [11:139.42] Neither an attorney pro per litigant nor his spouse (whose interests were joint and indivisible) could recover fees for legal work performed by the attorney himself even though the fees were billed through the attorney's incorporated law firm, a so-called "separate entity." [Gorman v. Tassajara Develop. Corp. (2009) 178 CA4th 44, 93-95, 100 CR3d 152, 191-193]

b) [11:139.43] Compare—pro pers assisted by counsel: On the other hand, a pro per litigant (whether a nonattorney or attorney) may recover reasonable fees incurred for legal services of attorneys retained to assist the pro per in the litigation, notwithstanding that the assisting attorneys did not appear of record in the action. [Mix v. Tumanjan Develop. Corp. (2002) 102 CA4th 1318, 1324, 126 CR2d 267, 271-272 (attorney pro per litigant); and see Gorman v. Tassajara Develop. Corp. (2009) 178 CA4th 44, 96, 100 CR3d 152, 194—fees for work performed by other members (including paralegals) of pro per attorney's firm were recoverable in a matter involving the attorney's personal interests]

(h) [11:139.45] Amount fixed by court: Section 1717(a) vests the trial court with discretion to determine a "reasonable" fee. [Civ.C. § 1717(a); PLCM Group, Inc. v. Drexler (2000) 22 C4th 1084, 1095, 95 CR2d 198, 206; see also Syers Properties III, Inc. v. Rankin (2014) 226 CA4th 691, 698-699, 172 CR3d 456, 461-462 (noting there is no "required level of detail" counsel must achieve because time records are not required under Calif. law)—court has discretion to award fees based on declarations describing work counsel has performed and court's own view of number of hours "reasonably" spent; EnPalm, LLC v. Teitler Family Trust (2008) 162 CA4th 770, 774, 75 CR3d 902, 905—court has broad discretion to determine reasonable fee amount, governed by equitable principles; compare Walker v. Ticor Title Co. of Calif. (2012) 204 CA4th 363, 372, 138 CR3d 820, 827—although subject to equitable considerations, contractual attorney fee awards should not be based on losing party's financial condition]

1) [11:139.46] Effect of fee arrangements with client: In determining a reasonable attorney fee award, the court may consider the lawyer's fee arrangement with the client as some evidence of the value of the services rendered. [Vella v. Hudgins (1984) 151 CA3d 515, 521, 198 CR 725, 729]

But the agreement is not controlling, and the court may properly award a lesser sum. In that event, the victorious client may be obligated to pay their lawyer far more than the court has awarded. [Vella v. Hudgins, supra, 151 CA3d at 521, 198 CR at 729—contingency fee agreement obligated client to pay lawyer $100,000 but, after considering all relevant factors, court ordered other party to pay only $50,000]

2) [11:139.47] Not limited to amount actually "incurred": "Reasonable" attorney fees awardable under Civ.C. § 1717 are not limited to fees the prevailing party actually incurred for legal representation in the contract action. [See Syers Properties III, Inc. v. Rankin (2014) 226 CA4th 691, 701, 172 CR3d 456, 463—no requirement that fees awarded per "reasonable market rate" mirror actual rate billed; Walker v. Ticor Title Co. of Calif. (2012) 204 CA4th 363, 373, 138 CR3d 820, 827—while contractual terms may be considered, they "do not compel any particular award"]

The Cal. Supreme Court's reference in Trope v. Katz to attorney fees incurred as being the sum a litigant "actually pays or becomes liable to pay" for legal representation (¶ 11:139.36) "was not intended to imply that fees can be recovered only when, and to the extent that, a litigant incurs fees on a fee-for-service basis." [See PLCM Group, Inc. v. Drexler (2000) 22 C4th 1084, 1097, 95 CR2d 198, 207, fn. 5 (disapproving San Dieguito Partnership, L.P. v. San Dieguito River Valley Regional Open Space Park Joint Powers Authority (1998) 61 CA4th 910, 919, 72 CR2d 91, 95-96, to extent it suggests otherwise); Gilbert v. Master Washer & Stamping Co., Inc. (2001) 87 CA4th 212, 220-221, 104 CR2d 461, 467]

a) [11:139.48] Market rate measure for inhouse counsel services: Thus, e.g., where the prevailing party is represented by in-house counsel, a Civ.C. § 1717 award is not limited to the actual salary, costs and overhead of in-house counsel. Rather, the trial court properly applies a market rate measure—the reasonable in-house attorney hours multiplied by the prevailing hourly rate in the community for comparable legal services ("lodestar"), which may then be adjusted based on factors specific to the case. [See PLCM Group, Inc. v. Drexler (2000) 22 C4th 1084, 1094-1098, 95 CR2d 198, 205-208]

3) [11:139.49] Lodestar awards; augmentation or reduction based on equitable principles: Courts normally apply lodestar principles—i.e., a calculation based on the number of hours reasonably expended, multiplied by the lawyer's hourly rate—to calculate reasonable prevailing party contractual fee awards. [See EnPalm, LLC v. Teitler Family Trust (2008) 162 CA4th 770, 774, 75 CR3d 902, 905]

The lodestar figure may be adjusted, based on factors specific to the case, in order to fix the fees at the fair market value for the legal services provided. [PLCM Group, Inc. v. Drexler (2000) 22 C4th 1084, 1096, 95 CR2d 198, 206-207—factors considered include nature and difficulty of litigation, skill required, attention given, success or failure, etc.; see also EnPalm, LLC v. Teitler Family Trust, supra, 162 CA4th at 774, 75 CR3d at 906—necessity for litigation "also a factor to consider"; Gorman v. Tassajara Develop. Corp. (2009) 178 CA4th 44, 99, 100 CR3d 152, 196—after performing lodestar calculations, courts must reduce total prevailing party fee award if "under all circumstances" it is deemed "more than reasonable"]

a) [11:139.50] No lodestar adjustment solely as "punishment": A fee adjustment may not be imposed solely for the purpose of punishing one party's litigation conduct. However, fee awards may be enhanced or reduced "if there is some other proper basis aside from 'mere' punishment." [See EnPalm, LLC v. Teitler Family Trust (2008) 162 CA4th 770, 775-778, 75 CR3d 902, 907-909—using equitable considerations to reduce lodestar amount deemed proper where majority of prevailing party's attorney fees stemmed from litigation misconduct and thus were unnecessary]

(3) [11:140] Recovery of postjudgment fees: Attorney fees incurred in enforcing the judgment in the contract action are also recoverable where the underlying judgment includes a Civ.C. § 1717 fee award. [See CCP §§ 685.040, 685.070(a)(6); Berti v. Santa Barbara Beach Properties (2006) 145 CA4th 70, 76-77, 51 CR3d 364, 368-369; compare Imperial Bank v. Pim Electric, Inc. (1995) 33 CA4th 540, 557-558, 39 CR2d 432, 444—absence of fee award in underlying judgment precluded recovery of fees incurred to enforce judgment notwithstanding fact judgment was based on note and guarantees providing for attorney fee recovery; see also ¶ 11:140.11]

(4) [11:140.10] Procedure—costs of suit (not recoverable "damages"): Contractual attorney fees (like statutory fees) are recoverable as costs of suit—i.e., pursuant to the noticed motion procedure prescribed by CRC 3.1702. The fees are not awardable as the prevailing party's general or special "damages." [See CCP § 1033.5(c)(5); CRC 3.1702]

(a) [11:140.11] Deadline for motion: Pursuant to CRC 3.1702, the motion must be served and filed within the time for filing a notice of appeal under CRC 8.104 and 8.108. [CRC 3.1702(b)(1); see Exxess Electronixx v. Heger Realty Corp. (1998) 64 CA4th 698, 705, 75 CR2d 376, 381-382; Saben, Earlix & Assocs. v. Fillet (2005) 134 CA4th 1024, 1029-1031, 36 CR3d 610, 613-615—entry of nonappealable order granting summary judgment, or service of notice of entry of same, as opposed to entry of summary judgment, does not trigger CRC 3.1702(b)(1) limitations period]

The deadline may be extended, however, by stipulation or court order for good cause shown. [CRC 3.1702(b)(2), (d); Lee v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2001) 88 CA4th 1187, 1198, 106 CR2d 726, 735; see also Robinson v. U-Haul Co. of Calif. (2016) 4 CA5th 304, 326, 209 CR3d 81, 99—CRC 3.1702(d) deemed remedial in nature and given liberal interpretation]

Compare—postjudgment fees: The CRC 3.1702(b) deadline does not apply to motions for postjudgment fees (¶ 11:140) and no other deadline is specified in the Rules. The motion thus may be made at any time so long as delay does not unfairly prejudice the party from whom fees are sought. [See Crespin v. Shewry (2004) 125 CA4th 259, 263-271, 22 CR3d 696, 699-705 (motion for recovery of CCP § 1021.5 postjudgment fees)]

(b) [11:140.12] Memorandum of costs unnecessary: A party seeking Civ.C. § 1717 contractual attorney fees incurred before judgment need not file a memorandum of costs in addition to its attorney fee motion. [See Kaufman v. Diskeeper Corp. (2014) 229 CA4th 1, 4-6, 11, 176 CR3d 757, 758-760, 764]

Cross-refer: For further discussion of the substantive and procedural rules governing recovery of attorney fees under Civ.C. § 1717, see Wegner, Fairbank, Wegner, Wegner & Chernow, Cal. Prac. Guide: Civil Trials & Evidence (TRG), Ch. 17.

g. [11:141] Recourse to buyer's deposit: Until the court's final determination in the action, the seller may retain the buyer's deposit as a source of funds from which to recover its damages. [Beason v. Griff (1954) 127 CA2d 382, 274 P2d 47, 52]

But while the deposit may serve as a fund from which the seller obtains whole or partial reimbursement for actual losses, the seller must refund any excess over actual damages regardless of whether the buyer's breach is innocent or willful. [Kuish v. Smith (2010) 181 CA4th 1419, 1429, 105 CR3d 475, 482; Wade v. Lake County Title Co. (1970) 6 CA3d 824, 830-831, 86 CR 183, 186—vendors entitled to portion of defaulting vendee's deposit as compensation for vendor's actual losses, but retention of deposit in toto would constitute unauthorized penalty]

h. [11:142] Third party damages liability: In the event a third party induced the buyer's breach of contract, the seller may have a damages cause of action against the third party in addition to a right to recover Civ.C. § 3307 damages against the buyer. However, the claim against the third party would be a tort cause of action (e.g., tortious interference with contractual relations) and thus subject to a broader tort measure of damages (see Civ.C. § 3333—“amount which will compensate for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, whether it could have been anticipated or not”). [See Crummer v. Zalk (1967) 248 CA2d 794, 797-798, 57 CR 185, 187-188 (second defendant induced buyer's breach of land sale contract by collusion with buyer); compare Applied Equip. Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd. (1994) 7 C4th 503, 513-514, 28 CR2d 475, 480—contracting party owes no tort duty to refrain from interference with own contractual performance and thus cannot be liable in tort for inducing breach of or interfering with own contract (nor, therefore, can party in breach incur tort liability on theory of “conspiracy” to interfere with own contract)]

2. Seller's Right to Specific Performance

a. [11:150] Practical considerations for seller—in general: At one time, sellers might have been inclined to pursue a specific performance remedy against their breaching buyers because the court also could award ancillary relief in the form of “incidental” damages to make the seller whole, whereas (historically) consequential damages were not separately recoverable in a seller's breach of contract damages suit. [Ellis v. Mihelis (1963) 60 C2d 206, 219-220, 32 CR 415, 423; see also Kassir v. Zahabi (2008) 164 CA4th 1352, 1357, 80 CR3d 1, 4; and ¶ 11:278 ff.]

However, the above tactic is no longer necessary because Civ.C. § 3307 now expressly authorizes the seller's recovery of consequential damages in a breach of contract damages action (¶ 11:116 ff.). Indeed, because of the stringent prerequisites to a seller's successful pursuit of a specific performance remedy and the likelihood the ultimate relief will be unsatisfactory, a specific performance action is rarely a seller's preferred remedy.

➪ [11:151] PRACTICE POINTER: Those unique cases in which a seller may prefer specific performance might involve a real property exchange transaction between the parties, or when transfer of the real property is part of another, more complex transaction in which the remedy of specific performance may be more appropriate.

b. [11:152] Basic requirements: A seller may bring an action seeking an order that the buyer perform as required by the real property purchase agreement (specific performance) if all of the following requirements are met:

• a money damages award will not adequately compensate the seller for the buyer's breach;

• the buyer received adequate consideration;

• the contract is just and reasonable and would not subject the buyer to undue hardship;

• the contract terms are sufficiently certain and enforceable such that a court can determine with reasonable precision the act required to be performed by each party;

• the performance to be ordered by the court is substantially similar to the performance required by the contract;

• the contract is not illegal or the result of fraud, unfair practices or mistake;

• the seller has performed or tendered performance under the contract; and

• the required performance does not demand multiple acts by the parties over an extended period of time or other complicated performance that would make the court's supervision of its order impractical or impossible. [Civ.C. §§ 3384-3395; see also Union Oil Co. of Calif. v. Greka Energy Corp. (2008) 165 CA4th 129, 134, 80 CR3d 738, 741; and ¶ 11:211 ff. re buyer's action for specific performance]

(1) [11:152.1] Mutuality of remedy not required: See ¶ 11:212.

c. [11:153] Adequacy of money damages: Ordinarily, sellers are deemed to have an adequate legal remedy in the form of money damages, which should preclude specific performance. Nonetheless, a Civ.C. § 3307 remedy may be inadequate, supporting the seller's right to specific performance, where the value of the property has remained consistent with the contract price (thus precluding a general damages award, ¶ 11:103). [BD Inns v. Pooley (1990) 218 CA3d 289, 295-296, 266 CR 815, 818-819 & fn. 12 (relying in part on Civ.C. § 3387 presumption that breach of agreement to transfer real property cannot be adequately compensated by money damages)—Civ.C. § 3307 not intended to eliminate seller's ability to seek specific performance in the alternative; see also Waratah Oil Co. v. Reward Oil Co. (1914) 23 CA 638, 139 P 91, 92—seller cannot be denied specific performance simply because subject property can be sold at contract price]

• [11:153.1] Specific performance generally is the appropriate remedy for breach of an oil field clean-up agreement. Oil companies bargain for clean sites to avoid the risk of liability to regulatory agencies and landowners. Moreover, specific performance is the most direct means of remedying a breach and protecting the environment. [Union Oil Co. of Calif. v. Greka Energy Corp. (2008) 165 CA4th 129, 135-136, 80 CR3d 738, 741-742—when one party commits multiple breaches of a clean-up agreement, specific performance is preferred over inadequate remedy of repetitive future damage actions]

• [11:153.2] A public port district was properly ordered to specifically perform a covenant to periodically dredge a harbor channel located appurtenant to the original landowners' property. The covenant requiring the district to build and maintain the channel enhanced the value of the land retained by the original owners and was a material factor in their decision to transfer to the district that portion of their land on which a Marina was later built. [Ellison v. Ventura Port Dist. (1978) 80 CA3d 574, 579, 145 CR 665, 668; see also Union Oil Co. of Calif. v. Greka Energy Corp. (2008) 165 CA4th 129, 135, 80 CR3d 738, 742—"Ellison represents the modern view that a party entitled to specific performance of a continuing duty should receive it whenever it is practically feasible" (internal quotes and citation omitted)]

d. [11:154] Difficulty in concurrently pursuing damages action: Generally, a party is not precluded from pursuing alternative remedies of breach of contract damages and specific performance (¶ 11:11). Nonetheless, as a practical matter, a seller may encounter difficulty in proceeding in this fashion:

• [11:155] On the one hand, as stated, plaintiffs seeking specific performance must demonstrate that a legal damages remedy is inadequate. Thus, a seller must be able to plead and prove that Civ.C. § 3307 damages would not fully compensate the seller for its loss—specifically, that the fair market value of the property is basically equal to the contract price so Civ.C. § 3307 general damages would not be recoverable (¶ 11:103, 11:153).

• [11:156] On the other hand, to recover general damages under Civ.C. § 3307, the seller would have to plead and prove that the fair market value of the property was (as of the date of the breach) less than the contract price.

[11:157] Factually, these are almost entirely inconsistent positions and one of the principal reasons why sellers do not pursue an action for specific performance.

e. [11:158] Seller must remain able to perform: A seller opting to pursue a specific performance remedy must remain in a position to perform all of the terms and conditions of the contract. [Civ.C. § 3392; see Realmuto v. Gagnard (2003) 110 CA4th 193, 201, 1 CR3d 569, 575—seller's failure to satisfy condition precedent (delivery of real estate transfer disclosure statement, ¶ 11:80.6) not entitled to specific performance against buyer; Schmidt v. Callero (1950) 97 CA2d 582, 589-590, 218 P2d 80, 84-85—sellers not entitled to specific performance absent compliance with condition calling for completed title search]

Fundamentally, of course, the seller must remain able to convey the property to the buyer (retaining marketable title throughout pendency of the action). By selling the property to a third person, the seller terminates the contract and the right to seek specific performance. [Hollypark Realty Co. v. MacLoane (1958) 163 CA2d 549, 552, 329 P2d 532, 534; compare Petrolink, Inc. v. Lantel Enterprises (2022) 81 CA5th 156, 160-161, 296 CR3d 731, 732-734—no abuse of discretion in ordering tenant to complete sales transaction under purchase option even though title became encumbered by eminent domain action after court entered judgment ordering seller to convey property "free and clear of all encumbrances" (finding court retained equitable power to modify judgment and acted reasonably in concluding buyer should bear burden of encumbrance under circumstances, discussed further at ¶ 8:122.1)]

➪ [11:159] PRACTICE POINTERS: Since continued ability to convey clear title is essential to the seller's right to obtain specific performance, its hands are tied with regard to an outside sale or other transaction that might encumber title (e.g., even a short-term lease might jeopardize the seller's specific performance remedy). In an appreciating market, this factor alone should dissuade sellers from pursuing specific performance … because they will not be able to obtain the increased value of the property while the specific performance action is pending and success in the specific performance action will only yield the lower (contract) price. Thus, where real estate values are escalating, sellers are better advised to maximize their gain through a resale of the property, in turn suing the buyer for consequential damages (Civ.C. § 3307).

Even in a declining real estate market, a seller's specific performance action may be ill-advised … because, if the seller does not prevail in the action, the value of the property will have tumbled even further during pendency of the lawsuit.

(1) [11:159.1] Exception—partial performance: The seller's failure to fully perform its obligations under the purchase agreement is not fatal to a specific performance remedy against the buyer when the partial nonperformance is either "entirely immaterial" or "capable of being fully compensated." In such cases, specific performance may be compelled upon the seller's fully compensating the buyer for the default under the contract. [Civ.C. § 3392; see Realmuto v. Gagnard (2003) 110 CA4th 193, 204, 1 CR3d 569, 577—seller's failure to provide Civ.C. § 1102 et seq. transfer disclosure statement not an immaterial "partial nonperformance"]

f. [11:160] Waiver of conditions: The nonperformance of conditions precedent for the seller's benefit is not a defense to the seller's right to specific performance where the seller has waived (or indicates a willingness to waive) those conditions. [Laske v. Lampasona (1948) 89 CA2d 284, 289-290, 200 P2d 871, 875—buyer's obligation to provide seller with fire insurance policy as condition to sale transaction waived by seller's acceptance of specific performance judgment]

g. [11:161] Enforcement issues: A specific enforcement decree will either (1) order the defaulting buyer to pay the contract price and the seller to convey the property to the buyer (Laske v. Lampasona (1948) 89 CA2d 284, 288-289, 200 P2d 871, 874; Goldsworthy v. Dobbins (1952) 110 CA2d 802, 809-810, 243 P2d 883, 887-888); or (2) be in the form of a judgment passing title to the buyer with an order for the buyer to pay the contract price and incidental damages to the seller (Goldsworthy v. Dobbins, supra).

In either case, enforcement of the buyer's obligation to pay can present problems for a seller.

(1) [11:162] Judicial sale: If the judgment directs the buyer to pay the contract price concurrently with the seller's conveyance and the buyer fails to pay, the court may order a judicial sale of the property. The seller may find this remedy to be wholly inadequate because the distress price obtained at a court-ordered sale may not cover the entire contract purchase price. A deficiency judgment would then be rendered against the buyer for the balance, but it may be difficult (or impossible) for the seller to collect. Moreover, if the contract called for credit terms (rather than an all-cash sale), courts may bar attempts to collect a deficiency judgment pursuant to CCP § 580b (see ¶ 6:563 ff.). [Kerrigan v. Maloof (1950) 98 CA2d 605, 616, 221 P2d 153, 160; Goldsworthy v. Dobbins (1952) 110 CA2d 802, 808, 243 P2d 883, 887]

(2) [11:163] Complicated enforcement precluding specific performance: If either party's performance under the contract is particularly complex or difficult (e.g., contract gives buyer option to purchase a series of parcels), the court may refuse to grant specific performance in order to avoid onerous and time-consuming court supervision. [See generally, Ellison v. Ventura Port Dist. (1978) 80 CA3d 574, 580-581, 145 CR 665, 669, and cases cited therein; Moklofsky v. Moklofsky (1947) 79 CA2d 259, 262-263, 179 P2d 628, 630-631 (real property purchase contract also called for construction of staircase)]

3. [11:164] Other Seller Remedies: Other remedies—including reformation, rescission and damages for fraud—are available to both a seller and buyer. These are separately discussed at ¶ 11:350 ff.

Chapter 11. Remedies in Purchase and Sale Transactions

D. Buyer's Remedies Upon Seller's Breach—Damages and Specific Performance

- 1. Buyer's Breach of Contract Damages
  - a. [11:181] Amount of damages—in general
    - (1) [11:182] Civ.C. § 3306 damages for breach of covenant to convey
    - (2) [11:183] Civ.C. § 3300 damages for other breach
    - (3) [11:184] Compare—liquidated damages recovery
    - (4) [11:185] Compare—specific performance
      - (a) [11:186] Incidental compensation
  - b. [11:187] Buyer's tender of performance prerequisite
    - (1) [11:188] Seller's breach ordinarily determined as of contract time for performance
    - (2) [11:189] Compare—seller's anticipatory breach
      - (a) [11:189.1] Limitation—proof of ability to perform required
  - c. Compensatory damages for breach of covenant to convey (Civ.C. § 3306)
    - (1) [11:190] Amount paid plus appreciated value
      - (a) [11:190.1] When property value determined
    - (2) [11:191] Other incidental/consequential damages
      - (a) [11:192] Lost profits
        - 1) [11:192.1] Pleading and proof requirements
      - (b) [11:192.5] Reimbursement of capital gains taxes
  - d. [11:193] Interest
    - (1) [11:193.1] Subject to Civ.C. § 3287
      - (a) [11:193.2] Absolute entitlement where damages “certain”
      - (b) [11:193.3] Otherwise, discretionary
    - (2) [11:193.4] Interest rate
      - (a) [11:193.4a] Exception—note secured by deed of trust
    - (3) [11:193.4b] Accrual date
      - (a) [11:193.5] Section 3287(a) interest—accrual upon breach
      - (b) [11:193.6] Section 3287(b) interest—accrual from date action filed (court's discretion)
    - (4) [11:193.10] Procedure for requesting § 3287 interest
  - e. [11:194] Compare—punitive damages
  - f. [11:195] Attorney fees
  - g. [11:196] Civ.C. § 3300 measure of damages for seller's breach of obligation other than failure to convey title
    - (1) [11:196.1] Foreseeability limitation
      - (a) [11:196.2] Not consequential emotional distress damages
      - (b) [11:196.3] Not speculative damages
    - (2) [11:197] Delayed performance

      - (a) [11:229] Reliance on custom and reason
    - (2) [11:230] Fatally uncertain terms
  - e. [11:240] Buyer's ability to perform
    - (1) [11:241] Sufficient financing
      - (a) [11:242] Loan commitment
        - 1) [11:243] Legally binding funding obligation?
        - 2) [11:243.5] Effect of escalating “equity cushion”
      - (b) [11:244] Nonbinding third party agreement
    - (2) [11:245] Partial performance
    - (3) [11:245.5] Excused nonperformance—seller's failure to cooperate
  - f. [11:246] Effect of seller's inability to perform
    - (1) [11:247] Seller's ability tested as of trial date
      - (a) [11:248] Seller lacking title
    - (2) [11:249] Substantially similar performance
      - (a) [11:250] Transfer to BFP rendering conveyance of title impossible
        - 1) [11:251] Compare—transferees with knowledge of buyer's contractual interest
      - (b) [11:253] Defective title
  - g. [11:260] Court supervision as factor
  - h. [11:261] Waiver of conditions precedent
  - i. Additional parties
    - (1) [11:262] Intervening transferees
    - (2) [11:263] Third parties under contract with seller
    - (3) [11:264] Third party lienholders
    - (4) [11:265] Co-owners
      - (a) [11:266] Community property complications
  - j. [11:270] Equitable defenses
  - k. [11:271] No right to jury trial
    - (1) [11:271.1] Notwithstanding dispute over existence of contract

(2) [11:272] Impact where complaint seeks legal damages in the alternative
(3) [11:273] Compare—incidental “damages” pursuant to specific performance decree
l. [11:275] Specific enforcement decree
(1) [11:276] Buyer as equitable owner
(2) [11:277] Court clerk as “elisor” to effect conveyance
(3) [11:278] Incidental “damages” (equitable accounting)
(a) [11:279] Not “legal damages” for breach of contract
(b) [11:280] Accounting process—general rules
1) [11:280.1] Limitations
2) [11:281] Rents/profits
3) [11:282] Other expenses incurred by buyer
a) [11:282.1] No offset for buyer's attorney fees incurred to obtain specific performance
4) [11:283] Limitation on seller's interest offset where funds in escrow
3. [11:300] Lis Pendens as Interim Protection
4. [11:333] Other Buyer Remedies

[11:180] A buyer's basic remedies for the seller's breach of a real property purchase agreement mirror those available to a seller following the buyer's breach: a damages action for breach of contract, or an action for specific performance. Whereas sellers rarely pursue specific performance, buyers find specific performance to be an important and powerful remedy (see ¶ 11:210 ff.).

1. Buyer's Breach of Contract Damages

a. [11:181] Amount of damages—in general: Like an aggrieved seller, a buyer's recoverable damages for the seller's breach of contract will be defined either (1) by the terms of the contract (a valid liquidated damages clause); or (2) if there is no applicable contract provision, by statute (Civ.C. §§ 3306 or 3300).

(1) [11:182] Civ.C. § 3306 damages for breach of covenant to convey: Generally, for a seller's breach of contract to convey an estate in real property, the buyer is entitled to recover those damages allowed by Civ.C. § 3306, as follows:

- the price paid;
- the expenses “properly incurred” in examining title and preparing the “necessary papers”;
- the difference between the agreed-upon price and the value of the estate agreed to be conveyed at the time of the breach—i.e., the “market-contract differential” (Horning v. Shilberg (2005) 130 CA4th 197, 206, 29 CR3d 717, 724-725);
- the expenses “properly incurred in preparing to enter upon the land”;
- consequential damages “according to proof”; and
- interest. [Civ.C. § 3306; Schellinger Bros. v. Cotter (2016) 2 CA5th 984, 1009-1010, 207 CR3d 82, 103-104 (¶ 11:191); Residential Capital, LLC v. Cal-Western Reconveyance Corp. (2003) 108 CA4th 807, 824, 134 CR2d 162, 175, fn. 6; see also Greenwich S.F., LLC v. Wong (2010) 190 CA4th 739, 753, 118 CR3d 531, 542—measure of damages is difference between contract price and fair market value at time of breach plus consequential damages]

Civ.C. § 3306 supersedes the more general measure of contract damages (Civ.C. § 3300, ¶ 11:183 ff.) whenever the buyer's action is based on a seller's breach of its covenant to convey real property. [Gorges v. Johnson (1959) 167 CA2d 349, 353, 334 P2d 621, 624; see also Greenwich S.F., LLC v. Wong, supra, 190 CA4th at 751, 118 CR3d at 540—rules governing damages for breach of real property sales contracts are “special and unique”]

(2) [11:183] Civ.C. § 3300 damages for other breach: On the other hand, when the seller's breach concerns a covenant other than the conveyance of title, the Civ.C. § 3300 general measure of contract damages applies (Christensen v. Slawter (1959) 173 CA2d 325, 330, 343 P2d 341, 343-344—damages for delay in conveying):

"[E]xcept where otherwise expressly provided by this code," the measure of damages for breach of contract "is the amount which will compensate the party aggrieved for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, or which, in the ordinary course of things, would be likely to result therefrom." [Civ.C. § 3300; SCI Calif. Funeral Services, Inc. v. Five Bridges Found. (2012) 203 CA4th 549, 563, 137 CR3d 693, 705 (damages for failure to convey ornamental signage easement); see ¶ 11:196 ff.]

(3) [11:184] Compare—liquidated damages recovery: Where a valid liquidated damages provision in the contract fixes the buyer's recoverable damages in the event of the seller's breach of its obligation to convey, the buyer's damages remedy will be defined solely by the contract, superseding damages otherwise recoverable under Civ.C. §§ 3300 or 3306. [Cf. Barlan, Inc. v. Reagan (1963) 220 CA2d 116, 120, 33 CR 831, 833-834—even assuming validity of liquidated damages clause, statutory measure of damages governed because buyer's action involved a breach different from that to which liquidated damages provision applied]

(4) [11:185] Compare—specific performance: The aggrieved buyer may have alternative remedies of legal damages or specific performance for the seller's breach of contract. Both remedies can be pleaded in the complaint (¶ 11:11). However, the buyer ordinarily cannot be awarded both remedies because it would constitute a "double recovery"; e.g., the buyer cannot receive both a conveyance of the property itself by a decree of specific performance and Civ.C. § 3306 damages (payments made toward the purchase price, etc.). [Rogers v. Davis (1994) 28 CA4th 1215, 1220, 34 CR2d 716, 719]

(a) [11:186] Incidental compensation: By the same token, a specific performance decree awarding the buyer the property does not preclude an award of additional (incidental) compensation (sometimes incorrectly referred to as "damages") where necessary to fully vindicate the buyer's contractual rights—e.g., rents and profits lost during the time the seller wrongfully refused to convey the property. But, as distinguished from Civ.C. § 3306 or § 3300 damages, such incidental compensation is not for breach of contract and is not "legal damages." [Rogers v. Davis (1994) 28 CA4th 1215, 1220-1221, 34 CR2d 716, 720]

Rather, compensation in a specific performance action is more like an accounting between the parties that seeks to put them in the position they should have been in had the change in ownership taken place at the time called for in the contract. [BD Inns v. Pooley (1990) 218 CA3d 289, 298-299, 266 CR 815, 820; see Rogers v. Davis, supra, 28 CA4th at 1220-1221, 34 CR2d at 720; and further discussion at ¶ 11:278 ff.]

b. [11:187] Buyer's tender of performance prerequisite: Because the buyer's payment of the contract price and the seller's conveyance of title are mutually dependent concurrent conditions, the buyer ordinarily must prove it was ready, willing and able to pay the purchase price as and when required under the contract. [Diamond v. Huenergardt (1959) 175 CA2d 214, 220, 346 P2d 37, 41; see Gaggero v. Yura (2003) 108 CA4th 884, 890, 134 CR2d 313, 318—past and present ability to perform under purchase agreement is requirement for breach of contract; see also ¶ 11:81]

Therefore, unless the seller repudiates the contract or the seller's performance is made impossible, a buyer can be required to tender its performance (the purchase price) in order to enforce its remedies. [Civ.C. §§ 1439, 1440; Beverage v. Canton Placer Mining Co. (1955) 43 C2d 769, 777, 278 P2d 694, 700; Katemis v. Westerlind (1953) 120 CA2d 537, 545-546, 261 P2d 553, 559-560, appl. after new trial (1956) 142 CA2d 799, 299 P2d 383]

(1) [11:188] Seller's breach ordinarily determined as of contract time for performance: Absent an anticipatory repudiation (¶ 11:189 ff.), a seller has not breached its obligation to convey the property until the date required for conveyance under the purchase agreement. Therefore, the seller's inability to convey title at any time before the time specified in the contract ordinarily is not itself a breach of contract. [Fara v. Wells (1957) 156 CA2d 322, 328, 319 P2d 394, 398—"a person may legitimately contract to sell real property which he does not own, provided that when the time comes to furnish the title as agreed he is able to do so"]

(2) [11:189] Compare—seller's anticipatory breach: On the other hand, a buyer need not postpone pursuit of its breach of contract remedies where the seller has taken action before the date its performance is due under the contract that renders its conveyance of title impossible. [Weneda Corp. v. Dispalatro (1964) 225 CA2d 187, 191, 37 CR 267, 270—buyer's tender not required where seller unable to perform]

For example, the seller's transfer of title to a completely unrelated entity over which it has no control prior to the contract closing date would constitute an anticipatory repudiation/breach; in that event, the buyer will be excused from performance and will have an immediate right of action against the seller (see ¶ 11:59 ff., 11:89 re anticipatory breach).

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(a) [11:189.1] Limitation—proof of ability to perform required: Nonetheless, while the seller's anticipatory repudiation excuses the buyer's tender of performance, a buyer seeking damages must still offer evidence showing that, but for the breach, the buyer would have had the ability to perform. [County of Solano v. Vallejo Redevelopment Agency (1999) 75 CA4th 1262, 1276, 90 CR2d 41, 51; Ersa Grae Corp. v. Fluor Corp. (1991) 1 CA4th 613, 625-626, 2 CR2d 288, 295-296]

c. Compensatory damages for breach of covenant to convey (Civ.C. § 3306)

(1) [11:190] Amount paid plus appreciated value: For a breach of the seller's covenant to convey, the aggrieved buyer is entitled to recover any amount already paid toward the purchase at the time of the breach. [Civ.C. § 3306]

Beyond this (and other than incidental damages, ¶ 11:191 ff.), a compensatory damages award for the seller's breach requires the buyer to prove the property was worth more than the contract price at the time of the breach (i.e., the time the seller was obligated to effect the conveyance). [Civ.C. § 3306; Horning v. Shilberg (2005) 130 CA4th 197, 206, 29 CR3d 717, 724-725—where buyer presented no evidence of property's value on date of breach, market-contract differential damages were zero; see also Simon v. San Paolo U.S. Holding Co., Inc. (2005) 35 C4th 1159, 1176, 29 CR3d 379, 390]

If the contract price equaled or exceeded the property's fair market value at the time of the seller's breach, the buyer's recovery will be limited to incidental damages (¶ 11:191 ff.).

(a) [11:190.1] When property value determined: For purposes of determining compensatory damages under Civ.C. § 3306, the property's fair market value is determined at the time of the breach, not the time of trial. Otherwise, "contract damages would be dependent not on the reasonable expectations of the parties at the time of their contracts, but on the fluctuations in the real estate market, the existence of congestion in the calendars of trial courts, and the success of the parties in delaying or advancing trial dates, depending on which tactic was to their advantage." [Reese v. Wong (2001) 93 CA4th 51, 60, 112 CR2d 669, 676—in specific performance action where lis pendens expunged and property sold before trial, "plain language" of § 3306 did not provide exception determining property value at time of trial rather than time of breach; see also Horning v. Shilberg (2005) 130 CA4th 197, 206-207, 29 CR3d 717, 725—buyer not entitled to damages representing lost resale profits based on difference between contract price and price seller received from later sale of property to another buyer]

(2) [11:191] Other incidental/consequential damages: In any case (whether or not the property's fair market value exceeds the contract price), the buyer is entitled to recover its costs of examining title, documentation costs and expenses properly incurred in furtherance of the contract. [Civ.C. § 3306; cf. Baran v. Goldberg (1948) 86 CA2d 506, 511-512, 194 P2d 765, 769 (consequential damages properly denied because buyers proffered no evidence of same)]

The buyer also is entitled to recover any other consequential damages that, although not expressly identified in Civ.C. § 3306, are a reasonably foreseeable consequence of the seller's breach—i.e., where the circumstances from which the claimed damages arise were actually communicated to or known by the seller or were matters of which the seller should have been aware at the time of contracting (see ¶ 11:116). [Civ.C. § 3306—"consequential damages according to proof"; Stevens Group Fund IV v. Sobrato Develop. Co. (1991) 1 CA4th 886, 892, 2 CR2d 460, 462-463; see also Schellinger Bros. v. Cotter (2016) 2 CA5th 984, 1009-1010, 207 CR3d 82, 103-104—developer's costs, including those incurred for extensive local government interaction, were foreseeable and proximately caused by property owner's breach, thus qualifying as both recoverable "expenses properly incurred in preparing to enter upon the land [and] consequential damages" (brackets in original; internal quotes omitted); Ash v. North American Title Co. (2014) 223 CA4th 1258, 1270, 168 CR3d 499, 507—consequential (or special) damages for breach of contract are limited to losses either actually foreseen or "reasonably foreseeable" when contract was formed]

(a) [11:192] Lost profits: The buyer's lost profits generally are not recoverable consequential damages under Civ.C. § 3306 (although such damages may be recoverable under a fraud cause of action, ¶ 11:383; or as incidental compensation pursuant to a decree of specific performance, ¶ 11:280). Unless the buyer purchased the property for resale and the seller was aware of the buyer's intention to resell the property, lost profits are not deemed a reasonably foreseeable, natural consequence of the seller's breach of its obligation to convey. [Coger v. Wiltsey (1931) 117 CA 653, 4 P2d 302, 304; see also Greenwich S.F., LLC v. Wong (2010) 190 CA4th 739, 751, 118 CR3d 531, 540 & fn. 9 (citing text); Horning v. Shilberg (2005) 130 CA4th 197, 207, 29 CR3d 717, 725, fn. 8]

Nor in any event would lost profits be recoverable as consequential damages where the profits have been accounted for in a fair market valuation of the property. "To allow [lost profits] as consequential damages under these circumstances would have permitted a double recovery …" [Stevens Group Fund IV v. Sobrato Develop. Co. (1991) 1 CA4th 886, 892, 2 CR2d 460, 463—buyer could not separately recover lost rent as consequential damages because fair market value of property had been determined in part by capitalization of income method (which fixes value based on income property generates)]

1) [11:192.1] Pleading and proof requirements: Lost profits damages must be pleaded with particularity; and must be proven with certainty as to their occurrence and extent, "albeit not with mathematical precision." [Lewis Jorge Const. Mgmt., Inc. v. Pomona Unified School Dist. (2004) 34 C4th 960, 975, 22 CR3d 340, 350 (internal quotes omitted); see also Greenwich S.F., LLC v. Wong (2010) 190 CA4th 739, 743, 754, 118 CR3d 531, 534, 543—lost profits may be available in appropriate cases but not where "prospect of profits was uncertain, hypothetical and entirely speculative"]

(b) [11:192.5] Reimbursement of capital gains taxes: Upon proper proof, the buyer also may be able to recover from the seller capital gains taxes paid as a result of the seller's breach. [Horning v. Shilberg (2005) 130 CA4th 197, 207-208, 29 CR3d 717, 726]

• [11:192.6] A buyer was not entitled to recover capital gains taxes paid for failing to complete a tax-free exchange as a result of the seller's breach where the buyer conceded the exchange was invalid. [Horning v. Shilberg (2005) 130 CA4th 197, 207-208, 29 CR3d 717, 726]

• [11:192.7] A seller breached a real estate sales contract with a commercial buyer by causing a slight delay in the close of escrow. The sale (S-1) was part of an IRC § 1031 transaction set up to defer the buyer's capital gains tax on another property (S-2). The buyer deposited money for S-2 in a segregated account with a § 1031 qualified exchange intermediary. A few days after S-1 was originally scheduled to close, the § 1031 intermediary closed on S-2 and then filed for bankruptcy. The bankruptcy court did not release the buyer's deposit until it was too late to qualify for § 1031 deferred tax treatment.

Although loss of the deferred capital gains tax and the expenses incurred in connection with the intervening bankruptcy case constituted consequential damages, neither were recoverable. Reason: The bankruptcy and the bankruptcy court's delay in releasing the commercial buyer's deposit were not reasonably foreseeable or within the parties' contemplation at the time they entered into the contracts. [Ash v. North American Title Co. (2014) 223 CA4th 1258, 1270, 1273, 168 CR3d 499, 508, 510-511]

d. [11:193] Interest: Civ.C. § 3306 expressly authorizes the recovery of interest on damages caused by the seller's breach of its agreement. [Civ.C. § 3306]

Prejudgment interest apparently may be added to any component of the buyer's Civ.C. § 3306 damages award—including the buyer's loss of bargain damages (difference between contract price and value of the property at the time of the breach). (To this extent, Civ.C. § 3306 and § 3307 (seller's damages for buyer's breach) "are in pari materia"; see ¶ 11:134 ff.) [Rifkin v. Achermann (1996) 43 CA4th 391, 396-397, 50 CR2d 661, 664 (buyer awarded prejudgment interest on contract price/market value differential)—pre-1983 cases denying prejudgment interest on benefit of bargain damages impliedly overruled by 1983 amendment to Civ.C. § 3306; see also Al-Husry v. Nilsen Farms Mini-Market, Inc. (1994) 25 CA4th 641, 651, 31 CR2d 28, 33 (breach of contract for sale of business together with underlying real estate)—buyers entitled to refund of escrow deposit, together with prejudgment interest thereon]

(1) [11:193.1] Subject to Civ.C. § 3287: Whether an award of prejudgment interest is proper under Civ.C. § 3306 requires reference to the more general authority of Civ.C. § 3287. [Rifkin v. Achermann (1996) 43 CA4th 391, 398, 50 CR2d 661, 664-665]

(a) [11:193.2] Absolute entitlement where damages "certain": Upon timely request, prejudgment interest is awardable as a matter of right on that component of the buyer's damages which, from the defendant seller's perspective, was "certain" or "capable of being made certain by calculation." [Civ.C. § 3287(a); Great Western Drywall, Inc. v. Roel Const. Co., Inc. (2008) 166 CA4th 761, 767, 83 CR3d 235, 238; see also Thompson v. Asimos (2016) 6 CA5th 970, 992-993, 212 CR3d 158, 178-180—where plaintiff's damages were "readily ascertainable" but not in amount awarded, case remanded to recalculate damages, including prejudgment interest ordered thereon; Watson Bowman Acme Corp. v. RGW Const., Inc. (2016) 2 CA5th 279, 294, 206 CR3d 281, 293—§ 3287(a) “certainty” requirement generally absent when amounts due turn on disputed facts, but not when dispute is confined to rules governing liability (¶ 11:134.2); Collins v. City of Los Angeles (2012) 205 CA4th 140, 150-151, 139 CR3d 880, 888-889—damages are “certain or capable of being made certain by calculation” if litigant actually knows amount or can calculate same from reasonably available information; compare Roodenburg v. Pavestone Co., L.P. (2009) 171 CA4th 185, 190-191, 89 CR3d 558, 562-563—prejudgment interest recoverable despite uncertainty as to damages amount when contract expressly provides for such award]

For example, damages based on the price already paid by the buyer (advance payments or an escrow deposit) are clearly “certain” and thus accrue Civ.C. § 3287(a) interest. [See Al-Husry v. Nilsen Farms Mini-Market, Inc. (1994) 25 CA4th 641, 650-651, 31 CR2d 28, 32-33 & fn. 16; see also ¶ 11:396 ff. in connection with § 3287(a) interest in fraud actions]

(b) [11:193.3] Otherwise, discretionary: On the other hand, where the damages do not meet the Civ.C. § 3287(a) “certainty” test, prejudgment interest thereon is awardable as an item of Civ.C. § 3306 damages in the court's discretion. This will generally be the case with regard to the buyer's loss of bargain damages measured by the contract price/ market value differential. [Civ.C. § 3287(b); Rifkin v. Achermann (1996) 43 CA4th 391, 398, 50 CR2d 661, 665; Great Western Drywall, Inc. v. Roel Const. Co., Inc., supra; see also Collins v. City of Los Angeles (2012) 205 CA4th 140, 151, 139 CR3d 880, 889—damages are uncertain if amount depends on disputed facts or if available factual information is insufficient to determine amount]

(2) [11:193.4] Interest rate: Prejudgment interest in the contract action accrues at the rate of 10% per annum (applicable to contracts entered into after 1/1/86) unless the contract specifies another legal rate of interest (see Civ.C. § 3289(b)).

(a) [11:193.4a] Exception—note secured by deed of trust: By its terms, Civ.C. § 3289(b) does not apply to a note secured by a deed of trust on real property. In such a case, absent a contractual provision setting the rate, prejudgment interest is payable at 7%, except as provided by statute. [Cal.Const. Art. XV, § 1; Soleimany v. Narimanzadeh (2022) 78 CA5th 915, 924, 294 CR3d 191, 197]

(3) [11:193.4b] Accrual date: The interest commences to run as provided in Civ.C. § 3287. Thus:

(a) [11:193.5] Section 3287(a) interest—accrual upon breach: Where Civ.C. § 3287(a) applies (damages “certain” or “capable of being made certain by calculation”), the interest commences to run from the date the buyer's damages are ascertainable by the seller—ordinarily, the date of the seller's breach. [Civ.C. § 3287(a); see also Thompson v. Asimos (2016) 6 CA5th 970, 992, 212 CR3d 158, 179, fn. 7 (noting one of main difficulties in applying § 3287(a) is determining when sum owed on contract becomes liquidated, i.e., readily ascertainable)—§ 3287(a) interest awardable from date parties settled with third party litigant; Collins v. City of Los Angeles (2012) 205 CA4th 140, 150, 139 CR3d 880, 888—§ 3287(a) interest awardable from date right to recover damages arose; North Oakland Med. Clinic v. Rogers (1998) 65 CA4th 824, 828, 76 CR2d 743, 746—§ 3287(a) interest accrues “from the first day there exists both a breach and a liquidated claim”; and see ¶ 11:400]

(b) [11:193.6] Section 3287(b) interest—accrual from date action filed (court's discretion): Where prejudgment interest is awarded pursuant to the court's discretionary authority (Civ.C. § 3287(b)), it is up to the judge to determine the date from which the interest runs … but in no event earlier than the filing of the action. [Civ.C. § 3287(b); North Oakland Med. Clinic v. Rogers (1998) 65 CA4th 824, 828, 76 CR2d 743, 746; see Rifkin v. Achermann (1996) 43 CA4th 391, 398, 50 CR2d 661, 665—error to award interest on buyer's loss of bargain damages running from date of seller's breach]

(4) [11:193.10] Procedure for requesting § 3287 interest: See discussion at ¶ 11:134.10 ff.

e. [11:194] Compare—punitive damages: A Civ.C. § 3306 damages recovery is predicated on the seller's breach of contract; and punitive damages are not recoverable in a breach of contract action. [See Civ.C. § 3294(a)—authorizing punitive damages only “(i)n an action for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract …” (emphasis added)] Thus, an aggrieved buyer's entitlement to punitive damages depends on whether the buyer can plead and prove a tort cause of action (e.g., fraud) and also show, by “clear and convincing evidence,” that the seller acted with “oppression, fraud or malice” (as defined by Civ.C. § 3294(c)). (See ¶ 11:390 re damages for fraud.)

f. [11:195] Attorney fees: There is no statutory authority for an attorney fee award in a buyer's action for breach of the seller's obligation to convey. Thus, as in a seller's breach of contract action, the buyer's right to an attorney fee award will depend on whether the underlying purchase agreement authorizes a fee recovery in litigation under the contract (if so, the buyer who successfully pursues the breach of contract action will be entitled to reasonable attorney fees as costs pursuant to Civ.C. § 1717 and CCP § 1033.5(a)(10) & (c)(5); see ¶ 11:136 ff.).

g. [11:196] Civ.C. § 3300 measure of damages for seller's breach of obligation other than failure to convey title: Civ.C. § 3306 (¶ 11:190 ff.) defines the measure of damages only for detriment "caused by the breach of an agreement to convey an estate in real property." Sometimes, however, the seller breaches a purchase agreement not by a failure to convey title but by defaulting on some other obligation under the contract. (For example, the seller conveys title, but fails to complete improvements or obtain permits required under the purchase agreement.) Here, the buyer's damages remedy will lie under the more general provisions of Civ.C. § 3300 (measure of damages for breach of contract where not otherwise expressly provided by statute). [Coughlin v. Blair (1953) 41 C2d 587, 599, 262 P2d 305, 312; Christensen v. Slawter (1959) 173 CA2d 325, 330, 343 P2d 341, 342-343—seller's delay in conveying; see also Quality Wash Group V, Ltd. v. Hallak (1996) 50 CA4th 1687, 1693-1695, 58 CR2d 592, 596-598—seller liable to buyer under contractual indemnification provision for seller's false representation of unencumbered title]

Specifically, the buyer is entitled to recover that "amount which will compensate … for all the detriment proximately caused" by the seller's breach of covenant (other than the covenant to convey) "or which, in the ordinary course of things, would be likely to result therefrom." [Civ.C. § 3300; see generally, Erlich v. Menezes (1999) 21 C4th 543, 550, 87 CR2d 886, 890; Poseidon Develop., Inc. v. Woodland Lane Estates, LLC (2007) 152 CA4th 1106, 1119, 62 CR3d 59, 68; see also Lewis Jorge Const. Management, Inc. v. Pomona Unified School Dist. (2004) 34 C4th 960, 963, 22 CR3d 340, 344—goal is to return injured party to position it would have been in absent the breach]

(1) [11:196.1] Foreseeability limitation: General contract damages under Civ.C. § 3300 are ordinarily limited to those within the contemplation of the parties, or at least reasonably foreseeable by them, when the contract was entered into. Unlike tort damages (awarded to fully compensate the victim for all injury proximately suffered), consequential damages beyond the parties' expectations at that time are not recoverable under Civ.C. § 3300. [Erlich v. Menezes (1999) 21 C4th 543, 550, 558, 87 CR2d 886, 890, 896; see Vestar Develop. II, LLC v. General Dynamics Corp. (9th Cir. 2001) 249 F3d 958, 962, fn. 3 (applying Calif. law)—such "expectation damages" might even be recoverable for breach of preliminary contract (i.e., agreement to negotiate); and ¶ 11:191]

(a) [11:196.2] Not consequential emotional distress damages: Except in those rare cases where emotional concerns are the very object (or "essence") of the contract, emotional distress damages are not an ordinarily foreseeable or natural consequence of a breach of contract. Accordingly, emotional distress damages generally are not recoverable as consequential damages in an ordinary breach of contract action. [Erlich v. Menezes (1999) 21 C4th 543, 558-561, 87 CR2d 886, 896-898—no emotional distress damages for negligent breach of contract to construct a house; see also Rest.2d Contracts § 353]

Comment: Although no known reported California decision expressly applies this principle to a real property purchase and sale contract, it seems clear from cases cited in Erlich, supra, that the same result should obtain. A contract for the purchase of real property (whether a home or commercial building) is not essentially tied to the buyer's mental or emotional well-being, and its breach is not particularly likely to result in serious emotional disturbance. [See cases cited in Erlich v. Menezes, supra, 21 C4th at 559-561, 87 CR2d at 897-898]

(b) [11:196.3] Not speculative damages: "No damages can be recovered for a breach of contract which are not clearly ascertainable in both their nature and origin." [Civ.C. § 3301 (emphasis added)]

Moreover, proof of damages must be established with reasonable certainty and probability. [See Greenwich S.F., LLC v. Wong (2010) 190 CA4th 739, 754, 118 CR3d 531, 543—per Civ.C. § 3301, damages may include lost profits where same are "natural and direct consequence" of breach, amount can be established with reasonable certainty and seller knew of buyer's intent to use property for profit; compare Copeland v. Baskin Robbins U.S.A. (2002) 96 CA4th 1251, 1263, 117 CR2d 875, 885—no recovery of lost profits resulting from breach of agreement to negotiate because no way of knowing if parties would have reached ultimate agreement or what its terms would have been; Vestar Develop. II, LLC v. General Dynamics Corp. (9th Cir. 2001) 249 F3d 958, 961-962 & fn. 5 (applying Calif. law)—alleged lost profits from planned shopping center resulting from breach of agreement to negotiate too speculative since terms of contract did not provide "starting point" to calculate them with reasonable certainty; see also ¶ 11:192.1]

(2) [11:197] Delayed performance: Where the contract fixes a time for the seller's performance, a delayed delivery of the deed (or other conveyancing instrument) cannot breach the seller's covenant to convey if the buyer accepts the late tender. Nonetheless, the buyer is entitled to pursue a remedy under Civ.C. § 3300 for damages resulting from the delay. [Christensen v. Slawter (1959) 173 CA2d 325, 332-335, 343 P2d 341, 344-347—damages from delay properly recoverable where contract contemplated definite time schedule and specifically declared time of the essence; see also ¶ 4:535 ff. re "time of the essence" clauses]

(3) [11:198] Defective title: A buyer may accept defective title to the property and pursue a Civ.C. § 3300 damages remedy. Alternatively, the buyer may bring an action to enforce the covenants implied from a grant deed under Civ.C. § 1113 (e.g., implied representation that grantor has not conveyed the property or any right or interest therein to any other person; see ¶ 4:341); or sue for specific performance and seek a reduction in the contract price equivalent to the cost of clearing the defective title (see ¶ 11:253).

(4) [11:198.5] Failure to negotiate: Where a seller breaches an agreement to negotiate (see ¶ 4:275.8), the prospective buyer may only recover reliance damages in the form of out-of-pocket costs incurred in conducting negotiations; lost profits are not recoverable (see ¶ 11:196.3). [Copeland v. Baskin Robbins U.S.A. (2002) 96 CA4th 1251, 1263, 117 CR2d 875, 885]

(5) [11:198.6] Failure to convey easement: Where a seller breaches an agreement to convey its interest in an easement, Civ.C. § 3300 provides the proper legal measure of damages. [See SCI Calif. Funeral Services, Inc. v. Five Bridges Found. (2012) 203 CA4th 549, 568, 572-573, 137 CR3d 693, 709, 713 (also finding damages awardable under Civ.C. § 3355 predicated on easement's unique value to buyer and seller's knowledge of same prior to breach)—ornamental signage easement had measurable value based on its ability to be sold or traded to servient estate's owner in exchange for water rights, acreage, etc.]

h. [11:199] Third party damages liability: Third persons who are not parties to the purchase agreement cannot incur contract damages liability for the seller's breach. However, the buyer may have a tort cause of action for damages against third parties who induce the seller to breach its contract. [Duff v. Engelberg (1965) 237 CA2d 505, 507-508, 47 CR 114, 116; compare Applied Equip. Corp. v. Litton Saudi Arabia Ltd. (1994) 7 C4th 503, 513-514, 28 CR2d 475, 480—no tort cause of action for inducing breach or interfering with contract lies against party to contract]

The third party tort damages would be recoverable in addition to the buyer's breach of contract remedy against the seller (damages for breach of contract or specific performance along with incidental relief). This would not yield the buyer a "double recovery" because the measure of damages is not the same in the third party action as it is in the action against the seller. [See Duff v. Engelberg, supra, 237 CA2d at 506-509, 47 CR at 115-117]

2. [11:210] Buyer's Right to Specific Performance: For a seller's breach of its obligation to convey, the buyer may seek the equitable remedy of specific performance. (This is an alternative to a breach of contract damages remedy; while the buyer may pursue both remedies at the pleading stage, both remedies cannot be awarded because doing so would amount to a "double recovery." See ¶ 11:185.)

a. [11:211] Basic requirements: The same general conditions to a seller's specific performance remedy (¶ 11:152) are also applicable to a buyer. Thus, all of the following requirements must be satisfied in a buyer's suit to compel the seller to perform under a real property purchase agreement:

• a money damages award will not adequately compensate the buyer for the seller's breach;

• the seller will receive adequate consideration;

• the contract is just and reasonable and would not subject the seller to undue hardship;

• the contract terms are sufficiently certain and enforceable such that a court can determine with reasonable precision the act required to be performed by each party;

• the performance ordered by the court will be substantially similar to the performance required by the contract;

• the contract is not illegal or the result of fraud, unfair practices or mistake;

• the buyer has performed or tendered performance under the contract; and

• the performance required does not demand multiple acts by the parties over an extended period of time or other complicated performance that would make the court's supervision of its order impractical or impossible. [See generally, Civ.C. §§ 3384-3395; Blackburn v. Charnley (2004) 117 CA4th 758, 766, 11 CR3d 885, 891; Henderson v. Fisher (1965) 236 CA2d 468, 473, 46 CR 173, 177]

(1) [11:212] Mutuality of remedy not required: The fact that one party's obligations under the contract would not be specifically enforceable is not a bar to that party's right to seek specific performance against the other so long as (a) specific performance would otherwise be an appropriate remedy under the requirements set forth at ¶ 11:211, and (b) the counterperformance (by the party seeking specific performance) has been "substantially performed" or its concurrent or future performance is assured or, if the court deems necessary, can be secured to the court's satisfaction. [Civ.C. § 3386; Bleecher v. Conte (1981) 29 C3d 345, 353, 213 CR 852, 856; Converse v. Fong (1984) 159 CA3d 86, 91-92, 205 CR 242, 246]

Therefore, a buyer may be entitled to specific performance even though the seller's remedy for the buyer's breach is limited by the contract to liquidated damages. [Bleecher v. Conte, supra, 29 C3d at 353, 213 CR at 856]

(2) [11:213] Buyer's execution of contract not required: A buyer's action for specific performance is not barred simply because the buyer did not sign the purchase agreement … so long as the seller executed the contract and the buyer has performed or tendered performance in accordance with the contract. [Civ.C. § 3388]

(3) [11:214] Effect of liquidated damages provision: Generally, a party may seek specific performance even though the contract contains a liquidated damages provision for its breach. [Civ.C. § 3389] But specific performance probably would not be available to a buyer if the contract expressly makes the liquidated damages amount the aggrieved buyer's sole remedy (see generally, ¶ 11:6).

(4) [11:215] Compare—waiver of remedy: Whether or not the purchase agreement purports to liquidate a buyer's damages for the seller's breach, buyers sometimes specifically agree to waive their right to seek specific performance (see ¶ 4:506 ff.). In that event, of course, although the case might otherwise be amenable to specific performance, the buyer will be held to its waiver.

b. [11:220] Damages presumed inadequate: The law presumes that every parcel of land is "unique" and, therefore, that a seller's breach of contract to transfer real property cannot be adequately compensated in money damages. [Civ.C. § 3387; see also Real Estate Analytics, LLC v. Vallas (2008) 160 CA4th 463, 472-473, 72 CR3d 835, 841 (acknowledging generally presumption re inadequacy of damages remedy)—for breach of real estate purchase contract, "courts routinely grant a plaintiff's request for specific performance"; Henderson v. Fisher (1965) 236 CA3d 468, 473, 46 CR 173, 177—party seeking specific performance need not establish inadequacy of legal remedy and may rely upon presumption; Wilkison v. Wiederkehr (2002) 101 CA4th 822, 830, 837, 124 CR2d 631, 637, 642 (quasi-specific performance action arising from breach of agreement to bequeath real property)]

(1) [11:220.1] Residential vs. commercial property: With respect to a single family residence that the buyer intends to occupy, the "uniqueness" (inadequacy of damages remedy) presumption is conclusive. [Civ.C. § 3387; see Lennar Homes of Calif., Inc. v. Stephens (2014) 232 CA4th 673, 689, 181 CR3d 638, 652—real property traditionally is recognized as unique, particularly in context of single family dwellings; Real Estate Analytics, LLC v. Vallas (2008) 160 CA4th 463, 473, 72 CR3d 835, 841 & fn. 2—monetary damages can never be satisfactory compensation for buyers who intend to live in single-family homes]

In all other cases, however (i.e., commercial or investment transactions), the presumption is a rebuttable one affecting the burden of proof—i.e., the burden is shifted to the breaching party to prove the adequacy of a damages remedy. "[B]y establishing a rebuttable presumption with respect to other property, the Legislature left open the possibility that damages can be an adequate remedy for a breach of a real estate contract." [See Real Estate Analytics, LLC v. Vallas, supra, 160 CA4th at 474, 72 CR3d at 842 (noting Legislature intended damages remedy in commercial real estate context to be exception rather than rule); compare Reese v. Wong (2001) 93 CA4th 51, 59, 112 CR2d 669, 675, fn. 5—uniqueness presumption re commercial property often is inappropriate since loss of commercial investment opportunity normally can be offset by pecuniary award (dicta)]

(2) [11:220.2] Compare—damages remedy lost by neglect: A damages remedy is not rendered "inadequate" so as to permit the buyer's suit for specific performance simply because the buyer lost the opportunity to bring a damages action by "sleeping on their rights" or otherwise through neglect. [See Wilkison v. Wiederkehr (2002) 101 CA4th 822, 834-835, 124 CR2d 631, 640-641—plaintiff who, by failure to file timely creditor's claim in decedent's probate estate, lost right to recover damages for breach of agreement to convey real property could not alternatively seek quasi-specific performance]

c. [11:221] Adequacy of consideration to seller; "just and reasonable" contract: Courts will not compel a seller to specifically perform under a contract unless the seller receives adequate compensation for its performance and the contract is otherwise "just and reasonable" as to the seller. [Civ.C. § 3391(1) & (2); Handy v. Gordon (1967) 65 C2d 578, 581-582, 55 CR 769, 771-772; Gilbert v. Mercer (1960) 179 CA2d 29, 30-31, 3 CR 456, 457]

(1) [11:222] Market value price not required: The consideration received by the seller must be fair and reasonable under the circumstances. However, there is no requirement that the seller receive fair market value for its property. [Civ.C. § 3391(1) & (2) (requiring only "adequate" consideration and that contract be "just and reasonable" to seller); see Greif v. Sanin (2022) 74 CA5th 412, 443-444, 289 CR3d 484, 508-509; Meyer v. Benko (1976) 55 CA3d 937, 945, 127 CR 846, 849-850; Lundgren v. Lundgren (1966) 245 CA2d 582, 589, 54 CR 30, 34-35]

(2) [11:223] Determined as of time contract entered into: Whether the consideration under the contract is fair and reasonable is determined in reference to the circumstances as they existed at the time the parties entered into the contract, without regard to subsequent events. [Petersen v. Hartell (1985) 40 C3d 102, 110, 219 CR 170, 175; Hastings v. Matlock (1985) 171 CA3d 826, 839-840, 217 CR 856, 865]

(a) [11:224] Increased value immaterial: Thus, an increase in value of the property between the date of the seller's breach and the date of trial is immaterial; that factor does not itself render the contractual consideration "inadequate." [Hastings v. Matlock (1985) 171 CA3d 826, 840, 217 CR 856, 865]

(b) [11:225] Compare—substantial discrepancy between value and consideration: On the other hand, in the event of a gross discrepancy between the consideration and the property's fair market value, a court may determine the contract is not "just and reasonable" as to the seller and thus deny the buyer specific performance. (Therefore, buyers who are able to negotiate a "terrific deal" may find their contract is not amenable to specific performance.) [See Gilbert v. Mercer (1960) 179 CA2d 29, 30, 3 CR 456, 457; Baran v. Goldberg (1948) 86 CA2d 506, 509-510, 194 P2d 765, 767-768; see also Donovan v. RRL Corp. (2001) 26 C4th 261, 291-292, 109 CR2d 807, 832—"gross disparity" in values exchanged may be sufficient ground for denying specific performance based on unconscionability]

(c) [11:226] Relevant factors: Courts may examine a multitude of factors (in addition to the fair market value of the property) in determining whether, in light of all the circumstances, the contract is fair and reasonable to the seller—including timing issues; the need for the sale by each of the parties; the parties' relationship; the object to be obtained through the contract; and whether a party's consent was obtained by way of misrepresentation, concealment, mistake or surprise. [Civ.C. § 3391(3) & (4); Henderson v. Fisher (1965) 236 CA2d 468, 474, 46 CR 173, 178; see also Greif v. Sanin (2022) 74 CA5th 412, 446, 289 CR3d 484, 510-511—although purchase price for undeveloped land was less than expert estimates of fair market value, price was negotiated in good faith and reasonable given need for significant infrastructure development not considered by experts]

d. [11:227] Certainty of terms: Specific performance may be denied where the terms of the contract do not clearly set forth the acts to be performed by the party against whom the remedy is sought. [Civ.C. § 3390(e); Patel v. Liebermensch (2008) 45 C4th 344, 349, 86 CR3d 366, 369—specific performance cannot be granted if contractual terms are "not certain enough for the court to know what to enforce"]

(1) [11:228] Clarification of ambiguous terms by extrinsic evidence: However, uncertainty or ambiguity in the contract's express terms is not necessarily fatal to enforcement by specific performance or otherwise: To the extent possible, and unless barred by the parol evidence rule, courts will attempt to carry out the parties' intentions by considering extrinsic evidence to clarify and render the material terms of the contract sufficiently definite for enforcement. [Hennefer v. Butcher (1986) 182 CA3d 492, 500-502, 227 CR 318, 322-323—extrinsic evidence re time and manner of payment rendered contract's material provisions sufficiently definite for specific performance; Blackburn v. Charnley (2004) 117 CA4th 758, 766-767, 11 CR3d 885, 891-892—extrinsic evidence rendered property description sufficiently definite for specific performance]

(a) [11:229] Reliance on custom and reason: For example, courts may rely on local custom to clarify incidental matters such as opening an escrow, furnishing deeds, procuring title insurance policies, prorating taxes, etc. [Patel v. Liebermensch (2008) 45 C4th 344, 349, 86 CR3d 366, 370; Hutton v. Gliksberg (1982) 128 CA3d 240, 245, 180 CR 141, 143; Burrow v. Timmsen (1963) 223 CA2d 283, 35 CR 668, 672]

Even the time and manner of payment may be supplied by reference to custom and reason: "It is settled that if a contract for the sale of real property specifies no time of payment, a reasonable time is allowed. The manner of payment is also a term that may be supplied by implication …" [Patel v. Liebermensch, supra, 45 C4th at 346, 86 CR3d at 368—straightforward real estate option contract fully enforceable despite fact manner and time of payment left open]

(2) [11:230] Fatally uncertain terms: Uncertainty in contract terms sufficient to defeat an action for specific performance has been found in the following situations:

• [11:231] The failure to designate a purchase price. [Harder v. Lang Realty Co. (1923) 61 CA 394, 214 P 1017, 1019; but see Carver v. Teitsworth (1991) 1 CA4th 845, 852-853, 2 CR2d 446, 450—contract subject to specific performance though price not expressed where price may be objectively determined pursuant to contract terms (here, a pricing formula)]

• [11:232] The form of a security device. [Mueller v. Chandler (1963) 217 CA2d 521, 523-524, 31 CR 646, 647]

• [11:233] The interest rate and amortization schedule. [Bruggeman v. Sokol (1954) 122 CA2d 876, 881-883, 265 P2d 575, 578-579]

• [11:234] The terms of a release clause. [Lawrence v. Shutt (1969) 269 CA2d 749, 763, 75 CR 533, 541]

• [11:235] The terms of a subordination provision. [Spellman v. Dixon (1967) 256 CA2d 1, 3-4, 63 CR 668, 670]

[11:236 - 11:239] Reserved.

e. [11:240] Buyer's ability to perform: A buyer seeking specific enforcement must have performed or tendered performance of all conditions precedent and concurrent, and prove that it is ready and able to perform its contractual obligations in the event a specific performance decree is issued. [Civ.C. §§ 1439, 3386(b) & 3392; Gaggero v. Yura (2003) 108 CA4th 884, 890, 134 CR2d 313, 318 (citing cases)—past and present ability to perform purchase agreement is requirement for specific performance]

The buyer must show that it was ready, willing and able to perform both at the time the contract was entered into and during pendency of the specific performance action. [Ninety Nine Investments, Ltd. v. Overseas Courier Service (Singapore) Private, Ltd. (2003) 113 CA4th 1118, 1126, 6 CR3d 891, 897]

(1) [11:241] Sufficient financing: Fundamentally, a buyer seeking specific performance must prove it has financial resources sufficient to pay the purchase price. [See Stanchfield v. Hamer Toyota, Inc. (1995) 37 CA4th 1495, 1505-1506, 44 CR2d 565, 570 (buyer's action seeking specific performance of stock purchase agreement)—trial court correctly denied specific performance where evidence suggested buyer had neither personal assets nor ability to obtain commercial financing necessary to conclude purchase transaction; see also Gaggero v. Yura (2003) 108 CA4th 884, 891-893, 134 CR2d 313, 318-320 (summary judgment for seller reversed)—triable issues of fact existed regarding buyer's financial ability to purchase property]

(a) [11:242] Loan commitment: Actual funding of the buyer's loan is not required. An institutional lender's loan commitment may constitute part of the tender of the purchase price in evaluating the buyer's ability to perform. [Hutton v. Gliksberg (1982) 128 CA3d 240, 247, 180 CR 141, 144-145; Stratton v. Tejani (1982) 139 CA3d 204, 212, 187 CR 231, 236]

1) [11:243] Legally binding funding obligation? Several cases indicate a buyer must show its lender was legally bound to advance the funds and had the financial ability to do so. [See C. Robert Nattress & Assocs. v. CIDCO (1986) 184 CA3d 55, 65, 229 CR 33, 38; Fogarty v. Saathoff (1982) 128 CA3d 780, 787, 180 CR 484, 488 (but no evidence buyer had obtained even preliminary loan approval at time performance came due); Am-Cal Invest. Co. v. Sharlyn Estates, Inc. (1967) 255 CA2d 526, 539-540, 63 CR 518, 527 (but, in any event, buyer's lender lacked capacity to fund loan in amount needed by buyer)]

However, this is not an "iron-clad" rule; rather, the proof needed to show the buyer's ability to pay depends on all the surrounding circumstances. [Henry v. Sharma (1984) 154 CA3d 665, 672, 201 CR 478, 482 (distinguishing above authorities); see WYDA Assocs. v. Merner (1996) 42 CA4th 1702, 1716, 50 CR2d 323, 331 (accord)—"A buyer is not necessarily unable to obtain a loan merely because he does not have a legally enforceable loan contract"; and Behniwal v. Mix (2005) 133 CA4th 1027, 1044-1045, 35 CR3d 320, 333-334—buyers found to be ready, willing, and able to perform where they had preapproved loan and had arranged with relative to help with deposit]

• [11:243.1] For example, if a seller commits an anticipatory breach before the buyer obtains a written loan commitment, proof of an oral, nonbinding loan commitment or of other financial resources for the buyer's financing needs may be sufficient. [Henry v. Sharma (1984) 154 CA3d 665, 672, 201 CR 478, 482]

[11:243.2 - 11:243.4] Reserved.

2) [11:243.5] Effect of escalating "equity cushion": In an "up market," the "equity cushion" on a property (extent to which fair market value exceeds amount of the secured loan) that lenders typically look for grows daily. In turn, it may be much easier for buyers to obtain financing and satisfy the ability-to-perform requirement because the equity represents "a kind of extra downpayment." [Behniwal v. Mix (2005) 133 CA4th 1027, 1045, 35 CR3d 320, 334]

(b) [11:244] Nonbinding third party agreement: Sometimes, a buyer intends to resell (or "flip") the property to a third party after the buyer closes with the seller. A binding agreement with a secondary buyer might be sufficient to demonstrate the buyer's financial ability to close. However, if the projected resale has not been committed to a binding contract, the buyer probably will not be able to demonstrate that it possesses the ability to perform under the first contract. [C. Robert Nattress & Assocs. v. CIDCO (1986) 184 CA3d 55, 65, 229 CR 33, 38]

(2) [11:245] Partial performance: The buyer's failure to fully perform its obligations under the purchase agreement is not fatal to a specific performance remedy against the seller when the partial nonperformance either is entirely immaterial or the seller can be fully compensated by other means. [Civ.C. § 3392; Converse v. Fong (1984) 159 CA3d 86, 93, 205 CR 242, 247]

[11:245.1 - 11:245.4] Reserved.

(3) [11:245.5] Excused nonperformance—seller's failure to cooperate: Where the seller's cooperation is necessary for the buyer's successful performance of its contractual obligations, "a promise [by the seller] to give that cooperation, and not to do anything which prevents realization of the fruits of [the buyer's] performance, will often be implied" (the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing). [Ninety Nine Investments, Ltd. v. Overseas Courier Service (Singapore) Private, Ltd. (2003) 113 CA4th 1118, 1131, 6 CR3d 891, 900-901 (emphasis in original)]

If the seller breaches that implied covenant by failure to cooperate, thereby preventing the buyer's performance under the agreement, the buyer's performance is excused and the buyer is entitled to specific performance by the seller. [Ninety Nine Investments, Ltd. v. Overseas Courier Service (Singapore) Private, Ltd., supra, 113 CA4th at 1135-1136, 6 CR3d at 904 (seller failed to timely comply with escrow obligations)]

f. [11:246] Effect of seller's inability to perform: Generally, a buyer will not be able to compel specific performance of the purchase agreement when the seller is lawfully unable to perform (Civ.C. § 3390(c)) or the seller's performance is otherwise impossible (see Rest.2d Contracts § 368). [See Crittenden v. Hansen (1943) 59 CA2d 56, 58-59, 138 P2d 37, 38—court cannot specifically enforce purchase agreement by ordering conveyance of title where seller has already conveyed title to BFP]

(1) [11:247] Seller's ability tested as of trial date: The fact the seller is not able to perform at the time required by the contract will not defeat a buyer's specific performance remedy if the seller can perform at the time of trial. [Stevens Group Fund IV v. Sobrato Develop. Co. (1991) 1 CA4th 886, 897, 2 CR2d 460, 466—seller's inability to convey clear title at time performance due under contract because note secured by deed of trust was not prepayable, was not proper ground for denying buyer specific performance where note was due and capable of being paid thereafter and seller could convey clear title at time of trial]

(a) [11:248] Seller lacking title: The seller is not necessarily unable to perform simply because it does not have title when the buyer files a specific performance suit. Assuming the circumstances permit, the court can order the seller to obtain title in order to effect the conveyance to the buyer. [Walgren v. Dolan (1990) 226 CA3d 572, 576-578, 276 CR 554, 556-557—buyer can compel specific performance of purchase agreement executed with trust beneficiary (equitable titleholder) where beneficiary has power under terms of trust to require trustee to convey legal title; see also Greif v. Sanin (2022) 74 CA5th 412, 447-448, 289 CR3d 484, 511-512—buyer entitled to specific performance where, although seller transferred legal title to limited liability company (LLC), seller retained sole authority to dispose of property and thus had equitable title (also noting seller failed to record LLC operating agreement until after signing sales contract, depriving buyer of notice title had been transferred); Miller v. Dyer (1942) 20 C2d 526, 528-529, 127 P2d 901, 903—buyer of property in another pending escrow entitled to specific performance because seller had power, by closing escrow, to acquire title]

On the other hand, if the seller is unable to obtain the title required by the contract, a specific performance decree ordinarily will not be granted (but see ¶ 11:249 ff.). [Weisberg v. Ashcraft (1961) 194 CA2d 225, 232, 14 CR 817, 821]

(2) [11:249] Substantially similar performance: A specific performance decree need not necessarily compel the identical performance promised in the contract. Notwithstanding that the seller's performance has become difficult or "impossible," the court may compel a substantially similar performance in the buyer's favor that will best effectuate the purposes for which the contract was made. [Rest.2d Contracts § 359(2)& comm. c, d; see Rogers v. Davis (1994) 28 CA4th 1215, 1221-1222, 34 CR2d 716, 720]

(a) [11:250] Transfer to BFP rendering conveyance of title impossible: The seller's intervening transfer of the property to a BFP renders performance of its obligation to convey title to the buyer "impossible" (specific performance of the seller's duty to convey cannot be enforced against a BFP; see Civ.C. § 3395). Nonetheless, this scenario does not preclude the court from ordering some other form of specific performance in the buyer's favor … such as an order compelling the seller to remit to the buyer the sale proceeds (less the amount the buyer still owes under the purchase agreement). [Rogers v. Davis (1994) 28 CA4th 1215, 1224, 34 CR2d 716, 722—though foreclosure sale to BFP made seller's conveyance of title to buyers impossible, court properly granted buyers specific performance through award of foreclosure proceeds remaining after payment to trust deed beneficiaries (less balance buyers owed under purchase agreement)]

Viewed another way, the buyer's ability and willingness to complete its obligations under the contract warrants a finding that the buyer is the "equitable owner" of the property, with a right to the seller's proceeds from the third party sale under the doctrine of "equitable conversion." [See Rogers v. Davis, supra, 28 CA4th at 1223, 34 CR2d at 721]

1) [11:251] Compare—transferees with knowledge of buyer's contractual interest: On the other hand, identical performance (the conveyance of title) can be ordered by a specific performance decree against subsequent (intervening) third party purchasers who had knowledge of the previous buyer's claimed interest before they purchased the property. Here, the buyer should join such third persons as additional parties defendant in the specific performance action. [See Civ.C. § 3395]

➪ [11:252] PRACTICE POINTER: For this reason, it behooves buyers who want the particular property (rather than a "substantially similar" performance or legal damages for the buyer's breach) to immediately record a lis pendens upon commencement of the action. By so doing, the buyer's claim becomes "of record," thereby ensuring no subsequent buyer or encumbrancer can claim ignorance of the first buyer's interest. See ¶ 11:300 ff.

(b) [11:253] Defective title: Notwithstanding a cloud on the seller's title, the buyer may accept defective title and receive an abatement in the contract price. [Johnson v. Lehtonen (1957) 151 CA2d 579, 581, 312 P2d 35, 37; Milkes v. Smith (1949) 91 CA2d 79, 82, 204 P2d 419, 420]

However, prudence suggests that the buyer join in its specific performance action any party who possesses (or claims) an interest in or lien on the property that can be discharged through payment of the contract price. [See Greenstone v. Claretian Theological Seminary (1958) 158 CA2d 493, 494, 322 P2d 482]

g. [11:260] Court supervision as factor: Ordinarily, courts will not grant specific performance of a contract that will require continuous judicial supervision. [Moklofsky v. Moklofsky (1947) 79 CA2d 259, 262-263, 179 P2d 628, 630-631; see ¶ 11:163 re seller's specific performance action]

Nonetheless, courts have inherent equitable power to make their judgments effective by supervising the details of specific performance decrees. [Peak-Las Positas Partners v. Bollag (2009) 172 CA4th 101, 112-113, 90 CR3d 775, 786—court extended escrow until 60 days after judgment became final; see also Barnes v. Chamberlain (1983) 147 CA3d 762, 768-769, 195 CR 417, 421—court extended deadline for buyer to deposit purchase money under specific performance decree]

h. [11:261] Waiver of conditions precedent: A party seeking specific performance must waive all conditions precedent created solely for its benefit in the contract. However, the buyer is entitled to a reduction in the purchase price to compensate it for the seller's failure to satisfy the condition(s) so waived. [Milkes v. Smith (1949) 91 CA2d 79, 82-83, 204 P2d 419, 421]

i. Additional parties

(1) [11:262] Intervening transferees: As indicated, the buyer's specific performance action may lie against third parties where the seller transferred the property to others who took their interest with knowledge of the buyer's claimed interest (Civ.C. § 3395, ¶ 11:251).

(2) [11:263] Third parties under contract with seller: Similarly, the buyer should join in its action for specific performance any party who has entered into a different contract with the seller to purchase the same property, or who holds title under an obligation to convey it to the seller. [Miller v. Dyer (1942) 20 C2d 526, 530-531, 127 P2d 901, 903]

(3) [11:264] Third party lienholders: A buyer seeking clear title should also join any party claiming a lien on the property that can be satisfied by payment of the contract price (see ¶ 11:253).

(4) [11:265] Co-owners: Where the property is co-owned, all owners who executed (or ratified) the contract as seller should be joined in the specific performance action.

On the other hand, co-owners who neither executed nor ratified the contract are not bound by its terms. In such a case, the buyer may seek specific performance only as to the interest held by the owner(s) who did execute or ratify the agreement. [Ellis v. Mihelis (1963) 60 C2d 206, 218-219, 32 CR 415, 422]

(a) [11:266] Community property complications: Co-ownership issues may be particularly problematic where the subject of the contract is community property. Here, the contract is voidable by a spouse or registered domestic partner (Fam.C. § 297.5) who did not join in its execution. [Fam.C. § 1102; see ¶ 11:33]

The fact the seller is obligated by the contract to obtain their spouse's consent will not help a buyer seeking a full conveyance of the entire community interest …because the seller's obligation to obtain the spouse's consent (or that of "any other third person") is not itself specifically enforceable. [Civ.C. § 3390(d)]

Moreover, over the nonconsenting spouse's objection, the buyer may not even enforce the contract as to the signing spouse's interest in the property … because, absent dissolution of the community by either spouse's death or a judgment of marriage dissolution, the nonconsenting spouse is entitled to avoid the contract in its entirety. [Droeger v. Friedman, Sloan & Ross (1991) 54 C3d 26, 46-47, 283 CR 584, 597; see also Andrade Develop. Co. v. Martin (1982) 138 CA3d 330, 334-337, 187 CR 863, 866-868 (decided under predecessor statute)—Fam.C. § 1102(a) may be raised in defense to contracting transferee's suit for specific performance or damages]

j. [11:270] Equitable defenses: Specific performance is an equitable remedy and thus is subject to various equitable defenses, such as impossibility of performance and laches. [See Property Controllers, Inc. v. Shewfelt (1966) 245 CA2d 755, 762-763, 54 CR 218, 222-223 (laches defense to lessee's action for specific performance of written lease); see also Steiner v. Thexton (2010) 48 C4th 411, 106 CR3d 252, fn. 14—because specific performance remedy is equitable in nature, courts may consider whether ordering it is warranted or if other relief may suffice; and ¶ 11:246 ff. re impossibility of seller's performance]

k. [11:271] No right to jury trial: Because specific performance is an equitable remedy (not involving an action "at law"), it is not jury triable. [Connell v. Bowes (1942) 19 C2d 870, 871, 123 P2d 456, 456-457; Nwosu v. Uba (2004) 122 CA4th 1229, 1240, 19 CR3d 416, 425-426]

Cross-refer: For a comprehensive treatment of actions that are jury triable, see Wegner, Fairbank, Wegner, Wegner & Chernow, Cal. Prac. Guide: Civil Trials & Evidence (TRG), Ch. 2.

(1) [11:271.1] Notwithstanding dispute over existence of contract: An action for specific performance is not jury triable even though it "implicates legal issues regarding contract formation." The "gist" of the action still depends on the application of equitable doctrines; "[t]he fact that in an action for specific performance of an agreement the court must determine the existence of the agreement does not in itself transform the action into one at law." [Walton v. Walton (1995) 31 CA4th 277, 287-288, 36 CR2d 901, 905 (internal quotes omitted)]

(2) [11:272] Impact where complaint seeks legal damages in the alternative: As discussed earlier, a buyer can request alternate remedies for equitable relief (specific performance) or legal damages (Civ.C. § 3306 or § 3300 damages for breach of contract) at the pleading stage, but may not be awarded both remedies (see ¶ 11:185). The buyer would, of course, be entitled to a jury trial on the legal damages claim (an action "at law"); but, in practice, most courts will try the specific performance action first … because if plaintiff prevails therein, this will require dismissal of the legal damages action (to prevent a "double recovery") and thus obviate the necessity for a jury trial altogether. [Raedeke v. Gibraltar Sav. & Loan Ass'n (1974) 10 C3d 665, 671, 111 CR 693, 696; see Nwosu v. Uba (2004) 122 CA4th 1229, 1242, 19 CR3d 416, 426-427—ordering trial of equitable claims before trial of remaining legal claim "preferred procedure"; and Walton v. Walton (1995) 31 CA4th 277, 292-293, 36 CR2d 901, 908-909—"where mutually exclusive remedies are pled, there need not be a trial on both the legal and the equitable remedy. Resolution of one renders the other moot"]

(3) [11:273] Compare—incidental "damages" pursuant to specific performance decree: A specific performance decree may award plaintiff incidental compensation in order to fully vindicate plaintiff's contractual rights. But that is not a "legal damages" award for breach of contract which would trigger the right to jury trial. Rather, the incidental compensation essentially effects an equitable accounting between the parties and thus remains an equitable remedy. [See Rogers v. Davis (1994) 28 CA4th 1215, 1221, 34 CR2d 716, 720; and further discussion at ¶ 11:278 ff.]

l. [11:275] Specific enforcement decree: A specific performance decree in the buyer's favor does the following:

• It directs the seller to execute and deliver a deed to the buyer (or other substantially equivalent performance, see ¶ 11:249) and to perform all other necessary conditions of the contract within a specified period of time;

• It directs the buyer to perform all of the buyer's obligations under the contract (including tendering the contract price to the seller); and

• It orders an accounting between the parties in equity (¶ 11:278 ff.). [Rogers v. Davis (1994) 28 CA4th 1215, 1221, 34 CR2d 716, 720]

(1) [11:276] Buyer as equitable owner: Following issuance of a specific performance decree, the prevailing buyer becomes equitable owner of the property, while the seller retains legal title as security for the buyer's payment of the contract price. [Elliott v. McCombs (1941) 17 C2d 23, 31, 109 P2d 329, 334]

In effect, the buyer is regarded as having equitable rights of ownership. For example, if the seller wrongfully conveys the property to a third party BFP, the buyer would be entitled to the sale proceeds on a theory of "equitable conversion": "It no longer being possible to convey the … property, the fund which represents the part conveyed belongs to the [buyer], as purchaser." [See Rogers v. Davis (1994) 28 CA4th 1215, 1223, 34 CR2d 716, 721 (internal quotes omitted)]

(2) [11:277] Court clerk as "elisor" to effect conveyance: If the seller fails to convey the property to the buyer as directed by the decree (after the buyer's proper tender of the purchase price), the court clerk may be appointed to effect the conveyance on the defaulting seller's behalf. [Dennis v. Overholtzer (1961) 191 CA2d 791, 797-798, 13 CR 110, 114; see also Blueberry Properties, LLC v. Chow (2014) 230 CA4th 1017, 1021, 179 CR3d 145, 147—by appointing clerk as elisor to execute escrow documents on seller's behalf, court properly exercised its CCP § 128(a)(4) power to enforce its judgment; Rayan v. Dykeman (1990) 224 CA3d 1629, 1635, 274 CR 672, 675-676, fn. 2—courts typically appoint elisors to sign deeds and other documents on behalf of recalcitrant parties]

(3) [11:278] Incidental "damages" (equitable accounting): An order compelling specific performance cannot also award the prevailing plaintiff legal damages for breach of contract (otherwise, plaintiff would receive a "double recovery"—both the performance called for by the contract and a monetary award compensating for the failure of performance). However, because a specific performance decree is not issued at the time performance was required under the contract, an accounting occurs for the period between the date the contract was to be performed and the date of the decree in order to adjust the equities between the parties due to the seller's delayed performance. [Ellis v. Mihelis (1963) 60 C2d 206, 219-220, 32 CR 415, 423; BD Inns v. Pooley (1990) 218 CA3d 289, 298-299, 266 CR 815, 820; see Kassir v. Zahabi (2008) 164 CA4th 1352, 1357, 80 CR3d 1, 4—it is "well established" court has power to award compensation incidental to specific performance decree when necessary to relate performance back to contract date; compare Greif v. Sanin (2022) 74 CA5th 412, 449-452, 289 CR3d 484, 513-515 (distinguishing Ellis)—buyer entitled to specific performance and conversion damages in form of interest on purchase funds kept in escrow for almost 2 years due to seller's failure to return funds after repudiating purchase agreement]

(a) [11:279] Not "legal damages" for breach of contract: Though often loosely referred to as "damages," this accounting is not an assessment of "damages." Rather, it is additional compensation awarded in equity to fully vindicate plaintiff's contractual rights. [Rogers v. Davis (1994) 28 CA4th 1215, 1220-1221, 34 CR2d 716, 720]

"The complainant affirms the contract and asks that it be performed. Since the time for performance has passed, the court relates that performance back to that date, by treating the parties as if the change in ownership had taken place at that time." [BD Inns v. Pooley (1990) 218 CA3d 289, 298, 266 CR 815, 820; Behniwal v. Mix (2007) 147 CA4th 621, 629, 54 CR3d 427, 433; Hutton v. Gliksberg (1982) 128 CA3d 240, 248, 180 CR 141, 145]

Indeed, whereas legal damages for breach of contract are recoverable only to the extent they are a reasonably foreseeable or natural consequence of the breach (¶ 11:196.1), compensation as an incident to specific performance is not limited by contract concepts of foreseeability. [Bravo v. Buelow (1985) 168 CA3d 208, 215, 214 CR 65, 71]

(b) [11:280] Accounting process—general rules: The accounting seeks to put the buyer in the position the buyer would have been in had the conveyance occurred at the time called for by the contract. [See Kassir v. Zahabi (2008) 164 CA4th 1352, 1358, 80 CR3d 1, 4—seller and buyer each entitled to receive full performance of contract when specific performance granted]

Thus, the following general rules apply:

• The buyer is entitled to the rents and profits the buyer would have earned from the property as of the time the contract should have been performed; and

• The seller is entitled to an offset for (i) operating expenses incurred by the seller; and (ii) interest on the purchase money the seller would have received had the contract been timely performed. [Ellis v. Mihelis (1963) 60 C2d 206, 220-221, 32 CR 415, 423-424; Stratton v. Tejani (1982) 139 CA3d 204, 212, 187 CR 231, 236; see also Kassir v. Zahabi, supra, 164 CA4th at 1355, 80 CR3d at 2—no offset for future interest where property is overencumbered and seller would receive nothing under purchase agreement at close of escrow; Greif v. Sanin (2022) 74 CA5th 412, 451, 289 CR3d 484, 514—although buyer entitled to interest on purchase funds kept in escrow for almost 2 years due to seller's failure to return same after repudiating purchase agreement, seller not entitled to property tax offset where seller continued to assert title and retained possession of property with all ownership benefits]

1) [11:280.1] Limitations: The general rules set forth at ¶ 11:280 are subject to the following limitations:

— Buyers are not entitled to the profits or reasonable rental values of property and the value derived from the use of any retained purchase funds. Indeed, buyers must reduce their credits for rents and profits by sums equivalent to the retained purchase funds (¶ 11:281);

— Sellers may not receive credit for the lost use of any portion of purchase funds set aside by buyers with notice to sellers; and

— Sellers' awards for the lost use of purchase moneys cannot exceed the rents/profits awarded to buyers (otherwise, breaching sellers would profit from their wrongs). [Stratton v. Tejani (1982) 139 CA3d 204, 213, 187 CR 231, 236-237; Kassir v. Zahabi (2008) 164 CA4th 1352, 1358, 80 CR3d 1, 5]

2) [11:281] Rents/profits: Where the transaction involved income-producing property, the buyer is entitled to receive an amount equal to the rents and profits generated from the property calculated as of the date the conveyance should have occurred under the contract until the date of the specific performance decree. [Ellis v. Mihelis (1963) 60 C2d

206, 219-220, 32 CR 415, 423; Stratton v. Tejani (1982) 139 CA3d 204, 212, 187 CR 231, 236; Hutton v. Gliksberg (1982) 128 CA3d 240, 248, 180 CR 141, 145]

Similarly, if the contract involved residential property, the accounting process credits the buyer with the property's fair rental value as of the date the conveyance should have occurred to compensate the buyer for lost use of the property. [Meyer v. Benko (1976) 55 CA3d 937, 946, 127 CR 846, 850; see also Kassir v. Zahabi, supra—buyers' credits are reduced by sums equivalent to value of buyers' use of any retained purchase funds]

3) [11:282] Other expenses incurred by buyer: The accounting process allows the buyer an offset against the contract price for any other expenses caused by the seller's delayed performance—for example:

- increased development/construction costs;

- increased financing costs (including costs the buyer may incur as a result of rising interest rates); and

- any other losses the buyer may have suffered that the seller had been made aware of. [See Hennefer v. Butcher (1986) 182 CA3d 492, 505, 227 CR 318, 325; Bravo v. Buelow (1985) 168 CA3d 208, 212-216, 214 CR 65, 69-71; Stratton v. Tejani (1982) 139 CA3d 204, 214-215, 187 CR 231, 237]

a) [11:282.1] No offset for buyer's attorney fees incurred to obtain specific performance: However, an offset against the contractual purchase price may not include attorney fees incurred by the buyer to obtain the specific performance judgment. The attorney fees are not a true "incident" to the judgment, and to allow otherwise would play "absolute havoc with the law of liens and lien priorities" (e.g., the buyer's fees would in effect be given precedence over government liens for unpaid property taxes and prelitigation trust deeds). [Behniwal v. Mix (2007) 147 CA4th 621, 630-631, 54 CR3d 427, 434-435]

4) [11:283] Limitation on seller's interest offset where funds in escrow: The seller's right to an offset for interest accrues only on that portion of the purchase price that was not paid at the time called for by the contract. Thus, no interest for the seller's benefit accrues on funds toward the purchase price that the buyer already placed in escrow. [Ellis v. Mihelis (1963) 60 C2d 206, 221, 32 CR 415, 424; see also Kassir v. Zahabi (2008) 164 CA4th 1352, 1358, 80 CR3d 1, 5—sellers entitled to reasonable value of their use of entire purchase price less total of option price and cash deposited in escrow]

[11:284 - 11:299] Reserved.

3. [11:300] Lis Pendens as Interim Protection: A lis pendens is not a "remedy" but, rather, a document that, if properly recorded, gives constructive notice to the "world" of a pending lawsuit affecting designated real property and thereby preserves priority of claims concerning the property.

Specifically, pursuant to CCP § 405 et seq., a "notice of pendency of action" (commonly referred to as a "lis pendens") may be recorded by any party to pending litigation who has a "real property claim" that is the subject of the action. [CCP § 405.20; see De Martini v. Sup.Ct. (Gupta) (2024) 98 CA5th 1269, 1274, 317 CR3d 441, 445, discussed at ¶ 11:708, 11:725, 11:735]

In turn, all subsequent purchasers or encumbrances are deemed to have constructive notice of the pending action and, therefore, take their interest in the designated property subject to the rights of the party claimant. The party claimant's rights and interest relate back to the date of recording of the lis pendens. [CCP §§ 405.24, 1908(a)(2)]

➪ [11:301] PRACTICE POINTER: Buyers interested in pursuing a specific performance action (because they want the particular property rather than compensation in money damages for the seller's breach) should routinely record a lis pendens at the outset of the litigation. Doing so will ensure that the seller cannot render specific performance "impossible" by subsequently conveying the property to a BFP (see ¶ 11:250).

Cross-refer: Lis pendens is discussed in detail at ¶ 11:600 ff.

[11:302 - 11:332] Reserved.

4. [11:333] Other Buyer Remedies: Breach of contract damages and specific performance are, of course, not the exclusive remedies available to buyers aggrieved in a real property purchase and sale transaction. Like sellers, under appropriate facts, they may be able to pursue an action for reformation, rescission or, perhaps, a damages suit for fraud. These and other miscellaneous remedies are discussed in the remaining sections of this Chapter (¶ 11:350 ff.).

Chapter 11. Remedies in Purchase and Sale Transactions

E. Damages for Fraud

- 1. [11:350] General Considerations
  - a. [11:351] Defrauded buyer's choice of remedies
    - (1) [11:352] Election of remedies not required at pleading stage
    - (2) [11:353] Damages remedy after consummation of transaction despite knowledge of fraud
      - (a) [11:353.1] Compare—knowledge of fraud at inception of transaction
  - b. [11:354] Elements of fraud cause of action
    - (1) [11:354a] Compare—representations of opinion
    - (2) [11:354.1] Particularized pleading required
    - (3) [11:354.2] “Justifiable reliance” element
      - (a) [11:354.3] Justifiable reliance not defeated by failure to investigate truth of representations
      - (b) [11:354.4] Impact of exculpatory clause
        - 1) [11:354.5] Negligent misrepresentation claims
    - (4) [11:355.1] Seller's fraud liability to remote purchasers (“indirect deception doctrine”)
      - (a) [11:355.2] “Reason to expect”
        - 1) [11:355.2a] Example
      - (b) [11:355.3] Evidentiary burden
  - c. [11:355.10] Admissibility of parol evidence—“fraud exception”
  - d. [11:356] Measure of damages as between buyer and seller
    - (1) [11:357] General damages—“out-of-pocket” measure
      - (a) [11:357.1] Element of cause of action
        - 1) [11:357.2] Example
        - 2) [11:357.3] Comment
        - 3) [11:357.4] Compare—action for rescission based on fraud
      - (b) [11:358] Date of calculation
    - (2) [11:359] Special (consequential) damages
      - (a) [11:360] General out-of-pocket loss not required
    - (3) [11:360.5] Attorney fees as damages (“tort of another” fees)
    - (4) [11:361] No general “benefit of the bargain” damages
      - (a) [11:361.1] Same result under Civ.C. § 1102.13 statutory cause of action (fraudulent real estate transfer disclosure statement)
      - (b) [11:361.2] Fiduciary fraud exception
    - (5) [11:362] Causation limitation
  - e. [11:365] Compare—fraud by fiduciary
    - (1) [11:365.1] Not dependent on pleading breach of fiduciary duty cause of action
    - (2) [11:366] Benefit of the bargain or out-of-pocket measure?

(a) [11:367] View adopting benefit of the bargain approach
1) [11:368] How applied
a) Examples
2) [11:368.8] Date of measure
(b) [11:369] View adopting out-of-pocket approach
(c) [11:369.5] Additional view adopting general tort damage approach where actionable fraud not related to property value
1) [11:369.6] Date of calculation
2) Application
(d) [11:370] Distinction based on fiduciary negligent vs. intentional misrepresentation?
(3) [11:375] Effect of fiduciary's fraudulent acquisition of property
2. Specific Items Recoverable as Out-of-Pocket Consequential Damages
a. [11:380] Reliance damages
b. [11:381] Loss of use and enjoyment
c. Lost profits
(1) [11:382] Defrauded seller's profits
(2) [11:383] Defrauded buyer's profits
(a) [11:384] Compare—where title not conveyed
d. [11:385] No emotional distress damages
3. [11:390] Punitive Damages
a. [11:390.1] Not negligent misrepresentation
b. [11:391] Clear and convincing evidence burden of proof
4. [11:392] Attorney Fees
a. [11:393] Civ.C. § 1717 fees not recoverable
b. [11:394] Compare—CCP § 1021 fees under broadly worded ("arising under") fee recovery provision
(1) [11:394.1] "Prevailing party" determination, generally
(a) [11:394.2] Nondiscretionary determination
1) [11:394.3] "Net monetary recovery"
a) [11:394.4] Voluntary dismissal in exchange for monetary settlement
b) [11:394.5] Compare—damages awards offset by prior settlement with other parties
(b) [11:394.6] Discretionary determination
1) [11:394.7] Factors considered, generally
2) [11:394.8] "Unity of defense" cases
5. [11:395] Interest
a. [11:395.1] Interest rate
b. [11:396] Absolute right to interest where damages readily ascertainable (Civ.C. § 3287(a))
(1) [11:397] Certainty of damages by reference to market values
(2) [11:398] Damages not "certain" if dependent upon proof
(3) [11:399] Certainty as affected by discrepancy between damages demanded and amount of ultimate judgment
(4) [11:400] Accrual of § 3287(a) interest
c. [11:401] Discretionary right to interest in other cases (Civ.C. § 3288)
(1) [11:402] Not a matter of right
(2) [11:403] Accrual of § 3288 interest

1. [11:350] General Considerations: The commission of fraud in a purchase and sale transaction may take two forms: fraud in the inception or execution of the purchase and sale agreement ("promisor is deceived as to the nature of his act, and actually does not know what he is signing, or does not intend to enter into a contract at all"); or fraud in the inducement of the contract ("promisor knows what he is signing, but his consent is induced by fraud"). [Rosenthal v. Great Western Fin'l Secur. Corp. (1996) 14 C4th 394, 415, 58 CR2d 875, 887 (emphasis in original; internal quotes omitted); see also Village Northridge Homeowners

Ass'n v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. (2011) 50 C4th 913, 921, 114 CR3d 280, 285—fraud in inception/execution renders contract void, whereas fraud in inducement renders contract merely voidable (discussed further at ¶ 11:473.1)]

The defrauded party (buyer or seller) may either disaffirm the contract and seek relief based on rescission or affirm the contract and sue for damages (¶ 11:351 ff.). Although these are inconsistent remedies, both may be sought at the pleading stage provided the underlying factual allegations are consistent (¶ 11:11 ff.).

The sections at ¶ 11:351 ff. address the defrauded party's damages remedy (i.e., an action that affirms the contract but seeks damages for the fraud). The remedy of rescission on the ground of fraud is separately addressed at ¶ 11:460 ff.

a. [11:351] Defrauded buyer's choice of remedies: A defrauded buyer may elect either to affirm the contract and sue for damages under Civ.C. § 3343 (below) or rescind the contract (restoring the benefits received thereunder) and seek relief based thereon pursuant to Civ.C. § 1692 (¶ 11:505 ff.). [Kaluzok v. Brisson (1946) 27 C2d 760, 763, 167 P2d 481, 482; Persson v. Smart Inventions, Inc. (2005) 125 CA4th 1141, 1153, 23 CR3d 335, 344; see also Ram's Gate Winery, LLC v. Roche (2015) 235 CA4th 1071, 1087, 185 CR3d 935, 947—“We see no reason why” defrauded buyers cannot also allege action for breach of warranty in such circumstances]

A buyer who brings a damages action can retain title to the property and also be awarded monetary relief equal to the difference between the contract price and the actual value of the property received (plus any consequential damages; Civ.C. § 3343). Conversely, a buyer who rescinds the contract cannot retain title, but can recover the contract price (plus consequential damages) less the amount of rent deemed to be paid by the buyer to the seller for the period the buyer had possession of the property (¶ 11:505 ff.).

(1) [11:352] Election of remedies not required at pleading stage: The defrauded buyer need not make its election of remedies at the pleading stage. Absent a waiver of either remedy, the complaint may seek both in the alternative; however, the judgment cannot award plaintiff both remedies (i.e., an election of remedies will be required prior to judgment). [Ram's Gate Winery, LLC v. Roche (2015) 235 CA4th 1071, 1087, 185 CR3d 935, 947]

For example, a defrauded buyer will not be bound by its notice of rescission to the seller (thereby precluding a damages remedy) unless the offer to rescind was accepted by the seller (or the buyer otherwise waives its right to recover damages as evidenced by its conduct following discovery of the fraud). [Walters v. Marler (1978) 83 CA3d 1, 15-16, 147 CR 655, 664 (disapproved on other grounds by Gray v. Don Miller & Assocs., Inc. (1984) 35 C3d 498, 507, 198 CR 551, 556) —buyer's notice of rescission not accepted and thus not an effective pretrial election of remedies; see also People ex rel. Dept. of Transp. v. Grocers Wholesale Co. (1989) 214 CA3d 498, 512-513, 262 CR 689, 698—claim for damages based on fraud waived where party to executory contract enters into “new arrangement” with knowledge of the fraud and accepts substantial concessions not required by original contract]

(2) [11:353] Damages remedy after consummation of transaction despite knowledge of fraud: An affirmance of the contract despite knowledge of the perpetration of a fraud does not waive the defrauded party's damages remedy. Thus, the aggrieved party may elect to consummate the transaction, notwithstanding knowledge of the fraud, and then sue for damages pursuant to Civ.C. § 3343. [Jue v. Smiser (1994) 23 CA4th 312, 315-317, 28 CR2d 242, 244; City of Vista v. Robert Thomas Securities, Inc. (2000) 84 CA4th 882, 889, 101 CR2d 237, 241]

(a) [11:353.1] Compare—knowledge of fraud at *inception of transaction: Plaintiff's reliance on the alleged misrepresentation at the time the contract is entered into is an essential element of a fraud cause of action (¶ 11:354); such reliance cannot be established where plaintiff is aware of the true facts (i.e., has knowledge of the misrepresentation) before executing the contract. Thus, a party cannot elect to enter into a contract despite knowledge of the other party's apparent fraud and then pursue a damages remedy based on the fraud. [See Smith v. Brown (1943) 59 CA2d 836, 838, 140 P2d 86, 86-87; Carroll v. Dungey (1963) 223 CA2d 247, 254, 35 CR 681, 686]

On the other hand, “constructive knowledge”—on the theory plaintiff could have discovered the falsity of defendant's representations by reasonable investigation of the facts—will not defeat a fraud claim (see ¶ 11:354.3).

Nor need plaintiff establish continuing reliance on a misrepresentation until the contract is fully executed in order to maintain a damages action. Thus, where a party first learns of the apparent deceit after entering into the contract, the party's continued performance of the agreement does not constitute a waiver of a damages remedy. [Jue v. Smiser (1994) 23 CA4th 312, 317, 28 CR2d 242, 244-245; City of Vista v. Robert Thomas Securities, Inc. (2000) 84 CA4th 882, 889, 101 CR2d 237, 241]

b. [11:354] Elements of fraud cause of action: A plaintiff seeking a remedy based upon fraud must allege and prove all of the following basic elements:

- Defendant's false representation or concealment of a "material" fact (see Rest.2d Torts § 538(2)(a); Engalla v. Permanente Med. Group, Inc. (1997) 15 C4th 951, 977, 64 CR2d 843, 859—misrepresentation deemed "material" if "a reasonable [person] would attach importance to its existence or nonexistence in determining his choice of action in the transaction"; see also Hoffman v. 162 North Wolfe LLC (2014) 228 CA4th 1178, 1186, 175 CR3d 820, 827—failure to disclose material fact is not actionable fraud unless there is some relationship between parties that gives rise to disclosure duty (rejecting P's fraudulent concealment of prescriptive easement claim because D, an adjacent neighbor, had no relationship with P and thus no duty to disclose));

- Defendant made the representation with knowledge of its falsity or without sufficient knowledge of the subject to warrant a representation;

- The representation was made with the intent to induce plaintiff (or a class to which plaintiff belonged) to act upon it (see Blickman Turkus, LP v. MF Downtown Sunnyvale, LLC (2008) 162 CA4th 858, 869, 76 CR3d 325, 333—fraud by false representations means intent to induce "reliance"; fraud by concealment involves intent to induce "conduct");

- Plaintiff entered into the contract in "justifiable reliance" upon the representation (see Hoffman v. 162 North Wolfe LLC, supra, 228 CA4th at 1185-1186, 1194-1198, 175 CR3d at 826, 833-836—P precluded from claiming justifiable reliance on D's vague promise, made eight months earlier, "to take care of" trespassing vehicles);

- As a result of reliance upon the false representation, plaintiff has suffered damages (Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 1239, 44 CR2d 352, 359; see Manderville v. PCG & S Group, Inc. (2007) 146 CA4th 1486, 1498, 55 CR3d 59, 68; and Auerbach v. Great Western Bank (1999) 74 CA4th 1172, 1184, 88 CR2d 718, 727—"Deception without resulting loss is not actionable fraud" (¶ 11:357.1)).

  (1) [11:354a] Compare—representations of opinion: Representations of opinion (e.g., matters involving a property's value) ordinarily are not actionable representations of fact. "It is hornbook law that an actionable misrepresentation must be made about past or existing facts; statements regarding future events are merely deemed opinions." [Graham v. Bank of America, N.A. (2014) 226 CA4th 594, 606-607, 172 CR3d 218, 228-229 (borrower's action against lender for fraud dismissed)—statements in appraisal indicating, among other things, that FMV of borrower's home was "ever-increasing" and loan was "good" for borrower were not facts, but rather statements of opinion or predictions of future events made for lender's benefit, and thus not actionable; see also Cansino v. Bank of America (2014) 224 CA4th 1462, 1469, 169 CR3d 619, 626 (fact pattern similar to Graham)—appraisal's future appreciation representations were mere opinions, not actionable misrepresentations]

  (2) [11:354.1] Particularized pleading required: A fraud cause of action must be pleaded with particularity; i.e., every element of the cause of action must be alleged factually and specifically in full. [Committee on Children's Television, Inc. v. General Foods Corp. (1983) 35 C3d 197, 216, 197 CR 783, 795 (superseded by statute on other grounds as stated in Branick v. Downey Savings & Loan Ass'n (2006) 39 C4th 235, 242, 46 CR3d 66, 70); see also West v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2013) 214 CA4th 780, 793, 154 CR3d 285, 295—twofold purpose is to give defendant notice of sufficiently definite charges so defendant can meet them and to permit court to weed out meritless claims; Stansfield v. Starkey (1990) 220 CA3d 59, 73, 269 CR 337, 345—complaint must plead facts showing "how, when, where, to whom, and by what means the representations were tendered"; Nagy v. Nagy (1989) 210 CA3d 1262, 1268-1269, 258 CR 787, 790—fraud complaint deficient if it neither shows cause and effect relationship between alleged fraud and damages sought nor alleges definite amount of damages suffered]

  Cross-refer: For a detailed discussion of the pleading requirements, see Weil & Brown et al., Cal. Prac. Guide: Civ. Pro. Before Trial (TRG), Ch. 6.

  (3) [11:354.2] "Justifiable reliance" element: For purposes of a fraud claim, "justifiable reliance" exists when the misrepresentation or nondisclosure immediately caused plaintiff to alter their legal relations, and without such misrepresentation or nondisclosure plaintiff would not, in all reasonable probability, have entered into the contract or transaction. [Manderville v. PCG & S Group, Inc. (2007) 146 CA4th 1486, 1498, 55 CR3d 59, 68-69; see also Hoffman

v. 162 North Wolfe LLC (2014) 228 CA4th 1178, 1194-1198, 175 CR3d 820, 833-836—P's particular knowledge and experience as real estate broker considered in determining whether he justifiably relied on D's alleged misrepresentation/ nondisclosure; West v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2013) 214 CA4th 780, 794, 154 CR3d 285, 296—reasonableness is judged by reference to plaintiff's knowledge and experience]

(a) [11:354.3] Justifiable reliance not defeated by failure to investigate truth of representations: Plaintiff cannot claim to have justifiably relied on a known misrepresentation (¶ 11:353.1). On the other hand, a fraud claim is not defeated simply by the fact plaintiff had the means and opportunity to investigate the truth or falsity of defendant's representations at the time the contract was entered into.

"Whenever a positive representation of fact is made, the party receiving it is, in general, entitled to rely and act upon it, and is not bound to verify it by an independent investigation." [Teague v. Hall (1916) 171 C 668, 670-671, 154 P 851, 852; see Manderville v. PCG & S Group, Inc. (2007) 146 CA4th 1486, 1499, 1502-1503, 55 CR3d 59, 69, 72—even though seller intentionally misrepresented property could be subdivided, buyer's negligence in investigating condition of property for subdivision prior to consummating transaction no defense; but see also ¶ 11:354.4]

(b) [11:354.4] Impact of exculpatory clause: A party to a contract is statutorily barred from contracting away liability for fraud (Civ.C. § 1668). Thus, exculpatory clauses in purchase and sale agreements—e.g., "as is" clauses (¶ 4:352 ff.) or "integration" provisions (¶ 4:527 ff.)—do not preclude as a matter of law a showing of justifiable reliance. [Manderville v. PCG & S Group, Inc. (2007) 146 CA4th 1486, 1499-1502, 55 CR3d 59, 69-71; see Thrifty Payless, Inc. v. Americana at Brand, LLC (2013) 218 CA4th 1230, 1239-1242, 160 CR3d 718, 725-728 (applying "fraud exception" to parol evidence rule)—integration clause in commercial lease did not insulate lessor from liability for misrepresenting common expenses (¶ 11:355.10); McClain v. Octagon Plaza, LLC (2008) 159 CA4th 784, 794, 71 CR3d 885, 893—exculpatory provision in commercial lease re leased unit's "statement of size" and use in calculating rent, as well as disclaimer asserting plaintiff had adequate opportunity to examine unit, did not insulate defendant from liability for fraud or prevent plaintiff from demonstrating justifiable reliance on defendant's representations]

On the other hand, an "as is" clause or "integration" provision puts the buyer on notice to investigate further and is a factor to consider in determining whether the buyer justifiably relied on the seller's representations in entering into the transaction. [See Hinesley v. Oakshade Town Ctr. (2005) 135 CA4th 289, 300-303, 37 CR3d 364, 372-374—provision in shopping center lease that lessor made no representations re status of other prospective tenants in the center rebutted plaintiff tenant's justifiable reliance on alleged representations by lessor regarding presence of 3 desirable "anchor" tenants (especially since plaintiff took no action to question, clarify or confirm the contractual status of those 3 tenants); compare Thrifty Payless, Inc. v. Americana at Brand, LLC, supra, 218 CA4th at 1242, 160 CR3d at 728 (distinguishing Hinesley)—lessee justifiably relied on commercial lessor agents' grossly inaccurate estimates regarding unfinished shopping center's anticipated common expenses where lessor's agents had all or most information regarding same and lessee was not in position to discover for itself close approximation of ultimate costs]

1) [11:354.5] Negligent misrepresentation claims: The rule is the same with respect to claims for negligent misrepresentation: An exculpatory clause does not as a matter of law bar the cause of action. [See SI 59 LLC v. Variel Varner Ventures, LLC (2018) 29 CA5th 146, 154, 239 CR3d 788, 794; McClain v. Octagon Plaza, LLC (2008) 159 CA4th 784, 794, 71 CR3d 885, 893—Civ.C. § 1668 encompasses both intentional and negligent misrepresentation; Blankenheim v. E.F. Hutton & Co., Inc. (1990) 217 CA3d 1463, 1472-1473, 266 CR 593, 599—"case law has long held negligent misrepresentation is included within the definition of fraud"]

[11:355] Reserved.

(4) [11:355.1] Seller's fraud liability to remote purchasers ("indirect deception doctrine"): Lack of privity between the parties (plaintiff buyer and defendant seller) will not necessarily defeat a buyer's fraud cause of action. A predecessor seller may be liable to subsequent purchasers for fraudulent misrepresentation or concealment in the sale if the seller intended or had reason to expect its fraud would be transmitted to and relied and acted upon by third party (subsequent) purchasers (so-called "indirect deception doctrine," described in Rest.2d Torts § 533). [Shapiro v. Sutherland (1998) 64 CA4th 1534, 1548-1549, 76 CR2d 101, 109-110; Geernaert v. Mitchell (1995) 31 CA4th 601, 605-609, 37 CR2d 483, 486-488—homeowners stated fraud cause of action against 2 prior owners based on misrepresentations and concealment regarding structural and foundation problems even though defendants made no misrepresentations directly to plaintiffs; see also Leko v. Cornerstone Bldg. Inspection Service (2001) 86 CA4th 1109, 1121, 103 CR2d 858, 867-868—home inspectors retained only by previous prospective purchaser liable to subsequent purchasers for misrepresentations made in inspection report (discussed further at ¶ 4:350.5)]

(a) [11:355.2] "Reason to expect": Whether a prior seller of real property had "reason to expect" transmission to the plaintiff buyer depends upon (i) the extent of the seller's knowledge of resale to a particular person or class of persons, and (ii) the likelihood the particular misrepresentation or concealment would be passed on to them. "A seller's liability under this standard becomes more problematic and difficult to establish with each intervening resale and with each passing year between the occurrence of the original fraud and the lawsuit." [Geernaert v. Mitchell (1995) 31 CA4th 601, 608, 37 CR2d 483, 487-488—remote purchaser's complaint must state ultimate facts showing defendant intended or had reason to expect reliance by plaintiff or class of persons of which plaintiff is a member]

1) [11:355.2a] Example: When Sellers accepted a transfer of employment out of state, they entered into a home purchase agreement with Prudential, a relocation management service with whom Employer had contracted to assist relocating employees unable to effect a timely sale of their homes. Prudential paid Sellers the agreed-upon price and Sellers gave Prudential a grant deed that left blank the grantee's name. Sellers also executed a Civ.C. § 1102.6 disclosure form that (among other things) stated they were not aware of neighborhood noise problems. Allegedly, this statement was false; but Prudential did not know of or have reason to suspect Sellers' deception.

Several months later, Prudential sold the property to Buyer and completed Sellers' grant deed identifying Buyer as grantee. Shortly after moving into the home, Buyer discovered loud disturbing noises and commotion from the next-door neighbors but could not resolve the problem. Buyer ultimately filed suit against Sellers for rescission and damages based on Sellers' alleged fraudulent misrepresentation and material nondisclosure regarding the noise.

Though the parties were not in direct privity, Buyer stated a fraud cause of action against Sellers. Sellers "knew or had to know that Prudential was simply guaranteeing the sale of their home to someone at an agreed price … [Sellers] signed a blank grant deed and clearly authorized Prudential to fill in the name of the grantee … In short, [Sellers] had to know and realize that Prudential intended to sell the property as quickly as possible; and since Prudential had no knowledge of the property or any of its problems, other than that disclosed by [Sellers], then they also had every reason to expect that their written statutory disclosure statement would be delivered to the purchaser when he or she ultimately was located. These circumstances are clearly sufficient to satisfy the principles of the indirect deception doctrine." [Shapiro v. Sutherland (1998) 64 CA4th 1534, 1550, 76 CR2d 101, 111 (emphasis in original); see also ¶ 4:361 ff.]

(b) [11:355.3] Evidentiary burden: Even though able to satisfy the pleading hurdle and state a cause of action, remote purchasers may face a particularly difficult evidentiary burden at trial. In effect, to prevail against prior sellers on a theory of "indirect fraud," plaintiffs must convince the trier of fact that each defendant not only defrauded their direct purchaser but also intended or had reason to expect that the fraud would be transmitted to plaintiffs. [Geernaert v. Mitchell (1995) 31 CA4th 601, 608-609, 37 CR2d 483, 488]

c. [11:355.10] Admissibility of parol evidence—"fraud exception": Extrinsic evidence of fraudulent representations is admissible as an exception to the parol evidence rule to show that a contract was fraudulently induced. This exception also applies to evidence of so-called promissory fraud: i.e., the parol evidence rule does not bar evidence of a fraudulent promise contradicting the parties' written agreement. [Riverisland Cold Storage, Inc. v. Fresno-Madera Production Credit Ass'n (2013) 55 C4th 1169, 1172, 151 CR3d 93, 94-95 (overruling prior contrary authority)—"it was never intended that the parol evidence rule should be used as a shield to prevent the proof of fraud" (internal quotes omitted); Thrifty Payless, Inc. v. Americana at Brand, LLC (2013) 218 CA4th 1230, 1239-1242, 160 CR3d 718, 725-728—notwithstanding lease's integration clause, extrinsic evidence admissible to establish fraud based on lessor's agents' grossly inaccurate estimates re lessee's probable pro rata share of property taxes, insurance and common area maintenance expenses; see further discussion at ¶ 11:23.2 ff.]

d. [11:356] Measure of damages as between buyer and seller: Civ.C. § 1709 provides generally that a party who is willfully defrauded is entitled to recover "any damages which he thereby suffers"; and Civ.C. § 3333 sets forth the general measure of compensatory damages in a tort action ("amount which will compensate for all the detriment proximately caused thereby, whether it could have been anticipated or not"). However, both statutes are displaced by the more specific damages provisions of Civ.C. § 3343 when the fraud occurs between buyer and seller in a real property purchase, sale or exchange transaction. [See Civ.C. § 3333— general measure of compensatory damages "except where otherwise expressly provided by this code …" (emphasis added); Alliance Mortg. Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 1240-1241, 44 CR2d 352, 360-361; see also Stout v. Turney (1978) 22 C3d 718, 725-726, 150 CR 637, 641 (tracing legislative history behind current Civ.C. § 3343)]

Civ.C. § 3343 authorizes general and special damages as follows:

(1) [11:357] General damages—"out-of-pocket" measure: A party (buyer or seller) defrauded in the purchase, sale or exchange of property is entitled to recover the difference between the actual value of the consideration given and the value of the consideration received. [Civ.C. § 3343(a); Alliance Mortg. Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 1240, 44 CR2d 352, 360; Fragale v. Faulkner (2003) 110 CA4th 229, 236, 1 CR3d 616, 621; Saunders v. Taylor (1996) 42 CA4th 1538, 1542, 50 CR2d 395, 397]

This is the traditional "out-of-pocket" measure of recovery in a fraud action. [See Stout v. Turney (1978) 22 C3d 718, 725, 150 CR 637, 641]

(a) [11:357.1] Element of cause of action: An essential element of a fraud cause of action is that plaintiff has been damaged as a result of defendant's misrepresentation or concealment of a material fact (¶ 11:354). [Alliance Mortg. Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 1240, 44 CR2d 352, 360—"unless the plaintiff merely seeks to rescind the contract, it must suffer actual monetary loss to recover on a fraud claim"; Auerbach v. Great Western Bank (1999) 74 CA4th 1172, 1184, 88 CR2d 718, 727; see also Childers v. Edwards (1996) 48 CA4th 1544, 1550-1551, 56 CR2d 328, 332—since proof of damages is essential element of fraud cause of action, plaintiff who proves liability but fails to prove damages cannot be "prevailing party" entitled to CCP § 1021 attorney fees (¶ 11:394.2)]

Recognizing that Civ.C. § 3343(a) (¶ 11:356 ff.) defines the "general test" by which the existence of a defrauded buyer's or seller's damage is determined in real property sale transactions, courts conclude that a buyer cannot establish a fraud cause of action against its seller absent evidence that the price the buyer paid for the property was greater than the actual value of the property. Thus, a buyer who offers no evidence of what the property's market value would have been had the true facts been known fails to show damages (as defined and measured by Civ.C. § 3343) and thus fails to establish an essential element of the fraud cause of action. [Saunders v. Taylor (1996) 42 CA4th 1538, 1543, 50 CR2d 395, 398; Fragale v. Faulkner (2003) 110 CA4th 229, 237, 1 CR3d 616, 622; see also Auerbach v. Great Western Bank, supra, 74 CA4th at 1185, 88 CR2d at 727]

1) [11:357.2] Example: Buyers sued Sellers for fraud based on Sellers' real estate transfer disclosure statement indicating no known room additions, structural modifications or other alterations that were performed without building permits or in violation of building codes; in fact, it turned out that the family room had been converted from a patio without a building permit and did not comply with applicable building codes. Contractors consulted by Buyers estimated it would cost $25,000 to bring the improvements into compliance. However, Buyers presented no evidence of what the value of the property would have been at the time it was purchased had the lack of permits and structural defects been fully disclosed. Having failed to establish Civ.C. § 3343 "general damages," Buyers did not make out a fraud cause of action and a judgment of nonsuit was properly entered against them. [Saunders v. Taylor (1996) 42 CA4th 1538, 1545, 50 CR2d 395, 399]

2) [11:357.3] Comment: On its facts, the result in Saunders is probably correct. However, viewed as a general proposition, the Saunders rule that evidence of Civ.C. § 3343 general (out-of-pocket) damages is an essential element of a buyer's or seller's fraud cause of action is troubling. Civ.C. § 3343(a) also entitles a defrauded buyer or seller to recover consequential damages (¶ 11:359); and well-established precedent (including Cal. Supreme Court authority) recognizes that plaintiff need not show out-of-pocket loss in order to be entitled to consequential damages for fraud under Civ.C. § 3343 (see ¶ 11:360).

Thus, the more accurate rule probably should be that a buyer or seller suing for fraud must offer evidence of damages of the type prescribed by Civ.C. § 3343—i.e., either general "out-of-pocket" damages and/or consequential damages recognized by the statute (loss of profits, etc.). (Apparently, in Saunders, supra, the plaintiff buyers showed neither general nor consequential damages.) Nonetheless, later cases continue to endorse the Saunders rule without further analysis. [See Auerbach v. Great Western Bank (1999) 74 CA4th 1172, 1185, 88 CR2d 718, 727]

3) [11:357.4] Compare—action for rescission based on fraud: Proof of damages is not an essential part of the prima facie case where plaintiff seeks only to rescind the contract based upon fraud. "A defrauded party has the right to rescind a contract, even without a showing of pecuniary damages, on establishing that fraudulent contractual promises inducing reliance have been breached." [Engalla v. Permanente Med. Group, Inc. (1997) 15 C4th 951, 979, 64 CR2d 843, 861; see ¶ 11:474.5]

(b) [11:358] Date of calculation: The defrauded party's general damages are computed as of the date of the transaction (date of completed purchase and sale). Thus, e.g., a buyer's recovery in a fraud action (difference in value between the price paid and the value of the property on the date of the transaction) will not be reduced by the fact a later resale yields a profit. [Burkett v. J.A. Thompson & Son (1957) 150 CA2d 523, 527, 310 P2d 56, 58—defrauded buyer "was entitled to recover the 'out-of-pocket loss,' or the difference between the price [she] paid and the actual value at the time she made the purchase"]

(2) [11:359] Special (consequential) damages: The party defrauded in a purchase and sale transaction is also entitled to recover "any additional damage arising from the particular transaction, including …" (Civ.C. § 3343(a)):

• Amounts actually and reasonably expended in reliance upon the fraud (Civ.C. § 3343(a)(1), ¶ 11:380);

• An amount that will compensate the defrauded party for loss of use and enjoyment of the property to the extent such loss was proximately caused by the fraud (Civ.C. § 3343(a)(2), ¶ 11:381);

• Where the defrauded party has been induced by reason of the fraud to sell, an amount that will compensate them for profits or other gains which might reasonably have been earned by use of the property had the defrauded seller retained it (Civ.C. § 3343(a)(3), ¶ 11:382);

• Where the defrauded party has been induced by reason of the fraud to purchase, an amount that will compensate them for any loss of profits or other gains that were reasonably anticipated and would have been earned from the defrauded buyer's use or sale of the property had it possessed the characteristics fraudulently attributed to it (but subject to specified limitations; see ¶ 11:383 ff.) (Civ.C. § 3343(a)(4)).

(a) [11:360] General out-of-pocket loss not required: The defrauded party may recover consequential damages under Civ.C. § 3343(a)(1)-(4) (¶ 11:359) even though the party has neither alleged nor proved general out-of-pocket damages (amount by which the consideration paid exceeded the value of the property). "The only effect of [plaintiff's] failure to show traditional 'out-of-pocket' loss is the necessity that a nullity be added to the amount shown to have been sustained as consequential damages." [Stout v. Turney (1978) 22 C3d 718, 729-730, 150 CR 637, 644; see Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 1241, 44 CR2d 352, 360, fn. 5; Las Palmas Assocs. v. Las Palmas Center Assocs. (1991) 235 CA3d 1220, 1254, 1 CR2d 301, 321]

On the other hand, a plaintiff who shows neither out-of-pocket nor consequential damages allowed by Civ.C. § 3343 has failed to establish an essential element of the fraud cause of action. See ¶ 11:357.1 ff.

[11:360.1 - 11:360.4] Reserved.

(3) [11:360.5] Attorney fees as damages ("tort of another" fees): In a very narrow set of circumstances, the defrauded plaintiff may also be entitled to recover attorney fees as damages.

Under the "third party tortfeasor" or "tort of another" rule, attorney fees incurred through instituting or defending an action against a third party as a direct result of the tort of another are a recoverable item of damages. [Prentice v. North American Title Guar. Corp. (1963) 59 C2d 618, 620-621, 30 CR 821, 823; Rest.2d Torts § 914; see Shapiro v. Sutherland (1998) 64 CA4th 1534, 1551, 76 CR2d 101, 111—buyer's attorney fees incurred in rescinding contract of purchase and sale based on third party (remote) seller's fraud recoverable as damages in fraud action against remote seller; Mai v. HKT Cal, Inc. (2021) 66 CA5th 504, 512, 520-525, 281 CR3d 255, 260, 265-269 & fn. 2 (distinguishing attorney fees awarded as costs from attorney fees awarded as compensatory damages under "tort of another" doctrine and discussing types of evidence admissible to sustain attorney-fees-as-damages award)]

(4) [11:361] No general "benefit of the bargain" damages: By enacting Civ.C. § 3343, the Legislature adopted the "out-of-pocket" rule as the exclusive measure of a defrauded buyer's or seller's general damages in a real property purchase, sale or exchange transaction; a broader "benefit of the bargain" measure of recovery that would give the defrauded party the difference between the value of the property as represented and the actual value thereof is statutorily rejected. Injury to plaintiff's "expectancy interest" is compensable under Civ.C. § 3343 only in the form of reasonably anticipated lost profits or gains (Civ.C. § 3343(a)(3) & (4)). [Civ.C. § 3343(b)(1); Stout v. Turney (1978) 22 C3d 718, 726, 150 CR 637, 642; Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 1240-1241, 44 CR2d 352, 360; Fragale v. Faulkner (2003) 110 CA4th 229, 236, 1 CR3d 616, 621]

(a) [11:361.1] Same result under Civ.C. § 1102.13 statutory cause of action (fraudulent real estate transfer disclosure statement): As discussed in Ch. 4, sellers of residential property must provide their buyers with a statutory "real estate transfer disclosure statement" (Civ.C. § 1102 et seq.; see ¶ 4:354 ff.). Noncompliance does not affect the validity of a property transfer; but a seller (or seller's agent) who willfully or negligently fails to comply is liable for the buyer's consequential "actual damages." [Civ.C. § 1102.13; see Realmuto v. Gagnard (2003) 110 CA4th 193, 202, 1 CR3d 569, 576— § 1102.13 damages remedy applies only if buyer has gone through with the transaction despite seller's failure to comply with statutory disclosure requirements]

The reference to "actual damages" in § 1102.13 means compensatory damages; and when a buyer's § 1102.13 action is based on alleged fraud in a real property purchase transaction, "actual damages" means damages as measured exclusively by the Civ.C. § 3343(a) out-of-pocket loss rule (not broader "benefit of the bargain" damages). [Saunders v. Taylor (1996) 42 CA4th 1538, 1543-1545, 50 CR2d 395, 398-399]

(b) [11:361.2] Fiduciary fraud exception: Civ.C. § 3343 does not apply when plaintiff has been defrauded by a fiduciary. See ¶ 11:365 ff.

(5) [11:362] Causation limitation: The measure of recovery for fraud allows the defrauded party to recoup its out-of-pocket losses and expenditures and, in an appropriate case, lost profits, only to the extent those damages were proximately caused by the defendant's fraud. Thus, e.g., a buyer may not recover the full difference between the contract price and the value of the property (general damages) to the extent the difference in value was not a result of the seller's fraud. [Gray v. Don Miller & Assocs., Inc. (1984) 35 C3d 498, 504, 198 CR 551, 554; see Las Palmas Assocs. v. Las Palmas Center Assocs. (1991) 235 CA3d 1220, 1252-1254, 1 CR2d 301, 319-320—"damage award for fraud will be reversed where the injury is not related to the misrepresentation"]

Likewise, out-of-pocket expenditures that would have been incurred even if the property had been in the condition as represented are not made in reliance upon the fraudulent misrepresentations and thus are not recoverable damages. [Gagne v. Bertran (1954) 43 C2d 481, 491-492, 275 P2d 15, 22-23; Fragale v. Faulkner (2003) 110 CA4th 229, 241, 1 CR3d 616, 625, fn. 11; see Walters v. Marler (1978) 83 CA3d 1, 26-27, 147 CR 655, 671 (disapproved on other grounds by Gray v. Don Miller & Assocs., Inc. (1984) 35 C3d 498, 507, 198 CR 551, 556)—buyer's landscaping, property tax, title insurance, property insurance, interest on loan, and maintenance and repair costs not recoverable because not incurred as a result of seller's fraud]

e. [11:365] Compare—fraud by fiduciary: A "constructive fraud" arises upon breach of a duty by one in a fiduciary relationship who, without actual fraudulent intent, misleads another to that person's prejudice (e.g., a broker misrepresents or fails to disclose material facts affecting a transaction). These claims may be based on written or oral misrepresentations. [Civ.C. § 1573; Warren v. Merrill (2006) 143 CA4th 96, 109, 49 CR3d 122, 131; see also Tindell v. Murphy (2018) 22 CA5th 1239, 1249-1250, 232 CR3d 448, 456 (noting constructive fraud, like fraud, must be pled with specificity), Michel v. Palos Verdes Network Group, Inc. (2007) 156 CA4th 756, 762, 67 CR3d 797, 802—fiduciary's failure to share material information with principal amounts to constructive fraud, a "term of art" obviating actual fraudulent intent; and ¶ 11:473]

Civ.C. § 3343 (¶ 11:356 ff.) fixes the measure of damages between buyer and seller in a fraudulent property purchase, sale or exchange transaction. However, in the case of constructive or fiduciary fraud, the more general measure of damages provided by Civ.C. §§ 1709 and 3333 applies. [Alliance Mortg. Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 1241, 44 CR2d 352, 361; Alfaro v. Community Housing Improvement System & Planning Ass'n, Inc. (2009) 171 CA4th 1356, 1383, 124 CR3d 271, 306 (low-income housing owners' fraud action against non-profit real estate sellers/fiduciaries for failure to disclose affordable housing deed restrictions); Strebel v. Brenlar Investments, Inc. (2006) 135 CA4th 740, 747, 37 CR3d 699, 704 (buyer's fraud action against dual agent and broker who misrepresented status of tax liens recorded against subject property)]

As stated, Civ.C. § 1709 allows a defrauded party to recover all damages it incurs as a result of the deceit, while Civ.C. § 3333 is the general tort measure of recovery (¶ 11:356). [Fragale v. Faulkner (2003) 110 CA4th 229, 236, 1 CR3d 616, 622]

(1) [11:365.1] Not dependent on pleading breach of fiduciary duty cause of action: So long as the evidence demonstrates that the fraud was committed by a fiduciary, the broader measure of damages applies even if plaintiff did not specifically plead a cause of action for breach of fiduciary duty, instead alleging only intentional misrepresentation. [Fragale v. Faulkner (2003) 110 CA4th 229, 239, 1 CR3d 616, 624, fn. 9]

(2) [11:366] Benefit of the bargain or out-of-pocket measure? Whereas Civ.C. § 3343 expressly rejects the "benefit of the bargain" measure of recovery in a fraud action between buyer and seller (¶ 11:361), the appropriate measure of damages is not statutorily fixed in third party fiduciary fraud cases; and courts have split on the subject (see Strebel v. Brenlar Investments, Inc. (2006) 135 CA4th 740, 748, 37 CR3d 699, 705 (discussing cases)):

(a) [11:367] View adopting benefit of the bargain approach: Several cases adopt the broader benefit of the bargain measure of damages applicable in breach of contract actions under Civ.C. § 3300. [Moore v. Teed (2020) 48 CA5th 280, 289-291, 261 CR3d 642, 653-655 (collecting cases); see also Fragale v. Faulkner (2003) 110 CA4th 229, 237-238, 1 CR3d 616, 623; Salahutdin v. Valley of Calif., Inc. (1994) 24 CA4th 555, 566-568, 29 CR2d 463, 469-470, and cases cited therein]

"[W]here … the defrauding party stands in a fiduciary relationship to the victim of fraud, the damages must be measured pursuant to the broad provisions of sections 3333 and 1709 regulating compensation for torts in general … The cases amplify that the measure of damages provided by the foregoing sections is substantially the same as that for breach of contract prescribed by section 3300; i.e., it tends to give the injured party the benefit of his bargain and insofar as possible to place him in the same position he would have been had the promisor performed the contract." [Pepitone v. Russo (1976) 64 CA3d 685, 689, 134 CR 709, 711 (original emphasis and internal cites omitted); see also Moore v. Teed, supra, 48 CA5th at 291, 261 CR3d at 655—"Applying this broader measure of damages ensures that a faithless fiduciary is held to account for the full amount of the loss of which his breach of faith is a cause"; Fragale v. Faulkner, supra, 110 CA4th at 237, 1 CR3d at 622 (same)]

1) [11:368] How applied: The benefit of the bargain standard considers the loss sustained by the defrauded party rather than the value with which they parted. Thus, courts look solely to the fair market value of the property lost (i.e., the difference between the actual value of what plaintiff received and what they expected to receive) by reason of the fiduciary's fraud and the consequential expenditures plaintiff incurred as a result of the fraud. [See Pepitone v. Russo (1976) 64 CA3d 685, 689-690, 134 CR 709, 711 (¶ 11:368.1)]

a) Examples

• [11:368.1] Damages for undisclosed encumbrance: A buyer who successfully sued her real estate agents for fraud and breach of fiduciary duty was entitled to "benefit of the bargain" damages. The agents arranged an exchange of properties on the buyer's behalf but failed to disclose that a second trust deed on the property the buyer was receiving had an acceleration clause that resulted in her losing the property in foreclosure. The buyer's damages equaled the difference between the purchase price and encumbrances, plus additional expenses of $500 incurred in an effort to refinance and prevent the foreclosure. [Pepitone v. Russo (1976) 64 CA3d 685, 689-690, 134 CR 709, 711]

• [11:368.2] Damages for unfinished renovations: A real estate agent who fraudulently induced a buyer to purchase and remodel a "fixer-upper house" by misrepresenting that the agent was a licensed contractor and could deliver high-end improvements, was liable to the buyer for "benefit of the bargain" damages. An installed foundation proved defective and promised renovations were far more costly than what the agent represented. Thus, the buyer was entitled to damages in an amount equal to the difference between the actual cost he would have incurred to complete the promised work and the amount the real estate agent promised to complete the work. [See Moore v. Teed (2020) 48 CA5th 280, 283, 293-294, 261 CR3d 642, 648, 656-657]

[11:368.3 - 11:368.7] Reserved.

2) [11:368.8] Date of measure: Unlike out-of-pocket damages, which are usually calculated at the time of the transaction (¶ 11:358), benefit of the bargain damages may appropriately be measured as of the date of discovery of the fraud. “Applying the difference as of the date of the transaction would defeat the goal of compensation for the entire loss where … discovery of the fiduciary's … fraud did not occur until years after purchase of the property.” [Salahutdin v. Valley of Calif., Inc. (1994) 24 CA4th 555, 568, 29 CR2d 463, 470-471]

(b) [11:369] View adopting out-of-pocket approach: Other courts, relying on Civ.C. § 3343, limit the defrauded party's recoverable damages to out-of-pocket losses (the difference between the actual value of what plaintiff received and the actual value with which plaintiff parted, plus consequential losses). [Overgaard v. Johnson (1977) 68 CA3d 821, 827-828, 137 CR 412, 416-417 (seller's negligence action against real estate salesperson and broker); Hensley v. McSweeney (2001) 90 CA4th 1081, 1086, 109 CR2d 489, 492 (purchaser's fraud action against escrow agent)]

“Civil Code section 3333 does not set forth any benefit of the bargain rule. That section simply sets out the measure of damages long recognized in torts, namely, to compensate a plaintiff for a loss sustained rather than give him the benefit of any contract bargain.” [Overgaard v. Johnson, supra, 68 CA3d at 823-824, 137 CR at 413 (emphasis in original); see also Gagne v. Bertran (1954) 43 C2d 481, 490-491, 275 P2d 15, 22—pursuant to Civ.C. §§ 1709 and 3333, “the damages, whether for deceit or negligence, must be measured by the actual losses suffered because of the misrepresentation”]

(c) [11:369.5] Additional view adopting general tort damage approach where actionable fraud not related to property value: Yet another view recognizes that, in cases where the actionable fraud has nothing to do with the value of the subject property, neither of the approaches set forth at ¶ 11:367 ff. “is particularly helpful or appropriate.” In such cases, courts should adopt the measure of damages that most appropriately compensates the injured party for all the loss sustained (the general tort damages approach; ¶ 11:356). [Strebel v. Brenlar Investments, Inc. (2006) 135 CA4th 740, 748-749, 37 CR3d 699, 705-706]

1) [11:369.6] Date of calculation: Unlike out-of-pocket and benefit of the bargain damages (¶ 11:358, 11:368.8), damages in these cases are not calculated as of a particular date. But this is not to say the damages are computed over an unlimited period of time. Rather, the calculation date will be the point in time when the chain of causation between the fraud and the damages suffered (see ¶ 11:362) is broken. [Strebel v. Brenlar Investments, Inc. (2006) 135 CA4th 740, 749-754, 37 CR3d 699, 706-710 & fn. 14 (lost appreciation damages; see ¶ 11:369.7)]

2) Application

• [11:369.7] Relying on Sellers' agent's representations that tax liens recorded against Sellers' property would be removed by the close of escrow, Buyer sold his existing home before escrow closed. Sellers were unable to get the liens removed and canceled the sale. Buyer's subsequent attempts for almost four years to find a suitable replacement property were unsuccessful because of a rapidly appreciating housing market.

In his fiduciary fraud action against the agent, Buyer was entitled to recover damages for the lost appreciation on and loss of use of his home between the date of its sale and trial as reasonable compensation for his inability to purchase an acceptable replacement property concurrently with the sale of his home. Buyer's recovery was not barred by his investment of the proceeds from the sale of his home in an interest-bearing account or his decision to purchase a replacement home in a different city. [Strebel v. Brenlar Investments, Inc. (2006) 135 CA4th 740, 748-754, 37 CR3d 699, 705-710]

(d) [11:370] Distinction based on fiduciary negligent vs. intentional misrepresentation? The appropriate measure of damages for fiduciary fraud may depend on whether the action proceeds on a theory of negligent or, instead, intentional misrepresentation.

• [11:370.1] According to the Cal. Supreme Court, plaintiffs are always limited to out-of-pocket damages under Civ.C. § 3333 for a fiduciary's negligent misrepresentation. [See Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 1249-1250, 44 CR2d 352, 367 (criticizing Salahutdin v. Valley of Calif., Inc. (1994) 24 CA4th 555, 566-568, 29 CR2d 463, 469-470, for adopting benefit of the bargain measure in case apparently involving fiduciary negligent misrepresentation); see also Fragale v. Faulkner (2003) 110 CA4th 229, 237, 1 CR3d 616, 622 (citing Alliance Mortgage)—“a plaintiff is entitled only to its out-of-pocket losses suffered because of a fiduciary's negligent misrepresentation”]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

• [11:370.2] On the other hand, while the Court has commented that the measure of damages under Civ.C. § 3333 might be greater (benefit of the bargain damages) for a fiduciary's intentional misrepresentation, it has never expressly so held. [See Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 1250, 44 CR2d 352, 367—"we need not address that issue here"]

[11:371 - 11:374] Reserved.

(3) [11:375] Effect of fiduciary's fraudulent acquisition of property: When a fiduciary acquires the subject property by fraud, various equitable remedies, in addition to or in lieu of monetary damages, are "available and appropriate." These remedies may include cancellation of the property-transfer document (¶ 11:545 ff.), reconveyance, or quieting title (¶ 11:526 ff.). [See Warren v. Merrill (2006) 143 CA4th 96, 114, 49 CR3d 122, 135]

Pursuant to the quiet title remedy, the holder of legal title to the property (the broker) becomes the constructive trustee of the property (having committed "constructive fraud," ¶ 11:365) for the benefit of the equitable title holder (the seller). [Warren v. Merrill, supra, 143 CA4th at 114, 49 CR3d at 135]

[11:376 - 11:379] Reserved.

2. Specific Items Recoverable as Out-of-Pocket Consequential Damages

a. [11:380] Reliance damages: The defrauded party's recoverable "reliance damages" (Civ.C. § 3343(a)(1)) generally are the amounts spent in reliance on the false representations or in efforts to mitigate damages therefrom, provided plaintiff shows a causal connection between the alleged fraud and the damages incurred. [Walters v. Marler (1978) 83 CA3d 1, 26-27, 147 CR 655, 671 (disapproved on other grounds by Gray v. Don Miller & Assocs., Inc. (1984) 35 C3d 498, 507, 198 CR 551, 556)]

For example, a defrauded buyer's reliance damages may include:

• moving costs;

• sums advanced in attempting to subdivide the property;

• escrow fees;

• fees for building permits;

• telephone hookup charges;

• expenses for fences and yard cleaning;

• amounts spent for improvements necessitated by a concealed defective condition;

• expenses incurred while negotiating the contract;

• lost opportunities;

• harm to reputation; and

• other expenses that were reasonable under the circumstances to the extent they were proximately caused by the seller's fraud. [See Vestar Develop. II, LLC v. General Dynamics Corp. (9th Cir. 2001) 249 F3d 958, 962 (applying Calif. law); Hardy v. Carmichael (1962) 207 CA2d 218, 228, 24 CR 475, 481; Perkins v. Ketchum (1962) 211 CA2d 245, 252-253, 27 CR 278, 282; Garrett v. Perry (1959) 53 C2d 178, 186, 346 P2d 758, 763]

b. [11:381] Loss of use and enjoyment: Damages for loss of use and enjoyment of the property are recoverable to the extent proximately caused by the fraud. [Civ.C. § 3343(a)(2); Stout v. Turney (1978) 22 C3d 718, 729, 150 CR 637, 643—defrauded purchaser properly awarded damages for losses sustained as a result of having to buy and hold additional property; Channell v. Anthony (1976) 58 CA3d 290, 315-316, 129 CR 704, 720-721]

Loss of use damages are usually measured by the fair market rental value of the property during the period the defrauded party did not have possession, or the cost incurred by the defrauded party to rent a substitute property for the same use and purposes. [Channell v. Anthony, supra, 58 CA3d at 315-316, 129 CR at 720-721; Williams v. Graham (1948) 83 CA2d 649, 653, 189 P2d 324, 326]

c. Lost profits

(1) [11:382] Defrauded seller's profits: One who is fraudulently induced to sell a property may recover an amount equal to the profits and other gains the seller might have realized from the property had the sale not occurred. [Civ.C. § 3343(a)(3)]

(2) [11:383] Defrauded buyer's profits: A defrauded buyer is entitled to damages for reasonably anticipated profits or other gains the property would have yielded from use or a subsequent sale had the property been in the condition as represented … but only to the extent that:

- the buyer acquired the property for the purpose of using or reselling it for profit;

- the buyer reasonably relied on the fraud in entering into the contract and in anticipating profits from a subsequent use or sale of the property; and

- any loss of profits suffered by the buyer was proximately caused by the seller's fraud and the buyer's reliance thereon. [Civ.C. § 3343(a)(4); Las Palmas Assocs. v. Las Palmas Center Assocs. (1991) 235 CA3d 1220, 1254, 1 CR2d 301, 321; Hartman v. Shell Oil Co. (1977) 68 CA3d 240, 247, 137 CR 244, 248]

(a) [11:384] Compare—where title not conveyed: A buyer's lost profits are recoverable under Civ.C. § 3343(a)(4) only where the property was actually acquired for use or resale. Lost profits are not a recoverable item of damages in a buyer's fraud action where title to the subject property was never conveyed to the buyer. [Simon v. San Paolo U.S. Holding Co., Inc. (2005) 35 C4th 1159, 1175-1176, 29 CR3d 379, 389-390 (fraudulent promise to negotiate exclusively, ¶ 4:276 ff.)—attempted buyer's lost profits not recoverable under promissory fraud cause of action "because the fraud did not cause them" (emphasis in original); Gray v. Don Miller & Assocs., Inc. (1984) 35 C3d 498, 504, 198 CR 551, 554 (broker's fraudulent representations that offer to purchase had been accepted); Kenly v. Ukegawa (1993) 16 CA4th 49, 54-55, 19 CR2d 771, 774-775 (fraudulent promise to sell)]

d. [11:385] No emotional distress damages: Emotional distress is not a recoverable item of damages for fraud in a purchase and sale transaction. [Kruse v. Bank of America (1988) 202 CA3d 38, 67, 248 CR 217, 234; Gravillis v. Coldwell Banker Residential Brokerage Co. (2006) 143 CA4th 761, 776-777, 49 CR3d 531, 541]

3. [11:390] Punitive Damages: Punitive damages may be awardable in an action for fraud upon proof by clear and convincing evidence that defendant has been guilty of "oppression, fraud or malice." [Civ.C. § 3294(a) & (c); see Warren v. Merrill (2006) 143 CA4th 96, 116, 49 CR3d 122, 136-137; Hartman v. Shell Oil Co. (1977) 68 CA3d 240, 248-250, 137 CR 244, 249-251]

a. [11:390.1] Not negligent misrepresentation: "Oppression", "fraud" or "malice" warranting punitive damages essentially is intentional misconduct (see Civ.C. § 3294(c)(1), (2) & (3)). Consequently, punitive damages potentially are recoverable in fraud actions involving intentional, but not negligent, misrepresentation. [Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 1241, 44 CR2d 352, 361; PM Group, Inc. v. Stewart (2007) 154 CA4th 55, 69, 64 CR3d 227, 239]

b. [11:391] Clear and convincing evidence burden of proof: Plaintiff's success in proving an intentional misrepresentation (or concealment) does not ipso facto establish a right to punitive damages on the ground of fraud. Whereas the fraud cause of action need be proved only by a normal preponderance of the evidence, defendant's "fraud" (or oppression or malice, as defined by Civ.C. § 3294(c)) for punitive damages purposes must be established by clear and convincing evidence. [Civ.C. § 3294(a)]

Cross-refer: For a detailed treatment of punitive damages, see Haning, Flahavan, Cheng & Wright, Cal. Prac. Guide: Personal Injury (TRG), Ch. 3.

4. [11:392] Attorney Fees: There is one narrow set of circumstances where attorney fees might be recoverable as damages (see ¶ 11:360.5 re "third party tortfeasor" rule). Otherwise, attorney fees are not a recoverable element of damages (under Civ.C. § 3333 or § 3343) in a fraud action; nor is there any statutory authority for an attorney fees as costs award in an action for fraud. [See Gray v. Don Miller & Assocs., Inc. (1984) 35 C3d 498, 507, 198 CR 551, 556]

Thus, the prevailing party's right to recover attorney fees ordinarily will derive (if at all) only from the underlying contract.

a. [11:393] Civ.C. § 1717 fees not recoverable: A fraud cause of action sounds in tort; and the Civ.C. § 1717 reciprocal prevailing party attorney fee provisions apply only in actions "on the contract" or to enforce the contract (see ¶ 4:514.1 ff., 11:137 ff.). Therefore, Civ.C. § 1717 attorney fees are not recoverable by parties prevailing in a fraud action, notwithstanding that the underlying purchase and sale contract contains an attorney fee clause. [Stout v. Turney (1978) 22 C3d 718, 730, 150 CR 637, 644; see Childers v. Edwards (1996) 48 CA4th 1544, 1548, 56 CR2d 328, 330-331—"Tort-based misrepresentation is not within section 1717 's domain"; Exxess Electronixx v. Heger Realty Corp. (1998) 64 CA4th 698, 708, 75 CR2d 376, 383—constructive fraud and breach of fiduciary duty claims "sound in tort" and thus are outside ambit of § 1717]

b. [11:394] Compare—CCP § 1021 fees under broadly worded ("arising under") fee recovery provision: However, if the contractual provision is phrased broadly enough, attorney fees may be awardable in a fraud (or other tort) action under the general authority of CCP § 1021 (except as otherwise provided by statute, attorney compensation "is left to the agreement … of the parties"). [Santisas v. Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 608, 71 CR2d 830, 836—real estate purchase agreement provided for prevailing party fee recovery in actions "arising out of the execution of the agreement or the sale"; Exxess Electronixx v. Heger Realty Corp. (1998) 64 CA4th 698, 708, 75 CR2d 376, 383; see also ¶ 11:137.1 ff.]

Thus, a broadly-worded fee clause not limited to contract actions—e.g., prevailing party shall be entitled to reasonable attorney fees and costs "in any action arising out of this agreement" or "in any lawsuit or legal proceeding to which this agreement gives rise"—provides a basis for the prevailing party's fee recovery in any suit arising from the parties' contractual relationship … whether contract or tort causes of action. [Santisas v. Goodin, supra, 17 C4th at 608, 71 CR2d at 836; Xuereb v. Marcus & Millichap, Inc. (1992) 3 CA4th 1338, 1342-1343, 5 CR2d 154, 157-158; see also Khan v. Shim (2016) 7 CA5th 49, 55, 59-62, 212 CR3d 292, 297, 300-303—contractual fee provision covering "any litigation or arbitration ... between the parties concerning [agreement's] terms, interpretation or enforcement or the rights of any party in relation thereto" deemed broad enough to cover seller's fees for successful defense of buyer's tort claims (emphasis in original); compare Exxess Electronixx v. Heger Realty Corp., supra, 64 CA4th at 713, 75 CR2d at 386—lease providing for prevailing party fee recovery in action to "enforce the terms hereof or declare rights hereunder" not broad enough to cover constructive fraud and breach of fiduciary duty (tort) claims; and see examples at ¶ 4:518.1 ff.]

(1) [11:394.1] "Prevailing party" determination, generally: Where attorney fees are recoverable under a contract provision pursuant to CCP § 1021, courts will examine the contract to determine whether it defines "prevailing party" and, if so, which party meets that definition. [Santisas v. Goodin (1998) 17 C4th 599, 621-622, 71 CR2d 830, 845; Exxess Electronixx v. Heger Realty Corp. (1998) 64 CA4th 698, 708, 75 CR2d 376, 383]

Absent a contractual definition, the CCP § 1032(a)(4) rules identifying the "prevailing party" for cost recovery purposes (¶ 11:394.2 ff.) apply to attorney fees recovery pursuant to CCP § 1021 (CCP § 1033.5(a)(10)(A)). [See Childers v. Edwards (1996) 48 CA4th 1544, 1549, 56 CR2d 328, 331—prevailing party determination in fraud case may depend on application of CCP §§ 1021, 1032 and 1033.5; see also Khan v. Shim (2016) 7 CA5th 49, 59, 212 CR3d 292, 299-300—rather than overriding Civ.C. § 1717 (¶ 11:393), CCP § 1032 works in tandem with it by providing fees for non-contract claims where agreement "is broadly phrased enough to cover those claims"]

(a) [11:394.2] Nondiscretionary determination: The categories of parties who automatically have "prevailing party" status under CCP § 1032(a)(4) (and thus for purposes of a CCP § 1021 attorney fees recovery) include the party with a "net monetary recovery," a defendant who obtains a dismissal, a defendant in a case where neither plaintiff nor defendant obtains any relief, and a defendant against whom no relief is obtained. [CCP § 1032(a)(4); Goodman v. Lozano (2010) 47 C4th 1327, 1333, 104 CR3d 219, 223; see also Khan v. Shim (2016) 7 CA5th 49, 57, 212 CR3d 292, 298 (noting § 1032(a)(4)'s "prevailing party" definition may include defendant in whose favor voluntary pretrial dismissal is entered); Zintel Holdings, LLC v. McLean (2012) 209 CA4th 431, 441, 147 CR3d 157, 165—party who fits any of § 1032(a)

(4)'s "prevailing" definitions is entitled to recover costs as matter of right; Childers v. Edwards (1996) 48 CA4th 1544, 1551, 56 CR2d 328, 332—where plaintiff prevailed only on liability portion of fraud claim, but failed to prove damages, defendant was "prevailing party" entitled to § 1021 attorney fees]

1) [11:394.3] "Net monetary recovery": The party with the "net monetary recovery" means the party who gains money by legal process "free from all deductions." [Goodman v. Lozano (2010) 47 C4th 1327, 1334, 104 CR3d 219, 224; see also Andrade v. Western Riverside Council of Governments (2024) 99 CA5th 1020, 1029-1030, 318 CR3d 396, 403-404 (distinguishing between CCP § 1032 fees available to party who received net monetary recovery (i.e., "prevailing party") and party who recovered greater relief in contract action (i.e., party "prevailing on the contract," ¶ 11:137); Maynard v. BTI Group, Inc. (2013) 216 CA4th 984, 994, 157 CR3d 148, 155—business owner deemed prevailing party since she obtained net recovery, "albeit under a negligence rather than a breach of contract cause of action" (¶ 11:137.1); Vons Cos., Inc. v. Lyle Parks, Jr., Inc. (2009) 177 CA4th 823, 825-831, 99 CR3d 562, 563-568—plaintiff who prevailed on claims assigned to it by original plaintiff in settlement of other claims obtained "net monetary recovery" of $35,556, entitling plaintiff to recover "reasonably necessary" costs incurred in connection with said claims]

a) [11:394.4] Voluntary dismissal in exchange for monetary settlement: A plaintiff who voluntarily dismisses an action after entering into a monetary settlement is a prevailing party for purposes of CCP § 1032(a)(4): "When a defendant pays money to a plaintiff in order to settle a case, the plaintiff obtains a net monetary recovery, and a dismissal pursuant to such a settlement is not a dismissal in the defendant's favor." [deSaulles v. Community Hosp. of Monterey Peninsula (2016) 62 C4th 1140, 1144, 1158, 202 CR3d 429, 431, 432 (internal quotes and brackets omitted)—although monetary settlements resemble private contracts, they also result in judgments that conclusively resolve parties' issues and therefore fit definition of "monetary recovery"—i.e., "to gain by legal process"]

b) [11:394.5] Compare—damages awards offset by prior settlement with other parties: A plaintiff whose damages award is offset to zero by a prior settlement with codefendants (see CCP § 877) does not categorically qualify as a prevailing party as a matter of law (i.e., "the party with a net monetary recovery"). Unless a party fits into one of the other CCP § 1032(a)(4) prevailing party categories (¶ 11:394.2), courts have discretion in determining "prevailing party" status (¶ 11:394.6). [See Goodman v. Lozano (2010) 47 C4th 1327, 1338, 104 CR3d 219, 228, fn. 4 (disapproving prior contrary authority)—plaintiff who settled with one co-tortfeasor and went to trial against another but obtained no additional recovery because damages awarded were less than settlement setoff amount was not "prevailing party" as matter of law]

(b) [11:394.6] Discretionary determination: When a party recovers nonmonetary relief, and in situations other than those described in ¶ 11:394.2, the court has discretion to determine the "prevailing party" and to allow, deny or apportion costs between the parties. [CCP § 1032(a)(4); Goodman v. Lozano (2010) 47 C4th 1327, 1338, 104 CR3d 219, 228, fn. 4; see also ¶ 11:139.3 ff. (similar rule for Civ.C. § 1717 contractual prevailing party fee recovery)]

1) [11:394.7] Factors considered, generally: Some of the significant factors considered by the court in exercising its discretion are the necessity for the claimed fees*, fairness,* and whether the parties achieved their principal litigation objectives. [See Villa De Las Palmas Homeowner's Ass'n v. Terifaj (2004) 33 C4th 73, 94, 14 CR3d 67, 81; Slavin v. Fink (1994) 25 CA4th 722, 725, 30 CR2d 750, 751; and Fennessy v. DeLeuw-Cather Corp. (1990) 218 CA3d 1192, 1194-1195, 267 CR 772, 773-774; see also ¶ 11:139.16 ff.]

2) [11:394.8] "Unity of defense" cases: Under CCP § 1032(a)(4) (¶ 11:394.2), in general, a defendant against whom no relief is obtained automatically qualifies as a "prevailing party" even if plaintiff recovers against another defendant. However, there is an exception: Where one of multiple, jointly represented defendants presenting a "unified defense" prevails, the court has discretion to award or deny fees to that party (the so-called "unity of defense exception"). [Textron Fin'l Corp. v. National Union Fire Ins. Co. of Pittsburgh (2004) 118 CA4th 1061, 1075, 13 CR3d 586, 597 (disapproved on other grounds by Zhang v. Sup.Ct. (California Capital Ins. Co.) (2013) 57 C4th 364, 382, 159 CR3d 672, 688); Slavin v. Fink (1994) 25 CA4th 722, 725-726, 30 CR2d 750, 752—exception applied where losing defendant was property owner and winning defendant was her agent; but see Zintel Holdings, LLC v. McLean (2012) 209 CA4th 431, 443, 147 CR3d 157, 167 (casting doubt on continued viability of exception given 1986 revision of cost recovery statutes)—court has "broad discretion" to apportion fees to extent defendant's shared counsel engaged in litigation activity on behalf of codefendant for whom fees were not recoverable]

Cross-refer: For a discussion of prevailing party attorney fee awards in breach of contract actions, see ¶ 11:136 ff.

5. [11:395] Interest: Prejudgment interest is potentially awardable as an item of damages in a fraud (or other tort) action under Civ.C. § 3287(a) or § 3288, discussed at ¶ 11:396 ff., 11:401 ff. In either case, the purpose of the interest award is to compensate plaintiff for the accrual of wealth that could have been produced during the period of the loss; it is a component of compensatory damages, awarded in order to make the defrauded plaintiff "whole." [Cassinos v. Union Oil Co. of Calif. (1993) 14 CA4th 1770, 1790, 18 CR2d 574, 586; Wisper Corp. N.V. v. California Commerce Bank (1996) 49 CA4th 948, 958, 57 CR2d 141, 147; Newby v. Vroman (1992) 11 CA4th 283, 289, 14 CR2d 44, 48]

a. [11:395.1] Interest rate: No statute specifies the rate of prejudgment interest for a fraud claim. Therefore, the constitutional rate of 7% per annum applies to that portion of plaintiff's damages awarded for fraud. [Cal.Const. Art. XV, § 1; Michelson v. Hamada (1994) 29 CA4th 1566, 1585, 36 CR2d 343, 352-353]

b. [11:396] Absolute right to interest where damages readily ascertainable (Civ.C. § 3287(a)): Plaintiffs prevailing in a tort action have an absolute right to prejudgment interest where the recoverable damages are "certain or capable of being made certain by calculation"—i.e., where defendant actually knows the amount owed or can compute that amount from reasonably available information. [Cassinos v. Union Oil Co. of Calif. (1993) 14 CA4th 1770, 1789, 18 CR2d 574, 585; see Wisper Corp. N.V. v. California Commerce Bank (1996) 49 CA4th 948, 960, 57 CR2d 141, 148; Williams v. Graham (1948) 83 CA2d 649, 653, 189 P2d 324, 326 (Civ.C. § 3287 interest awarded in fraud action)]

Defendant's denial of liability does not make damages uncertain for purposes of Civ.C. § 3287(a). [Wisper Corp. N.V. v. California Commerce Bank, supra, 49 CA4th at 958, 57 CR2d at 146; see also Collins v. City of Los Angeles (2012) 205 CA4th 140, 151, 139 CR3d 880, 889—legal dispute concerning defendant's liability did not render damages uncertain]

(1) [11:397] Certainty of damages by reference to market values: Where plaintiff's damages may be determined by reference to reasonably ascertainable market values, the damages are "capable of being made certain by calculation" within the meaning of Civ.C. § 3287(a). Civ.C. § 3287 interest is awardable in such a case even though proof is required to determine the market value of the property on a designated date. [Cassinos v. Union Oil Co. of Calif. (1993) 14 CA4th 1770, 1789, 18 CR2d 574, 585; Wisper Corp. N.V. v. California Commerce Bank (1996) 49 CA4th 948, 958, 57 CR2d 141, 147; see Howe v. City Title Ins. Co. (1967) 255 CA2d 85, 88, 63 CR 119, 122]

However, where the market value measure of plaintiff's damages is not readily ascertainable by the defendant, plaintiff must provide defendant with the pertinent documentation before claiming damages are sufficiently certain to trigger the right to prejudgment interest. [Levy-Zentner Co. v. Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1977) 74 CA3d 762, 798, 142 CR 1, 25]

(2) [11:398] Damages not "certain" if dependent upon proof: In most tort actions, the exact amount of damages to which plaintiff is entitled is contested and therefore uncertain until it has been determined by the trier of fact upon the presentation of evidence. Civ.C. § 3287(a) "does not authorize prejudgment interest where the amount of damage, as opposed to the determination of liability, depends upon a judicial determination based upon conflicting evidence and is not ascertainable from truthful data supplied by the claimant to his debtor." [Wisper Corp. N.V. v. California Commerce Bank (1996) 49 CA4th 948, 960, 57 CR2d 141, 148 (internal quotes omitted); see also Collins v. City of Los Angeles (2012) 205 CA4th 140, 151, 139 CR3d 880, 889—damages are uncertain if amount depends on disputed facts or if available factual information is insufficient to determine amount]

Thus, Civ.C. § 3287(a) prejudgment interest is disallowed where the amount of damages can only be resolved by verdict or judgment (plaintiff's claim in that event is in the nature of an unliquidated and uncertain demand). [Coughlin v. Blair (1953) 41 C2d 587, 604, 262 P2d 305, 315; see Wisper Corp. N.V. v. California Commerce Bank (1996) 49 CA4th 948, 960, 57 CR2d 141, 148]

(3) [11:399] Certainty as affected by discrepancy between damages demanded and amount of ultimate judgment: Civ.C. § 3287(a) looks to the certainty of damages suffered by plaintiff, rather than to defendant's ultimate liability. [Wisper Corp. N.V. v. California Commerce Bank (1996) 49 CA4th 948, 958, 57 CR2d 141, 147]

However, the "certainty" issue may be affected by the relationship between the amount of plaintiff's damages demand and the amount of the ultimate judgment. The greater the disparity between the amount sought at the pleading stage and the damages judgment, the less likely § 3287(a) prejudgment interest is appropriate. [Wisper Corp. N.V. v. California

Commerce Bank (1996) 49 CA4th 948, 961, 57 CR2d 141, 148; but see Collins v. City of Los Angeles (2012) 205 CA4th 140, 152, 139 CR3d 880, 890 (class action complaint against city re emergency response cost billings)—large discrepancy between amount initially demanded and ultimately awarded did not indicate damages were uncertain (discrepancy resulted from resolution of legal disputes regarding city's liability rather than factual disputes arising from conflicting evidence or lack of factual information to readily calculate damages)]

• [11:399.1] Even when plaintiff puts defendant on notice of the damages and supporting data from which the damages can be ascertained, where there is a large discrepancy between the amount demanded in the complaint and the amount of the eventual judgment, "that fact militates against a finding of the certainty mandated by [Civ.C. § 3287(a)]." [Wisper Corp. N.V. v. California Commerce Bank (1996) 49 CA4th 948, 961, 57 CR2d 141, 148 (brackets in original; internal quotes omitted); see Polster, Inc. v. Swing (1985) 164 CA3d 427, 435, 210 CR 567, 572—more than $48,000 discrepancy between amount of demand and amount found due after trial rendered § 3287(a) inapplicable in landlord's tort action against tenant for conversion arising from return of premises in damaged condition]

• [11:399.2] Conversely, where there is no significant disparity between the amount claimed in the complaint and the amount awarded by final judgment, "this factor generally tends to show that damages were certain or capable of calculation." [Wisper Corp. N.V. v. California Commerce Bank (1996) 49 CA4th 948, 961, 57 CR2d 141, 148]

(4) [11:400] Accrual of § 3287(a) interest: Prejudgment interest under Civ.C. § 3287(a) ordinarily commences to accrue from the date of the loss. However, where the amount of the loss is not readily ascertainable until some future time, the interest accrues at the point defendant is actually put on notice of the means of calculating plaintiff's damages (e.g., date of filing of the complaint). [Cassinos v. Union Oil Co. of Calif. (1993) 14 CA4th 1770, 1789-1790, 18 CR2d 574, 585-586; Stein v. Southern Calif. Edison Co. (1992) 7 CA4th 565, 572-573, 8 CR2d 907, 911-912; Levy-Zentner Co. v. Southern Pac. Transp. Co. (1977) 74 CA3d 762, 801, 142 CR 1, 26—in action for damage to real property by fire, Civ.C. § 3287 interest accrued from date plaintiff supplied defendants with expert appraisals from which loss in market value could be ascertained]

c. [11:401] Discretionary right to interest in other cases (Civ.C. § 3288): In other tort actions, where plaintiff's damages are not liquidated or reasonably ascertainable by defendant, prejudgment interest is awardable (if at all) only in the discretion of the trier of fact (jury or judge). [Civ.C. § 3288—"in an action for the breach of an obligation not arising from contract, and in every case of oppression, fraud, or malice"; Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 1241, 44 CR2d 352, 361; see Bullis v. Security Pac. Nat'l Bank (1978) 21 C3d 801, 814-815, 148 CR 22, 29-30—§ 3288 interest does not require proof of both breach of noncontractual obligation and oppression, fraud or malice; and Michelson v. Hamada (1994) 29 CA4th 1566, 1586-1589, 36 CR2d 343, 353-355]

Section 3288 provides independent authority for awarding prejudgment interest; it is therefore immaterial that plaintiff's damages are not readily ascertainable by defendant (Newby v. Vroman (1992) 11 CA4th 283, 286-287, 14 CR2d 44, 46), although, in an appropriate case, interest may be awardable under both Civ.C. §§ 3287(a) and 3288 (see Cassinos v. Union Oil Co. of Calif. (1993) 14 CA4th 1770, 1790, 18 CR2d 574, 586—trespass action).

(1) [11:402] Not a matter of right: Since Civ.C. § 3288 interest is discretionary with the trier of fact (¶ 11:401), no particular fact pattern will warrant the award as a matter of right. Indeed, on appeal, reviewing courts afford great deference to the trier of fact's determination on the issue. [See, e.g., Nordahl v. Franzalia (1975) 48 CA3d 657, 665-667, 121 CR 794, 799-800—§ 3288 interest properly awarded in real estate fraud action; Conger v. White (1945) 69 CA2d 28, 40, 158 P2d 415, 422—jury had discretion to award § 3288 interest in purchaser's fraud suit against seller; compare Pepitone v. Russo (1976) 64 CA3d 685, 690-691, 134 CR 709, 712—no abuse of discretion in denying § 3288 interest in buyer's fraud action against real estate agent]

(2) [11:403] Accrual of § 3288 interest: Section 3288 prejudgment interest is calculated (at the rate of 7% per annum, ¶ 11:395.1) on the entire judgment from the date of the tortious act proximately causing plaintiff's damages and continues to accrue until the judgment is satisfied in full. Thus, in a fraud action, the interest is awarded on plaintiff's loss "from the time the plaintiff parted with the money or property on the basis of the defendant's fraud." [Alliance Mortgage Co. v. Rothwell (1995) 10 C4th 1226, 1241, 44 CR2d 352, 361, quoting Nordahl v. Department of Real Estate (1975) 48 CA3d 657, 665, 121 CR 794, 799; see Michelson v. Hamada (1994) 29 CA4th 1566, 1588-1589, 36 CR2d 343, 354-355—midpoint accrual date where damage continues regularly through time of trial]

Chapter 11. Remedies in Purchase and Sale Transactions

F. Reformation

- 1. [11:410] Nature and Purpose of Reformation
  - a. [11:411] Not a remedy to create or "rewrite" contract
  - b. [11:412] Preexisting contract essential
  - c. [11:413] Written contracts only
  - d. [11:414] Multiple documents
  - e. [11:415] BFP limitation
- 2. [11:416] Parties to Reformation Action
  - a. [11:417] Between contracting parties
  - b. [11:418] By or against third parties
  - c. [11:419] Lack of consideration limitation
- 3. [11:425] Grounds for Reformation
  - a. [11:426] Mistake
    - (1) [11:427] Revision must be consistent with parties' original intent
    - (2) Unilateral mistake
      - (a) [11:428] Other party's knowledge or suspicion required
        - 1) [11:429] Imputed knowledge
      - (b) [11:430] Negligent mistake
        - 1) [11:430.1] Question of fact
        - 2) [11:431] Negligent failure to read contract
        - 3) [11:432] Violation of statutory duty
        - 4) [11:433] Breach of duty of good faith and fair dealing
    - (3) [11:440] Mutual mistake
      - (a) [11:440.1] Parol evidence admissible
      - (b) [11:441] Third party mistake
      - (c) [11:442] Mistaken legal effect
      - (d) [11:442.1] Ordinary negligence no bar to relief
        - 1) [11:442.2] Compare—"gross negligence"
      - (e) [11:442.5] Raising mutual mistake as defense
    - (4) [11:443] Explanation of mistake required
      - (a) [11:444] Heavier burden where reformation sought by drafting party
  - b. [11:450] Fraud
    - (1) [11:451] Compare—fraudulent inducement
    - (2) [11:452] Reformation to prevent fraud
  - c. [11:452.10] Compare—illegality not ground for reformation

4. [11:453] Evidence and Disposition

1. [11:410] Nature and Purpose of Reformation: Generally, a party who agrees to a contract is bound by its provisions and cannot complain of unfamiliarity with its terms. [Madden v. Kaiser Found. Hosps. (1976) 17 C3d 699, 710, 131 CR 882, 889] Nevertheless, an action for "reformation" is the appropriate remedy where the contract does not accurately reflect the parties' mutual agreement; the complaint asks the court to revise (reform) the contract to make it consistent with the parties' true intentions. [Civ.C. §§ 3399-3402; see Thrifty Payless, Inc. v. Americana at Brand, LLC (2013) 218 CA4th 1230, 1243, 160 CR3d 718, 729 (¶ 11:440 ff.)]

An action seeking reformation is often joined with an action for specific performance; i.e., where, through fraud or mistake, the material terms of the contract are not sufficiently "certain" to permit specific performance, the contract may be amenable to reformation to clarify the missing terms, whereupon it may then be specifically enforced. [Civ.C. § 3402]

a. [11:411] Not a remedy to create or "rewrite" contract: Reformation is not a remedy to extricate either party from a "bad deal." Upon a showing of sufficient grounds (¶ 11:425 ff.), the court may revise the contract to conform it to the parties' original intent; but courts do not have the power to create a new contract where there is no evidence the parties reached a mutual understanding on the essential terms. [Hess v. Ford Motor Co. (2002) 27 C4th 516, 524, 117 CR2d 220, 226-227; Shupe v. Nelson (1967) 254 CA2d 693, 700, 62 CR 352, 357; and see Jensen v. Quality Loan Service Corp. (ED CA 2010) 702 F.Supp.2d 1183, 1197 (applying Calif. law)—court of equity may revise written instrument only insofar as revisions conform to parties' "real agreement"]

b. [11:412] Preexisting contract essential: Similarly, the reformation remedy does not empower a court to create an agreement for the parties out of whole cloth where they never came to a meeting of the minds. Basic to a cause of action for reformation is a showing of a "definite intention or agreement on which the minds of the parties had met [which] pre-existed [and conflicted] with the instrument in question." Absent proof the parties came to an agreement on all essential terms, there is no standard to which the contract can be reformed. [Bailard v. Marden (1951) 36 C2d 703, 708, 227 P2d 10, 13; Hess v. Ford Motor Co. (2002) 27 C4th 516, 524, 117 CR2d 220, 227—court may reform writing only "to conform with the mutual understanding of the parties at the time they entered into it, if such an understanding exists"; see Appalachian Ins. Co. v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1989) 214 CA3d 1, 21, 262 CR 716, 727—no reformation on ground of mutual mistake where proffered evidence does not establish existence of "a definite preexisting intention or agreement to which the written contract should be reformed"]

c. [11:413] Written contracts only: The purpose of reformation is to correct a written contract that does not accurately and properly reflect the parties' mutual agreement. The remedy is thus not available to revise or render enforceable a purely oral agreement. [Shupe v. Nelson (1967) 254 CA2d 693, 699-700, 62 CR 352, 357; American Home Ins. Co. v. Travelers Indem. Co. (1981) 122 CA3d 951, 963, 175 CR 826, 832; compare Calhoun v. Downs (1931) 211 C 766, 768, 297 P 548, 549—reformation will lie to supply missing terms essential to bring written agreement into compliance with statute of frauds]

d. [11:414] Multiple documents: Where reformation may properly be granted as to the principal contract, the court may also reform all related documents in order to conform them to the contract that is the subject of the action. [Shupe v. Nelson (1967) 254 CA2d 693, 701, 62 CR 352, 358—"court of equity has the power to administer complete justice by correcting all subsequent mistakes that grew out of the first"]

e. [11:415] BFP limitation: Notwithstanding appropriate grounds, reformation cannot be granted to the extent it would prejudice rights acquired by third parties, in good faith and for value (BFPs). Thus, neither buyer nor seller may obtain a reformation of the purchase and sale agreement that would impinge on the rights of a third party, unless the third party took its interest with actual or constructive notice of the grounds on which the reformation is sought. [Civ.C. § 3399; compare Lin v. Coronado (2014) 232 CA4th 696, 705, 181 CR3d 674, 681—although void deeds "conceivably" may be reformed to reflect party's interest even as against BFPs, "reformation" of trustee's deed to include omitted co-grantee denied where omission was immaterial, deed was not void and co-grantee never questioned BFP's status at trial level (discussed further at ¶ 4:37); Hess v. Ford Motor Co. (2002) 27 C4th 516, 524, 528, 117 CR2d 220, 226, 230—"reformation" of release to omit language releasing third party proper where third party had acquired no rights for value to its prejudice]

2. [11:416] Parties to Reformation Action: Reformation may be sought by any "party aggrieved" by the contract's failure to express the contracting parties' true intention. [Civ.C. § 3399—"on the application of a party aggrieved"]

a. [11:417] Between contracting parties: Clearly, a reformation action may be brought by any party to a contract against any other party to the contract. [Civ.C. § 3399]

b. [11:418] By or against third parties: A party to the contract may seek reformation against a third party whose interest in the property arises out of the contract. [Civ.C. § 3399; see Hess v. Ford Motor Co. (2002) 27 C4th 516, 525, 117 CR2d 220, 227—release reformed against third party to omit language releasing third party from settlement]

Reformation will also lie in favor of a third party who has suffered prejudice or monetary loss arising out of a mistake in a contract between other parties. [Civ.C. § 3399; Shupe v. Nelson (1967) 254 CA2d 693, 698, 62 CR 352, 356—deeds reformed in favor of third party to include reservation of easement; Calhoun v. Downs (1931) 211 C 766, 768, 297 P 548, 550—purchase agreement reformed at behest of third party beneficiary broker to include broker's name and amount of commission]

c. [11:419] Lack of consideration limitation: An "aggrieved" party within the meaning of Civ.C. § 3399 means one whose pecuniary interest is affected by the ground for reformation. Thus, a grantee who tendered no consideration for the transaction may not seek reformation; because the grantee has not parted with anything of value, the donee is not an "aggrieved party." [Enos v. Stewart (1902) 138 C 112, 115, 70 P 1005, 1006]

On the other hand, a grantor of gifted property may bring a reformation action even when the unilateral mistake on which the action is based was not known or induced by the grantee/donee. [Tyler v. Larson (1951) 106 CA2d 317, 319-320, 235 P2d 39, 41]

3. [11:425] Grounds for Reformation: Generally, reformation lies when, through the parties' fraud or mistake, or one party's unilateral mistake which the other party at the time knew or suspected, the written contract does not truly express the parties' mutual intent. [Civ.C. § 3399; Jones v. First American Title Ins. Co. (2003) 107 CA4th 381, 389, 131 CR2d 859, 864—essential purpose of reformation is to reflect parties' intent]

However, because the remedy of reformation is equitable in nature, it is not restricted to the exact situations specified in Civ.C. § 3399. [Jones v. First American Title Ins. Co., supra, 107 CA4th at 388, 131 CR2d at 864; Schools Excess Liability Fund v. Westchester Fire Ins. Co. (2004) 117 CA4th 1275, 1284, 12 CR3d 626, 632, fn. 12]

a. [11:426] Mistake: A mistake of fact is ground for reformation if (1) the mistake occurred when the contract was executed, (2) the mistake concerned a term that was essential to the contract, and (3) correction of the mistake is material to the parties' rights. [Cottle v. Gibbon (1962) 200 CA2d 1, 8, 19 CR 82, 86; but see also Jones v. First American Title Ins. Co. (2003) 107 CA4th 381, 389, 131 CR2d 859, 864—mistake is an "ingredient of reformation … not its essence"]

(1) [11:427] Revision must be consistent with parties' original intent: Some contracts reflect the parties' true intent based on a mistaken assumption of fact. However, reformation will not lie to form a new contract that is inconsistent with the parties' original agreement even if the original contract was based on a mistaken assumption of fact. [Appalachian Ins. Co. v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1989) 214 CA3d 1, 20, 262 CR 716, 726; American Home Ins. Co. v. Travelers Indem. Co. (1981) 122 CA3d 951, 963, 175 CR 826, 832; see ¶ 11:411 ff.]

(2) Unilateral mistake

(a) [11:428] Other party's knowledge or suspicion required: Reformation may be granted on the basis of one party's unilateral mistake only if that mistake was known to or suspected by the other party to the contract at the time the contract was entered into. [Civ.C. § 3399; Lemoge Elec. v. County of San Mateo (1956) 46 C2d 659, 663-664, 297 P2d 638, 641; Cedars-Sinai Med. Ctr. v. Shewry (2006) 137 CA4th 964, 985, 41 CR3d 48, 64]

A contract cannot be reformed on the basis of unilateral mistake where the other party neither knew of nor suspected the error at the time the contract was entered into. [Civ.C. § 3399; see La Mancha Develop. Corp. v. Sheegog (1978) 78 CA3d 9, 14-15, 144 CR 59, 62]

1) [11:429] Imputed knowledge: However, in an appropriate case, a party's knowledge of the other party's unilateral mistake may be imputed from the knowledge of its authorized agent. [Stare v. Tate (1971) 21 CA3d 432, 438, 98 CR 264, 267-268—knowledge imputed through party's attorney; but see also Ward v. Yorba (1899) 123 C 447, 450, 56

P 58, 59-60—attorney's knowledge not imputed; La Mancha Develop. Corp. v. Sheegog (1978) 78 CA3d 9, 14-15, 144 CR 59, 62—escrow agent's knowledge not imputed]

(b) [11:430] Negligent mistake: A mistake attributable to a party's negligence might be ground for reformation unless it constitutes "neglect of a legal duty." [See Civ.C. § 1577—excluding from definition of "mistake of fact" any mistake resulting from neglect of legal duty; see also Mercury Ins. Co. v. Pearson (2008) 169 CA4th 1064, 1074, 87 CR3d 310, 318]

However, "ordinary negligence" does not constitute the "neglect of a legal duty" ("gross negligence"). [Donovan v. RRL Corp. (2001) 26 C4th 261, 283, 109 CR2d 807, 825; see also Harris v. Rudin, Richman & Appel (2002) 95 CA4th 1332, 1341-1342, 116 CR2d 552, 559; compare Appalachian Ins. Co. v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1989) 214 CA3d 1, 19, 262 CR 716, 726—"Since reformation is an equitable remedy, it may be denied if the mistake was the result of the want of that degree of care and diligence which would be exercised by persons of reasonable prudence under the same circumstances" (internal quotes omitted)]

1) [11:430.1] Question of fact: Whether a unilateral mistake is a result of "gross" rather than ordinary negligence is a fact question to be decided on the basis of the mistaken party's sophistication and the circumstances existing when the contract was entered into. [See Architects & Contractors Estimating Service, Inc. v. Smith (1985) 164 CA3d 1001, 1008, 211 CR 45, 48-49 (mistake of fact arising from ordinary negligence vitiated consent to contract)]

2) [11:431] Negligent failure to read contract: Courts are generally reluctant to grant reformation in favor of a party whose unilateral mistake resulted solely from carelessness or negligence in failing to familiarize themself with the contents of the written agreement prior to its execution. [See Roller v. California Pac. Title Ins. Co. (1949) 92 CA2d 149, 154, 206 P2d 694, 697-698; Miller v. Lantz (1937) 9 C2d 544, 548, 71 P2d 585, 587—reformation denied to party who failed to explain why he was precluded from reading or fully comprehending meaning of contract; see also Marin Storage & Trucking, Inc. v. Benco Contracting & Engineering, Inc. (2001) 89 CA4th 1042, 1049, 107 CR2d 645, 651—"A party cannot avoid the terms of a contract on the ground that [they] failed to read it before signing"]

On the other hand, where reformation is sought on the basis of a fraudulent misrepresentation as to the contents of the contract, plaintiff's failure to read the contract will not preclude relief so long as the reliance on the misrepresentation was justified. [Security-First Nat'l Bank of Los Angeles v. Earp (1942) 19 C2d 774, 779, 122 P2d 900, 901-902; see also Van Meter v. Bent Const. Co. (1956) 46 C2d 588, 593-595, 297 P2d 644, 647-648]

3) [11:432] Violation of statutory duty: The negligent violation of a statutory duty of care does not itself constitute "neglect of a legal duty" that would preclude equitable relief for a unilateral mistake. Absent evidence of "bad faith" or intentional misconduct, the violation is at most ordinary negligence. [Donovan v. RRL Corp. (2001) 26 C4th 261, 285-286, 109 CR2d 807, 826-827]

4) [11:433] Breach of duty of good faith and fair dealing: On the other hand, "neglect of a legal duty" amounting to breach of the duty of good faith and fair dealing bars relief from mistake. [Donovan v. RRL Corp. (2001) 26 C4th 261, 284, 109 CR2d 807, 826, fn. 9—auto dealer's failure to catch typographical and proofreading errors resulting in advertisement's grossly understated sales price was "good faith" mistake and thus did not preclude equitable relief]

[11:434 - 11:439] Reserved.

(3) [11:440] Mutual mistake: Reformation also may be granted on the basis of the parties' mutual mistake resulting in the contract's failure to express their mutual understanding. [Civ.C. § 3399; see Thrifty Payless, Inc. v. Americana at Brand, LLC (2013) 218 CA4th 1230, 1243-1244, 160 CR3d 718, 729—shopping center lease subject to reformation where neither party knew common expense estimates made by lessor's agents before execution were grossly inaccurate]

(a) [11:440.1] Parol evidence admissible: Parol evidence is properly considered in determining whether a mutual mistake occurred—even if the parties intended the written instrument to be a complete statement of their agreement. "Extrinsic evidence is necessary because the court must divine the true intentions of the contracting parties and determine whether the written agreement accurately represents those intentions." [Hess v. Ford Motor Co. (2002) 27 C4th 516, 525-526, 117 CR2d 220, 227-228; see also Thrifty Payless, Inc. v. Americana at Brand, LLC (2013) 218 CA4th 1230, 1243-1244, 160 CR3d 718, 729—extrinsic evidence admissible to show shopping center lease did not reflect parties' "true intentions"]

(b) [11:441] Third party mistake: Reformation may lie to correct a mutual mistake caused by a third party acting on a party's behalf in the transaction—e.g., a surveyor, title company or real estate broker. [Jones v. First American Title Ins. Co. (2003) 107 CA4th 381, 389, 131 CR2d 859, 864—trust deed beneficiary neglected to record substitution of trustee; California Pac. Title Co., Sacramento Div. v. Moore (1964) 229 CA2d 114, 117, 40 CR 61, 62-63—title company's description in deed included too much property; Martinelli v. Gabriel (1951) 103 CA2d 818, 823-824, 230 P2d 444, 447—deed reformed to correct surveyor's error in defining boundary line]

Indeed, reformation is properly granted for mutual mistake even though the aggrieved party's lawyer made the mistake. [Hess v. Ford Motor Co. (2002) 27 C4th 516, 529, 117 CR2d 220, 230; see Renshaw v. Happy Valley Water Co. (1952) 114 CA2d 521, 524-525, 250 P2d 612, 614; Mills v. Schulba (1950) 95 CA2d 559, 562, 213 P2d 408, 411—attorney acting as both parties' agent omitted description from deed]

(c) [11:442] Mistaken legal effect: The fact the contract contains the words the parties intended to use does not bar reformation on the ground of mutual mistake. Reformation will lie to correct the parties' mutual mistake regarding the contract's legal effect. [See Civ.C. § 3401, ¶ 11:453; and Stafford v. California Canning Peach Growers (1938) 11 C2d 212, 217-220, 78 P2d 1150, 1152-1154 (reformation predicated on mutual mistake of law)]

“There may be no mistake as to the words used or to be used, and at the same time there may have been a mutual mistake as to some other matter of fact affecting the meaning or application of the words, and by reason thereof the contract may not truly express the real intention of both parties …” [Appalachian Ins. Co. v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1989) 214 CA3d 1, 19, 262 CR 716, 726]

(d) [11:442.1] Ordinary negligence no bar to relief: As in the case of unilateral mistake (¶ 11:430), ordinary negligence does not bar equitable relief for a mutual mistake “because there is an element of carelessness in nearly every case of mistake …” [Hess v. Ford Motor Co. (2002) 27 C4th 516, 529, 117 CR2d 220, 230 (internal quotes and citation omitted)]

1) [11:442.2] Compare—“gross negligence”: On the other hand, “gross negligence” or “preposterous or irrational” conduct will preclude reformation based on mutual mistake. [Hess v. Ford Motor Co. (2002) 27 C4th 516, 529, 117 CR2d 220, 230]

[11:442.3 - 11:442.4] Reserved.

(e) [11:442.5] Raising mutual mistake as defense: Mutual mistake may be raised as a defense to an action seeking to enforce a contract. The aggrieved party does not have to ask for “reformation” per se but may simply allege and prove mutual mistake in order to avoid enforcement of the erroneous terms. [Hess v. Ford Motor Co. (2002) 27 C4th 516, 525, 117 CR2d 220, 227]

(4) [11:443] Explanation of mistake required: Generally, courts will require evidence explaining how the mistake occurred—e.g., a scrivener's oversight or error; or a credible reason why the party failed to carefully review the language used before executing the contract. [Appalachian Ins. Co. v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1989) 214 CA3d 1, 21, 262 CR 716, 727]

(a) [11:444] Heavier burden where reformation sought by drafting party: A written contract may be reformed to correct a mistake even though the party seeking that remedy was the one who drafted the contract. But when the language in the contract is attributable to the party seeking reformation, the burden of offering an excuse as to why the mistake occurred is particularly heavy. [Roller v. California Pac. Title Ins. Co. (1949) 92 CA2d 149, 154, 206 P2d 694, 698; Appalachian Ins. Co. v. McDonnell Douglas Corp. (1989) 214 CA3d 1, 21, 262 CR 716, 727]

➪ [11:445] PRACTICE POINTER: For this reason, it is generally beneficial to include a recital in the purchase agreement stating the contract shall be deemed to have been jointly drafted by the parties. Such a provision might ease the burden of proof in a reformation action. (See generally ¶ 4:549, regarding rule of construction against drafter.)

[11:446 - 11:449] Reserved.

b. [11:450] Fraud: The type of “fraud” warranting reformation of a contract ordinarily occurs where one party fraudulently misrepresents to the other the meaning of the contract or that the contents of the written contract conform with the parties' intended agreement. [National Auto. & Cas. Ins. Co. v. Industrial Acc. Comm'n (1949) 34 C2d 20, 22-25, 206 P2d 841, 843-844 (disapproved on other grounds by Conservatorship of O.B. (2020) 9 C5th 989, 1010, 266 CR3d 329, 344-345); Lane

v. Davis (1959) 172 CA2d 302, 307-308, 342 P2d 267, 270; see also California Trust Co. v. Cohn (1932) 214 C 619, 626-627, 7 P2d 297, 300—reformation properly granted where failure to read contract is induced by fraud]

(1) [11:451] Compare—fraudulent inducement: By contrast, reformation generally is not granted to remedy fraudulent inducement to enter into a contract. Rather, the deceived party's remedy in such cases is to disaffirm the contract and sue for rescission (¶ 11:460 ff.) or to affirm the contract and sue for damages (¶ 11:350 ff.).

(2) [11:452] Reformation to prevent fraud: Because reformation is an equitable remedy, courts may exercise their equitable power to grant reformation in order to prevent a fraud or injustice even though there was no fraudulent misrepresentation as to the contents or meaning of the contract. [See MacFarlane v. Peters (1980) 103 CA3d 627, 631-633, 163 CR 655, 656-657—although a party's acts may be legal, "where they are done with a fraudulent or oppressive intent, equity will intervene" (where purchaser at tax assessment sale acquired small parcel of tract, albeit legally, with intent to prevent use of remainder of tract and thereby force owner of balance of tract to negotiate on his terms, court properly exercised equitable power to reform treasurer's deed so as to restore lots to salable and usable state)]

c. [11:452.10] Compare—illegality not ground for reformation: Courts do not have the power to reform an agreement to make it legal. Contracts are reformed to cure a mistake or fraud—"not for the purpose of saving an illegal contract." [Kolani v. Gluska (1998) 64 CA4th 402, 407-408, 75 CR2d 257, 260 (illegal noncompete agreement)]

4. [11:453] Evidence and Disposition: Whether there is a sufficient basis for reformation (mistake or fraud as a result of which the contract does not express the parties' true intent) is a question of fact. Notwithstanding the statute of frauds and the parol evidence rule, oral testimony and extrinsic evidence are admissible to explain the intended contents of the contract (¶ 11:440.1). [Hess v. Ford Motor Co. (2002) 27 C4th 516, 525-526, 117 CR2d 220, 227-228; Cummins v. Levy (1953) 116 CA2d 610, 255 P2d 29—party cannot assert written agreement does not represent parties' intent and simultaneously object to extrinsic evidence explaining intent]

In revising the contract, the court "may inquire what the instrument was intended to mean [and] what were intended to be its legal consequences." The party seeking relief bears the burden of proving the parties' true intent by clear and convincing evidence. [Civ.C. § 3401; Shupe v. Nelson (1967) 254 CA2d 693, 700, 62 CR 352, 357]

Chapter 11. Remedies in Purchase and Sale Transactions

G. Rescission

- 1. [11:460] Nature and Purpose of Rescission
  - a. [11:461] Election as between inconsistent remedies
  - b. [11:462] Compare—lack of contract formation
  - c. [11:463] Unavailable to third party beneficiaries
- 2. [11:465] Grounds for Rescission
  - a. [11:466] Rescission by consent
    - (1) [11:467] Written, oral or implied
  - b. [11:469] Unilateral rescission on basis of mistake, duress, fraud or undue influence
    - (1) [11:470] Not affected by conflicting contractual provisions
      - (a) [11:470.1] Compare—statutory preemption of remedy for tax-defaulted property purchasers
        - 1) [11:470.1a] Contra authority
        - 2) [11:470.2] Statute of limitations
          - a) [11:470.3] Exception—jurisdictionally defective tax deed
    - (2) [11:471] Consent mistakenly given
      - (a) [11:471.1] Mistake of fact
        - 1) [11:471.2] Rescission based on unilateral mistake of fact—unconscionability requirement
          - a) [11:471.3] Substantive unconscionability generally determinative
        - 2) [11:471.5] Limitation—no rescission in favor of party who bears risk of mistake
          - a) [11:471.8] Allocation of risk of mistake required for “neglect of legal duty”
        - 3) [11:471.15] Rescission where unilateral mistake of fact unknown to nonrescinding party
      - (b) [11:471.20] Mistake of law
        - 1) [11:471.21] Subjective misunderstanding of contract not enough
        - 2) [11:471.22] “Neglect of legal duty” no bar to relief
    - (3) [11:472] Consent obtained through duress or undue influence
    - (4) [11:473] Consent obtained through fraud
      - (a) [11:473.1] Distinguishing fraud in the inception/execution from fraud in the inducement
      - (b) [11:474] Innocent misrepresentation
        - 1) [11:474.1] Rescission against innocent “conduit”
        - 2) [11:474.3] Compare—opinions re property value not actionable
      - (c) [11:474.5] Damages not part of prima facie case
      - (d) [11:475] Partial rescission based on fraud
  - c. [11:477] Unilateral rescission on basis of failure of consideration
  - d. Other grounds for unilateral rescission
    - (1) [11:480] Illegality
    - (2) [11:481] Public interest

(3) [11:482] Statutory grounds applicable to particular contracts
3. [11:490] Prompt Notice Required to Effect Unilateral Rescission
a. [11:491] Effect
b. [11:492] Service of pleading as notice
c. [11:493] Waiver of relief by delay
(1) [11:494] Question of laches
(2) [11:495] Justified delay
(3) Application
d. [11:496] Waiver of relief by inconsistent conduct
(1) [11:497] No waiver if induced by fraud
(2) [11:498] No waiver by accepting contractual benefits after rejection of rescission
(3) [11:499] No waiver by seeking breach of contract damages in the alternative
e. [11:499.5] Revocation of notice
f. [11:499.6] Loans secured by consumer dwellings; federal truth in lending laws (TILA)
4. [11:500] Restoration of Benefits Received as Condition to Unilateral Rescission
a. [11:501] Service of pleading as offer to restore
b. Exceptions
(1) [11:502] Restoration impossible
(2) [11:503] No value received
(3) [11:503.1] Other inequity
c. [11:504] Waiver of relief by delay
5. [11:505] Relief Based Upon Rescission—Restitution, Consequential Damages, Etc.
a. [11:506] Adjustment of equities in either party's favor
(1) [11:507.1] Limitation—no enlargement of contract benefits
b. [11:507.2] Damages, generally
c. [11:508] Consequential damages
(1) [11:508.1] Not "benefit of bargain" damages
d. [11:509] Interest
e. [11:510] Punitive damages
f. [11:511] Compare—counter-relief if contract not effectively rescinded
g. [11:512] Jury trial right dependent on nature of relief requested

1. [11:460] Nature and Purpose of Rescission: Rescission is a remedy that disaffirms the contract (Civ.C. § 1688 et seq.). The remedy assumes the contract was properly formed, but effectively extinguishes the contract ab initio as though it never came into existence; and its terms cease to be enforceable. [Civ.C. § 1688; NMSBPCSLDHB v. County of Fresno (2007) 152 CA4th 954, 959-960, 61 CR3d 425, 428-429; see also Schauer v. Mandarin Gems of Calif., Inc. (2005) 125 CA4th 949, 960, 23 CR3d 233, 241; Viterbi v. Wasserman (2011) 191 CA4th 927, 935, 123 CR3d 231, 236—contract between parties is prerequisite for any rescission claim]

As will be discussed, a contract can be rescinded by the parties' mutual agreement or unilaterally by a party upon proper grounds (see ¶ 11:469 ff.). An "action for rescission" is actually a suit to enforce the rescission by seeking appropriate relief (i.e., a return to the status quo) based upon rescission (¶ 11:505 ff.). [See generally, Runyan v. Pacific Air Indus., Inc. (1970) 2 C3d 304, 312-314, 85 CR 138, 144-145; see also Viterbi v. Wasserman, supra, 191 CA4th at 935, 123 CR3d at 236—rescission requires each party to restore to the other everything of value received under contract; Sharabianlou v. Karp (2010) 181 CA4th 1133, 1144-1145, 105 CR3d 300, 310—suit for rescission (i.e., to disaffirm contract's existence) seeks to extinguish contract, terminate further liability and restore parties to their former positions by requiring them to return whatever consideration they received]

a. [11:461] Election as between inconsistent remedies: Grounds for rescission also may support other contract remedies; but, because rescission is predicated on a disaffirmance of the contract, it is inconsistent with a damages suit for breach of contract or fraud, a reformation suit, or a specific performance suit, all of which effectively affirm the contract. [Akin v. Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's London (2006) 140 CA4th 291, 296-298, 44 CR3d 284, 287-288; Sharabianlou v. Karp

(2010) 181 CA4th 1133, 1144, 105 CR3d 300, 310—statute permitting relief based on rescission does not authorize claims based on affirmance of contract]

Nonetheless, absent a waiver, a plaintiff may plead and pursue alternative remedies (assuming they are based on consistent facts) and is not finally put to an election of remedies until the case has proceeded through trial and all evidence has been presented. [See Civ.C. § 1692; Williams v. Marshall (1951) 37 C2d 445, 455-457, 235 P2d 372, 379—complaint may seek rescissionary relief based on fraud or alternatively damages for breach of contract in event relief based on rescission is not granted; and discussion at ¶ 11:11 ff., 11:351 ff.]

b. [11:462] Compare—lack of contract formation: A finding that there never was a meeting of the minds on the essential terms—i.e., that the parties lacked contractual intent—means that no contract was formed. If money has changed hands, or one party has taken possession, there may be an equitable remedy. But there is no remedy of rescission, "[s]ince a contract cannot be rescinded if it has never been formed." [Hedging Concepts, Inc. v. First Alliance Mortgage Co. (1996) 41 CA4th 1410, 1417-1418, 49 CR2d 191, 196]

c. [11:463] Unavailable to third party beneficiaries: Only the parties to a contract may rescind it. Pursuant to the relevant statutes (see Civ.C. §§ 1559, 1689) and "common sense," rescission is not available to third party beneficiaries (see ¶ 4:525). [Schauer v. Mandarin Gems of Calif., Inc. (2005) 125 CA4th 949, 959-960, 23 CR3d 233, 240-241]

[11:464] Reserved.

2. [11:465] Grounds for Rescission: A contract always may be rescinded upon mutual consent of the parties thereto. But rescission at only one party's behest requires proper notice (¶ 11:490) on statutory grounds and, if necessary to adjust the equities, a court action to enforce the rescission. [Civ.C. §§ 1689, 1691, 1692; see also Estate of Wong (2012) 207 CA4th 366, 383, 143 CR3d 342, 354—courts do not rescind contracts but, rather, only afford relief based on a "party effected" rescission as governed by statute]

a. [11:466] Rescission by consent: Rescission of a contract may be effected by mutual consent of all parties to the contract. [Civ.C. § 1689(a); Estate of Wong (2012) 207 CA4th 366, 383, 143 CR3d 342, 354; Grill v. Hunt (1992) 6 CA4th 73, 78-79, 7 CR2d 768, 771-772]

(1) [11:467] Written, oral or implied: The parties' consent need not be in writing, even if the contract to be rescinded was required by the statute of frauds to be in writing. A consensual rescission may occur by the parties' oral agreement; or it can be implied from their unequivocal conduct that is inconsistent with continued existence of the contract. [Martin v. Butter (1949) 93 CA2d 562, 565-566, 209 P2d 636, 638; Bush v. Vernon (1955) 135 CA2d 33, 36-37, 286 P2d 903, 906; see Unger v. Isaacs (1954) 123 CA2d 533, 535, 266 P2d 869, 870—sale agreement impliedly rescinded by subsequent execution of inconsistent exchange agreement]

[11:468] Reserved.

b. [11:469] Unilateral rescission on basis of mistake, duress, fraud or undue influence: A contract is subject to unilateral rescission by a party whose consent to the contract (or the consent of another party jointly contracting with the rescinding party) was:

• given by mistake; or

Therefore, the wrongful acts of third persons who are not parties to the contract may support an action for rescission if the party against whom the rescission is sought had knowledge of the wrongdoing before parting with consideration for the contract. [Leeper v. Beltrami (1959) 53 C2d 195, 206, 1 CR 12, 20; see also Jones v. Adams Fin'l Services (1999) 71 CA4th 831, 836, 84 CR2d 151, 154-155—Lender participated in fraud where Lender was present when false statements were made to Borrower and Lender not only did nothing to correct false statements but actually helped Borrower sign loan documents; compare Chan v. Lund (2010) 188 CA4th 1159, 1173-1179, 116 CR3d 122, 133-139—any duress, undue influence or fraud purportedly applied to plaintiff by his attorney by, among other things, threatening to withdraw if plaintiff did not settle, was legally insufficient for purposes of rescinding settlement agreement (attorney was not a party to settlement or "jointly interested" with any contracting party, and defendants did not "connive" with him in allegedly exerting pressure on plaintiff)]

Under the court's broad equitable power, rescission also may lie against a contracting party who was entirely innocent of any wrongdoing but simply a "conduit" through whom a third party's fraud was perpetrated. See ¶ 11:474.1 ff.

(1) [11:470] Not affected by conflicting contractual provisions: The parties may contract to provide for either's unilateral right of rescission. Conversely, however, a contractual prohibition against rescission does not defeat the statutory right of rescission for fraud, mistake or failure of consideration. [Civ.C. § 1690; see Santa Clara Properties Co. v. R.L.C., Inc. (1963) 217 CA2d 840, 852-857, 32 CR 333, 340-344]

(a) [11:470.1] Compare—statutory preemption of remedy for tax-defaulted property purchasers: Rescission and other common law contract remedies are not available to buyers of tax-defaulted real property at public auction (Rev. & Tax.C. § 3691 et seq.; see ¶ 4:351.1 ff.). The buyer's exclusive remedies are prescribed by statute: a refund of purchase money paid and only where the court determines the tax deed is void (Rev. & Tax.C. § 3729) or the property "should not have been sold" (Rev. & Tax.C. § 3731). [See Ribeiro v. County of El Dorado (2011) 195 CA4th 354, 356-357, 125 CR3d 577, 578-579—investor who mistakenly bought real estate from public entity at tax sale without knowing bond arrearage amount was limited to statutory remedies and not entitled to rescind; L&B Real Estate v. Housing Auth. of County of Los Angeles (2007) 149 CA4th 950, 959, 57 CR3d 298, 304—§ 3729 refund sole remedy available to purchaser of public property mistakenly conveyed for nonpayment of taxes (tax deed was void because public property is exempt from taxation); Van Petten v. County of San Diego (1995) 38 CA4th 43, 50-51, 44 CR2d 816, 821—buyer who purchased in reliance on grossly overinflated assessed value had neither a rescission nor breach of contract remedy]

1) [11:470.1a] Contra authority: One earlier case holds otherwise—i.e., the contractual remedy of rescission is available in connection with the purchase of tax-defaulted property because the Revenue & Taxation Code does not state its remedies are exclusive. [See Schultz v. County of Contra Costa (1984) 157 CA3d 242, 247, 203 CR 760, 763]

Schultz, supra, however, has been criticized and probably was not decided correctly; see ¶ 4:351.1a.

2) [11:470.2] Statute of limitations: An action challenging the validity or regularity of any tax sale proceeding must be commenced within one year after the sale. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 3725; Quelimane Co., Inc. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co. (1998) 19 C4th 26, 40, 77 CR2d 709, 716; but see Mayer v. L&B Real Estate (2008) 43 C4th 1231, 1233-1234, 78 CR3d 62, 63—limitations period did not commence until property owners in "undisturbed possession" received actual notice that portion of property was sold more than one year earlier (owners had no reason to suspect portion was erroneously assessed separately and that tax bills in connection therewith were sent to previous owner); and ¶ 11:531.6 ff.]

Likewise, a defense based on the alleged invalidity or irregularity of a tax sale proceeding is maintainable only in a proceeding commenced within one year after execution of the tax deed. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 3726; Quelimane Co., Inc. v. Stewart Title Guar. Co., supra, 19 C4th at 40, 77 CR2d at 716]

a) [11:470.3] Exception—jurisdictionally defective tax deed: The limitations period for raising the invalidity of a tax deed does not apply when the claimed invalidity is a jurisdictional defect in the tax sale proceeding (e.g., the property was exempt from taxation). A jurisdictionally defective tax deed is void. [L&B Real Estate v. Housing Auth. of County of Los Angeles (2007) 149 CA4th 950, 959, 57 CR3d 298, 304; see also ¶ 4:37.7]

(2) [11:471] Consent mistakenly given: Rescission may be granted in favor of a party whose consent to the contract was given under a material "mistake of fact" or "mistake of law." [Civ.C. § 1576; Harris v. Rudin, Richman & Appel (2002) 95

CA4th 1332, 1339, 116 CR2d 552, 557; Hedging Concepts, Inc. v. First Alliance Mortgage Co. (1996) 41 CA4th 1410, 1421, 49 CR2d 191, 198]

(a) [11:471.1] Mistake of fact: A party gives consent under a "mistake of fact" when, not because of the party's "neglect of a legal duty" (see ¶ 11:430), the party (i) is ignorant of or has forgotten a past or present fact material to the contract, or (ii) believes in the present existence of something material to the contract, that does not exist, or in the past existence of something that never existed. [Civ.C. § 1577; Donovan v. RRL Corp. (2001) 26 C4th 261, 278, 109 CR2d 807, 821; Grenall v. United of Omaha Life Ins. Co. (2008) 165 CA4th 188, 193, 80 CR3d 609, 612 & fn. 4; see also Paramount Petroleum Corp. v. Sup.Ct. (Building Materials Corp. of America) (2014) 227 CA4th 226, 245, 173 CR3d 518, 534—Civ.C. § 1577 refers to mistakes as to present or past facts, not mistakes regarding future events]

In effect, this type of mistake relates to an erroneous belief about an objective existing or nonexisting fact material to the contract. [Hedging Concepts, Inc. v. First Alliance Mortgage Co. (1996) 41 CA4th 1410, 1421, 49 CR2d 191, 198; see Crocker-Anglo Nat'l Bank v. Kuchman (1964) 224 CA2d 490, 496, 36 CR 806, 809—mistake of fact occurs "when a person understands the facts to be other than they are"; Assilzadeh v. California Fed'l Bank, FSB (2000) 82 CA4th 399, 409, 98 CR2d 176, 181—purchaser sufficiently alleged rescission cause of action against seller for failing to disclose details of construction defect litigation; compare Paramount Petroleum Corp. v. Sup.Ct. (Building Materials Corp. of America), supra, 227 CA4th at 246, 173 CR3d at 535—asphalt supplier's mistake in believing price of particular oil used as benchmark would continue to track price of oil actually used by shingle manufacturer constituted error in judgment rather than mistake of fact]

1) [11:471.2] Rescission based on unilateral mistake of fact—unconscionability requirement: Rescission for a unilateral mistake of fact is authorized where "the effect of the mistake is such that enforcement of the contract would be unconscionable." In such cases, it need not be shown that the opposing (nonrescinding) party caused or even knew of the mistake (but see ¶ 11:471.15). [Donovan v. RRL Corp. (2002) 26 C4th 261, 281-282, 109 CR2d 807, 823-824 (emphasis added) (adopting rule as Calif. law and rejecting contrary cases); see Rest.2d Contracts § 153(a)]

a) [11:471.3] Substantive unconscionability generally determinative: In determining whether rescission is warranted for a unilateral mistake of fact, substantive rather than procedural unconscionability is often the determinative factor, "because the oppression and surprise ordinarily results from the mistake—not from inequality in bargaining power" (see ¶ 11:36.1). [Donovan v. RRL Corp. (2001) 26 C4th 261, 292, 109 CR2d 807, 832—even though defendant's unilateral mistake did not result from unequal bargaining power (procedural unconscionability), enforcing contract would yield overly harsh and one-sided result (substantive unconscionability), thereby entitling defendant to rescission]

2) [11:471.5] Limitation—no rescission in favor of party who bears risk of mistake: Rescission is unavailable to a contracting party who bears the risk of the mistake at issue.

A party bears the risk of a mistake when (i) the contract allocates the risk to the party; or (ii) the party is aware when the contract is made that the party has only limited knowledge regarding facts to which the mistake relates but treats that limited knowledge as sufficient; or (iii) it is reasonable under the circumstances to allocate the risk to the party. [Donovan v. RRL Corp. (2001) 26 C4th 261, 283, 109 CR2d 807, 825; Rest.2d Contracts § 154; see also Grenall v. United of Omaha Life Ins. Co. (2008) 165 CA4th 188, 192-193, 80 CR3d 609, 612-613—rescission unavailable where reasonable to allocate risk of mistake "as matter of law" to decedent annuitant who was unaware she had terminal cancer at time of contract (noting decedent had limited knowledge of her health but treated that knowledge as sufficient)]

• [11:471.6] For instance, a beneficiary is deemed to assume the risk of an inadequate price at a foreclosure sale. "Unless beneficiaries assume the risk of such errors, a low opening bid at a foreclosure sale will invariably trigger suspicion about the sale's finality, deterring buyers and impairing the efficacy of foreclosure sales." [6 Angels, Inc. v. Stuart-Wright Mortg., Inc. (2001) 85 CA4th 1279, 1287-1288, 102 CR2d 711, 716-717—loan servicer who conveyed wrong amount to be bid by trustee at foreclosure sale ($10,000 instead of $100,000) could not set aside sale to third party]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

• [11:471.7] Similarly, it is "reasonable and equitable" to allocate the risk of a mistake to a party who assumed the risk of the mistake as an "element of the bargain." [Stermer v. Board of Dental Examiners (2002) 95 CA4th 128, 134, 115 CR2d 294, 298]

a) [11:471.8] Allocation of risk of mistake required for "neglect of legal duty": The risk of a mistake of fact must be allocated to a party where the mistake results from that party's "neglect of a legal duty" (see ¶ 11:430). [Donovan v. RRL Corp. (2001) 26 C4th 261, 283, 109 CR2d 807, 825]

[11:471.9 - 11:471.14] Reserved.

3) [11:471.15] Rescission where unilateral mistake of fact *unknown to nonrescinding party: As noted, rescission on the basis of a unilateral mistake of fact is not barred by the fact the other party was unaware of the mistake (¶ 11:471.2). However, where the nonrescinding party had no reason to know of and did not cause the other party's unilateral mistake of fact, the following must be established to obtain rescission:

• the mistake concerns a basic assumption upon which the contract was made;

• the mistake has a material effect on the agreed exchange of performances under the contract that is adverse to the rescinding party;

• the rescinding party does not bear the risk of the mistake (¶ 11:471.5); and

• the effect of the mistake is such that enforcement of the contract would be unconscionable (¶ 11:471.2). [Donovan v. RRL Corp. (2001) 26 C4th 261, 282, 109 CR2d 807, 824—defendant established all requirements for rescission based on unilateral mistake of law where plaintiff attempted to purchase used car from defendant auto dealer at advertised price significantly lower than intended sale price due to newspaper's typographical and proofreading errors; compare Grenall v. United of Omaha Life Ins. Co. (2008) 165 CA4th 188, 193, 80 CR3d 609, 612-613—rescission barred where defendant did not cause or have reason to know of mistake and rescinding party bore risk as matter of law (¶ 11:471.5)]

[11:471.16 - 11:471.19] Reserved.

(b) [11:471.20] Mistake of law: A mistake of law occurs when a party to the contract knows the facts as they actually are but has a mistaken belief as to the legal consequences of those facts. [Hedging Concepts, Inc. v. First Alliance Mortgage Co. (1996) 41 CA4th 1410, 1421, 49 CR2d 191, 198, fn. 9]

A mistake of law exists only when (i) all parties think they know and understand the law but all are mistaken in the same way, or (ii) one side misunderstands the law at the time of contracting and the other side knows the correct law but does not rectify the other party's misunderstanding. [Civ.C. § 1578; Harris v. Rudin, Richman & Appel (2002) 95 CA4th 1332, 1339, 116 CR2d 552, 557—defendants entitled to trial on rescission defense where both sides unaware of amendment to relevant law affecting basis of agreement when made; Hedging Concepts, Inc. v. First Alliance Mortgage Co., supra, 41 CA4th at 1421, 49 CR2d at 198—no mutual mistake of law because parties understood contract in different ways, and no cognizable unilateral mistake because no evidence either party knew the other misunderstood the deal and yet failed to rectify the matter; and Donovan v. RRL Corp. (2001) 26 C4th 261, 279, 109 CR2d 807, 822—rescinding party's lack of knowledge regarding typographical error in advertised sale price of car not mistake of law]

1) [11:471.21] Subjective misunderstanding of contract not enough: The fact that one of the parties subjectively misunderstood their contractual duties or other contractual terms, or that both parties had differing subjective understandings of the contract from its inception, does not warrant rescission based on mistake of law. [Hedging Concepts, Inc. v. First Alliance Mortgage Co. (1996) 41 CA4th 1410, 1421, 49 CR2d 191, 198-199—rescission based on mistaken undisclosed subjective interpretation would conflict with objective theory of enforceable contracts]

2) [11:471.22] "Neglect of legal duty" no bar to relief: Unlike cases where a party's "neglect of a legal duty" precludes rescission or reformation based on a mistake of fact (¶ 11:430), "freedom from negligence" is not a prerequisite to rescission based on a mistake of law. This is because Civ.C. § 1578 makes no reference to

"negligence." [Harris v. Rudin, Richman & Appel (2002) 95 CA4th 1332, 1341, 116 CR2d 552, 559—attorneys' purported negligence in failing to track proposed amendment to statute going to heart of malpractice action and subsequent settlement not relevant where attorneys sought rescission of settlement based on mistake of law]

(3) [11:472] Consent obtained through duress or undue influence: Courts consider a variety of factors in determining whether the rescinding party's consent was procured through duress or undue influence, including:

• the adequacy of the consideration involved;

• whether the rescinding party acted with a free mind;

• whether the contract was negotiated at arm's length; and

• whether the parties to the contract were in a confidential relationship. [Mills v. Kopf (1963) 216 CA2d 780, 786, 31 CR 80, 84 (no undue influence); Kloehn v. Prendiville (1957) 154 CA2d 156, 161, 316 P2d 17, 22 (undue influence established)]

(4) [11:473] Consent obtained through fraud: The type of "fraud" sufficient to support a unilateral rescission may be either an "actual fraud" (misrepresentation with intent to deceive) or a "constructive fraud" (misleading conduct without fraudulent intent to the prejudice of the other party). A presumption of constructive fraud may arise where there is inadequate consideration for the rescinding party's performance and especially where the parties are in a confidential relationship. [See Civ.C. § 1572 (defining "actual fraud"), Civ.C. § 1573 (defining "constructive fraud"); Kloehn v. Prendiville (1957) 154 CA2d 156, 161, 316 P2d 17, 22; Younis v. Hart (1943) 59 CA2d 99, 138 P2d 323, 325-326 (rescission based on seller's fraudulent misrepresentation as to area of tract)]

(a) [11:473.1] Distinguishing fraud in the inception/execution from fraud in the inducement: If fraud goes to the execution or inception of a contract so that parties do not know what they are signing, the contract lacks mutual assent and is void. Thus, the contract may be disregarded without the necessity of rescission. [Village Northridge Homeowners Ass'n v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. (2011) 50 C4th 913, 921, 114 CR3d 280, 285]

In the usual case, however, where parties know what they are signing but their consent is induced by fraud, mutual assent is present and a contract is formed that, by reason of the fraud, is voidable. Under these circumstances, a party seeking to void the contract must rescind. [Village Northridge Homeowners Ass'n v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co., supra]

(b) [11:474] Innocent misrepresentation: Even an innocent misrepresentation, made in good faith and with a reasonable belief in its truth, may provide a basis for rescission if it related to a material fact upon which the rescinding party relied in consenting to the contract. [Wood v. Kalbaugh (1974) 39 CA3d 926, 930, 114 CR 673, 676; see Assilzadeh v. California Fed'l Bank, FSB (2000) 82 CA4th 399, 410, 98 CR2d 176, 182 (defining "material" as fact that would measurably affect property value)]

Although neither a specifically-enumerated ground for rescission nor the equivalent of "fraud," innocent misrepresentation supports rescission as a type of "mistake" (¶ 11:471 ff.). [Crocker-Anglo Nat'l Bank v. Kuchman (1964) 224 CA2d 490, 495-497, 36 CR 806, 809-810; see also Thrifty Payless, Inc. v. Americana at Brand, LLC (2013) 218 CA4th 1230, 1243-1244, 160 CR3d 718, 729—while no tort liability exists for "innocent misrepresentation," a shopping center lease was subject to rescission where neither party knew common expense estimates made by lessor's agents before execution were grossly inaccurate]

1) [11:474.1] Rescission against innocent "conduit": Being in the nature of an equitable remedy, rescission may lie in an appropriate case against a contracting party who was simply the conduit through whom a third party's fraud was perpetrated upon the plaintiff. Although entirely innocent of any wrongdoing, the "conduit" is a "necessary party" to the action "because, in its absence, complete relief in the form of rescission cannot be accorded to plaintiff …" [Shapiro v. Sutherland (1998) 64 CA4th 1534, 1551-1552, 76 CR2d 101, 112]

• [11:474.2] This was the case in Shapiro, supra, where Buyer purchased a home from an intermediary relocation assistance service to whom Sellers (who had accepted an out-of-state job transfer) sold their home knowing it would immediately be resold to another. Sellers had represented to the relocation service that there were no noise problems in the neighborhood (when in fact there were serious noise disturbances from the next-door neighbors) and the relocation service innocently passed this representation onto Buyer.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Buyer's right of rescission could not lie against Sellers, who had perpetrated the fraud, because Buyer's contract of purchase and sale was with the relocation service to whom Buyer had paid the purchase price and thus from whom Buyer had to seek return of that consideration. “Although there was no evidence that [relocation service] made any misrepresentations to plaintiff, nonetheless, because of the nature of this particular transaction by which the property was transferred, [relocation service] must remain a party to the action because, in its absence, complete relief in the form of rescission cannot be accorded to plaintiff in the event plaintiff can prove a case for rescission.” [Shapiro v. Sutherland (1998) 64 CA4th 1534, 1551-1552, 76 CR2d 101, 112—relocation service a “necessary party to the action to the extent that plaintiff seeks the equitable remedy of rescission of the contract of sale”]

2) [11:474.3] Compare—opinions re property value *not actionable: Opinions concerning how the legal or practical ramifications of disclosed facts might adversely impact the value of property are not actionable “facts.” [Assilzadeh v. California Fed'l Bank, FSB (2000) 82 CA4th 399, 411-412, 98 CR2d 176, 183-184; see Neu-Visions Sports, Inc. v. Soren/McAdam/Bartells (2000) 86 CA4th 303, 310, 103 CR2d 159, 163—“value is quintessentially a matter of opinion, not a statement of fact”]

(c) [11:474.5] Damages not part of prima facie case: Whereas proof of damages is an essential prerequisite to a fraud cause of action seeking damages (¶ 11:357.1), a defrauded party has the right to rescind a contract even without a showing of pecuniary damages. “The rule derives from the basic principle that a contracting party has a right to what it contracted for, and so has the right to rescind where he obtain[ed] something substantially different from that which he [is] led to expect.” [Engalla v. Permanente Med. Group, Inc. (1997) 15 C4th 951, 979, 64 CR2d 843, 861 (brackets in original; internal quotes omitted)]

(d) [11:475] Partial rescission based on fraud: Since the goal of rescission is to restore the parties to the precontract status quo, courts ordinarily will not grant relief based upon rescission where the rescinding party is unable to restore substantially all of the consideration the party received under the contract—i.e., unless the contract is divisible because supported by severable consideration, it cannot be “partially rescinded.” [Simmons v. California Institute of Technology (1949) 34 C2d 264, 275, 209 P2d 581, 587-588—partial rescission not permitted because “retention of only the benefits of the transaction amounts to unjust enrichment and binds the parties to a contract which they did not contemplate”; Persson v. Smart Inventions, Inc. (2005) 125 CA4th 1141, 1154, 23 CR3d 335, 344-345; and see ¶ 11:500 ff.]

However, this rule may be relaxed in cases of fraud. Here, even though the contract is not severable and the innocent party cannot restore the identical consideration, courts may grant a partial rescission that nonetheless produces an equitable result. [See Farina v. Bevilacqua (1961) 192 CA2d 681, 684-685, 13 CR 791, 793]

• [11:476] Buyers acquired a 20-foot strip bordering Seller's land on the representation they wanted to dedicate the strip to County for use as a road. In fact, Buyers conveyed only an 18-foot strip to County and retained the balance, which separated Seller's land from the road, for the purpose of cutting off Seller's access. Though Buyer's irrevocable conveyance to County precluded their restoration to Seller of the entire 20-foot parcel, partial rescission restoring the two-foot parcel to Seller and returning a pro rata share of the purchase price to Buyers was properly granted. [Farina v. Bevilacqua (1961) 192 CA2d 681, 684-685, 13 CR 791, 793]

“Where a defendant has been guilty of fraud, courts of equity are not so much concerned with decreeing that defendant receive back the identical property with which he parted … as they are in declaring that his nefarious practices shall result in no damage to the plaintiff.” [Farina v. Bevilacqua, supra, 192 CA2d at 685, 13 CR at 793 (internal quotes omitted)]

c. [11:477] Unilateral rescission on basis of failure of consideration: A unilateral rescission can be based on a failure of consideration in three situations (Civ.C. § 1689(b)(2), (3) & (4)):

• Where the consideration for the rescinding party's obligation fails, in whole or in part, through the fault of the other party to the contract (Civ.C. § 1689(b)(2));

• Where the consideration for the rescinding party's obligation becomes entirely void from any cause (Civ.C. § 1689(b)(3)); or

• Where the consideration for the rescinding party's obligation fails in a material respect from any cause before it is rendered (Civ.C. § 1689(b)(4)). [See, e.g., Sun Garden Packing Co. v. Narducci (1959) 170 CA2d 763, 769, 339 P2d 562, 565-566]

[11:478 - 11:479] Reserved.

d. Other grounds for unilateral rescission

(1) [11:480] Illegality: A contract is subject to unilateral rescission if it is unlawful "for causes which do not appear in its terms and conditions" and "the parties are not equally at fault." [Civ.C. § 1689(b)(5); see Yuba Cypress Housing Partners, Ltd. v. Smith (2002) 98 CA4th 1077, 1081, 120 CR2d 273, 276—plaintiff rescinded real estate contract with defendant developer on ground of illegality after discovering defendant violated Subdivided Lands Act; see also Lund v. Cooper (1958) 159 CA2d 349, 351-352, 324 P2d 62, 64-65—purchase agreement calling for sellers to complete construction of incomplete dwelling on property was rescindable by buyer on ground of illegality because sellers were not licensed contractors as required by law]

(2) [11:481] Public interest: A party may also rescind a contract where its enforcement would be prejudicial to the public interest. [Civ.C. § 1689(b)(6)—"[i]f the public interest will be prejudiced by permitting the contract to stand"]

(3) [11:482] Statutory grounds applicable to particular contracts: Civ.C. § 1689 incorporates by reference several other statutes providing a basis for rescission in particular contractual relationships, and also includes a "catch-all" provision recognizing a party's right to rescind under "any other statute providing for rescission." [See Civ.C. § 1689(b)(7)] Some of these other statutes specifically grant buyers the right to rescind a real property purchase contract:

• [11:482.1] Gov.C. § 66499.32 allows a buyer to rescind a real property contract that is in violation of the Subdivision Map Act at any time within one year after discovery of the violation. [See Le Gault v. Erickson (1999) 70 CA4th 369, 375, 82 CR2d 692, 696—only buyer, not junior lienholder, has option to void purchase contract; compare Black Hills Investments, Inc. v. Albertson's, Inc. (2007) 146 CA4th 883, 894-895, 53 CR3d 263, 271-272—contracts for purchase of 2 commercial real property parcels not voidable because parcels had not been subdivided when contracts executed; Sixells, LLC v. Cannery Business Park (2008) 170 CA4th 648, 653-654, 88 CR3d 235, 239-240—contract allowing sale of 4 undivided acres absent approval and filing of final map not voidable because contract violated Subdivision Map Act, rendering it void "at its inception"]

[11:483 - 11:489] Reserved.

3. [11:490] Prompt Notice Required to Effect Unilateral Rescission: A party intending to effect a unilateral rescission must give notice to the other party promptly upon discovering the facts entitling the party to rescind (provided the aggrieved party is "free from duress, menace, undue influence or disability" and is aware of the right to rescind at that time). [Civ.C. § 1691(a); Village Northridge Homeowners Ass'n v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. (2011) 50 C4th 913, 921, 114 CR3d 280, 285; Citicorp Real Estate, Inc. v. Smith (9th Cir. 1998) 155 F3d 1097, 1103 & fn. 3 (applying Calif. law); see also Harris v. Rudin, Richman & Appel (2002) 95 CA4th 1332, 1340, 116 CR2d 552, 558—equities on side of defendants seeking rescission of settlement agreement who gave notice of rescission few days after discovering basis therefor]

a. [11:491] Effect: The notice itself effects the unilateral rescission. Thereafter, the rescinding party is entitled to bring an action to obtain relief based upon the rescission (or, viewed another way, an action to enforce the rescission). [See Runyan v. Pacific Air Indus., Inc. (1970) 2 C3d 304, 312-314, 85 CR 138, 144-145]

b. [11:492] Service of pleading as notice: Although technically a prerequisite to filing suit based upon rescission, if the notice has not otherwise been given, plaintiff's service of a pleading seeking rescission (i.e., a complaint) "shall be deemed to be" the requisite notice. [Civ.C. § 1691; Wong v. Stoler (2015) 237 CA4th 1375, 1385-1386, 188 CR3d 674, 681]

c. [11:493] Waiver of relief by delay: Despite the statutory requirement that notice of rescission be given "promptly" (¶ 11:490), delay in providing timely notice will amount to a waiver of the right to relief based on rescission only if the delay has substantially prejudiced the other party. [Civ.C. § 1693; Williams v. Marshall (1951) 37 C2d 445, 455, 235 P2d 372, 378-379; see also DM Residential Fund II, LLC v. First Tennessee Bank Nat'l Ass'n (9th Cir. 2015) 813 F3d 876, 877 (applying Calif. law)—purchaser's two-year delay in pursuing action against vendor deprived it of equitable remedy of rescission (¶ 11:495.4)]

(1) [11:494] Question of laches: In effect, this amounts to a laches defense: "[R]easonable diligence or promptness on the part of the party seeking rescission is [not] … a prerequisite for the remedy. The … requirement is essentially one of freedom from laches. Its application depends on whether, under the particular facts, the delay has in any way prejudiced the defendant." [Wilke v. Coinway, Inc. (1967) 257 CA2d 126, 140, 64 CR 845, 854]

(2) [11:495] Justified delay: In any event, no waiver will be found where the delay is justified under the facts—e.g., pursuit of settlement negotiations after discovery of one party's fraud, or reliance on the other party's promise to make the aggrieved party "whole." [See Williams v. Marshall (1951) 37 C2d 445, 455-456, 235 P2d 372, 378-379; Potter v. Contra Costa Realty Co. (1934) 220 C 31, 33-34, 29 P2d 189, 190; Wilson v. Rigali & Veselich (1934) 138 CA 760, 765-766, 33 P2d 455, 458]

(3) Application

- [11:495.1] Plaintiff's five-month delay in giving notice of rescission of settlement documents substantially prejudiced defendant law firm and thus barred plaintiff from seeking rescission. [Saret-Cook v. Gilbert, Kelly, Crowley & Jennett (1999) 74 CA4th 1211, 1227, 88 CR2d 732, 744]
- [11:495.2] Mortgagor's nearly two-year delay in amending its misrepresentation claim to include the additional remedy of rescission substantially prejudiced the mortgagee, thus waiving mortgagor's right to seek rescission. [Citicorp Real Estate, Inc. v. Smith (9th Cir. 1998) 155 F3d 1097, 1103 & fn. 4]
- [11:495.3] Buyers waived their right to seek rescissionary relief by making payments on the purchase price of a beach lot for over two years after learning of the seller's misrepresentation and before giving notice of rescission. [McCray v. Title Ins. & Trust Co. (1936) 12 CA2d 537, 538-542, 55 P2d 1234, 1235-1237]
- [11:495.4] Plaintiff's two-year delay in pursuing rescission after purchasing a foreclosed residential property that, among other things, lacked a utilities easement resulted in summary judgment in the seller's favor. "Instead of investigating and pursuing its claims, [plaintiff] took actions inconsistent with unwinding the contract, including encumbering the property, building improvements, and attempting to sell it. By taking those actions and waiting two years before suing [defendant], [plaintiff] affirmed the transaction, and its right to rescind it is gone." [DM Residential Fund II, LLC v. First Tennessee Bank Nat'l Ass'n (9th Cir. 2015) 813 F3d 876, 878 (internal quotes omitted)]

d. [11:496] Waiver of relief by inconsistent conduct: A party may waive the right to rescind by words or actions indicating an affirmance of the contract after learning of the facts entitling the party to rescind. [Union Pac. R.R. Co. v. Zimmer (1948) 87 CA2d 524, 532, 197 P2d 363, 368; see Beason v. Griff (1954) 127 CA2d 382, 391, 274 P2d 47, 53—waiver by signing escrow instructions and depositing deed of trust after learning of fraud]

A waiver commonly occurs by accepting the benefits of the contract after knowledge of the facts warranting rescission. [Palmquist v. Palmquist (1963) 212 CA2d 322, 331, 27 CR 744, 750] A party wishing to rescind "cannot play fast and loose. He cannot conduct himself so as to derive all possible benefit from the transaction and then claim the right to rescind … Waiver of a right to rescind will be presumed against a party who, having full knowledge of the circumstances which would warrant him in rescinding, nevertheless accepts and retains benefits accruing to him under the contract." [Neet v. Holmes (1944) 25 C2d 447, 457-458, 154 P2d 854, 859; see Saret-Cook v. Gilbert, Kelly, Crowley & Jennett (1999) 74 CA4th 1211, 1226, 88 CR2d 732, 743]

(1) [11:497] No waiver if induced by fraud: However, there is no such waiver if the acts indicating affirmance of the contract were induced by the other party's fraud. [Channell v. Anthony (1976) 58 CA3d 290, 304-305, 129 CR 704, 713]

(2) [11:498] No waiver by accepting contractual benefits after rejection of rescission: Continued acceptance of the benefits of the contract after giving notice of rescission does not waive the right to relief based upon rescission if the other party has rejected the notice of rescission. In such event, the rescinding party may continue to accept the benefits until the action for rescissionary relief is concluded. [Soderling v. Tomlin (1959) 170 CA2d 169, 173, 338 P2d 946, 948-949]

(3) [11:499] No waiver by seeking breach of contract damages in the alternative: Nor does a party waive the right to rescind by bringing an action based upon rescission or damages for breach of contract in the alternative. Though the remedies are inconsistent (rescission disaffirms the contract, while a damages suit affirms it), the aggrieved party is not put to a final election of remedies until after a trial upon presentation of the evidence. [See Civ.C. § 1692—"claim for damages is not inconsistent with a claim for relief based upon rescission"; and ¶ 11:461]

On the other hand, a party may be deemed to have waived its right of rescission by bringing an action exclusively for damages or specific performance (i.e., waiver by conduct unequivocally affirming the contract). [Price v. McConnell (1960) 184 CA2d 660, 665-666, 7 CR 695, 698]

e. [11:499.5] Revocation of notice: A notice of rescission remains revocable up until the time that the rescinding (innocent) party receives restitution of the benefits (consideration) parted with. [Mackenzie v. Voelker (1954) 123 CA2d 538, 541, 266 P2d 867, 869; see also Denevi v. LGCC (2004) 121 CA4th 1211, 1221, 18 CR3d 276, 283]

f. [11:499.6] Loans secured by consumer dwellings; federal truth in lending laws (TILA): Homeowners have an unconditional right to rescind their home loans upon three days' notice, after which they may rescind only if the lender fails to satisfy TILA's disclosure requirements. This conditional right expires three years after the transaction is consummated or the property is sold, whichever comes first. [15 USC § 1635(a), (f); Jesinoski v. Countrywide Home Loans, Inc. (2015) 574 US 259, 261-262, 135 S.Ct. 790, 792; see also U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n v. Naifeh (2016) 1 CA5th 767, 780, 205 CR3d 120, 132—timely rescission notice automatically voids lender's security interest unless lender contests notice; and further discussion at ¶ 6:99.1 ff.]

4. [11:500] Restoration of Benefits Received as Condition to Unilateral Rescission: In addition to giving prompt notice of rescission, the party seeking rescissionary relief must "promptly," upon discovering the facts entitling them to rescind, restore to the other party "everything of value" received under the contract or offer to restore the benefits received "upon condition that the other party do likewise" … unless the other party "is unable or positively refuses to do so." [Civ.C. § 1691(b); see also Village Northridge Homeowners Ass'n v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. (2011) 50 C4th 913, 921, 114 CR3d 280, 285; Viterbi v. Wasserman (2011) 191 CA4th 927, 935, 123 CR3d 231, 236; Little v. Pullman (2013) 219 CA4th 558, 566-567, 162 CR3d 74, 81—no rescission effected where, instead of returning or offering to return benefits received ($42,500), investor merely made available for pick-up undelivered check made payable to third party money market entity and that stated it constituted "payment in full to effect the rescission"]

This restoration of benefits accomplishes the ultimate purpose of rescission—i.e., to return the parties to their precontract status quo positions. Thus, in a real property purchase and sale transaction, a rescission normally requires the buyer to return the property (title) to the seller and the seller to return the funds received from the buyer. [Tampico v. Wood (1963) 222 CA2d 211, 216-217, 34 CR 885, 888; and see Sharabianlou v. Karp (2010) 181 CA4th 1133, 1147, 105 CR3d 300, 312—statutory requirements are fully satisfied if property can be returned in substantially same condition as when received; NMSBPCSLDHB v. County of Fresno (2007) 152 CA4th 954, 959-960, 61 CR3d 425, 429—very definition of rescission is "to restore the parties to their former position"]

a. [11:501] Service of pleading as offer to restore: A formal offer to restore the contractual benefits received is not required. Plaintiff's service of a pleading seeking rescissionary relief (i.e., a complaint) "shall be deemed" to be the requisite offer. [Civ.C. § 1691]

b. Exceptions

(1) [11:502] Restoration impossible: Full or "in-kind" restoration of the benefits received is not a prerequisite to an effective rescission where, through no fault of the rescinding party, restoration would be impossible and the court can otherwise adjust the equities between the parties. [See Farina v. Bevilacqua (1961) 192 CA2d 681, 684-685, 13 CR 791, 793 (discussed at ¶ 11:476)]

(2) [11:503] No value received: Nor, of course, is an offer or restoration of benefits required where the rescinding party received no benefits under the contract. [Realty Co. of America, Inc. v. Burton (1958) 160 CA2d 178, 195, 325 P2d 171, 181-182]

(3) [11:503.1] Other inequity: And generally, courts may decide that an offer to restore the benefits received is not required where it otherwise would be "inequitable" (e.g., plaintiff has an offsetting counterclaim). [See Onofrio v. Rice (1997) 55 CA4th 413, 424, 64 CR2d 74, 80 (rescission of foreclosure sale)]

c. [11:504] Waiver of relief by delay: As with the notice of rescission, a delay in restoring benefits received under the contract or in tendering such restoration does not waive the right to relief based upon rescission unless the delay substantially prejudices the other party (again, the issue is essentially one of laches; ¶ 11:494). However, the court may condition its judgment awarding relief on plaintiff's tender of restoration. [Civ.C. § 1693; see Village Northridge Homeowners Ass'n v. State Farm Fire & Cas. Co. (2011) 50 C4th 913, 928-929, 114 CR3d 280, 291 & fn. 6 (disapproving prior case law to extent it ignores § 1693 's express grant of authority to court to exercise discretion in delaying restoration until judgment)]

5. [11:505] Relief Based Upon Rescission—Restitution, Consequential Damages, Etc.: In an action based upon rescission, courts may order whatever relief is necessary to adjust the equities between the parties and ensure restoration to the precontract status quo. [Civ.C. § 1692; Runyan v. Pacific Air Indus., Inc. (1970) 2 C3d 304, 316, 85 CR 138, 147; see also Wong v. Stoler (2015) 237 CA4th 1375, 1386, 188 CR3d 674, 681—if court finds contract was rescinded, aggrieved party must be awarded complete relief (¶ 11:469); Sharabianlou v. Karp (2010) 181 CA4th 1133, 1144, 105 CR3d 300, 309—despite fact status quo cannot be exactly reproduced, rescission is intended to restore parties as nearly as possible to their former positions and bring about substantial justice by adjusting equities between them; Shapiro v. Sutherland (1998) 64 CA4th 1534, 1553, 76 CR2d 101, 113—"trial court has full authority under … section 1692 and … principles of equity to fashion a full and fair remedy in its judgment which takes into account and equitably addresses the respective rights and interests of all of the participants in [transaction giving rise to rescission remedy]" (emphasis in original)]

Unilateral rescission, however, does not by itself entitle a party to relief; it simply disaffirms the underlying contract. "In other words, although a party need not seek relief upon rescission if he does not want any … if he does want relief, … he must bring an action to obtain it or assert the rescission by way of defense or cross-complaint." [See Little v. Pullman (2013) 219 CA4th 558, 568-570, 162 CR3d 74, 82-84 (concluding motion to compel arbitration may qualify as Civ.C. § 1692 "action" for relief based upon rescission)—if to determine whether arbitration agreement exists it is necessary to determine whether rescission of that or any other agreement is justified, trial court may make both determinations in context of motion to compel arbitration]

a. [11:506] Adjustment of equities in either party's favor: The goal is to reach an equitable result by returning the parties to the position they were in before the contract was entered into and avoiding unjust enrichment. Therefore, such additional relief may operate in favor of either or both parties. [Runyan v. Pacific Air Indus., Inc. (1970) 2 C3d 304, 316, 85 CR 138, 147; Akin v. Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's London (2006) 140 CA4th 291, 298, 44 CR3d 284, 288; see also Estate of Wong (2012) 207 CA4th 366, 382-383, 143 CR3d 342, 354—rescission restores parties to their former positions by requiring each to return whatever they received as consideration under contract or its value if specific restoration not possible]

For example, the court may order a restitution of benefits conferred by the rescinding party and also award the rescinding party consequential damages incurred as a result of entering into the contract (so long as the award does not include a double or inconsistent recovery). The court may also award compensation or other equitable relief to the nonrescinding party (e.g., an offset for the value of the rescinding party's use of the property). [Civ.C. § 1692; see Runyan v. Pacific Air Indus., Inc., supra, 2 C3d at 315-318, 85 CR at 146; NMSBPCSLDHB v. County of Fresno (2007) 152 CA4th 954, 963, 61 CR3d 425, 431—rescinding party may seek any form of relief warranted under circumstances, whether legal or equitable]

➪ [11:507] PRACTICE POINTER: In cases of fraud or other tortious conduct by a seller, the restitution and "consequential damages" awardable to the aggrieved buyer who elects to rescind are not the equivalent of "legal damages" that would be awardable had the buyer instead elected to affirm the contract and sue for damages. An action for relief based upon rescission simply allows the court to adjust the equities between the parties (in the nature of an accounting); depending on the facts, the equities might require the aggrieved buyer to reimburse the wrongdoing seller.

Assume, for example, the buyer had possession of the property for some period of time before the rescission. Notwithstanding the seller's fraud, if the buyer's out-of-pocket expenses (e.g., downpayment, upkeep costs, escrow and title fees, etc.) are less than the reasonable rental value for that period, the ultimate outcome of the buyer's rescission suit is likely to be a judgment requiring the buyer to reimburse the seller (amount by which rental value during buyer's occupancy exceeds buyer's expenses). In this scenario, it would make sense for the buyer to waive its right to rescind and instead bring a damages suit against the seller for fraud (see ¶ 11:356 ff. re recoverable damages in fraud action).

(1) [11:507.1] Limitation—no enlargement of contract benefits: The authority to "adjust the equities" does not empower the court to provide either party with greater relief than the party would have realized had the contract been affirmed. A court cannot, in the name of "adjusting the equities," rewrite the terms of the parties' contract. [Hedging Concepts, Inc. v. First Alliance Mortgage Co. (1996) 41 CA4th 1410, 1422-1423, 49 CR2d 191, 199—Civ.C. § 1692 relief could not include award of compensation subject to contractual contingency that never occurred]

b. [11:507.2] Damages, generally: The damages available in rescission cases depend in part on the reasons for which the contract was rescinded. For example, damages obtainable in actions for rescission based on the nonrescinding party's fault (e.g., cases involving fraud or misrepresentation) are more expansive than those not involving fault (e.g., illegality or mistake), and may include consequential damages (¶ 11:508) and even punitive damages (¶ 11:510). [See Runyan v. Pacific Air Indus., Inc. (1970) 2 C3d 304, 317, 85 CR 138, 147-148 & fn. 16; Sharabianlou v. Karp (2010) 181 CA4th 1133, 1146-1148, 105 CR3d 300, 311-312]

In cases involving the rescission of a real property purchase agreement, California courts have held that the seller must, at a minimum, refund all payments received in connection with the sale. And if the buyer has taken possession of the property, the buyer must restore possession to the seller. [See Wong v. Stoler (2015) 237 CA4th 1375, 1386, 188 CR3d 674, 681; Sharabianlou v. Karp, supra, 181 CA4th at 1145-1146, 105 CR3d at 310-311—recovery of consideration exchanged is part of restitution]

c. [11:508] Consequential damages: Consequential damages in the rescinding party's favor may include all out-of-pocket expenses incurred in reliance on the contract—including, e.g., real estate commissions, escrow fees, title charges, interest on specific sums paid to the other party, the value (or cost) of any improvements made to the property, payments made by a rescinding buyer on a mortgage imposed by the seller, and attorney fees (if authorized by the rescinded contract). [Sharabianlou v. Karp (2010) 181 CA4th 1133, 1146, 105 CR3d 300, 311; see also Wong v. Stoler (2015) 237 CA4th 1375, 1390, 188 CR3d 674, 684-685—consequential damages may be offset by property's reasonable rental value while rescinding parties are in possession of it; Hastings v. Matlock (1985) 171 CA3d 826, 841, 217 CR 856, 866-867—Civ.C. § 1717 attorney fees recoverable in action to enforce rescission of contract containing attorney fee clause so long as contract does not limit fee recovery to any particular form of action involving the contract]

(1) [11:508.1] Not "benefit of bargain" damages: The "consequential damages" contemplated by Civ.C. § 1692 are those that would restore the parties to their original positions (the purpose of rescission) and thus do not include breach of contract "benefit of bargain" damages. [Akin v. Certain Underwriters at Lloyd's London (2006) 140 CA4th 291, 298, 44 CR3d 284, 288; see also Sharabianlou v. Karp (2010) 181 CA4th 1133, 1146-1148, 105 CR3d 300, 311-312—damages award based on difference between rescinded contract's sale price and amount actually received from later sale of property (i.e., "benefit of bargain" damages) exceeded amount allowable under Civ.C. § 1692]

d. [11:509] Interest: A rescinding buyer is entitled to prejudgment interest on contract payments made to the seller (net of liquidated offsets awarded to the seller), running from the date of notice of the rescission. The interest is awardable under Civ.C. § 3287(a), providing for prejudgment interest as a matter of right on damages that are certain or capable of ascertainment. [Lund v. Cooper (1958) 159 CA2d 349, 352, 324 P2d 62, 65—money due buyers at time of rescission was capable of ascertainment by deducting from downpayment rent received during period buyers had possession; see also Hayt v. Bentel (1913) 164 C 680, 685-686, 130 P 432, 434—interest runs only from date of notice of rescission (rather than earlier date buyer made payments to seller) because until rescission, no money due from defendant]

On the other hand, prejudgment interest on the rescinding party's unliquidated consequential damages is awardable only in the trier of fact's discretion (Civ.C. §§ 3287(b), 3288). Otherwise, interest runs only from the date of the judgment (postjudgment interest), as on money judgments generally. [CCP §§ 685.010, 685.020; see Younis v. Hart (1943) 59 CA2d 99, 138 P2d 323, 327]

e. [11:510] Punitive damages: Civ.C. § 1692 expressly states that in an action to enforce a rescission, the aggrieved party "shall be awarded complete relief"; and it also states that a "claim for damages is not inconsistent with a claim for relief based upon rescission." [Civ.C. § 1692 (emphasis added)] Thus, where the rescission is based upon fraud, and provided plaintiff (rescinding party) satisfies the applicable statutory standards (Civ.C. § 3294), the court apparently has discretion to award the rescinding party punitive damages. [See Mahon v. Berg (1968) 267 CA2d 588, 589-590, 73 CR 356, 357-358]

f. [11:511] Compare—counter-relief if contract not effectively rescinded: In the event the court determines the contract was not effectively rescinded, it may grant the other party whatever relief the party may be entitled to under the circumstances. [Civ.C. § 1692]

Thus, e.g., a party who elects to rescind based on the other party's nonperformance (i.e., an alleged failure of consideration, Civ.C. § 1989(b)(1)) may in fact be liable for breach of contract damages if the court determines the other party's performance under the contract was not yet due or was not otherwise in default (i.e., there was not a failure of consideration warranting a unilateral rescission). [Cf. Freedman v. Rector, Wardens & Vestrymen of St. Mathias Parish (1951) 37 C2d 16, 18-19, 230 P2d 629, 630-631]

g. [11:512] Jury trial right dependent on nature of relief requested: Whether an action seeking relief based upon rescission is triable by jury depends on whether the "gist of the action" is legal or equitable. A rescission action is an action in equity and thus not jury triable when the recovery sought consists entirely of something other than money paid as consideration by plaintiff (e.g., land). [NMSBPCSLDHB v. County of Fresno (2007) 152 CA4th 954, 956, 61 CR3d 425, 426]

On the other hand, a rescinding plaintiff who seeks to recover money paid as consideration for the contract has a right to jury trial notwithstanding that the complaint also seeks incidental ancillary relief of an equitable nature. [See NMSBPCSLDHB v. County of Fresno, supra, 152 CA4th at 963-965, 61 CR3d at 432-433 (collecting cases)]

• [11:513] Plaintiff sued for rescission of a contract to sell defendant a parcel of unimproved land. The action sought monetary damages for profits plaintiff allegedly would have made by keeping the land, constructing an office building on it, renting out the building for 30 years, and then selling the building and land. Plaintiff did not seek a return of the land (the consideration paid by plaintiff) and made no effort to return the money it received for conveying the land to defendant (see ¶ 11:500). Thus, the relief sought was equitable and did not entitle plaintiff to a jury trial. [NMSBPCSLDHB v. County of Fresno (2007) 152 CA4th 954, 963-965, 61 CR3d 425, 432-433—not a jury triable "legal action" simply because plaintiff seeks a monetary recovery in place of the nonmonetary consideration paid]

4. [11:555] Declaratory Relief
5. [11:556] Third Party Remedies—Standing Hurdle
a. [11:557] Compare—third party included within ambit of contractual provision

[11:525] The remaining sections of this Chapter overview several additional remedies available to buyers and sellers to redress the myriad of disputes that may arise in a real property purchase and sale transaction. Although they may not directly impact a buyer's or seller's rights under a purchase contract, recourse to these remedies may be necessary to effectuate the intended result of the transaction.

(Compare: This Practice Guide does not address the full panoply of remedies bearing on interests and rights of possession in real property generally—e.g., actions for trespass, ejectment, unlawful detainer, slander of title, partition, etc. Those actions are somewhat attenuated from issues customarily arising out of a purchase and sale transaction. For a comprehensive treatment of unlawful detainers, however, see Friedman, Garcia & Hoy, Cal. Prac. Guide: Landlord-Tenant (TRG), Chs. 7, 8 & 9.)

1. Quiet Title Action

a. [11:526] Nature and purpose of remedy: A "quiet title" action (CCP § 760.010 et seq.) is maintained to establish or "quiet" title to or an interest in real property as between adverse claimants. [CCP § 760.020(a); Deutsche Bank Nat'l Trust Co. v. McGurk (2012) 206 CA4th 201, 210, 141 CR3d 603, 610]

The action is an appropriate remedy to establish any kind of legal or equitable rights, title, estate, lien or interest in real property as against any adverse claim or cloud on title. [CCP §§ 760.010(a) & 760.020(a); see also Chao Fu, Inc. v. Chen (2012) 206 CA4th 48, 58, 141 CR3d 381, 389—description of parties' legal interests in real property "is all that can be expected" of quiet title judgments]

"A quiet title action seeks to declare the rights of the parties in realty … The object of the action is to finally settle and determine, as between the parties, all conflicting claims to the property in controversy, and to decree to each such interest or estate therein as he may be entitled to." [Western Aggregates, Inc. v. County of Yuba (2002) 101 CA4th 278, 305, 130 CR2d 436, 456 (internal quotes omitted); Jensen v. Quality Loan Service Corp. (ED CA 2010) 702 F.Supp.2d 1183, 1198 (applying Calif. law); see also Caira v. Offner (2005) 126 CA4th 12, 24, 24 CR3d 233, 242—quiet title action "akin" to declaratory relief action]

(1) [11:527] Other remedies not precluded: A quiet title action is cumulative to and not exclusive of other appropriate remedies (e.g., an action to remove a cloud on title by cancellation, ¶ 11:528 ff.); it may be pursued in connection with any other remedy, form or right of action or proceeding for establishing or quieting title to property. [CCP § 760.030(a); Jensen v. Quality Loan Service Corp. (ED CA 2010) 702 F.Supp.2d 1183, 1198; Yeung v. Soos (2004) 119 CA4th 576, 580, 14 CR3d 502, 504, fn. 2; see also ¶ 11:375]

However, the court may require that the quiet title statutory provisions (¶ 11:533.1 ff.) be utilized in pursuing any such other remedies or actions. [CCP § 760.030(b); Yeung v. Soos, supra, 119 CA4th at 580, 14 CR3d at 504, fn. 2]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(2) [11:528] Compare—action to remove cloud on title: An action to quiet title may accomplish the same objective as an action to remove a cloud on title by establishing plaintiff's interest as against adverse claimants. However, the two actions have distinct focuses and procedural requirements:

• [11:529] A quiet title action (CCP § 760.010 et seq.) ordinarily is aimed at a person asserting an adverse claim to property (see CCP § 762.010—"plaintiff shall name as defendants … the persons having adverse claims" to plaintiff's title). The action is framed simply by alleging plaintiff's ownership interest and entitlement to possession and that defendant claims an interest (any right, title, estate, lien or other interest) adverse to plaintiff without right (see CCP § 761.020 re essential allegations of complaint). [Wolfe v. Lipsy (1985) 163 CA3d 633, 638, 209 CR 801, 804 (disapproved on other grounds by Droeger v. Friedman, Sloan & Ross (1991) 54 C3d 26, 35-36, 283 CR 584, 589-590)]

• [11:530] An action to remove a cloud on title (Civ.C. § 3412 et seq.) is aimed at a particular instrument or item of evidence. The cause of action cannot be pleaded generally (simply by alleging defendant claims an adverse interest) but, rather, must allege specific facts showing the actual invalidity of the apparently valid instrument or item of evidence clouding title. [Wolfe v. Lipsy (1985) 163 CA3d 633, 638, 209 CR 801, 804 (disapproved on other grounds by Droeger v. Friedman, Sloan & Ross (1991) 54 C3d 26, 35-36, 283 CR 584, 589-590); Robin v. Crowell (2020) 55 CA5th 727, 740-741, 270 CR3d 25, 32-34—suit filed against second trust deed holder, who was mistakenly omitted from prior judicial foreclosure action, was not quiet title action based on mistake (action was one to remove cloud from title since plaintiffs did not seek property rights determination as "existed at … time the action was filed," but instead sought "a judgment changing the parties' interests in the property … by eliminating defendant's existing lien," discussed further at ¶ 11:548.1a); Reiner v. Danial (1989) 211 CA3d 682, 689, 259 CR 570, 573; and discussion of "cancellation" remedy at ¶ 11:545 ff.]

b. [11:531] Standing generally limited to holder of legal title: In general, a holder of only equitable title to property cannot state a quiet title cause of action against the holder of legal title. [Warren v. Merrill (2006) 143 CA4th 96, 113, 49 CR3d 122, 135; see also Chao Fu, Inc. v. Chen (2012) 206 CA4th 48, 58, 141 CR3d 381, 389—absent an interest in property, one has no standing to ask court to quiet title (applying same rationale to actions to cancel trust deeds and other instruments purporting to transfer title); Thompson v. Ioane (2017) 11 CA5th 1180, 1193-1198, 218 CR3d 501, 511-515—where judicially noticeable facts showed defendant's interest depended on void judgment, she had no actual interest in subject property and therefore could not state cross-claim to quiet title (applying same rationale to defendant's causes of action for declaratory relief and cancellation of various recorded documents, including true owner's grant deed; also, summary judgment in favor of plaintiff's quiet title and declaratory relief causes of action reversed because triable issue of fact existed regarding his chain of title)]

However, one who acquires legal title through fraud has only "bare legal title," and is considered "constructive trustee" of the property for the benefit of the defrauded equitable title holder. Under these circumstances, the equitable title holder may pursue a quiet title action against the "legal" title holder. [Warren v. Merrill, supra, 143 CA4th at 113-114, 49 CR3d at 135; see also ¶ 11:375]

(1) [11:531.1] Bona fide purchasers distinguished: A bona fide purchaser (BFP) may bring a quiet title action to determine that they obtained property free and clear of any adverse interest in the property. [See Vasquez v. LBS Fin'l Credit Union (2020) 52 CA5th 97, 107-108, 113-115, 265 CR3d 78, 86, 90-92—BFP owned property free and clear of judgment liens against seller due to lienholder incorrectly using seller's middle name as first name on recorded abstracts of judgment]

c. [11:531.5] Statute of limitations: The statute of limitations on a quiet title action is determined with reference to the underlying theory of relief. [Muktarian v. Barmby (1965) 63 C2d 558, 560, 47 CR 483, 485; see also Alfaro v. Community Housing Improvement System & Planning Ass'n, Inc. (2009) 171 CA4th 1356, 1395, 124 CR3d 271, 306—nature of right sued upon determines applicable statute of limitations, not form of action or relief demanded]

"Generally, the most likely time limits for a quiet title action are the five-year limitations period for adverse possession, the four-year limitations period for the cancellation of an instrument, or the three-year limitations period for claims based on fraud and mistake." [Salazar v. Thomas (2015) 236 CA4th 467, 476-477, 186 CR3d 689, 695 (fns. omitted); see Walters v. Boosinger (2016) 2 CA5th 421, 424, 428-433, 205 CR3d 895, 897, 900-904 & fn. 16—quiet title claim premised on void ab initio grant deed subject to "a statute of limitation" (e.g., CCP § 338(d) three-year limitations period for fraud or CCP § 343 four-year "catch-all" limitations period); see also Crestmar Owners Ass'n v. Stapakis (2007) 157 CA4th 1223, 1227,

69 CR3d 231, 233—cause of action based on CC&Rs (a writing) is subject to CCP § 337 four-year limitations period; Ankoanda v. Walker-Smith (1996) 44 CA4th 610, 615, 52 CR2d 39, 42—CCP § 338(d) three-year limitations period for quiet title action based on fraud or mistake commenced running when plaintiff discovered her cousin never intended to reconvey subject property as plaintiff allegedly was led to believe]

(1) [11:531.6] Tolling while plaintiff in possession: The statute of limitations is tolled for the period plaintiff is in possession of the subject property regardless of whether plaintiff knows during that period there is a potential adverse claimant. [Muktarian v. Barmby (1965) 63 C2d 558, 560-561, 47 CR 483, 485—"no statute of limitations runs against a plaintiff seeking to quiet title while he is in possession of the property"; Kumar v. Ramsey (2021) 71 CA5th 1110, 1122, 286 CR3d 876, 887; see also Mayer v. L&B Real Estate (2008) 43 C4th 1231, 1237, 78 CR3d 62, 66—general rule that statute does not run against one in possession does not apply if owner has adequate notice title was transferred for nonpayment of taxes (¶ 11:470.2 & 11:531.9)]

The reason for the rule is that many times one in possession does not know of dormant adverse claims by those not in possession. Moreover, there is no reason to put plaintiff "to the expense and inconvenience of litigation" until the adverse claim is pursued. [Muktarian v. Barmby, supra, 63 C2d at 560, 47 CR at 485; see also Reuter v. Macal (2020) 57 CA5th 571, 578, 271 CR3d 557, 561-562—statute of limitations tolled while plaintiff and defendant shared possession of condominium because defendant did not assert adverse claim of title against plaintiff (¶ 11:531.10); Crestmar Owners Ass'n v. Stapakis (2007) 157 CA4th 1223, 1228, 69 CR3d 231, 234— statute of limitations does not begin running until someone presses adverse claim against person holding property]

(a) [11:531.7] Undisturbed possession required: In order to toll the statute of limitations, plaintiff must have undisturbed possession of the property. [See Mayer v. L&B Real Estate (2008) 43 C4th 1231, 1237, 78 CR3d 62, 66]

• [11:531.8] A mistake in a deed purported to convey more land to plaintiffs than was intended. But the deed holder never took possession of the land at issue, which remained in plaintiffs' "actual" possession. The statute of limitations for plaintiffs' quiet title action, filed many years later, was tolled during the time plaintiffs were in "actual possession" of the land. [Smith v. Matthews (1889) 81 C 120, 121, 22 P 409]

• [11:531.9] The statute of limitations for a quiet title action following an allegedly invalid property tax sale was tolled while the landowners were in undisturbed possession. The statute could not begin running until the owners had actual notice or reason to suspect they were delinquent in paying their property taxes (i.e., when their possession was in fact "disturbed"). [Mayer v. L&B Real Estate (2008) 43 C4th 1231, 1233-1234, 78 CR3d 62, 63]

• [11:531.9a] It was error to impose CCP § 128.7 sanctions against plaintiff real property purchaser, who made a plausible, nonfrivolous claim that the four-year statute of limitations (CCP § 343) did not bar his 2017 quiet title action. When he took unconditional title and possession in 2008, he knew from recorded agreements that a prior owner claimed to retain "land coverage rights" to sell to third parties. However, from that time until the prior owner actually transferred the purported rights to a third party in 2016, the recorded documents constituted only an inchoate threat to plaintiff's superior title that did not disturb his possession. Although the parties' attorneys and the regional planning agency corresponded about the dispute between 2009 and 2013, plaintiff reasonably asserted that he did not perceive any threats to his coverage rights or title during that time. [Kumar v. Ramsey (2021) 71 CA5th 1110, 1123-1125, 286 CR3d 876, 888-890]

• [11:531.10] The statute of limitations did not run while plaintiff and defendant continued to live together in condominium after ending their romantic relationship. Although plaintiff executed a grant deed conveying a joint interest in his condominium to defendant and "voluntarily shared" possession with her, the statute of limitations was tolled because plaintiff remained in possession of the condominium and defendant never asserted an adverse claim of title against him. [Reuter v. Macal (2020) 57 CA5th 571, 573-574, 578-580, 271 CR3d 557, 558-559, 561-563]

• [11:531.11] Delivery of default notices issued under a forged and therefore void deed of trust was insufficient to commence the statute of limitations on an action to quiet title to commercial property: "On this issue of first impression, we conclude that the notices of default under a void deed of trust provided notice of a cloud on the plaintiff's title, but did not dispute or disturb the plaintiffs' possession of the property. Consequently, the statute of limitations does not bar their quiet title action." [Salazar v. Thomas (2015) 236 CA4th 467, 471, 479, 186 CR3d 689, 691, 697—plaintiffs remained "seised and possessed" of subject property through either their own occupancy or their tenants' occupancy]

• [11:531.12] A notice of trustee's sale posted on plaintiffs' residence did not disturb their possession sufficiently to trigger the statute of limitations on an action to quiet title to the property. This was so because (i) the sale was not definite at that point, and (ii) plaintiffs took immediate action to prevent the sale by transmitting the notice to their title insurer. Thereafter, the title insurer took charge of the matter and advised plaintiffs it was going to conduct an investigation. Moreover, the trustee's sale was indefinitely postponed, the title insurer sent plaintiffs periodic updates indicating the investigation was ongoing, plaintiffs resided on the property undisturbed for nearly four years, and during those four years plaintiffs reasonably relied on their title insurer to handle the matter. In short, once the issue was "in the hands" of plaintiffs' insurer, it was determined plaintiffs "should not be expected to independently sue to protect their title." [Huang v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2020) 48 CA5th 431, 439-440, 261 CR3d 798, 803-804 (finding notice did not call into question validity of plaintiffs' control/possession, only that their ownership required them to pay default amount)]

(b) [11:531.13] Split authority—"exclusive and undisputed" possession requirement: California courts disagree as to whether possession must be "exclusive and undisputed" to toll the statute of limitations. [See Ankoanda v. Walker-Smith (1996) 44 CA4th 610, 616, 52 CR2d 39, 43 (interpreting and extending Muktarian tolling principle)—"The 'possession' required to toll the statute of limitations must be 'exclusive and undisputed'"; compare Reuter v. Macal (2020) 57 CA5th 571, 579-580, 271 CR3d 557, 563 (rejecting Ankoanda's conclusion that Muktarian tolling is limited to "owners whose possession is 'exclusive and undisputed'"); see also Crestmar Owners Ass'n v. Stapakis (2007) 157 CA4th 1223, 1228-1230, 69 CR3d 231, 234-236 (concluding statute of limitations tolled where plaintiff "had exclusive and undisputed possession" of parking spots for approximately 25 years prior to filing suit, but finding Ankoanda "inapt" and its "refinement of Muktarian" inapplicable)]

(2) [11:531.14] Claims based on fraud or mistake: As noted above, a three-year statute of limitations applies to causes of action based on fraud or mistake (¶ 11:531.5). Moreover, causes of action based on fraud or mistake do not accrue until discovery (CCP § 338(d)). Thus, the three-year statute of limitations period does not begin to run until the aggrieved party "could have discovered" the mistake by exercising reasonable diligence. [Robin v. Crowell (2020) 55 CA5th 727, 739-740, 270 CR3d 25, 32 (internal quotes omitted); see also Vera v. REL-BC, LLC (2021) 66 CA5th 57, 69, 281 CR3d 54-55—inspection reports gave buyer reason to suspect sellers' misrepresentations and investigate potential defects (actual knowledge is unnecessary to trigger discovery rule)]

(3) [11:531.15] Possible laches defense? According to dicta in a 1965 California Supreme Court decision, even if the statute of limitations is tolled by plaintiff's continued possession, a quiet title action may be barred under the doctrine of laches if plaintiff's delay in bringing suit prejudiced the adverse claimant (defendant). [Muktarian v. Barmby (1965) 63 C2d 558, 561, 47 CR 483, 485; but see Connolly v. Trabue (2012) 204 CA4th 1154, 1167, 139 CR3d 537, 547 (declining to follow Muktarian)—because quiet title action is now considered one in law, not equity, laches doctrine does not apply, especially concerning actions to establish prescriptive easement rights]

d. [11:531.16] Necessary/indispensable parties: As previously noted (¶ 11:529), a plaintiff bringing a quiet title action must name as defendants all "persons having adverse claims" to the property that are of record, known to the plaintiff, or reasonably apparent from an inspection of the property (CCP §§ 762.010, 762.060(b)). Indeed, a quiet title judgment may not be entered without joining all parties who have an interest in the property. [See Ranch at the Falls LLC v. O'Neal (2019) 38 CA5th 155, 173, 178-180, 250 CR3d 585, 598, 602-603—individual homeowners deemed necessary/indispensable parties to quiet title action seeking access easement over private streets in gated subdivision (¶ 4:102.11)]

e. [11:532] Jurisdiction and venue: Actions under CCP § 760.010 et seq. must be commenced in the superior court of the county where the subject real property, or any part thereof, is located. [CCP §§ 760.040(a), 760.050(a)]

Commencement of the action vests the superior court with "complete jurisdiction" over the parties and the subject property for purposes of rendering an appropriate quiet title judgment. The court also has jurisdiction to grant "such equitable relief as may be proper under the circumstances of the case." [CCP § 760.040(b) & (c); see also Vanderkous v. Conley (2010) 188 CA4th 111, 119, 115 CR3d 249, 251—court's equity jurisdiction in quiet title action extends to "all issues necessary to do complete justice"]

f. [11:532.1] Pleading requirements: A complaint for quiet title must be verified and include all of the following:

— the subject property's description (i.e., both its legal description and street address or common designation, if any);

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

— plaintiff's title as to which a determination is sought and the basis of the title;

— the adverse claims to plaintiff's title against which a determination is sought;

— the date as of which the determination is sought (if other than the date the complaint is filed, a statement of reasons why that date is sought); and — a prayer for the determination of plaintiff's title against the adverse claims. [CCP § 761.020; see Orcilla v. Big Sur, Inc. (2016) 244 CA4th 982, 1010-1011, 198 CR3d 715, 738 (applying traditional rule that judgment rendered by court of competent jurisdiction is conclusive as to any issues necessarily determined therein)—quiet title suit based on irregularities in trustee's sale barred by prior unlawful detainer judgment; West v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2013) 214 CA4th 780, 802, 154 CR3d 285, 303—quiet title action premised on lenders' failure to strictly comply with statutory nonjudicial foreclosure procedures insufficiently pled because none of the defendant-lenders had adverse claims to title; Jensen v. Quality Loan Service Corp. (ED CA 2010) 702 F.Supp.2d 1183, 1198 (applying Calif. law)—California statutory quiet title action insufficiently pled where complaint failed to allege plaintiff's title, basis of title and adverse claims to title; compare In re Cedano (9th Cir. BAP 2012) 470 BR 522, 534 (applying Calif. law)—although sufficiently pled, statutory quiet title action premised on lender's alleged wrongful foreclosure through its nominee (MERS) properly dismissed (mortgage recording services, as beneficial nominees for original trust deed lenders, have authority to initiate nonjudicial foreclosure sales; ¶ 6:524a)]

In addition, plaintiff must allege payment of any debt owed on the property. [Shimpones v. Stickney (1934) 219 C 637, 649, 28 P2d 673, 678—mortgagor cannot quiet title against mortgagee "without paying the debt secured"; compare Sciarratta v. U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n (2016) 247 CA4th 552, 568, 202 CR3d 219, 232 (action for quiet title and cancellation of instruments)—tender unnecessary where foreclosure sale void; Fonteno v. Wells Fargo Bank, N.A. (2014) 228 CA4th 1358, 1360, 176 CR3d 676, 679 (quiet title action for equitable cancellation of trustee's deed)—tender unnecessary where trustee's sale void or voidable (discussed further at ¶ 6:535.15i)]

(1) [11:532.2] Establishing defendant's right to equitable relief: The defendant in a quiet title action need not file a cross-complaint seeking affirmative relief to recover compensation for any equitable interest defendant may have in the subject property. The general prayer in defendant's answer requesting "such other and further relief as the court may deem just and proper" is sufficient to provide a basis for awarding compensatory damages. In fact, within the context of a quiet title action, seeking affirmative relief by filing an answer instead of a cross-complaint is merely a "distinction without a difference." [See Vanderkous v. Conley (2010) 188 CA4th 111, 119, 115 CR3d 249, 256—defendant's answer vested court with equitable power to do "complete justice" by ordering plaintiff to compensate defendant in exchange for her quitclaiming her partial interest in subject property]

g. [11:533] Mandatory lis pendens: A quiet title action is one of the few proceedings in which a lis pendens is mandatory: Immediately upon commencement of the action, plaintiff "shall file" a notice of pendency of the action (CCP § 405 et seq.) in the county recorder's office for each county in which any real property described in the complaint is located. [CCP § 761.010(b); Carr v. Rosien (2015) 238 CA4th 845, 850, 190 CR3d 245, 248; see also Deutsche Bank Nat'l Trust Co. v. McGurk (2012) 206 CA4th 201, 210, 141 CR3d 603, 610 & fn. 11—although lis pendens statutes speak in terms of date of "filing" rather than "recording," they "clearly" mean date of recordation with recorder's office, not filing in court]

h. [11:533.1] Not jury triable: A quiet title action has historically been characterized as equitable in nature (not an "action at law") and thus not triable by jury. [See CCP § 764.010—"The court shall examine into and determine the plaintiff's title against the claims of all the defendants …" (emphasis added); and Caira v. Offner (2005) 126 CA4th 12, 25-29, 24 CR3d 233, 242-245 (action to determine stock ownership); but see also Connolly v. Trabue (2012) 204 CA4th 1154, 1167, 139 CR3d 537, 547 (not dealing with jury trial right)—"clearly a quiet title action is now considered to be one in law, not equity"]

(1) [11:533.2] "Possession exception": However, the label given a lawsuit is not dispositive of the right to jury trial. Where the "gist" of a quiet title action is the recovery of possession (i.e., in the nature of ejectment), it is legal in nature and thus jury triable. [Caira v. Offner (2005) 126 CA4th 12, 27-28, 24 CR3d 233, 244-245; see also Connolly v. Trabue

(2012) 204 CA4th 1154, 1167, 139 CR3d 537, 547—action to determine existence of prescriptive easement is one in law, not equity (discussed further at ¶ 11:531.15)]

[11:533.3] Reserved.

i. [11:533.4] Burden of proof: In a quiet title action, plaintiff must prove plaintiff's own title to prevail. It is not enough simply to present evidence challenging defendant's title. [Preciado v. Wilde (2006) 139 CA4th 321, 326, 42 CR3d 792, 796; see also XPO Logistics Freight, Inc. v. Hayward Property, LLC (2022) 79 CA5th 1166, 1180, 295 CR3d 371, 381-382 (boundary dispute)—although plaintiff sufficiently proved defendants had no valid claim to disputed area, plaintiff could not sufficiently prove its own title to support judgment quieting title in plaintiff's favor]

(1) [11:533.5] Prove-ups/judgments in default cases: Courts disagree whether default judgments are permissible in quiet title actions. According to one line of cases, the statutory prohibition (CCP § 764.010) on quiet title default judgments is absolute, precluding not only traditional default prove-ups but also imposing a complete ban on any judgments by default. In other words, plaintiffs not only must prove their cases in evidentiary hearings with live witnesses and any other admissible evidence but, unlike ordinary default prove-ups in which the defendants have no right to participate, courts must in all cases hear such evidence as may be offered by any defaulting defendant. [See Paterra v. Hansen (2021) 64 CA5th 507, _, 279 CR3d 77, 96 (citing text)—CCP § 764.010 "imposes an absolute ban on a judgment by default in a quiet title action, and an 'open-court' evidentiary hearing is required"; Nickell v. Matlock (2012) 206 CA4th 934, 941-942, 947, 142 CR3d 362, 366-367, 371—if defaulting defendant "shows up" before judgment is entered, court must hear any evidence defendant offers; Harbour Vista, LLC v. HSBC Mortg. Services Inc. (2011) 201 CA4th 1496, 1501-1504, 134 CR3d 424, 428-430, 433-434—court renders judgment "in accordance with the evidence and the law" if it holds properly noticed evidentiary hearing and no defendant shows up]

Dicta in another case, however, maintains that the quiet title statutes merely subject plaintiffs in default cases to a higher evidentiary standard at the prove-up hearing than applicable in general civil actions. Thus, while still requiring a full evidentiary hearing, this authority permits courts to enter quiet title default judgments. [See Yeung v. Soos (2004) 119 CA4th 576, 580-581, 14 CR3d 502, 505 (finding statutory prohibition re quiet title default judgments an apparent "misnomer")]

(a) [11:533.6] Comment: The Nickell and Harbour Vista decisions probably are correct (¶ 11:533.5). Yeung did not address whether defaulting defendants may participate in evidentiary hearings under CCP § 764.010; it only decided that full evidentiary hearings are required (i.e., plaintiffs must produce competent evidence of title by way of live testimony and authenticated real property records). Moreover, the "higher prove-up burden" advocated in Yeung has been criticized as "erroneous" dicta. [See Paterra v. Hansen (2021) 64 CA5th 507, _, 279 CR3d 77, 96 (citing text and finding "the reasoning in Harbour Vista and Nickell persuasive"); Nickell v. Matlock (2012) 206 CA4th 934, 947, 142 CR3d 362, 371—"We agree with Harbour Vista that the dicta in Yeung is erroneous"]

j. [11:534] Conclusive effect of judgment: Generally, judgment in a quiet title action operates in rem, binding all persons (known or unknown) claiming an interest in the property. [CCP § 764.030; Nickell v. Matlock (2012) 206 CA4th 934, 944, 142 CR3d 362, 369 (citing text); compare XPO Logistics Freight, Inc. v. Hayward Property, LLC (2022) 79 CA5th 1166, 1179, 295 CR3d 371, 381 (boundary dispute)—plaintiff not entitled to in rem judgment quieting title in plaintiff as against world because it failed to follow CCP § 763.010 et seq. service-by-publication requirements for in rem jurisdiction]

(1) [11:535] Parties bound: The judgment is binding and conclusive on all persons who were parties to the action. [CCP § 764.030(a)]

(a) [11:535.1] Res judicata: Res judicata (or claim preclusion) applies to judgments in quiet title actions. Accordingly, parties to a quiet title action, or parties in privity with them (e.g., successors-in-interest), cannot bring a subsequent quiet title action based on the same cause of action or issue. [SPLR, L.L.C. v. San Diego Unified Port Dist. (2020) 49 CA5th 284, 315-316, 262 CR3d 782, 806-807—res judicata barred plaintiffs from bringing quiet title and inverse condemnation action against port district re bayside boundaries of plaintiffs' properties and public tidelands because plaintiffs and port district were successors-in-interest to parties' decades-old judgment that permanently fixed boundaries]

(2) [11:536] Nonparties bound: The judgment also is binding and conclusive on nonparties claiming an interest in the property that was not of record at the time plaintiff's lis pendens was filed or, if no lis pendens was filed, at the time the quiet title judgment was recorded. [CCP § 764.030(b); Deutsche Bank Nat'l Trust Co. v. McGurk (2012) 206 CA4th 201,

214, 141 CR3d 603, 612; see also Nickell v. Matlock (2012) 206 CA4th 934, 942, 142 CR3d 362, 367—once quiet title judgment becomes final on any grounds, it is good against "all the world as of the time of the judgment"; Harbour Vista, LLC v. HSBC Mortg. Services Inc. (2011) 201 CA4th 1496, 1506, 134 CR3d 424, 432 (same)]

(a) [11:537] Compare—nonparties with prior claims of record: On the other hand, the judgment is not binding on nonparties who recorded their adverse claims before plaintiff's lis pendens was recorded; or, if plaintiff did not record a lis pendens, who recorded their adverse claims before the quiet title judgment was recorded. [CCP § 764.045; see also Deutsche Bank Nat'l Trust Co. v. McGurk (2012) 206 CA4th 201, 212, 141 CR3d 603, 611—judgment not binding on assignee of trust deed holder who was voluntarily dismissed from quiet title action and whose interest was "of record" prior to filing of lis pendens (voluntary dismissal transformed trust deed holder into nonparty)]

(b) [11:538] Exception—plaintiff aware of nonparty adverse claims: Without regard to priority of recordation, the quiet title judgment is not binding on nonparties whose adverse claims were either actually known to plaintiff or would have been reasonably apparent from an inspection of the property at the time plaintiff's lis pendens was recorded (or, if no lis pendens was recorded, at the time the quiet title judgment was entered). [CCP § 764.045(b); Deutsche Bank Nat'l Trust Co. v. Pyle (2017) 13 CA5th 513, 524, 220 CR3d 691, 700; see also Deutsche Bank Nat'l Trust Co. v. McGurk, supra—judgment not binding on assignee of trust deed holder who was voluntarily dismissed from quiet title action and whose interest was actually known to plaintiff prior to filing of lis pendens (voluntary dismissal transformed trust deed holder into nonparty)]

1) [11:539] Limitation—BFP protection: Notwithstanding the general rule set forth at ¶ 11:538, intervening BFPs are fully protected against nonparty claims: "Nothing in this subdivision [CCP § 764.045(b)] shall be construed to impair the rights of a bona fide purchaser or encumbrancer for value dealing with the plaintiff or the plaintiff's successors in interest." [CCP § 764.045(b); see also CCP § 764.060 (¶ 11:539.1); compare Deutsche Bank Nat'l Trust Co. v. Pyle (2017) 13 CA5th 513, 525-526, 220 CR3d 691, 697-698, 701 (declining to apply § 764.060 to non-quiet title judgment because such judgments lack statutory protections governing quiet title actions)—subsequent purchaser did not qualify as BFP where property owner's suit against bank for wrongful foreclosure and cancellation of trustee's deed ultimately resulted in void default judgment, leaving trustee's deed in chain of title and purchaser with record notice thereof]

(c) [11:539.1] Third parties who relied on quiet title judgment: If a quiet title judgment is subsequently invalidated, a third party who relied on the judgment will retain their property rights if they (i) qualify as a purchaser or encumbrancer for value and (ii) lacked both actual and constructive knowledge of any defects or irregularities in the prior quiet title judgment or proceedings. [CCP § 764.060; Tsasu LLC v. U.S. Bank Trust, N.A. (2021) 62 CA5th 704, 718, 722-724, 277 CR3d 76, 84, 87-89—invalidation and expungement of prior quiet title judgment effective as to third party because third party had constructive knowledge of defect or irregularity based on recorded documents; see also Ridec LLC v. Hinkle (2023) 92 CA5th 1182, _, _, 310 CR3d 298, 302-303, 310-311 (citing Tsasu with approval)—although quiet title judgment initially entered in borrower's favor was later set aside for fraud, lender's trust deed remained valid because lender had no knowledge re judgment's defects]

(d) [11:540] Exception—nonparty government claims: A quiet title judgment is not binding on (i) the State, unless individually joined in the action; or (ii) the federal government, unless individually joined in the action and federal law authorizes the judgment to be binding as to its interests. [CCP § 764.070(a) & (b)]

k. [11:541] Suit against United States—waiver of sovereign immunity under Quiet Title Act: The Quiet Title Act (QTA) waives the federal government's immunity in actions to quiet title to real property in which the United States claims an interest, other than a security interest or water rights. (The QTA's waiver of sovereign immunity does not apply to title disputes involving restricted Indian land or land held in trust for an Indian tribe.) [28 USC § 2409a; see also Mills v. United States (9th Cir. 2014) 742 F3d 400, 405—QTA is exclusive means by which adverse claimants can challenge United States' title to real property; State of Alaska v. Babbitt (9th Cir. 1999) 182 F3d 672, 675 (same)]

(1) [11:542] Action must challenge federal government's title: A suit that actually challenges the federal government's title, however denominated, falls within the scope of the QTA. For example, disputes over rights of access, easement rights (including declarations as to an easement's scope), rights-of-way and claims involving fee simple interests fall squarely within the purview of the QTA. [See Robinson v. United States (9th Cir. 2009) 586 F3d 683, 686-688; Mills v. United States (9th Cir. 2014) 742 F3d 400, 405—finding QTA's sovereign immunity waiver inapplicable where U.S. did not actually

"dispute" existence of plaintiff's right-of-way; see also Skranak v. Castenada (9th Cir. 2005) 425 F3d 1213, 1218 (dispute over plaintiff's right to easement over national forest); Michel v. United States (9th Cir. 1995) 65 F3d 130, 131-133 (dispute regarding scope of easement over national wildlife refuge)]

By contrast, a suit that does not challenge title but instead concerns the use of land as to which title is not disputed can sound in tort or contract and therefore not come within the QTA's scope. [See Robinson v. United States, supra, 586 F3d at 688—QTA did not apply to tort action that related to easement but did not dispute its terms; see also Mills v. United States, supra, 742 F3d at 405, fn. 6—QTA is nonexclusive remedy for claims not involving adverse title disputes with government such as those founded upon administrative wrongdoing]

(2) [11:542.1] 12-year time limit for bringing claim: Under the QTA, any real property quiet title action (except an action brought by a State) is barred unless it is commenced within 12 years of the date upon which it accrued (i.e., the date plaintiff or their predecessor in interest knew or should have known of the United States' claim). [28 USC § 2409a(g)]

The 12-year time limit for bringing a claim against the United States is a nonjurisdictional claims-processing rule. [See Wilkins v. United States (2023) 598 US _, _, _, 143 S.Ct. 870, 874-875, 881 (resolving split among appellate courts)]

l.. [11:543] Tribal sovereign immunity: Absent waiver or congressional abrogation, tribal sovereign immunity bars a quiet title action against an Indian tribe. [Self v. Cher-Ae Heights Indian Community of Trinidad Rancheria (2021) 60 CA5th 209, 212, 215-216, 274 CR3d 255, 256, 259—tribal sovereign immunity barred quiet title action to establish public easement for coastal access on property owned by Indian tribe (common law "immovable property exception" to state and federal sovereign immunity in property disputes did not extend to Indian tribes)]

[11:544] Reserved.

2. [11:545] Clearing Cloud on Title by Action to Cancel Instrument: Cancellation, pursuant to Civ.C. § 3412 et seq., is the appropriate remedy to clear a cloud on title that is evidenced by an allegedly invalid written instrument (e.g., a contract, deed or lease). Plaintiff may commence an action to cancel a written instrument that, as to plaintiff, is void or voidable, when there is a "reasonable apprehension" that if left outstanding the instrument will cause plaintiff serious injury. [Civ.C. § 3412; Robertson v. Sup.Ct. (Brooks) (2001) 90 CA4th 1319, 1324, 109 CR2d 650, 653; see also U.S. Bank Nat'l Ass'n v. Naifeh (2016) 1 CA5th 767, 774, 205 CR3d 120, 128—substantial evidence supported conclusion that title holder to real property obtained through foreclosure would suffer pecuniary loss and prejudicial change of position absent cancellation of numerous recorded documents deemed void/voidable due to fraud; Saterbak v. JPMorgan Chase Bank, N.A. (2016) 245 CA4th 808, 818-819, 199 CR3d 790, 798-799—no error in dismissing Civ.C. § 3412 action to cancel trust deed assignment where plaintiff failed to allege instrument was void/voidable as against her and if left outstanding would cause her "serious injury"]

Unlike rescission, which is a "retroactive termination" of a contract (¶ 11:460), cancellation is a "prospective termination." [See NMSBPCSLDHB v. County of Fresno (2007) 152 CA4th 954, 959, 61 CR3d 425, 429]

As discussed, cancellation is distinct from quiet title but, in an appropriate case, both remedies may be joined and pursued in a single proceeding (¶ 11:527 ff.).

a. [11:546] Grounds for cancellation: A court-ordered cancellation is authorized only if the document in issue is void or voidable. [Civ.C. § 3412]

Accordingly, the § 3412 remedy may be used to cancel a document:

- Executed by a person lacking legal capacity (see ¶ 11:31);

- Procured by fraud or undue influence (see Schiavon v. Arnaudo Brothers (2000) 84 CA4th 374, 378, 100 CR2d 801, 804—action to cancel deed of trust on ground of fraudulent procurement; Jones v. Adams Fin'l Services (1999) 71 CA4th 831, 836, 84 CR2d 151, 154 (same)); or

- Otherwise legally invalid (see Ward v. Sup.Ct. (Beverlywood Homes Ass'n) (1997) 55 CA4th 60, 67, 63 CR2d 731, 735—motion to cancel homeowner association's recorded notice of noncompliance with CC&Rs brought pursuant to Civ.C. § 3412 on ground it was not recordable document).

(1) [11:547] Exception—document void on its face: A cancellation action is premised on the fact the void or voidable instrument will cause plaintiff serious injury unless it is canceled (Civ.C. § 3412). If the invalidity is apparent on the face of the document (or upon the face of another instrument that is necessary to the use of the void document in evidence), it is not deemed capable of causing injury within the meaning of Civ.C. § 3412 and therefore is not subject to court-ordered cancellation. [Civ.C. § 3413]

b. Procedural considerations

(1) [11:548] Must be specifically alleged: An action for cancellation cannot be pleaded generally. Plaintiff must specifically allege the facts demonstrating the invalidity of the instrument under attack. [Wolfe v. Lipsy (1985) 163 CA3d 633, 638, 209 CR 801, 804-805 (disapproved on other grounds by Droeger v. Friedman, Sloan & Ross (1991) 54 C3d 26, 35-36, 283 CR 584, 589-590); see Kroeker v. Hurlbert (1940) 38 CA2d 261, 101 P2d 101, 102 (distinguishing quiet title action)]

(2) [11:548.1] Statute of limitations: Generally, actions relating to the possession of or title to real property must be commenced within five years after the claimant's (or the claimant's predecessor in interest's) possession of the property terminates … unless the chain of title includes a person who was either a minor or “insane,” in which case a tolling period applies (see CCP §§ 318, 319, 328). An action to cancel a quitclaim deed under Civ.C. § 3412 is covered by these statutes. [Robertson v. Sup.Ct. (Brooks) (2001) 90 CA4th 1319, 1327-1329, 109 CR2d 650, 656-658; see also Martin v. Van Bergen (2012) 209 CA4th 84, 91-92, 146 CR3d 667, 671 (noting failure to properly plead statute of limitations waives defense)—CCP § 318 five-year limitations period applicable to boundary dispute; Nielsen v. Gibson (2009) 178 CA4th 318, 325-326, 100 CR3d 335, 340—CCP § 328 creates tolling period, not to exceed 20 years, for “insane” landowners who fail to initiate trespass/ejectment actions or otherwise defend title during adverse claimant's five-year continuous possession]

(a) [11:548.1a] Statute of limitations for actions to remove trust deed liens: An action by the holder of a senior deed of trust to remove a junior trust deed lien is governed by the statutes of limitations that apply to foreclosure actions. Foreclosure statutes of limitations begin to run upon the secured obligation's maturity—i.e., when the underlying obligation comes due, but is unpaid. [Robin v. Crowell (2020) 55 CA5th 727, 741, 744-745, 270 CR3d 25, 33-34, 36—senior trust deed holder's action against junior trust deed holder who was mistakenly omitted from prior judicial foreclosure action time-barred because it was filed more than 8 years after underlying promissory note's maturity (leaving undecided whether CCP § 337's 4-year or Comm'l C. § 3118's 6-year limitations period applied because both statutory periods had expired)]

Cross-refer: For a detailed discussion of deeds of trust and real property foreclosure actions, see Ch. 6.

(3) [11:548.2] No right to jury trial: An action to cancel an instrument is purely equitable in nature, and thus not jury triable. [Santa Ana Mortg. & Invest. Co. v. Kinslow (1938) 30 CA2d 107, 109, 85 P2d 899, 901; see also Corrigan v. Stiltz (1965) 233 CA2d 381, 387, 43 CR 548, 552]

c. [11:549] Partial cancellation: Where the invalid document is severable (i.e., evidences different rights or obligations), the court has discretion to order it canceled in part, allowing the balance to remain in effect. [Civ.C. § 3414]

3. Purchaser's or Seller's Equitable Lien

a. [11:550] Purchaser's lien: If there is a “failure of consideration” from the seller, the buyer of real property who has paid any portion of the contract price has a “special lien” upon the property “for such amount paid as he may be entitled to recover back.” [Civ.C. § 3050] In effect, Civ.C. § 3050 gives the buyer an equitable interest in the property as security for the reimbursement of any consideration paid, including any downpayment and consequential expenditures for improvements, taxes and insurance. [McCall v. Sup.Ct. (1934) 1 C2d 527, 534-535, 36 P2d 642, 646; Soderling v. Tomlin (1959) 170 CA2d 169, 174, 338 P2d 946, 949]

A court may enforce a purchaser's lien (e.g., by foreclosure sale) against subsequent purchasers or encumbrancers unless they are BFPs (purchaser or encumbrancer in good faith and for value). [Civ.C. § 3048]

b. [11:551] Vendor's lien: A seller of real property technically has a “vendor's lien” on the property to the extent of any unsecured portion of the contract price that remains unpaid. The vendor's lien remains in existence for so long as the contract price remains unpaid, regardless of who has possession of the property. [Civ.C. § 3046]

Sellers holding a vendor's lien have an equitable interest in the property (to the extent of the lien) and an equitable right to foreclose on the lien upon the buyer's failure to pay the full amount of the contract price. A court may enforce a vendor's lien

against any party except a purchaser or encumbrancer in good faith and for value (BFPs). [Civ.C. § 3048] However, because notice of a vendor's lien is not deemed to affect title to the property, its recordation does not impart constructive notice to parties who do not have actual knowledge of the lien. [Brown v. Johnson (1979) 98 CA3d 844, 851, 159 CR 675, 679]

• [11:552] Comment: Civ.C. § 3046 is a little understood statute. According to Brown, supra, a vendor's lien "is of no operative force or effect until established by a decree of court and may be asserted only by a suit in equity …" [Brown v. Johnson (1979) 98 CA3d 844, 851, 159 CR 675, 679]

Fundamentally, therefore, enforcement of a vendor's lien will simply result in a judgment for money damages. But the same result would obtain if, rather than seeking to enforce its vendor's lien, the seller simply sued for breach of contract damages; the money judgment in the breach of contract suit could then be converted into a lien by recording an abstract of judgment (CCP § 674). Consequently, a vendor's lien seems to be of no greater benefit to a seller than the right to obtain a money judgment—a right which the seller would have in any event upon its buyer's breach of contract.

4. [11:555] Declaratory Relief: A declaratory relief action is an appropriate remedy where a controversy arises relating to the parties' respective legal rights and duties under the purchase agreement (or under any deed or other instrument). Such a suit seeks a judicial declaration of the parties' rights and obligations in reference to the contract. [CCP § 1060] Declaratory relief may be based upon an oral contract or on disputed questions of fact. [Moklofsky v. Moklofsky (1947) 79 CA2d 259, 263, 179 P2d 628, 631]

An action for declaratory relief may be brought by itself or may be joined with requests for other relief; but the court is empowered to make a binding determination of the parties' rights and duties under dispute whether or not other relief has been requested or could have been sought at the time. Thus, declaratory relief may be granted before a breach of contract occurs and it will have the effect of a final judgment. [CCP § 1060]

A court may refuse to grant declaratory relief in any case where a declaration is "not necessary or proper at the time under all circumstances" (as where the court determines there is not in fact an "actual controversy"). [CCP § 1061; see Artus v. Gramercy Towers Condominium Ass'n (2018) 19 CA5th 923, 930-935, 228 CR3d 496, 501-505 (noting declaratory relief is equitable remedy and need not be awarded if unwarranted)—declaratory relief properly denied where condo owner's claim that HOA violated governing law in connection with one board member election did not present "actual controversy"]

5. [11:556] Third Party Remedies—Standing Hurdle: Other persons, not parties to a real property purchase and sale contract, may be aggrieved in the event the transaction is not consummated (e.g., prospective buyer's lender advances funds to buyer, taking trust deed on the property to be purchased; or broker's commission is defeated by either party's breach). However, third persons have no remedy for the breach of a contract to which they are not parties unless they are expressly made intended beneficiaries of the contract.

Under normal third party beneficiary law, a contract may not be enforced (through a damages suit, specific performance or otherwise) by a third person who will only incidentally benefit from performance of the agreement. [Sheppard v. Banner Food Products, Inc. (1947) 78 CA2d 808, 812, 178 P2d 455, 457—buyer's lender had no standing to seek specific performance of purchase and sale contract (since contract was not made specifically for lender's benefit, lender's remedy was against buyer for money damages); see also Super 7 Motel Assocs. v. Wang (1993) 16 CA4th 541, 546-547, 20 CR2d 193, 197-198—broker not third party beneficiary of purchase agreement and thus lacked standing to invoke contract's attorney fee clause]

a. [11:557] Compare—third party included within ambit of contractual provision: The result is otherwise where the contract specifically includes a third party within the ambit of one of its benefit provisions.

For example, where the purchase and sale agreement includes a party's broker within the ambit of an attorney fee recovery provision, the broker is a party to the contract for that purpose (rather than an intended third party beneficiary). [Pacific Preferred Properties, Inc. v. Moss (1999) 71 CA4th 1456, 1463, 84 CR2d 500, 504-505 (tripartite contract provision for attorney fees award formed between buyer, seller and broker); see ¶ 11:139.28]

1. [11:600] Nature of Lis Pendens: Proper recordation of a lis pendens (CCP § 405 et seq.) during litigation gives constructive notice to the "world" of the pendency of an action affecting title to or possession of the described real property. [Kirkeby v. Sup.Ct. (Fascenelli) (2004) 33 C4th 642, 647, 15 CR3d 805, 808; Park 100 Investment Group II v. Ryan (2009) 180 CA4th 795, 807, 103 CR3d 218, 226; see also Cyr v. McGovran (2012) 206 CA4th 645, 652, 142 CR3d 34, 40—lis pendens provides constructive notice such that any judgment later obtained relates back to filing of lis pendens (¶ 11:683)]

Until the litigation is concluded or the lis pendens expunged (removed), title to the property is clouded, preventing transfer of the real estate to bona fide purchasers and effectively preserving the priority of claims to and against the property. [Malcolm v. Sup.Ct. (Green) (1981) 29 C3d 518, 523, 174 CR 694, 696, fn. 2; J & A Mash & Barrel, LLC v. Sup.Ct. (Tower Theater Properties) (2022) 74 CA5th 1, 15, 289 CR3d 110, 122; Castro v. Sup.Ct. (Calif. Savings) (2004) 116 CA4th 1010, 1015, 10 CR3d 865, 867, fn. 6; see also Cyr v. McGovran, supra, 206 CA4th at 652, 142 CR3d at 40—any party acquiring interest in property after action filed and lis pendens recorded is bound by judgment]

a. Other procedures compared

(1) [11:601] Attachment: A lis pendens is similar in effect to an attachment lien on the property. Unlike an attachment, however, no prior court order is required to create a lis pendens lien. Plaintiffs represented by counsel can do so unilaterally by complying with the procedures discussed at ¶ 11:660 ff.

(2) [11:602] Preliminary injunction: A lis pendens may also have the same effect as a preliminary injunction forbidding transfer of the property. But an injunction, unlike a lis pendens, is directed at a party, absolutely forbids transfer and is backed by the sanction of contempt. [See Orange County v. Hongkong & Shanghai Banking Corp. Ltd. (9th Cir. 1995) 52 F3d 821, 825-826]

b. Advantages vs. disadvantages of lis pendens

(1) [11:605] Advantages: There are significant tactical advantages to a proper lis pendens:

(a) [11:606] Preserves priority of claim: A properly served, recorded, indexed and filed lis pendens preserves priority of claims concerning real property (see ¶ 11:683 ff.).

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(b) [11:607] Leverage: A lis pendens strengthens plaintiff's hand because it usually renders defendant's property unmarketable and unsuitable as security for a loan. Potential purchasers or lenders are rarely willing to assume the risk of pending litigation. This often puts defendant under pressure to settle regardless of the merits of plaintiff's claim. [See Kirkeby v. Sup.Ct. (Fascenelli) (2004) 33 C4th 642, 651, 15 CR3d 805, 811; and Gale v. Sup.Ct. (Gale) (2004) 122 CA4th 1388, 1394-1395, 19 CR3d 554, 558-559—lis pendens has potential "to pour sand into the smooth gears of a real estate transaction"]

(c) [11:608] Recording may be privileged: Recording a lis pendens is treated as a "publication" in a judicial proceeding and may be protected by the statutory "litigation privilege" (Civ.C. § 47(b)) if "it identifies an action previously filed with a court of competent jurisdiction which affects the title or right of possession of real property, as authorized or required by law" (i.e., the lis pendens statutes, CCP § 405 et seq.). [Civ.C. § 47(b)(4) (emphasis added); see also La Jolla Group II v. Bruce (2012) 211 CA4th 461, 473, 149 CR3d 716, 725]

1) Application

• [11:608.1] The litigation privilege applied to the recording of a lis pendens in connection with a quiet title action, where the lis pendens expressly identified the quiet title complaint. [La Jolla Group II v. Bruce (2012) 211 CA4th 461, 472-474, 149 CR3d 716, 724-725]

• [11:608.2] The privilege attached to a lis pendens recorded in connection with an action to foreclose on a mechanic's lien because the underlying action described in the lis pendens affected title to real property. [Alpha & Omega Develop., LP v. Whillock Contracting, Inc. (2011) 200 CA4th 656, 665, 132 CR3d 781, 786]

• [11:608.3] The privilege attached to a lis pendens recorded in connection with an easement dispute because the underlying action identified in the lis pendens was a real property claim. [Park 100 Investment Group II v. Ryan (2009) 180 CA4th 795, 813, 103 CR3d 218, 230 (citing text)]

• [11:608.4] Compare: The privilege did not attach to a lis pendens filed in connection with collection and bankruptcy actions because there was no underlying real property claim. [Palmer v. Zaklama (2003) 109 CA4th 1367, 1380, 1 CR3d 116, 125 (citing text)]

2) [11:608.5] Slander of title claims precluded: Where the Civ.C. § 47(b) privilege applies, plaintiffs cannot be sued for slander of title based on recording the lis pendens … even if they acted with actual malice. [Albertson v. Raboff (1956) 46 C2d 375, 378-382, 295 P2d 405, 408-410; Palmer v. Zaklama (2003) 109 CA4th 1367, 1379, 1 CR3d 116, 125; see also La Jolla Group II v. Bruce (2012) 211 CA4th 461, 474-488, 149 CR3d 716, 725-728 (declining to follow contrary dictum in Palmer)—where privilege applies, plaintiffs cannot be sued for slander of title even if underlying action lacks "evidentiary merit"; Alpha & Omega Develop., LP v. Whillock Contracting, Inc. (2011) 200 CA4th 656, 666-667, 132 CR3d 781, 788-789 (same)]

3) [11:608.6] Compare: The Civ.C. § 47(b) privilege is no defense to a suit for malicious prosecution. [Silberg v. Anderson (1990) 50 C3d 205, 215-216, 266 CR 638, 644]

By the same token, without regard to the § 47(b) privilege, recording a lis pendens cannot be the basis for an abuse of process or intentional interference with prospective economic advantage cause of action. [See Palmer v. Zaklama (2003) 109 CA4th 1367, 1379-1381, 1 CR3d 116, 125-126 (collecting cases)]

[11:609] Reserved.

(2) [11:610] Disadvantages: There are also potential disadvantages to recording a lis pendens:

(a) [11:611] Bond may be required to maintain: No bond is required to record a lis pendens. However, plaintiff may be required to post a substantial bond as a condition of maintaining the lis pendens. [CCP § 405.34; see ¶ 11:715 ff.]

(b) [11:612] Effect of expungement or withdrawal: If a lis pendens is expunged or withdrawn, the property may then be freely conveyed to a nonparty "irrespective of whether that person possessed actual knowledge of the action …" [CCP § 405.61]

This facilitates sale or transfer to persons who have actual knowledge of plaintiff's claim and therefore could not claim to be BFPs. Defendant may thus end up with more freedom to convey or encumber the property than if a lis pendens had never been recorded. (See further discussion at ¶ 11:694 ff., 11:728 ff.)

(c) [11:613] Attorney fees and costs: If the lis pendens is expunged, the lis pendens claimant "shall" be ordered to pay the other party's attorney fees and costs in connection with the expungement proceeding. [CCP § 405.38; see ¶ 11:727]

(d) [11:614] Enhanced liability for breach of contract: Recording a lis pendens may expose the buyer to greater damages for breach of contract if the buyer loses the lawsuit: e.g., for diminished property value, operating costs, and lost interest on expected sale proceeds while the seller's title was unmarketable due to the lis pendens. [Askari v. R & R Land Co. (1986) 179 CA3d 1101, 1108-1112, 225 CR 285, 289-293]

(e) [11:615] Potential tort liability: Even where the litigation privilege applies (¶ 11:608), only the recordation is privileged. There is no bar to an action for malicious prosecution of the underlying lawsuit; and evidence that a lis pendens was recorded may be admissible in such action on the issues of "malice" and damages. [Albertson v. Raboff (1956) 46 C2d 375, 382-383, 295 P2d 405, 410-411]

An alternative course for plaintiff is to give actual notice to parties potentially interested in the property instead of seeking the protection afforded by a lis pendens. But giving actual notice may backfire: i.e., in a later malicious prosecution or slander of title action, proof that plaintiff gave actual notice instead of utilizing the lis pendens process arguably may be evidence of malice or increased damage.

[11:616 - 11:623] Reserved.

2. [11:624] Actions in Which Lis Pendens Authorized: A lis pendens may be recorded in connection with a pending civil action in either state or federal court. [CCP § 405.5; and see Manhattan Loft, LLC v. Mercury Liquors, Inc. (2009) 173 CA4th 1040, 1056, 93 CR3d 457, 468—term "action" does not include arbitration proceedings for purposes of recording lis pendens]

a. [11:625] Actions in which lis pendens *required: There are a few actions in which recordation of a lis pendens is required by statute:

- Quiet title actions. [CCP § 761.010]
- Actions for partition. [CCP § 872.250]
- Eminent domain proceedings. [CCP §§ 1250.130, 1250.150]
- Claim to escheated property. [CCP §§ 1355, 1410]
- Action to declare building uninhabitable. [CCP § 405.7]
- Forfeiture proceedings. [Fin.C. § 5321(b); Health & Saf.C. § 11488.4; Pen.C. § 186.4]

(1) [11:626] Other remedies: However, a lis pendens is not the exclusive remedy in these cases. Plaintiff may also seek an injunction, attachment or other provisional remedy. [CCP § 405.8]

[11:627] Reserved.

b. [11:628] Permitted in other actions affecting title, possession or easement: Recordation of a lis pendens is permitted in any action by a "claimant" who has a "real property claim." [CCP § 405.1; Kirkeby v. Sup.Ct. (Fascenelli) (2004) 33 C4th 642, 647, 15 CR3d 805, 808; see also Park 100 Investment Group II v. Ryan (2009) 180 CA4th 795, 808, 103 CR3d 218, 226—purpose of § 405.1 is to "clarify" that party who records lis pendens must be same party who asserts CCP § 405.4 real property claim]

A "real property claim" is any cause of action that, if meritorious, would affect:

- title to, or the right to possession of, specific real property; or
- the use of an easement identified in the pleading (other than an easement obtained pursuant to statute by any regulated public utility). [CCP § 405.4; Park 100 Investment Group II v. Ryan, supra]

(1) [11:628.1] Title of claim not dispositive: The lis pendens statutes offer no definition of a claim that affects "title to, or the right to possession of, specific real property," leaving the matter for judicial development.

In deciding whether a cause of action is a "real property claim" for purposes of CCP § 405.1, courts must look to the specific nature of the claim within the context of the entire complaint; the title of the claim is not dispositive. [See Lewis v. Sup.Ct. (Folksam Gen. Mut. Ins. Soc.) (1994) 30 CA4th 1850, 1865, 37 CR2d 63, 73]

(2) [11:629] Application: The following are actions that may "affect title or possession" of real property for lis pendens purposes:

(a) [11:630] Specific performance: A buyer suing for specific performance of a real property purchase and sale agreement clearly has a "real property claim" within the meaning of the statute (if meritorious, the action would affect both title and possession concerning the subject property). This "is a classic example of an action in which a lis pendens is both appropriate and necessary." [BGJ Assocs., LLC v. Sup.Ct. (M2B2, LLC) (1999) 75 CA4th 952, 967, 89 CR2d 693, 702-703; see also Dyer v. Martinez (2007) 147 CA4th 1240, 1242-1243, 54 CR3d 907, 908]

(b) [11:631] Rescission: A lis pendens is properly recorded in an action to rescind a real property sale contract. [Wilkins v. Oken (1958) 157 CA2d 603, 606, 321 P2d 876, 878]

(c) [11:632] Declaratory relief: An action for declaratory relief as to rights in real property is a "real property claim." [Mason v. Sup.Ct. (Bond) (1985) 163 CA3d 989, 994, 999, 210 CR 63, 66, 69 (superseded by statute on other grounds as stated in Mix v. Sup.Ct. (Behniwal) (2004) 124 CA4th 987, 994, 21 CR3d 826, 822, fn. 6) (declaratory relief suit involving whether ambiguous provision in deed created condition subsequent or simply a covenant); Ziello v. Sup.Ct. (First Fed'l Bank of Calif.) (1995) 36 CA4th 321, 325, 42 CR2d 251, 253 (borrower's declaratory relief suit against secured lender involving whether lender, by refusing to release earthquake insurance proceeds to borrower, violated "security first rule," thus forfeiting its lien on secured real property; see ¶ 11:708)]

(d) [11:633] Easements: A lis pendens is properly recorded in suits to enforce or determine easement rights in real property. [CCP § 405.4(b); Park 100 Investment Group II v. Ryan (2009) 180 CA4th 795, 809-812, 103 CR3d 218, 227-230—lis pendens on dominant tenement; Woodcourt II Ltd. v. McDonald Co. (1981) 119 CA3d 245, 247-248, 173 CR 836, 837—lis pendens on servient tenement]

(e) [11:634] Leaseholds: A lis pendens may be recorded in an action to enforce or determine ownership of a leasehold interest in real property. [See Bailey v. Outdoor Media Group (2007) 155 CA4th 778, 781, 66 CR3d 322, 325 (civil action for, among other things, wrongful occupation of real property leasehold); Parker v. Sup.Ct. (Dwight) (1970) 9 CA3d 397, 399-400, 88 CR 352, 353-354 (marriage dissolution action involving real property leasehold)]

(f) [11:635] Setting aside fraudulent conveyance: A suit seeking to set aside a conveyance of real property on the ground it was made in fraud of creditors may result in the voiding of a transfer of title and, therefore, constitutes a "real property claim" for purposes of lis pendens law. [Kirkeby v. Sup.Ct. (Fascenelli) (2004) 33 C4th 642, 648-649, 15 CR3d 805, 809-810; Hunting World, Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (Bogar) (1994) 22 CA4th 67, 72-73, 26 CR2d 923, 926]

1) [11:636] Uniform Voidable Transactions Act (UVTA): The UVTA (Civ.C. § 3439 et seq.) provides a variety of tools for unsecured creditors who seek payment from debtors attempting to evade collection—e.g., a court may void a transfer of assets, attach assets, or employ equitable remedies like injunctive relief or receivership. [Nagel v. Westen (2021) 59 CA5th 740, 747-748, 274 CR3d 21, 25-26 (citing Civ.C. § 3439.07)]

The UVTA can even be applied to unwind real property transfers that were intended to prevent a creditor from reaching the debtor's assets, including third-party transfers and transmitting property sale proceeds out of state. [See Nagel v. Westen, supra, 59 CA5th at 743-745, 748-750, 274 CR3d at 22-23, 26-27 (finding for plaintiff in a "matter of first impression")—plaintiff stated UVTA claim against defendants who allegedly used proceeds from California real property sale to buy and improve Texas property after it became apparent defendants would lose arbitration action against plaintiff]

(g) [11:637] Marriage dissolution property proceedings: A lis pendens may be recorded in marriage dissolution proceedings in which ownership of specific real property is at issue. [Kane v. Huntley Fin'l (1983) 146 CA3d 1092, 1096, 194 CR 880, 882—wife's failure to record lis pendens allowed husband to encumber home held in both names but which was her separate property; Mabie v. Hyatt (1998) 61 CA4th 581, 589, 71 CR2d 657, 661, fn. 5 (same)]

Cross-refer: For further discussion of lis pendens in marriage dissolution actions, see Hogoboom & King, Cal. Prac. Guide: Family Law (TRG), Ch. 3.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(h) [11:638] Mechanic's lien foreclosure: A lis pendens is expressly authorized by statute in suits to foreclose mechanics' liens. [Civ.C. § 8461; Howard S. Wright Const. Co. v. Sup.Ct. (BBIC Investors, LLC) (2003) 106 CA4th 314, 318, 130 CR2d 641, 645, fn. 1 (citing former Civ.C. § 3146)]

(3) [11:639] Not money damages action: An action for money only, even if it relates in some way to specific real property, is not a "real property claim" and thus will not support a lis pendens. The following are illustrative:

• [11:640] Several limited partners sued general partners for breach of fiduciary duty in transferring partnership real property. Plaintiffs' interest was in the partnership, not the property; thus, their suit did not affect "title or possession" of the property for lis pendens purposes. [North Coast Business Park v. Sup.Ct. (Jones) (1984) 158 CA3d 858, 860, 205 CR 81, 82]

• [11:641] Former shareholders of corporation that owned real property sued to rescind the sale of their shares. The action did not "concern title or possession" to real property because even if plaintiffs won the lawsuit, the corporation would still have title to the property. [Pacific Lumber Co. v. Sup.Ct. (Martel) (1990) 226 CA3d 371, 375-376, 276 CR 425, 427-428 (different result if minority shareholder brought derivative action to rescind sale of property because such action would benefit corporation and not shareholders as individuals)]

• [11:642] To satisfy a debt, Defendant promised to convey property to plaintiff if certain contingencies occurred. They never occurred. Plaintiff's claimed "investment" in the property was merely a debt and its suit to compel repayment could not support a lis pendens. [Deane v. Sup.Ct. (Fischer) (1985) 164 CA3d 292, 296, 210 CR 406, 408]

• [11:643] Borrower's suit for a declaration that she had the exclusive right to earthquake insurance proceeds as against Lender (named as loss payee on the insurance policy) did not involve real property; it was strictly a matter of contract. Therefore, Lender's motion to expunge Borrower's lis pendens was properly granted. [Ziello v. Sup.Ct. (First Fed'l Bank of Calif.) (1995) 36 CA4th 321, 331-332, 42 CR2d 251, 257; see ¶ 11:708]

[11:644 - 11:645] Reserved.

(4) [11:646] Constructive trust; equitable lien: The weight of authority holds a lis pendens may not be recorded in a creditor's action to impose a constructive trust or equitable lien on real property solely as a means of enforcing a debt. Indeed, the creditor's suit claims no present interest in the property, and only entitlement to a remedy that, if granted, would "affect title." Thus, a lis pendens cannot be used as a shortcut method of attachment for unsecured creditors or to provide plaintiffs with additional leverage for negotiating purposes. [See Urez Corp. v. Sup.Ct. (Keefer) (1987) 190 CA3d 1141, 1149, 235 CR 837, 843; Campbell v. Sup.Ct. (La Barrie) (2005) 132 CA4th 904, 916-918, 34 CR3d 68, 76-78; see also Cal-Western Reconveyance Corp. v. Reed (2007) 152 CA4th 1308, 1318, 62 CR3d 244, 251—lis pendens notice does not make person who recorded it a secured creditor]

(a) [11:647] Complaint alleging causes of action for money damages and constructive trust to obtain real property title: At least two appellate courts have reached differing conclusions where the plaintiffs' complaints asserted causes of action for monetary damages and to impose constructive trusts in order to obtain title to property. [See BGJ Assocs., LLC v. Sup.Ct. (M2B2, LLC) (1999) 75 CA4th 952, 970-972, 89 CR2d 693, 705-706—no CCP § 405.31 "real property claim" stated where plaintiff sought monetary damages and constructive trust based on allegations that plaintiff's joint venture partners breached their fiduciary duty by wrongfully acquiring certain real property the joint venture intended to purchase; compare Shoker v. Sup.Ct. (Phangureh) (2022) 81 CA5th 271, 282-283, 296 CR3d 746, 749-751 (disagreeing with BGJ Assocs.)—claim seeking damages, constructive trust, and conveyance of real property based on defendant's alleged fraudulent acquisition of plaintiffs' property in breach of defendant's fiduciary duties stated "real property claim" (finding said claim, if meritorious, would affect title to real property within CCP § 405.4's meaning)]

Comment: Although BGJ Assocs. and Shoker came to different conclusions, both opinions recognized the case-by-case nature of their analyses. [See Shoker v. Sup.Ct. (Phangureh), supra, 81 CA5th at 283, 296 CR3d at 751—"[b]ecause constructive trusts arise in a wide variety of factual circumstances, courts should decide these cases on a case-by-case basis"; BGJ Assocs., LLC v. Sup.Ct. (M2B2, LLC), supra, 75 CA4th at 971-972, 89 CR2d at 706]

c. [11:648] Compare—out-of-state litigation: Out-of-state litigation is not a matter within the ambit of California's lis pendens statutes. Thus, notice of an out-of-state action may not be recorded against California property. [See Formula Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (iStar Fin'l, Inc.) (2008) 168 CA4th 1455, 1457, 86 CR3d 341, 343—notice of lis pendens based on Florida action should not have been recorded against California property and was subject to expungement (¶ 11:714.1)]

d. [11:651] Civil penalties, reasonable attorney fees and costs for false claims: No person may knowingly file or record, or direct another to file or record, a false notice of lis pendens against another person or entity with the intent to harass that person or entity, or for the purpose of influencing or hindering a public officer or employee in discharging their official duties. [See CCP § 765.010]

Any person who knowingly files or records, or directs another to file and record, a lis pendens in violation of CCP § 765.010 (above) is liable for a civil penalty of up to $5,000. That person also may be ordered to pay reasonable attorney fees and costs to the petitioning (injured) party. [See CCP §§ 765.030 & 765.040]

[11:652 - 11:659] Reserved.

3. Creation of Lis Pendens Lien—Filing, Service and Recording Requirements

a. [11:660] Form and content of lis pendens: The notice of pendency of action (lis pendens) must contain:

- Names of the parties (see ¶ 11:670 ff.) (CCP § 405.20);
- Description of the property affected (see ¶ 11:666 ff.) (CCP § 405.20); and
- Signature of plaintiff's attorney (or court approval where plaintiff is in pro per; see ¶ 11:684) (CCP § 405.21).

FORM: Notice of Pendency of Action (Lis Pendens), see Form 11:A.

(1) [11:661] Real names of parties: Subsequent purchasers and lenders are charged with constructive notice of pendency of the action only "against parties not fictitiously named." [CCP § 405.24 (emphasis added); Ross v. Title Guar. & Trust Co. (1934) 136 CA 393, 402, 29 P2d 236, 240]

(a) [11:662] Fictitious parties: When the names of some parties are unknown, it is customary to designate them in the complaint and lis pendens as "Doe" defendants. But this does not give effective notice to purchasers or lenders dealing with persons identified in the complaint only by the fictitious name "Doe" and who acquired their interest independent of the chain of title involving a named defendant. [CCP § 405.24]

➪ [11:663] PRACTICE POINTER: After the real names of "Doe" defendants are ascertained, be sure to amend the complaint and record a new lis pendens setting forth the real names. Moreover, the newly-named parties must be served immediately with a copy of the revised lis pendens. [CCP § 405.22; see ¶ 11:674]

(b) [11:664] Effect of misspelling: If the names of parties are misspelled, the recorder will index them as misspelled. In turn, a title search will not reveal the lis pendens against the real parties. The lis pendens may then be inadequate to give constructive notice and hence ineffective. (Proper indexing can be assured by purchasing a litigation guaranty from a title company; see ¶ 3:40.)

(c) [11:665] Statutory exceptions: In certain types of actions, it is not necessary to set forth the real names of all parties in order to give effective notice (e.g., CCP §§ 764.030, 874.210—actions to quiet title and for partition). In such actions, even successors of "Doe" defendants may take their interests subject to the outcome of the litigation.

(2) [11:666] Property description: The lis pendens document must contain "a description of the property." [CCP § 405.20] ➪ [11:667] PRACTICE POINTER: Be sure to provide both the legal description and street address whenever available.

(3) [11:668] Format: There are no statutory format requirements. However, CCP § 405.22 requires that a copy of the lis pendens be filed with the court. Therefore, lis pendens are customarily drafted in the form of a standard court pleading (CRC 2.100); see Form 11:A.

Cross-refer: Pleading rules and format are explained in detail in Weil & Brown et al., Cal. Prac. Guide: Civ. Pro. Before Trial (TRG), Ch. 6.

(4) [11:669] Signature: To be recordable, a lis pendens must be signed by plaintiff's attorney. If plaintiff is in pro per, it must be both signed by plaintiff and approved by a judge of the court in which the action is pending. [CCP § 405.21 (exception for lis pendens filed by public agency in eminent domain actions)]

b. Mailing and service requirements

(1) [11:670] Prior to recordation: Before recordation, copies of the lis pendens must be mailed, by registered or certified mail, return receipt requested, to:

• adverse parties at "all known addresses"; and

• all owners of record shown in the "latest county assessment roll." [CCP § 405.22; see also J & A Mash & Barrel, LLC v. Sup.Ct. (Tower Theater Properties) (2022) 74 CA5th 1, 26, 289 CR3d 110, 130 (noting claimant must mail notice to address on assessor's role but need not ensure address's validity)—notice mailed to individual partner at partnership/ record owner's address on assessment roll was adequate notice to partnership; Carr v. Rosien (2015) 238 CA4th 845, 848, 856-857, 190 CR3d 245, 246—regardless of address' validity, failure to mail notice to record owner's address as shown on assessor's roll rendered lis pendens void]

If the address of any such party is unknown, a declaration to this effect is required, which excuses service on that party. [CCP § 405.22; see also Carr v. Rosien, supra, 238 CA4th at 853, 190 CR3d at 250—if owner's address is not listed in assessment roll because unknown to assessor, "then—and only then" may claimant satisfy its obligation to mail lis pendens by submitting declaration stating owner has no known address (dicta); and ¶ 6:671 ff.]

(a) [11:671] "All known addresses": The term "known addresses" probably means knowable addresses, in the sense that one who makes reasonable inquiry can ascertain them.

If a person has both a business address and a residence address (and both are discoverable through reasonable inquiry), copies must be mailed with return receipt requested to each address. Mailing to one address alone renders the service defective.

➪ [11:672] PRACTICE POINTER: In view of the invalidity provisions of CCP § 405.23 (¶ 11:682), be scrupulously careful to mail copies of the lis pendens to adverse parties at all addresses that might later be deemed to be a "known" address—e.g., business and residential addresses.

(2) [11:673] Adverse parties joined later: Adverse parties brought into the action after the initial filing must be served with a copy of the lis pendens immediately. [CCP § 405.22; Rey Sanchez Investments v. Sup.Ct. (Pch Enterprises, Inc.) (2016) 244 CA4th 259, 261, 197 CR3d 575, 578]

• [11:674] Comment: With regard to newly-joined adverse parties, the statute specifies "service" (a different and broader term than mailing) and requires service "immediately." This appears to require serving a copy of the lis pendens at the same time, and by the same method, as service of the complaint or cross-complaint on the new party.

c. Recording procedures

(1) [11:675] Who may record: Any party who asserts a "real property claim" may record a lis pendens. [CCP § 405.20; Park 100 Investment Group II v. Ryan (2009) 180 CA4th 795, 808, 103 CR3d 218, 226—party who records lis pendens must be same party who asserts real property claim]

Thus, it may be recorded by either a plaintiff or cross-complainant. [See Fremont Indem. Co. v. Du Alba (1986) 187 CA3d 474, 478, 231 CR 683, 685—cross-complainant may not rely on plaintiff's lis pendens where cross-complaint seeks affirmative relief and contains new cause of action]

(2) [11:676] When to record: A lis pendens may be recorded at the time of filing the complaint or cross-complaint, or at any time thereafter (provided a copy of the lis pendens has first been mailed to interested parties; see ¶ 11:685 ff.).

(3) [11:677] Where to record: The lis pendens is recorded in the office of the county recorder of the county (or counties) where the property is situated. [CCP § 405.20]

(4) [11:678] Proof of service recorded with lis pendens: A proof of service (mailing) as set forth in CCP § 1013a must be recorded with the lis pendens. [CCP § 405.23]

(a) [11:679] Unknown addresses: If there is "no known address" for service on an adverse party or owner (¶ 11:670 ff.), a declaration to that effect must be recorded in lieu of proof of service. [CCP § 405.23]

d. [11:680] Filing requirements: A copy of the lis pendens must be filed with the court in which the pending action is being litigated. [CCP § 405.22]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

➪ [11:681] PRACTICE POINTER: Although not statutorily required, it is also good practice to file a copy of the proof of service of the lis pendens.

e. [11:682] Effect of noncompliance: The service (mailing) and filing requirements set forth in CCP §§ 405.22 and 405.23 are necessary prerequisites for "perfecting" a lis pendens. A lis pendens "shall be void and invalid" as to any adverse party or record owner with regard to whom these statutory requirements have not been met. [CCP § 405.23; see also Rey Sanchez Investments v. Sup.Ct. (Pch Enterprises, Inc.) (2016) 244 CA4th 259, 263-264, 197 CR3d 575, 578—lis pendens recorded by prospective purchasers void as to alleged prior transferee and prospective sellers due to invalid service; Carr v. Rosien (2015) 238 CA4th 845, 848, 190 CR3d 245, 252—lis pendens void as to one owner also void as to that owner's transferees]

f. [11:683] Effect of compliance; constructive notice to transferees: Once a proper lis pendens is recorded and properly indexed, "a purchaser, encumbrancer, or other transferee of the real property described in the notice shall be deemed to have constructive notice of the pendency of the noticed action as it relates to the real property … against parties not fictitiously named." [CCP § 405.24 (emphasis added); Bishop Creek Lodge v. Scira (1996) 46 CA4th 1721, 1733-1734, 54 CR2d 745, 751-752; see also Bailey v. Outdoor Media Group (2007) 155 CA4th 778, 793-794, 66 CR3d 322, 334—transferee of sublessee's purported leasehold interest "deemed to have constructive knowledge" of pending litigation between sublessee and sublessor (properly recorded lis pendens vitiated transferee's claim of wrongful occupancy due to mistake of fact re sublease's validity)]

Thus, there cannot be a "bona fide purchaser without notice." Any transferee takes "subject to" plaintiff's claims to the property; and if plaintiff wins, "[t]he rights and interests of the claimant in the property … relate back to the date of the recording of the notice." [CCP § 405.24 (emphasis added); Cyr v. McGovran (2012) 206 CA4th 645, 652, 142 CR3d 34, 40; Slintak v. Buckeye Retirement Co., LLC, Ltd. (2006) 139 CA4th 575, 586-587, 43 CR3d 131, 139; see also Mira Overseas Consulting Ltd. v. Muse Family Enterprises, Ltd. (2015) 237 CA4th 378, 381, 385-386, 187 CR3d 858, 860, 864—judgment granting investors' fraudulent transfer claim against construction company, as well as monetary damages, related back to date investors recorded lis pendens]

(1) [11:684] Notice not effective until document properly indexed: A lis pendens, however, like any recorded document, does not impart constructive notice until it is properly indexed so that it can be located by a diligent title search. [See Gov.C. §§ 27230-27265; First Bank v. East West Bank (2011) 199 CA4th 1309, 1320, 132 CR3d 267, 276—indexing "essential" for imparting constructive notice to defeat claims of bona fide subsequent buyers; Dyer v. Martinez (2007) 147 CA4th 1240, 1243-1246, 54 CR3d 907, 909-911 (collecting cases)—term "recording" in CCP § 405.24 means "recorded as prescribed by law," and Gov.C. § 27250 requires indexing of all recorded lis pendens; Lewis v. Sup.Ct. (Folksam Gen. Mut. Ins. Soc.) (1994) 30 CA4th 1850, 1866, 37 CR2d 63, 74—indexing is "operative event" for purposes of imparting constructive notice]

➪ [11:685] PRACTICE POINTERS: To avoid malpractice claims, verify the recorder's office promptly and accurately indexed a recorded lis pendens; and, to the extent possible, provide actual notice of the lis pendens to any prospective buyers and escrow and title companies.

Also, a litigation guarantee obtained from a title insurer (¶ 3:40) will protect against the effects of improper indexing by the recorder.

[11:686 - 11:689] Reserved.

4. [11:690] Withdrawal of Lis Pendens: A lis pendens may be withdrawn by recording a notice of withdrawal in the office of the county recorder in which the lis pendens was recorded. [CCP § 405.50]

a. [11:691] Who may record withdrawal notice: Either the party who recorded the lis pendens or that party's successor in interest may record a notice of withdrawal. [CCP § 405.50]

b. [11:692] Form: The only statutory requirement as to form is that the notice of withdrawal must be acknowledged in accordance with Civ.C. § 1180 et seq. [CCP § 405.50]

c. [11:693] Effect of withdrawal notice: Upon recordation of the notice of withdrawal, the lis pendens no longer affords "constructive or actual notice" of the lawsuit involving the property. [CCP § 405.60]

(1) [11:694] Actual knowledge irrelevant: Moreover, nonparty purchasers take free and clear of any claims involved in the lawsuit, even if they had actual knowledge thereof. [CCP § 405.61—no person other than a named party to the lawsuit

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

"shall be deemed to have actual knowledge of the action or any of the matters contained, claimed, or alleged therein … irrespective of whether that person possessed actual knowledge"]

(a) [11:695] Purpose: The Legislature has expressed its intent that this provision "shall provide for the absolute and complete free transferability of real property after the expungement or withdrawal" of a lis pendens. [CCP § 405.61; see further discussion at ¶ 11:729 ff.]

"Accordingly … withdrawal of a lis pendens conclusively insulates a purchaser prior to judgment from the claims of the plaintiff in the underlying action." [Bishop Creek Lodge v. Scira (1996) 46 CA4th 1721, 1735, 54 CR2d 745, 752]

(2) [11:696] Compare—no basis for fraud action: CCP § 405.61 does not permit purchasers who have actual knowledge of the relevant facts to claim, after withdrawal of a lis pendens, that they were deceived. "[T]he Legislature intended to protect purchasers [from constructive notice of adverse claims] but not to give them, as a bonus, a fraud cause of action that would not otherwise exist." [Bishop Creek Lodge v. Scira (1996) 46 CA4th 1721, 1735, 54 CR2d 745, 752-753]

The result is that the withdrawal of a lis pendens is irrelevant to a fraud action. [Bishop Creek Lodge v. Scira, supra, 46 CA4th at 1734, 54 CR2d at 752]

[11:697 - 11:704] Reserved.

5. [11:705] Expungement of Lis Pendens: The "cloud" on title arising from a lis pendens continues so long as the litigation is pending and even after judgment (Slintak v. Buckeye Retirement Co., LLC, Ltd. (2006) 139 CA4th 575, 586-587, 43 CR3d 131, 139), thereby creating a potential injustice to the property owner. The Legislature has therefore authorized procedures by which a lis pendens may be removed ("expunged"). [See Shah v. McMahon (2007) 148 CA4th 526, 529, 55 CR3d 792, 795; Amalgamated Bank v. Sup.Ct. (Corinthian Homes) (2007) 149 CA4th 1003, 1011-1012, 57 CR3d 686, 690-691 (discussing "evolution" of expungement statutes)]

a. [11:706] Grounds: A lis pendens may be ordered removed from record title (expunged) for any of the following reasons:

(1) [11:707] Improper lis pendens: A lis pendens must be ordered expunged if:

- The pleading on which it is based does not contain a "real property claim" (CCP § 405.31; Kirkeby v. Sup.Ct. (Fascenelli) (2004) 33 C4th 642, 647, 15 CR3d 805, 808; ¶ 11:628 ff., 11:707.2); or

- The party who recorded the lis pendens cannot establish the "probable validity" of the real property claim by a preponderance of the evidence (CCP § 405.32; Castro v. Sup.Ct. (Calif. Savings) (2004) 116 CA4th 1010, 1017, 10 CR3d 865, 869-870; ¶ 11:708 ff.).

(a) [11:707.1] Burden and standard of proof—in general: Unlike most other motions in civil actions, the burden is on the party opposing the expungement motion (i.e., the plaintiff claimant) to defeat the underlying bases for the motion by establishing the existence of a real property claim, or the probable validity of the underlying real property claim, by a preponderance of the evidence. [CCP §§ 405.30, 405.32; Kirkeby v. Sup.Ct. (Fascenelli) (2004) 33 C4th 642, 647, 15 CR3d 805, 808 (motion based on lack of real property claim); Shoker v. Sup.Ct. (Phangureh) (2022) 81 CA5th 271, 277, 296 CR3d 743, 746 (same); J & A Mash & Barrel, LLC v. Sup.Ct. (Tower Theater Properties) (2022) 74 CA5th 1, 32-33, 289 CR3d 110, 136 (motion based on underlying claim's lack of probable validity); Howard S. Wright Const. Co. v. Sup.Ct. (BBIC Investors, LLC) (2003) 106 CA4th 314, 319, 130 CR2d 641, 646 (same)]

(b) [11:707.2] Expungement where pleading fails to identify *specific real property: A pleading does not contain a "real property claim," and thus will not support a lis pendens, unless it identifies specific real property that is the subject of the action (CCP § 405.4). [Gale v. Sup.Ct. (Gale) (2004) 122 CA4th 1388, 1396, 19 CR3d 554, 559-560; see also Park 100 Investment Group II v. Ryan (2009) 180 CA4th 795, 808, 103 CR3d 218, 227—court must engage in "demurrer-like analysis" in determining whether pleading states real property claim]

While a legal description by reference to a recorded map or metes and bounds is not essential, the pleading, at a minimum, should contain a description sufficient to allow a search of public records to identify the subject property. [Gale v. Sup.Ct. (Gale), supra, 122 CA4th at 1397, 19 CR3d at 560, fn. 6 (dictum)—husband's motion to expunge wife's lis pendens in dissolution action granted where wife's pleading only stated that there were community assets "as may be discovered at a later date" (insufficient description)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(c) [11:708] Expungement based on failure to establish "probable validity" of underlying claim: "Probable validity" of the claim for purposes of avoiding expungement under CCP § 405.32 means that it is more likely than not that the party who asserted the real property claim will obtain a judgment on the claim in that party's favor. [CCP § 405.3; J & A Mash & Barrel, LLC v. Sup.Ct. (Tower Theater Properties) (2022) 74 CA5th 1, 32-33, 289 CR3d 110, 136, discussed at ¶ 8:212b; Howard S. Wright Const. Co. v. Sup.Ct. (BBIC Investors, LLC) (2003) 106 CA4th 314, 319, 130 CR2d 641, 646, fn. 5; see also De Martini v. Sup.Ct. (Gupta) (2024) 98 CA5th 1269, 1278-1280, 317 CR3d 441, 448-449—error to apply prima facie standard in determining whether commercial property purchaser established claim's probable validity (concluding recording party must show by preponderance of evidence action is "probably valid")]

As such, a § 405.32 expungement motion effectively requires the court to conduct a "mini-trial" on the merits of the real property claim. The plaintiff claimant (in opposing expungement) must, at the very least, establish a prima facie case; if defendant (the moving party) makes an appearance, the court must then consider the relative merits of the parties' respective positions and make a determination of the probable outcome of the litigation. [See Kirkeby v. Sup.Ct. (Fascenelli) (2004) 33 C4th 642, 651, 15 CR3d 805, 811; Amalgamated Bank v. Sup.Ct. (Corinthian Homes) (2007) 149 CA4th 1003, 1011-1012, 57 CR3d 686, 691—§ 405.32 intended to disapprove of cases holding that court on expungement motion may not conduct "mini-trial" on case's merits]

1) [11:708.1] Example: Borrower recorded a lis pendens based on her declaratory relief action seeking a judicial declaration that she had the exclusive right to earthquake insurance proceeds and that Lender, by refusing to turn over the proceeds, violated the "security first rule" (CCP § 726) and thus forfeited its lien on Borrower's property. The only portion of the case affecting title to real property was Borrower's claim that Lender had waived its security interest in Borrower's real property.

Once the trial court concluded there was no waiver of Lender's security, the only remaining issue was which party (Borrower or Lender) was entitled to the insurance proceeds; that determination was strictly a matter of contract, not involving the real property. Therefore, Borrower did not establish the "probable validity" of her real property claim, and the lis pendens was properly expunged pursuant to CCP § 405.32. [Ziello v. Sup.Ct. (First Fed'l Bank of Calif.) (1995) 36 CA4th 321, 331-332, 42 CR2d 251, 257]

2) [11:709] Judgment for defendant on merits generally mandates expungement: Ordinarily, if plaintiff loses on the merits of the underlying claim, the trial court must grant the motion to expunge unless (in very rare circumstances) it finds it more likely than not that the appellate court will reverse the judgment. [Amalgamated Bank v. Sup.Ct. (Corinthian Homes) (2007) 149 CA4th 1003, 1015, 57 CR3d 686, 693-694; Mix v. Sup.Ct. (Behniwal) (2004) 124 CA4th 987, 989, 21 CR3d 826, 828; but see ¶ 11:726.1 re statutory stay of expungement order]

[11:710] Reserved.

(2) [11:711] Adequate relief by posting undertaking: Even if the lis pendens is proper (based on a "real property claim" that has "probable validity," ¶ 11:628, 11:708), the court must order it expunged if adequate relief may otherwise be secured to protect the claimant by the giving of an undertaking (bond). [CCP § 405.33; Kirkeby v. Sup.Ct. (Fascenelli) (2004) 33 C4th 642, 651, 15 CR3d 805, 811]

An undertaking is deemed "adequate relief" if it will indemnify the claimant against all damage resulting from removal of the lis pendens should the claimant prevail in the action. [See Sheets v. Sup.Ct. (Devcorp) (1978) 86 CA3d 68, 70-71, 149 CR 912, 914—undertaking deemed inadequate security given "fairly large and unique piece of commercial real estate"]

(a) [11:712] Civ.C. § 3387 presumption inapplicable; single family residence exception: As earlier discussed, there is a general statutory presumption that every parcel of real property is "unique" and the loss of an interest therein cannot adequately be compensated in money damages (Civ.C. § 3387, ¶ 11:220). However, for purposes of determining whether a bond will provide "adequate" security for expungement, this presumption applies only to a single family residence the claimant intends to occupy. [CCP § 405.33; see also Real Estate Analytics, LLC v. Vallas (2008) 160 CA4th 463, 479, 72 CR3d 835, 846—§ 405.33 plainly reflects Legislature's view that "in certain cases a monetary undertaking will provide adequate protection in lieu of a lis pendens to a disappointed buyer of commercial and/or investment property"]

1) [11:712.1] Comment: As a practical matter, the removal of a lis pendens from commercial and/or investment property may result in a party losing the right to obtain specific performance should the party ultimately prevail at trial—i.e., if the defendant no longer has title to the property, a specific performance remedy may not be possible. [See Real Estate Analytics, LLC v. Vallas (2008) 160 CA4th 463, 480, 72 CR3d 835, 847]

Nonetheless, there is nothing in the lis pendens statutes "suggesting the Legislature was intending to change the long held view that a nonbreaching real estate buyer in a commercial or investment context is entitled to specific performance, unless the seller rebuts the presumption with evidence showing that monetary damages are adequate to compensate the buyer." [See Real Estate Analytics, LLC v. Vallas, supra]

(b) [11:713] Conditional expungement order: A § 405.33 expungement is conditioned on the moving party posting the designated undertaking by a specified "return date." If the party fails to do so, the expungement motion will be denied "without further notice or hearing." [CCP § 405.33]

(3) [11:714] Defects in service or filing: Defects in statutory service and filing requirements also are grounds for expungement. [See CCP § 405.23; McKnight v. Sup.Ct. (Faber) (1985) 170 CA3d 291, 303, 215 CR 909, 915; but see also Carr v. Rosien (2015) 238 CA4th 845, 857, 190 CR3d 245, 253—"Legislature did not intend to require that a void lis pendens be expunged" (emphasis in original) (defective lis pendens declared void even though never expunged)]

(4) [11:714.1] Out-of-state litigation: Again, California's lis pendens statutes do not authorize recording a notice of litigation pending in another state (¶ 11:648). Any such notice is subject to expungement, "albeit not under the authority of CCP § 405.30." [See Formula Inc. v. Sup.Ct. (iStar Fin'l, Inc.) (2008) 168 CA4th 1455, 1457, 86 CR3d 341, 343—Florida litigation notice recorded against California property was properly expunged notwithstanding lack of any supporting statutory authority]

(5) [11:715] Compare—undertaking for *continuance of lis pendens: Whether or not a motion to expunge has been filed, any person with an interest in the affected property may file a motion to require the claimant (party who recorded the lis pendens) to provide an undertaking as a condition to maintaining the lis pendens in the record title. [CCP § 405.34 (nonparty movants must seek leave to intervene, ¶ 11:725.1)]

(a) [11:716] Expungement if undertaking not timely posted: If the motion is granted and the claimant fails to file the requisite undertaking by the specified "return date," the court must order the lis pendens expunged "without further notice or hearing." [CCP § 405.34]

(b) [11:717] Recovery on undertaking: A § 405.34 undertaking secures the moving party's damages as a result of maintenance of the lis pendens. Specifically, if the party who recorded the lis pendens does not prevail in the case, damages suffered by the other party as a result of the lis pendens clouding title throughout pendency of the action may be recovered against the undertaking (but not in excess of the undertaking). [CCP §§ 405.33, 405.34]

(6) [11:718] Compare—voluntary withdrawal: The party who recorded the lis pendens may voluntarily withdraw it at any time by recording an acknowledged "notice of withdrawal" (e.g., where the case settles or is dismissed). [CCP § 405.50; see ¶ 11:690 ff.]

(An acknowledgment before a notary public is required; see Civ.C. § 1181 et seq.)

[11:719 - 11:723] Reserved.

b. [11:724] Motion procedure: A motion to expunge is the exclusive procedure by which the court can compel removal of a lis pendens prior to final judgment in the action. [CCP § 405.30; Peery v. Sup.Ct. (Beneficial Standard Properties) (1981) 29 C3d 837, 842, 176 CR 533, 536]

FORM: Motion to Expunge Lis Pendens, see Form 11:B.

(1) [11:725] Party or nonparty: The motion to expunge (or a CCP § 405.34 motion to require the claimant to post an undertaking, ¶ 11:715) may be filed by any party (typically, the defendant property owner) or a nonparty having an interest in the affected real property. [CCP §§ 405.30, 405.34; see De Martini v. Sup.Ct. (Gupta) (2024) 98 CA4th 1269, 1274-1275, 317 CR3d 441, 445—§ 405.30 is intended to prevent unwarranted clouding of party's title with inappropriate or void notice of pending litigation (concluding lis pendens may be expunged if action does not contain real property claim or claimant fails to establish claim's probable validity; ¶ 11:708)]

(a) [11:725.1] Nonparty intervention prerequisite: However, a nonparty movant must obtain leave to intervene in the action at or before the time the motion is heard. [CCP §§ 405.30, 405.34]

(2) [11:726] Evidence/hearing: Normally, the motion is heard on the basis of declarations filed with the moving papers and counter-declarations filed in opposition. But the court also has discretion to permit oral testimony at the expungement hearing; and may make orders it "deems just" to provide for discovery by any party affected by the motion. [CCP §§ 405.30, 405.34]

Cross-refer: For further discussion of motions to expunge lis pendens, see Weil & Brown et al., Cal. Prac. Guide: Civ. Pro. Before Trial (TRG), Ch. 9 Part I.

c. [11:727] Prevailing party attorney fees/costs award: The party prevailing on an expungement motion (or on a CCP § 405.34 motion to require an undertaking from the claimant (see ¶ 11:715 ff.)) must be awarded reasonable attorney fees and costs incurred in making or opposing the motion … unless the court finds the other party acted with "substantial justification" or that other circumstances make the imposition of attorney fees and costs "unjust." [CCP § 405.38; Kirkeby v. Sup.Ct. (Fascenelli) (2004) 33 C4th 642, 651, 15 CR3d 805, 811-812—"the possible imposition of attorney fees and sanctions should discourage abuse of the lis pendens statute"; Castro v. Sup.Ct. (Calif. Savings) (2004) 116 CA4th 1010, 1018, 10 CR3d 865, 870 (same)]

(1) [11:727.1] "Practical approach" to "prevailing party" determination: The statute does not define "prevailing party" for purposes of a CCP § 405.38 attorney fees award. Courts therefore decide the issue based on which party succeeded on a "practical level," and award § 405.38 fees to the party who "realized its litigation objectives." [Castro v. Sup.Ct. (Calif. Savings) (2004) 116 CA4th 1010, 1018-1019, 10 CR3d 865, 870-871—same approach used to determine prevailing party in pretrial voluntary dismissal cases (¶ 11:139.17)]

(a) [11:727.2] Effect of withdrawing lis pendens during pendency of motion to expunge: When a lis pendens is withdrawn while a motion to expunge is pending, the moving party achieves its litigation objectives by removing the cloud on title, thus freeing the property to be transferred while the underlying litigation continues; the moving party has obtained the relief that the court would have granted had it ruled on the motion. [Castro v. Sup.Ct. (Calif. Savings) (2004) 116 CA4th 1010, 1021, 10 CR3d 865, 873]

Nonetheless, § 405.38 attorney fees are not automatically awarded to the moving party. Instead, the "court has discretion to award fees based on a determination of which party would have prevailed on the motion, and whether the lis pendens claimant acted with substantial justification in withdrawing the lis pendens, or whether, in light of all the circumstances, the imposition of fees would otherwise be unjust." [Castro v. Sup.Ct. (California Savings), supra, 116 CA4th at 1024-1025, 10 CR3d at 875-876 (emphasis added)]

(2) [11:727.3] Reviewable only by timely writ petition: See ¶ 11:727.10.

[11:727.4 - 11:727.9] Reserved.

d. [11:727.10] Writ review of expungement order; automatic stay: An order expunging a lis pendens is not appealable; it is reviewable only by petition for writ of mandate filed and served within 20 days after service of written notice of the order. [CCP § 405.39; De Martini v. Sup.Ct. (Gupta) (2024) 98 CA5th 1269, 1272, 317 CR3d 441, 444; Park 100 Investment Group II v. Ryan (2009) 180 CA4th 795, 809, 103 CR3d 218, 227; Amalgamated Bank v. Sup.Ct. (Corinthian Homes) (2007) 149 CA4th 1003, 1016, 57 CR3d 686, 695; see also Shah v. McMahon (2007) 148 CA4th 526, 529, 55 CR3d 792, 794—CCP § 405.39 mandate for exclusive writ review applies to all orders made under CCP § 405.30 et seq. (expungement and related orders) and thus to orders awarding CCP § 405.38 prevailing party attorney fees on motion to expunge]

Moreover, the trial court's expungement order does not take effect and may not be recorded until the 20-day period for seeking writ review has expired; and, if a writ petition is timely filed, the expungement order is stayed, and may not be recorded, until final disposition of the writ proceeding. [CCP § 405.35]

(1) [11:727.11] Standard of writ review: The "probable validity" standard used by the trial court to determine whether a lis pendens should be expunged (¶ 11:707, 11:708) is also used by the appellate court on writ review of the expungement order. Thus, the appellate court must assess whether it is more likely than not that the underlying claim will prevail at the end of the appellate process … even if this puts the court "in the somewhat awkward position of attempting to forecast our own resolution of the underlying appeal." [Amalgamated Bank v. Sup.Ct. (Corinthian Homes) (2007) 149 CA4th 1003, 1016-1017, 57 CR3d 686, 695]

e. [11:728] Effect of recording expungement order: Upon recordation of a certified copy of the expungement order, the lis pendens ceases to have any effect.

- It no longer provides actual or constructive notice of the matters stated therein or a duty of inquiry to anyone dealing with the property. [CCP § 405.60]

- Moreover, until a copy of the ultimate judgment in the action is recorded, no one other than the named parties to the action takes subject to plaintiff's claims in the lawsuit. [CCP § 405.61]
  As a result, a subsequent purchaser takes title unencumbered by the judgment ultimately rendered in the action in which the lis pendens was recorded. [Federal Dep. Ins. Corp. v. Charlton (1993) 17 CA4th 1066, 1069-1070, 21 CR2d 686, 689]
  "It is the intent of the Legislature that this section shall provide for the absolute and complete free transferability of real property after the expungement or withdrawal of a notice of pendency of action." [CCP § 405.61 (emphasis added)]
  (1) [11:729] Actual knowledge irrelevant: Except for named parties, the Code provides for "absolute and complete free transferability" of property after expungement of the lis pendens. Nonparty purchasers take free and clear of the claims involved in the lawsuit … even if they had actual knowledge thereof and would have been subject thereto had a lis pendens not been filed. [CCP § 405.61; Knapp Develop. & Design v. Pal-Mal Properties, Ltd. (1987) 195 CA3d 786, 790, 240 CR 920, 923 (decided under former law but same rule under present statute)]
  - [11:730] Example: Buyer 1 sues Vendor for specific performance and records a lis pendens. Vendor has the lis pendens expunged. Vendor may freely convey the subject property to Buyer 2, even though Buyer 2 knows of the underlying lawsuit and has been "waiting in the wings" to purchase the property for more money.

  (2) [11:731] Compare—if no lis pendens filed: If, in the example at ¶ 11:730, Buyer 1 had never recorded the lis pendens, Buyer 2 would be subject to the judgment in the underlying action because Buyer 2 had actual knowledge of the lawsuit. [See CCP § 1908(a)(2)—judgment binding on successors in interest who have actual or constructive notice of action]
  (3) [11:732] Not applicable to transfers to named parties: The rule set forth at ¶ 11:728 ff. applies only to nonparties. Where the property is conveyed to a named party ("a nonfictitious party to the action"), the transferee takes subject to the outcome of the litigation. [CCP § 405.61]
  (4) [11:733] No basis for claiming fraud: CCP § 405.61 relieves purchasers of "actual knowledge" following expungement of a lis pendens only for purposes of transferability of title. It does not permit someone with knowledge of relevant facts to purchase property after a lis pendens has been expunged in order to claim fraudulent misrepresentations or nondisclosure of matters as to which that person has actual knowledge. See ¶ 11:696.
  (5) [11:734] Effect on other liens or interests: Expungement of a lis pendens affects only the claims asserted in the underlying lawsuit. It has no effect on liens or interests previously recorded under other documents or conveyances.
  (6) [11:735] Refiling lis pendens prohibited: After a lis pendens has been expunged, plaintiff must obtain leave of court before recording another lis pendens as to the affected property. (That may be appropriate, for example, where the expungement was for technical defects in service and filing (¶ 11:714) or where a judgment adverse to plaintiff is reversed on appeal.) [CCP § 405.36; Park 100 Investment Group II v. Ryan (2009) 180 CA4th 795, 809, 103 CR3d 218, 227; McKnight v. Sup.Ct. (Faber) (1985) 170 CA3d 291, 303, 215 CR 909, 915-916 (decided under former law); see also De Martini v. Sup.Ct. (Gupta) (2024) 989 CA5th 1269, 1276-1277, 317 CR3d 441, 446-447—commercial property purchaser was required to obtain court permission before filing second lis pendens in subsequent action following vendor's successful expungement of purchaser's original lis pendens in earlier related action (concluding it would "simply invite more of the abuse which the statute was intended to cure" if purchaser could record "at will" second lis pendens after first one was expunged)]

Chapter 12. Residential Co-Ownership Agreements

A. General Considerations

1. [12:2] Lawyer's Role, Generally
2. [12:3] Kinds of Co-Ownership
    - a. [12:4] Joint tenancy
        - (1) [12:5] Distinguishing features
        - (2) [12:5.1] Extinguishing right of survivorship by severance
    - b. [12:6] Tenancies in common
        - (1) [12:7] Distinguishing features
    - c. [12:8] Community property
        - (1) [12:9] Distinguishing features
        - (2) [12:9.1] Community property with right of survivorship
    - d. [12:10] Partnerships
        - (1) [12:11] Distinguishing features
            - (a) [12:12] Co-ownership for profit
            - (b) [12:13] Agency relationship; power to bind copartners
                - 1) [12:14] Conveyance of title to partnership real property; statement of authority as limitation
        - (2) [12:15] Partnership agreement vs. co-ownership agreement

[12:1] As between married persons (or registered domestic partners, see Fam.C. § 297.5), residential property is commonly co-owned as community property or joint tenants. However, there is also a growing trend among other individuals to jointly acquire residential property—e.g., nonmarital cohabitants purchasing a house in joint tenancy (or as tenants in common), neighbors buying a multiunit house or small apartment building, or friends combining to purchase a vacation home. These co-ownership arrangements present unique problems that buyers' counsel must be prepared to address in addition to the host of issues arising in connection with any real property acquisition.

This Chapter focuses on issues to be considered by parties contemplating a residential co-ownership arrangement. Co-ownership of income-producing or other kinds of investment real property most commonly occurs in the context of a partnership, limited liability company or corporation, which is beyond the scope of this Practice Guide. (Nevertheless, many of the issues discussed in this Chapter are germane to simple real estate partnerships which own income property.)

1. [12:2] Lawyer's Role, Generally: Residential property co-owners are often unsophisticated in (and, sometimes, emotionally reluctant to deal with) the business and legal practicalities of sharing ownership. Consequently, co-ownership arrangements require special counseling by the lawyer.

Significantly, co-owners frequently do not appreciate the need to formalize their ownership arrangement and do not want to create an extensive written agreement. Counsel must be prepared to advise the parties of the importance of a written co-ownership agreement—in particular, the need to agree upon an efficient method for dissolving the co-ownership relationship (¶ 12:37 ff.); and counsel should be equipped to assist in the negotiation and drafting of the pertinent documents.

2. [12:3] Kinds of Co-Ownership: There are four fundamental types of co-ownership:

- Joint interests (¶ 12:4 ff.);
- Interests in common (¶ 12:6 ff.);
- Community property (¶ 12:8 ff.); or
- Partnership interests (¶ 12:10 ff.). [See Civ.C. § 682]

a. [12:4] Joint tenancy: The "joint interests" referred to in Civ.C. § 682 are joint tenancy interests between co-owners. A joint tenancy is created when two or more persons acquire property in equal shares by the same conveyance and at the same time, with identical possessory rights, pursuant to an instrument of transfer that expressly declares the co-ownership to be a joint tenancy. [See Civ.C. § 683]

(1) [12:5] Distinguishing features: Joint tenancies are distinguishable primarily from tenancies in common and partnership interests in that the joint tenants own equal interests in the property, all of which are subject to the right of survivorship; i.e., upon any joint tenant's death, their interest passes by operation of law to the surviving joint tenant(s). [Dieden v. Schmidt (2002) 104 CA4th 645, 650, 128 CR2d 365, 368-369; see also Dang v. Smith (2010) 190 CA4th 646, 660, 118 CR3d 490, 501-502—joint tenancy character of real property in which judgment debtor held interest automatically terminated when judgment debtor died, leaving secured creditor without recourse (only way to protect creditor's lien against judgment debtor's death was to "successfully execute" on property before debtor died)]

(Spouses and registered domestic partners also hold equal ownership interests in community property; but community property carries no right of survivorship, unless title is expressly taken as "community property with right of survivorship"; see ¶ 12:9.1.)

(2) [12:5.1] Extinguishing right of survivorship by severance: A joint tenancy may be severed (as to all joint tenants or as to any single joint tenant's interest) by agreement of the parties, by written declaration or by conveyance with or without the other joint tenants' joinder or consent. A severance extinguishes the right of survivorship feature and the co-owners thereafter hold the property as tenants in common. [See Civ.C. § 683.2; see also Walters v. Boosinger (2016) 2 CA5th 421, 434-435, 205 CR3d 895, 905-906—§ 683.2 outlines nonexclusive list of methods by which joint tenancy may be severed]

- [12:5.1a] The joint tenancy character of a family residence was terminated when the spouses included it in a trust executed by both even though the trust document was not recorded. [Estate of Powell (2000) 83 CA4th 1434, 1442-1443, 100 CR2d 501, 506]
- [12:5.2] Unrecorded deeds between two of three joint tenants granting each other joint tenancy as to their 2/3 interest severed the overall joint tenancy, creating a tenancy in common with the third former joint tenant. [Re v. Re (1995) 39 CA4th 91, 98-99, 46 CR2d 62, 67]
- [12:5.2a] During the pendency of a marital dissolution action, wife attempted to sever a joint tenancy with her husband and eliminate his survivorship right by recording a deed pursuant to Civ.C. § 683.2 that purportedly transferred her 50% interest in the underlying property to her son in trust. Wife died pending resolution of the dissolution action which was subsequently dismissed for lack of jurisdiction. Nonetheless, Fam.C. § 2040(b)(3)'s notice requirements (¶ 4:150b) were satisfied and the severance was completed when wife's son served wife's husband with the aforementioned deed in conjunction with a previously filed partition action. [Raney v. Cerkueira (2019) 36 CA5th 311, 316-317, 329-330, 248 CR3d 426, 429, 439-440 (finding statutorily-mandated recordation and notice requirements for severing survivorship rights may be satisfied in any order); see also Hogoboom & King, Cal. Prac. Guide: Family Law (TRG), Ch. 5]
- [12:5.3] Compare: A wife who unilaterally quitclaimed her interest in a joint tenancy residence to an irrevocable trust did not defeat her husband's right of survivorship in the residence because her quitclaim deed was not timely notarized and recorded pursuant to Civ.C. § 683.2(c). [See Dorn v. Solomon (1997) 57 CA4th 650, 653, 67 CR2d 311, 313 (discussed at ¶ 4:150a)]
- [12:5.4] Decedent's ex-girlfriend did not sever their joint tenancy in real property by way of his predeath complaint for partition and her superseded answer: "We are aware [of no authority] that holds that a court may interpret a party's complaint and another party's superseded answer to constitute an instrument that severs a joint tenancy." [Walters v. Boosinger (2016) 2 CA5th 421, 438, 205 CR3d 895, 908 (emphasis in original)]

Cross-refer: The creation of a joint tenancy, nature of joint tenancy ownership, and severance of joint tenancy interests are discussed in greater detail at ¶ 4:146 ff.

b. [12:6] Tenancies in common: Co-ownership that is not in the form of joint tenancy title, community property or a partnership is a tenancy in common. [Civ.C. §§ 685, 686]

A tenancy in common is deemed created whenever the conveyancing instrument does not specify how title among the several co-owners is taken (except when the acquisition is by spouses during marriage or registered domestic partners during their registered domestic partnership, in which case the parties presumptively take their interests as community property; ¶ 12:8). [Civ.C. § 686; Wilson v. S.L. Rey, Inc. (1993) 17 CA4th 234, 242, 21 CR2d 552, 555] Even so, parties who desire the creation of a tenancy in common often expressly designate that form of ownership in the conveyancing instrument.

(1) [12:7] Distinguishing features: Tenants in common own separate legal title to their undivided interests in the property; unlike joint tenants, their interests are not necessarily equal and are not subject to a right of survivorship. Any single co-owner may sell, transfer or encumber the undivided interest as the owner pleases, and the transferee takes title as a tenant in common with the other co-owners. [Wilson v. S.L. Rey, Inc. (1993) 17 CA4th 234, 242, 21 CR2d 552, 555; see also Dang v. Smith (2010) 190 CA4th 646, 559-660, 118 CR3d 490, 501—tenant in common's death poses no hazard to creditors since deceased tenant's interest in property passes directly to tenant's estate (rather than to surviving tenant(s)), making it available to satisfy debts]

However, like joint tenants, unless the tenants in common otherwise agree, each has equal rights to possession of the property. See discussion at ¶ 4:143 ff.

Tenants in common (like joint tenants) stand in a fiduciary relationship to each other, except where the "cotenants acquire their interests at different times through different instruments …" [Wilson v. S.L. Rey, Inc., supra, 17 CA4th at 242-243, 21 CR2d at 556—there being no relationship of trust and confidence between strangers, "[i]t would be an elevation of form over substance to hold that a fiduciary relationship exists between [them] merely because they have acquired interest in the same piece of property"]

c. [12:8] Community property: A spouse's/registered domestic partner's acquisitions during the marriage or domestic partnership (whether real or personal property and no matter where situated) are presumptively community property unless traceable to a separate property source. [Civ.C. § 687; Fam.C. §§ 297.5(a), (b), (c), 760, 770, 2581—parties' acquisitions in "joint form" are presumptively community property for purposes of property division upon dissolution or legal separation; see also In re Brace (2020) 9 C5th 903, 935-938, 266 CR3d 298, 320-323 (finding (i) community property presumption applies not only to interspousal disputes, but also to disputes with one or more spouses and bankruptcy trustee, and (ii) titling deed as joint tenancy by itself did not transmute property into separate property); Trenk v. Soheili (2020) 58 CA5th 1033, 1046, 273 CR3d 184, 193—presumption "cannot be rebutted simply by the form of title in which a married couple holds property" (couple that "held title" to property as "joint tenants" not sufficient to show property "in fact was separate property")]

The source of funds does not have to be proven in order for the presumption to apply. [Trenk v. Soheili, supra, 58 CA5th at 1048, 273 CR3d at 194—"To the contrary: The law is clear that the presumption may be rebutted with proof that separate funds were used to purchase the property at issue" (emphasis in original)]

Spouses/domestic partners may, however, by written declaration between them, "transmute" their community property to separate property interests. [Fam.C. § 850 et seq.; see also Fam.C. § 750—"[s]pouses may hold property as joint tenants or tenants in common, or as community property, or as community property with a right of survivorship"; Marriage of Wozniak (2020) 59 CA5th 120, 134, 273 CR3d 421, 434—Fam.C. § 850 does not permit unilateral property transfers from one spouse to another and requires transferee spouse's acceptance of property interest for valid transmutation]

(1) [12:9] Distinguishing features: Spouses/domestic partners own "present, existing and equal interests" in their community property during continuance of their marriage/domestic partnership—i.e., each party has an equal ownership interest in the whole of the community estate. [Fam.C. § 751; see State Board of Equalization v. Woo (2000) 82 CA4th 481, 483, 98 CR2d 206, 208; In re McIntyre (9th Cir. 2000) 222 F3d 655, 658 (applying Calif. law)—spouses' "equal" interests are 50-50 interests in whole of community property, not "exclusive" interests in only half]

Spouses/domestic partners also share equal rights of management and control over the community estate, but subject to several intraspousal fiduciary obligations. [Fam.C. §§ 721(b), 1100 et seq.]

Each party has complete rights of testamentary disposition over their community property interest. But unlike tenants in common, neither may unilaterally transfer or encumber their community property interest during the marriage/domestic partnership; indeed, such an unauthorized disposition will be voidable by the non-consenting spouse/domestic partner. [See Fam.C. § 1102; Droeger v. Friedman, Sloan & Ross (1991) 54 C3d 26, 36-39, 283 CR 584, 590-592]

(2) [12:9.1] Community property with right of survivorship: Spouses/domestic partners can also hold title as "community property with right of survivorship." This is essentially a probate avoidance device that otherwise retains the features of community property. Before either party's death, the right of survivorship may be terminated in the same manner that a joint tenancy is severed. [Civ.C. § 682.1; Fam.C. § 750] See discussion at ¶ 4:177 ff.

Cross-refer: Community property ownership is discussed in greater detail at ¶ 4:166 ff. and 4:201 ff. And, for an exhaustive treatment of the subject, see Hogoboom & King, Cal. Prac. Guide: Family Law (TRG), Ch. 8.

d. [12:10] Partnerships: A partnership interest is one owned by several persons, in partnership, for partnership purposes. [Civ.C. § 684]

The rights of partners in a real estate partnership (or in any partnership that owns real property) are governed by their partnership agreement (Corps.C. § 16103) and by the Uniform Partnership Act (UPA, Corps.C. § 16100 et seq.).

(1) [12:11] Distinguishing features: Although many of the considerations regarding co-ownership agreements are applicable to partnerships, the rights and obligations of partners are different from the rights and obligations of other kinds of co-owners. This is fundamentally because many principles of partnership law have no application to co-owners who are not partners.

(a) [12:12] Co-ownership for profit: A "partnership" is defined as "an association of two or more persons to carry on as coowners a business for profit" and includes a registered limited liability partnership. [Corps.C. § 16101(a)(9); see also Corps.C. § 16202(a)—"association of two or more persons to carry on as coowners a business for profit forms a partnership, whether or not the persons intend to form a partnership"] Thus, persons who jointly own a piece of property for their personal use, and not for profit, cannot be "partners."

The UPA also specifically provides, however, that a "[j]oint tenancy, tenancy in common, tenancy by the entireties, joint property, common property, or part ownership does not by itself establish a partnership, even if the coowners share profits made by the use of the property." [Corps.C. § 16202(c)(1)]

(b) [12:13] Agency relationship; power to bind copartners: Unlike joint tenants, tenants in common or other forms of co-ownership, partners are deemed agents of each other. [Corps.C. § 16301] Therefore, each partner acting within the scope of partnership business binds the other partners.

Moreover, one partner's knowledge generally is imputed to the partnership (Corps.C. § 16102(f)); and each partner generally is liable for the wrongful acts of the co-partners in the course of partnership business (see Corps.C. §§ 16305, 16306, 16308). This is not necessarily the case as between joint tenants or tenants in common.

1) [12:14] Conveyance of title to partnership real property; statement of authority as limitation: Under the UPA, title to real property held in the partnership name generally can be conveyed by any single partner acting within the ordinary scope of partnership business. Even a conveyance that would not normally bind the partnership (e.g., because outside the normal course of partnership business or because otherwise made by a partner lacking authority) may be effective as to a bona fide purchaser for value. [See Corps.C. § 16302]

However, by filing a certified copy of a statement of partnership authority with the Secretary of State and recording the statement in the office of the county recorder where the property is located, a partnership can limit a partner's authority to transfer partnership real property, imparting constructive notice thereof to "the world" (Civ.C. § 1218) and thus preventing BFP transferee rights. [See Corps.C. §§ 16105, 16303(d)(2); ¶ 4:204 ff.]

(2) [12:15] Partnership agreement vs. co-ownership agreement: Generally, co-owners should at least consider structuring their co-ownership rights under a partnership agreement (see Corps.C. § 16103) rather than by way of a "generic" co-ownership agreement. [See Jones v. Wagner (2001) 90 CA4th 466, 469, 108 CR2d 669, 671]

The main disadvantage of a partnership format, however, is that each partner is deemed the agent of the other partners (¶ 12:13) and co-owners often do not want to be responsible for the actions of the other co-owners.

4. [12:44] Recording Memorandum of Agreement

1. [12:20] Necessity for Formal Agreement: Unmarried couples or friends who pool their resources to buy residential property are often naive about co-ownership responsibilities; they are also unlikely to recognize the possibility of disputes arising between them, which could affect the management or termination of their co-ownership arrangement. A written co-ownership agreement regarding the parties' respective rights and obligations will accomplish two important objectives:

• Fundamentally, it will document the parties' agreed-upon understanding, thus ensuring a legally-enforceable arrangement with regard to co-ownership rights and obligations. [See Jones v. Wagner (2001) 90 CA4th 466, 472-473, 108 CR2d 669, 674—in action for constructive fraud and breach of partnership agreement formed to purchase residential property, plaintiffs' claims not supported by evidence since agreement was oral and did not include any terms regarding contribution by one partner for other partner]

• Just as important, the effort in creating such a document will compel the parties to think about (and resolve) issues they might not otherwise consider.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

2. [12:21] "Joint Representation" Conflict of Interest Concerns: As a threshold concern, an attorney asked to prepare a residential property co-ownership agreement must deal with the potential conflict of interest in representing more than one party. The most prudent approach is for each party to retain independent counsel. As a practical matter, however, that option is frequently unrealistic when the co-owners are an unmarried couple or close friends. Because of the amicable nature of their relationship, they are likely not to appreciate the risks inherent in "joint representation"; and, for convenience (to save time and money), they are likely to insist that a single attorney represent them both.

Technically, such "joint representation" is not legally or ethically prohibited. However, even when it appears both parties are aligned in interests and there are no actual conflicts between them, they must be advised of the potential for a future conflict of interests. Those risks must be fully disclosed to the clients in writing; and the joint representation cannot be accepted without each party's informed written consent. [See CRPC 1.7, and accompanying "Comment"; and more detailed treatment of joint representation conflicts of interest at ¶ 1:81 ff.]

3. [12:22] Issues to Address: The sections set forth at ¶ 12:23 ff. summarize the issues to consider when counseling residential co-owners about a co-ownership agreement and in negotiating and preparing the agreement.

FORM: Residential Co-Ownership Agreement, see Form 12:A.

a. [12:23] Subdivision issues: Multi-unit building tenants sometimes join together for the purpose of buying their building, with each party thereafter having the exclusive right to use a particular unit (see, e.g., Tom v. City & County of San Francisco (2004) 120 CA4th 674, 677, 16 CR3d 13, 16). Counsel should be aware that, because the building will still constitute one legally subdivided parcel, such a co-ownership arrangement could result in a violation of the Subdivision Map Act (Gov.C. § 66410 et seq.).

On the other hand, any laws that have the effect of discouraging the arrangement could be struck down as violating the parties' rights of privacy under the California Constitution (see Tom v. City & County of San Francisco, supra, 120 CA4th at 677-688, 16 CR3d at 16-24).

➪ [12:24] PRACTICE POINTER: Subdivision Map Act issues are extremely complex. Unless you have appropriate expertise in this area, the parties should be referred to counsel specializing in land use and subdivision matters; at a minimum, experienced counsel should be associated on the case. As in any legal matter, do not attempt to advise clients on issues that could compromise your duty to provide "competent" representation. [See CRPC 1.1, and discussion of counsel's duty of "competence" at ¶ 1:46 ff.]

b. [12:25] Initial contributions and ongoing expenses: The parties must consider how much each of them will initially contribute to acquire the property and how and when each will be responsible for the payment of ongoing expenses. Typically, these expenses will include such things as mortgage payments, real property taxes and assessments, insurance premiums, utilities, maintenance and repair costs (gardeners, pool maintenance, painting and general upkeep, security system, etc.); and they are also likely to include a host of unanticipated costs (furniture and furnishings, etc.).

Expenses are commonly shared between co-owners based on the percentage of their respective ownership interests. However, how the costs are to be divided is not nearly as problematic as who decides when to incur the expense and the penalties (if any) for a co-owner's failure to make their contribution toward ongoing expenses (see ¶ 12:33 & 12:36).

c. [12:26] Form of title: The parties should agree on how they wish to hold title to the property—i.e., as joint tenants or tenants in common (¶ 12:6).

➪ [12:27] PRACTICE POINTER—EVIDENTIARY EFFECT: Be prepared to advise the parties about the distinguishing features of the various forms of title (e.g., consequences of the right of survivorship that attaches to joint tenancy title). The parties should also be advised of the evidentiary effect of a recorded title designation:

A party asserting an interest in property contrary to record title bears a heavy evidentiary burden: There is a statutory presumption that the owner of legal title to property is the owner of the full beneficial title; and this presumption may be rebutted only by clear and convincing evidence. [Ev.C. § 662—presumption is based on public policy favoring stability of titles to property]

Therefore, pursuant to Ev.C. § 662, property acquired in the name of only one of the parties presumptively belongs to that party in full; and any other purported co-owner bears the burden of proving the co-ownership agreement by clear and convincing evidence. [See Tannehill v. Finch (1986) 188 CA3d 224, 228, 232 CR 749, 751 (ownership dispute between nonmarital cohabitants); but see In re Brace (2020) 9 C5th 903, 935, 266 CR3d 298, 320—Ev.C. § 662 presumption does not apply when it conflicts with Fam.C. § 760 community property presumption (¶ 12:8); Marriage of Haines (1995) 33 CA4th 277, 283, 300-302, 39 CR2d 673, 677, 688-689 (disagreed with on other grounds by In re Brace (2020) 5 C5th 903, 916, 266 CR3d 298, 304-305)—in marital proceedings, Ev.C. § 662 presumption and its higher rebuttal standard must yield to presumption of undue influence emanating from Fam.C. § 721(b) (fiduciary standard of care between spouses)]

d. [12:28] Percentage ownership: The parties must also decide on their respective percentage ownership interests in the property.

➪ [12:29] PRACTICE POINTER: This issue is particularly important as between unmarried couples who often enter into their nonmarital cohabitation relationship on the assumption all of their acquisitions during the relationship will be owned as if they were spouses (or registered domestic partners). If that is really their shared intent, each party will probably assume each has a 50% undivided interest in the property, regardless of how much each contributed to the acquisition (and notwithstanding that one of them might have contributed nothing to the acquisition). Yet, without a written agreement on the issue, the matter is likely to end up in court with both parties facing rather onerous burdens of proof. (See detailed discussion of nonmarital cohabitant rights and remedies in Hogoboom & King, Cal. Prac. Guide: Family Law (TRG), Ch. 20.)

e. Right to transfer or encumber co-ownership interest

(1) [12:30] Sale of co-ownership interest: Co-ownership arrangements are invariably entered into under the assumption the parties will be dealing only with each other; typically, the parties are not strangers to each other and are willing to share rights and responsibilities because they know and trust each other. Consequently, the parties often will want to restrict the right of any individual co-owner to sell or transfer their interest so as not to risk an unwitting cotenancy with unknown third parties.

With this in mind, the co-ownership agreement should carefully deal with how and when co-owners may transfer their respective interests, if at all—e.g., only with the express consent of the other co-owners, who have a right to approve or disapprove the proposed transferee.

• [12:31] Comment: Bear in mind that a joint tenancy is severable as to any co-owner's interest by a unilateral conveyance unless the parties have otherwise agreed. [Civ.C. § 683.2(a) & (b)] The severance will defeat the right of survivorship feature as to the severing joint tenant's interest, and the transferee will hold their share as tenant in common. (But see Civ.C. § 683.2(c), discussed at ¶ 4:150a.)

Likewise, a tenant in common can transfer their interest without the co-owners' consent, unless the parties have otherwise agreed (¶ 12:7).

(Even so, as a practical matter, a co-ownership interest does not have much marketability; thus, a co-owner is likely to have a difficult time selling the interest.) (See further discussion at ¶ 12:37 ff. re termination of co-ownership relationship.)

(2) [12:32] Mortgaging co-ownership interest: Because each co-owner owns less than full fee title to the property, each can encumber only its own undivided interest (not the entire fee). Therefore, it is unlikely that any lender would accept a co-ownership interest as collateral for a loan. [See Zieve, Brodnax & Steele, LLP v. Dhindsa (2020) 49 CA5th 27, 32-33, 262 CR3d 567, 570—lender's lien only encumbered 75% of property because prior attempt to convey minor's 25% interest was null and void (¶ 6:535.13a)]

Nevertheless, the co-owners may still wish to prohibit any party from voluntarily encumbering an interest. Otherwise, upon a foreclosure, the remaining co-owners would share ownership with a new, unanticipated co-owner (i.e., the lender or some other party who purchases the foreclosed interest at the foreclosure sale).

In any event, a lien encumbering only a portion of real property does not divest co-owners of their right to foreclosure sale proceeds in proportion to their ownership interests (Civ.C. § 2924k; ¶ 6:535.13 ff.). [See Zieve, Brodnax & Steele, LLP v. Dhindsa, supra, 49 CA5th at 40-41, 262 CR3d at 576-577—lender whose junior lien encumbered only 75% of property could not divest co-owner's right to 25% of surplus sale proceeds]

f. [12:33] Control issues: One of the most difficult aspects of a co-ownership relationship concerns the decision-making process regarding ownership, usage and operation of the property and how those decisions will be implemented. Property control issues can range from the very important (e.g., who will decide when the property will be rented should the co-owners not be using it, how much rent to charge, who to rent to, etc.) to seemingly far less significant matters (e.g., how the residence will be furnished).

Even the simplest of management issues can open the door to a multitude of potential problems—for example: Who decides when the roof needs to be replaced? Who decides what contractor will be hired to replace the roof? Who will be responsible for hiring the contractor, reviewing the contractor's work and getting the contractor paid?

There are basically two ways of solving such “micro-problems”:

• [12:33.1] One approach is simply to designate one or more of the co-owners as having the appropriate decision-making authority, to be exercised in that co-owner's discretion.

• [12:33.2] Alternatively, the parties might choose not to deal with minor property management/control issues in the co-ownership agreement, preferring instead to work out any differences as they arise. If they cannot reach a consensus of decision as the issues arise, the agreement should provide for a fast, easy method to dissolve the co-ownership arrangement and dispose of the property (see ¶ 12:37 ff.).

g. [12:34] Usage issues: Unless the parties are cohabitating, the co-ownership agreement should spell out their respective usage rights. For example:

• When (if at all) does each owner have the right to exclusive use of the property?

• If the co-owners want to occupy the property at the same time, can their usage be physically divided up during the joint occupancy periods?

• Will the co-owners permit subletting or otherwise allow third persons to use the property? (For example, can a co-owner's friends use the property? Will the parties allow boarders or roommates?)

h. [12:35] Co-owner liability; indemnifications: Absent an agency relationship between them (e.g., a partnership), co-owners do not have inherent legal authority to bind each other. However, if they intend in any way to be bound by a co-owner's acts, their agreement should delineate the specific circumstances under which the liability of one of them with regard to the property could be imputed to all.

In any event, it is prudent to include an indemnification provision whereby any culpable party will be obligated to account to the other co-owners for the party's wrongful acts. This step gives the innocent co-owners some protection in the event a third party successfully pursues a suit against all co-owners on the premise they were acting as each other's agents.

i. [12:36] Default remedies: It might be beneficial to include a provision specifying co-owner rights against another co-owner who defaults on their obligations (e.g., failure to make a required mortgage, utility or other payment). The parties might agree to assess “late charges” for payment defaults. [See Jones v. Wagner (2001) 90 CA4th 466, 472-473, 108 CR2d 669, 674—partnership property lost by lender foreclosure where co-owner failed to make timely mortgage payments and no provision in partnership agreement requiring other co-owner to be responsible for such payments]

As a practical matter, however, once residential co-owners are fighting with each other, it is more likely they will want to sever their relationship. Thus, the more important issue is how the parties can unwind their co-ownership arrangement once one party is in default or they have otherwise come to a parting of the ways (see ¶ 12:37 ff.).

j. [12:37] Termination of relationship/sale of property: Too often, co-owners neglect to consider how and when they ultimately will terminate their co-ownership relationship and dispose of the property. However, this is probably the most important issue in a co-ownership agreement. Early on, the parties need to agree upon an “exit strategy” to deal with situations when they have divergent opinions about selling the property and/or their relationship is not working out.

In the absence of a co-ownership agreement, the Partition of Real Property Act (formerly known as the Uniform Partition of Heirs Property Act (UPHPA)) applies to any real property held in tenancy in common “where there is no agreement in a record binding all the cotenants which governs the partition of the property.” [See CCP § 874.311 et seq. (preserving partitioning party's right to sell their interest while ensuring non-partitioning co-tenants can prevent a forced sale by requiring notice, appraisals (when directed by court), and the right of first refusal)]

Comment: The Partition of Real Property Act removed the UPHPA's previous restriction that limited the subject property to “heirs property.”

➪ [12:38] PRACTICE POINTER: It is essential that the agreement incorporate a definite and efficient method for bringing finality to the relationship and ultimately disposing of the property; indeed, a well-drafted agreement will cover this issue extensively. While the parties could, of course, sue for partition of the property—i.e., a court-ordered sale (CCP § 872.010 et seq.)—litigation in the context of a residential co-ownership arrangement should always be a last resort. [See LEG Investments v. Boxler (2010) 183 CA4th 484, 493, 107 CR3d 519, 525—co-owners of property have absolute right to partition unless barred by valid contractual waiver, either express or implied]

And even if a partition suit ultimately is unavoidable, the court first must resolve each co-owner's respective interest in the subject property before it can order a sale. [Summers v. Sup.Ct. (Tan) (2018) 24 CA5th 138, 144, 234 CR3d 63, 67]

Thus, a well-drafted agreement that expressly addresses this issue can save time and assist in lowering litigation costs.

(1) [12:39] Termination approaches: There are several approaches to dealing with termination of the relationship (and/or the disposition of a co-owner's interest). Some of the more common methods are as follows:

(a) [12:40] Right of first refusal: The parties might agree that, in the event a co-owner wishes to sell an interest, the others will have a preemptive right to purchase that interest (at some agreed-upon price, at the appraised value, or at the price offered by an outside party). [See LEG Investments v. Boxler, supra—contract giving first refusal rights to co-owners implies an agreement not to bring partition action in lieu of sale to them]

If the other co-owner(s) do not wish to buy, either (i) the selling co-owner will be permitted to sell to an outside party; or (ii) the entire property will be sold and the co-ownership relationship terminated. Indeed, a right of first refusal merely modifies a co-owner's absolute statutory right to partition; it does not permanently waive the right. [See LEG Investments v. Boxler (2010) 183 CA4th 484, 493-497, 107 CR3d 519, 525-528—where nonselling owners declined to exercise their right to purchase within reasonable period of time after selling owner first offered to sell on terms as favorable as those offered by prospective buyer, selling owner could proceed with partition; Schwartz v. Shapiro (1964) 229 CA2d 238, 253, 40 CR 189, 199—selling owner required to first offer his interest to co-owner before filing partition action]

Cross-refer: Preemptive purchase rights (options, rights of first refusal, etc.) are discussed in detail in Ch. 8.

(b) [12:41] Sale of property: Another method for triggering dissolution of the co-ownership relationship is to provide that, upon the election of any co-owner (or a certain percentage of co-owners), the property will be listed for sale and sold. However, there should be some predetermined mechanism for selecting the broker and settling on a listing price. It may be necessary for the parties to agree that some type of appraisal will be conducted (even if an informal appraisal by a local real estate broker) and an offer will be accepted if it is, for example, equal to or greater than 90% of the listing price.

(c) [12:42] Co-owner's death: The agreement should provide some methodology for buying out a deceased co-owner's interest or, if the parties prefer, selling the property upon a co-owner's death and thereby terminating the relationship.

[12:42.1 - 12:42.4] Reserved.

(2) [12:42.5] Accounting: Where co-owners have structured their arrangement under a partnership agreement, the agreement commonly (and should) provide for an "accounting" of partnership moneys upon termination of the partnership. [See Jones v. Wagner (2001) 90 CA4th 466, 469, 108 CR2d 669, 671]

k. [12:43] Dispute resolution by arbitration/mediation: An agreed-upon methodology for expedited resolution of co-ownership disputes is advisable. As a general rule, arbitration and/or mediation is preferable to litigation because any dispute between residential co-owners will probably involve a limited set of facts, with limited discovery and fairly simple legal issues. These sorts of cases are more appropriate for speedy and relatively inexpensive resolution than costly and time-consuming litigation. (See ¶ 4:485 ff. re advantages and disadvantages of arbitration/mediation vs. litigation.)

4. [12:44] Recording Memorandum of Agreement: It is advisable for the parties to record a memorandum of their co-ownership agreement with the county recorder of the county in which the property is located (Civ.C. § 1169). This step will give third parties constructive notice of any transfer or encumbrance restrictions in the co-ownership agreement, preventing "BFP" status and thus ensuring no third party will be able to acquire an interest in the property in derogation of the co-ownership agreement. [See Civ.C. § 1218]

• FORM: Memorandum of Co-Ownership Agreement, see Form 12:B.

➪ [12:45] PRACTICE POINTER: The parties could, of course, record their entire co-ownership agreement; but that will make all aspects of the agreement a matter of public record. In most cases, provisions regarding rights of usage, expense and upkeep obligations, and other management and control issues, will not be significant vis-à-vis potential third party BFPs (¶ 12:44); and, in fact, the parties will want to keep those provisions confidential. For "notice" purposes, the important provisions of a co-ownership agreement are those affecting the parties' rights to transfer or encumber their respective interests. Consequently, it is usually most appropriate to record only a memorandum of the agreement, which sets forth the pertinent transfer restrictions but keeps most other details about the co-ownership arrangement out of the public records. [See 87 Ops.Cal.Atty.Gen. 87—recording memorandum of lease provides constructive notice of parties' leasehold interest in property and avoids expense of recording entire agreement and disclosure of confidential and/or proprietary information in lease]

Chapter 12. Residential Co-Ownership Agreements

Forms

[Form 12:A] Residential Co-Ownership Agreement

The following is a basic form Co-ownership Agreement for residential property. This form will require substantial modification depending on many factors, including: the number of co-owners; whether the co-owners intend to occupy the residence (or simply rent it out as investment property); whether the co-owners will be cohabitating; and a host of other issues which must be carefully considered.

CO-OWNERSHIP AGREEMENT

This CO-OWNERSHIP AGREEMENT, (this "Agreement") is made and entered into as of the ___ day of ___________, ___, by and between ___________ ("Smith"), ___________ ("Doe") and ___________ ("Jones").

1. Purpose. The purpose of this Agreement is to set forth the agreement of Smith, Doe and Jones (sometimes hereinafter collectively referred to as "Co-owners" or, individually, as "Co-owner") with respect to their interest, rights and remedies with respect to that certain real property, improvements thereon and furnishings and fixtures therein located at _____Street, _____, California (more particularly described on Exhibit "A" attached hereto and incorporated herein and hereinafter referred to as the "Property"). [If the Co-owners will be entitled to separately own specific items of furniture, the Agreement should specify the ownership thereof.]

2. Term of Agreement.

2.1. The term of this Agreement shall commence on the date hereof and shall continue until the sooner of:

2.1.1. The sale of the Property by the Co-owners;

2.1.2. _____ (___) years from the date hereof;

2.1.3. The written vote by a majority in numbers of the Co-Owners to terminate this Agreement.

[The Co-Owners should consider whether they will permit termination of the Co-Ownership Agreement (and sale of the Property) upon the vote of any one of the Co-Owners.]

3. Contributions.

3.1. Initial Contribution. The initial capital contribution of each Co-owner shall be ___________ Dollars ($________), to be contributed on or before ___________, ___.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

3.2. Additional Contributions. Each Co-owner shall make such additional capital contributions as may be necessary to maintain, own, operate and manage the Property.

[It may be necessary to spell out the methodology for making initial and additional contributions. For example, the Co-owners might want to designate one Co-owner to collect the additional contributions from everyone and make the necessary payments. For example, the Co-owners will have ongoing obligations to pay their respective share of mortgage payments, real estate taxes, insurance, gardening and other regularly accruing expenses. It may be wise to have the Co-owners contribute an initial reserve and thereafter replenish it on an annual basis.]

3.3. Interest. No interest shall be paid to any Co-owner on account of any initial or additional capital contributions. No Co-owner shall withdraw any capital theretofore contributed. Should any Co-owner fail to make any contribution as required pursuant to this Agreement, such amount shall thereafter be due, together with interest thereon at the rate of ___________ percent (____%) per annum from the date such contribution was required to be made. [In addition, the Co-owners may wish to impose a "late charge" (for example, 5%) on any contribution which is not paid by a Co-owner when required.]

4. Bank Accounts. All monies contributed by the Co-owners shall be deposited in a bank account in the name of all Co-owners. Withdrawals from such account and checks upon such account may be signed by Smith, alone, if such checks are for ___________ Dollars ($________) or less, but must be signed by any two (2) Co-owners if such checks are for in excess of ___ Dollars ($________).

5. Accounting and Management.

5.1. Smith is designated to maintain the books and records for the Property, and such records shall be open at all reasonable times to Co-owners for examination. The cost of maintaining such books shall be an expense of all Co-owners. Within thirty (30) days after the end of each calendar year, Smith shall provide a written report of income and expenses for the Property to each Co-owner.

5.2. Smith shall supervise the day-to-day operations of the Property; provided, however, that all decisions of a substantial or material nature shall require the approval of a majority in numbers of the Co-owners. Each Co-owner shall be required to devote such time to the ownership and operation of the Property as may be reasonably required. [The phrase "decisions of a substantial or material nature," as used above, may be considered too ambiguous by the Co-owners. If so, the Co-owners may want to list the kinds of decisions which require the approval of a majority of the Co-owners; e.g., the terms and conditions upon which the Property will be leased, etc.]

5.3. Except as specifically provided in this Agreement, no Co-owner shall incur any debt or obligation which would affect the Property or any other Co-owner's Ownership Interest (defined below), except for emergency repairs not exceeding a cost of ___ Dollars ($________). Notwithstanding the foregoing, Smith may incur non-emergency repair, maintenance and related costs in an amount not exceeding ___________ Dollars ($________) in any one (1) calendar month. Any expense advanced by a Co-owner pursuant to this Agreement ("Advance"), shall be repaid to such Co-owner as soon as cash flow from the Property permits. Should any Co-owner violate the terms of this Paragraph 5.3, such Co-owner shall indemnify and hold each and all of the other Co-owners harmless from and against any loss, claim or liability (including but not liability to attorneys' fees) arising out of or relating to such violation of this Paragraph 5.3.

5.4. All rental income and other income or profits earned, accrued or acquired by virtue of ownership of the Property shall be profits of the Co-owners, prorata, in accordance with their respective Ownership Interest, irrespective of which Co-owner procured any given renter for, or income in respect of, the Property.

6. Ownership Interests.

The Co-owners shall own the Property as tenants-in-common, each holding the following respective percentage interest ("Ownership Interest"): Smith: _____ percent (____%); Doe _____ percent (____%); and Jones _____ percent (____%). The net profit or net loss pertaining to the Property shall be determined in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles, consistently applied.

[If the Co-owners do not have equal Ownership Interests, consider whether any approvals by the Co-owners contemplated by the Agreement should be based on a majority in percentage Ownership Interest, instead of a majority in numbers of the Co-owners. In addition, if any one Co-owner consists of two people (such as a married couple or owners who own their Ownership Interest as joint tenants or tenants-in-common among themselves), specify which of the individuals is authorized to speak on behalf of and bind the multiple joint owners.]

7. Assignment of Ownership Interests; Transfer on Death.

7.1. Other than as specifically provided in this Agreement, no Co-owner shall voluntarily, involuntarily or by operation of law, assign, encumber, sell or otherwise transfer or hypothecate its Ownership Interest, or any part thereof, nor enter into any agreement as a result of which any person, firm or corporation may own an interest in the Property, except upon the prior written consent of all of the other Co-owners.

7.2. In the event that the transfer of a Co-owner's Ownership Interest is permitted under this Agreement, the transferee shall be required to assume in writing all of the terms, covenants, conditions and obligations of the transferor contained in this Agreement. Any attempt to transfer by a Co-owner in violation of this Paragraph 7 shall be deemed void and shall be deemed to allow the transferee to take only the right of the transferor Co-owner to share in profits from the Property (in accordance with such Co-owner's Ownership Interest), but such transferee shall not acquire any right or legal interest in the Property nor the right to exercise any power granted to a Co-owner under this Agreement.

7.3. The death of any Co-owner ("Deceased Co-owner") shall not terminate this Agreement. In the event of the death of a Co-owner, the remaining Co-owners shall have the choice of either approving and accepting the heir (or heirs) of the Deceased Co-owner as a substitute Co-owner for such Deceased Co-owner. Either or both of the remaining Co-owners, in his/her or their sole and absolute discretion, may disapprove of such heir(s) and refuse to accept such heir(s) as a substitute Co-owner. If the remaining Co-owners do not disapprove of the heir(s), such heir(s) shall be the successor-in-interest to the Deceased Co-owners Ownership Interest and such heir(s) shall execute this Agreement. If either or both of the remaining Co-owners disapprove of the said heir(s), both remaining Co-owners shall be required to purchase the Ownership Interest of the Deceased Co-owner in accordance with this Paragraph 7.3. The remaining Co-owners shall purchase the Deceased Co-owner's Ownership Interest, prorata, in accordance with their respective Ownership Interest in the Property. Accordingly, assuming that each Co-owner owns a one-third (33.33%) Ownership Interest, upon the death of the Deceased Co-owner, the two remaining Co-owners shall each pay 50% of the Purchase Price for the Deceased Co-owner's 33.33% Ownership Interest in the Property. The method for determining the purchase price ("Purchase Price") of the Deceased Co-owner's Ownership Interest shall be calculated by multiplying the Deceased Co-owner's Ownership Interest by the value of the Property. The value of the Property for purposes of this Paragraph 7.3 shall be that which the remaining Co-owners and the representative of the Deceased Co-owner agree upon within _____ (___) days after the death of the Deceased Co-owner. However, if the Co-owners and the representative of the Deceased Co-owner cannot agree upon the value of the Property within said time period, the value of the Property shall be deemed to be that which is determined by [at this point the Co-owners may wish to designate a local real estate brokerage firm (and an alternative firm in the event the first firm is no longer in business). However, any method of valuation is appropriate (e.g., appraisal, arbitration, etc.). Whatever method is chosen should be expedient and inexpensive.] The remaining Co-owners shall pay the Purchase Price for the Deceased Co-owner's Ownership Interest to the Deceased Co-owner's estate by means of a promissory note in the amount of the Purchase Price, bearing interest at the rate of 10% per annum, payable in ___________ (___) equal monthly installments of principal and interest. Upon the first of the aforesaid monthly payments, the Deceased Co-owner shall execute a grant deed conveying its Ownership Interest in the Property to the other Co-owners, fifty percent (50%) each, free and clear of all liens and encumbrances except current taxes (not yet due and payable) and those liens and encumbrances to which the other Co-owners have previously consented.

[The Co-owners may also want to consider making the sale of any Co-owner's Ownership Interest subject to a right of first refusal (or right of first offer) in favor of the other Co-owners. See Chapter 8, regarding rights of first refusal/first offer and sample form right of first refusal/first offer (Form 8:D)].

8. Termination of Agreement and Distribution of Proceeds.

8.1. To the extent any income from the Property in any calendar year exceeds (i) the cost of owning, maintaining and operating the Property; and (ii) a reserve in the amount of ____________ Dollars ($_________), Smith shall distribute such excess annually to the Co-owners, prorata, in accordance with their respective Ownership Interest.

8.2. This Agreement shall terminate upon any of the events described in Paragraph 2.1, above, and, except as otherwise specifically provided in this Paragraph 8, the Co-owners shall not engage in further business with respect to the Property except as may be necessary to wind up the dissolution of the co-ownership relationship between the Co-owners. Upon the happening of any of the events described in Paragraphs 2.1.2 or 2.1.3, the Co-owners shall as soon as possible thereafter proceed to list the Property for sale and thereafter consummate a sale of the Property.

8.3. When, pursuant to this Agreement, the Property is required to be sold, the Co-owners shall attempt to agree upon the following within twenty (20) days thereafter:

(i) The real estate broker who shall list the Property for sale;

(ii) The selling price at which the Property will be listed for sale; and

(iii) The purchase price (and other terms and conditions) which the Co-owners will accept for the sale of the Property.

(iv) If the Co-owners cannot agree on any of the foregoing, the same shall be determined by ____________. [The Co-owners may wish to select a specific real estate broker to make the various foregoing decisions; or defer the dispute to arbitration; or the Co-owners may wish to select one of the Co-owners as the final arbitrator. In any event, there must be an expedient methodology for getting the property listed and sold.]

8.4. Upon the sale of the Property, the affairs of the Co-owners with respect to the Property shall be wound up and liquidated. The net proceeds available to the Co-owners after the sale of the Property shall be applied in the following order of priority:

(a) To the payment of debts and liabilities pertaining to the Property, including any Advances which may have been made by any Co-owner pursuant to this Agreement.

(b) To the setting up of any reserves which may be reasonable and necessary for any contingent or unforeseen liabilities or obligations of Co-owners which relate directly to the Property. Smith shall be the party who shall determine the amount of such reserves, which shall be held in the Co-ownership bank account referred to in Paragraph 4, above. However, in no event shall any reserve be held for a period in excess of _____ (_____) months after the sale of the Property.

(c) The balance of any proceeds shall be paid out and distributed among the Co-owners in accordance with their respective Ownership Interest. In the event the proceeds of the sale of the Property consist of a promissory note, each Co-owner shall be entitled to receive that portion of each installment payment, and the final payment, in accordance with their respective Ownership Interest. Smith shall be the party who shall retain the original promissory note and shall be entitled to collect and distribute payments thereon. If the maker under the promissory note shall be in default thereof, Smith is authorized to take all steps necessary to commence and consummate non-judicial foreclosure proceedings; provided, however, that Smith shall first notify the other Co-owners of his/her intention to commence foreclosure proceedings and each Co-owner shall pay such trustee's and other fees as may be necessary to consummate the foreclosure sale. If the Co-owners are the successful bidder at the foreclosure sale, the Property shall thereafter promptly be resold in accordance with the provisions of Paragraph 8.3, above.

9. Notices.

9.1. Any and all notices of demands permitted or required to be made under this Agreement shall be in writing. Such notice shall be served either personally or by certified or registered mail. If served personally, service shall be conclusively deemed made at the time of service. If served by certified or registered mail, service shall be conclusively deemed made 48 hours after the deposit thereof in the United States mail, postage prepaid, addressed to the party whom such notice or demand is to be given, as hereinafter provided.

9.2. Any notice or demand to the Co-owners shall be given at the following addresses:

If to Jones:	____________
	____________
	____________
If to Doe:	____________
	____________
	____________
If to Smith:	____________

10. Entire Agreement. This Agreement contains the entire understanding between the Co-owners and supersedes any prior understandings and agreements between them with respect to the subject matter of this Agreement. There are no representations, agreements, arrangements or understandings, oral or written, between and among the Co-owners hereto relating to the subject matter of this Agreement which are not fully expressed herein. This Agreement may only be amended upon the written agreement of a majority in numbers of the Co-owners.

11. Binding on Successors. Except as otherwise hereinabove provided, this Agreement shall be binding upon and inure to the benefit of the Co-owners hereto, their respective heirs, administrators, successors and assigns.

12. California Law. This Agreement shall be governed by and construed in accordance with the laws of the State of California.

13. Arbitration. [An expedient arbitration method is advisable. See Chapter 4 regarding advantages of arbitration and sample arbitration provision (Form 4:1).]

14. Memorandum of Agreement. The Co-owners shall execute a Memorandum of this Agreement and cause the same to be recorded in the Office of the County Recorder of County, California, as soon as possible after execution of this Agreement.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, the parties hereto have executed this Agreement on the date first written above.

Chapter 13. Real Property Purchase and Sale Tax Concerns

Scope Note

This Chapter is intended as a summary treatment of important federal and state tax aspects of real property acquisition (Part I, ¶ 13:1 ff.), ownership and operation (Part II, ¶ 13:120 ff.) and disposition (Part III, ¶ 13:300 ff.).

Attorneys are cautioned that many tax issues require substantial expertise; thus, it is always advisable to consult specialized counsel when confronting unfamiliar tax matters.

As discussed in this Chapter, the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act ("2017 Tax Act") resulted in some substantial revisions to the tax treatment of real estate. The Treasury Department continues to provide guidance with respect to this legislation, which may alter or affect the 2017 Tax Act's impact on acquisition, ownership, operation and/or disposition of real estate.

Part I. Acquisition of Real Property

A. Pertinent Tax Issues

[13:1] Taxpayers acquiring real estate need to be concerned with the following tax issues, each of which is addressed in a separate section of this Chapter, commencing with the paragraphs set forth below:

• What is the basis of the property for income tax purposes? (¶ 13:2 ff.)

• Beginning on what date will the taxpayer be treated as the “owner” of the property? (¶ 13:45 ff.)

• Are any expenses of the acquisition deductible or a credit for income tax purposes? (¶ 13:55 ff.)

• How will the property be valued for property tax purposes? (¶ 13:65 ff.)

(1) [13:43.1] Limitation—improvement intended to induce sales
(2) [13:43.2] No allocation where developer retains full ownership/control of improvement

1. [13:2] Significance of "Basis": For income tax purposes, it is essential to establish the "basis" of property. The basis of property becomes relevant in numerous situations—most importantly, in order to calculate depreciation and compute gain or loss upon disposition of the property.

a. [13:3] Adjusted basis: Once basis is computed, the Internal Revenue Code (hereafter, "IRC" or "Code") requires numerous "adjustments" to the basis. For example, basis is increased by improvements to the property and is decreased by depreciation. [IRC § 1016(a)(1), (2)]

2. Determination of Basis

a. [13:4] Generally equivalent to cost: As a general rule, the basis of property is its cost. [IRC § 1012] However, determining the property's cost often involves several subissues:

(1) [13:5] Includes expenses of purchase (costs "capitalized"): The various costs of acquiring real property must be included in its basis; i.e., costs are "capitalized" rather than deducted as expenses (see ¶ 13:150 ff. for general discussion of capitalization vs. deductibility; and ¶ 13:158 re property acquired and improved for resale purposes).

(a) [13:5.1] Transaction costs: A taxpayer must capitalize amounts paid to facilitate the acquisition of real property—including legal, accounting, title, engineering, appraisal, recording and application fees; survey, inspection and moving costs; commissions; and compensation for the services of a qualified intermediary or other facilitator of an IRC § 1031 exchange (¶ 13:338 ff.). [Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-2(f)(1)-(2)]

Transfer taxes levied on the purchase also must be capitalized. [IRC § 164(a) (last sent.)]

(b) [13:5.2] Title defense costs: The costs incurred in defending title to property must be capitalized rather than deducted as expenses. [See Treas.Reg. § 1.212-1(k)—title defense expenses constitute part of property's cost; Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-2(e) (citing examples of capital expenditures); Wellpoint, Inc. v. Commissioner (7th Cir. 2010) 599 F3d 641, 646-648—for-profit health insurance company had to capitalize cost of defending against state's attempts to divest it of title to acquired company formerly operated on nonprofit basis]

(c) [13:6] Loan fees: The costs of obtaining a loan are also capitalized but are treated as a separate asset.

1) [13:7] Loan procurement costs: For example, loan commitment fees, appraisal fees paid to the lender, and/or fees paid to loan brokers must be capitalized. Such costs are treated as part of the cost of the loan. [See Anover Realty Corp. v. Commissioner (1960) 33 TC 671, 675]

If the loan was incurred to purchase property held in a trade or business or for investment, such costs can be amortized over the life of the loan. [Rev.Rul. 81-160, 1981-1 CB 312—loan commitment fees must be capitalized] If the loan is paid off prior to full amortization of these costs, the unamortized costs should be deductible as a loss. [IRC § 165]

2) [13:8] Interest: Prepaid interest is not deductible but must be capitalized and treated as if paid during the period to which it is applicable. [IRC § 461(g)(1)] The payment of points is treated as the payment of prepaid interest and would be deductible as interest in the year in which they are deemed to have been paid. (See ¶ 13:165 ff. on deductibility of interest.)

In the case of a purchase or improvement of a principal residence, points can be currently deducted as interest. [IRC § 461(g); see ¶ 13:58]

(2) [13:9] Options: Where the taxpayer bought an option to purchase property, and then exercised the option, the cost of the option is included in the cost of the property. However, if the option lapsed, the cost of the option is treated as a loss. If the property subject to the option would have been a capital asset (¶ 13:421 ff.), the loss on lapse of the option is a capital loss. [IRC § 1234(a)]

(3) [13:10] Purchase money debt: Normally, the basis of property includes not only cash outlays at the time of purchase but also the amount of any recourse or nonrecourse debt incurred to purchase the property. [Commissioner v. Tufts (1983) 461 US 300, 307, 103 S.Ct. 1826, 1831]

(a) [13:11] Example: T purchases Blackacre for $1,000, paying $100 down and borrowing $900. T's basis for Blackacre is $1,000, whether the $900 was borrowed from the seller or a third-party lender and regardless of whether the loan is recourse or nonrecourse.

(b) [13:12] Exception—contingent liabilities or liabilities of seller: Purchase money debt is not included in the basis of the property if liability to pay the debt is contingent.

Thus, if the taxpayer's liability depends on the occurrence of future events, such liability is not includible in basis at the time of purchase. However, when the contingent liability is ultimately paid, it must normally be capitalized and added to the basis. [See David R. Webb Co., Inc. v. Commissioner (1981) 77 TC 1134, aff'd (7th Cir. 1983) 708 F2d 1254, 1256—purchasing corporation that pays selling corporation's pension liability must treat pension liability as part of purchase price of property; Illinois Tool Works Inc. & Subsidiaries v. Commissioner (7th Cir. 2004) 355 F3d 997, 1002-1003—purchasing corporation's payment of judgment based on patent infringement claim brought against selling corporation and assumed as contingent liability was capital expenditure treated as part of cost basis of acquired property even if judgment exceeded parties' expectations]

(c) [13:13] Exception—property worth less than amount of debt: Where property is subject to a nonrecourse debt and the property is worth less than the amount of the debt, the taxpayer may not include the entire debt in basis. However, the Code does not contain any specific provision regarding the computation of basis in this situation, and courts are presently divided on the issue. Moreover, the IRS often argues that in such situation the taxpayer really does not own the property at all and therefore seeks to deny any tax benefits. [See Cowan, "Is Any Part of a Nonrecourse Mortgage Greatly Exceeding FMV Includable in Basis?" (Nov. 1992) 77 J. of Tax. 260; Toth, "Nonrecourse Debt in Excess of Fair Market Value and Disappearing Basis: The Partnership Paradox" (1996) 50 Tax Lwyr. 37]

• [13:13.1] Example: Blackacre is worth about $1,000 and is subject to an existing debt of $1,200. T purchases the property subject to this debt. In T's hands, the $1,200 obligation is a nonrecourse debt. Assuming it is found that T actually owned the property for tax purposes, Blackacre's basis in T's hands is not $1,200. The basis might be $0 or it might be $1,000.

The apparent majority view is that when the debt is nonrecourse in nature and exceeds a reasonable estimate of fair market value, the entire debt is disregarded in calculating basis; thus, in this example, the basis is $0. [See Bergstrom v. United States (Fed.Cl. 1996) 37 Fed.Cl. 164, 168-169—zero basis (classifying result as "majority rule"); Estate of Franklin v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1976) 544 F2d 1045, 1048 (zero basis); compare Pleasant Summit Land Corp. v. Commissioner (3rd Cir. 1988) 863 F2d 263, 278—mortgage included in basis to extent of property's value; Regents Park Partners v. Commissioner, TC Memo 1992-336 (same)]

(d) [13:14] Compare—improvements paid by promissory note: IRC § 1016 allows subsequent adjustments to basis "for expenditures, receipts, losses, or other items properly chargeable to capital account …" (IRC § 1016(a)(1)). However, one district court held that a cash basis taxpayer who pays for subsequent improvements with a promissory note may not increase their basis until the note is paid off. [See Owen v. United States (WD TN 1998) 34 F.Supp.2d 1071, 1079-1080]

Rationale: The "mere incurring of a liability" is not an "expenditure" under § 1016. [Owen v. United States, supra, 34 F.Supp.2d at 1079-1080]

1) [13:14a] Comment: The liability incurred in Owen (¶ 13:14) involved an addition to the existing building and thus should have been characterized as a nondeductible capital expenditure rather than a current "expense." Because a capital expenditure generally increases basis regardless of the taxpayer's method of accounting or whether the taxpayer has actually paid for it (see ¶ 13:10), Owen is not likely to be followed. [See Geier, "1999 Award For Worst Opinion In A Tax Case" (June 14, 1999) 83 Tax Notes 1642]

(4) [13:14.1] Property subject to lease: Purchased or inherited property may be subject to a lease that is favorable to the lessor. However, no separate basis can be allocated to the premium lease and no separate amortization is permitted. [IRC § 167(c)(2); see ¶ 13:138.7]

b. [13:15] Special rules—basis established other than by cost: Despite the general "cost" rule, ¶ 13:4 ff., there are several situations where special tax provisions control the computation of basis:

(1) [13:16] Transfers between spouses or incident to divorce: When property is transferred between spouses or incident to marriage dissolution, the transferor recognizes no gain or loss on the transfer and the transferee's basis for the property is the same as that of the transferor … regardless of whether the taxpayer pays for the property. [IRC § 1041(b)(2); Rev. & Tax.C. § 18031, ¶ 13:385 ff.]

(a) [13:17] Example: In connection with marriage dissolution, H acquires W's community property interest in Blackacre by paying W $4,000. H and W previously had a basis of $100 for Blackacre. W has no gain on the transfer and H's basis for Blackacre remains $100. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1041-1T, A-11]

(b) [13:17.1] Same-sex married couples included: On June 26, 2015, the U.S. Supreme Court declared marriage a fundamental right inherent in the liberty of the person. The Court further concluded, under the Fourteenth Amendment

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Due Process and Equal Protection Clauses, same-sex couples may not be deprived of that fundamental right and that liberty. Accordingly, every state must license a marriage between two people of the same sex and recognize lawful same-sex marriages performed in other states. [Obergefell v. Hodges (2015) 576 US 644, 675, 680-681, 135 S.Ct. 2584, 2604-2605, 2607-2608; see also United States v. Windsor (2013) 570 US 744, 769-775, 133 S.Ct. 2675, 2693-2696 (striking down as unconstitutional that portion of the Defense of Marriage Act (DOMA) that prohibited federal recognition of same-sex married couples); Treas.Reg. § 301.7701-18(b)(1) (recognizing all lawfully married same-sex couples regardless of domicile)]

As a result of the foregoing, parties to any lawfully contracted same-sex marriage, regardless where it was entered into, are entitled to all the same benefits afforded heterosexual married couples (including IRC § 1041 nonrecognition).

(c) [13:17.2] Compare—transfers between domestic partners and cohabitants under federal law: Neither Obergefell nor Windsor (¶ 13:17.1) changed the law regarding domestic partners and other nonmarital cohabitants. Thus, the special IRC § 1041 nonrecognition rule (¶ 13:16) remains inapplicable to them under federal law. Dividing property between domestic partners following dissolution of their relationship, and between co-habitants when resolving Marvin claims, should continue to result in a taxable transaction to the transferor and a basis to the transferee equal to the fair market value of the property at the time of transfer.

1) [13:17.3] Transfers between domestic partners under state law distinguished: Registered domestic partners have the rights of spouses for California tax law purposes. Thus, transfers arising from dissolution of a registered domestic partnership are tax-free for state income tax purposes; the transferor does not recognize gain or loss and the transferee's basis remains the same. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 62(p)]

Cross-refer: For a more detailed treatment of the tax considerations affecting domestic partnerships and nonmarital cohabitants, see Hogoboom & King, Cal. Prac. Guide: Family Law (TRG), Ch. 20.

[13:17.4 - 13:17.5] Reserved.

(2) [13:18] Property acquired by gift: Where the property is acquired by gift, the donee's basis is the same as the donor's adjusted basis. [IRC § 1015(a)]

(a) [13:19] Exception—basis exceeding value (donee's "split basis"): If the property is worth less at the time of the gift than the donor's basis, the donee has a "split basis." For purposes of determining gain, the donee's basis is the same as the donor's. But for purposes of determining loss, the donee's basis is the donor's basis, or the value at the date of the gift, whichever is lower. [IRC § 1015(a); Treas.Reg. § 1.1015-1(a)]

• [13:20] Example: F gave Blackacre to D. F's adjusted basis was $1,000. At the date of the gift, Blackacre was worth $400. D's basis for determining gain is $1,000, but her basis for determining loss is $400. If D sells Blackacre for $250, she has neither gain nor loss.

Comment: In this scenario, F should have sold Blackacre and given D the cash proceeds; this would have preserved F's $600 loss.

(b) [13:21] Gift tax adjustment: The donee may increase the basis of the property by a percentage of gift tax paid by the donor at the time of the transfer equivalent to the net appreciation in value of the property divided by the amount of the gift. But this adjustment may not increase the basis of the property beyond its fair market value. [IRC § 1015(d)]

• [13:21.1] Example: F gives D Blackacre and pays a gift tax of $100,000. F's basis for Blackacre was $200,000. At the time of the gift, Blackacre was worth $800,000. The net appreciation in the gift was $600,000. Consequently, D may add 75% ($600,000/$800,000) of $100,000 (or $75,000) to her basis. Her basis is now $175,000.

(3) [13:22] Inherited property: In 2010, the federal estate tax lapsed and the basis for inherited property during that year was carried over from the decedent to the person inheriting it, with a series of complicated adjustments. At the end of 2010, Congress passed the Tax Relief, Unemployment Insurance Reauthorization and Job Creation Act ("2010 Tax Act") that, among other things, effectively restored the old rule—i.e., the basis of inherited property is the fair market value at the date of death for persons dying in 2011 and later years. (Special rules apply for decedents who died in 2010; see ¶ 13:28 ff.). In addition, the estate tax was made subject to a higher exemption ($5,000,000, with adjustments for inflation) and lower flat tax rate (35%) than existed in 2009 and earlier years. [Pub.L. 111-312]

Effective January 2, 2013, the 2010 changes were made permanent by the American Taxpayer Relief Act of 2012, and the flat tax rate was raised from 35% to 40%. [Pub.L. 112-240]

Under the 2017 Tax Act, the estate tax exemption was increased to $10 million, with adjustments for inflation annually. [Pub.L. 115-97]

(a) [13:23] Date of death market value: In the case of decedents who die on or after January 1, 2011, or who died on or before December 31, 2009, the basis of inherited property is the fair market value at the date of death. In other words, property that appreciated in value in the hands of the decedent receives a stepped-up basis. On the other hand, property that declined in value in the decedent's hands receives a stepped-down basis. [IRC § 1014(a), (b)]

(For decedents who died in 2010, see ¶ 13:28 ff.)

(b) [13:23.1] Rules used to compute basis of inherited property: The following rules apply to determine the basis of property that passes by reason of death:

1) [13:24] Estate tax alternate valuation date: If, for estate tax purposes, the property was valued on the alternate valuation date (six months after death), that value becomes the property's basis for income tax purposes. [IRC §§ 1014(a)(2), 2032]

Cross-refer: For a detailed discussion of the federal estate tax, see Ross & Cohen, Cal. Prac. Guide: Probate (TRG), Ch. 10.

2) [13:25] Community Property: If the property was community property of the decedent and a surviving spouse, both halves of the community receive a basis equal to the value at date of death (or alternate valuation date). [IRC § 1014(b)(6); see Jurinski, "Income Taxation and State Community Property Laws—Part I" (2015) 42 J. Real Est. Tax. 87; Jurinski, "Income Taxation and State Community Property Laws—Part II" (2015) 42 J. Real Est. Tax. 138]

a) [13:25.1] Example: H and W own Blackacre, an unimproved parcel purchased for $100 and held as community property. At the time of H's death, Blackacre is worth $1,000. H's community one-half of Blackacre was bequeathed to D. Thus, D's basis for her inherited interest is $500. W's basis for her retained interest in Blackacre is now $500.

b) [13:25.2] Compare—domestic partners under federal law: As noted, federal law does not treat domestic partners as "spouses" (see ¶ 13:17.2). Consequently, IRC § 1014(b)(6) should not apply to the community property of a registered domestic partnership. (See further discussion in Hogoboom & King, Cal. Prac. Guide: Family Law (TRG), Ch. 20.)

c) [13:25.3] Compare—domestic partners under state law: Registered domestic partners have the rights of spouses under California law, including community property rights (Fam.C. § 297.5). Thus, both halves of their community property receive a basis equal to the value at date of death of the first such domestic partner for state tax law purposes.

[13:25.4] Reserved.

3) [13:25.5] Community property with right of survivorship: Community property may be held as "community property with right of survivorship." The property must be expressly declared to be such in the transfer instrument or title document and must be "accepted in writing on the face of the document" by a statement signed or initialed by the spouses (or registered domestic partners, Fam.C. § 297.5(a)). [Civ.C. § 682.1; see ¶ 4:177 ff.]

Although it shares the survivorship feature of joint tenancy property (¶ 13:26 ff.), as between spouses (but not domestic partners), community property with right of survivorship should be considered community property for tax purposes, both halves thus receiving a stepped-up basis on the death of the first spouse. However, there is some risk the IRS might challenge that treatment; until a published ruling clarifies the matter, counsel should proceed with caution in advising clients in this area. [See Rev.Rul. 87-98, 1987-2 CB 207—joint tenancy property declared "community property" in spouses' wills treated as community property for purposes of computing basis; Arthur Andrews, "Community Property With Right of Survivorship: Uneasy Lies the Head that Wears a Crown of Surviving Spouse for Federal Income Tax Basis Purposes" (1998) 17 Va. Tax Rev. 577]

4) [13:26] Joint tenancy property: When a joint tenant dies, their interest in the property passes to the surviving joint tenant by right of survivorship. The survivor's basis in the inherited part of the property depends on the amount that was includible in the decedent's estate for estate tax purposes. The survivor's basis will be the same whether or not the decedent actually paid estate tax or even filed a return. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1014(b)(2); see Harris, "Determining the Survivor's Tax Basis in Jointly Held Property" (1995) 24 Real Est. L.J. 45]

a) [13:26.1] Married joint tenants: If the decedent and survivor were married (and are the only joint tenants), half the value of the property at the date of death is included in the decedent's estate. That value becomes the basis for the half of the property inherited by the surviving spouse. The same rule applies to tenancy by the entirety property (a form of ownership between spouses not recognized in California). [IRC § 2040(b)]

But property transferred by decedent to their surviving spouse is not subject to estate tax. [IRC § 2056(a)]

1/ [13:26.2] Compare—community property: Note the distinction from how community property is treated: As noted at ¶ 13:25, both halves of a married couple's community property receive a new basis upon the first spouse's death, whereas only the decedent's half receives a new basis in the case of joint tenancy property. Consequently, spouses enjoy a substantial tax advantage in holding appreciated property as community property rather than in joint tenancy. (Presumably, property held by spouses as "community property with right of survivorship" will be treated for tax purposes as community property, not as joint tenancy, but counsel should take account of the risk of an IRS challenge; see ¶ 13:25.5.)

Whether property held in joint tenancy actually is community property (e.g., because it was effectively transmuted) is governed by state law. [Estate of Young v. Commissioner (1998) 110 TC 297, 300—no transmutation to community property under Calif. law absent Fam.C. § 852 written declaration; see also Rev.Rul.87-98, 1987-2 CB 207—joint tenancy property transmuted to community by spouses' wills treated as community property for federal tax purposes]

b) [13:26.3] Unmarried joint tenants: If the decedent and survivor were not married, the amount included in the decedent's estate depends on the percentage of the total consideration for the purchase price (downpayment plus principal payments on the mortgage) and improvements contributed by the decedent.

If the decedent contributed 75% of the cost of the property plus improvements (and if the survivor contributed the remaining 25% from their own money), 75% of the property's value is included in the decedent's estate. That 75% becomes the basis for the inherited portion of the property in the survivor's hands. The survivor has a cost basis for the portion of the property not inherited from the decedent. [IRC § 2040(a)]

• [13:26.4] Example: A and B were not married and owned Blackacre in joint tenancy when A died. Blackacre was then worth $200,000. A and B had each contributed half of Blackacre's $20,000 purchase price. $100,000 is included in A's estate. B's basis for Blackacre is $110,000—$10,000 for B's half, $100,000 for A's half.

5) [13:27] Income in respect of a decedent (IRD): Certain items, referred to as "income in respect of a decedent" (or IRD), do not receive a new basis at death. These are items on which income was earned at the time of death but not actually recognized for tax purposes under the decedent's accounting method. [IRC § 691(a); see also Ross & Cohen, Cal. Prac. Guide: Probate (TRG), Ch. 10]

For example, in the case of real property, if the property was in escrow but escrow had not closed at the time of the owner's death, the property would not receive a new basis. Consequently, the gain on sale would be taxable to the decedent's estate, or to a legatee who receives the proceeds if escrow closes after probate is completed. [IRC § 691(a); see also Ross & Cohen, Cal. Prac. Guide: Probate (TRG), Ch. 10]

6) [13:27.1] Property given to decedent: If the legatee of property gave it to the decedent within one year of the decedent's death, then inherited the same property from the decedent, the legatee's basis is the same as the decedent's adjusted basis prior to death. [IRC § 1014(e)]

(c) [13:28] Special rules for deaths in 2010: As discussed, the federal estate tax lapsed during 2010 and the basis for inherited property that year was carried over from decedent to the person inheriting it, with a series of complicated adjustments (¶ 13:22). However, at the end of 2010, Congress passed the Tax Relief, Unemployment Insurance Reauthorization and Job Creation Act ("2010 Tax Act") which, among other things, permits the personal representative of the estate of a decedent who died in 2010 to choose between two methods for computing the basis of inherited property (¶ 13:28.1 ff.). The election is made on IRS Form 8939.

(The 2010 Tax Act makes the fair market value at date of death the basis for property inherited from decedents who die on or after January 1, 2011, or who died on or before December 31, 2009; see ¶ 13:23 ff.)

1) [13:28.1] Electing to pay estate tax at new rates: The personal representative of the estate of a decedent who died in 2010 may choose to pay estate tax at the new rates adopted in the 2010 Tax Act. The basis of the inherited property will be determined in accordance with IRC § 1014(a)—i.e., the property receives a basis equal to the value at the date of decedent's death (¶ 13:23).

a) [13:28.2] Comment: In the majority of cases, the estate will be worth less than the $5,000,000 exemption (¶ 13:22); thus, no estate tax will be due and the election to use IRC § 1014 will produce a stepped-up basis.

[13:28.3] Reserved.

2) [13:28.4] Electing not to pay estate tax; carryover basis rules: Alternatively, the personal representative of the estate of a decedent who died in 2010 can decline to pay estate tax and the basis of assets will be carried over from the decedent to the person inheriting the property. If this carryover basis option is elected, the rules are set forth in IRC § 1022 (now repealed), as discussed at ¶ 13:28.5 ff.

a) [13:28.5] Step-down in basis for property that has declined in value: If the value of inherited property at the date of death is greater than decedent's adjusted basis, the survivor's basis will be the same as decedent's adjusted basis. On the other hand, if the value of inherited property at the date of death is less than decedent's adjusted basis, the survivor's basis is the value of the property at the date of decedent's death. Thus, the rules are essentially the same as for property received by gift (¶ 13:18 ff.). [IRC § 1022(a) (now repealed and applicable only to estates of decedents who died in 2010)]

b) [13:28.6] Tax attributes inherited: A survivor inherits the tax attributes of the inherited property. For example, if the property was depreciable and would have been subject to recapture in decedent's hands, it also is subject to recapture if sold by an heir. [See Comm. Rep. on Pub. Law 107-16; and ¶ 13:417.5 re recapture]

Presumably, if the asset would have been "dealer property" (¶ 13:422 ff.) in decedent's hands, it will remain so in the heir's hands. On the other hand, the holding period of the property also should carry over from decedent to the heir.

c) [13:28.7] Property "acquired" from a decedent: The carryover basis rules apply to "property acquired from a decedent." This term includes (i) property acquired by bequest, devise or inheritance; (ii) property acquired by decedent's estate from the decedent; and (iii) property acquired from a revocable trust established by the decedent (or a trust in which decedent reserved the power to alter or amend the trust). [IRC § 1022(e) (now repealed and applicable only to estates of decedents who died in 2010)]

d) [13:28.8] Adjustments: The basis of the inherited property is subject to complex adjustments. These adjustments apply to property "owned by the decedent" at the time of death. [IRC § 1022(d)(1) (now repealed and applicable only to estates of decedents who died in 2010)]

The first adjustment is for an "aggregate basis increase" (¶ 13:28.9); the second is a spousal adjustment for property transferred to a spouse (¶ 13:28.10).

1/ [13:28.9] Aggregate basis increase: The decedent is entitled to an "aggregate basis increase" of $1,300,000 (only $60,000 for a nonresident alien decedent). [IRC § 1022(b)(2)(B) & (3) (now repealed and applicable only to estate of decedents who died in 2010)]

However, the $1,300,000 figure (but not the $60,000 figure for nonresident alien decedents) is increased by the amount of the decedent's capital loss carryover or net operating loss carryover that, but for the decedent's death, would be carried from decedent's last taxable year to a later taxable year. It also is increased by the amount of any losses that would have been allowed under IRC § 165 if the property acquired from decedent had been sold at fair market value immediately before decedent's death. [IRC § 1022(b)(2)(C) (now repealed and applicable only to estates of decedents who died in 2010)] The latter phrase covers losses incurred in a trade or business or in any transaction entered into for profit. [IRC § 165(c)(1), (2)]

2/ [13:28.10] Property received by surviving spouse: In the case of "qualified spousal property," there is an additional basis increase of $3,000,000. [IRC § 1022(c)(2)(B) (now repealed and applicable only to estates of decedents who died in 2010)] Thus, where all of decedent's property is transferred to a spouse, the property is eligible for a basis increase of $4,300,000 (the $1,300,000 aggregate basis increase, plus $3,000,000).

"Qualified spousal property" means any interest acquired from a decedent by the decedent's surviving spouse except for a "terminable interest" (i.e., where the surviving spouse's ownership interest fails due to a lapse of time, event or contingency).

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

However, notwithstanding the terminable interest rule (above), property qualifies for a basis step up if the surviving spouse has a "qualified terminable interest," meaning that the surviving spouse is entitled to all of the property's income for life and no person has a power to appoint any part of the property to any person other than the surviving spouse. [IRC § 1022(c)(3), (4), (5) (now repealed and applicable only to estates of decedents who died in 2010)]

e) [13:28.11] Joint tenancy property: In the case of property held in joint tenancy with a surviving spouse, only the decedent's half of the property is subject to a basis increase. If the property is held in joint tenancy with a person other than the surviving spouse, the portion of the property attributable to the decedent is equal to the percentage of the purchase price furnished by the decedent. [IRC § 1022(d)(1) (now repealed and applicable only to estates of decedents who died in 2010)]

f) [13:28.12] Community property: Both the decedent's and the survivor's one-half of the community property are eligible for a basis increase. [IRC § 1022(d)(1)(B)(iv) (now repealed and applicable only to estates of decedents who died in 2010)]

[13:28.13 - 13:28.15] Reserved.

(4) Term interests

(a) [13:29] Cost basis: If a taxpayer purchases a term interest in property or in a trust (such as a life estate or a term of years), the basis of the term interest is its cost. [Bell v. Harrison (7th Cir. 1954) 212 F2d 253, 254]

(b) [13:30] Special rule for inherited or donated term interests: The basis of term interests received by gift or inheritance is determined by a "uniform basis rule" that allocates the total basis of the property (term interest plus remainder) between the holders of the various interests. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1014-5] This basis shifts between the holders of the term and remainder interests based on actuarial principles.

1) [13:31] Basis of term interest cannot be used: The holder of a term interest received by gift or inheritance is limited in the use to which this basis can be put:

• [13:32] The holder may not recover any portion of the basis by depreciation or amortization. [IRC § 273]

• [13:33] Similarly, the holder is not entitled to recover any portion of the basis if the holder sells the term interest, unless the term interest and the remainder are sold in a single transaction. [IRC § 1001(e); Treas.Reg. § 1.1001-1(f)]

(5) [13:34] Property received in nonrecognition exchange: In many situations, property is received as part of a prior transaction in which gain or loss was not recognized. For example, the taxpayer may own property that was received as part of a tax-free exchange of business or investment property (IRC § 1031 "like-kind" exchange).

In these situations, basis is determined by special statutory provisions, discussed in connection with nonrecognition transactions. See ¶ 13:304 ff.

(6) [13:35] Partnerships and corporations: Property contributed to corporations or partnerships often has a basis that is the same as in the hands of the transferor. [IRC §§ 362, 723]

In the case of a partnership, if the partnership has so elected, basis of property can be adjusted by reason of sales of partnership interests or because of certain partnership distributions. [IRC §§ 734, 743, 754]

(a) [13:35.1] Exception—contributions of loss property to corporations: For contributions of loss property to a corporation, the basis steps down to fair market value unless the parties agree instead to reduce the shareholders' basis in the stock they received. [See IRC § 362(e)(2)]

3. [13:36] Allocation of Basis: The property's purchase price is often allocated among several items.

a. [13:37] Allocation between land and building: Where land and building are acquired together, basis must be allocated between the land and building, since only the building is depreciable (¶ 13:121 ff.). [Treas.Reg. § 1.167(a)-5]

(1) [13:38] Contractual allocations not conclusive: An allocation in the purchase contract is entitled to some weight, but is not conclusive for tax purposes; however, if the contractual allocation makes a tax difference to both the seller and buyer, it is entitled to greater weight. Often, the allocation is determined by the current property tax appraisal of the property. [See Sleiman v. Commissioner (11th Cir. 1999) 187 F3d 1352, 1359-1361—contractual allocation disregarded where purchase and sale agreement determined to be "unreliable evidence" of relative value of land and buildings; 2554-58 Creston Corp.

v. Commissioner (1963) 40 TC 932, 940, fn. 5—property tax valuations often too low to be reliable as furnishing correct value of real property parcel as whole, but may be probative in determining relative value of land and buildings]

(a) [13:39] Example: Blackacre contains a small warehouse. According to the property tax valuation, the land is worth $50,000 (or 1/3 of the total) and the building is worth $100,000 (or 2/3 of the total). T purchases the land and building for $300,000. Using the proportions in the appraisal, 1/3 ($100,000) is allocated to the land and 2/3 ($200,000) to the warehouse.

(b) [13:40] Use of appraiser: The purchaser may find it worthwhile to engage an appraiser to prepare a study allocating the purchase price between land and building.

(2) [13:41] Exception—building to be demolished: Where the purchaser intends to demolish an existing building, the entire purchase price must be allocated to the land. [Treas.Reg. § 1.165-3(a)(1)]

Moreover, in the case of any other demolition, the basis of a demolished building must be added to the basis of the land; it cannot be deducted as a loss or added to the basis of the replacement building and thus depreciated. [IRC § 280B; and see generally, Grigsby, Coe & Vandenbergh, "Section 280B: Impediment to Environmental Remediation?" (July 21, 1997) 76 Tax Notes 385]

(a) [13:41.1] Modification of building distinguished: For purposes of IRC § 280B, a modification of a building is not a "demolition" if 75% of the walls and structural framework remain in place. [Rev.Proc. 95-27, 1995-1 CB 704]

(b) [13:41.2] Obsolescence distinguished: Where a building becomes worthless and is abandoned before being demolished, the taxpayer is entitled to a deduction for abnormal retirement of the building. [Treas.Reg. § 1.167(a)-8(a)(4)] This deduction may reduce the building's basis to zero.

Similarly, when a building is damaged or destroyed by a casualty (e.g., earthquake or hurricane) and is abandoned, the taxpayer must reduce the basis of the building by the amount of the deduction taken for the casualty loss (see IRC § 165(b)). Then, any remaining basis is added to the basis of the land after the building is demolished.

Thus, although a post-abandonment demolition does not provide any deduction under IRC § 280B (¶ 13:41), a taxpayer may succeed in immediately deducting the building's entire basis through the deduction for abnormal retirement or casualty loss. [See De Cou v. Commissioner (1994) 103 TC 80, 86-87—loss sustained prior to demolition as a result of building's abnormal retirement from taxpayer's business (caused by building's extraordinary obsolescence) not treated as having been sustained "on account of" demolition and thus not disallowed under § 280B; see also Raby & Raby, "Demolition Loss, or Something Else?" (Feb. 6, 2006) 110 Tax Notes 623]

b. [13:42] Allocation between parcels: If several parcels are purchased in a single transaction, the purchase price must be allocated between the parcels. As with the purchase of land and building (¶ 13:37 ff.), such allocation is determined by the respective values of the parcels.

Thus, the allocation is not based simply on the square footage of the parcels, unless the parcels are equally valuable, but must take account of their differing values. [See Vaira v. Commissioner (1969) 52 TC 986, 998 (rev'd and remanded on other grounds (3rd Cir. 1971) 444 F2d 770, 778)—"more realistic" to allocate half of basis to valuable portion of 75 acres of property condemned by state for highway use than to allocate according to acreage; and for general discussion of various allocation methods, see Williford & Sinnett, "Tax Planning for the Developer: Allocating Costs Among Land and Improvements" (2005) 103 J. of Tax. 335, 339-342]

(1) [13:42.1] Parcels subdivided from larger property: When property is acquired in a lump-sum purchase and then divided and sold off in parts, the cost basis for the entire property should generally be allocated between the several parts. [Treas.Reg. § 1.61-6(a); Gladden v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 2001) 262 F3d 851, 853]

[13:42.2 - 13:42.4] Reserved.

(2) [13:42.5] Compare—sales of appurtenant easement rights: Taxpayers sometimes purchase land with appurtenant easements and then sell the easement rights without selling the land. Where it is "impracticable or impossible" to allocate the purchase price between the land and an appurtenant easement (i.e., the easement rights cannot be described by metes and bounds or may change in the future), the taxpayer is allowed to reduce the cost basis of the property by the amount realized from sale of the easement. [Inaja Land Co., Ltd. v. Commissioner (1947) 9 TC 727, 736—no portion of payment received by taxpayer from water rights sale considered income, but full amount applied to reduce property's cost basis]

(a) [13:42.6] Example: T purchases land beside a river for $100,000. The primary use of the land is for fishing in the river. X pollutes the river and kills the fish by T's property. X pays T $65,000 as damages for the loss of T's fishing rights.

Because T cannot prove the basis for the water rights alone, the Commissioner argues that the basis is 0, resulting in a $65,000 gain to T. On appeal, the Tax Court allows T to offset the $65,000 basis against the $65,000 in damages, so that T has no gain. Accordingly, the basis for the land is reduced to $35,000. When T later sells the remaining property rights (i.e., the land and the water but without any fish) for $46,000, T has an $11,000 gain.

(b) [13:42.7] Later-acquired water rights: Where a purchaser of land pays a premium based on a realistic expectation that water rights not legally vested at the time of purchase will attach to that land in the future, the purchaser may, upon sale of the later-acquired water rights, allocate a portion of the cost basis in the land to the later sale of the water rights in an amount equal to the premium paid. [Gladden v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 2001) 262 F3d 851, 855]

On the other hand, when land is purchased with no expectation of obtaining water rights, it is improper to allocate any of the cost of the land purchase to the sale of later-acquired water rights. [Gladden v. Commissioner, supra, 262 F3d at 854]

c. [13:43] Allocation of development improvements benefiting several parcels: The cost of a common improvement incurred by a developer may, under certain circumstances, be added to the basis of the adjacent properties benefiting from the improvement. [Country Club Estates, Inc. v. Commissioner (1954) 22 TC 1283, 1293—cost of land transferred to country club added to cost of lots sold where basic purpose was to bring about construction of country club for benefit of nearby lots; see generally Williford & Sinnett, supra, 103 J. of Tax. at 342-346; and ¶ 13:158 for discussion of "uniform capitalization" rules requiring developers to capitalize rather than deduct direct and indirect costs of constructing or acquiring property for resale]

(1) [13:43.1] Limitation—improvement intended to induce sales: A developer may not allocate the cost of a common improvement to adjoining properties unless the intended purpose of incurring that cost is to induce sales of the adjoining properties. [Norwest Corp. v. Commissioner (1998) 111 TC 105, 133-134—taxpayer who constructed facility to benefit its own adjoining rental property not allowed to allocate cost of common improvement when it subsequently decided to sell its improved property; Rev.Rul. 68-478, 1968-2 CB 330—irrelevant that developer retains "tenuous rights, without practical value" to common improvement, such as contingent reversion]

(2) [13:43.2] No allocation where developer retains full ownership/control of improvement: The cost of a common improvement (such as a sewage facility) is not added to the basis of the benefited parcels where the developer retains "full ownership and control" of the improvement. [Estate of Collins v. Commissioner (1958) 31 TC 238, 256; Norwest Corp. v. Commissioner (1998) 111 TC 105, 133]

Chapter 13. Real Property
Purchase and Sale Tax Concerns

Part I. Acquisition of Real Property

C. Acquisition and Disposition Dates

1. [13:45] Significance
2. [13:46] General Rule—Ownership Determined by Date Title Passes
3. [13:47] Exception—Ownership Determined by Transfer of Incidents of Ownership
    a. [13:48] Example—land sale contract
    b. [13:49] Example—delay of title passage
    c. [13:50] Example—option to purchase/sell

1. [13:45] Significance: It is often important to know the dates on which the taxpayer will be treated as the owner of property. For example:

• A taxpayer can deduct depreciation, interest and property taxes only during the period in which the taxpayer owns the property for tax purposes (¶ 13:144).

• The taxpayer's "holding period" for purposes of qualifying for long-term capital gain treatment is measured by the acquisition and disposition dates (¶ 13:457).

• The date on which property is disposed of determines the year in which gain or loss is recognized for tax purposes (unless the gain is deferred because a nonrecognition section applies or the installment method is used). (See ¶ 13:304 ff. for discussion of nonrecognition of gain or loss; and ¶ 13:466 ff. for discussion of the installment method.)

• Similarly, the date of disposition of property starts the clock running on the seller's need to identify a replacement property for purposes of a deferred § 1031 exchange. (See ¶ 13:332 ff. for discussion of deferred exchanges.)

2. [13:46] General Rule—Ownership Determined by Date Title Passes: As a general rule, the buyer does not acquire ownership (nor does the seller dispose of ownership) when the parties execute a contract of sale or when the buyer makes payments into escrow. Instead, the date on which title passes determines the date on which acquisition and disposition of real property occurs for tax purposes. [Rev.Rul. 69-93, 1969-1 CB 139]

The passage of title depends upon execution and delivery of a deed to the property. Normally, therefore, the date escrow closes (when the deed is delivered to the buyer) establishes the date on which ownership shifts for tax purposes (see Ch. 4).

3. [13:47] Exception—Ownership Determined by Transfer of Incidents of Ownership: Ownership of property shifts for tax purposes when there is a transfer of the benefits and burdens of ownership, even though title has not yet passed. Thus, the buyer is treated as the owner if the buyer is allowed to take possession and assume the benefits and burdens of ownership.

The time at which a taxpayer has assumed the benefits and burdens of ownership is a question of fact. State law determines the nature of property rights, while federal law determines the appropriate tax treatment of those rights. [Blanche v.

Commissioner, TC Memo 2001-63; see generally, Copple, “What if the Seller Needs More Time?” (2007) 34 J. Real Est. Tax 69, 71-76]

a. [13:48] Example—land sale contract: A seller retains title to property sold under a land sale contract as security that the buyer will make the required payments. However, since the buyer has all of the burdens and benefits of ownership, the buyer is treated as the owner for tax purposes from the time the buyer is permitted to take possession of the property. [Keith v. Commissioner (2000) 115 TC 605, 610-616—“contract for deed” under Georgia law treated as completed sale; Hoven v. Commissioner (1971) 56 TC 50, 55]

b. [13:49] Example—delay of title passage: Similarly, a seller might seek to defer the date on which gain on sale is recognized by formally keeping the property in escrow even though all of the conditions for the sale have been satisfied and the buyer is entitled to possession. Case law indicates that ownership shifts to the buyer when all the conditions have been satisfied. [Merrill v. Commissioner (1963) 40 TC 66, 74-75, aff'd (9th Cir. 1964) 336 F2d 771]

c. [13:50] Example—option to purchase/sell: Generally, ownership of property does not shift when the seller grants the buyer an option to purchase or when the buyer grants the seller an option to sell. [See Williams v. Commissioner (7th Cir. 1993) 1 F3d 502, 505-507; Rev.Rul. 71-265, 1971-1 CB 223]

The same is true when the buyer is granted an option to purchase and takes possession of the property under a lease, unless the terms of the lease are such that exercise of the option is a virtual certainty. [See Haggard v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1956) 241 F2d 288; Blanche v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2001-63—conduct of taxpayers who had contract for sale of residence with option to lease prior to closing date failed to show they had “benefits and burdens of ownership” prior to closing date; Ryan v. Commissioner, TC Memo 1995-579]

Moreover, where the buyer takes possession pursuant to an “irrevocable written option,” the option itself is treated as the equivalent of an immediate sale. [Rev.Rul. 75-563, 1975-2 CB 199]

Chapter 13. Real Property Purchase and Sale Tax Concerns

Part I. Acquisition of Real Property

D. Deductions in Connection with Purchase of Property

1. [13:56] Real Property Taxes
2. [13:57] "Points"
   a. [13:58] Exception—purchase or improvement of principal residence
   b. [13:59] Points paid to refinance loan

[13:55] Expense items incurred in connection with purchasing real property normally are not deductible but must be capitalized: i.e., they are added either to the basis of the property or to the basis of the loan. See ¶ 13:5 ff.

However, there are a few special rules:

1. [13:56] Real Property Taxes: If the purchase price of real property includes reimbursement of the seller for property taxes already paid by the seller, that portion of the taxes allocable to the period after the sale occurs are treated as imposed on the buyer and may be deductible by the buyer, subject to the $10,000 cap on the aggregate amount of state property, sales and state and local income taxes deductible on federal returns (see ¶ 13:200.2). They are not capitalized as part of the cost of the property. [IRC §§ 1012, 1001(b)(2), 164(b)(6), (d)]

2. [13:57] "Points": Normally, "points" paid to the lender are not currently deductible. They must be capitalized and deducted over the period of the loan (assuming the interest is deductible; see ¶ 13:8, 13:165 ff.). [IRC § 461(g)(1)]

In most cases, the IRS permits a simple allocation of the points to each year the loan is outstanding, as opposed to the more sophisticated methods normally used to determine timing of interest deductions. [Rev.Proc. 87-15, 1987-1 CB 624; and see ¶ 13:496 ff. for discussion of original issue discount principles]

a. [13:58] Exception—purchase or improvement of principal residence: Points incurred in connection with the purchase or improvement of, and which are secured by, the taxpayer's principal residence can be deducted immediately … provided that payment of points is an established business practice in the area and the amount of points does not exceed that which is generally charged in the area. [IRC § 461(g)(2); Rev.Proc. 94-27, 1994-1 CB 613]

b. [13:59] Points paid to refinance loan: In general, points paid in connection with refinancing a loan do not qualify for immediate deduction. [Rev.Rul. 87-22, 1987-1 CB 146—if points incurred partly in connection with home improvement, partly in connection with refinance, only portion allocable to improvement is currently deductible]

However, there is case law holding that points incurred in refinancing a very short-term balloon payment purchase money loan are deductible in the year they were paid, since the refinance related so closely to purchase. [Huntsman v. Commissioner (8th Cir. 1990) 905 F2d 1182, 1185-1186]

• [13:59.1] Caveat: The IRS will not follow Huntsman outside the Eighth Circuit and the Tax Court has confined the decision to its facts. [Kelly v. Commissioner, TC Memo 1991-605]

1. [13:65] Proposition 13 Reassessment: “Proposition 13” establishes an “acquisition value” system (rather than a “current value” method) for the assessment of real property tax (i.e., a tax triggered by property ownership, as distinguished from an “excise tax,” which is imposed upon a particular use of property or the exercise of a privilege associated with property ownership, such as sale, transfer, rental, etc.; see Thomas v. City of East Palo Alto (1997) 53 CA4th 1084, 1088-1089, 62 CR2d 185, 187).

Under Prop. 13, real property is assessed at its 1975-76 full cash value (adjusted for inflation at a maximum rate of 2% per year). But if the property is purchased, newly-constructed or changes ownership after the 1975 assessment, it is reassessed at a new “base-year value” (i.e., revalued at current fair market value) as of the date of the transfer or completion of construction. [Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2(a); Rev. & Tax.C. § 110.1; Steinhart v. County of Los Angeles (2010) 47 C4th 1298, 1319, 104 CR3d 195, 213; Auerbach v. Assessment Appeals Bd. No. 1 for County of Los Angeles (2006) 39 C4th 153, 160, 45 CR3d 774, 778; see also Nordinger v. Hahn (1992) 505 US 1, 12-17, 112 S.Ct. 2326, 2333-2335 (upholding constitutionality of Prop. 13 against equal protection challenge)]

After a Prop. 13 reassessment, the property retains its new valuation until another change in ownership occurs (¶ 13:65.1).

a. [13:65.1] Assessment approaches: No property may escape assessment for real property tax purposes because of difficulty in determining its full cash value. Thus, assessors have developed three methods for determining the full cash value of real property: the sales comparison method, the cost method and the income method. “Since no one of these methods alone can be used to estimate the value of all property, the assessor, subject to requirements of fairness and uniformity, may exercise his discretion in using one or more of them.” [Exxon Mobil Corp. v. County of Santa Barbara (2001) 92 CA4th 1347, 1352, 112 CR2d 751, 755; see Olen Comm'l Realty Corp. v. County of Orange (2005) 126 CA4th 1441, 1448, 24 CR3d 609, 613 (assessor used all three valuation methods, but taxpayer only challenged application of sales comparison method); and ¶ 6:665 ff. for discussion of three methods of appraising real property]

b. [13:65.2] Correcting errors in base-year value; statute of limitations: Errors or omissions in the base-year value not involving the exercise of the assessor's judgment are correctable in any assessment year in which the error or omission is discovered. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 51.5(a); see also William Jefferson & Co., Inc. v. Orange County Assessment Appeals Bd. No. 2 (2014) 228 CA4th 1, 10, 174 CR3d 642, 647—nonjudgmental errors subject to correction include assessor's erroneous determination that change in ownership occurred, assessor's failure to set new base-year value upon change in ownership and defects of a mechanical, mathematical or clerical nature not involving judgment as to value; Little v. Los Angeles County Assessment Appeals Bds. (2007) 155 CA4th 915, 925-926, 66 CR3d 401, 407-408—nonjudgmental errors include clerical error, taxpayer's fraud, concealment and misrepresentation]

However, errors or omissions in the base-year value involving the exercise of an assessor's judgment as to value are subject to a four-year limitations period. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 51.5(b); Little v. Los Angeles County Assessment Appeals Bds., supra, 155 CA4th at 925, 66 CR3d at 408; see also William Jefferson & Co., Inc. v. Orange County Assessment Appeals Bd. No. 2, supra, 228 CA4th at 6, 10, 174 CR3d at 644, 647 (noting judgmental errors "typically" involve claim that assessor's base-year value failed to reflect property's fair market value)—lawsuit challenging base-year value assigned by assessor must be timely brought against county or city that collected tax, not local assessment appeals board]

c. [13:65.3] Assessing and taxing real property when its market value declines: Proposition 13 did not address how real property should be assessed and taxed when its market value declines due to substantial damage, destruction or other factors. To address the issue, voters passed Proposition 8, which permits a property to be reassessed and taxed based on its actual fair market value whenever that value declines to a level below the property's adjusted base-year value under Prop. 13. Thus, while there is a cap on the assessed value of property when its fair market value has appreciated, the assessed value of property remains its fair market value when that value has fallen. [Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2(b); Rev. & Tax.C. § 51(a); see also Western States Petroleum Ass'n v. Board of Equalization (2013) 57 C4th 401, 409-410, 416, 159 CR3d 702, 707, 712]

e. [13:65.5] Escape assessments: A reassessment might not be completed in the same year as the triggering event. In order to capture any value that might have been untaxed during the interim period between the triggering event and the reassessment, the county assessor can levy a retroactive assessment known as an "escape assessment." [See Rev. & Tax.C. §§ 51.5(d), 531 & 532]

f. [13:65.6] Challenging assessments; exhaustion of administrative remedies: In order to challenge a regular (¶ 13:65) or escape assessment (¶ 13:65.5), taxpayers must exhaust their administrative remedies by following a three-step statutory process: (i) file an application for assessment reduction (i.e., an "assessment appeal") with the county board of assessors (see Rev. & Tax.C. § 1603); (ii) file an administrative refund claim (see Rev. & Tax.C. § 5096 et seq.); and (iii) file a refund action in superior court (see Rev. & Tax.C. § 5140 et seq.). [See Steinhart v. County of Los Angeles (2010) 47 C4th 1298, 1307-1308, 104 CR3d 195, 202-203; LA Live Properties, LLC v. County of Los Angeles (2021) 61 CA5th 363, 371-372, 380-381, 275 CR3d 726, 730, 737-738—trial court lacked jurisdiction to review escape assessment challenge due to taxpayer's failure to apply for assessment reduction (county's failure to provide 10-day notice of proposed escape assessment did not nullify taxpayer's failure to exhaust administrative remedies)]

2. [13:66] "Change in Ownership" Triggering Reassessment—General Definition: A real property "change in ownership" for property tax reassessment purposes means (a) a transfer of a present interest in the property, (b) including the beneficial use thereof, (c) the value of which is substantially equal to the value of the fee interest. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 60; Auerbach v. Assessment Appeals Bd. No. 1 for County of Los Angeles (2006) 39 C4th 153, 161, 45 CR3d 774, 779; see also Dyanlyn Two v. County of Orange (2015) 234 CA4th 800, 809, 184 CR3d 88, 94; Ocean Avenue LLC v. County of Los Angeles (2014) 227 CA4th 344, 353, 173 CR3d 445, 452]

(For general treatment of the change in ownership provisions, see Ehrman & Flavin, "Taxing California Property"§§ 2.11-2.28 (Clark Boardman Callaghan, 4th ed. 2009, and annual supp.); 18 CCR § 462.001 et seq.)

a. [13:66.1] "Present interest" requirement: The intent behind the Rev. & Tax.C. § 60 "present interest" requirement is to protect contingent, inchoate or future transfers from "unintended change in ownership treatment." [Reilly v. City & County of San Francisco (2006) 142 CA4th 480, 492, 48 CR3d 291, 299]

b. [13:66.2] "Beneficial use" prong: Similarly, the "beneficial use" prong of the Rev. & Tax.C. § 60 change in ownership test is necessary to protect custodianships, guardianships, trusteeships, security interests and other fiduciary relationships from unintended change in ownership treatment. Thus, "the focus is on the person or entity that enjoys the benefits of the property, not upon the fiduciary that holds title to property for the benefit of another." [Reilly v. City & County of San Francisco (2006) 142 CA4th 480, 494-495, 48 CR3d 291, 301]

(1) [13:66.3] Legal owner presumed to have "beneficial use": The owner of legal title to property is presumed to be the owner of beneficial title property as well; but this presumption may be rebutted by clear and convincing evidence. [Auerbach v. Assessment Appeals Bd. No. 1 for County of Los Angeles (2006) 39 C4th 153, 163, 45 CR3d 774, 780-781]

(2) [13:66.4] Possession of property not required: The receipt of income generated by property qualifies as a "beneficial use" of the property; possession of the property is not required. [Reilly v. City & County of San Francisco (2006) 142 CA4th 480, 494-495, 48 CR3d 291, 301; see also Phelps v. Orange County Assessment Appeals Bd. No. 1 (2010) 187 CA4th 653, 662, 114 CR3d 463, 470—beneficiary who received rental income from trust property during life had "beneficial use" sufficient to trigger reassessment once beneficiary died and his interest passed to successors; ¶ 13:75]

(3) [13:66.5] Inapplicable to transfers between entities: The "beneficial use" test does not apply to transfers between business entities. A change in ownership results from these transactions because no fiduciary relationship (e.g., custodianship, guardianship, etc.) exists between the parties—i.e., no party holds title for the benefit of another. [See Fashion Valley Mall, LLC v. County of San Diego (2009) 176 CA4th 871, 881-888, 98 CR3d 327, 335-340—100% ownership change occurred when corporation transferred record title in shopping mall to limited liability company in which corporation held 50% interest (retention of economic interest in property does not equal beneficial use); and see further discussion at ¶ 13:77 ff.]

c. [13:66.10] "Value equivalence" test: Rev. & Tax.C. § 60's third prong, described as the "value equivalence" test, is intended to "find a change in ownership when the primary economic value of the land is transferred." [Reilly v. City & County of San Francisco (2006) 142 CA4th 480, 495-496, 48 CR3d 291, 301-302 (emphasis in original; internal quotes omitted)]

(1) [13:66.11] "Primary economic value": This is not simply a question of who possesses the "incidents of ownership" (i.e., the power to possess, sell or devise the property). For example, a transfer of the right to receive lifetime income generated by the property is considered a transfer of the property's "primary economic value" even though the income beneficiary does not have possession. [See Phelps v. Orange County Assessment Appeals Bd. No. 1 (2010) 187 CA4th 653, 662-663, 114 CR3d 463, 470-471—beneficiary's lifetime interest in rental income generated by trust-held shopping center deemed substantially equivalent to value of fee interest for change in ownership purposes; Reilly v. City & County of San Francisco (2006) 142 CA4th 480, 498, 48 CR3d 291, 304—beneficiary's lifetime interest in income from trust-held real property met value equivalency prong of Rev. & Tax.C. § 60]

3. [13:67] Special Rules of Inclusion and Exclusion: The Revenue & Taxation Code specifically treats numerous transactions as changes in ownership or provides for exceptions to the change in ownership provisions; but these provisions are intended to be largely illustrative of the basic rule set forth in Rev. & Tax.C. § 60 (transfer of present interest substantially equivalent to value of the fee, ¶ 13:66.10 ff.). [See Pacific Southwest Realty Co. v. County of Los Angeles (1991) 1 C4th 155, 166, 2 CR2d 536, 543; Auerbach v. Assessment Appeals Bd. No. 1 for County of Los Angeles (2006) 39 C4th 153, 161, 45 CR3d 774, 779]

a. [13:68] Long-term leases: Although a leasehold interest in real property generally is not an ownership interest in the property (Auerbach v. Assessment Appeals Bd. No. 1 for County of Los Angeles (2006) 39 C4th 153, 163, 45 CR3d 774, 780), the disposition of certain long-term leases is deemed tantamount to the transfer of a fee and thus a "change in ownership" for reassessment purposes.

The language of the lease itself is not dispositive of whether there has been a change in ownership. Rather, all of the Rev. & Tax.C. § 60 prongs (¶ 13:66) must be satisfied. [See Auerbach v. Assessment Appeals Bd. No. 1 for County of Los Angeles, supra, 39 C4th at 162, 45 CR3d at 780]

(1) [13:69] Leases for minimum 35 years: A change in ownership triggering reassessment occurs upon the creation, termination or transfer of a leasehold for a term of 35 years or more (counting renewal options). [Rev. & Tax.C. § 61(c)(1)(A)-(C); 18 CCR § 462.100(a)(1)(A); Auerbach v. Assessment Appeals Bd. No. 1 for County of Los Angeles (2006) 39 C4th 153, 164, 45 CR3d 774, 781; see also Dyanlyn Two v. County of Orange (2015) 234 CA4th 800, 812, 184 CR3d 88, 96—change in ownership occurs because transaction transfers present interest, beneficial ownership and value equivalence as required by Rev. & Tax.C. § 60 (¶ 13:66)]

(a) [13:69.1] Compare—lease extensions: Whether a lease extension triggers a change in ownership depends entirely on the duration of the original lease, not the lease's remaining term. For example, assume a lease for 35-plus years is created and the passage of time drops the lease term to under 35 years. Assume further the parties negotiate to extend the lease for another 35-plus years (so-called "over/under/over" extension). No change in ownership results. This is so because a change in ownership based upon the transfer of all three ownership elements (¶ 13:66) already occurred when the lease was originally created. [See Assessment Bd. Advisory Opn. (2009) No. 09013291; see also Dyanlyn Two v. County of Orange (2015) 234 CA4th 800, 813-814, 820, 184 CR3d 88, 97-98, 102 (rejecting Assessor's determination that lease extension constituted sham transaction designed to avoid reassessment)—no change in ownership following "over/under/over" lease extension even though underlying fee interest was transferred not only to original lessee, but also to outside investor]

(2) [13:70] Lessor's transfer subject to lease of less than 35 years: A change in ownership also results from the transfer of a lessor's interest in real property subject to a lease with a remaining term (including renewal options) of less than 35 years. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 61(c)(1)(D); 18 CCR § 462.100(a)(2)(A); Auerbach v. Assessment Appeals Bd. No. 1 for County of Los Angeles (2006) 39 C4th 153, 164, 45 CR3d 774, 781; see Equinix LLC v. County of Los Angeles (2024) 101 CA5th 1108, 1117-1118, 320 CR3d 803, 809 (upholding constitutionality of § 61(c)(1)(D) where change in ownership was triggered because property lessor's lease term was less than 35 years, even though lessor was property's original owner); compare Dyanlyn Two v. County of Orange (2015) 234 CA4th 800, 816-817, 184 CR3d 88, 100 (finding 18 CCR § 462.100(a)(2)(A) "problematic" because, among other things, "it is not in sync" with case authority and fails to distinguish long-term lessees who have primary ownership from third parties who do not)]

(a) [13:70.1] Compare—transfer subject to minimum 35-year leasehold: A change in ownership does not occur by the transfer of a lessor's interest in real property subject to a remaining term (including renewal options) of 35 years or more (i.e., ownership had already changed when the leasehold interest was created). [Rev. & Tax.C. §§ 61(c), 62(g); 18 CCR § 462.100(b)(2)(A); Pacific Southwest Realty Co. v. County of Los Angeles (1991) 1 C4th 155, 167, 2 CR2d 536, 544; Auerbach v. Assessment Appeals Bd. No. 1 for County of Los Angeles (2006) 39 C4th 153, 164-165, 45 CR3d 774, 782; see also Dyanlyn Two v. County of Orange (2015) 234 CA4th 800, 816, 184 CR3d 88, 99—no change in ownership occurred when underlying fee interest in property subject to 35-plus-year lease was transferred from lessor to lessee and third party investor (long-term lessee "captured" primary ownership when leasehold was created)]

(3) [13:71] Effect of constructing building on leased property: Commercial long-term leases often permit the lessee to construct a building on the leased land. A change in ownership of the land also may effect a change in ownership of the building … so long as the change in ownership test (¶ 13:66) as applied to the building is satisfied. If reassessment is required, any applicable exclusion must then be prorated between the land and the building (see ¶ 13:100.3). [Auerbach v. Assessment Appeals Bd. No. 1 for County of Los Angeles (2006) 39 C4th 153, 157, 45 CR3d 774, 775; see also Phelps v. Orange County Assessment Appeals Bd. No. 1 (2010) 187 CA4th 653, 658-661, 114 CR3d 463, 467-469—income beneficiary had "present interest" in shopping center built by lessee on trust-held property sufficient to trigger reassessment of center and land under change in ownership test (lease provision requiring surrender of improvements when lease concluded showed that trust held fee interest, and "suggested" trust's income beneficiaries held present interest, in shopping center)]

(4) [13:72] Sale and leaseback: A sale of property with a long-term leaseback to the seller is a change in ownership. [Pacific Southwest Realty Co. v. County of Los Angeles (1991) 1 C4th 155, 162-166, 2 CR2d 536, 540-543; Industrial Indem. Co. v. City & County of San Francisco (1990) 218 CA3d 999, 1004-1006, 267 CR 445, 447-449; see also Crow Winthrop Operating Partnership v. County of Orange (1992) 10 CA4th 1848, 1857-1858, 13 CR2d 696, 702; and Friedman, Garcia & Hoy, Cal. Prac. Guide: Landlord-Tenant (TRG), Ch. 2A]

b. [13:73] Co-ownership: There is a change in ownership for property tax purposes upon the creation, transfer or termination of a joint tenancy or tenancy-in-common interest, unless covered by one of the statutory exceptions (e.g., transfer to a spouse; see ¶ 13:90 ff.). [Rev. & Tax.C. § 61(e), (f)]

c. [13:74] Transfers into and out of trusts: Generally, the transfer of real property into or out of a trust constitutes a change in ownership of the property for reassessment purposes. [18 CCR § 462.160(a); Reilly v. City & County of San Francisco (2006) 142 CA4th 480, 488, 48 CR3d 291, 295] However, there are numerous exceptions:

(1) Exclusions

(a) [13:74.1] Transfers to trust where trustor remains sole beneficiary: No change in ownership occurs when property is transferred by the trustor (and/or their spouse or registered domestic partner) into a trust of which the trustor remains the sole present beneficiary. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 62(d); 18 CCR § 462.160(b)(1)(A); Reilly v. City & County of San Francisco (2006) 142 CA4th 480, 488-489, 48 CR3d 291, 296—if trustor remains sole beneficiary during their lifetime, trustor's retained interest is considered "substantially equivalent in value" to fee and no change in ownership occurs until property passes to remainder persons on trustor's death]

1) [13:74.2] Trustee transfers back to trustor: Similarly, no change of ownership occurs when a trustee transfers trust property back to the trustor. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 62(d)]

2) [13:74.3] Compare—transfers to non-excludable persons other than trustor: On the other hand, if the property is transferred to a trust where persons other than the trustor become present beneficiaries of the trust, there is a change in ownership … unless those persons are excluded from the change in ownership rules (see ¶ 13:90 ff.). [18 CCR § 462.160(b)(1)(A)& ex. 1, (d)(1), ex. 5; Reilly v. City & County of San Francisco (2006) 142 CA4th 480, 488, 48 CR3d 291, 294-295]

[13:74.4] Reserved.

(b) [13:74.5] Transfers into and out of revocable trusts: Transfers of property by the trustor (and/or their spouse or registered domestic partner) into a trust, or by the trustee back to the trustor, do not constitute changes in ownership for so long as the trust is revocable. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 62(d); Steinhart v. County of Los Angeles (2010) 47 C4th 1298, 1319-1320, 104 CR3d 195, 213-214]

A change in ownership does occur, however, when the trust becomes irrevocable, unless the trustor remains or becomes the sole present beneficiary (¶ 13:74.1) or some other exclusion applies (see ¶ 13:90 ff.). [See Rev. & Tax.C. § 61(h); 18 CCR § 462.160(b)(2); Bohnett v. County of Santa Barbara (2021) 59 CA5th 1128, 1132, 274 CR3d 119, 122; Reilly v. City & County of San Francisco (2006) 142 CA4th 480, 488, 48 CR3d 291, 295]

1) [13:74.6] Trustee transfers back to trustor: When the trustee transfers trust property back to the trustor, there is no change in ownership. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 62(d)]

(c) [13:74.7] Creation or termination of 12-year trustor reversion trusts: No change in ownership occurs upon the creation or termination of a trust where the trustor retains the reversion and the interest of any other person does not exceed 12 years in duration. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 62(d); 18 CCR § 462.160(b)(1)(B)]

(d) [13:74.8] Transfers subject to spouse/registered domestic partner exclusion: No change in ownership occurs where a transfer to trust is subject to the spouse/registered domestic partner exclusion (¶ 13:97). [18 CCR § 462.160(b)(3)]

(e) [13:74.9] Transfers subject to parent-child or grandparent-grandchild exclusions: Similarly, no change in ownership occurs where a transfer to trust is subject to a timely-filed parent-child exclusion (¶ 13:98) or grandparent-grandchild exclusion (¶ 13:98.1 ff.). [18 CCR § 462.160(b)(4); Reilly v. City & County of San Francisco (2006) 142 CA4th 480, 488, 48 CR3d 291, 295, fn. 4; compare Bohnett v. County of Santa Barbara (2021) 59 CA5th 1128, 1133, 274 CR3d 119, 123—initial property transfer to trustors' children exempt from reassessment, but beneficiary's subsequent purchase of trust shares from siblings and co-beneficiaries not exempt, even if purchaser received title from trustee]

(f) [13:74.10] Transfers where proportional interests remain the same: When the transfer is to a trust where the proportional interests of the beneficiaries remain the same after the transfer, no change in ownership occurs. [18 CCR § 462.160(b)(5); Reilly v. City & County of San Francisco (2006) 142 CA4th 480, 489, 48 CR3d 291, 296]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(g) [13:74.11] Transfers between trusts: No change in ownership occurs if the transfer is from one trust to another and meets the requirements of exclusion set forth at ¶ 13:74.1 ff. [18 CCR § 462.160(b)(6)]

(h) [13:74.12] Compare—transfers to "sprinkle trust": However, when a trustor transfers property to a trust under which the trustee has total discretion ("sprinkle power") to decide which beneficiaries, including the trustor, will receive trust distributions, a change in ownership occurs … unless all of the beneficiaries are exempt from the change in ownership rules. [18 CCR § 462.160(b)(1)(A)& ex. 2]

(i) [13:74.13] Compare—transfers on death of income beneficiary to another income beneficiary: A change in ownership of property held by a testamentary trust (or irrevocable inter vivos trust) occurs when an income beneficiary dies and is succeeded by another income beneficiary, unless the transfer between the beneficiaries is subject to an exclusion (see ¶ 13:90 ff.). [See Phelps v. Orange County Assessment Appeals Bd. No. 1 (2010) 187 CA4th 653, 655-656, 114 CR3d 463, 465-466—change in ownership occurred for reassessment purposes when trust's income beneficiary died and his interest in trust-held shopping center transferred to his children]

d. [13:75] Transfers where transferor retains life estate in property: No change in ownership occurs when the transferor, or their spouse or registered domestic partner, retains a life estate in the property. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 62(e); 18 CCR § 462.060(a); Leckie v. County of Orange (1998) 65 CA4th 334, 338, 76 CR2d 426, 428]

It is immaterial whether the life estate is an interest in income generated by the property or in the property itself. [Reilly v. City & County of San Francisco (2006) 142 CA4th 480, 496, 48 CR3d 291, 302]

(1) [13:75.1] Subsequent transfer of life estate: However, a change in ownership occurs when the transferor, or their spouse or registered domestic partner, subsequently transfers the life estate to a third party. [18 CCR § 462.060(a); see Durante v. County of Santa Clara (2018) 29 CA5th 839, 841, 240 CR3d 302, 303 (taxpayer and sister holding inherited property as tenants-in-common)—change in ownership occurred when taxpayer's sister granted taxpayer life estate in sister's 50% interest; Leckie v. County of Orange (1998) 65 CA4th 334, 339, 76 CR2d 426, 428-429—change in ownership occurred on transfer of life estate from owner's revocable trust to owner's nonmarital cohabitant]

(2) [13:75.2] Termination of retained life estate: Termination of the retained life estate also constitutes a change in ownership, unless the reversion passes to the transferor's spouse or registered domestic partner or is subject to a Rev. & Tax.C. § 62(d) exclusion. [See Rev. & Tax.C. §§ 61(h), 62(e); 18 CCR § 462.060(a); Leckie v. County of Orange (1998) 65 CA4th 334, 338, 76 CR2d 426, 428]

The same result occurs where termination of the life estate is followed by the creation of a new life estate; the new life estate qualifies as a remainder interest and is subject to the change in ownership characterization unless otherwise excluded. [Reilly v. City & County of San Francisco (2006) 142 CA4th 480, 496, 48 CR3d 291, 302; see also Steinhart v. County of Los Angeles (2010) 47 C4th 1298, 1319-1325, 104 CR3d 195, 213-219— change in ownership occurred upon death of trust settlor who retained life estate in residence transferred to her trust with instructions to convey same to her sister at settlor's death (because decedent's entire equitable estate in residence transferred upon her death, a "change in ownership" occurred for reassessment purposes)]

e. [13:75.5] Transfers where transferor retains estate for years: A change in ownership occurs upon the creation of an estate for years for a term of 35 years or more … unless the estate for years is reserved in the transferor or their spouse or registered domestic partner. [See Rev. & Tax.C. § 62(e); 18 CCR § 462.060(b)]

(1) [13:75.6] Subsequent transfers: There is a change in ownership when the transferor, or transferor's spouse or registered domestic partner, subsequently transfers the retained estate for years to a third party. [18 CCR § 462.060(b)]

(2) [13:75.7] Termination of retained estate for years: Likewise, termination of the retained estate for years constitutes a change in ownership, unless the reversion passes to the transferor's spouse or registered domestic partner or is subject to a Rev. & Tax.C. § 62(d) exclusion. [See Rev. & Tax.C. §§ 61(h), 62(e); 18 CCR § 462.060(b)]

f. Transfers involving entities

(1) [13:77] Transfers to or from entities: Transferring an interest in real property between a corporation, partnership, limited liability company (LLC) or other legal entity and a shareholder, partner, LLC member or any other person is a change in ownership triggering property tax reassessment. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 61(j); see Fashion Valley Mall, LLC v. County of San Diego (2009) 176 CA4th 871, 881-888, 98 CR3d 327, 335-340—corporation's transfer of shopping mall to LLC in which corporation owned 50% interest constituted 100% change in ownership; Munkdale v. Giannini (1995) 35 CA4th 1104, 1109-1110, 41 CR2d 805, 808—transfers from dissolved partnership to former partners individually constituted 100% change in ownership]

(a) [13:77.1] Sham transactions: Entities may not circumvent the change in ownership rules simply by agreeing to reform their transactions for "property tax purposes only." [See Fashion Valley Mall, LLC v. County of San Diego (2009) 176 CA4th 871, 879-881, 98 CR3d 327, 333-335]

• [13:77.2] The corporate owner of a shopping mall ("Equitable") sold 50% of the mall to a property group ("Simon"). Equitable and Simon then each contributed their 50% interests to a limited liability company (FVM). Simultaneously, Equitable and Simon formed Mallco, a wholly-owned subsidiary of FVM, for the purpose of holding title to the mall. The county tax assessor determined the transaction resulted in a 100% change in ownership and reassessed the mall accordingly. The parties then entered into a Reformation Agreement seeking to effectuate a transfer of only 50% of the mall; the Reformation Agreement provided, "for property tax purposes only," certain provisions in the parties' original agreement were "rescinded, reformed, restructured," etc.

The parties claimed the Reformation Agreement resulted in Equitable retaining 50% of the beneficial use of the mall due to its membership interest in FVM. The parties further maintained reassessment should not have occurred because the beneficial interest in a property must be transferred for a change in ownership to occur. The Reformation Agreement, however, was deemed a sham. Equitable did not, due to its status as a member of FVM, retain a beneficial interest in the mall. In fact, except in fiduciary situations (custodianships, guardianships, trusteeships, etc.), the entity that holds legal title (in this case, Mallco) is the entity that holds beneficial title. Accordingly, the transaction resulted in a 100% change in ownership for property tax reassessment purposes. [Fashion Valley Mall, LLC v. County of San Diego (2009) 176 CA4th 871, 874-876, 881-888, 98 CR3d 327, 330-331, 335-340]

(b) [13:78] Exception—proportional interests the same: A transfer to or from an entity is not a change in ownership if it results solely in a change in the method of holding title and the transferor's proportional interest in each and every property transferred is exactly the same after the transfer as it was before. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 62(a)(2); compare Prang v. Los Angeles County Assessment Appeals Bd. (Amen) (2024) 5 C5th 1152, _, _, 321 CR3d 351, 358, 364-366—proportional ownership interest exception inapplicable to real property transfer from corporation to trust that owned corporation's voting stock but not its nonvoting stock (finding "change in ownership" is measured by proportional beneficial ownership interests in corporate real property and could not be limited to analysis of voting stock only)]

(c) [13:79] Reappraisal upon subsequent transfer of controlling interest in entity: However, where property was transferred to an entity and proportional interests remained the same, and subsequently there is a cumulative transfer or transfers of more than 50% of the interests in the entity by the original co-owners, that property in the entity is reappraised (i.e., such transfer "shall be a change of ownership of property" owned by the entity). [Rev. & Tax.C. § 64(d); see also ¶ 13:81]

(2) [13:80] Transfers of interest in entities: Generally, the purchase or transfer of corporate stock, partnership interests, or LLC interests is not a change in ownership of the entity's real property. This rule applies to the purchase or transfer of partnership interests without regard to whether the entity is a continuing or dissolved partnership. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 64(a)]

(a) [13:81] Exception—transfer of controlling interest to one person or entity: A change in ownership of real property owned by a corporation, partnership, LLC or other legal entity occurs when any single entity or person acquires (directly or indirectly) more than 50% of the voting stock of the corporation, or a majority interest in the partnership, LLC or other legal entity (as the case may be). [Rev. & Tax.C. § 64(c)(1); Title Ins. & Trust Co. v. County of Riverside (1989) 48 C3d 84, 91-95, 255 CR 670, 674-676—acquisition by reverse triangular merger is change of ownership of property in target corporation and also in subsidiaries of target corporation; see also Ocean Avenue LLC v. County of Los Angeles (2014) 227 CA4th 344, 350-351, 173 CR3d 445, 450-451—no change in ownership occurred even though all membership interests in property owned by LLC were sold (no one person or entity obtained, directly or indirectly, more than 50% interest in company's capital and profits)]

(b) [13:81.1] Transfer of minority partnership interests to majority partner: On the other hand, subject to appropriate application of the step-transaction doctrine, no change in ownership of partnership real property occurs when a majority partner acquires all of the remaining partnership interests or otherwise becomes sole partner. [See Rev. & Tax.C. § 64(c)(2)]

(3) [13:82] Transfers within affiliated groups: Transfers of property occurring within an affiliated corporate group, whether by a tax-free reorganization or otherwise, are not considered a change in ownership. "Affiliated group" means a chain connected by 100% stock ownership. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 64(b)]

(For further discussion of change of ownership rules in connection with transfers involving entities, see Friedman, Soza & Jann, Cal. Prac. Guide: Corporations (TRG), Chs. 2, 4, 6 & 8; and Ehrman & Flavin, "Taxing California Property"§ 2.15 (Clark Boardman Callaghan, 4th ed. 2009, and annual supp.).)

g. [13:83] Security interests: A change in ownership does not include creating or terminating a security interest or substituting a trustee under a security instrument. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 62(c)]

(1) [13:84] Compare—foreclosures: While the foreclosure of a security interest normally constitutes a change in ownership (18 CCR § 462.120), recordation of a CCP § 729.040(a) certificate of sale for property foreclosed upon and sold subject to a right of redemption does not constitute a change in ownership during the period in which the redemption right exists. [See Rev. & Tax.C. § 62.11]

h. [13:84.10] Taxable possessory interests in tax-exempt property: The private use of tax-exempt (government-owned) property is subject to property tax if the use constitutes a "possessory interest." [Cal.Const. Art. XIII, § 1; Rev. & Tax.C. §§ 104(a), 107; Vanguard Car Rental USA, Inc. v. County of San Mateo (2010) 181 CA4th 1316, 1321, 104 CR3d 911, 915—taxation of possessory interests is "rooted" in belief that holders of such valuable uses should contribute to public entities that make possession possible]

A taxable "possessory interest" is a "[p]ossession of, claim to, or right to the possession of land or improvements that is independent, durable, and exclusive of rights held by others in the property, except when coupled with ownership of the land or improvements in the same person." [Rev. & Tax.C. § 107(a) (emphasis added); see also 18 CCR § 21(a)(1); Seibold v. County of Los Angeles (2015) 240 CA4th 674, 678, 192 CR3d 575, 577 (analyzing statutory definition of "possessory interests")—ground lease affording taxpayer exclusive right to store his aircraft and equipment on airport premises deemed sufficiently independent of county's retained interests to constitute taxable possessory interest; Vanguard Car Rental USA, Inc. v. County of San Mateo, supra, 181 CA4th at 1324-1332, 104 CR3d at 917-924 (analyzing "possession," "independence" and "exclusivity" requirements)—car rental company and other commercial tenants leasing in common certain nonpublic areas within government-owned airport held taxable "possessory interest"; City of San Jose v. Carlson (1997) 57 CA4th 1348, 1352-1360, 67 CR2d 719, 721-726 (analyzing "durability," "independence" and "exclusivity" elements)—short-term users of city-owned (tax-exempt) convention center held taxable "possessory interest" when they obtained use permits on more than one occasion]

A "change in ownership" with regard to a taxable possessory interest occurs as follows:

(1) [13:85] Creation, renewal, extension, assignment: A change in ownership generally occurs upon the "creation, renewal, extension or assignment" of a taxable possessory interest in tax-exempt real property … subject to the following limitations (Rev. & Tax.C. § 61(b)):

• [13:85.1] An "assignment" of a possessory interest for this purpose means a transfer of all rights held by the transferor in the possessory interest. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 61(b)(3)]

• [13:85.2] A "renewal" or "extension" does not include the granting of an option to renew or extend an existing agreement pursuant to which the existing term of possession would, upon exercise of the option, be lengthened, whether the option is granted in the original agreement or thereafter. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 61(b)(1)]

• [13:85.3] Any "renewal" or "extension" of a possessory interest during the reasonably anticipated term of possession used by the assessor to value that interest does not cause a change in ownership until the end of that reasonably anticipated term of possession. At the end of the reasonably anticipated term of possession used by the assessor, a new base-year value, based on a new reasonably anticipated term of possession, "shall be established for the possessory interest." [Rev. & Tax.C. § 61(b)(2)]

(2) [13:86] Sublease: Sublease transactions involving a taxable possessory interest in tax-exempt real property trigger a change in ownership as follows (Rev. & Tax.C. § 61(d)):

• [13:86.1] A change in ownership occurs when a taxable possessory interest in tax-exempt real property is subleased if the sublease term (including renewal options) exceeds half the remaining term of the leasehold (including renewal options). [Rev. & Tax.C. § 61(d)(1)(A)]

• [13:86.2] A termination of the sublease effects a change in ownership if the original term (including renewal options) exceeds half the remaining term of the leasehold (including renewal options). [Rev. & Tax.C. § 61(d)(1)(B)]

• [13:86.3] A change in ownership occurs upon the transfer of a sublessee's interest with a remaining term (including renewal options) exceeding half the remaining term of the leasehold. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 61(d)(1)(C)]

• [13:86.4] Any transfer of a possessory interest in tax-exempt real property subject to a sublease with a remaining term (including renewal options) that does not exceed half the remaining term of the leasehold (including renewal options) triggers a change in ownership. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 61(d)(2)]

On the other hand, there is no change in ownership where the remaining sublease term (including renewal options) exceeds half the length of the remaining term of the leasehold (including renewal options). [Rev. & Tax.C. § 62(o)]

[13:87 - 13:89] Reserved.

4. [13:90] Other Rules of Exclusion: The California Constitution and Revenue and Taxation Code provide exceptions for certain transactions that otherwise would be deemed a change in ownership under the general rule of Rev. & Tax.C. § 60 (transfer of present interest substantially equivalent to value of fee, ¶ 13:66):

a. [13:91] Homeowners over age 55, severely and permanently disabled, or wildfire or natural disaster victims—base-year value transfer to replacement primary residence: Subject to certain limitations (¶ 13:92 ff.), homeowners who are (i) over 55 years of age, (ii) "severely and permanently disabled," or (iii) victims of a wildfire or natural disaster who reside in property that is eligible for either the homeowners' exemption (¶ 13:96.5 ff.) or the disabled veteran's exemption (¶ 13:96 ff.) may transfer the base-year value (i.e., "taxable value"; ¶ 13:91.6) of their primary residence to a replacement primary residence (¶ 13:91.5). The replacement primary residence must be located in California and purchased or newly constructed as the homeowner's principal residence within two years of the sale of the original primary residence. Although the replacement primary residence can cost any amount, the difference between the original home's value and the replacement home's value will be added to the original home's taxable value if the replacement home has a greater value than the original home (¶ 13:92). [Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2.1(b)(1), (2); Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.6(a); see also ¶ 13:91.3 (defining "natural disaster") and ¶ 13:91.7 (defining "victim of a wildfire or natural disaster")]

(1) [13:91.1] Compare—pre-April 1, 2021 base-year value transfers to replacement dwellings: The current base-year value transfer rules took effect on April 1, 2021 (¶ 13:91). Prior to April 1, 2021, only homeowners who were over age 55 or "severely and permanently disabled" qualified for a base-year value transfer. Further, the replacement home's value had to be equal to or less than the original home's value. [See Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2(a); Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.5(a), (b) & (g) (definitions); Grotenhuis v. County of Santa Barbara (2010) 182 CA4th 1158, 1161, 105 CR3d 918, 920]

(For further discussion, see Ehrman & Flavin, "Taxing California Property"§ 11.11 (Clark Boardman Callaghan, 4th ed. 2009 and current supp.); and "Board of Equalization Questions and Answers About Props. 60, 90 and 110," reproduced in Ehrman & Flavin, supra.)

(2) Definitions

(a) [13:91.2] "Full cash value": "Full cash value" means "the county assessor's valuation of real property as shown on the 1975-76 tax bill under 'full cash value' or, thereafter, the appraised value of real property when purchased, newly constructed, or a change in ownership has occurred after the 1975 assessment." [Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, §§ 2(a) & 2.1(e)(4); Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.6(d)(8)(A)]

Where the original property has been substantially damaged or destroyed by wildfire or natural disaster and the owner does not rebuild on the original property, "full cash value" means its full cash value immediately before its substantial damage or destruction by wildfire or natural disaster, as determined by the assessor of the county in which the property is located for the period from the date of its sale by the claimant to the date on which the replacement property was purchased or new construction was completed. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.6(d)(8)(B)]

(b) [13:91.3] "Natural disaster": "Natural disaster" means "the existence, as declared by the Governor, of conditions of disaster or extreme peril to the safety of persons or property within the affected area caused by conditions such as fire, flood, drought, storm, mudslide, earthquake, civil disorder, foreign invasion, or volcanic eruption." [Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2.1(e)(6)]

(c) [13:91.4] "Primary residence": "Primary residence" means a residence eligible for either (i) the homeowner's exemption (see Cal.Const. Art. XIII, § 3(k); ¶ 13:96.5), or (ii) the disabled veteran's exemption (see Cal.Const. Art. XIII, § 4(a); ¶ 13:96). [Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2.1(e)(1), (5), (7)]

(d) [13:91.5] "Replacement primary residence": "Replacement primary residence" has the same meaning as "replacement dwelling" under Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2(a)—i.e., "a building, structure, or other shelter constituting a place of abode, whether real property or personal property, and any land on which it may be situated." [Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2.1(e)(9); Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.6(d)(3)]

Each unit of a multiunit dwelling is considered a separate replacement dwelling. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.6(d)(3); compare Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.6(d)(5)—a dwelling is not a multiunit dwelling if claimant occupies one structure as their primary residence and the only other units on the property are accessory or junior dwelling units that are not separately alienable from the title of any other dwelling unit on said property]

(e) [13:91.6] "Taxable value": "Taxable value" means (i) the base-year value determined as of the date the original property is sold by the claimant, or (ii) where the original property has been substantially damaged or destroyed by wildfire or natural disaster and the owner does not rebuild on the original property, determined as of the date immediately before the wildfire or natural disaster. [Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, §§ 2(a), (b) & 2.1(e)(10); Rev. & Tax C. § 69.6(d)(2)]

(f) [13:91.7] "Victim of a wildfire or natural disaster": "Victim of a wildfire or natural disaster" means the owner of a primary residence (¶ 13:91.4) that has been substantially damaged as a result of a wildfire or natural disaster that amounts to more than 50 percent of the improvement value of the primary residence immediately before the wildfire or natural disaster. This includes diminution of value resulting from restricted access caused by the wildfire or disaster. [Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2.1(e)(11); Rev. & Tax C. § 69.6(d)(14); see also Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2.1(e)(12) (incorporating Gov.C. § 51177(j)'s definition of "wildfire")]

(3) [13:92] Value of replacement primary residence: Homeowners can qualify for a base-year value transfer (¶ 13:91) on or after April 1, 2021, regardless of the replacement primary residence's value. If the replacement primary residence's value is equal to or less than the original primary residence's value, then the replacement primary residence's taxable value (¶ 13:91.6) will be the same as the original primary residence's taxable value. [Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2.1(b)(1), (2)(A); see ¶ 13:91.5 (defining "replacement primary residence")]

If the replacement primary residence's value exceeds the original primary residence's value, the replacement primary residence's taxable value will be calculated by adding the difference between the full cash value of the original primary residence and the full cash value of the replacement primary residence to the original primary residence's taxable value. [Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2.1(b)(2)(B); see ¶ 13:91.2 (defining "full cash value")]

(a) [13:92a] Delayed replacements: The cost of the replacement house may not exceed (i) 100% of the value of the old house if the new house is purchased or newly constructed prior to the sale of the old house; (ii) 105% of the value of the old house if purchased or newly constructed within the first year following the sale of the old house; or (iii) 110% of the value of the old house if the new house is purchased or newly constructed within the second year following sale of the old house. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.6(d)(13)(A), (B) & (C)]

(b) [13:92.1] Base-year value transferred only if original property sold: Although the new property can be purchased or constructed before the original property is sold, the base-year value of the original property cannot be transferred to the replacement property until the original property is sold. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.6(a)]

(4) [13:93] Two-year limit: The replacement house must be purchased or newly-constructed within two years of the sale of the old house. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.6(a) & (b)(5)]

If the replacement property is in part purchased and in part newly constructed, the date the replacement property is purchased or newly constructed is the date of purchase or date of completion of construction, whichever is later. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.6(d)(6)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(a) [13:93.1] Constructed residence valuation: When a taxpayer purchases land and constructs a residence on it, the property's value (land and house) is measured as of the purchase date or date construction is completed, whichever is later. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.5(g)(5); Wunderlich v. County of Santa Cruz (2009) 178 CA4th 680, 694-700, 100 CR3d 598, 607-611—taxpayer could not transfer former home's base-year value to replacement property (land and house) because its combined value, measured as of construction completion date, exceeded former residence's sale price]

(5) [13:93.2] Dwelling held in trust: A dwelling qualifies for the base-year transfer if it or the replacement property is held in a trust, provided the taxpayer who occupies the dwelling is the sole present beneficiary of the trust. [See "Board of Equalization Questions and Answers About Props. 60, 90 and 110," Answer B2, reproduced in Ehrman & Flavin, supra (¶ 13:91)]

(6) [13:94] Location of replacement primary residence: For base-year value transfers that occur on or after April 1, 2021 (¶ 13:91), the replacement primary residence (¶ 13:91.5) can be located anywhere in California. [Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2.1(b)(1)]

(a) [13:94.1] Compare—pre-April 1, 2021 base-year value transfers: Prior to April 1, 2021, the replacement house had to be located either in (i) the same county as the old one or (ii) another county wherein the board of supervisors adopted an ordinance that so provided and that met statutorily specified criteria. [See Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.5(a)(2), (b)(6) & (j)(2)]

(7) [13:95] Number of base-year value transfers: Homeowners who are over 55 years of age or severely disabled cannot transfer the taxable value (¶ 13:91.6) of a primary residence more than three times. This limit does not apply to homeowners who are victims of wildfire or natural disaster. [Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2.1(b)(3); Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.6(a), (b)(6)]

(a) [13:95a] Compare—pre-April 1, 2021 base-year value transfers: Prior to April 1, 2021, Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.5 property tax relief was available only once in the taxpayer's lifetime—except as to homeowners who became "severely and permanently disabled" after being granted § 69.5 tax relief for homeowners over age 55. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.5(b)(7)]

(8) [13:95.1] Mandatory application process; general three-year limit: A person seeking to transfer the taxable value (¶ 13:91.6) of their primary residence on or after April 1, 2021, must file an application with the assessor of the county in which the replacement primary residence (¶ 13:91.5) is located within three years of the replacement primary residence's purchase or completion of new construction. [Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2.1(b)(4); Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.6(e)(1); see also State Board of Equalization, "Proposition 19 Base Year Value Transfer Guidance Questions and Answers" (5/11/21), available at www.boe.ca.gov]

(a) [13:95.1a] Compare—pre-April 1, 2021 base-year value transfers: Prior to April 1, 2021, homeowners electing Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.5 relief had to complete and file the appropriate State Board of Equalization claim of eligibility form with the county assessor within three years of (i) purchase of the new residence or (ii) adoption by a participating county of an ordinance permitting intercounty transfers of base-year value (¶ 13:94). [Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.5(f)(1) & (k)]

(b) [13:95.2] Special provision for late claims: Claims filed after the three-year deadline must also be considered, but certain statutory conditions apply. [See Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.6(c)(2)]

(9) [13:95.5] Pre-April 1, 2021 transfers; no tax assessment if erroneous base-year value transfer: For transfers prior to April 1, 2021, an assessment of tax liability may not be levied if an intercounty transfer of base-year value (¶ 13:94) has been erroneously granted pursuant to an expired ordinance. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.5(l)]

(10) [13:95.6] Application where original home substantially destroyed or damaged by wildfire or natural disaster: Where the original home of a taxpayer qualifying for Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.6 tax relief is "substantially damaged or destroyed by wildfire or natural disaster," and the taxpayer chooses to purchase a replacement rather than repair or rebuild the original, they may transfer the base-year value of the original home to the replacement home. [See Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.6(a); see also ¶ 13:107 ff.]

The transferred base-year value in such cases is the full cash value of the original home as if it were appraised immediately prior to the damage or destruction. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.6(d)(2) & (8)(B)]

(11) [13:95.7] "Natural person" requirement: Qualified homeowners must be "natural persons"—i.e., not firms, partnerships, associations, corporations, companies or any other legal entity or organization of any kind. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.6(d)(12)—"person" includes present trust beneficiary; see also Grotenhuis v. County of Santa Barbara (2010) 182

CA4th 1158, 1162, 105 CR3d 918, 920—corporation's sole shareholder tenant not entitled to tax exemption or transfer of base-year value on replacement residence standing in corporation's name (shareholder tenant barred from claiming property tax relief as alter ego of corporation/landlord)]

(12) [13:95.8] Divorced taxpayers who separately purchase/construct replacement dwellings; *pre-4/1/2021 transactions: If replacement dwellings are separately purchased or newly constructed by two co-owners who held the original property as community property, only the co-owner who has reached age 55 (or who is severely and permanently disabled) is eligible to transfer the original home's base year value to that co-owner's replacement dwelling. If both spouses are over 55, they must determine by mutual agreement which one of them is eligible. [IRC § 69.5(d)(3)]

However, if the original dwelling is transferred by one spouse to the other in connection with a marital separation or dissolution, the transfer is not considered a change in ownership (¶ 13:97). [Rev. & Tax.C. § 63(c)

Comment: Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.6 (applicable to transactions occurring on or after 4/1/21) does not include a divorced taxpayers' section similar to Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.5(d)(3) (above). It is unclear whether this omission was merely an oversight or the Legislature intended to eliminate the provision.

b. [13:96] Disabled veterans' exemption: A disabled veteran (¶ 13:96.1) and their spouse are entitled to a $100,000 property tax exemption on the full value of their residence. The exemption increases to $150,000 if the veteran's household income does not exceed $40,000 as adjusted by a specified inflation factor. [Cal.Const. Art. XIII, § 4(a); Rev. & Tax.C. § 205.5(a)]

(1) [13:96.1] "Disabled veteran": For purposes of this exemption, a "disabled veteran" is a person who, because of an injury or disease incurred in military service, is blind in both eyes, has lost the use of two or more limbs, is totally disabled and has been discharged under other than dishonorable conditions, or who, as a result of a service-connected injury or disease, died while in active military service. [Cal.Const. Art. XIII, § 4(a); see also Rev. & Tax.C. § 205.5(a), (b)(1)(A), (B), (c)(1)]

(2) [13:96.2] Applies to principal residence of veteran or veteran's unmarried surviving spouse if either is confined to hospital or care facility: Property subject to this exemption includes the principal residence of a disabled veteran, or of the unmarried surviving spouse of a deceased veteran, if the veteran or surviving spouse is confined to a hospital or other care facility, so long as the property would be the veteran's or surviving spouse's principal residence but for the confinement and it is neither rented nor leased to a nonfamily member. [See Rev. & Tax.C. § 205.5(b)(2), (c)(2), (3); see also Rev. & Tax.C. § 279(b)(2)(A)]

(3) [13:96.3] Duration: Once granted, this exemption remains in effect until:

— Title to the property changes;

— The owner claimant (i.e., veteran or their unmarried surviving spouse) ceases occupancy of the dwelling as their principal residence on the lien date (except when the veteran or surviving spouse is confined to a hospital or other care facility, as provided in Rev. & Tax.C. § 205.5(b)(2), ¶ 13:96.2);

— The property is altered so that it is no longer a dwelling;

— The veteran is no longer disabled; or — The unmarried surviving spouse remarries. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 279(b)(1)-(5)]

[13:96.4] Reserved.

c. [13:96.5] $7,000 homeowner's exemption: Taxpayers are entitled to a "homeowners property tax exemption" in the amount of $7,000 of the full value of an eligible dwelling. [Cal.Const. Art. XIII, § 3(k); Rev. & Tax.C. § 218]

(1) [13:96.6] Eligible dwellings: Eligible dwellings include:

• A single-family dwelling occupied by the taxpayer owner as their principal place of residence. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 218(c)(2)(B)(i)]

• A multiple-dwelling unit occupied by the taxpayer owner as their principal place of residence. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 218(c)(2)(B)(ii)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

• A condominium occupied by the taxpayer owner as their principal place of residence. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 218(c)(2)(B)(iii); see Smith v. State Bd. of Equalization of State of Calif. (1997) 53 CA4th 331, 336-337, 61 CR2d 604, 607-608—owner of leasehold condominium occupied as principal residence is "owner" of condominium entitled to $7,000 exemption to same extent as owner of fee condominium]

• Premises occupied by the taxpayer owner of shares or a membership interest in a cooperative housing corporation (Rev. & Tax.C. § 61(h)) as their principal place of residence. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 218(c)(2)(B)(iv)]

(2) [13:96.7] Dwellings damaged/destroyed in misfortune/calamity: A dwelling damaged in a misfortune or calamity is eligible to receive the homeowner's exemption provided the homeowner's absence is temporary and they intend to return when possible. However, the exemption generally is not available for dwellings that have been totally destroyed unless and until the structures are replaced and occupied as dwellings. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 218(b)(2)]

(a) [13:96.7a] Compare—dwellings totally destroyed in "state of emergency" disasters: An otherwise qualified dwelling that was totally destroyed in a disaster for which the Governor proclaimed a state of emergency remains eligible to receive the homeowner's exemption if there has been no change in ownership since the disaster date and the homeowner intends to reconstruct a dwelling on the property when possible and occupy it as their principal place of residence. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 218(b)(3)]

(3) [13:96.8] Not rental or vacation homes; other exclusions: This homeowners exemption is not available for vacant or rental property, or property under construction. Nor can it be claimed for the owner's vacation or secondary home or for property on which an owner receives the veteran's exemption. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 218(b)(1)]

(4) [13:96.8a] Owner confined to hospital or other care facility: Notwithstanding Rev. & Tax.C. § 218(b)(1) (¶ 13:96.8), if the person receiving the exemption is not occupying the dwelling because they are confined to a hospital or other care facility, they will remain eligible for the homeowner's exemption provided:

— they would occupy the dwelling had they not been confined to the hospital or other care facility;

— they intend to return to the dwelling when possible to do so; and

— the dwelling is not rented or leased to a person not described in IRC § 267(c)(4) (i.e., an individual's brothers and sisters, whether by whole or half blood, spouse, ancestors and lineal descendants). [See Rev. & Tax.C. § 218(b)(4) (amended Stats. 2023, Ch. 781; eff. 10/11/23)]

(5) [13:96.9] Timely claim of exemption required: Taxpayers claiming a homeowner's exemption must file an affidavit therefor with the county assessor. The affidavit may be filed any time after the taxpayer becomes eligible for the exemption; but unless the assessor grants a "good cause" extension (see Rev. & Tax.C. § 255.1), it must be filed no later than 5 p.m. on February 15th. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 255]

(A special extension rule applies for veterans claiming a homeowner's exemption after being disallowed a veteran's exemption on a principal residence. See Rev. & Tax.C. § 255.2.)

(a) [13:96.10] Partial exemption for late claims: If the taxpayer misses the February 15th deadline but files the affidavit on or before the following December 10th, an exemption of the lesser of $5,600 or 80% of the full value of the dwelling "shall be granted by the assessor." [See Rev. & Tax.C. § 275(a)]

d. [13:97] Transfers between spouses or registered domestic partners: A change in ownership does not include interspousal transfers … including (but not limited to):

• transfers in trust;

• transfers that take effect on a spouse's death;

• transfers to a spouse or former spouse in connection with marriage dissolution or legal separation;

• the creation, transfer or termination solely between spouses of a co-owner's interest; or

• a legal entity's transfer to a spouse or former spouse in exchange for the latter's interest in the entity in connection with marriage dissolution or legal separation. [Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2(g); Rev. & Tax.C. § 63(a)-(e); 18 CCR § 462.220]
Likewise, a change of ownership for reassessment purposes does not include transfers between registered domestic partners (Fam.C. § 297), including property transfers occurring on or after 1/1/00 to 6/26/15, inclusive, between "local registered domestic partners," as defined. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 62(p), (q)—"local registered domestic partner" means registered domestic partnership established by city, county, city and county, or special district in which registrants were same sex at time of registration and not in registered domestic partnership with, or married to, any other person at time of transfer; see also Strong v. State Bd. of Equalization (2007) 155 CA4th 1182, 1193-1194, 66 CR3d 657, 665-667 (upholding Legislature's constitutional authority to exclude domestic partner transfers from property reassessment)]

e. Transfers between parents and children and grandparents and grandchildren

(1) General statement of exclusions

(a) [13:98] Parent-child transfers: On or after February 16, 2021, the purchase or transfer of a family home (i.e., the principal residence) or family farm between parents and their children does not result in a "change in ownership" and the property's taxable value remains the same provided (i) the property continues to be the transferee's family home or family farm (or, in the case of a family home, becomes a transferee's principal residence within one year of the transfer), and (ii) the property's assessed value is less than the property's taxable value plus $1 million (adjusted for inflation, beginning February 16, 2023). [Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2.1(c)(1), (3), (4); Rev. Tax.C. § 63.2; see also Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2.1(e)(2) (defining "family farm" as "any real property which is under cultivation or which is being used for pasture or grazing, or that is used to produce any agricultural commodity" under Gov.C. § 51201), (e)(3) (indicating "family home" has same meaning as "principal residence" under Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 3(k)); and ¶ 13:98.3 (family home/family farm's taxable value post-transfer)]

Beginning February 16, 2021, only family homes and family farms qualify for the parent-child (¶ 13:98) and grandparent-grandchild (¶ 13:98.1 ff.) transfer exclusion; post-February 15, 2021 transfers of other real property do not qualify. [See Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2.1(c)]

1) [13:98a] Compare—pre-February 16, 2021 transfers: Section 2 of Article XIIIA of the California Constitution continues to apply to purchases and transfers between parents and children that occurred on or before February 15, 2021. [Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2.1(d)]

For purchases and transfers that occurred between parents and children on or after November 6, 1986, and before February 16, 2021, no "change in ownership" occurred upon the purchase or transfer of (i) a "principal residence" between parents and children, or (ii) the first $1,000,000 of full cash value of all other real property between parents and children, as long as a timely claim of exclusion was filed (¶ 13:102 ff.). [Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2(h); Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.1(a)(1) & (2), (c)(1), (h)(1); Empire Properties v. County of Los Angeles (1996) 44 CA4th 781, 789, 52 CR2d 69, 74]

2) [13:98b] Foster children: For purposes of both the Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.1 exclusion (applicable to pre-February 16, 2021 transfers) and the Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.2 exclusion, the term "children" includes "foster" children of state-licensed foster parents, provided those children were not adopted by their foster parents due to a "legal barrier" before aging out of the foster care system. [Rev. & Tax.C. §§ 63.1(c)(3)(E), 63.2(e)(1)(E); see also Ltr. to Assessors 2007/048]

Compare: A purchase or transfer of a principal residence from a foster child to their biological parent is not excluded under § 63.1 (applicable to pre-February 16, 2021 transfers) if the child received the residence (or an interest therein) from a foster parent through a purchase or transfer previously excluded under § 63.1. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.1(a)(1)(B)]

(b) [13:98.1] Grandparent-grandchild transfers: The same exclusion rules that apply to parent-child transfers (¶ 13:98) apply to post-February 15, 2021 purchases and transfers of family homes and family farms between grandparents and grandchildren provided the grandchildren's parents (i) qualify as the grandparents' children, and (ii) are deceased as of the purchase or transfer date. [Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2.1(c)(2); Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.2(a)(1)]

1) [13:98.1a] Compare—pre-February 16, 2021 transfers: Subject to the timely filing of a claim of exclusion (¶ 13:102 ff.), "principal residence" transfers from grandparents to grandchildren between March 27, 1996, and February

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

15, 2021, were exempt from property tax reassessment. This was so provided all of the parents of the grandchildren who qualify as children of the grandparents (excluding, however, the grandparents' sons-in-law and daughters-in-law who are stepparents to the grandchildren) were deceased on the transfer date. The same rules applied to the first $1,000,000 of full cash value of other real property transfers from grandparents to grandchildren that occurred between March 27, 1996, and February 15, 2021. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.1(a)(3)(A), (c)(2) & (h)(2); see also Auerbach v. Assessment Appeals Bd. No. 1 for County of Los Angeles (2006) 39 C4th 153, 158-159, 45 CR3d 774, 777—where land and building located thereon transferred by trust from grandparents to grandchildren, transfer subject to $1,000,000 exclusion prorated between land and building; and ¶ 13:100.3]

2) [13:98.2] Prior parent-child transfer limitation: Before February 16, 2021, a grandparent-grandchild "principal residence" transfer was not exempt from property tax reassessment if the grandchild previously received an exempt parent-child "principal residence" transfer or interest therein. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.1(a)(3)(B)]

In that event, the full cash value of the nonexempt grandparent-grandchild "principal residence" transfer was added to the value of other grandparent-grandchild real property transfers when applying the statute's $1 million limitation on other exempt grandparent-grandchild transfers. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.1(a)(3)(B)]

(c) [13:98.3] Family home/farm's taxable value post-transfer: If a family home or family farm is transferred between a parent and child (¶ 13:98) or grandparent and grandchild (¶ 13:98.1) on or after February 16, 2021, and the property's assessed value upon purchase and transfer is less than the sum of the property's taxable value on the date immediately prior to the purchase and transfer date plus $1 million, the property's new taxable value will equal the property's taxable value on the date immediately prior to the purchase and transfer date (subject to adjustment by Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2(b); ¶ 13:65.3). [Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2.1(c)(1)(A), (B)(i), (3); Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.2(d)(1)(A)]

If the family home/family farm's assessed value upon purchase and transfer is equal to or more than the sum of the property's taxable value on the date immediately prior to the purchase and transfer date plus $1 million, the property's new taxable value will equal the property's assessed value upon purchase and transfer minus the sum of the property's taxable value on the date immediately prior to the purchase and transfer date and $1 million. [Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2.1(c)(1)(A), (B)(ii), (3); Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.2(d)(A), (B)]

Beginning February 16, 2023, and every other February 16 thereafter, the State Board of Equalization must adjust the $1 million amount for inflation "to reflect the percentage change in the House Price Index for California for the prior calendar year, as determined by the Federal Housing Finance Agency." [Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2.1(c)(4)]

(2) Eligible real property

(a) [13:99] "Principal residence": For purposes of the Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.1 exclusions (pre-February 16, 2021*) and* Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.2 exclusions (on or after February 16, 2021), a "principal residence" is (i) a dwelling eligible for a homeowner's exemption (¶ 13:96.5 ff.) or disabled veterans' exemption (¶ 13:96 ff.) as a result of the transferor's ownership and occupation of the dwelling; and (ii) includes only that portion of the land underlying the residence that consists of an area of "reasonable size" used as the residence site. [Rev. & Tax.C. §§ 63.1(b)(1), 63.2(e)(5)]

(b) [13:100] $1,000,000 of other real property—pre-February 16, 2021 transfers: For property transferred before February 16, 2021, the $1,000,000 "full cash value" exclusion applied to the eligible transferor's real property other than their principal residence; and covered only the first transfer of $1,000,000 of property by the eligible transferor, regardless of whether made to more than one transferee. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.1(b)(2)]

1) [13:100.1] Joint transferors' option to cumulate $1,000,000 exclusions: Where the pre-February 16, 2021 purchase or transfer involved two or more eligible transferors, the transferors could elect to combine their separate $1,000,000 exclusions … in which event, the combined amount would apply to any property jointly sold or transferred by them (except that in no case could the amount of full cash value of real property of any single eligible transferor excluded under the election exceed the amount of their separate unused exclusion on the date of the joint sale or transfer). [Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.1(b)(2)]

2) [13:100.2] Nonexcluded principal residence transfer from grandparent to grandchild included in applying $1,000,000 limit: As noted at ¶ 13:98.1a ff., the $1,000,000 exclusion limit on a grandparent's pre-February 16, 2021 transfer to a grandchild was calculated by adding the full cash value of the grandparent's principal residence transfer to the grandchild that failed to qualify for the exclusion under § 63.1(a)(3)(B) (¶ 13:98.2). [Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.1(a)(3)(B)]

3) [13:100.3] Could be prorated between transferred property and building located thereon: Under appropriate circumstances, for property transferred before February 16, 2021, the $1,000,000 exclusion amount could be prorated between the transferred property and any building located thereon. When this was done, the transfer resulted in a greater tax reassessment than if the entire exclusion had been applied to the land. [Auerbach v. Assessment Appeals Bd. No. 1 for County of Los Angeles (2006) 39 C4th 153, 157, 160, 45 CR3d 774, 775, 778]

(c) [13:100.4] Cooperative housing corporation unit or lot: Real property for purposes of both the Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.1 and § 63.2 principal residence exclusion includes an interest in a cooperative housing corporation unit or lot, as defined. [See Rev. & Tax.C. §§ 63.1(c)(8)(A), 63.2(e)(8)(A)]

(d) [13:100.5] Pro rata ownership interests in mobile home parks/floating home marinas: Real property for purposes of both the Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.1 and § 63.2 principal residence exclusion also includes pro rata ownership interests in mobilehome parks and floating home marinas, as defined. [See Rev. & Tax.C. §§ 63.1(c)(8)(B), (C), 63.2(e)(8)(B), (C)]

(3) [13:101] "Eligible" transferors and transferees: An "eligible transferor" for purposes of the Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.2 exclusion is a grandparent, parent, grandchild, or child of an eligible transferee. An "eligible transferee" is a parent, child, grandparent or grandchild of an eligible transferor. (However, transfers between grandparents and grandchildren do not qualify unless the grandchild's parents are deceased; ¶ 13:98.1.) [Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.2(e)(2) & (3)]

Thus, parents and children can be eligible transferors or eligible transferees in parent-child exempt transfers. As between grandparents and grandchildren, however, grandparents and grandchildren can be transferors or transferees under § 63.2 only if the grandchildren's parents are deceased (¶ 13:98.1).

(a) [13:101a] Compare—pre-February 16, 2021 transfers: An "eligible transferor" for purposes of the Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.1 exclusion is a grandparent, parent, or child of an eligible transferee. An "eligible transferee" is a parent, child, or grandchild of an eligible transferor. However, grandparents and grandchildren are not "eligible" unless the grandchild's parents are deceased. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.1(a)(3)(A), (c)(2), (6) & (7)]

Thus, parents and children can be eligible transferors or eligible transferees in parent-child exempt transfers. As between grandparents and grandchildren, however, only grandparents can be eligible transferors and only grandchildren can be eligible transferees. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.1(c)(1), (3), (6) & (7)]

(4) [13:101b] "Transfers" covered: A "transfer" excluded by both Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.1 and § 63.2 may occur during the transferor's life or at death and includes, but is not limited to, any transfer of the present beneficial ownership of property from an eligible transferor to an eligible transferee through an inter vivos or testamentary trust. [Rev. & Tax.C. §§ 63.1(c)(9), 63.2(e)(9); see also Empire Properties v. County of Los Angeles (1996) 44 CA4th 781, 789, 52 CR2d 69, 74 (decided under Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.1)]

The exclusion applies to both voluntary transfers and those resulting from a court order or judicial decree. [Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2.1(c)(1)]

(a) [13:101.1] Direct transfers only; transfers to wholly owned entities distinguished: Only direct transfers are eligible—i.e., the transferor and transferee must be natural persons in a familial relationship. The exemption does not apply to transfers to or from corporations, partnerships or other legal entities comprised of family members and, therefore, does not protect from reassessment a transfer by a parent (or child) to an entity wholly owned by the parent and parent's children. [Penner v. County of Santa Barbara (1995) 37 CA4th 1672, 1677-1680, 44 CR2d 606, 608-611 (decided under Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.1)—no reassessment exemption for parent's transfer to limited partnership wholly owned by parent and her adult children]

1) [13:101.2] Comment: Note that the parent in Penner, supra, could have achieved her goals without a reassessment by first transferring an interest in the property to her children, and then having all the owners transfer their interests to the partnership. [Penner v. County of Santa Barbara (1995) 37 CA4th 1672, 1678-1679, 44 CR2d 606, 609-610]

(5) [13:102] Timely exclusion claim required: In order to receive the parent-child (¶ 13:98) or grandparent-grandchild (¶ 13:98.1) exclusion for a property transfer on or after February 16, 2021, the transferee must claim the homeowner's exemption or disabled veteran's exemption either (i) at the time of purchase or transfer, or (ii) within one year of the purchase or transfer (in which case, the transferee would be entitled to a refund of taxes previously owed or paid between the transfer date and the date the transferee claimed the exemption). [Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2.1(c)(5); Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.2(a)(1)(B)]

(a) [13:102.1] Compare—pre-February 16, 2021 transfers: For property transferred before February 16, 2021, the exclusion also had to be timely claimed by the eligible transferee on the proper State Board of Equalization form filed with the county assessor. Otherwise, entitlement to the exclusion was forfeited and the property was properly reassessed. [See Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.1(d), (e); Empire Properties v. County of Los Angeles (1996) 44 CA4th 781, 789-790, 52 CR2d 69, 74-75 (claim untimely)]

1) [13:103] General three-year deadline: For transfers between parents and children occurring before September 30, 1990, the claim had to be filed within three years after the date of the parent-child transfer. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.1(e)(1)(A)]

For transfers between parents and children occurring on or after Sept. 30, 1990, but before February 16, 2021, and for transfers between grandparents and grandchildren occurring on or after March 27, 1996, but before February 16, 2021, the deadline for filing the claim was three years after the date of the transfer or prior to transfer of the property to a third party (not including a transfer to a parent or child of the transferor/original transferee), whichever was earlier. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.1(e)(1)(B), (4)].

For transfers on or after February 16, 2021, the claim must be filed within three years after the date of the purchase or transfer of real property for which the claim is filed, or prior to the transfer of the real property to a third party, or an eligible transferee no longer occupies the residence, whichever is earlier. [Rev.& Tax.C. § 63.2(f)(1)(A)]

a) [13:103.1] Pre-February 16, 2021 transfers upon death: Before February 16, 2021, the date of a transfer between parents and children or between grandparents and grandchildren under will or by intestate succession had to be "the date of the decedent's death." Thus, the three-year limitations period for filing the exclusion claim (¶ 13:103) commenced immediately upon the death of the eligible transferor without regard to when estate administration was commenced. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.1(c)(1) & (2) (emphasis added); see Empire Properties v. County of Los Angeles (1996) 44 CA4th 781, 790, 52 CR2d 69, 74-75; see also Ross & Cohen, Cal. Prac. Guide: Probate (TRG), Ch. 1]

2) [13:104] Extension—special "deemed timely filing" rule: Notwithstanding the three-year rule (¶ 13:103), an exclusion claim is "deemed to be timely filed" if filed within six months after the date of mailing of a notice of supplemental or escape assessment issued as a result of the real property purchase or transfer for which the claim was filed. [Rev. & Tax.C. §§ 63.1(e)(1)(C); 63.2(f)(1)(B); see Scott v. State Bd. of Equalization (1996) 50 CA4th 1597, 1600, 58 CR2d 376, 377 (decided under Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.1) (upholding constitutionality of statute's retroactive extension of filing period for parent-child transfer exclusion)]

3) [13:104.1] Special provision for late claims: Unless the property has been transferred to a third party (not including a transfer to a parent or child of the transferor/original transferee), an exclusion claim filed after expiration of the Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.1(e)(1) or § 63.2(f)(1) deadlines (¶ 13:103) must be "considered by the assessor." [Rev. & Tax.C. §§ 63.1(e)(2), (4), 63.2(f)(2)]

However, the following conditions apply:

• [13:104.2] The exclusion granted pursuant to the late claim "shall apply commencing with the lien date of the assessment year in which the claim is filed." [Rev. & Tax.C. §§ 63.1(e)(2)(A), 63.2(f)(2)(A)]

• [13:104.3] Under any exclusion granted pursuant to the late claim, the adjusted full cash value (taxable value) of the property must be set at the property's adjusted base-year value in the year of the excluded transfer, adjusted for inflation and the value of any subsequent new construction on the property. [Rev. & Tax.C. §§ 63.1(e)(2)(B), 63.2(f)(2)(B)]

[13:104.4] Reserved.

(b) [13:104.5] Notice by assessor: The assessor may notify a transferee in writing of the potential eligibility for exclusion from a change in ownership tax reassessment under the parent-child or grandparent-child exclusions. If so notified, the transferee is statutorily required to file a certified claim for eligibility within 45 days of the date of the notice. [Rev. & Tax.C. §§ 63.1(j)(1), 63.2(g)(1)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

If no certified claim is filed within 45 days, the assessor may send a second notice of potential eligibility, stating that reassessment will occur unless a certified claim for exclusion is filed within 60 days of the date of the second notice. Failure to file a claim for exemption within 60 days does not, however, prevent the transferee from claiming the exemption at a later time. But in this event, the assessor can impose a one-time processing fee when authorized by the county board of supervisors. [See Rev. & Tax.C. §§ 63.1(j), 63.2(g)—processing fee may not exceed lesser of $175 or actual and reasonable costs incurred due to transferee's failure to timely file claim]

➪ [13:104.6] PRACTICE POINTER: Thorough information comparing the Rev. & Tax.C. § 63.1 (pre-February 16, 2021) and § 63.2 (on or after February 16, 2021) parent-child and grandparent-grandchild exemption is available on the State Board of Equalization website (https://www.boe.ca.gov/prop19/#Charts).

(6) [13:104.7] Stock transfers in family corporations owning real property: No change in ownership occurs when stock in a "qualified corporation" (¶ 13:104.8) transfers from a parent to a child due to the parent's death and the transfer results in a change in ownership of "qualified property" (¶ 13:104.9) owned by the qualified corporation. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 62(r)]

(a) [13:104.8] Qualified corporation: For purposes of the Rev. & Tax.C. § 62(r) exemption (¶ 13:104.7), a "qualified corporation" means a corporation, created between 3/1/75 and 11/6/86, that owns "qualified property" (¶ 13:104.9) and whose only stockholders have been the parents and their children. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 62(r)(4)(A)]

(b) [13:104.9] Qualified property: For purposes of the Rev. & Tax.C. § 62(r) exemption (¶ 13:104.7), "qualified property" means a "parcel of property" that satisfies the following conditions (Rev. & Tax.C. § 62(r)(4)(B)):

• The parcel contains the parents' principal residence before their death and has been the continuous residence of a child of those parents since creation of the qualified corporation (¶ 13:104.8); and

• The parcel's full cash value, as defined, does not exceed $1 million as of the date immediately prior to the last surviving parent's death.

f. Joint tenancy property

(1) [13:105] Transferor remaining joint tenant: In addition to any other applicable exclusion (e.g., transfers between spouses), no change in ownership occurs upon the creation or transfer of a joint tenancy interest if the transferor remains one of the joint tenants. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 65(b)]

(2) [13:106] Reappraisal upon termination: However, upon termination of such transferor's joint tenancy interest, the entire portion of the property held by them before creating the joint tenancy will be reappraised unless it vests (in whole or in part) in any remaining original transferor (in which event, no reappraisal will occur). Upon termination of the last surviving original transferor's interest, the interest then transferred and all other interests held by all original transferors that were previously excluded from reappraisal will be reappraised. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 65(c); see also Benson v. Marin County Assessment Appeals Bd. (2013) 219 CA4th 1445, 1458-1461, 162 CR3d 498, 507-509—brother's termination of family joint tenancy with sibling and creation of tenancy in common constituted "change in ownership" allowing reassessment of residential property]

Compare: No reappraisal will occur upon the termination of an interest held by one other than the original transferor in joint tenancy property subject to the Rev. & Tax.C. § 65(b) exclusion if the entire interest is transferred either to an original transferor or to all remaining joint tenants … provided that one of the remaining joint tenants is an original transferor. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 65(d)]

g. [13:107] Property damaged/destroyed by disaster—base-year value transfer to comparable property: If property is substantially damaged or destroyed by a disaster (i.e., a "major misfortune or calamity" in an area proclaimed by the Governor to be in a "state of disaster"), the base-year value can be transferred to comparable property within the same county provided the comparable property is acquired or newly-constructed as a replacement within five years after the disaster. [Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2(e), (f); Rev. & Tax.C. § 69(a), (c)(3)]

The five-year period (above) is extended by two years if:

— The last day to transfer the base year value of qualified property to comparable property was on or after March 4, 2020, but on or before the COVID-19 emergency termination date or March 4, 2022, whichever is sooner; or

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

— The property was substantially damaged or destroyed on or after March 4, 2020, but on or before the COVID-19 emergency termination date or March 4, 2022, whichever is sooner. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 69(h)(1), (2)]

The five-year period is extended by three years if:

— The property was substantially damaged or destroyed on or after November 1, 2018, but on or before November 20, 2018, as proclaimed by the Governor and described in the "2018 Camp Fire disaster," paragraph (1) of subdivision (c). [Rev. & Tax.C. § 69(i) (amended Stats. 2023, Ch. 443; eff. 10/8/23)]

Moreover, if so authorized by county ordinance, the base-year value of out-of-county real property that is substantially damaged or destroyed by a disaster can be transferred to comparable replacement property within the adopting county provided the comparable replacement property is acquired or newly-constructed within three years after the damage or destruction of the original property. [Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2(e)(3); Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.3]

(1) [13:108] "Substantial" damage or destruction: Property is deemed "substantially damaged or destroyed" for Rev. & Tax.C. §§ 69 and 69.3 purposes if either the land or improvements sustain physical damage (including by diminution in value due to permanently restricted access occasioned by the disaster) amounting to more than 50% of either the land's or the improvement's full cash value immediately prior to the disaster. [Rev. & Tax.C. §§ 69(c)(1) & 69.3(b)(12)]

(2) [13:109] "Comparable" replacement: Where the replacement is within the same county as the damaged or destroyed property, "comparable" replacement property refers generally to a replacement that is similar in size, utility and function to the damaged or destroyed property. [See Rev. & Tax.C. § 69(c)(2)]

Where the replacement is in a new county authorizing the transfer of base-year valuation pursuant to Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.3, "comparable" replacement means a replacement property that has a "full cash value" satisfying specified criteria for "equal or lesser value." [See Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.3(b)(3), (6), (7) & (8); see also Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.3(b)(11), defining "replacement property" to include any "shelter constituting a place of abode, whether real property or personal property"]

(3) [13:109.1] Application to homeowners who are (i) over age 55, (ii) severely and permanently disabled, or (iii) wildfire or natural disaster victims: See discussion at ¶ 13:91 ff.

[13:109.2 - 13:109.4] Reserved.

h. [13:109.5] "Qualified contaminated property"—base-year value transfer to replacement property; or "new construction" reappraisal exclusion: The base-year value of "qualified contaminated property" (as defined by Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2(i)(2)) may be transferred to property acquired or newly constructed after 1994 as a replacement if the replacement property has a fair market value not exceeding the fair market value of the qualified contaminated property in its uncontaminated condition. The replacement property must be located within the same county unless the board of supervisors of another county adopted a resolution authorizing intercounty transfer of base-year value pursuant to this provision. Further, the replacement property must be acquired or newly constructed within five years after ownership in the qualified contaminated property is sold or otherwise transferred. [See Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2(i)(1)(A); and Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.4(b)]

In addition, the sale or transfer of the original property must either result in (1) a reappraisal of the property at its current fair market value, or (2) a base year value transferred from another property under the provisions for intracounty disaster relief base year value transfer, intercounty disaster relief base year value transfer, principal residence base year value transfer, or base year value transfer for persons who are over age 55, severely and permanently disabled, or victims of wildfire or natural disaster. (See Rev. & Tax.C. §§ 69.4(c), 69, 69.3, 69.5, 69.6.) Relief is not available, however, if the owner or owners of the original property either (1) rebuild and receive the new construction exclusion for qualified contaminated property, or (2) sign a parent-child or intergenerational transfer claim. [See Rev. & Tax.C. §§ 69.4(d), 74.7, 63.1, 63.2]

Alternatively, where remediation of the environmental problems requires the destruction of, or results in substantial damage to, a structure on the qualified contaminated property, repair or replacement of the affected structure performed after the remediation may be excluded from property tax reappraisal as "new construction." The repaired or replacement structure, however, must be similar in size, utility and function to the original structure. [See Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2(i)(1)(B)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(1) [13:109.6] Timely claim of exemption required: Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.4 tax relief is not available unless the taxpayer files a claim therefor with the State Board of Equalization within three years of the date the replacement property was purchased or construction of the replacement property was completed. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.4(f)(1)]

The claimant must prove to the assessor that:

• The claimant did not participate or acquiesce in any act or omission that rendered the property uninhabitable or unusable, or is related to any individual or entity that committed that act or omission; and

• The qualified contaminated property has been designated as a toxic or environmental clean-up site by the State of California or the federal government. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 69.4(f)(2)]

i. [13:110] Acquisition to replace condemned property: The acquisition of real property as a replacement for comparable property from which the acquiring person has been displaced by eminent domain proceedings, public entity acquisition, or governmental action resulting in an inverse condemnation judgment is not a change in ownership. [Cal.Const. Art. XIIIA, § 2(d); Rev. & Tax.C. § 68(a); 18 CCR § 462.5; see also Olive Lane Industrial Park, LLC v. County of San Diego (2014) 227 CA4th 1480, 1491, 174 CR3d 577, 586—Article XIIIA's "clear mandate" ensures property owners can maintain same property tax status for replacement property]

For Rev. & Tax.C. § 68 purposes, the adjusted base-year value of the replacement property is the lower of:

— the fair market value of the replacement property, or — the sum of (i) the adjusted base-year value of the displaced property and (ii) the amount by which the full cash value of the replacement property exceeds 120% of the amount received by the displaced person for the displaced property. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 68(a)(1)-(2); see also Olive Lane Industrial Park, LLC v. County of San Diego, supra, 227 CA4th at 1492-1494, 174 CR3d at 586-588 (interpreting § 68 to permit prospective relief for base-year value transfer claims filed after statute's four-year deadline)]

j. [13:111] Tenant acquisitions of mobilehome park: No change in ownership of mobilehome park rental spaces occurs by a sale to at least 51% of the individual tenants who were renting their spaces before the purchase … provided those tenants form a "resident organization" to operate and maintain the park within one year after the first purchase of a rental space by an individual tenant. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 62.1(a)(2)]

Also exempt from change in ownership reassessment is the transfer of a mobilehome park to a nonprofit corporation or other entity formed by the park tenants for the purpose of purchasing the mobilehome park … provided that, within one year of the acquisition, the individual tenants who were renting at least 51% of the spaces before the transfer participate in the transaction through ownership of an aggregate of at least 51% of the voting stock of (or other membership interests in) the entity that acquires the park. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 62.1(a)(1); see also Rev. & Tax.C. § 62.2 for related "step-transfer" exclusion]

(1) [13:111.1] Compare—transfer of ownership in entity that owns mobilehome park: Transferring a membership in the entity that owns the mobilehome park constitutes a "change in ownership of a pro rata portion of the real property of the park," requiring reassessment for that fraction of the park. This is so unless the transfer is excluded because it is between registered domestic partners, spouses, parents and their children or, under limited circumstances, grandparents and their grandchildren, or it is part of an intergenerational transfer. [Rev. & Tax.C. §§ 62.1(b), 63, 63.1, 63.2] The accepted method used by the State Board of Equalization (SBE) for valuing such parcels involves "extracting" from the total purchase price the book value of the mobilehome and then allocating the remainder of the purchase price to the interest in the park itself. [See Holland v. Assessment Appeals Bd. No. 1 (2014) 58 C4th 482, 487, 167 CR3d 74, 77 (deferring to SBE's assessment method absent a statutorily-mandated one)]

[13:111.2 - 13:111.4] Reserved.

k. [13:111.5] Cotenancy interest transfer upon death: A change in ownership does not include transfer of a cotenancy interest in real property from one cotenant to the other that takes effect upon the death of the transferor, provided:

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

- the transfer is solely between two individuals who together own 100% of the subject property in joint tenancy or as tenants in common;
- as a result of the transferor's death, their interest is transferred to the surviving cotenant, resulting in the surviving cotenant holding 100% ownership in the subject property;
- the subject property was co-owned by the transferor and transferee for the one-year period immediately preceding the transfer, with both cotenants having been record owners;
- the subject property constituted the cotenants' principal residence immediately preceding the transferor's death; and
- the transferee has signed under penalty of perjury an affidavit affirming that they continuously resided with the transferor at the residence for the one-year period immediately preceding the transfer. [See Rev. & Tax.C. § 62.3—applicable only to transfers occurring on or after 1/1/13]

The above exclusion does not apply to any real property transfer for which a separate exclusion applies. [See Rev. & Tax.C. § 62.3(c)]

l. [13:111.6] Floating home marina transfers: A change in ownership does not include the transfer of a floating home marina, as defined, to a nonprofit corporation, stock cooperative corporation, limited equity stock cooperative or other entity formed by the tenants for the purpose of purchasing said marina … provided the individual tenants who were renting at least 51% of the berths in the marina prior to the transfer participate in the transaction through the ownership of an aggregate of at least 51% of the voting stock of, or other ownership or membership interests in, the entity that acquires the marina. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 62.5(a)]

(1) [13:111.7] Compare—transfer of ownership in entity that owns floating home marina: Transferring a membership in the entity that owns the floating home marina constitutes a "change in ownership of a pro rata portion of the real property of the floating home marina." Thus, the transfer requires reassessment for that fraction of the marina. This is so unless the transfer is excluded because it is between registered domestic partners, spouses, parents and their children, or, under limited circumstances, grandparents and their grandchildren, or it is part of an intergenerational transfer. [Rev. & Tax.C. §§ 62.5(b)(1), 62, 63, 63.1, 63.2]

5. [13:112] Reporting Obligations: When California real property, a manufactured home or a floating home is transferred, the transferee has a duty to report the change in ownership to the county assessor. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 480]

The Change in Ownership statement must be filed at the time the document evidencing a change in ownership is recorded or, for property that is not recorded, within 90 days of transfer. [See Rev. & Tax.C. § 480(a), (c), (e)]

If the transfer occurred on the property owner's death, the transferee or trustee (if the property was held in trust) must report the change in ownership to the assessor within 150 days of death. If there is a probate, the deceased owner's personal representative must report the change in ownership to the assessor prior to or at the time the inventory and appraisal is filed with the court clerk. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 480(b), (e)]

➪ [13:113] PRACTICE POINTER: The reporting requirement exists even when there is doubt as to whether a particular transfer constitutes a change in ownership for purposes of triggering reassessment. Thus, in order to avoid penalties (¶ 13:114 ff.), it is important to timely report sufficient facts so the assessor can determine whether an actual change in ownership has occurred. [See Green, "2012 Changes to Property Tax Reporting Requirements for Real Property," Santa Barbara Lawyer 8 (Dec. 2011)]

a. Penalties

(1) [13:114] For individuals: Inadvertent failure to timely file a Change in Ownership Statement in response to the assessor's request results in a penalty of either $100 or 10% of the taxes due, whichever is greater, up to a ceiling of $20,000 on property ineligible for the homeowner's exemption or $5,000 on property eligible for the exemption. [See Rev. & Tax.C. §§ 480(c), 482(a)]

(2) [13:115] For legal entities: There is an automatic, mandatory 10% penalty of the new base-year value for failure to timely file a statement regarding a change in ownership of, or change in control over, property owned by a legal entity. Even if it turns out there was no actual change in ownership or control, a penalty of 10% of the current year's taxes is still imposed. And in either case, there is no ceiling on the total amount due. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 482(b)]

(3) [13:116] Abatement of penalties: Although failure to timely notify the assessor of a change in ownership results in penalties, the penalties may be abated if the taxpayer establishes that the failure to file "was due to reasonable cause and circumstances beyond the assessee's control, and occurred notwithstanding the exercise of ordinary care in the absence of willful neglect." [Rev. & Tax.C. § 483(a), (c)]

6. [13:117] Foreclosure: If a property owner defaults on its property tax obligations, the county tax collector can sell the property to the highest bidder in a public auction once five years or more have passed since the property was tax defaulted (or three years or more have passed in the case of nonresidential commercial property). [See Rev. & Tax.C. § 3691 et seq.; ¶ 4:351.1]

Although the above auction might produce a price that exceeds the amount of property tax owed, the original owner is entitled to the difference between the property tax due and the proceeds from the foreclosure sale. [See Tyler v. Hennepin County (2023) 598 US 631, 647, 143 S.Ct. 1369, 1380—county's retention of excess proceeds from foreclosure sale violated U.S. Constitution's Takings Clause]

Chapter 13. Real Property
Purchase and Sale Tax Concerns

Part II. Ownership of Real Property

A. Pertinent Tax Issues

1. [13:120.1] Advantages of “Above-the-Line” Deductions for Rental Property
2. [13:120.2] Deduction for Real Estate Business “Start-Up Costs”

[13:120] As an owner of real property, a taxpayer is concerned with the following tax issues, treated in the sections below:

• Depreciation deductions (¶ 13:121 ff.)

• Tax treatment of repairs vs. improvements (deductions vs. capitalization and depreciation) (¶ 13:150 ff.)

• Interest deductions (¶ 13:165 ff.)

• Real property tax deductions (¶ 13:200 ff.)

• Deductibility of operating losses (¶ 13:205 ff.)

• Allocation of deductions between co-owners and partners (¶ 13:260 ff.)

• Tax consequences of leasing transactions (¶ 13:270 ff.)

• Deductions for home offices and vacation homes (¶ 13:292 ff.)

1. [13:120.1] Advantages of “Above-the-Line” Deductions for Rental Property: Deductions arising from ownership of real property held for rental are “above-the-line,” meaning they are deducted from the taxpayer's gross income, as opposed to adjusted gross income (AGI), regardless of whether the rental is classified as a trade or business. [See IRC § 62(a)(1), (4)]

“Above-the-line” deduction status is normally quite advantageous because the taxpayer can take the deductions related to the rental use of the property and also claim the standard IRC § 63(b) deduction. Above-the-line classification also means the deductions are not subject to reduction based on the taxpayer's AGI (see IRC §§ 67, 68, 151(d)(3), 213(a)); and it has a positive effect on IRC § 56(b) alternative minimum tax computations made by the taxpayer.

2. [13:120.2] Deduction for Real Estate Business “Start-Up Costs”: A taxpayer may deduct the costs of doing business only after the business actually has begun (IRC § 162). A real estate business does not begin when the taxpayer enters into a contract to purchase real property, but only after the purchase is completed. Thus, the costs of investigating real estate opportunities, marketing and taking courses, etc., are not deductible unless incurred after active conduct of the real estate business has commenced with the acquisition of real property. [See Woody v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2009-93; see also McPartland v. Commissioner, TC Summ.Opn. 2012-88—no deductions allowed for expenses relating to property's purchase and renovation incurred two years before property was offered for rent and three years before it was actually rented]

(b) [13:138.7] Allocation
(4) [13:139] Election to use 40-year term
(5) [13:140] Special rule for tax-exempt use property
(a) [13:141] 35% threshold limitation
(b) [13:142] Tax-exempt lessee
(c) [13:143] "Disqualified lease"
b. [13:144] Year of acquisition or disposition
5. [13:146] Reduction of Basis
6. [13:147] Compare—Loss Deductions Reducing Basis
7. [13:148] Recapture of Depreciation and Capital Gain Treatment

1. [13:121] Deduction Eligibility—In General: The owner of buildings or other improvements to real property (including fixtures) that are either used in a trade or business or held for the production of income is entitled to an annual depreciation deduction (also called "cost recovery" or ACRS) to measure the "exhaustion"/"wear and tear" of the property over its "useful life" and to match that cost against the annual income produced by the property. [IRC §§ 167, 168]

The term "amortization" is often used to refer to the depreciation of intangible assets (such as the cost of acquiring a lease or a contract right).

a. [13:122] Notwithstanding appreciating value: Depreciation deductions are available even though the property is actually appreciating in value. [IRC §§ 167, 168]

b. [13:123] Property for personal use: The taxpayer's personal residence and other buildings held for personal use are not depreciable. [IRC § 167(a); but see ¶ 13:303.9 for discussion of depreciating property converted from personal to rental use]

c. [13:124] Underlying land in general: Land may not be depreciated, even if improved by depreciable real property. [See Lomas Santa Fe, Inc. v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1982) 693 F2d 71, 72; Houston Chronicle Publishing Co. v. United States (5th Cir. 1973) 481 F2d 1240, 1258]

(1) [13:124.1] Golf greens preparation costs: The depreciability of the costs of preparing golf greens depends on whether the greens are part of a "push-up" (natural soil) or "modern" course.

(a) [13:124.2] "Push-up" or natural soil golf greens: The costs of preparing land in the original construction or reconstruction of greens on a "push-up" or natural soil golf course (i.e., a course involving some reshaping or regrading of land without a subsurface drainage system) are not depreciable. [Rev.Rul. 2001-60, 2001-2 CB 587]

(b) [13:124.3] "Modern" greens: On the other hand, land preparation costs undertaken in the original construction or reconstruction of greens on a "modern" course (i.e., a course using technological changes in green design and construction, as well as sophisticated integrated drainage systems) that are closely associated with depreciable assets, such as the underlying drainage system that may be periodically excavated and replaced, are depreciable. [Rev.Rul. 2001-60, supra]

However, preconstruction costs of earthmoving, grading, and initial shaping of the area surrounding and under "modern" greens are inextricably associated with the land, a nondepreciable asset, and thus are likewise not depreciable. [Rev.Rul. 2001-60, supra]

2. [13:125] Taxpayers Entitled to Claim Depreciation: Depreciation is claimed by the person who both (a) has made a capital investment in the eligible real property (United States v. Cocke (5th Cir. 1968) 399 F2d 433, 446-447) and (b) is entitled to the benefits and burdens of ownership. [Estate of Franklin v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1976) 544 F2d 1045, 1049]

- [13:126] As between mortgagor and mortgagee, the mortgagor claims the deduction (even if the mortgagee has title to the property). [Bittker & Lokken, "Federal Taxation of Income, Estates & Gifts"¶ 23.1.8 (3d ed. 1999 and current supp.)]
- [13:127] As between landlord and tenant, the landlord depreciates buildings that the landlord paid for; the tenant depreciates buildings that the tenant paid for. [Trustees of Graceland Cemetery Improvement Fund v. United States (Ct.Cl. 1975) 515 F2d 763, 779; Bittker & Lokken, supra at ¶ 23.1.9]
- [13:128] As between buyer and seller, if the seller retains all the benefits and burdens of ownership, the buyer cannot claim depreciation on the property, despite the fact that formal legal title transferred from seller to buyer. [Arevalo v. Commissioner (5th Cir. 2006) 469 F3d 436, 439-440 (sale of payphones)]

3. Amount Subject to Depreciation

a. [13:129] Percentage measurement; allocation of basis: Depreciation is measured by applying a percentage each year to the basis of the property. Since land is not depreciable (¶ 13:124), basis must be allocated between land and buildings. Salvage value of the property is ignored. The components of a building may not be separately depreciated. [IRC § 168]

b. [13:130] Personal vs. real property: Personal property used in business can be depreciated over a much shorter period than real property and a more favorable computation method can be used for personal property. [IRC § 168(b), (c)]

Most personal property ordinarily is depreciated over a five or seven-year period. Appliances, carpets and furniture in rental real estate are depreciated over the shorter five-year period. [See Harmelink & Vandenburgh, "Changes in Depreciation For Rental Real Estate Activities"(Sept. 2000) 78 Taxes 33]

(1) [13:131] Standards for identifying personal property: Generally, the distinction between real and personal property for depreciation purposes follows the distinctions drawn under prior law for purposes of the (now-repealed) investment tax credit (the investment tax credit was available only for the purchase of "tangible personal property"). [Hospital Corp. of America & Subsidiaries v. Commissioner (1997) 109 TC 21, 55]

In addition, items (other than a building or its structural components) used as an integral part of manufacturing, production or extraction, or of furnishing transportation, communication or utility services, are treated as personal rather than real property. [IRC §§ 168(e)(2)(B), 1250(c), 1245(a)(3); Treas.Reg. § 1.1245-3(b)(1); see Texas Instruments, Inc. v. Commissioner, TC Memo 1992-306—electrical system that can function separately from general building system is not a "structural component"]

(a) [13:132] Tangible personal property: For this purpose, "tangible personal property" includes items affixed to the building or the ground, such as shelves, signs or gasoline pumps, which can be removed without undue damage. [Treas.Reg. § 1.48-1(c); see Hospital Corp. of America & Subsidiaries v. Commissioner (1997) 109 TC 21, 56-57; and Bittker & Lokken, "Federal Taxation of Income, Estates & Gifts"¶ 27.2.3 (3d ed. 1999 and current supp.)]

Thus, the distinction between real and personal property for depreciation purposes does not follow state law rules for "fixtures." [Hospital Corp. of America & Subsidiaries v. Commissioner, supra, 109 TC at 56-57]

• [13:132.1] Examples: Outdoor advertising signs, although attached to the ground, are personal property because they are not "inherently permanent structures." [Whiteco Industries, Inc. v. Commissioner (1975) 65 TC 664, 670-673]

Similarly, trellises designed for growing grapes and made from posts, stakes and wires, are personal property because they can be moved without undue damage. But underground drip irrigation systems and wells are real property since they cannot be removed without being damaged or destroyed. [Trentadue v. Commissioner (2007) 128 TC 91, 106-107]

(b) [13:132.2] Immediate expensing in year of purchase of tangible personal property: The entire cost of certain tangible personal property used in a trade or business (including commercial, but not residential, real estate) can be deducted in the year of purchase. The taxpayer must make an election to immediately expense these items. [IRC § 179(a)]

The maximum aggregate cost of these items is $1,000,000. However, there is a phaseout of the maximum allowable amount of IRC § 179 purchases (i.e., the "phaseout level"). The phaseout level is $2,500,000 in 2018, adjusted annually for inflation in $10,000 increments. If the total cost of § 179 purchases exceeds the phaseout level, the maximum § 179 deduction is reduced dollar-for-dollar by the excess of such purchases over the phaseout level. [IRC § 179(a), (b)(1), (2)]

(The above figures may well change through subsequent legislation, so counsel should monitor § 179 carefully.)

(c) [13:132.3] Immediate expensing of certain real property: The Code allows taxpayers to elect immediate expensing of purchases of "qualified real property." [IRC § 179(e)(1)-(2)]

"Qualified real property" means depreciable property used in the trade or business that is qualified improvement property (IRC § 168(e)(6); ¶ 13:137.2a), or any improvements to the roofs, heating, ventilation and air conditioning, fire protection and alarm systems, as well as security systems on nonresidential real property placed in service after the property was first placed in service. [IRC § 179(e)(2)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

4. [13:133] "Straight-Line" Depreciation Method: Real property can be depreciated only by the "straight-line method"—i.e., an equal amount of depreciation for every year, not a greater amount in the early years of ownership. [IRC § 168(b)(3)]

a. Applicable percentages (depreciation period)

(1) [13:134] Normal periods: Generally, there are two applicable "recovery" (depreciation) periods, depending on whether the property is residential or nonresidential:

(a) [13:135] Residential rental property (such as an apartment building) is depreciated over 27.5 years (or. 036363 per year except for the year of acquisition and disposition). [IRC § 168(c)]

A building or structure is "residential rental property" for depreciation purposes if at least 80% of the gross rental income for the taxable year is rental income from dwelling units (i.e., houses or apartments used for living accommodations). Hotels, motels and other structures hired out on a transient basis are not residential rental property. [IRC § 168(e)(2)(A)]

(b) [13:136] Nonresidential real property—i.e., property which is not residential rental property (such as a factory or office building)—is depreciated over 39 years (or. 025641 per year except for the year of acquisition and disposition). [IRC § 168(c)]

This provision applies to property placed in service on or after May 13, 1993. The recovery period was 31.5 years for property placed in service prior to that date.

(2) [13:137] Improvements: Improvements constructed by a lessor or lessee ordinarily are depreciated over 27.5 or 39-year periods, depending on whether the property is residential or nonresidential (¶ 13:134 ff.), regardless of the age of the building or the term of the lease. [IRC § 168(i)(6), (8)]

(a) [13:137.1] Example: Tenant leases for five years a nonresidential building that was constructed 10 years before the lease began, and pays $1,000,000 to improve the building. Tenant's improvements must be depreciated over 39 years from the date they were placed in service.

(b) [13:137.2] "Bonus depreciation": Property acquired and placed in service after 9/27/17 and before 1/1/23 with a useful life of 20 years or less qualifies for bonus depreciation, meaning that 100% of the purchase price can be deducted in the year of purchase (or the year costs were incurred in the case of construction). [See Field Agent Advice 2014202F—bonus depreciation denied to owner of new hotel complex for failure to demonstrate when each cost was incurred]

For qualified property placed in service by a taxpayer during the first taxable year ending after 9/27/17, the taxpayer may elect to use the former 50% recovery rate instead of the 100% rate (IRC § 168(k)(10)). For qualified property placed in service after 12/31/22, the recovery rate will be phased out as follows: 80% in 2023, 60% in 2024, 40% in 2025 and 20% in 2026. [IRC § 168(k)(6)(A)]

1) [13:137.2a] Qualified improvement property (QIP): QIP means any improvement made by the taxpayer to an interior portion of a building that is non-residential real property if the improvement is placed in service after the date the building was first placed in service (IRC § 168(e)(6)(A)). It does not include any improvement for which the expenditure is attributable to the enlargement of the building, any elevator or escalator, or the internal structural framework of the building. [IRC § 168(e)(6)(B)]

QIP is classified as "15-year property," and therefore qualifies for 100% bonus depreciation. [IRC § 168(e)(3)(E)(vii)]

Caution: The 2017 Tax Act (Pub.L. 115-97) eliminated the special provisions for Qualified Leasehold Improvement Property (¶ 13:137.3 ff.), Qualified Restaurant Property (¶ 13:137.10 ff.) and Qualified Retail Improvement Property (¶ 13:137.12). Thus, the following discussion applies only to QIPs placed in service after 9/27/17, when bonus depreciation begins, and before 1/1/18, when these former categories were eliminated.

2) [13:137.3] Qualified leasehold improvement property (QLIP): QLIP means improvements made by the lessor or lessee (including a sublessee) to an interior portion of a nonresidential building. The improved portion must be occupied exclusively by the lessee (or sublessee). And the improvement must have been placed in service more than three years after the date the building was first placed in service by any person. [Former IRC § 168(k)(3)(A)]

A QLIP does not include any improvement for which the expenditure is attributable to enlargement of the building, an elevator or escalator, a structural component benefiting a common area or the internal structural framework of the building. And a lease between "related persons" is not treated as a lease. [Former IRC § 168(k)(3)(B), (C)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

3) [13:137.4] 50% of purchase price can be expensed; 15-year depreciation period for remainder—effective dates: As stated, 50% of the purchase price (100% if acquired and placed in service after 9/27/17) of a QLIP can be deducted as an expense in the year of purchase. This tax treatment applies to property acquired and placed into service before January 1, 2018 (or acquired by the taxpayer pursuant to a binding written contract entered into before January 1, 2013 and placed in service before January 1, 2014; or, in the case of certain property having longer production periods, before January 1, 2018). [IRC § 168(k)(2)(A), (B)]

The remaining 50% of the purchase price is subject to depreciation over a 15-year period (much shorter than the normal useful life of 39 years; ¶ 13:137). To qualify for 15-year depreciation, the QLIP must be placed in service before January 1, 2018. [Former IRC § 168(e)(3)(E)(iv)]

a) [13:137.5] Limitation as to lessor's successor in interest: If the lessor paid for the QLIP, a person who acquires the property from the lessor by means of a taxable purchase may not use the 15-year write-off period. However, if the transferee acquired the property through a nontaxable transfer (e.g., a § 1031 exchange), the transferee may continue to use the 15-year period. [Former IRC § 168(e)(6)(B)]

[13:137.6 - 13:137.9] Reserved.

(c) [13:137.10] 15-year depreciation for qualified restaurant property: Unlike QLIPs (¶ 13:137.3 ff.), “qualified restaurant property” (¶ 13:137.11) is not eligible for 50% (100% if acquired and placed in service after 9/27/17) bonus depreciation unless it separately qualifies as QLIP (former IRC § 168(e)(7)(B)). However, the 15-year depreciation period applicable to QLIPs (¶ 13:137.4) also applies to these properties. [Former IRC § 168(e)(3)(E)(v)]

1) [13:137.11] Qualified restaurant property (QRP): QRP means a building, or improvement to a building, if more than 50% of the building's square footage is devoted to preparation of, and seating for, on-premises consumption of prepared meals. [Former IRC § 168(e)(7)]

Unlike QLIPs, a QRP improvement may be made to the exterior of the building; indeed, it can be construction of the building itself. And the building can be new, as opposed to QLIPs where the building must be at least three years old (¶ 13:137.3).

(d) [13:137.12] Qualified retail improvement property (QRIP): QRIP means any improvement to an interior portion of a nonresidential building if it is open to the general public and is used in the retail trade or business of selling tangible personal property to the general public. These improvements must be placed in service more than three years after the date the building was first placed in service. Thus, QRIP resembles QLIP, but the primary difference is that QRIP applies to owner-occupied space (there need not be a lease). Like QLIPs, QRIPs do not include improvements for which the expenditure is attributable to an enlargement of the building, an elevator or escalator, any structural component benefiting a common area or the internal structural framework of the building. [Former IRC § 168(e)(8)]

(e) [13:138] Abandonment of leasehold improvements at lease termination: A lessee who abandons leasehold improvements at termination of the lease before the basis of the improvements has been recovered through depreciation may claim a loss deduction for the improvements' remaining basis. Likewise, a lessor who disposes of or abandons the improvements at the lease's termination may claim a loss deduction. [IRC § 168(i)(8)(B)]

[13:138.1 - 13:138.4] Reserved.

(3) [13:138.5] Intangibles: “Intangible” assets purchased by a taxpayer can be depreciated over 15 years (rather than the 27.5 or 39-year periods normally applicable to real property). [IRC § 197]

(a) [13:138.6] Types of “intangible” assets: Intangibles include goodwill and going concern value, workforce in place, favorable contracts with customers, favorable market position, favorable contracts with suppliers of goods and services, covenants not to compete, business books and records, trademarks and tradenames, and customer lists. However, IRC § 197 does not cover interests in land (broadly defined).

(b) [13:138.7] Allocation: It may be possible to allocate part of the purchase price of certain real property to intangibles, particularly where the owners render substantial services (as in the case of a hotel).

However, the legislative history of IRC § 197 creates substantial doubt whether purchasers of rental real property can allocate anything to intangibles. And the Code explicitly prohibits allocation of any part of the purchase price of real estate to a lease to which the property is subject. [IRC § 167(c)(2); see Union Carbide Foreign Sales Corp. v.

Commissioner (2000) 115 TC 423, 439-440 (disagreed with by ABC Beverage Corp. v. United States (6th Cir. 2014) 756 F3d 438, 446)—taxpayer could not allocate any portion of tanker's purchase price to deduction for termination of burdensome lease; but see ¶ 13:283.2 (deductibility of lease cancellation payments to lessee)]

Therefore, this issue must be approached very cautiously. [See Stara & Schnee, "Maximizing Deductions When Acquiring Real Property Leases" (1996) 27 The Tax Adviser 166]

(4) [13:139] Election to use 40-year term: A taxpayer can elect to depreciate eligible real property over a 40-year useful life instead of the shorter terms normally applicable. [IRC § 168(g)]

The same longer life applies in certain circumstances to property used outside the United States, leased to a tax-exempt entity or financed by tax-exempt bonds (¶ 13:140 ff.). [IRC § 168(h)]

(5) [13:140] Special rule for tax-exempt use property: Nonresidential real property leased to a tax-exempt entity under a "disqualified lease" (¶ 13:143) can be depreciated only over 40 years (or a term of 125% of the lease if that is longer than 40 years). [IRC § 168(g)(1)(C), (2), (3)(A)]

(a) [13:141] 35% threshold limitation: This rule applies only if the portion of the property leased to a tax-exempt entity is more than 35% of the property. [IRC § 168(h)(1)]

(b) [13:142] Tax-exempt lessee: For purposes of the tax-exempt use property rule, a tax-exempt lessee is a government or any other tax-exempt entity (including, but not limited to, charitable organizations). Also, under certain circumstances, foreign persons or entities are treated as tax-exempt lessees if most of their income is not subject to U.S. taxation. [IRC § 168(h)(2)]

(c) [13:143] "Disqualified lease": A lease is "disqualified" within the meaning of IRC § 168(h) only if (i) the property was financed directly or indirectly by the use of tax-exempt bonds, or (ii) the property is subject to an option to purchase or sell at a fixed or determinable price to the tax-exempt entity (or a related entity), or (iii) the lease term exceeds 20 years, or (iv) the property was sold or leased by the tax-exempt entity (after the tax-exempt entity had used the property for at least three months) and leased back. [IRC § 168(h)(1)(B)(ii)]

Leases of fewer than three years are not "disqualified." [IRC § 168(h)(1)(C)]

b. [13:144] Year of acquisition or disposition: During the year property is acquired, the available depreciation amount must be allocated monthly. The taxpayer is treated as having purchased the property in the middle of the month in which it is actually purchased. The same rule applies to the year of disposition: Property is deemed disposed of in the middle of the month in which the disposition occurs. [IRC § 168(d)(2) & (4)(B)]

• [13:145] Example: T buys a shopping center building for $1,000,000 on June 30 in Year 1. The applicable percentage is 0.025641; thus, in Year 2, T can deduct depreciation of $25,641. In Year 1, however, T is treated as having purchased the property on June 15, meaning T can deduct 11/24 of a full year's depreciation. Thus, in Year 1, T deducts depreciation of only $11,752.

5. [13:146] Reduction of Basis: The basis of property is reduced by depreciation allowed or allowable, whichever is greater. Thus, if a taxpayer fails to deduct the full amount of depreciation available in a given year and the statute of limitations has run on filing an amended return for that year, the basis is reduced by the amount that should have been claimed. [IRC § 1016(a)(2)]

6. [13:147] Compare—Loss Deductions Reducing Basis: The basis of property is also reduced by loss deductions, such as casualty losses. In addition, the taxpayer is entitled to a deduction for abnormal retirement of a building that is abandoned. [Treas.Reg. § 1.167(a)-8(a)(4)] Basis would be reduced by such a deduction. Although no deduction is allowed for demolition of a building (IRC § 280B; see ¶ 13:41), a taxpayer can avoid this problem by taking a loss deduction for abnormal retirement before abandoning the building. [De Cou v. Commissioner (1994) 103 TC 80, 86-87; see ¶ 13:41.2]

7. [13:148] Recapture of Depreciation and Capital Gain Treatment: When depreciable real property is sold at a gain, part or all of the gain is attributable to prior depreciation deductions. Capital gain attributable to depreciation is taxed at the rate of 25% instead of the 20% rate normally applicable to long-term capital gain (¶ 13:416 ff., 13:457 ff.). Only gain (if any) that exceeds prior depreciation is taxed at the 20% rate. [IRC § 1(h)(6); see ¶ 13:417.5 ff.]

• [13:148.1] P bought Factory in 1995 for $1,000,000 and sold it in 1999 for $960,000. P correctly claimed depreciation of $100,000 on Factory, so P's adjusted basis at the time of sale was $900,000. The long-term capital gain on the sale is $60,000. Because $60,000 was less than the depreciation previously taken on Factory, the entire gain is taxed at the rate of 25%.
• [13:148.2] Suppose instead that Factory was sold in 1999 for $1,150,000. The gain is $250,000, of which $100,000 would be taxed at 25% and $150,000 at 20%.

1. [13:150] Deductible Expense vs. Capitalized Cost: A repair to property held for use in a trade or business or for production of income is currently deductible. On the other hand, an improvement must be capitalized, added to basis and depreciated. [IRC §§ 162(a), 263(a); see Smith v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 2002) 300 F3d 1023, 1028-1029—characterization of payment as business expense or capital expenditure concerns timing of taxpayer's cost recovery]

(Repairs to property held for personal use—such as a personal residence—cannot be deducted. But improvements to such assets should be capitalized and added to the property's basis.)

a. [13:150.1] Regulations: To provide guidance on various issues relating to capitalization of repair costs, the Treasury Department issued extensive temporary regulations in 2011 that replaced numerous existing regulations. These regulations were first proposed in 2006, reissued in modified form in 2008, and finally issued as temporary regulations in 2012, with the effective date scheduled for January 1, 2014. In September 2013, however, new final regulations were issued to largely replace the temporary regulations. [Treas.Decis. 9636; Treas.Reg. §§ 1.162 & 1.263]

2. [13:151] Distinguishing "Repairs" From "Improvements": Many cases have confronted the problem of distinguishing "repairs" from "improvements" for tax purposes. The regulations provide that a "taxpayer may deduct amounts paid for repairs and maintenance to tangible property if the amounts paid are not otherwise required to be capitalized." [Treas.Reg. § 1.162-4(a)]

In determining whether an expense item must be capitalized, the regulations further provide that no deduction is allowed for "(1) Any amount paid for new buildings or for permanent improvements or betterments made to increase the value of any property or estate; or (2) Any amount paid in restoring property or in making good the exhaustion thereof for which an allowance is or has been made." [Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-1(a)]

a. [13:151.1] Factors considered: In determining whether costs should be classified as deductible repairs or capital expenditures, the purpose, physical nature and effect of the work are considered. Although the "high cost" of work performed may be relevant to whether it is capital in nature, cost alone is not dispositive. Similarly, the fact that a regulatory agency requires a taxpayer to make certain repairs or perform certain maintenance does not mean the work is a capital improvement. [Rev.Rul. 2001-4, 2001-1 CB 295]

b. [13:151.2] "Safe harbor" for small businesses: The regulations permit taxpayers with average gross receipts of less than $10,000,000 over the preceding three years to deduct, rather than capitalize, amounts for "repairs, maintenance, improvements, and similar activities performed on the eligible building property." This is so provided the total amount paid does not exceed the lesser of 2% of the unadjusted basis of the eligible building property or $10,000. [Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-3(h)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

3. Tests Under Regulations

a. [13:152] Routine maintenance: Clearly, items of routine and recurring maintenance that simply keep the building in shape so that it can be used for its designated purpose can be currently deducted as "repair" costs. [Treas.Reg. § 1.162-4; Rev.Rul. 94-12, 1994-1 CB 36]

Deductible "repair" costs are those incurred for the purpose of keeping the property in "an ordinarily efficient operating condition over its probable useful life for the uses for which the property was acquired." [Rev.Rul. 2001-4, 2001-1 CB 295]

(1) [13:152a] "Safe harbor": The regulations set forth a "safe harbor" for routine property maintenance, defining it as "the recurring activities that a taxpayer expects to perform as a result of the taxpayer's use [of the property] … to keep the building structure or each building system in its ordinarily efficient operating condition." Moreover, the "amount paid for routine maintenance … is deemed not to improve that unit of property." [Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-3(i)(1)(i)]

By the same token, "activities are routine only if the taxpayer reasonably expects to perform the activities more than once during the 10-year period beginning at the time the building structure or the building system upon which the routine maintenance is performed is placed in service by the taxpayer," or in the case of a unit of property, more than once during the class life of that property. [See Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-3(i)(1)(i), (ii); Sapirie, "Final Repair Regs Finally Released in 2013" (Jan. 6, 2014) Tax Notes at 31]

(2) [13:152b] Examples: The regulations set forth numerous examples of activities that fall within the routine maintenance "safe harbor," including:

— Inspections;

— Cleaning;

— Testing; and

— Replacement of damaged or worn parts with comparable and commercially available parts for property units. [See Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-3(i)(1)(i)]

(3) [13:152c] Exceptions: Routine maintenance does not include amounts paid for:

— Betterment of a property unit under Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-3(j);

— Replacing a property unit component for which the taxpayer has properly deducted a loss;

— Replacing a property unit component for which the taxpayer has properly taken into account the component's adjusted basis in realizing gain or loss from its sale or exchange;

— Restoring a damaged property unit for which the taxpayer is required to take a basis adjustment as a result of a casualty loss;

— Returning a property unit to its ordinarily efficient operating condition where it has deteriorated to a state of disrepair and is no longer functional for its intended use;

— Adapting a property unit to a new or different use; and — Repairing, maintaining or improving network assets under Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-3(e)(3)(iii). [See Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-3(i)(3)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

b. [13:152.1] Amounts paid to "improve" property: Under the regulations, a building is "improved" if the amount paid (1) results in a "betterment" to the property; (2) "restores" the property; or (3) "adapts the [property] to a new or different use." [Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-3(j), (k), (l)]

(1) [13:152.2] Betterments: A taxpayer must capitalize the cost of a betterment. Under the regulations, a "betterment":

- Ameliorates a material condition or defect that either existed prior to the taxpayer's acquisition of the property unit or arose during production of the property unit, whether or not the taxpayer was aware of the condition or defect at the time of acquisition or production;

- Is a material addition to the property unit, including a physical enlargement, expansion, extension or addition of a major component;

- Is a material increase in the property unit's capacity (including additional cubic or linear space); or

- Is reasonably expected to materially increase the productivity, efficiency, strength, quality or output of the property unit. [Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-3(j)(1)]

(a) [13:152.3] Example: X owns a chain of retail stores. X periodically changes the layout and appearance of its stores (e.g., by reconfiguring them to better display merchandise). The amounts paid for updating the buildings are not treated as betterments and can be deducted currently even though X capitalized the cost of the work on its financial statements.

Comment: The expenditure undoubtedly increased the value of the stores and improved their appearance, but it did not result in a material increase in capacity or quality and thus did not qualify as a "betterment." [Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-3(j)(3), ex. 6]

(b) [13:152.4] Expenditures required due to wear and tear, etc.: If an expenditure is required due to normal wear and tear or damage that occurred during the taxpayer's use of the property, the determination of whether the expenditure results in a "betterment" is made by comparing the property's condition immediately after the expenditure with its condition immediately prior to the circumstances necessitating the expenditure. [Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-3(j)(2)(iv)]

1) [13:152.5] Example: X owns a building that it uses for its retail business. Over time, the waterproof membrane (top layer) on the roof wears out and the roof starts to leak. To fix the leak, X installs a new rubber membrane on the roof. The new membrane is comparable to the original membrane when it was placed on the roof. This is not considered a betterment. It is not an addition and it does not increase the capacity of the building. Moreover, it is not reasonably expected to materially increase the productivity, efficiency, strength, quality or output of the building when compared with the building's condition before the original membrane deteriorated. [Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-3(j)(3), ex. 13]

(2) [13:152.6] Restoration: A taxpayer must capitalize the cost of a restoration. Under the regulations, a restoration:

- Replaces a property unit component for which the taxpayer properly deducted a loss;

- Replaces a property unit component for which the taxpayer properly took into account the component's adjusted basis in realizing gain or loss resulting from its sale or exchange;

- Repairs damages for which the taxpayer properly took a casualty loss deduction;

- Returns the property to its ordinarily efficient operating condition if the property has deteriorated to a state of disrepair and is no longer functional for its intended use;

- Results in the rebuilding of the property to a like-new condition at the end of its class life; or

- Replaces a major component or a substantial structural part of the property unit. [Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-3(k)(1)]

(a) [13:152.7] Example: X owns a retail store and finds a leak in the roof. The sheathing and rafters have rotted and the entire roof must be replaced. Under these circumstances, the new roof is a "major component or substantial structural part" of the store. Thus, X is required to capitalize the amount paid to replace the roof. [Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-3(k)(7), ex. 14]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(3) [13:152.8] Adaptation to new or different use: Taxpayers must capitalize any cost that "adapt[s] a unit of property to a new or different use." This occurs if "the adaptation is not consistent with the taxpayer's intended ordinary use of the unit of property at the time originally placed in service." [Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-3(l)(1)]

• [13:152.9] The cost of converting a factory to a showroom must be capitalized because the conversion results in a "new and different use." [Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-3(l)(3), ex. 1]

• [13:152.10] The cost of removing walls in a shopping center to enlarge the space needed by a new tenant need not be capitalized since the use (leasing for retail stores) remains the same. [Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-3(l)(3), ex. 2]

• [13:152.11] X repaints the interior walls and refinishes the hardwood floors of a shopping center in anticipation of its sale. The costs need not be capitalized because preparing the building for sale as a shopping center does not constitute a "new or different use." [Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-3(l)(3), ex. 3]

c. [13:153] Unexpected repairs: Some cases allow nonroutine, highly extraordinary items to be deducted as repairs, rather than capitalized as improvements, because they result from an unexpected problem. Thus, the expenditure merely returns the property to the same value it had before the problem arose, as opposed to making it more valuable. [See Plainfield-Union Water Co. v. Commissioner (1962) 39 TC 333, 338-339 (relining pipes damaged by acidic water is deductible); Midland Empire Packing Co. v. Commissioner (1950) 14 TC 635, 642, acq. 1950-2 CB 3 (oil proofing basement was deductible because expenditure served only to permit continued use of property for normal operations rather than prematurely closing plant)]

The regulations (¶ 13:150.1) incorporate the above case analyses. If the unexpected event requires repairs and the post-repair property is neither adapted to a different use nor increased in capacity, the taxpayer will not need to capitalize the repair. [See Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-3(j)(3), ex. 12 (similar to Midland Empire facts)]

(1) [13:153.1] Compare—items that initially should have been in place: If the particular item should have been built into the structure in the first place, its cost probably must be capitalized even though it was installed in response to a later-arising problem or regulatory demand. [Mt. Morris Drive-In Theatre Co. v. Commissioner (6th Cir. 1956) 238 F2d 85, 86 (drainage system); Hotel Sulgrave, Inc. v. Commissioner (1954) 21 TC 619, 621 (sprinkler system)]

(a) [13:153.2] "Betterments" under regulations: The regulations (¶ 13:150.1) treat the items described at ¶ 13:153.1 as betterments. Again, a betterment ameliorates a material condition or defect that existed prior to the taxpayer acquiring the subject property, regardless of whether the taxpayer was aware of the condition or defect at the time of acquisition (¶ 13:152.2). [Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-3(j)(1)(i)]

[13:153.3] Example: X buys a store on land that contains underground gasoline storage tanks left by the prior occupants. The tanks have leaked, causing soil contamination. X's remediation costs must be capitalized. [Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-3(j)(3), ex. 1]

[13:153.4 - 13:153.5] Reserved.

d. Environmental remediation

(1) [13:154] Nonstatutory authority for environmental remediation deduction: Under the general authority of the cases noted at ¶ 13:153 (unexpected major, nonroutine repairs), numerous rulings and cases have allowed deductions for certain environmental clean-up costs because the clean-up restores the property to the value it had before the problem arose (but does not otherwise significantly enhance the value of the property). [Rev.Rul. 94-38, 1994-1 CB 35]

The regulations (¶ 13:150.1) endorse this approach—i.e., environmental clean-up costs would be deductible (see ¶ 13:152.2 and 13:153).

(a) [13:154.1] Removal of polluted soil; groundwater treatment expenditures: The IRS has allowed a current deduction for the cost of removing polluted soil from the taxpayer's land. The pollution resulted from the taxpayer's own operations; and the removal was necessary to comply with environmental laws. The costs were deductible because the removal returned the property to the same state it was in before it was polluted and allowed the taxpayer to continue its manufacturing operations. [Rev.Rul. 94-38, supra (also allowing ongoing groundwater treatment expenditures other than those used to construct permanent treatment facility and monitoring costs as a current deduction)]

The regulations (¶ 13:150.1) endorse the Rev.Rul. 94-38 approach (above). [See Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-3(l)(3), ex. 4—costs incurred for cleaning up land so it can be sold for residential subdivision are deductible by polluting taxpayer (but costs incurred for subdivision purposes must be capitalized)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

1) [13:154.1a] Compare—clean-up resulting from inventory production: If the pollution arose from the operation of a manufacturing plant that produces inventory (i.e., property held for sale to customers in the ordinary course of business), the clean-up cost must be capitalized as part of the indirect costs of producing the inventory. [Rev.Rul. 2005-42, 2005-2 CB 67; Rev.Rul. 2004-18, 2004-1 CB 509]

(b) [13:154.2] Replacement of underground storage tanks: For the same reasons, costs incurred to replace underground storage tanks (USTs) containing waste by-products (including the cost of removing, cleaning, and disposing of the old USTs, and acquiring, installing and filling new USTs) are deductible as ordinary and necessary business expenses under IRC § 162. (The same rule would apply to storage tanks designed to store waste above ground.) [Rev.Rul. 98-25, 1998-1 CB 998]

Compare: Under the regulations, the cost to clean up soil contamination resulting from leaking USTs is considered a betterment regardless whether the taxpayer knew of the contamination at the time the land was acquired. Thus, the clean-up costs must be capitalized. [See Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-3(j)(3), ex. 1]

(c) [13:154.3] Construction of groundwater treatment plan: On the other hand, the taxpayer was required to capitalize costs incurred in constructing a treatment facility to clean up polluted groundwater. The IRS reasoned that the useful life of the plant would extend substantially beyond the end of the year in which it was built (¶ 13:152.1). [Rev.Rul. 94-38, supra]

(d) [13:154.4] Asbestos clean-up: Expenses for asbestos removal and encapsulation are deductible "repairs" if they represent only a "small fraction" of the property's overall value and do not appreciably increase its value, substantially prolong its "useful life," or adapt it to a "new or different use." [Cinergy Corp. v. United States (Fed.Cl. 2003) 55 Fed.Cl. 489, 517, 91 AFTR2d 2003-1229]

Similarly, Tax Court dictum suggests that asbestos removal expense might be deductible if the job was done in isolation as opposed to being performed in conjunction with a general plan of rehabilitation of the building (see ¶ 13:156). [Norwest Corp. & Subsidiaries v. Commissioner (1997) 108 TC 265, 280]

1) [13:154.5] Asbestos remediation to permit new use: The cost of environmental remediation must be capitalized if it allows the taxpayer to adapt the asset to a new use. [Dominion Resources, Inc. v. United States (4th Cir. 2000) 219 F3d 359, 370-372—cost to remove asbestos in land formerly but no longer used for electric generating plant must be capitalized where it permits property to be used for different purpose or sold for real estate development]

2) [13:154.5a] Regulations view: Under the regulations (¶ 13:150.1), a taxpayer may deduct the cost of removing asbestos in a building and replacing it with new insulation that is safer, but no more efficient or effective, than asbestos insulation. [Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-3(j)(3), ex. 2]

(e) [13:154.6] Pollution of taxpayer's former property? It is unsettled whether a taxpayer can deduct the costs incurred in cleaning up property that it formerly owned or operated. Arguably, such costs should be deductible since they do not increase the value of any asset presently owned by the taxpayer. [See Priv.Ltr.Rul. 9627002—taxpayer that contaminated land, donated it to city and then reacquired it, allowed to deduct clean-up costs]

The rationale underlying Letter Ruling 9627002 (above) apparently has been adopted by the Court of Federal Claims. [See Kerr-McGee Corp. v. United States (Fed.Cl. 2007) 77 Fed.Cl. 309, 317-318—remediation of pollution caused by taxpayer during former period of ownership may be deductible after taxpayer reacquires property (but remediation of pollution caused by prior owner may not)]

(f) [13:154.7] Pollution caused by prior owner: Costs incurred by a taxpayer in remediating pollution caused by a prior owner must be capitalized rather than expensed. Such costs are treated as part of the property's purchase price, making Rev.Rul. 94-38 inapplicable. [United Dairy Farmers, Inc. v. United States (6th Cir. 2001) 267 F3d 510, 517; see also Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-3(j)(1)(i), (3), ex. 1; and ¶ 13:153.2 ff.]

(2) [13:155] Statutory authority for environmental remediation deduction: A taxpayer may elect to deduct "qualified environmental remediation expenditures" paid or incurred prior to 2011. [IRC § 198(a), (h)]

This provision covers costs for abating or controlling hazardous substances at qualified contaminated sites where there has been a release, threatened release or disposal of a hazardous substance. To claim the deduction, a certificate from a state environmental agency is required. [IRC § 198(b)(1), (c)]

(Counsel should monitor legislative action for a possible extension of the deduction to expenditures paid or incurred after 2011.)

e. [13:156] Rehabilitation: Specific items of renovation (such as repainting) are deductible as repairs. When these items are incurred as part of a general plan of rehabilitation of a building, however, courts often find that they must be capitalized. [See Moss v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1987) 831 F2d 833, 836—expenditure made as part of general plan of rehabilitation must be capitalized even though, standing alone, item may be classified as repair; Norwest Corp. & Subsidiaries v. Commissioner (1997) 108 TC 265, 284-285—asbestos removal capitalized because removal and building remodeling "part of one intertwined project, entailing a full-blown general plan of rehabilitation, linked by logistical and economic concerns"; Rev.Rul. 2001-4, 2001-1 CB 295—taxpayer required to capitalize otherwise deductible repair and maintenance expenses where taxpayer has "plan to make substantial capital improvements to property and the repairs are incidental to that plan"; and see generally, John W. Lee, Jr., "Deconstructing the General Plan of Rehabilitation Doctrine"(Nov. 11, 2002) 97 Tax Notes 803; Raby & Raby, "IRS Splits on 'General Plan of Renovation' Argument" (Aug. 4, 1997) 76 Tax Notes 669]

➪ [13:156a] CAUTION—REGULATIONS APPROACH*: The regulations do not adopt the "plan of rehabilitation" doctrine described in the cases at ¶ 13:156. Instead, they provide that a taxpayer must capitalize both the direct costs of an improvement as well as the indirect costs that directly benefit or are incurred because of the improvement. Indirect costs, such as repair and maintenance costs, that "do not directly benefit and that are not incurred by reason of an improvement are not required to be capitalized under section 263(a), regardless of whether they are incurred at the same time as an improvement." [Treas.Decis. 9636, "Guidance Regarding Deduction and Capitalization of Expenditures Related to Tangible Property," Section VI.D.1 ("Costs Incurred During an Improvement")]

(1) [13:156.1] "Facts and circumstances" test: Whether a general plan of rehabilitation exists, and whether a particular repair or maintenance item is part of it, are questions of fact determined by the "surrounding facts and circumstances, including, but not limited to, the purpose, nature, extent, and value of the work done." [Rev.Rul. 2001-4, 2001-1 CB 295—"heavy maintenance visit" expenses incurred to make major and minor repairs to aircraft in order to prolong its use capitalized as part of general rehabilitation plan]

(2) [13:156.2] Effect of *nonstructural improvements: Traditionally, the rehabilitation doctrine has been applied in cases involving "substantial capital improvements and repairs to the same specific asset, usually, a structure in a state of disrepair." Thus, applying the doctrine when the rehabilitation plan does not involve any structural renovation "marks a broad extension of [the] doctrine's historical scope." [Moss v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1987) 831 F2d 833, 839-840 & fn. 12 (discussing cases)—fact taxpayer's hotel remodeling plan involved no structural improvements was "significant factor" weighing against applying rehabilitation doctrine]

(3) [13:156.3] Effect of property's "suitability for intended use" during rehabilitation: The fact that the property remains in good operating condition and is "suitable for its intended use" while being "rehabilitated" is not dispositive of whether the rehabilitation doctrine should be applied. However, that fact may show the rehabilitation plan is consistent with the kind of activities necessary to maintain, as opposed to improve, the property, thereby allowing expenses incurred pursuant to the plan to be deducted rather than capitalized. [Moss v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1987) 831 F2d 833, 840-842—taxpayers properly deducted expenses incurred pursuant to hotel remodeling plan because plan consistent with type of repair expenses that hotel required to make to remain competitive and in first-class condition]

(4) [13:156.4] Written plan not dispositive: The fact that repair and maintenance expenses are incurred pursuant to an overall written plan will not automatically trigger the "rehabilitation doctrine" so as to require that the expenditures be capitalized. [Moss v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1987) 831 F2d 833, 842—"mere existence of a written plan is not sufficient to trigger the rehabilitation doctrine"; Rev.Rul. 2001-4, 2001-1 CB 295]

(5) [13:156.5] Application: Taxpayers incurred repainting and repapering expenses as part of a general remodeling plan for replacing a hotel's carpets, drapes and furniture (but not modifying the hotel structure). During the remodel, the hotel enjoyed high ratings and remained in good operating condition. As such, the rehabilitation doctrine did not apply, and Taxpayers properly deducted the repainting and repapering expenses as ordinary and necessary repairs. [Moss v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1987) 831 F2d 833, 840-843]

> "[I]t would be anomalous to require the taxpayers to depreciate normally deductible repairs over thirty years merely because the repairs were made in conjunction with the installation of furnishings having a three-to-five-year useful life." [Moss v. Commissioner, supra, 831 F2d at 842—"In applying the rehabilitation doctrine, the court must evaluate the taxpayers' expenditures in the context of the taxpayer's particular business enterprise"]

(6) [13:157] Compare—credit: In certain cases, the taxpayer can take a credit for a percentage of rehabilitation costs. In the case of a certified historic structure, the credit is 20%. [IRC § 47(a)]

However, there are elaborate restrictions on these credits. Moreover, the government has successfully attacked several so-called "tax credit partnerships" involving private equity investors seeking to effectively purchase historic rehabilitation credits. [See Historic Boardwalk Hall, LLC v. Commissioner (3rd Cir. 2012) 694 F3d 425, 429; Virginia Historic Tax Credit Fund 2001 LP v. Commissioner (4th Cir. 2011) 639 F3d 129, 132; and for further discussion, see Robinson, Federal Income Taxation of Real Estate ¶ 11.12 (6th ed. 1995 and current supp.)]

(a) [13:157.1] Guidance for tax credit partnerships: In the wake of Historic Boardwalk and other decisions (¶ 13:157), the IRS has issued guidance that provides a "safe harbor" for partnerships seeking to allocate rehabilitation tax credits. To qualify:

— the developer and investor must maintain a minimum interest in the partnership (1% and 5% respectively);

— the investor must contribute at least 20% of its total expected capital contributions unconditionally prior to the building being placed in service;

— the investor must maintain the above contribution throughout its ownership of the partnership interest; and

— at least 75% of the investor's total expected capital contributions must be fixed in amount, rather than contingent, before the building is placed in service. [See Rev.Proc. 2014-12, 2014-3 IRB 1 (also specifying permissible and impermissible guarantees that essentially prohibit funded guarantees); see also Breed & DeMartino, "Tax Credits: Historic Boardwalk Guidance, Recommended Practices" (2015) 147 Tax Notes at 1545; Elliott, "IRS Provides Historic Boardwalk Safe Harbor for Rehab Credits"(2014) 142 Tax Notes at 69]

(b) [13:157.2] Treating lessee as owner for credit purposes: If the lessor of rehabilitated property elects to treat the lessee as owner for purposes of the rehabilitation tax credit, the lessee must include ratably in gross income an amount equal to 100% of the credit determined under IRC § 47. [Chief Counsel Advice Memo 201505038]

f. [13:157.5] ADA compliance improvements: Improvements made to bring an existing building into compliance with the Americans with Disabilities Act (such as removal of barriers impeding access by disabled persons) may qualify for a tax credit (IRC § 44) or for expense treatment (IRC § 190). Normally, such outlays would have to be capitalized.

(1) Disabled access tax credit

(a) [13:157.6] Qualifying business: A business is eligible for the IRC § 44 disabled access tax credit if either (i) its gross receipts for the preceding taxable year did not exceed $1 million; or (ii) it did not employ more than 30 full-time employees during the preceding taxable year. [IRC § 44(b)(1)]

(b) [13:157.7] Election required: An eligible business (¶ 13:157.6) must elect the IRC § 44 credit for the taxable year. [IRC § 44(b)(2)]

(c) [13:157.8] Amount of credit: The amount of the disabled access credit is 50% of so much of the eligible access expenditures for the taxable year as exceed $250 but do not exceed $10,250. [IRC § 44(a)]

(2) [13:157.9] Expense deduction for removal of barriers to the disabled: Under IRC § 190, similar expenditures (for "qualified architectural and transportation barrier removal") of up to $15,000 per year can be deducted. [See IRC § 190(a), (b), (c)]

(3) [13:157.10] Electing credit vs. deduction: Of course, a taxpayer cannot claim both the IRC § 44 credit and the IRC § 190 deduction; nor can a taxpayer claim depreciation on an amount that qualified for either the credit or the deduction. [IRC § 44(d)(7)]

An election to take the credit vs. the deduction should be based on whichever treatment yields the most favorable tax consequences.

(a) [13:157.11] Example: T is an attorney who employed 10 people last year. T spent $12,000 to make bathrooms accessible to persons in wheelchairs. Normally, T would have to capitalize and depreciate the $12,000. Under IRC §

44, however, T can elect to take a $6,000 income tax credit for this outlay; the credit reduces T's taxes by $6,000. Alternatively, under IRC § 190, T can deduct the $12,000. T is in the 31% tax bracket and thus would save $3,720 by electing the deduction. T should take the credit, not the deduction.

4. [13:158] Uniform Capitalization Rules: Taxpayers constructing buildings for their own business use, or constructing or acquiring real property for resale, must capitalize rather than deduct costs relating to the construction. Items to be capitalized include direct labor and material costs, and also indirect costs allocable to the property. [IRC § 263A]

Thus, a taxpayer who constructs houses for resale must add various "overhead" costs to the basis of the houses rather than claiming these items as deductions. [See Von-Lusk v. Commissioner (1995) 104 TC 207, 213]

The capitalization rules cover costs incurred before as well as during the development period. [See Von-Lusk v. Commissioner, supra, 104 TC at 213—developer required to capitalize building permit costs even though construction had not yet begun; Reichel v. Commissioner (1999) 112 TC 14, 18-19—developer who purchased property with intent to develop required to capitalize real estate taxes paid even if property never actually developed; Frontier Custom Builders, Inc. v. Commissioner (5th Cir. 2015) 116 AFTR2d 2015-6146—developer required to capitalize sales, marketing and design elements on custom homes]

• [13:159] For example, repairs on building equipment, utilities relating to building equipment, wages of contract supervisors, and many other overhead items all must be capitalized. [IRC § 263A; Treas.Reg. § 1.263A-1(e)]

• [13:159.1] Property taxes must be capitalized if at the time the taxes are incurred it is "reasonably likely" the property subsequently will be developed. [Treas.Reg. § 1.263A-2(a)(3)(ii)]

• [13:160] Additionally, in some circumstances, interest costs incurred to finance production of the property, and allocable to the construction period, must be capitalized. [IRC § 263A(f); Treas.Reg. § 1.263A-8; see Wasco Real Properties I, LLC v. Commissioner (2016) TC Memo 2016-224 (requiring capitalization of interest costs incurred on land used to grow almond trees)]

(For a detailed treatment of the uniform capitalization rules, see Manolakas & Anderson, "Tax Factors in Real Estate Operations" 845-870 (Prentice Hall, 7th ed. 1990).)

5. [13:161] Credits for Personal Residence Energy Efficiency Improvements: The Code provides two different credits for taxpayers who incur expenditures to improve the energy efficiency of their personal residences. Taxpayers should claim the credits on IRC Form 5695. [See IRS FS-2024-15—Fact Sheet: Updates to Frequently Asked Questions about Energy Efficient Home Improvements and Residential Clean Energy Property Credits]

a. [13:161.1] Energy efficient home improvement credit: An individual is entitled to a credit for 30% of the amount paid for "qualified energy efficiency improvements" and "residential energy property expenditures" up to an annual limit of $1,200. An individual also is entitled to a credit for 30% of the amount paid for "home energy audits" up to an annual limit of $150.00. [IRC § 25C(a)(1)-(3), (b)(1), (6) & (e)]

The credit for "residential energy property expenditures" is capped at $600 for any "qualified energy property," such as any qualified electric, natural gas, propane, or oil furnace or hot water boiler, heat pump, heat pump water heater, or central air conditioner, biomass stove or boiler, or energy efficient improvement or replacement of a panelboard, sub-panelboard, branch circuit, feeder, or exterior window or skylight, and $250 for any exterior door up to a maximum of $500 for all exterior doors. [IRC § 25C(a)(2), (b)(2)-(5), (d)(2)]

The IRC § 25C credits expires on December 31, 2032. [IRC § 25C(i)(2)]

(1) [13:161.2] Qualified energy efficiency improvements: These improvements, which must meet various efficiency standards, are energy-efficient "building envelope components" for insulating buildings, doors, and windows. [IRC § 25C(c)]

(2) [13:161.3] Residential energy property expenditures: These expenditures, which must meet various efficiency standards, include qualified furnaces, heat pumps, stoves, boilers and central air conditioners. [IRC § 25C(d)]

b. [13:162] Residential clean energy credit: An individual is entitled to a credit for 30% of qualified solar, fuel cell, wind, geothermal and battery storage technology expenditures (but not to heat a swimming pool or hot tub) for property placed in service after December 31, 2016 and before January 1, 2020, 26% for property placed in service after December 31, 2019 and before January 1, 2022, 30% for property placed in service after December 31, 2021 and before January 1, 2033, 26% for property placed in service after December 31, 2032 and before January 1, 2034, and 22% for property placed in service after December 31, 2033 and before January 1, 2035. There is no limit on the amount subject to the credit (except in the case of fuel cells). This credit covers the cost of installation as well as materials, and only applies to property placed into service through 2034. [IRC § 25D]

e. [13:189] Election to capitalize

1. [13:165] Deductibility Generally: A taxpayer can deduct interest expense incurred in a trade or business or for the production of income. Interest expense on a taxpayer's "qualified residence" is also deductible. [IRC § 163]

However, as developed at ¶ 13:166 ff., interest deductions are subject to numerous restrictions.

2. [13:165.1] Limitation on business interest: As of 2018, the deduction for business interest payments is capped at the sum of the taxpayer's business interest income for the taxable year, 30% of the taxpayer's adjusted taxable income for the taxable year, and the floor plan financing interest for the taxable year. Disallowed interest may be carried forward and treated as business interest in the succeeding taxable year. [IRC § 163(j)(1), (2)]

For 2019 and 2020, subject to a "special rule" for partnerships, the cap on deductibility of business interest payments is raised to 50% of the taxpayer's adjusted taxable income. [IRC § 163(j)(10)(A)] A taxpayer also may use their adjusted taxable income for 2019, which may be greater than it is for 2020, for purposes of determining their business interest deduction limitation for 2020. [IRC § 163(j)(10)(B)]

a. [13:165.1a] Small business exemption: The limitation on business interest does not apply to a taxpayer with average annual gross receipts for the three-taxable-year period ending with the prior taxable year that does not exceed $25 million. [IRC §§ 163(j)(3), 448(c)]

b. [13:165.2] Business interest defined: The term "business interest" means any interest paid or accrued on indebtedness properly allocable to a trade or business. It does not include investment interest. [IRC § 163(j)(5)]

(1) [13:165.3] "Electing real property trade or business" exception: A person who pays or accrues interest allocable to "any real property development, redevelopment, construction, reconstruction, acquisition, conversion, rental, operation, management, leasing, or brokerage trade or business" may make an irrevocable election to be excluded from the limitation on business interest deductibility. This includes trades or businesses that manage or operate qualified residential living facilities that meet certain requirements. [IRC §§ 163(j)(7)(A)(ii), (B) & 469(c)(7)(C); IRS Notice 2020-59, 2020-40 IRB 782]

Because the temporary increase to 50% in the interest deduction cap may have affected some taxpayers' decisions about whether to make an election to be excluded from the limitation, the IRS is allowing taxpayers to make a late election or to apply to withdraw their otherwise irrevocable election. [Rev. Proc. 2020-22, 2020-18 IRB 745]

(a) [13:165.4] Mandatory alternative depreciation system recovery periods: The trade-off for making the election described at ¶ 13:165.3 is that the real property trade or business opting out of the limitation on the deduction for business interest (¶ 13:165.1) must use the alternative depreciation system's longer recovery periods to depreciate any of its nonresidential real property, residential rental property and qualified improvement property. [H.R. Rep. No. 115-466, at 367, n. 569; IRC § 168(g)(1)(F) & (8); see also Yauch, "Interest Expense Rules Require Holistic Look at TCJA Changes," 162 Tax Notes 1654 (2018)]

3. [13:166] Definition of Interest: "Interest" for tax purposes is given its ordinary meaning—i.e., an amount paid for the use of borrowed money. [Deputy v. du Pont (1940) 308 US 488, 498, 60 S.Ct. 363, 368]

By contrast, "interest" does not include payments to lenders for various loan services, such as title reports, appraisals, commitment fees, credit investigation and other processing expenses. Such items are treated as the cost of obtaining the loan and are capitalized along with other expenses incurred in obtaining the loan. If these service charges are trade, business or investment expenses, they can be amortized over the period of the loan; but if incurred in connection with a personal loan, they cannot be deducted. [Asimow, "The Interest Deduction"(1977) 24 UCLA L.Rev. 749, 764-767]

4. [13:167] Timing of Interest Deduction: Interest is deductible when paid (for a cash method taxpayer) or when incurred (for an accrual basis taxpayer). [IRC § 163(a); James Bros. Coal Co. v. Commissioner (1964) 41 TC 917, 921-922 (accrual of interest on straight-line basis); Helvering v. Price (1940) 309 US 409, 413, 60 S.Ct. 673, 675—giving promissory note not "payment" for cash basis taxpayer]

a. [13:168] Payment by taxpayer: Cash method taxpayers must actually pay the interest; amounts added to the principal of the loan by the lender are not considered paid. [Cleaver v. Commissioner (7th Cir. 1946) 158 F2d 342, 343-344; Wilkerson v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1981) 655 F2d 980, 982—interest not paid by giving lender promissory note to pay at future date; Smoker v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2013-56; Hargreaves v. Commissioner, TC Summ.Opn. 2013-37—California homeowners who obtained negative amortization loan denied deduction for interest not paid even though it increased loan balance]

➪ [13:169] PRACTICE POINTER: To ensure deductibility, the taxpayer should actually write a check for interest to the lender, using funds derived from some source other than that same lender.

b. [13:170] Limitation re prepaid interest: Prepaid interest is not currently deductible; instead, it is treated as having been paid in the period to which it is allocable. [IRC § 461(g)(1); see United States v. Clardy (9th Cir. 1980) 612 F2d 1139, 1151-1152]

In some circumstances, interest represented by a loan discount (so called “original issue discount”) is amortized and deducted over the period of the loan. [See IRC § 163(e)]

(1) [13:171] Exception for “points”: “Points” paid with respect to a debt incurred in connection with the purchase or improvement of, and secured by, a principal residence can be currently deducted. [IRC § 461(g)(2); see ¶ 13:58]

5. [13:172] Bona Fide Debt Requirement: Interest is deductible only if paid with respect to a valid, enforceable, noncontingent indebtedness (which can be recourse or nonrecourse). [See Estate of Franklin v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1976) 544 F2d 1045, 1049—debt must be existing, unconditional and legally enforceable obligation for payment of money; BB&T Corp. v. United States (4th Cir. 2008) 523 F3d 461, 475-477—money borrowed and immediately repaid to lender as part of “lease-in-lease-out” transaction creates no genuine debt and cannot support interest deduction]

Many cases have denied interest deductions because the transaction giving rise to the underlying debt lacked substance. [See, e.g., Estate of Franklin v. Commissioner, supra, 544 F2d at 1049; Guardian Inv. Corp. v. Phinney (5th Cir. 1958) 253 F2d 326, 329-330 (contingent debt)]

For example:

• [13:173] Corporations are frequently denied deductions for interest on debt owed to shareholders because the debt is considered to be equity rather than debt. [See, e.g., Hardman v. United States (9th Cir. 1987) 827 F2d 1409, 1411]

• [13:174] Family members are denied deductions for interest on debts owed to other family members where there was no intention to repay the debt. [See Winter v. United States (Cl.Ct. 1991) 23 Cl.Ct. 758, 760 (intrafamily interest-free demand loan)]

• [13:175] And interest deductions have been disallowed in a vast variety of “tax shelter” transactions, because the underlying transaction was not entered into for profit or lacked economic substance, or the amount of a nonrecourse debt exceeded the value of the property that secured the debt. [See, e.g., Lukens v. Commissioner (5th Cir. 1991) 945 F2d 92, 97-99; Estate of Franklin v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1976) 544 F2d 1045, 1049]

6. [13:176] Qualified Residence Interest (QRI): For the most part, no deduction is allowed for interest incurred on personal debts. [IRC § 163(h)(1) & (2)] However, subject to specified limitations (¶ 13:178 ff.), taxpayers may deduct “qualified residence interest” (QRI). [IRC § 163(h)(2)(D), (3)]

QRI is interest incurred on “acquisition indebtedness” or “home equity indebtedness” with respect to a “qualified residence.” [IRC § 163(h)(3)]

a. Qualifying debt

(1) [13:177] “Acquisition indebtedness”: A debt is “acquisition indebtedness” if (a) incurred to acquire, construct or substantially improve a qualified residence and (b) secured by the residence. [IRC § 163(h)(3)(B)(i)]

(a) [13:178] $1,000,000/$750,000 debt ceiling: For debt incurred before 12/16/17, the aggregate amount treated as acquisition indebtedness cannot exceed $1,000,000 ($500,000 in the case of a married person filing a separate return). [IRC § 163(h)(3)(B)(ii); Bronstein v. Commissioner (2012) 138 TC 382, 387]

For debt incurred after 12/15/17 and before 1/1/26, the aggregate amount treated as acquisition indebtedness cannot exceed $750,000 ($375,000 in the case of a married person filing a separate return). [IRC § 163(h)(3)(F)(i)]

1) [13:178.1] Per-house limitation: Under the express terms of IRC § 163(h)(3), married couples filing joint returns who own a home together (whether as community property or in joint tenancy) may only deduct interest on $1,000,000/$750,000 of debt. And married couples filing separate returns who own a home together are limited to each deducting interest on $500,000/$375,000 of debt on their individual returns. The statute, however, is silent as to how its debt limit provisions apply when two or more unmarried co-owners of a residence claim the home mortgage interest deduction.

The Ninth Circuit determined in a case of "first impression" that domestic partners and other unmarried persons who own a home together could each deduct interest on $1,000,000 of debt on their individual returns; thus, when there are two unmarried co-owners, there is an allowable aggregate deduction of interest on up to $2,000,000/ $1,500,000 of debt used to acquire the same residence. [See Voss v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 2015) 796 F3d 1051, 1057-1061—IRC § 163(h)(3)'s debt limits apply to unmarried co-owners on a per-taxpayer basis; see also AOD 2016-2, 2016-31 IRB 193 (acquiescing in Voss decision)]

a) [13:178.2] Comment: Prior to Voss, supra, the Tax Court and the IRS took the position that the limitation applied on a per-house basis, effectively barring unmarried individuals from each deducting interest on the maximum amount of debt. The Ninth Circuit acknowledged its interpretation of the mortgage deduction rule created a "marriage penalty," but noted, "Congress presumably allows the marriage penalty because the couple also receives offsetting benefits available only to married couples filing a joint return." [See Voss v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 2015) 796 F3d 1051, 1065]

(b) [13:179] Refinancing: If acquisition indebtedness is refinanced, the debt resulting from the refinancing is also treated as acquisition indebtedness up to the amount of the refinanced debt. However, points paid in connection with the refinancing transaction are not currently deductible. [IRC § 461(g)(1); see ¶ 13:57]

(2) [13:180] "Home equity indebtedness": "Home equity indebtedness" means any other debt secured by a qualified residence to the extent the aggregate amount does not exceed the fair market value of the residence reduced by the acquisition indebtedness with respect to the residence. [IRC § 163(h)(3)(C)(i)]

(a) [13:181] $100,000 debt ceiling: The aggregate amount of home equity indebtedness cannot exceed $100,000 ($50,000 in the case of a married person filing a separate return). [IRC § 163(h)(3)(C)(ii)]

However, acquisition indebtedness (¶ 13:177) that exceeds $1,000,000 can be treated as home equity indebtedness. [Rev.Rul. 2010-25, 2010-44 IRB 571] Thus, a taxpayer can deduct interest on acquisition debt up to $1,100,000.

As with "acquisition indebtedness" (¶ 13:178.1), IRC § 163(h)(3)'s "home equity" debt limits apply to unmarried co-owners on a per-taxpayer basis. [See Voss v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 2015) 796 F3d 1051, 1057]

(b) [13:181.1] No deduction for certain home equity indebtedness from 2018 through 2025: Under the 2017 Tax Act (Pub.L. 115-97), Congress eliminated the $100,000 home equity deduction (IRC § 163(h)(3)(F)(i)(I)). If, however, home equity indebtedness otherwise qualifies as acquisition indebtedness (e.g., debt incurred to substantially improve the taxpayer's home), interest paid on it still may be deductible, subject to the limits on the aggregate amount of debt that may be treated as acquisition indebtedness. [IRC § 163(h)(3)(B)(i)(I); see also IR-2018-32 ("Interest on Home Equity Loans Often Still Deductible Under New Law")]

b. [13:182] "Qualified residence": A "qualified residence" is the taxpayer's principal residence and one other residence selected by the taxpayer which is used as a residence (such as a vacation home). If a married couple does not file a joint return for the taxable year, each of them can take into account one residence, unless both individuals consent in writing to one individual taking into account the principal residence and one other residence. [IRC § 163(h)(4)(A); see also IRC § 280A(d)(1) (defining "used as a residence"); McCarthy v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2020-74—petitioner barred from claiming mortgage interest deductions for two properties because no record petitioner and his wife both consented in writing to petitioner claiming such deductions for more than one residence]

c. [13:182.1] Qualified mortgage insurance: Payments of qualified mortgage insurance premiums on acquisition indebtedness are deductible as qualified residence interest. [See IRC § 163(h)(3)(E)—deduction not applicable to insurance contracts made before January 1, 2007 or to payments made after December 31, 2021]

(1) [13:182.2] Defined: Qualified mortgage insurance means mortgage insurance provided by:

— Department of Veterans Affairs (VA);

— Federal Housing Administration (FHA);

— Rural Housing Service (RHS); or

WESTLAW © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

— Private mortgage insurance as defined in § 2 of the Homeowners Protection Act, 12 USC § 4901. [IRC § 163(h)(4)(E)]

(2) [13:182.3] Treatment of prepaid mortgage insurance premiums: If a taxpayer pays mortgage insurance premiums applicable to years after the year in which they are paid, the prepaid portion must be allocated to the future years to which they apply. [IRC § 163(h)(4)(F)] Generally, such amortization is over a seven-year period, or the remaining term of the mortgage, whichever is shorter. [Treas.Reg. § 1.163-11]

(3) [13:182.4] Deductible amount phaseout: The deductible amount is phased out at the rate of 10% for each $1,000 that adjusted gross income exceeds $100,000 ($50,000 for married persons filing separately). And, except for insurance provided by the VA or RHS, prepaid mortgage insurance premiums must be capitalized and amortized over the years for which the prepayment applies (or 84 months, whichever period is shorter). [See IRC § 163(h)(3)(E)(ii), (4)(F)]

d. [13:183] Examples: In 2018, T acquires Home as her principal residence for $400,000. She borrows $320,000 to make the purchase and the debt is secured by Home. All interest on the loan is deductible ("acquisition indebtedness," ¶ 13:177).

T then acquires Skilodge and uses it for personal purposes. She pays $120,000 for Skilodge and borrows $90,000 of the purchase price. The interest on this loan is deductible (since T can designate one residence as a second home and her total acquisition indebtedness is less than $750,000).

In addition, T takes out a home equity loan for $30,000, secured by Home for the purpose of adding a room to Home. The interest on this loan also is deductible (¶ 13:181.1).

7. Other Restrictions on Interest Deductions

a. [13:184] Interest from passive activities: Interest on loans incurred to make investments in real estate rental properties normally are covered by the "at-risk" and "passive loss" rules. [IRC § 469] If the interest and other costs exceed the amount at risk or exceed the income from passive activities, none of those costs are currently deductible.

Cross-refer: For a discussion of the at-risk and passive loss rules, see ¶ 13:230 ff.

b. [13:185] Uniform capitalization rules: In some circumstances, interest incurred on loans allocable to construction of property and to the construction period must be capitalized as part of the cost of the property. [IRC § 263A, ¶ 13:158 ff.; see Ichel & Kahen, "Proposed Regulations Issued Regarding Capitalization of Interest under Section 263A(f) of the Code"(1992) 20 J. of Real Est. Tax 197]

c. [13:186] Tax-exempt or nonbusiness investment income: Interest on debt incurred to purchase or carry tax-exempt bonds is not deductible. [IRC § 265(a)(2)]

Interest on debt incurred to purchase or carry nonbusiness investments (such as stock, bonds or raw land) is deductible only to the extent of nonbusiness investment income. [IRC § 163(d); see Morley v. Commissioner (1986) 87 TC 1206, 1211-1213—raw land held for sale is business, not investment, so interest is not investment interest; compare Polakis v. Commissioner (1988) 91 TC 660, 667-673—raw land held for investment, so interest is investment interest]

d. [13:187] Tracing: Because of the numerous rules restricting the deductibility of interest, the Regulations create elaborate tracing rules. In general, borrowed proceeds are traced into and out of bank accounts to the various uses of the funds and interest is then deductible based on those allocations. [See Treas.Reg. § 1.163-8T]

➪ [13:188] PRACTICE POINTER: It is advisable to maintain separate bank accounts for borrowed funds.

In this fashion, the borrowed funds can be readily traced into various uses which permit tax deductions and distinguished from uses as to which deductibility is restricted.

For example, borrowed funds which are to be used for the taxpayer's trade or business should not be mixed with funds used for passive activities.

e. [13:189] Election to capitalize: Taxpayers can elect to capitalize rather than deduct interest, taxes and other "carrying charges" on unproductive property. [IRC § 266]

Chapter 13. Real Property
Purchase and Sale Tax Concerns

Part II. Ownership of Real Property

E. Deduction of Real Property Taxes

1. [13:200] Deductibility—In General
   a. [13:200.1] Deduction from adjusted gross income
   b. [13:200.2] Cap on aggregate deduction amount
   c. [13:200.3] What constitutes "real property tax"
2. [13:201] Sale Transactions—Allocation of Property Tax
3. [13:202] Capitalization of Special Assessments
4. [13:203] Property Held for Development
5. [13:204] Alternative Minimum Tax

1. [13:200] Deductibility—In General: State, local, and foreign real property taxes are deductible whether or not the subject property is held for profit. [IRC § 164(a)(1)]

Thus, real property taxes on a personal residence or vacation home are deductible. Likewise, real property taxes assessed on business or investment property are deductible, but subject to the "at-risk" and "passive loss" rules (¶ 13:230 ff.).

a. [13:200.1] Deduction from adjusted gross income: The property tax deduction is "below the line," meaning that it is deducted from adjusted gross income. A taxpayer who claims the standard deduction is not entitled to also claim below-the-line expenses. [IRC §§ 62(a), 63(c)]

b. [13:200.2] Cap on aggregate deduction amount: From 2018 through 2025, the aggregate amount of property, sales, and state and local income taxes that may be deducted on a federal return may not exceed $10,000 ($5,000 in the case of a married individual filing a separate return). [IRC § 164(b)(6)]

Comment: For taxpayers subject to California's top marginal income tax rates, this limitation negates much, if not all, of the value derived from deducting real property taxes on federal returns. Moreover, the Treasury has foreclosed attempts to locate a "work-around" to this limitation by permitting a deductible charitable contribution in exchange for a state or local tax credit. [See Reg. § 1.170A-1(h)(3)—charitable contribution deduction reduced by amount of state/local tax credit received]

c. [13:200.3] What constitutes "real property tax": There has been some confusion as to the nature of a "real property tax" for purposes of the IRC § 164 deduction. The 2011 instructions for the Form 1040 Schedule A Itemized Deductions stated real property taxes are only deductible "if the taxes are based on the assessed value of the property." This, however, contradicted at least one prior Chief Counsel Memorandum issued in 2003 regarding deductibility of California Mello-Roos taxes, and prompted the California Franchise Tax Board to seek clarification.

In a March 30, 2012 Chief Counsel Letter, the IRS concluded "[a]ssessments on real property owners, based other than on the assessed value of the property, may be deductible if they are levied for the general public welfare by a proper taxing authority at a like rate on owners of all properties in the taxing authority's jurisdiction, and if the assessments are not for local benefits (unless for maintenance or interest charges)." [Chief Counsel Letter, No. 2012-0018]

WESTLAW © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

The Franchise Tax Board subsequently announced it will make conforming changes to the California tax form instructions. [See "Franchise Tax Board Updates Guidance on Real Estate Tax Deductions," FTB Tax News Flashes, May 2012]

2. [13:201] Sale Transactions—Allocation of Property Tax: Where property is sold, real property taxes must be allocated on a daily basis throughout the "real property tax year" (meaning the period to which the tax imposed relates). Taxes allocated to days before the date on which title passes are deductible by the seller, even if paid by the purchaser. Taxes allocable to the day of sale and thereafter are deductible by the purchaser, even if paid by the seller. [IRC § 164(d)]

3. [13:202] Capitalization of Special Assessments: No deduction is allowed for taxes of a kind tending to increase the value of the property assessed (such as special assessments for street lighting). Such payments must be capitalized. [IRC § 164(c)(1); Treas.Reg. § 1.164-4]

4. [13:203] Property Held for Development: Similarly, the payment of real property taxes must be capitalized if at the time the taxes are incurred it is "reasonably likely" the property will subsequently be developed (¶ 13:159.1).

5. [13:204] Alternative Minimum Tax: Many taxpayers are subject to the alternative minimum tax (AMT), which applies if it produces a higher tax than the regular income tax. Under the AMT, real property taxes on property held for personal use are not deductible (IRC § 56(b)(1)(A)(ii)). Consequently, for many taxpayers property taxes on their personal residence generate no tax benefit.

(b) [13:258.2] Other "self-charged" items

[13:205] Real estate investments frequently operate at a loss … meaning the various tax-deductible costs of operation (including interest, property taxes and depreciation) exceed the income from the property. The owners generally wish to deduct such losses against income from non-real estate sources. However, the Code contains a variety of restrictions on the deduction of operating losses against income from other sources.

1. [13:206] Pass-Through of Partnership, LLC and S Corporation Losses—Basis Limitation on Deductibility: Losses incurred by a partnership, a limited liability company (LLC) taxed as a partnership, or an S corporation flow through to the partners, LLC members or shareholders. [IRC §§ 702(a), 1366(a)] However, the ability to deduct the entity's losses is limited by the basis of the partner, LLC member or shareholder in the entity ("outside basis"). If "outside basis" is reduced to zero, the losses become nondeductible. [IRC §§ 704(d), 1366(d)(1)]

a. [13:207] "Outside basis": In a partnership, "outside basis" is increased by contributions of money or property to the partnership and by partnership profits. It is decreased by partnership losses and withdrawals. The same rules apply to the outside basis of S corporations. [IRC §§ 722, 705, 1367]

b. [13:208] Increasing outside basis by partnership debts: Outside partnership basis is increased by a partner's pro rata share of partnership liabilities. [IRC § 752(a); see Treas.Reg. § 1.752-2 (explaining how to allocate partnership debts between partners)] As a result, when a partnership takes on additional debt, each partner's outside basis increases and the partners can deduct a larger amount of partnership loss.

Caution: In the case of partner guarantees (including capital contribution obligations and deficit restoration obligations), the increase in outside basis only applies if the partner is obligated to make the full capital contribution or fully restore the deficit in the partner's capital account. [See Treas.Reg. 1.752-2(b)(3)(ii) (describing so-called "bottom dollar" obligations)]

(1) [13:209] Compare—S corporations: The same is not true of S corporations: The shareholders' outside basis does not increase by reason of corporate debts.

c. [13:210] Deducting S corporation losses: Although S corporation shareholders cannot increase outside basis by reason of corporate debts (¶ 13:209), they are permitted to deduct corporate losses against the basis of their stock and also of debts owed to them by the corporation. [IRC § 1366(d)(1); see also Clark, "A Survival Guide for Real Property in an S Corporation" (2013) 40 J. Real Est. Tax. 108]

(1) [13:211] Basis from shareholder guarantees: However, a stockholder does not acquire any basis simply by guaranteeing a corporate debt. In regard to guarantees, a shareholder acquires basis against which corporate losses may be deducted only when the shareholder makes good on the guarantee. [Estate of Leavitt v. Commissioner (4th Cir. 1989) 875 F2d 420, 422-423]

d. [13:212] Suspension of losses: Losses that are not deducted because the partner or shareholder exhausts outside basis are suspended and become deductible when outside basis rises above zero. [IRC §§ 704(d), 1366(d)(2)]

2. [13:213] Hobby Losses—Profit Activity Limitation: A taxpayer cannot deduct operating losses from any business or investment unless the activity was engaged in for profit. The taxpayer must establish by objective standards that they entered into or continued the activity with the purpose of making a profit. [IRC § 183; Treas.Reg. § 1.183-2; see also Verrett v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2012-223—no deductions allowed for construction business losses claimed by unlicensed taxpayer who had no profits in 17 years because, among other things, he primarily undertook uncompensated projects for his friends and church (losses also benefited taxpayer because they were used to offset his spouse's "substantial wage income from her medical practice")]

Making a profit must be the primary or dominant purpose of the activity. However, it is not necessary to prove that a reasonable person would expect a profit. [Nickerson v. Commissioner (7th Cir. 1983) 700 F2d 402, 404]

a. [13:214] Example: T owns and operates a farm that persistently loses money. T, who has substantial income from a profession other than farming, visits the farm only on weekends and employs a resident manager to run the farm. There are significant recreational benefits from ownership. T has no training or experience as a farmer and does not install modern farming methods. It will probably be held that T's primary purpose was not to make a profit; therefore, T's farming losses are not deductible.

b. [13:215] Relevant factors in determining profit motive: The Regulations list several factors to consider in deciding whether a taxpayer's objective was to make a profit as distinguished from other objectives (Treas.Reg. § 1.183-2(b); see Whatley v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2021-11—bank president and CEO who also ran farm side business with no formal business plan was not engaged in "farming for profit" based on § 1.183-2(b) factors):

(1) [13:216] Whether the activity is carried out in a business-like manner.

(2) [13:217] Expertise of the taxpayer or taxpayer's advisers.

(3) [13:218] Time and effort expended in carrying on the activity.

(4) [13:219] Expectation that assets may appreciate in value: An activity that produces annual losses might still be carried on for profit if an overall profit is expected from appreciation in the property.

(5) [13:220] Taxpayer's success in carrying on similar ventures.

(6) [13:221] History of income or losses with respect to the activity: A long history of losses is a powerful argument against the taxpayer. Conversely, if the taxpayer has made a profit in three of the last five years, the activity is presumed to be carried on for profit. [IRC § 183(c)]

(7) [13:222] Amount of occasional profits: An occasional small profit interrupting a long period of losses will not itself establish that an activity is carried on for profit. However, a substantial, though occasional, profit is a favorable factor.

(8) [13:223] Taxpayer's financial status: Substantial income from sources other than the activity tends to indicate the activity is not for profit … especially if substantial personal or recreational elements are involved in the activity.

(9) [13:224] Elements of personal pleasure or recreation tend to show the activity was not entered into for profit … although this factor is not dispositive if other factors point in a different direction.

c. [13:225] Amount deductible for "hobby" activities: If an activity is engaged in as a hobby, rather than as a trade or business, the owner can deduct any expenses that are normally deductible without regard to whether the activity is engaged in for profit (such as real property taxes). In addition, the owner can deduct an amount equal to the income from the property less the items referred to in the previous sentence. [IRC § 183(b)]

(1) [13:226] Example: T's farm has an income of $20,000. T pays property taxes of $6,000 on the farm. Other expenses and deductions total $34,000. T can deduct $6,000 plus $14,000 of the additional expenses.

(2) [13:227] 2% floor: However, this deduction is considered a "miscellaneous itemized deduction," meaning that together with other such items it is deductible only to the extent the total exceeds 2% of the taxpayer's adjusted gross income. [IRC § 67]

d. [13:228] Generic tax shelters: Courts have disallowed tax deductions in a wide variety of transactions for which taxpayers sought deductions and credits in amounts that far exceeded their cash investments, where tax avoidance was obviously the primary purpose of the deal, the property was overvalued, and taxpayers sought leverage based on nonrecourse notes. Sometimes these cases are based on the absence of a profit motive under IRC § 183; sometimes on a holding that the taxpayer was not engaged in a trade or business; and, in other cases, because overvalued property does not give rise to depreciation or interest deductions. [See, e.g., Rose v. Commissioner (1987) 88 TC 386, aff'd (6th Cir. 1989) 868 F2d 851, 852-854 (declined to follow by United States. v. Wexler (3rd Cir. 1994) 31 F3d 117, 127)—lithographic plates used as tax shelter]

In any event, under current law, deductions generated by such activities would be precluded by the "at-risk" and "passive loss" rules discussed at ¶ 13:230 ff. [IRC §§ 469, 465]

3. [13:230] “At-Risk” Rules: Loss from any business or investment activity is limited to the amount a taxpayer has “at risk” in the activity. The “at-risk” restriction applies to an individual (including the individual's losses passed through from an S corporation or a partnership or LLC taxed as a partnership) and to closely held C corporations (more than 50% of stock owned directly or indirectly by five or fewer individuals; see IRC § 542(a)(2)). [IRC § 465(a)]

(The at-risk rules are overviewed at ¶ 13:231 ff. For a thorough treatment of the subject, see IRS Pub. 925, “Passive Activity and At-Risk Rules.”)

a. [13:231] Meaning of “at risk”: The amount “at risk” means the amount of money and adjusted basis of property contributed to the activity. It also includes amounts borrowed for use in the activity to the extent the taxpayer is personally liable for repayment of the loan (a “recourse” loan). Alternatively, a taxpayer is at risk on a nonrecourse loan to the extent of property pledged as security for repayment of the loan if the property is not used in the activity. [IRC § 465(b)]

(1) [13:232] Limitation—related party borrowing: An amount is not “at risk” if borrowed from any person who has an interest in the activity or from a person related to someone who has an interest in the activity. [IRC § 465(b); Treas.Reg. § 1.465-8; see Waddell v. Commissioner (1986) 86 TC 848, 915, aff'd (9th Cir. 1988) 841 F2d 264, 266—borrower not at risk where creditor had profit participation; Van Wyk v. Commissioner (1999) 113 TC 440, 446—amount borrowed by S corporation shareholder from other shareholder and contributed to corporation not at risk]

(2) [13:233] Limitation—protection against loss: A taxpayer is not “at risk” with respect to amounts protected against loss through guarantees, stop loss agreements, or similar arrangements. [IRC § 465(b)(4); Prop.Regs. § 1.465-6; Whitmire v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1999) 178 F3d 1050, 1054 & fn. 3]

(a) [13:233.1] “Economic realities” test: The IRC § 465(b)(4) exception is intended “to suspend at risk treatment where a transaction is structured—by whatever method—to remove any realistic possibility that the taxpayer will suffer an economic loss if the transaction turns out to be unprofitable.” [Whitmire v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1999) 178 F3d 1050, 1054 (emphasis added; internal quotes and citation omitted)]

Consequently, in determining whether a IRC § 465(b)(4) arrangement exists, courts are guided by economic realities rather than “worst case scenarios.” “[A] mere theoretical possibility that a taxpayer will suffer loss is insufficient to avoid the exception.” [Whitmire v. Commissioner, supra, 178 F3d at 1054 (emphasis added; internal quotes and citation omitted)—remote contingencies presented no realistic risk of loss]

b. [13:234] Qualified nonrecourse financing: In the case of real estate investments, a taxpayer is at risk with respect to “qualified nonrecourse financing”—i.e., a nonrecourse loan secured by the property if the loan is from a “qualified person” or a government agency (or is guaranteed by a government agency). [IRC § 465(b)(6); see Kalinka, “Qualified Nonrecourse Financing Regulations Offer Guidance But Leave Unanswered Questions”(Oct. 1998) 76 Taxes 17]

A “qualified person” is any person actively and regularly engaged in the business of lending money and who is not the person from whom the taxpayer acquired the property. [IRC §§ 49(a)(1)(D)(iv), 465(b)(6)(D)] The qualified person can be a person related to the taxpayer, but only if the financing is commercially reasonable and on substantially the same terms as loans involving unrelated persons. [IRC § 465(b)(6)(D)(ii)]

c. [13:235] Treatment of disallowed loss: Losses disallowed under the at-risk rules can be deducted in a subsequent year when the amount at risk rises above zero. [IRC § 465(a)(2), (e)] The at-risk rules are applied before the “passive loss” rules; losses that survive the at-risk test may then be disallowed under the passive loss rules (¶ 13:240 ff.).

d. [13:236] Profit and loss adjustments to at-risk amount: The amount at risk is increased by net income received from the activity but is reduced by withdrawals of money from the activity. [Prop.Regs. § 1.465-22(c)]

• [13:237] Examples: T and U are equal shareholders of S Co., an S corporation that purchases a rental house for $200,000. T and U each contributed $10,000 to S Co. S Co. makes a downpayment of $20,000 and borrows the remaining $180,000 nonrecourse from the seller of the house. T and U each have only $10,000 at risk; the $180,000 loan is not qualified nonrecourse financing (¶ 13:234).

During the first year of ownership, S Co. loses $22,000 on renting the house. T and U can each deduct only $10,000; the remaining $2,000 is deductible only in the year that T's or U's amount at risk rises above zero (¶ 13:235).

During the second year, S Co. earns net income of $6,000, which is not withdrawn from the corporation. This increases T's and U's amount at risk by $3,000 each. Consequently, in Year 2, T and U can each deduct the $1,000 of loss from Year 1 that was not previously deducted. Thereafter, T and U each have $2,000 at risk.

4. [13:240] "Passive Loss" Rules: Aggregate loss from a "passive activity" can be deducted only against aggregate income from passive activities. [IRC § 469; Beecher v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 2007) 481 F3d 717, 721—§ 469 enacted to prevent taxpayers from applying losses from rental properties and other passive business activities to offset and shelter nonpassive income, such as wages]

(Key provisions of the passive loss rules are overviewed at ¶ 13:241 ff. For a comprehensive treatment of the subject, see IRS Publication 925, "Passive Activity and At-Risk Rules" (downloadable from the IRS website at www.irs.gov).)

a. [13:241] Definition of "passive activity": A "passive activity" is a trade or business in which a taxpayer does not "materially participate." [IRC § 469(c)(1)]

(1) [13:242] "Material participation": Generally, a taxpayer will be treated as "materially participating" in the trade or business only if the taxpayer is involved in operation of the activity on a regular, continuous and substantial basis. [IRC § 469(h)(1); Priv.Ltr.Rul. 200733023—intermittent management role insufficient]

(a) [13:242.1] Regs.—"safe harbors": The regulations provide various guidelines and "safe harbors" specifying what does and does not constitute "material participation." [See Treas.Reg. § 1.469-5T]

1) [13:242.2] 500-hour rule: Participation in the activity for more than 500 hours per year is "material." [Treas.Reg. § 1.469-5T(a)(1); see Ackerman v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2009-80— taxpayer failed to prove he spent 500 hours working in investment consulting business (testimony of associates rejected; travel itineraries showed he was in town but did not prove he actually worked in business); Assaf v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2005-14—taxpayer satisfied material participation requirement by showing through exhibits and testimony that time spent on office leasing activities was about 1,340 hours/year; Mordkin v. Commissioner, TC Memo 1996-187—75-130 hours per year in managing ski facility meets neither the "regular, continuous, and substantial" test nor the 500-hour/year test]

2) [13:242.3] Taxpayer does all/most of work rule: A taxpayer "materially participates" in an activity if their participation constitutes substantially all the participation of all other individuals (including nonowners) for the taxable year. [Treas.Reg. § 1.469-5T(a)(2)]

3) [13:242.4] 100-hour rule: A taxpayer "materially participates" if the taxpayer participates in an activity for more than 100 hours during the taxable year, and that participation is not less than the participation of any other individual (including nonowners) for the year. [Treas.Reg. § 1.469-5T(a)(3); see Pohoski v. Commissioner, TC Memo 1998-17—taxpayer's narrative summary of time spent in managing rental condo was sufficient to meet 100-hour test; Bailey v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2001-296—taxpayers failed to present evidence proving participation of management company did not exceed taxpayers' participation]

4) [13:242.5] Significant participation rule: A taxpayer "materially participates" in an activity if the taxpayer participates for more than 100 hours during the year and their aggregate participation in all such activities during the year exceeds 500 hours. [Treas.Reg. § 1.469-5T(a)(4), (c)]

5) [13:242.6] Five-year rule: A taxpayer "materially participates" by participating in an activity for any five taxable years, whether or not consecutive, during the 10 taxable years immediately preceding the subject taxable year. [Treas.Reg. § 1.469-5T(a)(5); see Bailey v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2001-296—taxpayers failed to present evidence of material participation for 5 of prior 10 years]

6) [13:242.7] Three-year rule (personal service business): A taxpayer "materially participates" in a personal service business if the taxpayer materially participates in the activity for any three taxable years preceding the taxable year. [Treas.Reg. § 1.469-5T(a)(6)]

7) [13:242.8] "Facts and circumstances" test: A taxpayer also is deemed to have "materially participated" when "based on all facts and circumstances," the taxpayer participated in the activity on a "regular, continuous, and substantial basis during such year." [Treas.Reg. § 1.469-5T(a)(7); see Bailey v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2001-296—taxpayers failed "facts and circumstances" test based on commission agreement with realty company to manage rental of purported business property]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

8) [13:242.9] Limited partner rule: Limited partners generally are not treated as material participants. [IRC § 469(h)(2)] However, the regulations permit limited partners to establish "material participation," but only if they meet the 500-hour, five-year or personal service three-year rules (¶ 13:242.6 ff.). [Treas.Reg. § 1.469-5T(e)(2)]

a) [13:242.9a] Compare—limited liability companies and partnerships: Interests in limited liability companies (LLCs) and limited liability partnerships (LLPs) are treated as general partnerships for purposes of calculating "material participation." Thus, the narrower, limited partner rule (¶ 13:242.9) does not apply to LLC or LLP members. [Garnett v. Commissioner (2009) 132 TC 368; Thompson v. United States (Fed.Cl. 2009) 87 Fed.Cl. 728, 734, 104 AFTR2d 2009-5381; Newell v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2010-23]

(b) [13:242.10] Evidence of material participation: To prove "material participation" under IRC § 469(h)(1), the taxpayer should maintain accurate and complete contemporaneous records of the time spent on the subject trade or activity. [See Newhart v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2001-289—taxpayer's noncontemporaneous logs of time spent on restaurant business disregarded because of inconsistencies and lack of information; see also Merino v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2013-167—"postevent reconstruction from memory" that is "less of an approximation and more of a ballpark guesstimate" cannot be used to prove "material participation"; Bailey v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2001-296 (same); Hamill, "How to Prove Material Participation" (2nd Quarter 2017) Real Estate Tax'n 112]

Contemporaneous records are not required, however, if the extent of participation can be shown by other "reasonable means," such as books, calendars or narrative summaries. [See Montgomery v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2013-151; Assaf v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2005-14]

(c) [13:242.11] Trusts: The sole means by which a trust can establish "material participation" in a business is for its fiduciaries (i.e., the trustees themselves) to be involved in the business operations on a regular, continuous and substantial basis. [See Priv.Ltr.Rul. 200733023—trustees' time spent merely negotiating sale of trust's interest in business and in connection with related tax dispute insufficient to establish material participation]

(2) [13:243] Any rental activity: Notwithstanding the general rule (¶ 13:241 ff.), all rental activity (including real estate rentals) is deemed a "passive activity" … regardless of how much time and effort the taxpayer devotes to it. [IRC § 469(c)(2) & (4); see Kessler v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2003-185—"Rental activities are presumptively passive activities, regardless of whether the taxpayer materially participates"]

(a) Exceptions

1) [13:243.1] Seven-day rental: Rental activity is not automatically treated as a passive activity if the average rental for the property does not exceed seven days. Instead, the general "material participation" rule applies (¶ 13:242). [Treas.Reg. § 1.469.1T(e)(3); see Bailey v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2001-296—rental of lake property for less than 7 days average not passive activity; Pohoski v. Commissioner, TC Memo 1998-17—where taxpayer materially participated in management of vacation condo rented for average of 5 days, loss not passive]

2) [13:243.2] 30-day average rental and "significant personal services" provided by or for owner: Rental activity is not treated as passive if the average rental period is 30 days or less, and "significant personal services" (as defined in Treas.Reg. § 1.469-1T(e)(3)(iv)) are provided by or on behalf of the property owner in connection with making the property available for rental. [Treas.Reg. § 1.469-1T(e)(3)(ii)(B)]

3) [13:243.3] Rental incidental to "extraordinary personal services" provided by or for owner: Property rental is not passive activity if it is incidental to "extraordinary personal services" provided by or on behalf of the property owner in connection with making the property available for rental. [Treas.Reg. § 1.469-1T(e)(3)(ii)(C), (v)]

• [13:243.4] Taxpayers' limited liability company leased space in its office building to attorneys, but also provided services to them, such as legal research, medical consulting, document filing, and the use of a library and secretarial staff. Testimony established that these services were the "crucial determinant" in the attorneys' choosing to lease in the building. Thus, the lease payments were principally for the services provided and not for the space leased, thereby qualifying Taxpayers for the "extraordinary personal services" exception. [Assaf v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2005-14]

• [13:243.4a] Students' use of a boarding school's dormitories is incidental to their receipt of educational services. Therefore, income received from renting the dormitories to the students is not passive income. [Treas.Reg. § 1.469-lT(e)(3)(v)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

4) [13:243.5] Rental incidental to nonrental activity: Property rental that is incidental to nonrental activity of the taxpayer (as defined in Treas.Reg. § 1.469-1T(e)(3)(vi)) is not passive activity. [Treas.Reg. § 1.469-1T(e)(3)(ii)(D); see Misko v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2005-166—taxpayer satisfied requirements of exception; compare Kessler v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2003-185—taxpayers failed to meet exception's requirements]

5) [13:243.6] Nonexclusive use during defined business hours: Customarily making rental property available during defined business hours for nonexclusive use by various persons does not constitute passive activity. [Treas.Reg. § 1.469-1T(e)(3)(ii)(E)]

6) [13:243.7] Taxpayer's nonrental trade or business activity: Making rental property available for use in a nonrental activity conducted by a partnership, S corporation, or joint venture in which the taxpayer owns an interest is not passive rental activity. [Treas.Reg. § 1.469-1T(e)(3)(ii)(F), (vii)]

[13:243.8 - 13:243.9] Reserved.

(b) [13:243.10] "Self-rental" (or "recharacterization") rule: Rental income is not passive if the property is rented for use in a trade or business activity in which the taxpayer materially participates, including rental to either an S or C corporation. [Treas.Reg. § 1.469-2(f)(6); Beecher v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 2007) 481 F3d 717, 721—in essence, when taxpayer rents property to own business, income is not passive activity income; Krukowski v. Commissioner (7th Cir. 2002) 279 F3d 547, 551; Fransen v. United States (5th Cir. 1999) 191 F3d 599, 601—applies to income taxpayer and spouse receive from C corporation of which taxpayer is sole shareholder]

The rental income is not passive in these circumstances even if the taxpayer has a "bona fide business purpose" for leasing the property to the trade or business. [Beecher v. Commissioner, supra, 481 F3d at 724]

However, any loss sustained by the taxpayer in renting property to a trade or business in which the taxpayer materially participated would be a passive loss. [See Fellows, Yuhas & Jewell, "Passive Activity Losses: Learning to Live with the Self-Rental Rule" (2008) 108 J. of Tax 16]

• [13:243.11] T owned buildings A and B, both of which were leased to businesses in which T materially participated. Rental from A produced income of $100, but rental from B produced a $60 loss. T properly treated the leasing activities of the buildings as a single "activity" (¶ 13:243.13). The $100 of income was not passive, but the $60 loss was. As such, T had no passive income against which the $60 loss could be offset, and the entire $100 income was taxable. T could not net the income and loss from the two activities to reduce his tax liability (i.e., subtract the $60 loss from the $100 of income for a net taxable income from nonpassive activity of $40). [Carlos v. Commissioner (2004) 123 TC 275, 280-283]

1) [13:243.12] Exception—pre-2/19/88 written, binding contracts: The "self-rental" rule does not apply to a written, binding contract entered into prior to February 19, 1988, provided the contract is still binding under state law. [See Treas.Reg. § 1.469-11(c)(1)(ii); Samarasinghe v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2012-23—H and W taxpayers could not offset their accumulated unused passive losses against rent paid by H for space in their commercial building where rental arrangement for years in question was "completely ad hoc" and no evidence showed original contract between H and W as landlord and H as tenant remained in effect under state law]

(c) [13:243.13] Treatment of multiple rental activities as single "activity": For purposes of the passive loss rules, multiple rental activities may be treated as a single activity if they constitute an "appropriate economic unit." [Treas.Reg. § 1.469-4(c)(1)]

Whether activities are an "appropriate economic unit" is determined on a case-by-case basis by any reasonable method. [Treas.Reg. § 1.469-4(c)(2); see also Veriha v. Commissioner (2012) 139 TC 45—taxpayer could not treat property leases as single activity where each was covered by separate agreement; Senra v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2009-79— taxpayer could not treat C corporation and LLC as single activity where corporation rented property from LLC]

[13:243.14] Reserved.

(3) [13:243.15] Special rule for "real estate professionals": Taxpayers who qualify as "real estate professionals" under the Code can deduct losses without restriction by the passive loss rules. See ¶ 13:257 ff.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(4) [13:243.16] Special rule for "self-charged" transactions: The passive activity rules do not apply in certain situations where the income to be offset against a passive activity loss is essentially a payment by the taxpayer to himself or herself. See ¶ 13:258 ff.

b. Examples

• [13:244] T, a doctor whose adjusted gross income is $300,000 per year, owns Black Arms, an apartment house. T is not a real estate professional (see ¶ 13:257 ff. re exception to passive loss limitations for real estate professionals). The various deductions attributable to this activity exceed income in Year 1 by $28,000. T has an amount at risk that exceeds $28,000. This is his only real estate investment, but he has stocks and bonds that produce net income of $40,000.

The $28,000 is passive loss and is not deductible against T's income from practicing medicine or against his income from stocks and bonds. The income from stocks and bonds is considered portfolio income, not passive income, and cannot be offset by the real estate losses.

• [13:244.1] T has $50,000 of passive losses from rental property and owns an interest in J Co., which is a profitable pass-through entity (a partnership, S Corp. or limited liability company). T's share of J Co.'s profits is $70,000. Now, the usual roles are reversed: T contends that he did not materially participate in J Co., so that it becomes a passive activity. If so, J Co. becomes a "passive income generator" (or PIG) and T's real estate losses can be offset against his share of J Co.'s profits. [See Carlstedt v. Commissioner, TC Memo 1997-331—T did not carry burden of proving he failed to render more than 500 hours of service to J Co.]

c. [13:245] Taxpayers subject to passive loss rules: The passive loss rules apply to individuals, estates and trusts, any closely held C corporation, or any personal service corporation. [IRC § 469(a)(2); see also IRC § 469(j)(1) & (2) (definitions), IRC § 469(c)(7)(D)(i) (applying "real estate professional" exemption from passive loss limitations (¶ 13:257 ff.) to C corporations if more than 50% of gross receipts are from real property trades or businesses in which corporation materially participates)]

In the case of partnerships or S corporations, the rules are applied on a partner-by-partner or shareholder-by-shareholder basis.

d. Treatment of disallowed loss

(1) [13:246] Carryforward to passive income in future years: A taxpayer's passive loss that exceeds passive income is not currently deductible. Such disallowed loss is "suspended"—i.e., it is carried forward and deducted against passive income (if any) in future years. [IRC § 469(b); see Hillman v. I.R.S. (4th Cir. 2001) 250 F3d 228, 233]

(2) [13:247] Deduction upon fully taxable disposition of activity: Ultimately, amounts of disallowed passive loss with respect to a particular passive activity that was not previously deductible are deducted at the time the taxpayer makes a fully taxable disposition of the activity. [IRC § 469(g)]

If the investment in the activity becomes totally worthless, it is treated as a fully taxable disposition in the year of worthlessness. [IRC § 469(g); see Bilthouse v. United States (7th Cir. 2009) 553 F3d 513, 518 (S corporation stock became worthless in year earlier than that claimed by taxpayer)]

(a) [13:248] Definition of "activity": A taxpayer may use any reasonable method of grouping several activities into a single activity, based on such factors as business similarities, common ownership and control, geographic location, and interdependencies. But, the taxpayer's method must be consistent from one year to the next absent a change in circumstances. [See Treas.Reg. § 1.469-4(c); Brumbaugh v. Commissioner, 2018-40 TC Memo—(denying taxpayers ability to group real estate business with aircraft chartering business since no functional similarity existed between businesses and they were not interdependent)]

If the taxpayer disposes of substantially all of an activity, suspended losses attributable to that part can be currently deducted if it is possible to allocate income and loss between the part sold and the part remaining. [Treas.Reg. § 1.469-4(g)]

(b) [13:248.1] Grouping disclosure: Taxpayers must file written statements with their tax return indicating that they intend to group or regroup certain activities together for purposes of measuring gain or loss under IRC § 469 or that they intend to add new activities to an existing grouping. [Reg. § 1.469-4(e); Rev. Proc. 2010-13, 2010-1 CB 329]

(3) [13:249] Disposition by tax-free exchange: Where passive activity property is exchanged for property in a tax-free (like-kind) exchange under IRC § 1031 (see ¶ 13:304 ff.), the taxpayer cannot deduct any portion of the suspended passive loss with respect to the property transferred in the exchange. [IRC § 469(g)(1)] Instead, the loss remains suspended until the taxpayer has passive income or until the taxpayer makes a fully taxable disposition of the new passive activity.

(E.g., if, in the example at ¶ 13:244, T exchanges Black Arms for White Arms in a IRC § 1031 tax-free exchange, T cannot deduct any of the suspended passive loss with respect to Black Arms. The loss remains suspended until T has passive income or makes a fully taxable disposition of White Arms.)

(4) [13:250] Disposition by death: If the activity is transferred by reason of the taxpayer's death, the suspended losses are never deductible except to the extent they exceed the step-up in basis that occurs by reason of death. [IRC § 469(g)(2)]

• [13:251] Example: T owns Blackacre, which had a basis of $200. There were suspended passive losses of $80 with respect to Blackacre. T dies and bequeaths Blackacre to U. At the date of death, the value of Blackacre is $255. U's basis for Blackacre is $255. [IRC § 1014]

On T's final return, T can deduct only $25 of the suspended passive loss. Because Blackacre's basis was stepped up by $55, only the excess of the $80 suspended passive loss over $55 is deductible. [IRC § 469(g)(2)]

(5) [13:252] Disposition by gift: Where the taxpayer disposes of their passive activity interest by gift, the suspended passive losses are added to the basis of the property in the hands of the donee. They cannot be deducted in any taxable year. [IRC § 469(j)(6)]

Presumably, the same rule applies to property transferred between spouses or former spouses incident to divorce, since such transfers are treated as gifts (¶ 13:386). [IRC § 1041(b)(1)]

• [13:253] Example: H and W own Blackacre as community property. H transfers his interest in Blackacre to W incident to their divorce. The basis of Blackacre in the hands of H and W was $200. The suspended passive loss with respect to Blackacre was $80. W retains her basis of $100 for her half of Blackacre and continues to hold $40 of the suspended passive loss in suspension. Her basis for the half acquired from H is $140. Even if W has passive income of $100, she can deduct only the $40 of suspended loss on her half—not the suspended loss on H's half. [IRC § 469(j)(6)]

e. Exceptions to passive loss rules

(1) [13:254] $25,000 offset for certain rental real estate: Notwithstanding the general passive loss rules (¶ 13:240 ff.), a taxpayer can deduct up to $25,000 of passive loss from a rental real estate activity in which the taxpayer "actively participates," provided they own at least 10% of all interests in the activity. [IRC § 469(i)(1), (2) & (6); see Madler v. Commissioner, TC Memo 1998-112—"active participation" standard is met so long as taxpayer participates in significant and bona fide sense—i.e., by making management decisions or arranging for others to provide services such as repairs (test not met in Madler because third party conducted all management)]

(a) [13:255] Phaseout: However, the $25,000 figure is phased out at the rate of 50% of the amount by which the taxpayer's adjusted gross income exceeds $100,000. [IRC § 469(i)(3)]

For purposes of making the above calculation, adjusted gross income is not first reduced by passive losses. [Moss v. Commissioner (2010) 135 TC 365, 371-372]

(b) [13:256] Example: T and U each own a 50% interest in Black Arms, an apartment house. Black Arms loses $30,000 in Year 1. T's adjusted gross income is $220,000. T manages Black Arms. U's adjusted gross income is $120,000. U is inactive with respect to Black Arms. Neither T nor U has any passive income and neither is a real estate professional (see ¶ 13:257 ff.).

Neither T nor U can deduct any portion of the loss from Black Arms. T actively participates in Black Arms but the available $25,000 deduction is completely phased out in T's case (¶ 13:255). U would be able to deduct $15,000 (i.e., the $25,000 is reduced by $10,000—50% of the excess of AGI over $100,000) but U did not actively participate in the management of Black Arms (¶ 13:254).

(2) [13:257] Real estate professionals: If the taxpayer falls under the special rule for real estate professionals, loss from a rental real estate activity in which the taxpayer materially participates can be deducted without limitation by the passive loss rules. [IRC § 469(c)(7); Treas.Reg. § 1.469-9; see also Gragg v. United States (9th Cir. 2016) 118 AFTR2d 2016-5364—real estate professional denied rental property loss deductions for failure to prove material participation; Perez v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2010-232—real estate professionals (including real estate brokers) must demonstrate material participation in rental activity to deduct losses; Barackman, "Real Estate Professionals—Passing the Test" (2016) 43 Real Est. Tax'n 173]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

A real estate professional is defined as a taxpayer who performs more than 750 hours of services during the taxable year in "real property trades or businesses" (¶ 13:257.4) in which the taxpayer materially participates. These services also must be more than one-half of the taxpayer's business services for the taxable year. [IRC § 469(c)(7)(B)(i) & (ii); see also Jenkins, "Section 469 Activity and Participation Conclusive Presumptions" (2016) 125 J. Tax'n 168]

(a) 750-hour requirement

1) [13:257.1] Joint return—aggregation of spouses' hours not permitted: On a joint return, real property trade or business services performed by the spouses cannot be combined. To be treated as a "real estate professional" under IRC § 469, one spouse individually must satisfy the 750-hour test. [IRC § 469(c)(7)(B); see Harnett v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2011-191—duties performed by taxpayer's wife and others while he was ill did not count for purposes of 750-hour requirement]

2) [13:257.2] Services as employee: Services performed as an employee do not count toward satisfaction of the 750-hour requirement unless the employee owns at least 5% of the employer's stock or more than a 5% partnership interest. [IRC § 469(c)(7)(D)(ii); Pungot v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2000-60—employed taxpayer not real estate professional because he did not own at least 5% of employer firm; see also Stanley v. United States (WD AR 2015) No. 5-14-cv-05236, 116 AFTR2d 2015-6766—employed taxpayer who owned 10% of employer firm was real estate professional even though he made no capital contribution and was obligated to return stock at end of his employment or within five years after disability or death]

Caution: The IRS has announced it will not acquiesce in Stanley (above); see AOD 2017-07.

3) [13:257.3] C corporations: Closely held corporations can meet the "real estate professional" test (and deduct their rental real estate losses) if more than 50% of the corporation's gross receipts are derived from real property trades or businesses. [IRC § 469(c)(7)(D)(i)]

4) [13:257.3a] Evidence of time spent on real estate activity: Evidence of the extent of the taxpayer's personal services on real estate activity may be established by any reasonable means. Daily time reports or logs are not necessarily required where there is other competent evidence, such as appointment books, calendars or narrative summaries. [Treas.Reg. § 1.469-5T(f)(4); see Franco v. Commissioner, TC Summ.Opn. 2018-9 (finding numerous receipts and email exchanges sufficient to corroborate taxpayer's testimony and rental activity log); Jurinski & Grinko, "Overcoming Proof Problems in Establishing 'Real Estate Professional Status'" (4th Quarter 2017) Real Estate Tax'n 4]

However, time records made after the fact are likely to be disregarded. [See D'Avanzo v. United States (Fed. Cl. 2005) 67 Fed.Cl. 39, 42-44, aff'd (Fed. Cir. 2007) 215 Fed.Appx. 996 (discussing cases)—Tax Court has uniformly disallowed post-event "ballpark guesstimates"; Vandegrift v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2012-14—taxpayer's claim of spending more than 750 hours per year on real estate activities deemed "suspect" given his employment in unrelated business and "lack of contemporaneous verification by records or other evidence"]

Similarly, time records must be accurate and not inflated or rounded up excessively. [See Hairston v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2019-104—inflated estimates for "trivial" tasks, such as paying mortgage or receiving rent, that were uniformly recorded as taking 1 hour, failed to satisfy 750-hour service requirement]

5) [13:257.3b] "On-call" time: Only the time spent actually performing real property services can be counted for purposes of the 750-hour requirement. Thus, "on-call" time during which the taxpayer was simply available to perform the services does not count. [Moss v. Commissioner (2010) 135 TC 365, 367-370]

6) [13:257.3c] Sole participation in activity: A taxpayer can establish material participation in the activity by showing their participation constituted substantially all of the participation in the activity by all individuals for the year. [Treas.Reg. § 1.469-5T(a)(2); see Wilson v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2012-101—taxpayers who contracted with one company to install their solar equipment, and another company to collect ratepayer monthly installments for using said equipment, failed to establish their participation was sole participation in micro-utility activity]

7) [13:257.3d] Investor activities: Hours spent on "investment activities" do not count toward the 750-hour requirement. Work done by an individual in their capacity as an "investor" includes (i) studying and reviewing financial statements or reports on the activity's operations; (ii) preparing or compiling summaries or analyses of the activity's finances or operations for the individual's own use; and (iii) monitoring the activity's finances or operations in a nonmanagerial capacity. [Reg. § 1.469-5T(f)(2)(ii); see Antonyshyn v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2018-169—real estate professional status denied where day-to-day management of taxpayer's rental properties was carried out by management companies rather than by taxpayer herself who performed only "nonmanagerial" activities (i.e., "investment-type activities"); compare Birdsong v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2018-148—although taxpayer occasionally hired contractors to perform tasks she could not complete herself (e.g., a handyman or plumber), real estate professional status granted where she was sole party actively involved in day-to-day management of rental properties]

(b) [13:257.4] "Real property trades or businesses": A "real property trade or business" within the meaning of IRC § 469 is any real estate development, redevelopment, construction, reconstruction, acquisition, conversion, rental, operation, management, leasing or brokerage trade or business. [IRC § 469(c)(7)(C)]

While real estate agents are considered to be engaged in a "real property trade or business," mortgage brokers and other financial professionals are not. [Chief Counsel Advice Memo 201504010]

(c) [13:257.5] Consolidation of rental real estate activities: For purposes of IRC § 469(c)(7), a taxpayer must establish that they materially participated in each of the rental activities in which the taxpayer is engaged (¶ 13:242 ff.). However, the taxpayer is permitted to elect to treat all interests in rental real estate as a single activity, including interests held as a limited partner. [IRC § 469(c)(7)(A); Treas.Reg. § 1.469-9(e); see also Adeyemo v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2014-1; Chief Counsel Advice Memo 201427016]

1) [13:257.6] Properties rented for less than seven days *excluded: In electing to treat all interests in real estate rental activity as a single activity, the taxpayer cannot include properties rented for an average of seven days or less (see ¶ 13:243.1). [Bailey v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2001-296—taxpayer's activity regarding property rented for average of less than 7 days excluded in determining taxpayer's status as "real estate professional"]

The above exclusion also means that time spent on such short-term rental activities is excluded for purposes of satisfying the 750-hour requirement (¶ 13:257 ff.). [Bailey v. Commissioner, TC Summ.Opn. 2011-22; but see Castelli & Barnett, "Short-Term Rentals – Do They Count for Real Estate Professionals?" (1st Quarter 2024) Real Estate Tax'n 16 (arguing that although short-term rentals may not be considered "rental activities" under Treas.Reg. § 1.469-1T(e)(3), they should still come within the definition of real property rental, management, or operation for purposes of satisfying the 750-hour requirement)]

2) [13:257.7] Election to treat all real estate interests as one activity: The election to treat all real estate interests as one activity for purposes of IRC § 469(c)(7) must appear on the original return for the first year the taxpayer qualifies under that section. Merely combining the losses from several rental activities on the tax return does not constitute an election. [Trask v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2010-78; Kosonen v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2000-107; see Holo, "How to Avoid Section 469—All of It" (June 19, 2000) 87 Tax Notes 1665; Hausman, "Passive Activities and Real Estate Professionals" (2007) 34 J. Real Estate Tax 134]

The election must contain a declaration that the taxpayer is a § 469(c)(7) qualifying taxpayer. Thereafter, the election will apply to all subsequent years, including those in which the taxpayer is not a qualifying taxpayer. [Treas.Reg. § 1.469-9(g)(3)]

a) [13:257.8] Revocation of election: The election can be revoked if the taxpayer experiences a material change of circumstances. The revocation is in the form of a declaration stating the taxpayer's intention to revoke the election and explaining the material change of circumstances. [Treas.Reg. § 1.469-9(g)(3)]

3) [13:257.9] Election to treat all real estate interests as one activity on amended return: The election to treat all real estate interests as one activity may be made on an amended return if the taxpayer filed returns consistently with having made that election on the return for the year in which the taxpayer qualified under IRC § 469(c)(7) and on subsequent returns. The taxpayer must establish that they acted reasonably and in good faith in failing to make the election on the original return (e.g., taxpayer relied on a qualified tax professional who failed to make the election or advise the taxpayer that it should have been made). [Rev.Proc. 2011-34, 2011-24 IRB 875]

a) [13:257.10] Procedure: The election must state at the top, "FILED PURSUANT TO REV. PROC. 2011-34." It also must explain why the taxpayer had reasonable cause for failing to make the election on the original return, and it must be accompanied by a dated declaration, signed by the taxpayer, stating, "[U]nder penalties of perjury I (we) declare that I (we) have examined this election, including any accompanying documents, and, to the best of my (our) knowledge and belief, the election contains all the relevant facts relating to the election, and such facts are true, correct, and complete." [Rev.Proc. 2011-34, 2011-24 IRB 875]

As with any declaration, the individual(s) who sign(s) must have personal knowledge of the facts and circumstances related to the election. [Rev.Proc. 2011-34, 2011-24 IRB 875] Indeed, unless the taxpayer complies with all the foregoing requirements, the IRS will not accept an election on an amended return. [Trask v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2010-78—election must appear clearly on original return, not on document handed to IRS at later time]

(3) [13:258] "Self-charged" transactions: In a so-called "self-charged" transaction, the taxpayer is essentially both the payor and recipient of an expense/income item. Here, the passive loss rules may produce inequitable results depending on the nature of the "self-charged" item.

Example: S Corp. owns and leases apartments. T is the sole shareholder of S Corp. T loans $100,000 to S Corp., and also manages S Corp.'s business for an annual $10,000 management fee. In year 1, S Corp. pays T $5,000 interest on the loan and $10,000 for the annual management fee. S Corp. has a net loss in year 1 of $35,000 (including the $5,000 interest payment and the $10,000 management fee).

(a) [13:258.1] Interest: In a lending transaction between a taxpayer and a passthrough entity in which the taxpayer owns a direct or indirect interest (e.g., partnership, limited liability company or S corporation), the taxpayer's self-charged interest income and the passthrough entity's interest deduction offset each other. [Treas.Reg. § 1.469-7]

Therefore, in the example at ¶ 13:258, T's $5,000 interest income would be offset by T's $5,000 interest loss flowing to him from S Corp. The result would be an economic and taxable "wash" to T with respect to the interest received and paid on the loan.

(b) [13:258.2] Other "self-charged" items: So far, the Treasury has only adopted regulations treating self-charged interest as passive income where the taxpayer receives interest from a passthrough entity. Therefore, other self-charged income, such as management fees, cannot be treated as passive income and offset against passive losses. [Hillman v. I.R.S. (4th Cir. 2001) 250 F3d 228, 232; Melone, "Self-Charged Items in Light of Hillman" (2002) 29 J. Real Est. Tax 71; Raby & Raby, "Generating Income by Doing Business with Yourself"(May 7, 2001) 91 Tax Notes 957]

Accordingly, in the example at ¶ 13:258, T cannot deduct the $10,000 management fee loss flowing to T from S Corp. because it is a passive loss. However, T must include the $10,000 management fee in income. As a result, a transaction that is economically a "wash" produces negative tax consequences.

Chapter 13. Real Property Purchase and Sale Tax Concerns

Part II. Ownership of Real Property

G. Deduction for Qualified Business Income

1. [13:258.11] Generally
2. [13:258.12] "Qualified Business Income"
3. [13:258.13] "Qualified Trade or Business"
    a. [13:258.14] "Specified service trade or business"
    b. [13:258.15] Compare—income below threshold amount
    c. [13:258.16] Phaseout
    d. [13:258.16a] Rental property owners
        (1) [13:258.16b] Rental services
4. [13:258.17] Qualified REIT dividends

1. [13:258.11] Generally: Taxpayers other than corporations may deduct an amount equal to:

• the lesser of up to 20% of their "qualified business income";

• the greater of 50% of the W-2 wages with respect to a "qualified trade or business"; or

• 25% of the W-2 wages plus 2.5% of the original purchase price immediately after acquisition of all qualified property, defined generally as the tangible, depreciable property used in the business. [See IRC § 199A(a), (b)(2)]
Comment: The above provision was prompted by the reduction in the corporate rate from 35% to 21%. It effectively reduced the marginal rate on qualified business income from 37% to 29.6% for taxpayers subject to the top marginal rate who are operating in noncorporate form. See Abdo-Gomez, "Navigating the New Deduction for Qualified Business Income"(2018) 158 Tax Notes 1627.

2. [13:258.12] "Qualified Business Income": To be deductible, the income must be effectively connected with the conduct of a qualified U.S. trade or business and be included or allowed in determining taxable income for the taxable year. Reasonable compensation for services rendered by the taxpayer is excluded. [See IRC § 199A(c)(3)(A), (4)]

3. [13:258.13] "Qualified Trade or Business": Not every trade or business is eligible for the deduction. Indeed, a "specified service trade or business" (¶ 13:258.14) and the trade or business of performing services as an employee are excluded. This is so because the deduction is designed to roughly equalize the burden on corporate and noncorporate businesses and not to reduce the income tax rate on individual compensation on earned income. [See IRC § 199A(d)]

a. [13:258.14] "Specified service trade or business": A "specified service trade or business" is a "trade or business involving the performance of services in the fields of health, law, engineering, architecture, accounting, actuarial science, performing arts, consulting, athletics, financial services, brokerage services, or any trade or business where the principal asset of such trade or business is the reputation or skill of 1 or more of its employees [or owners]." [IRC §§ 199A(d)(2)(A) & 1202(e)(3)(A)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

A "specified service trade or business" also includes a trade or business that "involves the performance of services that consist of investing and investment management, trading, or dealing in securities …, partnership interests, or commodities" as defined. [IRC § 199A(d)(2)(B)]

b. [13:258.15] Compare—income below threshold amount: For taxpayers with income below $315,000 on a joint return ($157,000 in the case of single filers), the "specified service trade or business" limitation based on the field of activity does not apply. (Nonetheless, the income of these taxpayers still is excluded if based on the investing or management of investments exclusion; see ¶ 13:258.14.) [IRC § 199A(d)(3)(A)]

c. [13:258.16] Phaseout: For taxpayers with income above $315,000 but below $415,000 on a joint return (above $157,500 but below $207,000 for single filers), the deduction amount is phased out. [See IRC § 199A(d)(3)(B)]

d. [13:258.16a] Rental property owners: It is not always clear when owners of rental property are a qualified "trade or business." To provide clarity, the IRS created the following safe harbor (Rev. Proc. 2019-38, 2019-42 IRB 942):

- For rental real estate enterprises in existence less than four years, the owner (or employees, agents, and/or independent contractors of the owner) must perform at least 250 hours of "rental services" per year;

- If the rental real estate enterprise has been in existence for four years or more, the 250 hours of rental services must be performed in any three of the five consecutive years that end with the current taxable year.

(1) [13:258.16b] Rental services: Under the safe harbor (¶ 13:258.16a), "rental services" are defined to include (i) advertising to rent or lease real estate; (ii) negotiating and executing leases; (iii) verifying information contained in prospective tenant applications; (iv) collecting rent; (v) daily operation, maintenance, and repair of property, including purchasing materials and supplies; (vi) managing real estate; and (vii) supervising employees and independent contractors. [Rev. Proc. 2019-38, 2019-42 IRB 942]

Compare: The term "rental services" does not include financial or investment management activities, such as arranging financing; procuring property; studying and reviewing financial statements or reports on operations; improving property under Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-3(d); or hours spent traveling to and from the real estate. [Rev. Proc. 2019-38, 2019-42 IRB 942]

4. [13:258.17] Qualified REIT dividends: In addition to the deduction for qualified business income (¶ 13:258.11 ff.), taxpayers may deduct 20% of the aggregate amount of qualified REIT dividends, or REIT dividends not eligible for taxation at capital gains rates, either individually or as qualified dividend income. [See IRC § 199A(b)(1)(B), (e)(3)]

Chapter 13. Real Property Purchase and Sale Tax Concerns

Part II. Ownership of Real Property

H. Allocation of Deductions Between Co-Owners and Partners

1. [13:259] Preliminary Determination—Co-Ownership vs. Partnership
   - a. [13:259.1] When co-ownership treated as partnership
     - (1) Examples
   - b. [13:259.4] Conditions for obtaining private letter ruling on co-ownership
2. [13:260] Co-Ownership
3. [13:262] Partnerships
   - a. [13:263] “Substantial economic effect”

1. [13:259] Preliminary Determination—Co-Ownership vs. Partnership: Whether taxpayers own property as co-owners (cotenants) or partners is significant for tax purposes. When the property is owned by a partnership, the complex partnership taxation rules apply, including the partners' entitlement to specially allocate income or expense items (see ¶ 13:262), the requirement of filing a partnership tax return, and the unavailability of IRC § 1031 treatment of partnership interests (¶ 13:309.1). [See generally, Borden, Favelukes & Molz, “A History and Analysis of the Co-Ownership-Partnership Question” (March 7, 2005) 106 Tax Notes 1175]

a. [13:259.1] When co-ownership treated as partnership: Taxpayers considering themselves co-owners rather than partners may nonetheless be taxed as partners. Whether the co-ownership is considered a partnership for tax purposes depends on whether the co-owners actively conduct a trade, business, financial operation, or venture and divide any profits generated thereby. [Treas.Reg. § 301.7701-1(a)(2)]

(1) Examples

• [13:259.2] When cotenants own an apartment building and provide only customary service to renters, such as utilities and repairs, the cotenancy is not treated as a partnership. But if the cotenants or their agents provide additional services, such as valet parking, cleaning services or meals, the cotenancy may be treated as a partnership. [Rev.Rul. 75-374, 1975-2 CB 261]

• [13:259.3] Taxpayers entered into a subscription agreement whereby they acquired tenancy in common interests in certain computer equipment. Each taxpayer claimed losses and deducted depreciation expenses arising from their co-ownership interest in the equipment. For tax purposes, the taxpayers were treated as partners because they were acting together in a long-term venture to finance, lease and remarket the equipment, they were restricted in their ability to sell their interests, and the manager of the venture had an interest in its profits and losses. [Bergford v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1993) 12 F3d 166, 169-170]

b. [13:259.4] Conditions for obtaining private letter ruling on co-ownership: The Service will consider a request for a private letter ruling that an “undivided fractional interest” in rental property is a cotenancy rather than a partnership provided the following conditions are satisfied (Rev.Proc. 2002-22, 2002-1 CB 733):

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

- Title: The co-owners must hold title to the property as tenants in common.
- Number of co-owners: The number of co-owners may not exceed 35. A husband and wife are treated as a single person, and all persons who acquire interests from a co-owner by inheritance are treated as a single person.
- Treatment of entity: The co-ownership may not file a partnership or corporate tax return, or otherwise hold itself out as a partnership or other form of business entity. The Service generally will not issue a ruling under this procedure if the co-owners held interests in the property through a partnership or corporation immediately prior to the co-ownership's formation.
- Co-ownership agreement: A limited co-ownership agreement running with the land (i.e., an agreement that a co-owner must offer their co-ownership interest for sale to the other co-owners at fair market value before exercising a right to partition, or that certain actions on behalf of the co-ownership must be approved by the co-owners holding more than 50% of the interests in the property) does not preclude a ruling under this procedure.
- Approvals: Co-owners must approve unanimously the hiring of any manager, sale, lease, or other disposition of the property, or the creation or modification of a blanket lien on the property. For all other actions, the co-owners may agree that approval by only those holding more than 50% of the interests in the property is required.
- Alienation restrictions: Each co-owner must have the right to transfer, partition and encumber their interest without the approval of any person. However, restrictions on these rights required by a lender that are consistent with customary commercial lending practices are not prohibited.
- Sharing sale proceeds: If the property is sold, after paying off any debt secured by a blanket lien on the property, the remaining proceeds must be distributed to the co-owners.
- Proportionate sharing of revenue and expenses: Each co-owner must share in all revenues generated by the property and costs associated with the property in proportion to their interest. Funds may not be advanced to a co-owner to meet expenses unless the advance is recourse and is not for a period exceeding 31 days.
- Proportionate debt sharing: Co-owners must share in any debt secured by a blanket lien on the property in proportion to their interests.
- Issuing and selling options: A co-owner may issue an option to purchase their interest provided the price for exercising the option reflects the property's fair market value when the option is exercised. But a co-owner may not acquire an option to sell their interest to the co-ownership's “sponsor,” lessee, another co-owner, or the lender, or anyone related to such persons and/or entities.
- Co-owners' maintenance and repair activities: The co-owners' activities must be limited to those customarily performed in connection with the maintenance and repair of rental property. In determining whether the co-owners' activities are so limited, all activities of the co-owners, their agents and any persons related to the co-owners with respect to the property are considered. See ¶ 13:259.2.
- Annually renewable management and brokerage agreements: Co-owners may enter into management or brokerage agreements with an agent (who may be the sponsor or a co-owner or any person related thereto, but not a lessee) so long as the agreements are renewable no less frequently than annually. Any such management agreement may authorize its manager to maintain a common bank account to collect revenues generated by the co-ownership and pay the co-ownership's expenses. Fees paid to the manager may not depend on the income or profits derived from the property and may not exceed the fair market value of the manager's services.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

- "Bona fide" lease agreements: All agreements for leasing the property must be "bona fide leases" for federal tax purposes. As such, rents paid under any such agreements must reflect the property's fair market value and may not depend on the income or profits derived by the property.

- Unrelated lenders: A lender with respect to any debt encumbering or incurred to acquire an interest in the property may not be related to any co-owner, the sponsor, the manager or any lessee of the property.

- Sponsor payments: Fees paid to the sponsor, either to acquire an interest in the property or for services, must reflect the fair market value of the acquired interest or services rendered, and may not depend on the income or profits derived from the property. [Rev.Proc. 2002-22, 2002-1 CB 733; see Borden, Favelukes & Molz, "A History and Analysis of the Co-Ownership-Partnership Question" (March 7, 2005) 106 Tax Notes 1175; Lipton, "The 'State of the Art' in Like-Kind Exchanges, Revisited" (2003) 98 J. of Tax. 334, 345-350; Witner, "Jointly Owned Rental Real Property: Tenants in Common or Separate Entity"(August 2003) 81 Taxes 49; Carman, "The Increasing Tension Between Tenancies in Common, Tax Shelters, REITS, and Legitimate Investment Partnerships" (2002) 30 Real Estate Taxation 4]

2. [13:260] Co-Ownership: In the case of tenancy in common property, deductions are apportioned in accordance with the ownership interests in the property, regardless of which co-owner makes the payments. However, in the case of joint tenancy property, whichever taxpayer makes the payment is entitled to the deduction. [Rev.Rul. 62-39, 1962-1 CB 17; Rev.Rul. 62-38, 1962-1 CB 15]

- [13:261] Example: T and U, brother and sister, own Blackacre as equal tenants in common. The interest payments on a loan secured by Blackacre are $2,000 per year and T makes the entire payment. T can deduct $1,000 as interest (assuming all requirements for interest deductions are met). The other $1,000 is treated as if T transferred $1,000 to U and U paid the $1,000 to the lender. [Rev.Rul. 62-39, 1962-1 CB 17] Thus, U can deduct her half of the interest even though she did not pay it. Presumably, T's hypothetical transfer of $1,000 to U is not taxable to U because it was a gift. [IRC § 102]

  Compare: If T and U held the property as joint tenants, T could deduct the entire $2,000 as interest. [Rev.Rul. 62-38, 1962-1 CB 15]

3. [13:262] Partnerships: Normally, the income and deductions passed through from a partnership to the partners are reflected on each partner's individual returns in accordance with their respective profit and loss shares under the partnership agreement. However, taxpayers are entitled to specially allocate any item of income or deduction, provided the special allocation has "substantial economic effect" (¶ 13:263). [IRC § 704(b)]

   a. [13:263] "Substantial economic effect": "Substantial economic effect" generally means the allocation has an economic effect other than a tax effect. In other words, the allocation must be fully reflected in the capital accounts. [Treas.Reg. § 1.704-1(b)(1)]

   ➪ [13:264] PRACTICE POINTER: This major and complex subject is beyond the scope of this Practice Guide. Before drafting partnership agreements with special allocations, counsel should consult the Regulations and the many excellent treatments of the subject.     - (2) [13:288] Exception
  - c. [13:290] Dealing with tenant's old lease

[13:270] Numerous tax issues center on real property leasing transactions. Some of the most important issues are discussed at ¶ 13:271 ff.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

1. Increasing Rent—Timing of Income and Deductions

a. [13:271] General cash basis/accrual basis accounting: Normally, cash method lessees deduct rent when paid and cash method lessors include rent when received. Accrual method lessees deduct rent on a daily basis (regardless of when it is actually paid) and accrual method lessors include rent on a daily basis (regardless of when it is actually received). [Bittker & Lokken, "Federal Taxation of Income, Estates & Gifts"¶ 105.4 (2d ed. 1989 and current supp.)]

b. [13:272] Exception—deferred or stepped rents (Section 467 rental agreements): An exception requires both landlord and tenant to account for rents on a modified accrual basis. [IRC § 467] This rule applies when the rental agreement or lease calls for total payments of more than $250,000 ("Section 467 rental agreements"). [IRC § 467(d)(2); Treas.Reg. § 1.467; see Stough v. Commissioner (2015) 144 TC 306, 317-318 (denying Section 467 treatment because specific allocation absent from rental agreement); see also Burton, "Tax Court Levels Taxpayer's Weak Theories in Rent Accrual Case" (Sept. 28, 2015) Tax Notes 1521; Melone, "Final Section 467 Regulations Expand and Clarify Proposed Rules" (2000) 27 J. Real Est. Tax. 65]

If such a rental agreement requires either (1) deferral of rent so that a rent payment is made after the calendar year to which it applies, or (2) increasing (or "stepped") rents over the lease term, both landlord and tenant must account for rental payments consistently. [IRC § 467(b)(1), (d)(1)]

(1) [13:273] Normal rule—allocations respected: If the rental agreement allocates particular rent payments to particular periods, those allocations are respected for tax purposes. Both landlord and tenant must take rent into account for such periods. [IRC § 467(b)(1); Piccadilly Cafeterias, Inc. v. United States (Fed.Cl. 1996) 36 Fed.Cl. 330, 334-335, 96-2 USTC ¶ 50487—lessee required to respect lease's escalating allocation of rentals]

(a) [13:274] Example: Lease calls for payments of zero rent during the first year and $100,000 per year for the next four years. IRC § 467 applies since this agreement calls for stepped rents and for total payments of more than $250,000. Neither landlord nor tenant can deduct anything for Year 1 and each will deduct or include in income $100,000 for the next four years. [IRC § 467(b)(1)(A)]

(b) [13:275] Deferred rents: If the rental agreement calls for payment of rent in a year after the year to which the rent is allocable, both parties must take the present value of the rent payment into account during the year to which it is applicable (rather than the year paid) and must also impute interest on the deferred payment. [IRC § 467(a), (b)(1)(B)]

(2) [13:276] Special rule—tax avoidance transactions: In the case of either long-term leases (lease with terms exceeding 14 1/4 years) or sale-leasebacks, if the schedule of increasing rents is tainted by a tax avoidance purpose, or if there is no rent allocation to particular periods, the rents are accounted for on a "constant rental amount" basis. This means that in each period an identical amount is treated as rental deductions and rental income. That amount is the amount which would result in the same aggregate present value as the present value of the payments called for by the lease. [IRC § 467(b)(2), (3) & (e)(1)]

(a) [13:276.1] Exceptions: The provision concerning "constant rental amounts" does not apply to changes in amounts determined by price indexes, rents based on a percentage of lessee receipts, reasonable rent holidays, or changes in amounts paid to unrelated third parties. [IRC § 467(b)(5); see Republic Plaza Properties Partnership v. Commissioner (1996) 107 TC 94, 105-108—interpreting "reasonable rent holiday" to include 11.5-month period at beginning of 26-year lease]

2. Prepaid Rent and Leasing Costs

a. [13:277] Not currently deductible by lessee; currently includible by lessor: A lessee who prepays rent is not allowed to deduct the prepayment but must capitalize and amortize it over the lease period. Similarly, the lessee should capitalize and amortize costs incurred in negotiating the lease. [Rev.Rul. 73-421, 1973-2 CB 33]

However, the landlord must include the entire rent prepayment in income whether the landlord uses the cash or accrual method of taxation. [See Schlude v. Commissioner (1963) 372 US 128, 136-137, 83 S.Ct. 601, 606—prepaid dancing lessons immediate income to accrual basis taxpayer]

b. [13:278] Compare—security deposit: A security deposit is not income to the lessor. Nor is it deductible by the lessee until such time as it is applied to the rent.

Reason: A security deposit is treated as a loan from lessee to lessor; and loans are not income to the borrower. A security deposit is intended to secure the lessee's performance of contractual duties under a lease and must be returned to the lessee if the lessee performs those duties. The deposit can be commingled with the lessor's other funds; it need not be segregated. The fact the lessee might choose to apply the deposit to future rent does not, by itself, turn the deposit into immediately taxable rent. [Commissioner v. Indianapolis Power & Light Co. (1990) 493 US 203, 212-214, 110 S.Ct. 589, 595]

(For a comprehensive treatment of tenant security deposits, see Friedman, Garcia & Hoy, Cal. Prac. Guide: Landlord-Tenant (TRG), Ch. 2E.)

3. Tenant Improvements

a. [13:279] Depreciation by tenant: As earlier discussed, a tenant who makes improvements to leased property must depreciate the improvements over the normal term (27.5 years for residential real property; 39 years for nonresidential property), regardless of the remaining term of the lease. (See ¶ 13:137 ff.) (Similarly, if the lessor pays for (and owns) the improvements, the lessor depreciates the improvements over the normal term (regardless of the lease term).)

Where the lease terminates prior to full recovery of the cost of the improvements through depreciation, the tenant is entitled to a loss deduction for the remaining basis. [IRC § 165]

(1) [13:279.1] Transitional rules: Under transitional provisions that must be renewed frequently by Congress, the party who constructs "qualified leasehold improvements," "qualified restaurant improvements" or "qualified retail improvement property" can in some cases immediately deduct 50% of the improvement, and in other cases depreciate the improvement over a 15-year period (see discussion at ¶ 13:137.2 ff.).

b. [13:280] Not income to lessor: A lessor does not recognize income or increase basis when the lessee constructs improvements, nor when the lease terminates and the landlord takes control of the improvements. [IRC §§ 109, 1019]

(1) [13:281] Likewise for tenant reimbursements: A lessor also does not recognize income when a tenant reimburses the lessor for improvements made to the building on the tenant's behalf. [Chief Counsel Advice Memo 201436048]

(2) [13:281.1] Exception—tenant improvements as rent substitute: If the tenant's construction of improvements is intended as a substitute for rent, the landlord must include the value of the improvements in income. [Treas.Reg. § 1.109-1]

[13:281.2 - 13:281.4] Reserved.

4. [13:281.5] Retail Space Improvements Paid for by Lessor: If the lessor reimburses the tenant of retail space (whether in cash or through a rent reduction) for improvements to the property paid for by the tenant, the tenant does not include those payments in gross income. [IRC § 110 (eff. for leases entered into after 8/5/97)]

a. [13:281.6] "Short-term lease" limitations: IRC § 110 applies only if the lease is for 15 years or less. [See IRC § 110(a)(1) & (c)(2)] By implication, therefore, if the lease exceeds 15 years, the lessor's payments would be income to the tenant unless the payments qualified for exclusion as a contribution to capital. [IRC § 118; see generally, Raby & Raby, "Reimbursed Construction Costs: Income or Not?" (Sept. 22, 1997) 76 Tax Notes 1603]

5. Lease Cancellation Payments

a. [13:282] Payment by lessor to lessee: Where a lessor pays a tenant to terminate an otherwise unexpired lease so that the lessor can relet to another tenant, the tenant can treat the gain on transfer of the lease as capital gain. [IRC § 1241; Commissioner v. Golonsky (3rd Cir. 1952) 200 F2d 72, 73-74; Rev.Rul. 72-85, 1972-1 CB 234] The landlord must capitalize the payment as a lease acquisition cost. However, it is unclear whether the amortization period is the old lease or the new lease. [See Handlery Hotels, Inc. v. United States (9th Cir. 1981) 663 F2d 892, 895 (old lease); Montgomery Co. v. Commissioner (1970) 54 TC 986, 1002-1004 (new lease)]

b. Payment by lessee to lessor

(1) [13:283] Lessor's tax treatment: A payment made by a lessee to the lessor to terminate its otherwise unexpired lease is ordinary income to the lessor; the lessor is not entitled to any recovery of basis since the payment is viewed as a substitute for rent. [Hort v. Commissioner (1941) 313 US 28, 32-33, 61 S.Ct. 757, 759; see also ¶ 13:436]

(a) [13:283.1] Comment: Pursuant to IRC § 1234A, gain or loss attributable to the "cancellation, lapse, expiration, or other termination" of an obligation pertaining to property that is "a capital asset in the hands of the taxpayer" is treated as gain or loss from the sale of a capital asset. Arguably, under this statute, income received by a lessor from a lessee to cancel a lease should be treated as capital gain, but the IRS has not yet stated its position on the issue.

(2) [13:283.2] Lessee's tax treatment: Normally, a lessee's payments to cancel a lease are deductible to the lessee. [Rev.Rul. 69-511, 1969-2 CB 24] But if the payment is part of a plan to cancel the old lease and enter into a new lease with the same lessor, the payment must be capitalized and amortized over the period of the new lease. [See U.S. Bancorp v. Commissioner (1998) 111 TC 231, 242—computer lessee must capitalize cost of canceling lease in order to lease newer computer from same lessor]

Also, where a lease is terminated as a result of the lessee purchasing the leased property from the lessor, no portion of the purchase price can be deducted as a lease cancellation payment. [Union Carbide Foreign Sales Corp. v. Commissioner (2000) 115 TC 423, 439-440 (disagreed with by ABC Beverage Corp. v. United States (6th Cir. 2014) 756 F3d 438, 446) —lessee purchased tanker from lessor to terminate burdensome lease; see Maynard & Lipton, "The Tax Court Misses the Boat in Requiring Capitalization of Lease Termination Payments" (Jan.-Feb. 2003) 6 J. of Passthrough Entities 5]

6. [13:284] Lease Inducements: In a market where there is a surplus of rental space, tenants have substantial leeway to negotiate for various lease inducements or "rental concessions." [See generally, Frydland & Shapack, "Maximizing Benefits of Commercial Real Estate Lease Inducements" (1992) 76 Journ. of Tax. 372; Murphy, "Lease Inducements: Consider the Tax Consequences" (1992) 2 Calif. Tax Lwyr. No. 2, p. 32; see also Friedman, Garcia & Hoy, Cal. Prac. Guide: Landlord-Tenant (TRG), Ch. 2B]

a. [13:285] Cash payment: Inducement to sign the lease might be by way of a cash payment to the tenant. In such event, the landlord must capitalize the payment and amortize it over the lease term. [See Bonwit Teller & Co. v. Commissioner (2nd Cir. 1931) 53 F2d 381, 384—brokerage fee incurred in leasing property must be capitalized] The tenant must include the payment in income when received. [Cf. John B. White, Inc. v. Commissioner (1971) 55 TC 729, 734-735, aff'd (3rd Cir. 1972) 458 F2d 989, 990—Ford's payment to auto dealer to relocate is income to dealer]

b. [13:286] Rent holidays: A common concession to induce tenants to execute a lease (particularly in connection with commercial property rentals) is free rent (or a "rent holiday") for a significant period. As discussed at ¶ 13:272 ff., IRC § 467 applies to lease agreements that call for increasing rental payments and involve more than $250,000 of rent during the entire lease term. A lease calling for a rent holiday in the early periods of the lease would therefore fall under § 467 (assuming the $250,000 standard is met).

(1) [13:287] General rule: In cases of increasing payments, the allocation in the rental agreement of rent payments to rental periods is normally respected. Both landlord and tenant must account consistently for all payments. Thus, there will be no rent deductions or income during the rent holiday, whether the landlord or tenant uses the cash or accrual method of accounting (see ¶ 13:273 ff.).

(2) [13:288] Exception: If the rent holiday agreement allocates rent to the holiday period and provides that this rent will be deferred and payable after the holiday period, the tenant must deduct and the landlord must include in income the present value of the deferred rent during the holiday period (as well as imputed interest on the deferral). [IRC § 467(a)(2), (b)(1)(B); see ¶ 13:275]

Moreover, if the lease does not contain any allocation of rent payments to specific periods, a "constant rental amount" must be imputed, which may create even larger deductions for the tenant during the rent holiday period. [IRC § 467(b)(2), (3) & (e)(1); see ¶ 13:276]

➪ [13:289] PRACTICE POINTER: Tenants in a relatively stronger negotiating position may wish to bargain for one of these arrangements, as it would permit the tenant a deduction for rent during a period in which none is payable.

c. [13:290] Dealing with tenant's old lease: To induce a new tenant to enter into a lease, the lessor may agree to be the assignee of the tenant's old (as yet unexpired) lease. Apparently, the lessor-assignee can deduct currently the lease payments on the assigned lease, although the IRS may argue these payments should be capitalized as the acquisition cost of the new lease. [See 379 Madison Ave. v. Commissioner (2nd Cir. 1932) 60 F2d 68, 69]

        - (1) Examples
        - (2) [13:294.4] Exceptions
    - b. [13:294.5] Proration
    - c. [13:294.8] Limitation on amount where property "used as a residence"
        - (1) Examples
        - (2) [13:294.11] Application of passive loss/at-risk limitations
    - d. [13:294.12] Disqualifying limited rental use

1. [13:292] General Rule—No Business Deductions: Business deductions (such as depreciation, repairs or insurance) are not allowed for part or all of the costs relating to a taxpayer's personal residence. [IRC § 280A(a)]

Of course, this rule does not preclude deductions of "qualified residence interest," real property taxes or casualty losses, which need not be connected to business or investment. [IRC § 280A(b)]

2. [13:293] Deduction for Home Office Costs: The costs of a portion of a taxpayer's residence can be deducted if that portion is used exclusively on a regular basis as:

• the taxpayer's principal place of business; or

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

• a place of business used by patients, clients or customers, when visiting the taxpayer in the normal course of business; or

• in the case of a separate structure not attached to the dwelling, in connection with the taxpayer's trade or business. [IRC § 280A(c)(1)(A), (B) & (C)]

a. [13:293.1] "Exclusive use": The portion of the home used for business cannot be used for any purpose other than business during the taxable year. [See Langer v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2008-255—only 5% and 7% of residence used exclusively for H's and W's businesses deemed deductible (they had claimed 15% and 27%); Mullin v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2001-121—given size and layout of 400 square foot apartment, taxpayer's argument that 1/4 was used exclusively for business purposes was rejected]

(1) [13:293.1a] Additional requirement for employee taxpayers: If the taxpayer is an employee, the "exclusive use" of their residence for one of the purposes described at ¶ 13:293 must be for the convenience of the employer. [IRC § 280A(c)(1)]

For example, if no space is provided at work for necessary job tasks, the employee's home office serves the convenience of the employer. On the other hand, when there is space at work but the employee simply prefers to work at home, the home office is not for the employer's convenience. [See Drucker v. Commissioner (2nd Cir. 1983) 715 F2d 67, 70—where concert violinist employed by orchestra required to practice at home because no such space provided at concert hall, home practice room maintained for employer's convenience]

(a) [13:293.1b] Compare—home rented to employer: No deductions are available with respect to a portion of the taxpayer's residence rented to their employer where the taxpayer performs services for the employer as an employee. [IRC § 280A(c)(6)]

b. [13:293.2] Principal place of business—business conducted at several locations: If a taxpayer has several businesses, the residence qualifies for a home office deduction if it is the principal location of any of the businesses. A problem arises, however, when the taxpayer uses both their home and other sites as locations for a single business:

(1) [13:293.2a] Determining "principal place of business": The most important factors in determining whether a taxpayer's residence is a "principal place of business" are the relative importance of the activities performed at the site and the time spent there. [Commissioner v. Soliman (1993) 506 US 168, 174-175, 113 S.Ct. 701, 706; see also Wood, "Developments in Home Offices"(2002) 29 J. Real Est. Tax 116]

• [13:293.2b] Example: T is a self-employed concert violinist who practices four to five hours a day in a studio in her home used exclusively for that purpose. She performs concerts and makes recordings at separate locations away from her home. She spent 1200 hours per year practicing at home and 280 hours performing and recording. Because of the great importance of practice to a professional musician and the time spent practicing compared to the time spent doing other activities related to her profession, her home was determined to be her "principal place of business." [Popov v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 2001) 246 F3d 1190, 1194]

(2) [13:293.3] Business administration and management from home office: The home is considered the principal place of business if the taxpayer performs administrative or management activities for the business at home, and there is no other fixed location of such business where the taxpayer conducts substantial administrative or management activities. [IRC § 280A(c)(1), last sent. (eff. tax years beginning 1/1/99; overruling Commissioner v. Soliman, supra, on issue)]

When the taxpayer meets this test, the home is considered the taxpayer's "principal place of business" regardless of where the goods or services are delivered or the relative time spent at each location.

• [13:293.3a] Example: An anesthesiologist uses his home office exclusively for business, spending up to three hours a day performing administrative and managerial tasks, such as billing patients, maintaining records, making business phone calls, and arranging appointments. He spends the majority of his working time at various hospitals caring for patients. Nonetheless, because there is no fixed location other than his home where he performs administrative and management activities, the anesthesiologist's home office is his "principal place of business."

(3) [13:293.4] Related deduction for related travel costs: A taxpayer whose principal place of business is their home can deduct transportation expenses between home and any other work location, regardless of the distance or whether the other work location is regular or temporary. (This is an exception to the normal rule that commuting costs are nondeductible.) [Rev.Rul. 99-7, 1999-1 CB 361]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

For example, a professional musician whose principal place of business is her home (because she performs administrative and management activities there) can deduct the costs of driving from home to a recording studio or concert hall.

c. Other uses

(1) [13:293.5] Business inventory storage: A taxpayer can deduct the costs of a portion of a residence that is used for storage of an inventory held for sale in a business—but only if the dwelling is the sole fixed location of that business. [IRC § 280A(c)(2)]

(2) [13:293.6] Day care services: Also, a deduction is allowed for a portion of the costs attributable to that portion of the taxpayer's residence used as a day care facility. [See IRC § 280A(c)(4)]

(3) [13:293.7] Compare—use for investment activities: The management of investments is not a "trade or business." Therefore, a taxpayer cannot deduct any portion of the costs of a home office used exclusively to manage an investment portfolio—even though the taxpayer performs such investment management full-time. [Moller v. United States (Fed. Cir. 1983) 721 F2d 810, 814]

However, a trader in securities, as distinguished from an investor, is engaged in a trade or business for home office deduction purposes. The distinction is that a trader looks to quick turnover and short-term profits, rather than to long-term profits or earning dividends or income. [Estate of Yaeger v. Commissioner (2nd Cir. 1989) 889 F2d 29, 33; see also Moller v. United States, supra, 721 F2d at 813]

d. [13:293.10] Limitation on amount deductible: Taxpayers eligible to claim a home office deduction under the rules set forth at ¶ 13:293 ff. cannot deduct more than the gross income from the eligible use, less the deductions allowed without regard to business (e.g., qualified residence interest, property tax or casualty loss). [IRC § 280A(c)(5)]

e. [13:293.11] Optional home office deduction "safe harbor": Taxpayers may claim a home office deduction simply by multiplying the square footage of that portion of their house used as a home office (not to exceed 300 square feet) by $5.00. This optional method results in a maximum deduction of $1,500, plus otherwise allowable itemized deductions for expenses such as home mortgage interest, property taxes and casualty losses. It is an alternative to the often complex and burdensome pre-2013 requirement of calculating, allocating and substantiating actual expenses. [See Rev.Proc. 2013-13, 2013-6 IRB 478; Megaard & Megaard, "When Should the New Safe Harbor Method for Deducting Home-Office Expenses be Elected?" (July 2013) 119 J. Tax'n 5]

3. [13:294] Vacation Home Deductions: Taxpayers frequently rent out a home that they also use for vacations. For tax purposes, it is necessary to prorate business deductions (depreciation, repairs, insurance, etc.) between personal and rental use. Also, if the property is "used as a residence," the business deductions are limited to the income generated by the property (¶ 13:294.8). [See IRC § 280A(c)(3) & (5), (d) & (e)] (For a detailed treatment of the deduction, see Truskowski, "Tax Consequences of Renting Out a Second Home May Turn on How Often the Taxpayer Makes Use of It" (July 2004) 101 J. of Taxation 26.)

Of course, qualified residence interest on a second home, real property tax and casualty losses remain deductible in full. [IRC § 280A(b) & (e)(2)]

Comment: Because the 2017 Tax Cuts and Jobs Act limited the deductibility of state and local taxes (as well as interest) on the amount of deductible qualified mortgage interest, the tax case for a vacation home that is also rented out is not as strong as it used to be for many taxpayers. (See Cox, "Fractional Ownership of a Vacation Home under the Tax Cuts and Jobs Act" (March 2022) J. of Tax'n 3.)

a. [13:294.1] "Used as a residence": A dwelling is "used as a residence" if it is used for personal purposes by any of its owners or their relatives, or by any person who fails to pay a fair rental, for more than 14 days per year or more than 10% of the days it was rented at a fair rental, whichever figure is greater. [IRC § 280A(d)(1) & (2); see Razavi v. Commissioner (6th Cir. 1996) 74 F3d 125, 127-128 (discussing "fair rental" standard)—"fair rental" requires comparison to other rentals of comparable properties; DiDonato v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2013-11—self-serving testimony regarding fair rental value deemed insufficient given property's condition; compare Lucero v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2020-136—days spent primarily repairing and maintaining dwelling do not count toward personal use limit, even if other individuals are doing different activities on property]

(1) Examples

• [13:294.2] Bob lived in his ski condo seven days last year. He rented it (at a fair rental) to nonfamily members for 40 days. Since he did not use it for the greater of 14 days or 10% of the rental days, he did not use it "as a residence."

• [13:294.3] Alice and Sally own a beach house as tenants in common. During the taxable year, Alice used the house one day, Sally eight days, and Sally's daughter six days. It was rented to others for 85 days. Since personal use for 15 days exceeds the greater of 14 or 8.5 (10% of 85), the house was "used as a residence."

(2) [13:294.4] Exceptions: If the dwelling is rented for at least one year, the taxpayer's personal use before or after the rental period is ignored. Similarly, if the dwelling is sold at the end of the rental period, personal use before the rental period is disregarded. [IRC § 280A(d)(4)]

Also, a dwelling is not "used as a residence" if rented at a fair rental to a relative of the owner as the occupant's principal residence. [See IRC § 280A(d)(3)]

b. [13:294.5] Proration: If the dwelling was used at all for personal purposes (whether or not it was "used as a residence," ¶ 13:294.1 ff.), the various expenses (other than qualified residence interest, property tax or casualty loss) must be prorated. Only the portion allocable to rental use is deductible. [IRC § 280A(e)]

Examples

• [13:294.6] In the example at ¶ 13:294.2, 40/47 of the business items (depreciation, etc.) are deductible by Bob; 7/47 are allocable to personal use and are not deductible.

• [13:294.7] In the example at ¶ 13:294.3, 85/100 of the expenses on Alice's and Sally's beach house are deductible; but, in their case, there is an additional limitation (see ¶ 13:294.8 ff.).

c. [13:294.8] Limitation on amount where property "used as a residence": The expenses prorated to rental use are deductible only in part if the dwelling was "used as a residence" (¶ 13:294.1). In that case, the owners cannot deduct more than the gross rental income less a prorated share of the qualified residence interest and taxes. [IRC § 280A(c)(5)]

(1) Examples

• [13:294.9] Referring again to the example at ¶ 13:294.2, the IRC § 280A(c)(5) limitation does not apply to Bob because his ski condo was not "used as a residence."

• [13:294.10] On the other hand, in the example at ¶ 13:294.3, the IRC § 280A(c)(5) limitation on amount does apply to Sally and Alice (the beach house has been "used as a residence").

Assume Alice's share of the qualified residence interest and taxes for the year is $1,200 and 85/100 of her share of the business costs (such as depreciation, repairs and/or insurance) is $2,000. Her share of the gross rentals is $2,800. Alice can deduct all of the qualified residence interest and taxes. But she can deduct only $1,600 of the remaining expenses ($2,800 less $1,200). [IRC § 280A(c)(5)]

(2) [13:294.11] Application of passive loss/at-risk limitations: Even if the taxpayer can get past the ceiling on deductible business costs (¶ 13:294.8 ff.), those costs may be nondeductible under the passive loss rules (¶ 13:240 ff.) or the at-risk rules (¶ 13:230 ff.). However, IRC § 280A takes precedence over those rules … because even at the time the vacation house is sold, the disallowed costs still cannot be deducted (whereas, under the passive loss and at-risk rules, the deduction of disallowed costs is merely deferred until the property is sold; ¶ 13:235, 13:247).

d. [13:294.12] Disqualifying limited rental use: No rental use deductions are allowed on a dwelling rented fewer than 15 days during the year; and the income from the rental is not included in gross income. [IRC § 280A(g); see Lucero v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2020-136—days spent primarily repairing and maintaining property do not count toward maximum days limit]

A. Pertinent Tax Issues

[13:300] Several important tax issues arise in connection with the disposition of real property, including:

• Was the gain or loss realized? (¶ 13:301 ff.)

• Was the gain or loss recognized? (¶ 13:303 ff.)

• What was the amount realized? (¶ 13:395 ff.)

• Was the gain or loss capital or ordinary? (¶ 13:415 ff.)

• When is the gain or loss recognized for tax purposes? (¶ 13:465 ff.)

• Withholding and reporting on sales of property (¶ 13:520 ff.)

Chapter 13. Real Property
Purchase and Sale Tax Concerns

Part III. Disposition of Real Property

B. Realization of Gain or Loss

1. [13:301] General Rule of "Realization"
2. [13:302] Exchanges
    a. [13:302.1] Exchange of mortgages
    b. [13:302.2] Partition

1. [13:301] General Rule of "Realization": Although it is an open question whether realization is necessary under the Constitution for gain or loss to be recognized for tax purposes, it is at least sufficient to trigger income tax consequences. [See Moore v. United States (2024) 602 US _, _, _, 144 S.Ct. 1680, 1688-1689, 1696 & fn. 3]

Gain or loss is "realized" on the "sale or other disposition" of property. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1001-1(a)]

Normally, therefore, any sale, exchange or other disposition is sufficient to trigger "realization." For example, realization occurs when property is transferred to discharge a claim against the taxpayer, even though the amount of the claim is not ascertainable. There must, however, be a bona fide disposition of property to realize a loss. [United States v. Davis (1962) 370 US 65, 68-71, 82 S.Ct. 1190, 1192-1193—gain realized on H's transfer of property in discharge of W's inchoate marital property claim against him (case overruled by IRC § 1041 with respect to transfers incident to divorce, ¶ 13:385); see Sage v. Commissioner (2020) 154 TC 270, 283-284—taxpayer could not claim losses on real estate transfers from his wholly owned companies to liquidating trusts (taxpayer's companies were "grantors" of trusts and, therefore, remained owners of transferred property for tax purposes)]

2. [13:302] Exchanges: Gain or loss is realized on an exchange of property "for other property differing materially either in kind or in extent." [Treas.Reg. § 1.1001-1(a)]

a. [13:302.1] Exchange of mortgages: The exchange of a package of mortgages for a different package of mortgages of equal value is the occasion for realization of loss. While the mortgages given up and received may have been similar, they are on different properties and therefore embody legally distinct entitlements. [Cottage Sav. Ass'n v. Commissioner (1991) 499 US 554, 566, 111 S.Ct. 1503, 1511]

b. [13:302.2] Partition: A partition of a single co-owned property, or of several contiguous properties, so that each of the co-owners now owns part of the property outright, is not a realization. [Priv.Ltr.Rul. 9633028]

However, where co-owners each own part of separate properties, and partition their interests so that each owns one of the properties outright, the exchange is a realization. But in that situation, the realized gain or loss would not be recognized under IRC § 1031 (assuming both properties fall within § 1031; see ¶ 13:304 ff. re like-kind exchanges). [Rev.Rul. 73-476, 1973-2 CB 301; Rev.Rul. 79-44, 1979-1 CB 265]

1. [13:303] General Rule of "Recognition": Generally, gain or loss is "recognized" whenever it is realized (¶ 13:301 ff.). [IRC § 1001(c)]

As developed at ¶ 13:303.5 ff., the general rule of recognition is subject to numerous Code provisions requiring or permitting nonrecognition of gain or loss. However, nonrecognition occurs only by virtue of a Code section specifically so providing. [See IRC § 1001(c)—"Except as otherwise provided in this subtitle …"]

[13:303.1 - 13:303.4] Reserved.

2. [13:303.5] Personal Losses Not Deductible: No deduction (not even a capital loss) is allowed for loss on the sale of assets held for personal use. [IRC § 165(c)]

Thus, even though gain on the sale of a personal residence is taxable (unless it qualifies for exclusion, ¶ 13:345 ff.), loss on the sale of a personal residence presently is not deductible.

a. [13:303.6] Exception—certain casualty losses: Casualty losses over $100 are deductible if they exceed 10% of adjusted gross income. [IRC § 165(c)(3), (h)]

(1) [13:303.6a] "Casualty loss" defined: Generally, a deductible casualty loss to real property must arise from a sudden, unexpected or unusual physical event that damages the property, such as fire or earthquake. A temporary decline in value arising out of market fluctuations will not suffice. [Caan v. United States (CD CA 1999) 83 AFTR2d 99-1640—O.J. Simpson neighbor could not deduct loss in property value owing to "buyer resistance" resulting from Simpson criminal trial; see Riordan & Nichols, "Casualty Losses on Real Estate: Does 'Buyer Resistance' Create a Deduction?" (2000) 28 J. Real Est. Tax 36]

(2) [13:303.6b] Amount deductible; evidence: A casualty loss deduction is ordinarily measured by the decline in value of the property owing to the casualty or the adjusted basis of the property, whichever is less. [Treas.Reg. § 1.165-7(b)]

While appraisals are generally preferred, the cost of repairs to the property is often accepted as evidence of the decline in value. [Treas.Reg. § 1.165-7(a)(2)]

b. Compare—house converted to rental property

(1) [13:303.7] Ordinary loss deduction for loss occurring after conversion: If a personal residence is, prior to its sale, rented or otherwise appropriated to "income-producing purposes" and is used for such purposes up to the time of its sale, a loss sustained on the property's sale is deductible as ordinary loss (the loss is ordinary rather than capital because the house is a trade or business asset; see IRC § 1231(a)(2), discussed at¶ 13:442 ff.). The basis for determining loss is the house's original basis or its value at the date of conversion, whichever is less. [Treas.Reg. § 1.165-9; see also Raby & Raby, "Deducting a Loss on Sale of a Personal Residence"(June 24, 2002) 95 Tax Notes 1945; and Raby, "Ordinary Loss on Sale of Residence" (April 24, 1995) 67 Tax Notes 535]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

• [13:303.8] Example: T bought a house for $400,000. When the house was worth $320,000, T tried unsuccessfully to sell it. Finally, T moved out and rented the house. He ultimately sold it for $305,000. T can deduct $15,000 as ordinary loss. The $80,000 loss that occurred while the house was held for personal use is not deductible.

(2) [13:303.9] Depreciation, etc.: Once the house is converted to rental use and "held for the production of income," the taxpayer can also deduct depreciation and other costs, subject to the passive loss rule limitations (¶ 13:240 ff.). [See IRC §§ 167(a)(2), 212(1)] The basis for purposes of computing depreciation is the value at the date of conversion or the original basis of the residence, whichever is less. [Treas.Reg. § 1.167(g)-1]

(a) [13:303.10] "Held for production of income" requirement: To qualify for the depreciation deduction (¶ 13:303.9), the house must be "held for the production of income." On this point, the Ninth Circuit has adopted the Tax Court's "nonexhaustive" list of factors to be considered:

• The length of time the house was occupied as a residence before going on the market;

• Whether the taxpayer permanently abandoned all personal use of the property;

• The character of the property (recreational or otherwise);

• Offers to rent; and

• Offers to sell. [Bolaris v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1985) 776 F2d 1428, 1432-1433—several factors supported conclusion taxpayers possessed requisite "profit motive" to properly claim rental expense deductions]
However, "the use made of the property and the owner's intent in respect to the future use of [sic] disposition of the property are generally controlling." [Horrmann v. Commissioner (1951) 17 TC 903, 907 (emphasis added)]

[13:303.11 - 13:303.14] Reserved.

(3) [13:303.15] Establishing whether "conversion" occurred; effect of mere offers to rent: If a property is rented out before it is sold, the conversion from personal residence to rental property is self-evident. On the other hand, if the property is simply held out for rent and not actually rented, it becomes more difficult to establish that a conversion actually occurred. This is so even if the property is no longer occupied as a residence. Thus, courts examine whether the efforts to rent were serious. [See Redisch v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2015-95 (denying both ordinary loss and depreciation deduction for taxpayers' secondary residence where efforts to rent appeared "minimal"); compare Horrmann v. Commissioner (1951) 17 TC 903, 907-910 (permitting depreciation deduction, but not ordinary loss deduction, where inherited property merely offered for rent); and see Cowles v. Commissioner, TC Memo 1970-198 (criticizing Horrmann, supra, for distinguishing between depreciation and ordinary loss deductions re mere offers to rent but "unwilling to chart a new course")]

3. [13:304] Like-Kind Exchanges (IRC § 1031): Gain or loss is not recognized upon the exchange of real property of like kind. Both the property surrendered and the property received must be held for productive use in a trade or business or for investment, not for personal purposes or for sale. [IRC § 1031(a)(1), (2); see Foster, "A Checklist for Like-Kind Real Estate Exchanges" (2015) 42 J. Real Est. Tax. 126]

a. [13:305] Real property: For purposes of IRC § 1031, all real property—improved and unimproved—is considered of like kind, as long as they are held for use in a trade or business or for investment. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(a)-1(a), (c)]

➪ [13:305.1] PRACTICE POINTER: As a result, IRC § 1031 is of great importance in real estate investing:
It allows taxpayers with profitable real estate investments to swap them for other real estate without paying tax. Indeed, if this process can be repeated until the taxpayer dies, the gain will never be taxed.

(1) [13:305.2] "Real property" defined: Under the regulations, "real property" means "land and improvements to land, unsevered natural products of land, and water and air space superjacent to land." [Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(a)-3(a)(1)]

(a) [13:305.3] "Improvements to land" defined: The term "improvements to land" means "inherently permanent structures and the structural components of inherently permanent structures." [Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(a)-3(a)(2)]

1) [13:305.4] "Inherently permanent structures": "Inherently permanent structures" means buildings and other structures that are (i) "permanently affixed to real property," and (ii) "will ordinarily remain affixed for an indefinite period of time." A structure is permanently affixed "if it is reasonably expected to last indefinitely based on all the facts and circumstances." [Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(a)-3(a)(2)(ii) (listing examples of "buildings" and "other inherently permanent structures," including parking facilities, permanently affixed fences, and oil and gas pipelines)]

The following five-factor test applies to determine if a structure not specifically listed in Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(a)-3(a)(2)(ii) qualifies as an inherently permanent structure (Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(a)-3(a)(2)(ii)(C)):

— Manner in which the structure is affixed;

— Whether the structure is designed to be removed or remain in place;

— Damage that removal of the structure would cause to the structure itself or real property;

— Any circumstances suggesting the expected affixation period is not indefinite; and

— Time and expense required to move the structure.

2) [13:305.5] "Structural components": The term "structural components of inherently permanent structures" means any "distinct asset" that is a "constituent part of, and integrated into, an inherently permanent structure." [Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(a)-3(a)(2)(iii); see Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(a)-3(a)(4) (defining "distinct asset")]

If interconnected assets work together to serve an inherently permanent structure (e.g., systems that provide a building with electricity, heat, or water), the assets are analyzed together as one distinct asset that may be a structural component. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(a)-3(a)(2)(iii)]

A structural component may qualify as real property only if the taxpayer holds its interest in the structural component together with a real property interest in the space in the inherently permanent structure served by the structural component. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(a)-3(a)(2)(iii)]

(b) [13:305.6] Intangible assets included: An interest in real property includes fee ownership, co-ownership, a leasehold, an option to acquire real property, an easement, stock in a cooperative housing corporation, shares in a mutual ditch, reservoir, or irrigation company (see IRC § 501(c)(12)(A)), and land development rights. Similar interests qualify as real property "if the intangible asset derives its value from real property or an interest in real property and is inseparable from that real property or interest in real property." [Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(a)-3(a)(5)(i); see also Cunningham & Weller, "Intangible Interests in Real Property Under IRC 1031" (2nd Quarter 2023) Real Estate Tax'n 45]

1) [13:305.7] Compare—intangible assets excluded: The following intangible assets are not real property under the regulations: (i) types of stock not described in Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(a)-3(a)(5), bonds, or notes; (ii) other securities or evidences of indebtedness or interest; (iii) interests in a partnership (other than an interest in a partnership that has in effect a valid election under IRC § 761(a) to be excluded from application of all of subchapter K); (iv) certificates of trust or beneficial interests; and (v) choses in action. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(a)-3(a)(5)(i)]

2) [13:305.8] Licenses and permits: Real property generally includes a "license, permit, or other similar right that is solely for the use, enjoyment, or occupation of land or an inherently permanent structure and that is in the nature of a leasehold, easement, or other similar right," but not "a license or permit to engage in or operate a business on real property." [Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(a)-3(a)(5)(ii)]

(c) [13:305.9] Effect of state/local law: If the property is considered real property under state and local law on the date it is transferred, it is considered real property for purposes of IRC § 1031. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(a)-3(a)(6); see also Charin, "Like-Kind Exchanges of Real Property: New Final Regs.," The Tax Adviser (4/1/21), available at thetaxadviser.com; Parillo, "IRS Attorney Anticipates Flexibility in Like-Kind Regs Test," 172 Tax Notes 823 (Aug. 2, 2021) (suggesting if property is treated as real property under at least one state or local level it will likely be treated as real property under Section 1031)]

(2) [13:306] Example: T holds Blackacre, a piece of raw land, for investment. She exchanges it for White Arms, an apartment house that she will actively manage. T does not recognize gain or loss on Blackacre because the exchange is of property of a like kind covered by IRC § 1031.

(3) [13:307] Personal use real estate: Real estate held for personal use (e.g., a vacation home) is not held for use in a trade or business or for investment, even if the taxpayer expects it to appreciate in value. [Moore v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2007-134]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(a) [13:307.1] Compare—limited personal use rental property; replacement property: The IRS will not challenge whether a dwelling unit is held for productive use in a trade or business under IRC § 1031 if (i) the relinquished unit is rented for a fair rental rate during each of the two 12-month periods immediately preceding the exchange; and (ii) the taxpayer's personal use of the dwelling does not exceed the greater of 14 days or 10% of the number of days during the 12-month period that the unit was rented at a fair rental rate. [Rev.Proc. 2008-16, 2008-10 CB 547]

Replacement property must meet the same standards during the two 12-month periods following the exchange (Rev.Proc. 2008-16, 2008-10 CB 547). Merely designating replacement property as rental property and attempting to rent it out may not be sufficient. [See Goolsby v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2010-64—taxpayers who attempted to rent out replacement property for two months before giving up and moving in did not show requisite investment intent; Adams v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2013-7—although fair rental rate requirement applies to replacement property rented out to relatives, courts may consider other factors in establishing fair rent such as whether relative bore rehabilitation costs (¶ 13:156 ff., 13:316.1); see also Chief Counsel Advice 201025049—renting out some replacement property while sale is pending is insufficient]

The above requirements parallel those used in determining whether the costs of holding the property are currently deductible. [IRC § 280A; ¶ 13:294 ff.]

[13:307.2 - 13:307.4] Reserved.

(4) [13:307.5] Easements: A perpetual easement right considered an interest in real property under state law is treated as of like-kind with any other real property interest. [Rev.Rul. 55-749, 1955-2 CB 295 (perpetual water rights exchanged for fee interest in land); Priv.Ltr.Rul. 200203042 (permanent conservation easement exchanged for fee interest in land similarly burdened)]

(5) [13:308] Leases: A lease having 30 or more years to run is treated as of like-kind with a fee in real estate. The 30-year requirement is strictly enforced. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(a)-1(c); VIP's Indus. Inc. v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2013-157—like-kind status denied for leasehold interest with only 21 years and 4 months remaining; see also Leitner & Stein, "Tax Aspects of Modern Sale-Leasebacks of Real Property" (2022) 176 Tax Notes 1691, 1695]

However, a sale of property for its value, coupled with a leaseback of the property for a term over 30 years, is a sale—not an "exchange" under IRC § 1031; consequently, the seller can recognize loss. [Jordan Marsh Co. v. Commissioner (2nd Cir. 1959) 269 F2d 453, 456-457] Indeed, a sale-leaseback has to actually transfer the benefits and burdens of ownership to the taxpayer to qualify as an exchange. [See Exelon Corp. v. Commissioner (7th Cir. 2018) 906 F3d 513, 523-528—series of sale-leasebacks deemed disguised loans ineligible for IRC § 1031 exchange treatment because they were structured so "seller" was likely to exercise lease cancellation options]

(a) [13:308.1] Property *subject to leases: The fact that real property is subject to a lease, even a long-term lease (e.g., 99 years), does not disqualify it from being treated as like-kind property, and any rent received under the lease is not treated as "boot" (¶ 13:317). [Koch v. Commissioner (1978) 71 TC 54, 63; Peabody Natural Resources Co. v. Commissioner (2006) 126 TC 261, 279—exchange of gold mine for coal mine burdened with contracts for supplying coal to utility qualified as IRC § 1031 exchange]

(6) [13:309] Tenancy in common interests: Under IRC § 1031, an undivided tenancy in common interest in real property is treated as of like-kind with a fee interest. [See generally, Cuff, "Section 1031 Exchanges Involving Tenancies-in-Common" (2002) 29 J. Real Est. Tax 53; Cuff, "Selecting and Describing TICs as Replacement Property" (2006) 34 J. Real Est. Tax 32]

Exchanging a fee interest for a tenancy in common interest can be useful to a taxpayer who has not yet selected a replacement property under the time limits for a deferred exchange (see¶ 13:332). Certain "promoters" facilitate § 1031 exchanges by offering cotenancy interests in rental property that can be exchanged later for the replacement property.

(a) [13:309.1] Compare—partnership interests:Section 1031 does not apply to an exchange involving a "cotenancy" interest that is in fact classified for tax purposes as a partnership interest (see¶ 13:259.1 ff.). Therefore, taxpayers participating in such an exchange should attempt to comply with IRS guidelines regarding the tax treatment of an "undivided fractional interest" (i.e., a tenancy in common) in rental real property to ensure that the cotenancy will qualify for IRC § 1031 treatment (see Rev.Proc. 2002-22, 2002-1 CB 733; and¶ 13:259.4). [See also Lipton, "The 'State of the Art' in Like-Kind Exchanges, 2012" (2012) 116 J. of Tax. 246, 273-275; Borden, "Open Tenancies in Common" (2009) 39 Seton Hall L.Rev.]

(7) [13:309.2] Development rights: Under state law, development rights in real property may be transferred separately from the property itself. The IRS has ruled that those development rights are of like-kind to real property for IRC § 1031 purposes. Thus, a taxpayer may swap one of its real properties for development rights, and then use those rights to develop another one of its properties. [Priv.Ltr.Rul. 200901020; Priv.Ltr.Rul. 200805012]

[13:309.3 - 13:309.4] Reserved.

(8) [13:309.5] Limited liability company interests? Where a taxpayer proposed to exchange an interest in real property for an interest in a single-member limited liability company, the IRS held that the acquisition of the LLC could be treated as the acquisition of IRC § 1031 like-kind replacement property to the extent that the LLC's property at the time of the exchange consists of qualifying like-kind property; any other property held by the LLC would be taxable as "boot" (¶ 13:317). [Rev.Rul. 99-6, 1999-1 CB 432; Priv.Ltr.Rul. 200118023]

(9) [13:310] Exceptions—property not subject to § 1031 treatment: IRC § 1031 is inapplicable to many types of property, thus making exchanges of such property taxable events. The exceptions include:

- [13:311] Property held primarily for sale. [IRC § 1031(a)(2); Neal T. Baker Enterprises, Inc. v. Commissioner, TC Memo 1998-302]

  Thus, "dealers" cannot take advantage of IRC § 1031 with respect to property held for sale to customers. [Neal T. Baker Enterprises, Inc. v. Commissioner, TC Memo 1998-302—IRC § 1031 treatment not available where taxpayer sold 14 subdivided lots before exchanging remaining 38 lots; and see ¶ 13:422 ff. for discussion of dealer property]

  Cross-refer: For a discussion of Baker, supra, see Cuff, "Tax Free Real Estate Transactions" (1999) 26 J. Real Est. Tax 304.

- [13:312] Foreign real property. [IRC § 1031(h)]

[13:313 - 13:315.4] Reserved.

(10) [13:315.5] Compare—improvements: Sometimes surrendered real property is exchanged into replacement property on which improvements are partially constructed or will be constructed in the future. Contracts to construct improvements in the future are not like-kind to real property for IRC § 1031 purposes. On the other hand, improvements under construction on the replacement property will qualify as like-kind real property to the extent those improvements are classified as real estate under state law on the date the replacement property is received. [See Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(k)-1(e)]

(a) [13:315.6] Comment: A "reverse deferred exchange" (¶ 13:339.5 ff.) could be used to qualify an exchange involving replacement property on which improvements will be constructed in the future as tax-free. For instance, the replacement property may be acquired by an independent party who then constructs the improvements. The replacement property, including the newly-constructed improvements, is then exchanged for the surrendered property.

However, exchanging parties using the "parking arrangement" form of a reverse exchange (¶ 13:339.8 ff.) may find it difficult meeting the 180-day requirement (¶ 13:339.15) because of potential construction delays.

[13:315.7 - 13:315.9] Reserved.

(11) [13:315.10] Compare—assignment of right to receive future income generated by property: If the exchange involves a transfer of the right to receive future income generated by the property (e.g., an assignment of the right to receive oil lease income), it is not a like-kind exchange; the property received is not "substantially a continuation of the old investment still unliquidated" (see ¶ 13:316). [Commissioner v. P. G. Lake, Inc. (1958) 356 US 260, 267-268, 78 S.Ct. 691, 695-696]

b. [13:316] "Held" for productive use or investment requirement: The relinquished property in a IRC § 1031 exchange must be "held" for productive use or investment. The replacement property must also be held as such. [IRC § 1031(a)(1)]

The rationale behind this rule is that "the taxpayer's economic situation after the transfer is fundamentally the same as it was before the transfer: his money is still tied up in investment in the same kind of property." [Magneson v. Commissioner

(9th Cir. 1985) 753 F2d 1490, 1494-1495—taxpayers exchanged property for like-kind property which they continued to hold for investment, albeit in different form of ownership]

(1) [13:316.1] Taxpayer's intention re replacement property: The taxpayer must establish that their primary intention is to hold the replacement property for productive use or investment. [See Adams v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2013-7—replacement property rented to taxpayer's son for below market price still qualified as "like kind" because rent was deemed "fair" given substantial renovation work son did to make property livable; Goolsby v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2010-64—replacement property disqualified as "like kind" where taxpayer moved in shortly after exchange and made only feeble attempt to rent]

(2) [13:316.2] Length of time "held" not dispositive: There is no bright line rule for determining how long the relinquished or replacement property must be held in order to qualify for a IRC § 1031 exchange. The taxpayer's intent to hold the property for productive use or investment is dispositive, rather than the amount of time the property is held. [See Priv.Ltr.Rul. 8429039—where replacement property held for 2 years, exchange qualified for § 1031 treatment; Reesink v. Commissioner, TC Memo-2012-118—where replacement property held for 8 months before being converted to personal residence, exchange qualified for § 1031 treatment (taxpayer's unsuccessful attempts to rent replacement property and change in personal financial circumstances justified removing property from rental market); see also generally, Fogel, "How Long Must Like-Kind Exchange Properties be Held?" (Sept. 25, 2006) 112 Tax Notes 1133]

(3) [13:316.3] Compare—property acquired for purpose of sale or exchange: If the taxpayer acquired the relinquished property with the intention of selling or exchanging it (rather than holding it for productive use or investment), the exchange does not qualify under IRC § 1031. [See Black v. Commissioner (1960) 35 TC 90, 95; Rev.Rul. 75-291, 1975-2 CB 332; Rev.Rul. 77-297, 1977-2 CB 304; Rev.Rul. 84-121, 1984-2 CB 168]

Put another way, for an exchange to qualify under § 1031, the taxpayer need not have an intent to keep the relinquished property indefinitely prior to forming the intent to exchange it for the replacement property. Rather, if the taxpayer owns property that they do not intend to dispose of by sale or exchange or to use for personal pursuits, it is held for productive use in trade or business or for investment within the meaning of § 1031. [Bolker v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1985) 760 F2d 1039, 1045—where taxpayer received property in tax-free corporate liquidation and then exchanged it for like-kind property several months later, exchange qualified under § 1031 because liquidation planned before taxpayer formed intent to swap properties]

(a) [13:316.4] Effect of holding property as investment in different form: Where immediately after a like-kind exchange, the taxpayer does not dispose of the property but continues to own it, albeit in a different form, the exchange still qualifies for IRC § 1031 tax-free treatment. [See Magneson v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1985) 753 F2d 1490, 1494-1496—exchange of property for like-kind property, followed by prearranged contribution of replacement property to partnership, qualified under § 1031 because taxpayers intended to and continued to hold replacement property (contribution to partnership was change in form of ownership of replacement property rather than relinquishment of property); Maloney v. Commissioner (1989) 93 TC 89, 95-99—same where corporation exchanged property for like-kind property and then distributed replacement property to taxpayers, who were controlling shareholders of corporation, as part of liquidation of corporation; see also Lipton, "The 'State of the Art' in Like-Kind Exchanges, 2012" (2012) 116 J. of Tax. 246, 276-282]

1) [13:316.5] Compare—California's application of step-transaction doctrine: Traditionally, California's tax authorities (i.e., the Franchise Tax Board and Office of Tax Appeals) have applied aggressively the step-transaction doctrine to recharacterize immediate drop downs of replacement property as exchanges of real property for partnership interests, making them ineligible for IRC § 1031 treatment. [See Matter of the Consol. Appeals of S. Kwon et al., OTA Case Nos. 18011810-13 (April 14, 2021)—Office of Tax Appeals determined partnership's (not individual taxpayers') receipt of property meant holding period requirement was violated in swap and drop transaction]

By the same token, the Office of Tax Appeals has followed federal law on swaps and drops where the facts were appropriate. [See Matter of Sharon Mitchell, 2018 OTA 210 (citing Magneson, supra, with approval)—FTB determination re swap and drop transaction that last minute change in ownership violated holding period requirement overturned]

(4) [13:316.6] Mixed-use property: For purposes of the IRC § 1031 "held-for" requirement, taxpayers may not bifurcate a single asset so that it can be considered one personal use property and one business use property. [See ILM 201605017—private plane used for both personal and business reasons had to be treated as one or the other]

Although the IRS has not specified how much business use is necessary to make a mixed-use asset qualify, it has indicated that less than 50% is insufficient. [See ILM 201605017; Davis, "IRS Punted on Like-Kind Exchange Deferral Percentage" (May 16, 2016) 151 Tax Notes 904]

(5) [13:316.7] Profit not required: Property held for productive use in a trade or business need not generated profits to qualify for IRC § 1031 treatment. [See ILM 201601011—property leased to related entity at rate that does not generate profit still satisfies "held-for" test if entity cannot own it outright and property is otherwise productively used]

(6) [13:316.8] Conversion of residential property before exchange: The property relinquished in a IRC § 1031 exchange must have been held for productive use in a trade or business or for investment. As a result, residential property ordinarily is not eligible for nonrecognition treatment upon a like-kind exchange. If, however, the property was converted to rental use before the exchange, it may satisfy the "held" requirement. [See IRC § 1031(a)(1)]

(a) [13:316.8a] Eligibility for IRC § 121 exclusion: Because of prior residential use, a property transfer may qualify for both nonrecognition under IRC § 1031 (¶ 13:316.8) and for an exclusion under IRC § 121 (¶ 13:345 ff.). [See Priv.Ltr.Rul. 201944006—taxpayers who satisfy all § 1031 nonrecognition requirements may apply IRC § 121 up to maximum amount and also apply § 1031 to amount of gain that exceeds § 121 maximum]

c. [13:317] Treatment where property received not solely of like kind—gain on "boot": Where the taxpayer receives both property of like kind and "other property or money" (commonly referred to as "boot"), loss is not recognized. [IRC § 1031(c)] However, realized gain is recognized to the extent of the value of the boot. [IRC § 1031(b)]

(1) [13:317.1] Example: Bob owns Blackacre, worth $1,000. His basis for Blackacre is $400. He exchanges it for Whiteacre, worth $900. In addition, Bob receives $100 cash. Bob's realized gain is $600, but his recognized gain is only $100.

(Compare: If Bob's basis for Blackacre were $980, his realized and recognized gain would be only $20, even though he received $100 of boot.)

(2) Mortgages on surrendered property as "boot"

(a) [13:318] General rule: Where surrendered property is subject to a mortgage, the party acquiring the property commonly assumes or takes subject to that mortgage. To the party surrendering the encumbered property, the debt taken over by the acquiring party is treated the same as cash. Thus it is treated as boot received. [Treas.Reg. §§ 1.1031(b)-1(c), 1.1031(d)-2 ex. (1)]

(b) [13:318.1] Netting of mortgages: However, if there is a mortgage on both the property surrendered and the property acquired, the two mortgages are netted against each other. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(b)-1(c)]

• If the taxpayer takes on more debt than they gave up, the taxpayer is not treated as receiving any boot. Instead the two mortgages cancel out and the taxpayer is treated as if they paid cash equal to the excess of the mortgage acquired over the mortgage surrendered. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(d)-2 ex. (2)]

• But if the taxpayer gives up more debt than they take on, the difference is treated as cash received. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(d)-2 ex. (2)]

Cross-refer: For detailed discussion of the various scenarios relating to mortgage netting, see Cuff, "Liabilities in Section 1031 Exchanges" (2000) 27 J. Real Est. Tax 119.

1) [13:318.2] Netting, boot received: Alice's basis for Blackacre is $400. Blackacre is worth $1,000 and is subject to a $300 trust deed. Thus, Alice's equity is $700.

Alice swaps Blackacre for Whiteacre. Whiteacre is worth $800 and is subject to a $160 trust deed, yielding $640 in equity. To equalize the deal, Alice receives $60 in cash. Alice therefore receives a total of $200 in boot in this transaction—the $140 difference in the debts plus the $60 cash. Alice's realized gain was $600, but her recognized gain is $200.

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

2) [13:318.3] Netting, boot paid: Alice's basis for Blackacre is $400; Blackacre is worth $1,000 but is subject to a $300 trust deed (equity of $700). Alice swaps Blackacre for Whiteacre (owned by Wanda). Whiteacre is worth $1,600 and is subject to a trust deed of $500 (equity of $1,100). Alice also pays $400 to equalize the exchange (thus, both parties pay $1,100). Alice's realized gain is $600 but she recognizes no gain. Although Wanda took over Alice's $300 debt, Alice took on new debt of $500. The two debts are netted and Alice is treated as having paid $200 in cash on the exchange of debt plus an additional $400 in cash.

3) [13:318.4] Netting plus cash received: Again, assume Alice's basis for Blackacre is $400 and it is worth $1,000 but is subject to a $300 trust deed (equity of $700). Alice exchanges it for Greenacre, owned by George. Greenacre is worth $800 and is subject to a debt of $720 (equity of $80). Thus, George pays Alice $620 in cash. In this situation, the two debts are first netted; Alice is treated as having paid $420 cash because she took on debt of $720 and gave up debt of $300. However, Alice is still treated as having received $620 cash, because the Regulations do not allow netting of the mortgages to reduce the actual cash received on the deal. As a result, Alice recognizes her entire $600 realized gain because she has received $620 in boot. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(d)-2 ex. (2)(b)]

4) [13:318.5] Netting plus cash paid: In the example at ¶ 13:318.4, assume George's basis for Greenacre was $50. George had a realized gain of $750. When the two mortgages are netted, George is treated as having received cash of $420 (i.e., he gave up debt of $720 and acquired debt of only $300). However, the $620 cash paid by George reduces this sum. George is treated as having received no boot and instead is treated as having paid $200 in cash. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(d)-2 ex. (2)(c)]

(3) [13:319] Costs of exchange reducing boot: In some circumstances, the IRS has ruled that boot received can be reduced by the taxpayer's costs incurred in making the exchange. [Rev.Rul. 72-456, 1972-2 CB 468 (brokerage costs offset cash received); see Levine & Schneider, "Netting Boot Received Against Expenses Paid in a Section 1031 Exchange" (1990) 18 J. of Real Est. Tax 14]

[13:320] Reserved.

(4) [13:321] Tax deferral under installment method: If boot received in a IRC § 1031 exchange is in the form of a deferred payment obligation, the installment method can be used to defer tax until the obligation is paid. [IRC § 453(f)(6); Prop.Regs. § 1.453-1(f)]

Cross-refer: The installment method is discussed at ¶ 13:466 ff.

➪ [13:321.1] PRACTICE POINTER: Sellers in a tax-free exchange involving encumbered property may want to receive cash in the deal but not have to recognize it as taxable boot. One way to accomplish this is to refinance the property either before or after the exchange and receive the refinanced loan proceeds tax-free. However, caution should be taken to make sure that the refinancing is completely separate from the exchange. Otherwise, the IRS should assert that the refinancing proceeds are actually taxable boot.

d. [13:322] Basis of property received: The basis of property received in a IRC § 1031 exchange is the same as the basis of the property exchanged, decreased by the amount of any money the taxpayer receives and increased by any gain (or decreased by any loss) recognized by the taxpayer on the exchange. [IRC § 1031(d); Rev.Rul. 92-95]

Note again that the taxpayer is treated as paying cash if the mortgage on the property received is greater than on the property surrendered; conversely, the taxpayer is treated as receiving cash if the mortgage on the property surrendered is greater than on the property received. [See Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(d)-2, examples]

(1) [13:323] Noncash boot: Noncash boot received in a IRC § 1031 exchange is given a basis equal to its value. [IRC § 1031(d)]

(2) Examples

• [13:324] Blackacre is worth $1,000. Bob's basis for Blackacre is $400. Bob exchanges Blackacre for Whiteacre, worth $900. Bob also receives $100 in cash. The basis of Whiteacre is $400: old basis ($400), plus gain recognized ($100), less cash received ($100). However, if the basis of Blackacre had been $980, the basis of Whiteacre would be $900: old basis ($980), plus gain recognized ($20), less cash received ($100).

WESTLAW © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

• [13:325] In the preceding example, Willy owned Whiteacre, which was worth $900. Willy's basis for Whiteacre was $820. Willy did not receive any boot on the exchange, but he paid $100 in boot. Willy does not recognize gain. His basis for Blackacre is $920: old basis ($820) plus cash paid ($100).

• [13:326] Bob trades Blackacre, worth $1,000, for Whiteacre, worth $900. Bob's old basis for Blackacre was $400. Instead of $100 cash, Bob receives GM stock worth $100. Bob recognizes $100 gain. His basis for Whiteacre is $400 and his basis for the GM stock is $100.

e. [13:327] Multi-party exchanges: It is often necessary to involve a third party to facilitate a IRC § 1031 exchange. This is permissible so long as the taxpayer makes an exchange.

(1) Examples

• [13:328] Bob owns Blackacre, which he would like to exchange for Whiteacre, owned by Willy. However, Willy wants to sell for cash. Tom wants to buy Blackacre for cash. In this situation, Tom could purchase Whiteacre for cash; then Tom could exchange Whiteacre for Blackacre. Since Bob never receives cash—only Whiteacre in exchange for Blackacre —he qualifies under IRC § 1031 and recognizes no gain.

• [13:329] The problem in the example at ¶ 13:328 could also have been solved if Bob and Willy exchanged Blackacre for Whiteacre; then Willy sold Blackacre to Tom for cash.

(2) [13:330] Four parties: As a practical matter, it is often necessary to involve a fourth party in such exchanges to serve as facilitator.

• [13:331] Example: Again assume Bob owns Blackacre, which he would like to exchange for Whiteacre, owned by Willy; Willy wants to sell for cash and Tom wants to buy Blackacre for cash. Assume further that Fred is the fourth party.

Using cash supplied by Tom, Fred purchases Whiteacre from Willy; Fred exchanges Whiteacre for Blackacre with Bob; then Fred transfers Blackacre to Tom. Fred can achieve all of this with only a single escrow.

(For an excellent treatment of the many variations on the multi-party exchange scenario, see Wasserman, "Mr. Mogul's Perpetual Search for Tax Deferral: Techniques and Questions Involving Section 1031—Like-Kind Exchanges in a World of Changing Tax Alternatives" (1987) 65 Taxes 975.)

f. [13:332] Deferred exchanges: Exchanges deferred for brief periods will qualify for IRC § 1031 treatment. [IRC § 1031(a)(3), codifying but limiting Starker v. United States (9th Cir. 1979) 602 F2d 1341, 1354-1355]

(For a detailed discussion of deferred exchanges, see Lipton, "The 'State of the Art' in Like-Kind Exchanges, 2012" (2012) 116 J. of Tax. 246, 249. For a basic discussion of a straightforward deferred exchange with practical tips, see Cuff, "Structuring a Simple Forward Real Estate Exchange" (2007) 34 J. Real Est. Tax 77.)

The following three conditions apply (IRC § 1031(a)(3)):

• The taxpayer must identify the replacement property within 45 days after transferring the old property. [IRC § 1031(a)(3)(A)]

• The taxpayer actually must receive the replacement property on or before 180 days after transferring the old property or on or before the due date for the tax return for the year in which the transfer occurred (including extensions)—whichever date comes sooner. [IRC § 1031(a)(3)(B); Brady, "Planning Tax-Deferred Exchanges Around the Year-End" (Jan. 11, 2016) 150 Tax Notes 241]

If the taxpayer fails to apply for a tax return filing extension (although one would automatically have been granted), replacement property acquired after the return due date is disqualified. [Christensen v. Commissioner, TC Memo 1996-254, aff'd (9th Cir. 1998) 142 F3d 442— old property transferred to facilitator on 12/22/88, but replacement property not acquired until 4/25/89—after 4/17/89 due date for 1988 return]

• The replacement property must be "substantially the same property as identified." [See Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(k)-1(d)]

➪ [13:332.1] PRACTICE POINTER: The 45- and 180-day periods begin running only when the taxpayer transfers title to, or the benefits and burdens of ownership of, the old property to the buyer, whichever occurs first (see¶ 13:46 ff.). Thus, where the taxpayer anticipates needing more time to identify and receive the replacement property, the taxpayer may wish to delay the date when escrow closes on the sale of the old property. However, if the buyer is eager to gain possession of the property, such a delay may be unacceptable. Under these circumstances, in order to accommodate both parties' desires, rather than sell the property outright to the buyer, the taxpayer could grant the buyer an option to purchase (see¶ 13:50) and simultaneously lease the property to the buyer. To avoid having this arrangement being considered an immediate sale, market rates for the option grant and the lease should be used. [See generally, Copple, "What if the Seller Needs More Time?" (2007) 34 J. Real Est. Tax. 69, 71-76]

(1) [13:333] Identification requirement: Within the 45-day period (¶ 13:332 ff.), the replacement property must be identified in a written document signed by the taxpayer and delivered to the person obligated to transfer the replacement property to the taxpayer (or to any other person involved in the exchange). The document must unambiguously identify the replacement property. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(k)-1(c); see Smith v. Commissioner, TC Memo 1997-109, aff'd (4th Cir. 1997) 129 F3d 1260—T failed to formally identify replacement property within 45 days even though he had already focused on that property]

(a) [13:334] Identification of multiple properties: The taxpayer can identify up to three properties without regard to their market value or any number of properties if their aggregate market value does not exceed 200% of the value of the relinquished properties. Identifications can be revoked. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(k)-1(c)]

If properties originally identified as replacement property are determined to be ineligible, it may be possible to substitute other properly identified properties acquired within the statutory time periods. [TAM 201437012]

(2) [13:335] Security arrangements—"safe harbors": A taxpayer who transfers property as part of a deferred exchange is properly concerned that the return promise to convey property in the future be adequately secured. Similarly, the taxpayer may be entitled to receive cash if no suitable replacement property is identified or purchased; yet, the taxpayer must avoid receiving or constructively receiving money if replacement property is actually acquired. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(k)-1(f)]

The Regulations provide for a number of "safe harbors" whereby the promise to convey property or cash in the future can be secured without disqualifying the exchange:

(a) [13:336] Security: The return promise can be secured by a mortgage or other security interest in property, a standby letter of credit, or a third party guaranty. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(k)-1(g)(2)]

(b) [13:337] Qualified escrow or qualified trust; express limitations: The cash obtained from selling the taxpayer's property can be held in an escrow or trust if the escrow holder or trustee is not the taxpayer or a "disqualified person." A "disqualified person" is someone who is the taxpayer's agent (or who has been an agent within the preceding two years) or a family member or related entity. The escrow or trust must expressly limit the taxpayer's rights to obtain the cash or borrow against any cash held in the escrow or trust. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(k)-1(g)(3), (6) & (k); see also Wagner, "Ruling Paves the Way for Professionals to Operate Section 1031 Exchange Intermediaries" (Dec. 2003) 99 J. Tax. 349; Cuff, "Issues in Cashing Out of an Exchange"(2000) 28 J. Real Est. Tax 68; Cuff, "High Anxiety and the Effect of a Premature Disbursement of Exchange Balances on Deferred Exchanges" (1995) 23 J. Real Est. Tax 31]

Having in place express limitations on the taxpayer's right to receive, pledge, borrow or otherwise access funds held in an escrow account may satisfy the requirements for a qualified escrow when there is an accidental transfer of funds. [See Morton v. United States (Fed.Cl. 2011) 98 Fed.Cl. 596—escrow agent's accidental transfer of funds to taxpayer's S corporation did not invalidate like-kind exchange where express limitations on taxpayer's right to access said funds were in place and taxpayer immediately returned funds to escrow account; compare Crandall v. Commissioner, TC Summ.Opn. 2011-14—absence of express limitations on taxpayer's right to access escrow funds fatal to like-kind exchange even though taxpayer did not actually receive any proceeds]

(c) [13:338] Qualified intermediary (QI): A QI cannot be the taxpayer or a "disqualified person" (¶ 13:337). [See Blangiardo v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2014-110—exchange ruled taxable because qualified intermediary was taxpayer's son; Lipton et al., "The 'State of the Art' in Like-Kind Exchanges - 2015" (Jan. 2016) 124 J. Tax. 5, 11]

Moreover, the taxpayer must be unable to obtain cash or borrow against cash held by the QI (as explained at ¶ 13:337). A QI enters into a written agreement with the taxpayer to acquire the old property, dispose of the old property, acquire the new property, and transfer the new property to the taxpayer.

"Direct deeding" is permitted—i.e., the taxpayer may deed the property to the purchaser and the seller of the replacement property can deed it to the taxpayer. Thus, the QI can stay out of the chain of title. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(k)-1(g)(4); see Cuff, "Working with Deferred Exchange Accommodators" (Jan. 1991) 13 L.A. Lwyr. 13; Dukes, "Direct Deeding May Avoid Intermediary's Environmental Exposure" (1993) 79 Tax. 210]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

1) [13:338.1] Example: On May 17, pursuant to a written agreement, Bob deeds Blackacre to Ira. Ira is unrelated to Bob and has not acted as his agent (except insofar as Ira serves as a QI in this transaction). Ira sells Blackacre to Tom for cash and holds the cash in an escrow account. On or before July 1, Bob identifies Whiteacre, owned by Willy, as his replacement property. On or before November 13, Ira uses Tom's cash to buy Whiteacre. Willy conveys Whiteacre to Ira and Ira conveys it to Bob. The written agreement between Bob and Ira sufficiently limited Bob's ability to obtain cash held by Ira or borrow against it. Ira is a QI, and Bob's deferred exchange of Blackacre for Whiteacre qualifies under IRC § 1031. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(k)-1(g)(8) ex. 3]

The transaction would also be eligible for § 1031 treatment if Bob deeded Blackacre directly to Tom and Willy deeded Whiteacre directly to Bob. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(k)-1(g)(4)]

➪ [13:338.2] PRACTICE POINTER: To protect against the QI mismanaging funds, the exchanging parties should investigate the QI's financial viability and creditworthiness before turning funds over to the QI. [See Sikora, "Deferred Exchanges—Selecting A QI and Document the Transaction With It" (2007) 107 J. of Tax 297]

In addition, either of the "safe harbor" security arrangements described at ¶ 13:335 ff. can be used in conjunction with the QI. For instance, the parties could require the QI to secure the QI's obligations (see¶ 13:336) or to hold the exchange funds in an escrow or trust (see¶ 13:337).

2) [13:338.3] Default by QI: One risk associated with the deferred exchange procedure is that the QI may go bankrupt and thus be unable to complete the transaction within the statutory time periods. As a result, the IRS has ruled the taxpayer need not recognize immediate gain, but will recognize it in the year the taxpayer receives a payment attributable to the relinquished property. [Rev.Proc. 2010-14, 2010-12 IRB 456; see Lipton & Weller, "IRS Provides Limited Relief for Section 1031 Exchanges that Fail Due to Default by a QI" (2010) 113 J. of Tax. 5]

(3) [13:339.1] Use of installment method: The installment method can be used in the case of a deferred exchange that straddles several tax years or where the taxpayer receives a deferred payment note in a transaction that employed a qualified intermediary. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1031(k)-1(j)(2); see Smalley v. Commissioner (2001) 116 TC 450—taxpayer had bona fide intent to enter into deferred sale, so installment method applies; Christensen v. Commissioner, TC Memo 1996-254, aff'd (9th Cir. 1998) 142 F3d 442—deferred exchange not meeting IRC § 1031(a)(3) time requirements (¶ 13:332) qualifies for installment method; see also Cuff, "Combining Installment Sales & Exchanges Under the Final 453/1031 Regulations" (1994) 22 J. Real Est. Tax. 15]

• [13:339.2] Example: Pursuant to a qualified IRC § 1031 deferred exchange, P transfers Blackacre, subject to a $100,000 liability, in Year 1, and receives Whiteacre, subject to a $60,000 liability, in Year 2. P's $40,000 decrease in liability is treated as boot (see¶ 13:318.1) and taxable in Year 1 (the year P surrendered the old property) and not in Year 2 (the year P acquired the replacement property). [See Rev.Rul. 2003-56, 2003-1 CB 985 (discussing tax treatment of partnership's liabilities resulting from deferred exchange); Lipton, "Multi-Year Deferred Like-Kind Exchanges by Partnerships" (August 2003) 98 J. of Tax. 69]

Cross-refer: For a discussion of the installment method, see¶ 13:466 ff.

[13:339.3 - 13:339.4] Reserved.

(4) [13:339.5] Compare—reverse deferred exchanges: Rather than deferring the acquisition of replacement property for a brief period of time (a typical Starker exchange scenario, ¶ 13:332), a taxpayer may want to acquire replacement property before transferring the old property.

A "reverse exchange" occurs when the taxpayer first acquires the replacement property, then disposes of the old property.

(a) [13:339.6] Generally nonqualified § 1031 exchanges: Generally, reverse deferred exchanges do not qualify for nonrecognition under IRC § 1031(a)(3) or the regulations thereunder. [DeCleene v. Commissioner (2000) 115 TC 457; TAM 200039005—reverse exchange using third party accommodator did not qualify for IRC § 1031 nonrecognition; but see Priv.Ltr.Rul. 9814019, as modified by Priv.Ltr.Rul. 9823045—reverse exchange transaction between two parties, where conveyance of new easement to taxpayer to be followed by relinquishment of old easement to second party qualified as like-kind exchange]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

1) [13:339.7] Example: TP owned Property Old and wished to exchange it for Property New. B wanted to acquire Old. TP first purchased New for cash, then deeded New to B. B improved New with TP's funds. TP swapped with B, giving up Old and receiving New. The Tax Court held this was an attempted reverse deferred exchange without a third party intermediary and therefore did not qualify as a IRC § 1031 exchange under the safe harbor provision (¶ 13:338). TP had never, in substance, disposed of New; the "parking transaction" (¶ 13:339.8) with B was disregarded and, as a result, there was no exchange. The transaction boiled down to TP buying New for cash, then selling Old to B for cash. [DeCleene v. Commissioner, supra (preceding eff. date of Rev.Proc. 2000-37, ¶ 13:339.8)]

(b) [13:339.8] "Parking" exception—QEAA transactions: The IRS has provided a "safe harbor"— known as a "qualified exchange accommodation arrangement" (QEAA)—by which such transactions can qualify under IRC § 1031. QEAA transactions will not be challenged by the IRS. [Rev.Proc. 2000-37, 2000-2 CB 308; see Lipton, "The 'State of the Art' in Like-Kind Exchanges, 2012" (2012) 116 J. of Tax. 246, 250-253; Levine, "Long-Awaited IRS Guidance on 'Parking Arrangements' Facilitates Like-Kind Exchanges" (2001) 28 J. Real Est. Tax. 91; Cuff, "Foot Faults, Pratfalls, and Landmines for Parking Transactions Under Section 1031" (2002) 29 J. Real Est. Tax. 106; Cuff, "The Strange State of the Law on Exchange Accommodation Titleholders" (2003) 30 Real Est. Tax. 52]

It is unclear whether California tax authorities will follow Rev.Proc. 2000-37.

1) [13:339.9] General description of QEAA: A QEAA generally works as follows:

• The replacement property is located by the taxpayer/owner of the old property (TP); the replacement property is acquired by a third party (the "exchange accommodation titleholder" or EAT) with funds loaned to EAT by TP. This is sometimes referred to as a "parking transaction."

• TP locates a buyer (B) for the old property.

• TP transfers the old property to EAT in exchange for the replacement property.

• EAT transfers the old property to B.

[13:339.10] Reserved.

2) Rev.Proc. 2000-37 requirements for QEAA transactions

• [13:339.11] EAT must hold all the "qualified indicia of ownership" of the property, including legal title. EAT must not be a "disqualified person" (¶ 13:337) and must be an individual or entity that is subject to income tax. [Rev.Proc. 2000-37, § 4.02(1)]

• [13:339.12] When EAT acquires the property, "it is the taxpayer's bona fide intent" that the property represent either replacement property or relinquished property in an exchange that is intended to qualify for IRC § 1031 nonrecognition. [Rev.Proc. 2000-37, § 4.02(2)]

• [13:339.13] No later than five business days after EAT acquires the replacement property, TP and EAT must enter into a written agreement (the "QEAA Agreement") providing that (i) the property is held to facilitate a IRC § 1031 exchange in compliance with Rev.Proc. 2000-37, and (ii) EAT agrees to report the transaction as provided in Rev.Proc. 2000-37 and to be treated as the beneficial owner of the property for all income tax purposes. [Rev.Proc. 2000-37, § 4.02(3); see Rev.Proc. 2000-37§ 4.03 (setting forth various provisions that can be included in a QEAA agreement)]

The IRS has ruled that a statement in a QEAA Agreement that EAT is acting as the agent for TP "for all purposes other than federal income tax purposes" does not invalidate the QEAA Agreement or the QEAA. [Priv.Ltr.Rul. 200148042; but see Cuff, supra, 30 Real Est. Tax. at 57]

• [13:339.14] No later than 45 days after EAT acquires the replacement property, TP must "identify" one or more relinquished properties in a manner consistent with the usual deferred exchange rules (¶ 13:333 ff.). [Rev.Proc. 2000-37, § 4.02(4)]

• [13:339.15] No later than 180 days after EAT acquires the replacement property, that property is transferred to the taxpayer (either directly or indirectly through a qualified intermediary, ¶ 13:338) as replacement property (in exchange for the old property), or to a person who is not the taxpayer or a disqualified person as relinquished property. [Rev.Proc. 2000-37, § 4.02(5)]

• [13:339.16] The "combined time period that the relinquished property and the replacement property are held in a QEAA does not exceed 180 days" (the "QEAA period"). [Rev.Proc. 2000-37, § 4.02(6)]

• [13:339.16a] TP cannot have owned the replacement property within the 180-day period ending on the date of transfer of ownership of the replacement property to EAT. [Rev.Proc. 2004-51, 2004-33 IRB 294; see also Alton, Borden & Lederman, "Rev.Proc. 2004-51: The IRS Strikes Back" (Feb. 2005) 83 Taxes 17]

a) [13:339.17] Nonexclusive criteria: Rev.Proc. 2000-37 states that no inference should be drawn that reverse deferred exchanges not meeting the precise terms of the Rev. Proc. cannot qualify for nonrecognition. Indeed, in a subsequent private ruling, the IRS approved such a transaction. [Priv.Ltr.Rul. 200011025; see also Estate of Bartell v. Commissioner (2016) 147 TC 140 (approving accommodation party with unrelated party where arrangement not within Rev. Proc. "safe harbor")]

Nevertheless, as a matter of caution, practitioners should strive to follow Rev.Proc. 2000-37 in all respects, especially since the IRS has announced its nonacquiescence in Bartell. [See AOD 2017-06; Banoff & Lipton, "Living with Bartell Uncertainty" (Nov. 2017) 127 J. Tax'n 238]

b) [13:339.17a] Using one intermediary for related parties: The IRS has approved the use of a single intermediary by related parties in a reverse deferred exchange. [See Priv.Ltr.Rul. 201242003—IRC § 1031 applied to defer gain in transaction where taxpayer and related party entered into separate QEAAs for parking same property held by single EAT; Lipton et al., "The 'State of the Art' in Like-Kind Exchanges - 2015" (Jan. 2016) 124 J. Tax. 5, 13-14]

c) [13:339.17b] "Parking" transactions involving land leased from exchanging taxpayer's relative: The IRS has approved a transaction in which a person related to the taxpayer transferred a leasehold interest in land to an accommodation party who made improvements to the land before transferring the leasehold and the improvements to the taxpayer in exchange for other real estate. [Priv.Ltr.Rul. 201408019]

3) [13:339.18] Permissible involvement with replacement property: During the QEAA period (¶ 13:339.16), TP (the taxpayer) can be involved with the replacement property by, for example, leasing it from EAT, or managing or supervising improvements thereto, and still qualify for the QEAA exception. [Rev.Proc. 2000-37, § 4.03(4) & (5)]

➪ [13:339.19] PRACTICE POINTER: A strategy for a seller who is fast approaching the 45-day deadline (¶ 13:339.14) without having yet identified the replacement property is to delay the closing date for the sale of the relinquished property. This can be done by including a provision in the relinquished property's sale agreement to extend the closing date, or by the buyer first leasing the relinquished property from the seller and then purchasing the property at a later date.

g. [13:340] Special limitations on "related party" exchanges: IRC § 1031 does not apply to an exchange with a "related party" if, within two years after the date of the last transfer, either the related party conveys the old property or the taxpayer conveys the new property. [IRC § 1031(f), (g); see generally, Alton, Borden, & Lederman, "Related-Party Like-Kind Exchanges" (Apr. 30, 2007) 115 Tax Notes 467]

For this purpose "related party" includes the taxpayer's spouse, lineal ancestors and descendants, siblings, and numerous related entities. [IRC § 1031(f)(3), incorporating IRC §§ 267(b) & 707(b)(1)]

The "related party" provision applies "to any exchange which is part of a transaction (or series of transactions) structured to avoid the purposes of this subsection." [IRC § 1031(f)(4)]

(1) Examples

• [13:341] Bob exchanges Blackacre for Whiteacre, owned by Willy. Willy is Bob's brother. Within two years, Willy sells Blackacre for cash. This sale disqualifies the original exchange. Bob must recognize gain or loss on the original exchange, but he recognizes it as of the date on which Willy disposed of Blackacre. [IRC § 1031(f)(1)]

• [13:341.1] Bob transfers Blackacre to QI, a qualified intermediary (see ¶ 13:338). QI sells Blackacre to Mary for cash, and one week later uses the cash to purchase Whiteacre from Willy, Bob's brother. QI then transfers Whiteacre to Bob. The result is the same as in the example at ¶ 13:341: The IRC § 1031 nonrecognition provisions do not apply because the transaction is in substance an attempt to avoid the "related party" exclusion. [IRC § 1031(f)(4); Teruya Bros., Ltd. v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 2009) 580 F3d 1038, 1045-1048—T who used QI to sell low-basis property to unrelated taxpayer and acquired new property from related party recognized IRC § 1031(f)(4) gain because transaction was structured to avoid related party rules; Ocmulgee Fields, Inc. v. Commissioner (2009) 132 TC 105, 106, aff'd (11th Cir. 2010) 613 F3d 1360, 1368-1373 (same); see also North Central Rental & Leasing, LLC ex rel. Butler v. United States (D ND 2013) 112 AFTR2d 2013-7045—T's use of related party to acquire replacement property violated related party rules even though replacement property was acquired in anticipation of exchange; Alton, Borden & Lederman, "Are Related Party Acquisitions in Anticipation of Exchange Technically and Theoretically Invalid?" (2014) 120 J. Tax'n 52; and Lipton, "The 'State of the Art' in Like-Kind Exchanges, 2012" (2012) 116 J. Tax. 246, 253-262]

(2) [13:342] Exceptions for certain dispositions:IRC § 1031(f) does not apply to certain dispositions. [IRC § 1031(f)(2)] The excepted (disregarded) dispositions are:

• A disposition after the earlier of the death of the taxpayer or the related party. [IRC § 1031(f)(2)(A)]

• A disposition in an involuntary conversion, such as a condemnation or casualty. [IRC § 1031(f)(2)(B)]

• A disposition with respect to which it is established that neither the exchange nor the disposition had as one of its principal purposes the avoidance of federal income tax. [IRC § 1031(f)(2)(C); see also Priv.Ltr.Rul. 201216007—taxpayer established series of dispositions to related parties were not motivated by tax avoidance because no material cashing out by any related party occurred within two years of each respective transfer; Priv.Ltr.Rul. 201834010—disposition of two properties received and subsequently transferred by taxpayer's two wholly-owned LLCs disregarded since both dispositions were part of nonrecognition transactions in which no cash was received and were completed within two years of original receipt]

h. [13:343] Like-kind exchange of property sold as personal residence within five years of acquisition:See discussion at¶ 13:347.35*.

i. [13:344] Like-kind exchange of nonresident-owned California property for out-of-state property: According to the California Franchise Tax Board, when an out-of-state resident swaps California property for out-of-state property in an IRC § 1031 exchange and the out-of-state property is later sold in a taxable transaction, any unrecognized gain on the property is subject to California income tax. [FTB Pub. 1100, "Taxation of Nonresidents and Individuals Who Change Residency" (revised 5/2020) (downloadable at www.ftb.ca.gov); see also Weller & Marques, "State Income Tax Conformity with Section 1031" (2007) 34 J. Real Est. Tax 4, 8-9]

• [13:344.1] T, a Texas resident, exchanges California Property A for like-kind Property B located in Texas, resulting in a $15,000 gain. Subsequently, T sells Property B in a nondeferred transaction for a $20,000 gain. At that time, the unrecognized $15,000 gain on Property A, originating in California, is subject to California tax. [FTB Pub. 1100, supra, ex. 17]

• [13:344.2] Similarly, if T, a Nevada resident, exchanges Nevada business Property C for California business Property D, resulting in a $10,000 gain, and then sells Property D in a nondeferred transaction for a recognized gain of $50,000, the recognized $50,000 gain is taxable by California because the gain originated in California. [FTB Pub. 1100, supra, ex. 18]

(1) [13:344.3] Annual reporting requirement: Effective January 1, 2014, all residents and nonresidents who exchange California property for out-of-state replacement property under IRC § 1031 must file an information return with the Franchise Tax Board in the year of the exchange and in each subsequent year until the deferred gain or loss from the exchange is recognized. [Rev. & Tax.C. §§ 18032, 24953]

4. [13:344.4] Opportunity Zones (IRC § 1400Z-1 et seq.): To encourage investment in economically distressed communities, gains from property sales that are reinvested within 180 days in "Qualified Opportunity Funds" (¶ 13:344.5) are, at the election of the taxpayer, deferred until the earlier of the date the investments are sold or exchanged and December 31, 2026. [See IRC § 1400Z-2(a), (b); Sheppard, "Opportunity Zones: Tax Benefits, Criticisms, and Early IRS Enforcement" (2nd Quarter 2023) Real Estate Tax'n 4; Berman & Weller, "Opportunity Zone Investments: The New Emerald City of Tax Law" (2019) J. Tax'n 6; Griffith & Morris, "Opportunity Zone Benefits: Nuts and Bolts; and Loose or Missing Screws" (2019) 97 Taxes 47; compare Treas.Reg. § 1.1400Z2(a)-1(c)(8)(iii)(B)—if partnership does not elect to defer all of its eligible gain, partner may elect to start its own 180-day period on last day of partnership taxable year or due date for partnership's tax return].

Elections must be made by filing Forms 8949 and 8997 for individuals, and Form 8996 for the funds as part of the taxpayer's annual return. The IRS, however, has granted permission for late elections. [See Sheppard, "Opportunity Zones, Late Elections, and new Enforcement and Oversight Actions" (Nov. 2022) J. Tax'n 3]

a. [13:344.5] "Qualified Opportunity Funds": A Qualified Opportunity Fund is any investment vehicle organized as a corporation or partnership that holds at least 90% of its assets in "Qualified Opportunity Zone Property" (¶ 13:344.6). The Fund's status is determined by the average of the percentage of assets it holds on (i) the last day of the first six months of the fund's taxable year, and (ii) the last day of the fund's taxable year. [IRC § 1400Z-2(d)(1); Treas.Reg. § 1.1400Z2(d)-1(c)(1)]

b. [13:344.6] "Qualified Opportunity Zone Property": Qualified Opportunity Zone Property means:

- "Qualified Opportunity Zone Business Property" (¶ 13:344.7) located in a "Qualified Opportunity Zone" (¶ 13:344.9); or

- Stock or partnership interests acquired after 12/31/17 in a corporation or partnership that qualifies as a "Qualified Opportunity Zone Business," or a business entity in which substantially all of its assets constitute Qualified Opportunity Zone Business Property. [IRC § 1400Z-2(d)(2); see also Treas.Reg. § 1.1400Z2(d)-2(d)(3)(i), (d)(4)(ii)—"substantially all" requirement is satisfied if, during at least 90% of period, 70% of entity's property is used in qualified opportunity zone]

c. [13:344.7] "Qualified Opportunity Zone Business Property": Qualified Opportunity Zone Business Property is tangible property acquired after 12/31/17 and used by a Qualified Opportunity Fund's trade or business in the Qualified Opportunity Zone (¶ 13:344.9). It may be property originally used or "substantially improved" (¶ 13:344.8) by the Qualified Opportunity Fund (¶ 13:344.5). [IRC § 1400Z-2(d)(2)(D)]

(1) [13:344.8] "Substantial improvement": Although "substantial improvement" is measured by an increase in the basis from when a property was originally acquired, if land is purchased with a building that is subsequently substantially improved, the original use requirement is ignored for purposes of the land. [See Rev.Rul. 2018-29, 2018-45 IRB 765]

d. [13:344.9] "Qualified Opportunity Zone": A Qualified Opportunity Zone is a population census tract in a low income community (¶ 13:344.10) that is designated as a Qualified Opportunity Zone by the Governor or chief executive of the State in which it is located. [IRC § 1400Z-1(a), (b)]

(1) [13:344.10] Low income community: To qualify as low income, a community's poverty rate must be at least 20%. Alternatively, a community located within a metropolitan area qualifies as low income if its median family income does not exceed 80% of the greater of statewide median family income or the metropolitan median family income. And a community located outside a metropolitan area qualifies as low income if the median family income does not exceed 80% of the statewide median family income. [IRC §§ 1400Z-1(c)(1), 45D(e)(1)]

A tract that does not qualify as low income (above) still may be part of a Qualified Opportunity Zone if it is contiguous with a low income community and its median family income does not exceed 125% of the median family income for the low income community. [IRC § 1400Z-1(e)]

e. [13:344.11] Special exemptions: The gain from any sale or exchange of an investment held by a Qualified Opportunity Fund (¶ 13:344.5) for designated amounts of time is exempt, not merely deferred. But only investment of the gain, not recovery of the capital, is eligible for the basis step-ups and exemptions (¶ 13:344.12 ff.). [See IRC § 1400Z-2(e)(1)(B)]

(1) [13:344.12] Five years: The basis of any investment held for at least five years must be increased by an amount equal to 10% of the amount of gain deferred. [IRC § 1400Z-2(b)(2)(B)(iii)]

(2) [13:344.13] Seven years: In addition to the adjustment made for an investment held for five years (¶ 13:344.12), the basis for that same investment if it is held for at least seven years must be increased by an amount equal to 5% of the amount of gain deferred. Thus, the total amount exempted for an investment held for seven years is 15%. [IRC § 1400Z-2(b)(2)(B)(iv)]

(3) [13:344.14] Ten years: The basis for any investment held by a taxpayer for at least ten years, and for which the taxpayer makes an election, must be equal to the fair market value of the investment on the date it is sold or exchanged. [IRC § 1400Z-2(c)]

5. [13:345] Sales of Personal Residence—IRC § 121 Exclusion: Gain on the sale or exchange of a principal residence is excluded up to $250,000 for a single person, and up to $500,000 for a husband and wife filing a joint return in the year of sale. The $500,000 exclusion also applies to the sale by a surviving spouse within two years of the deceased spouse's death, provided the $500,000 ceiling would have applied to a sale prior to death. [IRC § 121(a), (b)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Cross-refer: A detailed explanation of IRC § 121 is set forth in IRS Publication 523, "Selling Your Home." It is available on the Internet (see www.irs.gov).

Loss compared: Loss is never recognized on the sale of personal assets, including residences. [IRC § 165(c)] a. [13:345.1] Effective date of $250,000/$500,000 exclusion: The IRC § 121 $250,000/$500,000 exclusion applies to a sale or exchange of a principal residence after May 6, 1997. Sales prior to that date may be eligible for rollover of gain under now-repealed IRC § 1034 (¶ 13:349 ff.) or exclusion of gain up to $125,000 under the former version of § 121 (¶ 13:365 ff.).

b. [13:345.2] Consequences of § 121, contrasted with prior law: Suppose H & W bought their residence in 1970 for $200,000. Last year, they sold it for $1,600,000. This year, they buy another residence for $2,000,000. Under IRC § 121, they can exclude $500,000 of their $1,400,000 gain, but the remaining $900,000 is taxable in the year of the sale as a capital gain. The fact that they purchased another house is irrelevant. Under prior law (repealed IRC § 1034), the entire gain would have been rolled over. Thus, for expensive houses, present tax law is far less favorable to taxpayers than prior law.

➪ [13:345.3] PRACTICE POINTER: Consequently, taxpayers who wish to move from a highly appreciated residence should consider renting rather than selling it. If it is possible to hold the property until the taxpayer's death, the basis will be stepped up to fair market value and the capital gain tax will be avoided (see¶ 13:23).

c. [13:346] General conditions for § 121 exclusion: To qualify for IRC § 121 gain exclusion, the taxpayer must satisfy each of three separate two-year requirements:

• Ownership of the property for at least two of the five years preceding the date of the sale;

• Use of the property as a principal residence for at least two of the five years preceding the date of the sale; and

• The taxpayer cannot have made any other sale to which § 121 applied during the two-year period ending on the date of the sale. [IRC § 121(a), (b)(3)(A)]

(1) [13:346.1] Establishing two-year ownership and use: The two-year ownership and use requirements can be satisfied by the taxpayer's ownership and use for 24 full months or 730 days in the five-year period ending on the date of sale. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-1(c)(1)]

(a) [13:346.2] Concurrent periods *not required: The periods counted for satisfying the two-year ownership and use requirements do not have to be concurrent. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-1(c)(1)]

1) [13:346.2a] Example: T lived in a rented townhouse from 1993 to 1997. He bought the townhouse on January 1, 1998. On February 1, 1998, he moved into his daughter's home. On March 1, 2000, while still living in his daughter's home, T sold the townhouse. T qualifies for a IRC § 121 exclusion because as of the date of sale he had both owned and used the townhouse as a principal residence for at least two of the preceding five years, even though those periods did not coincide. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-1(c)(4), ex. 3]

(b) [13:346.3] "Use" requires actual occupancy: The use requirement is satisfied only if the taxpayer actually "occupies" the house for two years. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-1(c)(2)(i)]

Thus, if a taxpayer moves out of the house while attempting to sell it, and this period of sale extends beyond three years, IRC § 121 will not apply to the ultimate sale.

(c) [13:346.4] Effect of temporary absences: Short temporary absences from the residence, such as for vacation or other seasonal absence (even though accompanied by a rental of the residence) are counted as periods of use for the two-year use requirement. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-1(c)(2)(i)]

• [13:346.4a] Examples: A two-month summer vacation is considered a short temporary absence, while a professor's one-year sabbatical leave is not. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-1(c)(4), ex. 4, 5]

(d) [13:346.4b] Effect of "out-of-residence" care: A taxpayer may become physically or mentally incapable of self-care and move out of their house into a licensed care facility (such as a nursing home). So long as the taxpayer owns and uses the house as their principal residence for at least one year during the five-year period preceding the sale of the house, the time spent in the facility can be added to the time of actual use of the house to satisfy the two-year use requirement. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-1(c)(2)(ii)]

(2) [13:346.4g] Reductions for “nonqualified use”: The amount of gain on the sale of a principal residence that qualifies for the IRC § 121 exclusion must be reduced by the amount of gain allocated to periods of nonqualified use that occur on or after January 1, 2009. [IRC § 121(b)(4) (second of two enacted with same paragraph number)]

(a) [13:346.4h] Calculating reduction: The allocation is determined by a fraction. The numerator is the aggregate periods of nonqualified use while the taxpayer owned the property and the denominator is the period the taxpayer owned the property. [IRC § 121(b)(4) (second of two enacted with same paragraph number)]

(b) [13:346.4i] Meaning of “nonqualified use”: The term “nonqualified use” means any period of time occurring on or after January 1, 2009, “during which the property is not used as the principal residence of the taxpayer or the taxpayer's spouse or former spouse.” [IRC § 121(b)(4)(C)(i)]

Presumably, the rules relating to temporary absences (¶ 13:346.4) apply in this instance so that temporary absences do not count as nonqualified use. On the other hand, it is unclear how the various rules under the “facts and circumstances” test (¶ 13:346.11) are to be integrated into the “nonqualifying” use test.

(c) [13:346.4j] Exceptions: The term “nonqualified” use does not apply to:

• Any portion of the five-year period ending on the date of sale that falls after the last date the property is used as the principal residence of the taxpayer or their spouse (or former spouse);

• A period of temporary absence (not to exceed an aggregate period of two years) due to change of employment, health conditions or such other unforeseen circumstances as are specified by the Secretary; and

• An absence due to “qualified official extended duty” in the armed services. [IRC § 121(b)(4)(C)]

(For a similar provision relating to temporary absences that cause taxpayers to fail to satisfy the IRC § 121 ownership/use requirements, see¶ 13:346.5 ff.)

(d) [13:346.4k] Coordination with depreciation provision: The provision for “nonqualified use” must be coordinated with the provision relating to recapture of depreciation on the property (¶ 13:347.18). [See IRC § 121(b)(4)(D) (second of two enacted with same paragraph number)]

(e) [13:346.4*l*] Example: T, a single taxpayer and law professor, bought a house in 2008 and sold it in 2012. She owned it for 48 months (1,440 days). During 2010, the house was vacant for 360 days because T was on a sabbatical leave in Argentina. She used the house as a principal residence for 1,080 days prior to sale. Her gain on sale was $280,000. Although T meets both the use and ownership tests of IRC § 121, she must reduce the amount of her gain qualifying for the exclusion by a fraction of 25% (360/1440). Thus, she is permitted to exclude only $210,000 of gain (75% of the total). The remaining $70,000 of gain is taxable as a long term capital gain (at the rate of 15%). [See Emily White example in IRS Publication 523, “Selling Your Home”]

(3) [13:346.5] Hardship exception to two-year rules: In certain hardship cases, the two-year rules (¶ 13:346) are relaxed. If the hardship rule applies, the taxpayer's gain is excluded, but the maximum exclusion figure is reduced (¶ 13:346.7). [IRC § 121(c)]

(a) Eligible hardships

1) [13:346.6] Change in employment or health: Taxpayers fall within the IRC § 121(c) hardship exception if the sale or exchange occurs because of a change in place of employment or health. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-3(b), (c), (d)]

A “change in place of employment” requires the new job to be at least 50 miles farther from the sold house than the old job was. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-3(c)(2)(ii)] “Employment” includes beginning work with a new employer, continuing work with the same employer, or beginning or continuing self-employment. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-3(c)(3)]

A “change in health” requires a physician's recommendation. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-3(d)(2)]

2) [13:346.6a] “Unforeseen circumstances”: The hardship exception also applies when a sale or exchange occurs because of other unforeseen circumstances. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-3(e)]

An “unforeseen circumstances” sale is one where the primary reason for the sale is the occurrence of an event that the taxpayer could not reasonably have anticipated before purchasing and occupying the residence. It does not apply to a sale that occurs because of the taxpayer's preference “for a different residence or an improvement in financial circumstances.” [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-3(e)(1)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

The following events are considered "safe harbors," meaning they always qualify as "unforeseen circumstances" so long as they occur during the period of the taxpayer's ownership and use of the property as a principal residence:

• Involuntary conversions of the residence;

• Natural or man-made disasters, or acts of war or terrorism resulting in damage to the residence;

• Death;

• Cessation of employment resulting in eligibility for unemployment compensation;

• Change in employment status that results in the taxpayer's inability to pay housing costs and reasonable basic household expenses;

• Divorce or legal separation;

• Multiple births resulting from the same pregnancy;

• Other events or situations designated by the Commissioner as unforeseen circumstances in "published guidance of general applicability," or identified in rulings issued by the Commissioner to specific taxpayers. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-3(e)(2)-(3); see Priv.Ltr.Rul. 201628002—single child's birth deemed unforeseen circumstance]

a) [13:346.6b] Failure to satisfy disclosure obligations? According to a private letter ruling, a taxpayer's sale of their residence caused by the previous owner's failure to satisfy a state-mandated disclosure obligation during the prior purchase and sale transaction (see¶ 4:354 ff.) may constitute an "unforeseen circumstance." [See Priv.Ltr.Rul. 200702032—where taxpayer sold residence and sued previous owner for failing to disclose airport noise problem as required by state law, proceeds of lawsuit settlement treated as proceeds from sale and fell under "unforeseen circumstances" rule]

(b) [13:346.6c] "Qualified individuals": The events giving rise to the hardships described at ¶ 13:346.6 ff. must occur to a "qualified individual," defined as the taxpayer, the taxpayer's spouse, a co-owner of the residence, a person whose principal place of abode is the residence, or a close relative. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-3(f)]

For purposes of the "change in health" exception (¶ 13:346.6) only, in addition to those persons identified above, a "qualified individual" may include a close relative as described in IRC § 152(a)(1)-(8), or a descendant of the taxpayer's grandparent. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-3(f)]

(c) [13:346.7] Adjusted exclusion formula: If the hardship rule applies, a proportional exclusion is available based on a fraction of the maximum exclusion available ($250,000 or $500,000). [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-3(g)(1)]

The numerator in the fraction is the shortest of the period of ownership, period of use, or period of time since the previous sale, and the denominator is either 24 months or 730 days (depending on whether the numerator was measured in months or days, ¶ 13:346.1).

• [13:346.8] Example: A, who is single, owns her residence for only 12 months before she sells it because of a change in her place of employment. She realizes a gain of $400,000. A does not qualify for the normal ($250,000) IRC § 121 exclusion because she owned and used the house for only one year; but she is eligible for the hardship exclusion. The fraction is 12 over 24. Since the maximum normal exclusion would be $250,000, A's hardship exclusion is $125,000 ($250,000 x 12/24). The remaining $275,000 gain is taxable. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-3(g)(2), ex. 1]

[13:346.9] Reserved.

(4) [13:346.10] "Principal residence": The property must have been used as the taxpayer's principal residence for at least two of the five years preceding the sale (¶ 13:346).

(a) [13:346.10a] Demolished home: If an old house is demolished and a new one is rebuilt on the same land, the taxpayer must live in the new house for two of the five years preceding the sale. The time spent living in the old house does not count. [Gates v. Commissioner (2010) 135 TC 1, 4-14]

1) [13:346.10b] Comment: In Gates, supra, the new house was much larger than the old house and their "footprints" did not coincide (i.e., the perimeter of the old house's foundation did not correspond to the perimeter of the new house's foundation). Moreover, since the taxpayers never lived in the new house, they could not meet the IRC § 121 "use" test.

2) [13:346.10c] Demolition vs. remodel: Under Gates, supra, there is a major distinction between extensively remodeling a house versus demolishing it and rebuilding a new one on the property. It is unclear whether a new house that utilizes the foundations of the old one (or one wall from the old house), but otherwise is rebuilt from the ground up, would be treated as a remodel or a demolition.

(b) [13:346.11] "Facts and circumstances" test: Whether property is used by the taxpayer as their principal residence depends on "all the facts and circumstances." [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-1(b)(2)]

1) [13:346.12] "Majority" use generally determinative: If a taxpayer alternates between different residences, the property used by the taxpayer a majority of the time during the year will ordinarily be considered their principal residence. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-1(b)(2); Guinan v. United States (D AZ 2003) 2003-1 USTC ¶ 50475—"time spent in a residence is a major factor, if not the most important factor"; see¶ 13:346.14]

The fact that the taxpayer used one residence on more days in total during the five-year period preceding the sale is irrelevant "because [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-1(b)(2)] refers to the time spent in a residence during a single tax year." [Guinan v. United States, supra (emphasis added)—taxpayers who alternated between 3 residences only established that they spent more time in purported principal residence during first year of 5-year period]

2) [13:346.13] Other relevant factors: Other factors relevant to the principal residence determination include, but are not limited to:

- The taxpayer's place of employment;
- The principal place of abode of the taxpayer's family members;
- The address listed on the taxpayer's federal and state tax returns, driver's license, automobile registration, and voter registration;
- The taxpayer's mailing address for bills and correspondence;
- The location of the taxpayer's banks; and
- The location of religious organizations and recreational clubs with which the taxpayer is affiliated. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-1(b)(2)]

(c) Examples

1) Exclusive use of different residences during separate periods within same year

- [13:346.14] T owns two residences, one in New York and one in Florida. During each of years 1 to 5, T lives in the New York residence for 7 months and the Florida residence for 5 months. Absent "facts and circumstances" indicating otherwise, the New York residence is T's principal residence. As a result, T would be eligible for the IRC § 121 exclusion from the sale of the New York residence, but not the Florida residence. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-1(b)(4), ex. 1]
- [13:346.15] H and W owned two residences, one in Hagerstown, Maryland, and one in Berlin, Maryland. W spent most of her time at the Berlin residence. For business reasons, H often stayed during the week at Hagerstown but spent the weekends at Berlin.

  The Tax Court made a detailed examination of the facts and determined Berlin was the principal residence for W for 4 of the 5 years preceding its sale, and for H for 2 of the 5 years preceding the sale. Thus, H and W qualified for a $500,000 exclusion on the sale of the Berlin residence. This was so even though they maintained voting registrations, drivers' licenses, etc. in Hagerstown, where they lived before purchasing Berlin. [Farah v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2007-369]

• [13:346.16] T owned three residences, one in Wisconsin, another in Georgia, and the other in Arizona. T resided in the Wisconsin home during the warmer months and at the other homes during the rest of the year. T sought to establish the Wisconsin house as the principal residence. A majority of the relevant "facts and circumstances" (¶ 13:346.13) did not favor any one of the residences as being the principal residence, while other important factors definitely pointed to the Wisconsin house as not being the principal residence. [Guinan v. United States (D AZ 2003) 2003-1 USTC ¶ 50475]

2) [13:346.17] Exclusive use of different residences during separate periods *extending over several years: T owns houses in California and Nevada. In years 1 and 2, T lives exclusively in the California house. In years 3, 4 and 5, T lives only in the Nevada house. At the end of year 5, either house would be considered a principal residence since T met the ownership and use requirements as to both. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-1(b)(4), ex. 2]

3) [13:346.18] Nonexclusive* use of different residences *during same period: T works in Oregon where he lives five days a week in a rented apartment. He spends the weekends in the house he owns in California. He regards California as his principal residence: He gets mail there, votes there, and his car is registered there. He sells the California house at a $350,000 gain. Under the "facts and circumstances" test, the California house could be considered T's "principal residence," even though he spends a majority of the time during the year in Oregon (see¶ 13:346.12).

d. [13:346.25] Application to married couples filing joint return: A husband and wife who file a joint return for the taxable year of the sale or exchange may qualify for the IRC § 121 exclusion as follows:

(1) [13:346.26] Qualification for maximum $500,000 exclusion: To qualify for the maximum $500,000 exclusion, either spouse can be the owner (they do not have to own the property jointly) but both spouses must meet the two-year use requirement and the "only-once-every-two-years" limitation (¶ 13:346). [IRC § 121(b)(2); Treas.Reg. § 1.121-2(a)(3)(i)]

(2) [13:346.27] Maximum exclusion where $500,000 exclusion requirements not met: Where a married couple cannot meet the requirements described at ¶ 13:346.26, the maximum exclusion will be the sum of each spouse's limitation amount determined on a separate basis, as if they had not been married. For this purpose, each spouse is treated as owning the property during the period that either spouse owned the property. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-2(a)(3)(ii)]

(a) [13:346.28] Example—sale of separate residences: H and W marry in year X and file a joint return. During that year, H and W each sell a residence that they owned separately before marriage. H and W each satisfy the ownership and use requirements for the houses they owned separately, but not for the house that the other owned. H realizes a gain of $300,000 on his house and W realizes a gain of $200,000 on her house.

On the joint return, each spouse is entitled to nonrecognition of gain under IRC § 121: H can exclude $250,000 of the sale price on his house (but must recognize the other $50,000 of gain). W can exclude the entire $200,000 gain on her house. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-2(a)(4), ex. 3]

(b) [13:346.29] Example—one spouse fails to satisfy use requirement: H and W are married and sell their residence at a gain of $400,000. W, but not H, satisfies the use requirements for the house. They file a joint return. They can exclude $250,000 of the gain. This is the sum of each spouse's limitation amount determined on a separate basis: W has a limitation amount of $250,000 and H has a limitation amount of $0. W may not use H's unused exclusion to exclude gain in excess of her exclusion amount. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-2(a)(4), ex. 4]

(3) [13:346.30] Compare—separate returns: If taxpayers jointly own a home but file separate returns, each taxpayer is entitled to exclude up to $250,000 of gain attributable to that taxpayer's interest in the property so long as the IRC § 121 requirements are otherwise met. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-2(a)(2)]

• [13:346.31] Example: A and B (unmarried) jointly own a house as tenants in common or joint tenants, and live there together. After owning and using the house as their principal residence, they sell it for a $256,000 gain. A and B can each exclude $128,000 on their separate tax returns. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-2(a)(4), ex. 1]

(4) [13:346.32] Compare—surviving spouse: A surviving spouse may qualify for the $500,000 exclusion amount (rather than the $250,000 allotted single persons) provided their residence is sold no later than two years after the deceased spouse's death, assuming the $500,000 exclusion requirements (¶ 13:346.26) were met immediately prior to the death. [See IRC § 121(b)(4) (first of two enacted with same paragraph number)]

e. Special marital dissolution rules

(1) [13:347] Marital property divisions: If a spouse or former spouse receives a residence in a marital property division described in IRC § 1041 (see¶ 13:385 ff.), the period that the spouse or former spouse owns the property includes the period that the transferor owned the property. [IRC § 121(d)(3)(A)]

• [13:347a] Example: H owned Encino Home as his separate property. He purchased it for $100,000 before marrying W. H and W lived in Encino since 1980. When H and W divorced in 1998, H transferred Encino Home to W as part of a division of property. Under IRC § 1041, H did not recognize gain on this transfer; W's basis for the home remains $100,000 (see¶ 13:385 ff.). W sold the house six months after receiving it for $1,000,000. W's realized gain is $900,000 but she can exclude $250,000 because she is treated as having owned Encino Home since 1980.

(2) [13:347b] "Out spouse" rule: Frequently, in marital dissolution situations, one spouse (the "in spouse") is given exclusive possession of the home for a period of time but it continues to be owned by both spouses. Later, the house is sold and the proceeds are divided between the "in spouse" and the "out spouse." For purposes of the IRC § 121 exclusion, the out spouse is treated as using the property as the out-spouse's principal residence during any period of ownership that the in spouse is granted use of the property under a divorce or separation agreement. [IRC § 121(d)(3)(B)] This provision corrects a serious problem under former IRC §§ 1034 and 121 (see¶ 13:359).

• [13:347c] Example: When H and W divorce in 1996, their marital settlement agreement provides that W will continue to reside in the family home for five years until H and W's child reaches age 16, at which time the house will be sold and the proceeds divided equally. The house is sold in 2001 at a $700,000 gain. Pursuant to IRC § 121(d)(3)(B), H (the out spouse) satisfies the two-year use requirement; both H and W can exclude $250,000 of their $350,000 gain on the sale.

f. [13:347.1] Election out of § 121: A taxpayer may elect out of IRC § 121 by filing a return that includes in income the entire gain from sale of the principal residence in the taxable year. [IRC § 121(f); Treas.Reg. § 1.121-4(g)] It is permissible to amend a tax return (within the three-year limitations period) to elect out of § 121 even though the return as filed took advantage of the exclusion. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-4(g)]

A taxpayer may wish to elect out of § 121 because the gain on the sale of a principal residence is relatively small and the taxpayer wants to keep the § 121 benefit available for a subsequent sale within two years after that sale. [See IRC § 121(b)(3)(A)—§ 121 benefit not available if previously applied to earlier sale during two-year period ending on sale date (¶ 13:346)]

• [13:347.2] Example: W wants to sell a house in year 1 that she owned before marriage at a small gain. H and W contemplate that in year 2 H will sell a house he owned before marriage at a large gain. (Assume W meets the IRC § 121 ownership and use requirements because she lived for two years with H in his house prior to marriage.)

If W claims nonrecognition under § 121 for sale of her house in year 1, H cannot claim the maximum $500,000 exclusion for sale of his house in year 2 (¶ 13:346.26). But if W elects out of § 121 in year 1, the full exclusion should be available for the sale of H's house in year 2.

[13:347.3 - 13:347.4] Reserved.

g. [13:347.5] Deceased spouse's ownership and use: If an unmarried surviving spouse sells a residence that was owned and used by the deceased spouse, the surviving spouse's use and ownership will include the period of time the deceased spouse owned and used the property before death. [See IRC § 121(d)(2)]

(1) [13:347.6] Example: H bought a house in 1985 and used it as his principal residence until his death in 2000. Early in 2000, H and W were married and W moved into H's house. H died and W inherited the house and sold it in 2001 at a gain of $180,000 after having lived in it only one year. (Note that W's basis for H's house was stepped up to its value on the date of H's death; thus, the $180,000 appreciation occurred after H's death.) W can exclude the entire gain since she is permitted to treat H's ownership and use of the house as her own. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-4(a); see Dilley & Callihan, "Planning Ideas for Sale of a Residence" (Aug. 24, 1998) 80 Tax Notes 949, 954-955]

(2) [13:347.7] Sales within two years of death: A surviving spouse qualifies for the full $500,000 exclusion if the sale occurs within two years of the date of the deceased spouse's death, provided the requirements for the maximum exclusion are met. [IRC § 121(b)(4)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Section 121(b)(4) applies regardless of whether the surviving spouse files a joint return for the sale year. (Whether the surviving spouse can file jointly for two years after the death of the deceased spouse depends on the surviving spouse maintaining a household that includes a dependent; see IRC § 2(a).)

➪ [13:347.8] PRACTICE POINTER: Call this point to the attention of a surviving spouse who owns a home that has appreciated in value. If the house was held as community property, both halves receive a stepped up basis (¶ 13:25); and the appreciation occurring before the first spouse's death escapes taxation. But if the house was not held as community property and is to be sold in any event, the $500,000 (rather than $250,000) exclusion amount applies if the house is sold no later than two years after the death of the first spouse.

h. [13:347.9] Application to joint owners filing separate returns:See discussion at¶ 13:346.30 ff.*

[13:347.10 - 13:347.13] Reserved.

i. [13:347.14] Effect of depreciating residence: Normally the owner of a house cannot claim depreciation deductions since the house is used for personal rather than business purposes (see IRC § 167(a); ¶ 13:292). However, if the owner uses part of the house exclusively for business purposes, that portion can be depreciated under certain circumstances (¶ 13:293 ff.).

In addition, if the taxpayer moves out of the house and rents it, the house can be depreciated during the period it is rented. However, the depreciation deductions on the house must be recaptured and cannot be excluded under IRC § 121 at the time the house is sold.

(1) [13:347.15] Residential and business portions in *same dwelling unit: When a personal residence consists of a single "dwelling unit," part of which is used for business (such as a home office or for rental), the entire gain on the sale of the unit qualifies for nonrecognition under IRC § 121. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-1(e)(1) & (4), ex. 4, 5 & 6]

However, if the portion used for business was subject to a depreciation allowance taken after May 6, 1997, an amount equal to the depreciation allowance does not qualify for nonrecognition under § 121. Instead that amount will be taxed at the rate of 25% (the rate applicable to depreciable realty under IRC § 1250) as opposed to the normal 15% long-term capital gain rate (Treas.Reg. § 1.121-1(d)). The amount recaptured is equal to the post-May 6, 1997 depreciation or the realized gain, whichever is less.

• [13:347.15a] Example: Attorney T owns a house that constitutes a single dwelling unit. She uses a portion of the house as an office and claims depreciation deductions of $2,000. After three years, T sells the house for a $13,000 gain. She must recognize $2,000 of the gain as "unrecaptured" depreciation, but may exclude the remaining $11,000 because she is not required to allocate gain to a business use of the dwelling unit. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-1(e)(4), ex. 5]

Compare: If T sold the house for a $4,000 loss, there would be no depreciation recaptured since the recapture is limited to the amount of the realized gain on sale, if any.

(2) [13:347.16] Rental property: If a house was used for rental purposes and was subject to depreciation deductions taken after May 6, 1997, the same rule applies—i.e., the amount of the depreciation or the realized gain, whichever is less, is not excluded under IRC § 121. Instead, it is taxable at the rate of 25%. [IRC §§ 1(h)(1)(D) & 121(d)(6); Treas.Reg. § 1.121-1(d)]

(a) [13:347.16a] Example: T bought a house in 1998 that he rented to tenants until 2008. T claimed $14,000 in depreciation deductions for the years 1998 to 2008. In 2008, T moved into the house and lived there for two full years before selling it at a $40,000 gain. T has $14,000 in depreciation recapture that is taxed at the rate of 25%. The remainder of the $26,000 gain qualifies for exclusion under IRC § 121. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-1(d)(2) ex.]

Compare: If the period of nonqualified use had occurred on or after January 1, 2009, the gain would be allocated between the periods of qualified and nonqualified use (¶ 13:346.4g). The portion allocable to nonqualified use would be taxable as capital gain (15% tax rate) and would not qualify for exclusion under § 121.

(3) [13:347.17] Business portion not within dwelling unit: By contrast, when portions of a personal residence separate from the "dwelling unit" are used for business purposes (e.g., detached barn or basement apartment), the gain allocable to those portions does not qualify for IRC § 121 nonrecognition. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-1(e)(1) & (4), ex. 1, 2 & 3; see also Hood, "Gain on the Sale of a Principal Residence: The Basics and Beyond"(Sept. 2008) 86 Taxes 17, 23-24, for detailed example of separate structure depreciation]

➪ [13:347.17a] PRACTICE POINTER: When a house that has appreciated in value will be sold for a gain, the owner should consider converting any portion of the house separate from the "dwelling unit" used for business purposes back to residential use at least two years before selling. By doing so, the owner will satisfy the IRC § 121 personal use requirement.

On the other hand, when the house has depreciated in value and will be sold for a loss, the owner should consider a different strategy. Loss resulting from the sale of real estate held for use in a trade or business is deductible (¶ 13:445), while loss on the sale of property used as a personal residence is not (¶ 13:303.5). By using the portion of the residence that is separate from the "dwelling unit" for business purposes during at least three of the five years preceding the sale, the owner should be able to deduct the loss allocable to the separate "business" portion of the house as an ordinary business loss.

(4) [13:347.18] Nonqualified use and depreciation: As pointed out at ¶ 13:347.16a, if a principal residence was subject to "nonqualified use" on or after January 1, 2009, a portion of the gain on sale of the residence does not qualify for the IRC § 121 exclusion. If the property was subject to depreciation, the depreciation recapture is computed first and taxed at the rate of 25%. The remaining gain is subject to allocation between qualified and nonqualified use. [IRC § 121(b)(4)(D) (second of two enacted with same paragraph number)]

• [13:347.18a] Example: T, a single taxpayer and a law professor, bought a house in 2008 and sold it in 2012. She owned it for 48 months (1,440 days). During 2010, the house was vacant for 360 days because T was on a sabbatical leave in Argentina. She rented the house during her sabbatical and claimed $10,000 of depreciation on the house. She used the house as a principal residence for 1,080 days prior to sale. Her gain on sale was $280,000. T first must recapture $10,000 of her gain (the depreciation taken after May 6, 1997). This portion is taxed at the rate of 25%. [IRC § 1(h)(1)(D)]

Although T meets both the use and ownership tests of IRC § 121, she must further reduce the amount of her gain qualifying for the exclusion by a fraction of 25% (360/1440) because she had a period of nonqualified use after January 1, 2009. Thus, T is permitted to exclude only $210,000 of gain (75% of the total). The remaining $70,000 of gain is taxable as a long term capital gain (at the rate of 15%). [IRC § 1(h)(1)(C); see IRS Publication 523, "Selling Your Home," Emily White example, involving reductions both for depreciation and for nonqualified use]

(5) [13:347.19] Sale satisfying requirements for § 121 and § 1031 nonrecognition of gain: When a property used for business purposes (such as rental) was previously used as a residence during two of the preceding five years, and is exchanged for another like-kind business property, IRC §§ 121 (¶ 13:345 ff.) and 1031 (¶ 13:304 ff.) both apply. Specifically, § 121 must be applied first to any gain realized from the exchange, and then IRC § 1031 is applied to any amount of the gain that is not excluded under § 121.

For example, gain may be recognized despite § 121 because of a post-May 6, 1997 depreciation allowance (¶ 13:347.15) or because it exceeds the $250,000/$500,000 ceilings (¶ 13:345). If the property is disposed of in an exchange for another business property, those gains qualify for nonrecognition under § 1031. [Rev. Proc. 2005-14, 2005-1 CB 528; see also Siegel, "New Procedure on Taxation of Dual-Use Property Governs Interaction of Sections 121 and 1031" (2005) 102 J. of Tax. 282]

j. Homes held by trusts or entities

(1) [13:347.20] Trusts: A house owned by a grantor trust (i.e., a trust not treated for tax purposes as a separate taxpayer under IRC §§ 671-679) will be treated as if owned by the taxpayer(s)/grantor(s) of the trust for purposes of the IRC § 121 two-year ownership requirement. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-1(c)(3)(i)]

For example, if a house is owned by a revocable or "living" trust and used by the taxpayer/grantor of the trust as a principal residence for two years, the sale of the house would qualify for the § 121 exclusion.

On the other hand, a house owned by a trust that is taxed as a separate entity will not be considered as owned by the taxpayer who is the owner or beneficiary of the trust; and the sale of the house will not qualify the taxpayer for § 121 gain exclusion.

(2) [13:347.21] Single-owner entities: A house owned by a single-owner entity (e.g., a one-member limited liability company) that elects for tax purposes to be disregarded as a separate taxpayer under Treas.Reg. § 301.7701-3(a), will be treated as if owned by that single member for purposes of the two-year ownership requirement. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-1(c)(3)(ii)]

(3) [13:347.22] Partnerships:Treas.Reg. § 1.121-1(c)(3)(ii) (¶ 13:347.21) only applies to a single-owner entity electing to be disregarded as a separate taxpayer. Presumably, therefore, a house owned by a partnership will not be treated as owned by any one of the individual partners for IRC § 121 purposes.

[13:347.23 - 13:347.24] Reserved.

k. [13:347.25] Application to cooperatives:IRC § 121 applies to the sale of stock in a housing cooperative. The requirement that the taxpayer own the residence for two years applies to the stock of the co-op; the two-year use requirement applies to the co-op house or apartment occupied by the taxpayer. [IRC § 121(d)(4); Treas.Reg. § 1.121-1(b)(1)]

l. [13:347.26] Application to involuntary conversions: If a principal residence is destroyed by a casualty or condemned, the receipt of insurance or condemnation proceeds is treated as a sale for purposes of IRC § 121. [IRS CCA 200734021—destroyed residence treated as sold for § 121 purposes]

In addition, if the casualty or condemnation gain exceeds $250,000 or $500,000, and if the taxpayer reinvests in another home, the excess gain qualifies for exclusion under IRC § 1033 (see¶ 13:375 ff.). The amount realized from the involuntary conversion for IRC § 1033 purposes is reduced by the amount of gain excluded under § 121. [IRC § 121(d)(5); Prop.Regs. § 1.121-4(d); and see Lai & Thomas, “Tax Consequences of an Involuntary Conversion of a Principal Residence”(2008) 86 Taxes 33]

m. Application to sale or exchange of partial interests

(1) [13:347.27] Partial interests other than remainder interests: Subject to the rules regarding remainder interests (¶ 13:347.29), a taxpayer may apply the IRC § 121 exclusion to gain from the sale or exchange of an interest in the taxpayer's principal residence that is less than the taxpayer's entire interest so long as the interest sold or exchanged includes an interest in the “dwelling unit.” However, all such sales or exchanges are aggregated, and only the first $250,000/$500,000 of gain on all the sales or exchanges can be excluded. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-4(e)(1)]

• [13:347.28] Example: T owns a house used as a principal residence. In year 1, B moves in and T sells B a 50% interest in the house for a $136,000 gain. T properly excludes this gain under IRC § 121. In year 2, T sells B his remaining 50% interest in the house for a $138,000 gain, only $114,000 of which is excludable ($250,000 less the $136,000 previously-excluded gain). [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-4(e)(3)]

(2) [13:347.29] Remainder interests: A different rule applies to the sale or exchange of a remainder interest in a principal residence. Gain from the sale or exchange of a remainder interest to a related party (as defined in IRC §§ 267(b) or 707(b)) will not qualify for IRC § 121 exclusion. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-4(e)(2)(ii)(B)]

On the other hand, a taxpayer may elect to apply the § 121 exclusion to gain from the sale or exchange of a remainder interest in the taxpayer's principal residence to an unrelated party; but, in that event, the taxpayer cannot exclude gain from the sale or exchange of any other interest in the residence that is sold or exchanged separately. [IRC § 121(d)(8); Treas.Reg. § 1.121-4(e)(2)(ii)(A)]

(a) [13:347.30] How election made: An election to exclude gain from the sale or exchange of a reminder interest to an unrelated party is made by filing a tax return for the year of the sale or exchange that does not include the gain in the taxpayer's gross income. This election may be made or revoked at any time before expiration of the three-year period running from the last date for filing a return for the taxable year in which the sale or exchange occurred. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-4(e)(2)(iii)]

n. [13:347.31] Application to sale of adjacent vacant land: Under certain circumstances, the sale or exchange of vacant land adjacent to a taxpayer's principal residence may be considered a sale or exchange of the principal residence. [See Reichert, “Sale or Exchange of Principal Residence”(April 2003) 81 Taxes 49, 50-52]

(1) [13:347.32] Qualifying conditions: The sale of vacant land adjacent to a taxpayer's principal residence may be considered a sale or exchange of the taxpayer's principal residence for purposes of applying IRC § 121 when all of the following conditions are met:

• The vacant land is adjacent to land containing the “dwelling unit” of the principal residence;

• The taxpayer owned and used the vacant land as part of their principal residence;

• The taxpayer sells or exchanges the dwelling unit in a § 121 qualified sale or exchange within two years before or two years after the vacant land's sale or exchange; and

• The § 121 requirements have otherwise been met with respect to the vacant land. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-1(b)(3)(i)]

(2) [13:347.33] Maximum limitation amount: For purposes of applying the maximum amount excludable under IRC § 121, the sale or exchange of the dwelling unit and the vacant land are treated as one sale or exchange. Therefore, only one maximum limitation amount ($250,000/$500,000) applies to the combined sales or exchanges of the vacant land and the dwelling unit. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-1(b)(3)(ii), (4), ex. 3, 4]

o. [13:347.34] Application to bankruptcy trustee's sale of principal residence: IRC § 121 applies to the sale of an individual debtor's principal residence by a Chapter 7 or 11 bankruptcy trustee. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1398-3]

p. [13:347.35] Application to property acquired in like-kind exchange as personal residence and sold within five years: When a taxpayer acquires a house in a IRC § 1031 like-kind exchange (¶ 13:304 ff.), uses it for their personal residence, and then sells it for a gain within five years of its acquisition, the gain is not excludable. This is the case even if the taxpayer used it as a principal residence for two of the five years (see ¶ 13:356). [IRC § 121(d)(10)]

q. [13:347.36] Application to settlement proceeds: A taxpayer may sell a principal residence and then sue the person who sold them the property for failure to disclose various defects therein. The taxpayer's receipt of proceeds in settlement of the litigation is treated as additional gain on the sale of the residence and qualifies for nonrecognition treatment under IRC § 121. [See Priv.Ltr.Rul. 200702032]

r. [13:347.37] Reporting home sales/gain on tax return: If the gain on sale of a home is wholly excludable under IRC § 121, the transaction should not be reported on the seller's tax return. On the other hand, if the gain exceeds the maximum § 121 excludable gain, only the excess gain should be reported. [IRS Form 1040, Schedule D Instructions]

➪ [13:347.38] PRACTICE POINTER: Notwithstanding ¶ 13:347.37, if the taxpayer/seller receives a Form 1099-S from the escrow or title company, they probably should report the gain on Schedule D and then offset it by claiming a loss of the same amount, explaining that the gain is excludable under IRC § 121.

6. [13:348] Sales of Personal Residence—Rollover/Exclusion Under Prior Law (pre-May 7, 1997 Sales): With regard to nonrecognition or exclusion of gain on the sale or exchange of a principal residence, prior law applies if the sale or exchange occurred before May 7, 1997. Two different Code sections provided for nonrecognition of gain on such sales:

• [13:348.1] Former IRC § 1034 rollover: IRC § 1034 was called "rollover"—i.e., gain was not recognized if a new residence was purchased within two years before to two years after the sale of the old (see ¶ 13:349 ff.).

➪ [13:348.2] PRACTICE POINTER—CONTINUING IMPORTANCE: IRC § 1034 remains important because a vast number of houses were purchased in rollover transactions. This affects the basis of the house (purchase price less unrecognized gain; see ¶ 13:351). The taxpayer must know the basis of the house in order to apply the current IRC § 121 exclusion for sales of houses occurring after May 6, 1997.

• [13:348.3] Former IRC § 121 one-time exclusion: Before its amendment in 1997 (¶ 13:345 ff.), IRC § 121 provided for a one-time exclusion (nonrecognition) of up to $125,000 gain if the seller was 55 years of age or older (see ¶ 13:365 ff.).

a. [13:349] Section 1034 rollover: Rollover applied if a taxpayer sold a principal residence before May 7, 1997 and purchases or constructs another principal residence within a period of two years before to two years after the sale of the old residence. The taxpayer must actually occupy the new dwelling within the two-year period. [IRC § 1034(a)]

(1) [13:349.1] Gain recognized only to extent price of old residence exceeds price of new: If the purchase price of the new residence is equal to or greater than the "adjusted sales price" of the old, gain on the sale of the old house is not recognized. [IRC § 1034(a)]

On the other hand, if the purchase price of the new residence is less than the "adjusted sales price" of the old, gain is recognized to the extent of the difference. [IRC § 1034(a)]

• [13:350] Example: The basis of House A is $100,000. T sells it for $400,000 in 1996. Within two years, T buys House B for $330,000. Both houses are T's principal residence. Of the total $300,000 realized gain on the sale of House A, only $70,000 is recognized.

(Conversely, no gain would be recognized if House B were purchased for a price of at least $400,000.)

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(2) [13:351] Basis of new house: The basis of the new house is equal to its cost, less any unrecognized gain on the sale of the old house. [IRC § 1034(e)]

Thus, in the example at ¶ 13:350, the basis of House B is $100,000 (i.e., $330,000 less $230,000 of unrecognized gain on the sale of House A).

(3) [13:351.1] Purchase requirement: IRC § 1034 rollover requires that the old home be "sold" and the new home be "purchased." If either transaction is a gift or bequest, IRC § 1034 does not apply. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1034-1(c)(4)(i)]

For this purpose, note that any transfer to or from a spouse (or a former spouse incident to divorce) is treated as a gift, even if it is a cash purchase. [IRC § 1041, discussed at ¶ 13:385 ff.]

• [13:351.2] Example: W is single and sold her home (Oak Street) for $300,000 in 1996. Her realized gain was $120,000. Within two years, she marries H and purchases a one-half interest in H's home (Elm Street) for $360,000. H has no realized gain because he had purchased Elm Street for $800,000 and it had declined in value to $720,000. Because of IRC § 1041, W's acquisition of one-half of Elm Street is considered a gift from H to W, not a purchase, even though W paid fair market value for it. Consequently, the $120,000 gain on W's sale of Oak Street is taxable and cannot be rolled over under IRC § 1034.

(The result would have been different had W purchased the interest in Elm Street before she married H, because § 1041 would not have applied to that purchase.)

[13:351.3 - 13:351.9] Reserved.

(4) [13:351.10] Identity of buyer: IRC § 1034 did not prohibit a sale to related parties. [See Priv.Ltr.Rul. 9625035 (sale to closely-held corporation)]

(5) [13:352] "Adjusted sales price": For purposes of measuring the taxpayer's selling price for the old house, the sale price should be reduced by expenses for work performed on the old residence to assist in its sale ("adjusted sales price"). This rule applies to expenses for work performed within the 90-day period ending on the date on which the contract to sell the old residence is entered into and which are paid on or before 30 days after the date of sale of the old residence. [IRC § 1034(b)]

(6) [13:353] Rollover procedure: If the old house is sold in one year and the taxpayer intends to roll over the gain but has not purchased a new house by the end of the year, the taxpayer should file IRS Form 2119 with the return for the year of sale.

(a) [13:354] Amended return: In the event the taxpayer fails to purchase another residence within the rollover period, or if they purchase a new residence for a price lower than the sale price of the old, the taxpayer should file an amended return for the year of the sale that reports the gain.

(b) [13:355] Statute of limitations on deficiency assessment: The statute of limitations relating to assessment of a deficiency attributable to the gain in the year of sale shall not expire before the expiration of three years after the IRS is notified by the taxpayer about the purchase of the new residence or the taxpayer's failure to purchase a new residence. [IRC § 1034(j)]

IRS Form 2119 should be used to notify the Service.

(7) [13:356] "Principal residence": For the most part, case law has been generous to taxpayers in defining a "principal residence" for IRC § 1034 purposes.

Caveat: The continuing relevance of this authority under amended IRC § 121 is uncertain. For purposes of amended § 121, the issue normally will be whether the dwelling was "used by the taxpayer as the taxpayer's principal residence," rather than whether the dwelling qualifies as a "principal residence." Arguably, the test will require actual physical occupancy by the taxpayer for the requisite two-year period. (See ¶ 13:346 ff.)

(a) [13:356.1] Adjacent land may be included: The acreage surrounding a home may be considered part of the taxpayer's principal residence if it is used for personal purposes such as "appreciating nature, living in open spaces, hiking, horseback riding, and enjoying unobstructed views of the countryside." [Schlicher v. Commissioner, TC Memo 1997-37 (decided under former IRC § 1034)]

(b) [13:357] Absence for business reasons: A home was deemed to remain the taxpayer's "principal residence" even though they were not living there at the time of sale if the taxpayer's absence was of a temporary nature required by the taxpayer's business or employment. [Trisko v. Commissioner (1957) 29 TC 515, 518-519; Green v. Commissioner, TC Memo 1992-439; Rev.Rul. 59-72, 1959-1 CB 5]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(c) [13:358] Temporary rentals: Even more generously, a house was held to remain a principal residence even though the taxpayer moved out, continued trying to sell the house, and rented the house because market conditions precluded a sale. [Bolaris v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1985) 776 F2d 1428, 1431, 1434—house remained principal residence and owner allowed to deduct loss on rental activity; Green v. Commissioner, supra; but see Houlette v. Commissioner (1967) 48 TC 350, 356-357—taxpayer who rented out dwelling deemed to abandon it as principal residence; see generally Bird, "Planning for the 'Temporary Rental' of a Principal Residence" (1993) 20 J. of Real Est. Tax 135]

(d) [13:359] Compare—absence by marital breakup: But prior law took a stricter approach with regard to a taxpayer's absence incident to a marital breakup. Once the taxpayer moved out, permanently and with no intention to return, pursuant to a divorce settlement that gave the other spouse exclusive occupancy and did not mandate that the house immediately be sold, the house could no longer qualify as the "principal residence" of the spouse who moved out and they could not take advantage of IRC § 1034 nonrecognition with respect to that property. [Perry v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1996) 91 F3d 82, 86; Young v. Commissioner, TC Memo 1985-127; see also Hogoboom & King, Cal. Prac. Guide: Family Law (TRG), Ch. 10]

Thus, § 1034 rollover applies to the "in spouse" but not to the "out spouse." (Contrast this with the treatment under amended IRC § 121, where an out spouse in a marriage dissolution situation is allowed to take advantage of the in spouse's use of the residence and thus can qualify for the § 121 $250,000 gain exclusion; see¶ 13:347 ff.)

[13:360 - 13:361] Reserved.

(e) [13:362] Compare—business use: To the extent part of a residence is used for business purposes, that part does not qualify for IRC § 1034 rollover. Gain attributable to the business premises (such as a home office) would be recognized, regardless of whether another house (with another office) is purchased. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1034-1(c)(3)(ii); Schlicher v. Commissioner, TC Memo 1997-37]

However, a home office is disqualified from rollover only if it meets the requirements for deductibility of expenses in the year of sale. [See Rev.Rul. 82-26, 1982-1 CB 114]

Cross-refer: Home office deductibility criteria (IRC § 280A(c)) are discussed at ¶ 13:293 ff.

➪ [13:363] PRACTICE POINTER: Advise your clients to exercise great caution in claiming business deductions for part of a highly appreciated house. In many cases, the claim will itself be questionable—particularly a contention that the "business portion" is used "exclusively" for nonresidential purposes (¶ 13:293). And for taxpayers still eligible for IRC § 1034 rollover (pre-May 7, 1997 sales), the relatively small deductions available might well trigger recognition of a vastly greater amount of gain upon a sale of the house.

[13:364] Reserved.

b. [13:365] Former § 121 one-time exclusion: For sales prior to May 7, 1997, up to $125,000 of gain ($62,500 in the case of a separate return by a married person) on the sale of a principal residence was not recognized if the taxpayer attained age 55 by the date of sale and so elected. [Former IRC § 121(a)(1), (b)(1)]

If the residence was held jointly or as community property and the spouses filed a joint return, only one spouse needed to be age 55. [Former IRC § 121(d)(1)]

(1) [13:366] Three-of-five-year use limitation: To qualify, the taxpayer must have used the property as a principal residence for a period of at least three years out of the five-year period ending on the date of sale. [Former IRC § 121(a)(2)] This means 36 full months or 1095 days during the five-year period. However, short temporary absences can be disregarded. [Treas.Reg. § 1.121-1(c)]

(2) [13:367] Once-only election: The election to take advantage of former IRC § 121 could be made only once in a lifetime. Also, the spouse of a married taxpayer had to join in the election, whether or not the spouse owned any portion of the residence. [Former IRC § 121(b)(2), (c)]

(a) [13:368] Disqualification by spouse's prior election: A IRC § 121 election could not be made if the taxpayer's spouse made a previous election— even before marrying the taxpayer. In effect, a spouse's § 121 election precluded the taxpayer from ever making such an election for a future sale. [Former IRC § 121(b)(2)]

(3) [13:369] "Principal residence": A § 121 election was available only if the taxpayer "owned and used" the property as their "principal residence." [Former § 121(a)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(a) [13:369.1] Facts and circumstances test: In determining whether a taxpayer "owned and used" property as a "principal residence" for three of the five years preceding its sale, courts have utilized the "facts and circumstances" test applied under IRC § 1034 (¶ 13:356 ff.). [Gummer v. United States (Fed.Cl.1998) 40 Fed.Cl. 812, 819, 98-1 USTC ¶ 50401—applying Treas.Reg. § 1.121-3 (defining "principal residence" as having same meaning as under § 1034) and rejecting "strict physical occupancy" test urged by IRS]

(b) [13:369.2] Comment: Although amended IRC § 121 uses identical language ("owned and used as a principal residence"), it remains to be seen whether this more flexible "facts and circumstances" test will apply under the amended statute (see¶ 13:346.10 ff.).

(4) [13:370] Utilizing both former §§ 121 and 1034: Where the respective conditions were met, it was possible to utilize both the IRC § 1034 rollover provision and the IRC § 121 one-time exclusion election. For § 1034 purposes, the sale price of the property was reduced by the amount of gain not recognized under § 121. [Former IRC § 121(d)(7)]

(a) [13:371] Example: T's basis for House A is $100,000 and he sells it in 1996 for $400,000 when he is age 55. He satisfies the IRC § 121 3-of-5-year rule and makes a § 121 election for nonrecognition of gain. T buys House B for $330,000 within two years of the sale of House A. Although his realized gain on House A is $300,000, the § 121 exclusion reduces the amount that would be recognized to only $175,000. By purchasing House B, even that gain is not recognized. The adjusted sales price of House A is deemed to be $275,000 ($400,000 less $125,000) and since he bought House B for more than $275,000, no gain on the sale of House A is recognized. The basis of House B is $155,000 ($330,000 less $175,000 of gain not recognized by reason of IRC § 1034).

(b) [13:371.1] Proposition 13 advantages: Also note that in this situation the taxpayer can retain the low property tax valuation of the transferred property (House A in the example at ¶ 13:371) by filing the appropriate claim. See¶ 13:91 ff.

(5) [13:372] Election procedure: An election under former IRC § 121 could be made or revoked at any time within the limitations period for the year in which the sale occurred. The taxpayer made the election by attaching a signed statement, such as IRS Form 2119, to the tax return for the year of sale or an amended return. (Again, a married taxpayer's spouse had to join in the election or revocation.) [Former IRC § 121(c)]

[13:373 - 13:374] Reserved.

7. [13:375] Involuntary Conversions: If property is subject to an "involuntary conversion" and replaced within the statutory period and the taxpayer so elects, gain on the involuntary conversion is not recognized. [IRC § 1033]

This provision only authorizes nonrecognition of gain; it does not apply to nonrecognition of loss.

a. [13:376] "Involuntary conversion" defined: An "involuntary conversion" for IRC § 1033 nonrecognition purposes means a destruction of the property through a casualty or theft and the recovery of money (from insurance or otherwise) resulting from such destruction; or condemnation of the property (or sale of the property under the threat of condemnation). [IRC § 1033(a)]

b. [13:377] Replacement period: The property must be replaced within a period of two years after the end of the first taxable year in which any part of the gain is realized. However, the IRS can grant extensions of this period. [IRC § 1033(a)(2)(B); but see¶ 13:380 (3-year period in certain cases)]

c. [13:378] Similar property limitation: Normally, the money received must be invested in property that is "similar or related in service or use." [IRC § 1033(a)(2)] This is a much stricter standard than the like-kind standard used under IRC § 1031 (¶ 13:305 ff.). For example, unimproved and improved property are not treated as "similar or related in service or use." [Treas.Reg. § 1.1033(a)-2(c)(9)]

(1) [13:379] Meaning of similarity: For property used in a business other than leasing, the end use of the new property must be substantially similar to the end use of the old property. [McCaffrey v. Commissioner (3rd Cir. 1960) 275 F2d 27, 30-31—parking lot replaced by warehouse does not qualify]

However, for leased property, the lessees' use does not matter. Rather, what counts is the similarity of the lessor's position —for example, the similarity of the demand for management services and the relationship to tenants. [Liant Record, Inc. v. Commissioner (2nd Cir. 1962) 303 F2d 326, 328—replacement of office building into apartment houses qualifies; Rev.Rul. 71-41, 1971-1 CB 223—replacement of rented warehouse with rented gas station qualifies]

(2) [13:380] Exception: In the case of nondealer real property that is condemned (as distinguished from destruction in a casualty), property meeting the more generous IRC § 1031 "like-kind" test "shall be treated as property similar or related in service or use" for IRC § 1033 purposes. [IRC § 1033(g)(1)]

Moreover, in such cases, the replacement period is three years instead of the usual two. [IRC § 1033(g)(4)]

[13:380.1 - 13:380.4] Reserved.

d. [13:380.5] Special rule for Presidentially-declared disasters: The involuntary conversion rules relating to a "principal residence" (as defined by IRC § 121, ¶ 13:345 ff.) and its contents are liberalized in the case of Presidentially-declared disasters.

No gain is recognized by reason of the receipt of insurance proceeds for personal property that was not scheduled property for insurance purposes. The rest of the proceeds received for the residence or its contents are treated as received for the conversion of a single item of property, and any replacement property similar or related in service or use to the residence or the contents will qualify as replacement property under IRC § 1033. Moreover, the taxpayer has four years rather than the usual two years to replace the property. [IRC § 1033(h)]

(1) [13:380.6] Section 121 exclusion also applicable: The IRC § 121 exclusion rule also applies in this situation: Gain on the principal residence qualifies for the § 121 $250,000/$500,000 exclusion and any additional gain can be nonrecognized under IRC § 1033 if replacement occurs. [See IRC § 121(d)(5)]

e. [13:381] Election procedure: An IRC § 1033 election is made by not reporting the gain on the tax return for the year of sale; however, all relevant details of the conversion should be reported. [See Treas.Reg. § 1.1033(a)-2(c)(2); Priv.Ltr.Rul. 201240006]

If the requisite reinvestment does not occur, an amended return reporting the gain should be filed.

(1) [13:382] Statute of limitations on deficiency assessment: By making the election, the taxpayer extends the statute of limitations on assessing a deficiency attributable to the gain until three years after the Service is notified of the replacement or failure to replace the property. [IRC § 1033(a)(2)(C)]

[13:383 - 13:384] Reserved.

8. [13:385] Transfers to Spouses or Former Spouses Incident to Divorce: Neither gain nor loss is recognized upon a transfer to a spouse or former spouse incident to divorce. [IRC § 1041(a)]

a. [13:386] Treatment as gift: Transfers covered by IRC § 1041 are treated as gifts … meaning the transferee takes over the transferor's adjusted basis, regardless of whether the property has appreciated or depreciated in the hands of the transferor and regardless of whether the transferee paid consideration for the property. [IRC § 1041(b); Treas.Reg. § 1.1041-1T, A11 (pointing out that these rules are different from those under IRC § 1015)]

b. [13:387] Transfers covered: A transfer is "incident to divorce" for IRC § 1041 purposes if it occurs within one year after cessation of the marriage. It is also incident to divorce if it occurs after one year following cessation of the marriage and "is related to the cessation of the marriage." [IRC § 1041(c)]

(1) [13:388] Within six years after cessation of marriage: Under the Regulations, a transfer that occurs more than one but less than six years after cessation of the marriage and is pursuant to a divorce or separation instrument is deemed related to the cessation of marriage. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1041-1T, A-7]

(2) [13:389] Compare—more than six years after cessation of marriage: On the other hand, a transfer more than six years after the marriage ends is presumed not to be related to cessation of the marriage; but this presumption can be rebutted by showing the transfer was made to effect the division of property owned by the former spouses at the time of cessation of the marriage. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1041-1T, A-7]

c. Exceptions

(1) [13:390] Nonresident alien transferee spouse: A transfer to a nonresident alien spouse is not covered by IRC § 1041. [IRC § 1041(d)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(2) [13:391] Certain transfers to trust: While IRC § 1041 normally covers transfers to trusts for the benefit of a spouse or former spouse, it is not applicable to a transfer in trust where the liabilities to which the property is subject exceed the basis of the property. [IRC § 1041(e)]

• [13:392] Example: The basis of Blackacre is $1,000 and it is subject to a liability of $1,400. Pursuant to marital dissolution, H transfers Blackacre to W. Gain is not recognized and W's basis is $1,000.

However, if Blackacre was transferred to a trust for W, H would recognize gain of $400 and the trust's basis would be $1400.

Cross-refer: For a comprehensive treatment of IRC § 1041 nonrecognition in connection with marital dissolution and marital property settlements, see Hogoboom & King, Cal. Prac. Guide: Family Law (TRG), Ch. 10.

9. [13:393] Investment Surtax: Effective January 1, 2013, there is a 3.8% surtax on net investment income for taxpayers earning $250,000 or more ($200,000 if single). This applies to sales of real estate, including principal residences, but only on gains in excess of the IRC § 121 exclusion. [See IRC § 1411]

(Answers to frequently asked questions regarding the net investment tax are available online at www.irs.gov.)

a. [13:393.1] Rental real estate: The surtax also specifically applies to “rents,” which are defined in the Preamble to the investment surtax as amounts paid or to be paid principally for the use of (or the right to use) tangible property. [See IRC § 1411(c)(1)(A)(i); Keator, “Rental Real Estate and the Net Investment Income Tax” (Aug. 2013) J. Tax'n 60]

b. [13:393.2] “Ordinary course” exception: The definition of net income specifically excludes income “derived in the ordinary course of a trade or business,” unless that trade or business is a IRC § 469 passive activity of the taxpayer. [IRC § 1411(c)(1)(A)(i)]

Some commentators have suggested that real estate professionals may be able to use this exception to avoid the net investment surtax. [See McBride, “Rental Real Estate Trade or Business—The NIIT and Beyond” (2015) J. Real. Est. Tax. 16; McBride, “Rental Real Estate Trade or Business—The NIIT and Beyond, Part II” (2016) J. Real. Est. Tax. 113; Keator, “Rental Real Estate and the Net Investment Income Tax” (Aug. 2013) J. Tax'n; Elias, “Obamacare: A New Tax Incentive for Real Estate Fund Managers?” (Oct. 28, 2013) Tax Notes at 403]

10. [13:394] Charitable Contributions of Conservation Easements: Donors may deduct contributions of qualified real property interests to qualified organizations that are used exclusively for conservation purposes. [IRC § 170(h)(1); see Gerzog, “Alms to the Rich: The Façade Easement Deduction” (2014) 34 Va. Tax Rev. 229]

To qualify, contributions must involve (a) preservation of land areas for the general public's outdoor recreation or education, (b) protection of a relatively natural habitat of fish, wildlife, plants or similar ecosystem, (c) preservation of open space for the general public's scenic enjoyment or one that yields a significant public benefit, as defined, or (d) preservation of an historically important land area or a certified historic structure. [IRC § 170(h)(4)(A), (B); see Champions Retreat Golf Founders, LLC v. Commissioner (11th Cir. 2020) 959 F3d 1033, 1037-1039—deduction allowed for conservation easement over property that included private golf course and undeveloped land due to presence of rare and declining bird, plant and wildlife species; Atkinson v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2015-236—deduction denied where easements granted on golf courses would continue to operate within gated communities on membership-only basis and would permit pesticides and cutting down of trees to maintain property; Partita Partners LLC v. United States (SD NY 2016) 216 F.Supp.3d 337—deduction denied for building in registered historic district because entire exterior not preserved]

The deduction must be claimed in the year the real property interest was recorded, not the year in which the real property interest was transferred. [See Mecox Partners LP v. United States (SD NY 2016) 117 AFTR2d 2016-593 (denying deduction for property donated in 2004 because deed not recorded until 11/05); Zarlengo v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2014-161 (denying deduction taken in 2004 for interest transferred in 9/04, but not recorded until 1/05); Agostino et al., “Reviving Disallowed Conservation Easement Deductions”(2015) 147 Tax Notes 449]

a. [13:394.1] “Qualified real property interests”: A qualified real property interest may be (i) the donor's entire interest other than a qualified mineral interest; (ii) a remainder interest; or (iii) a restriction (granted in perpetuity) on the use that may be made of real property. [IRC § 170(h)(2); see also Harbor Lofts Assocs. v. Commissioner (2018) 151 TC No. 3—historic buildings' long-term lessee who did not hold fee interest in property deemed incapable of granting perpetual conservation restriction within IRC § 170(h)(2)(C)'s meaning (¶ 13:394.3); 61 York Acquisition, LLC v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2013-266—no deduction for portion of historic building's façade donated as conservation easement]

b. [13:394.2] "Qualified organizations": Qualified organizations include (i) the State (or a political subdivision thereof); (ii) the Federal Government; and (iii) IRC § 501(c)(3) charitable organizations that are publicly supported, or organizations that support such charitable organizations. [IRC § 170(h)(3)]

c. "Exclusively for conservation purposes"

(1) [13:394.3] In perpetuity requirement: To satisfy the exclusive conservation purpose, the use must be protected in perpetuity. [IRC § 170(h)(2)(C), (5)(A); see Belk v. Commissioner (4th Cir. 2014) 774 F3d 221, 225-227—deduction denied where donor had right to substitute portions of golf course contributed to conservation easement for other property not previously subject to easement; Carroll v. Commissioner (2016) 146 TC 196 (per regs., contribution must vest donee with property right equal to proportionate value gift bears to "property as a whole")—deduction denied where T's gift only valued easement for purposes of determining donee's rights should easement be extinguished at its tax deduction amount; compare Pine Mountain Preserve, LLLP v. Commissioner (11th Cir. 2020) 978 F3d 1200, 1208-1209—easement granted in perpetuity over defined conservation area satisfies § 170(h)(2)(C), even if grantor reserves limited development rights and easement allows parties to amend its restrictions; see also McLaughlin, "Amendment Clauses in Easements: Ensuring Protection in Perpetuity"(2020) 168 Tax Notes 819]

(a) [13:394.4] Mortgaged property: Property subject to a mortgage having a prior claim to condemnation and insurance proceeds still may satisfy the exclusive use in perpetuity requirement. [Kaufman v. Shulman (1st Cir. 2012) 687 F3d 21, 25-27; compare Minnick v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 2015) 796 F3d 1156, 1159—no deduction permitted if mortgage not subordinated to conservation easement; RP Golf v. Commissioner (8th Cir. 2017) 860 F3d 1096, 1099-1100 (same); see also 901 S. Broadway Partnership, Ltd. v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2021-132, on appeal to the 9th Cir., No. 22-70012 (2022 WL 1199727)—deduction denied due to lack of evidence indicating mortgage holder subordinated its rights to rights of easement's donee]

(b) [13:394.4a] Extinguishment clauses: A conservation easement may be terminated by judicial decree if it is impossible or impractical to use the contributed property for conservation purposes. Deeds typically contain "extinguishment clauses" to address the distribution of sales proceeds if a court terminates a conservation easement and the property is sold. To satisfy the "protected in perpetuity" requirement, the extinguishment clause must entitle the donee organization to a portion of the proceeds from a subsequent sale, exchange, or involuntary conversion of the property that is at least equal to the proportionate value of the perpetual conservation easement—i.e., generally the gross value without subtracting for improvements. [Treas.Reg. § 1.170A-14(g)(6); Sells v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2021-12—no deduction for conservation easement donation because under extinguishment clause value of improvements were subtracted from any condemnation award before calculating donee's percentage; Carroll v. Commissioner (2016) 146 TC 196 (per regs., contribution must vest donee with property right equal to proportionate value gift bears to "property as a whole")—deduction denied where T's gift only valued easement for purposes of determining donee's rights should easement be extinguished at its tax deduction amount; compare Corning Place Ohio, LLC v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2022-12 (IRS summary judgment motion denied)—distinguished from Carroll et al. because donee's rights were set at fair market value rather than deduction amount and no carveout was set for tenant improvements); see also Megaard & Megaard, "Taxpayers Must Strictly Comply with Extinguishment Proceeds Regulations when Making Charitable Contributions of Conservation Easements" (2016) 125 J. Tax'n 62]

Comment: Circuit courts have split as to the validity of Treas.Reg. § 1.170A-14(g)(6). [Compare Oakbrook Land Holdings, LLC v. Commissioner (6th Cir. 2022) 28 F4th 700, 718-722 (upholding tax court's interpretation in concluding Treasury's interpretation of § 1.170A-14(g)(6) was neither arbitrary nor capricious and therefore entitled to deference) with Hewitt v. Commissioner (11th Cir. 2021) 21 F4th 1336, 1339 (siding with taxpayer in finding § 1.170A-14(g)(6) invalid because Treasury failed to adhere to Administrative Procedure Act by not responding to "significant" comment re treatment of post-easement improvements during regulation's review process)]

In 2024, a majority of the Tax Court reversed its own ruling that was upheld on appeal in Oakbrook Land Holdings (supra) by concluding Treas.Reg. § 1.170A-14(g)(6)(ii) is invalid under the Administrative Procedure Act (APA). [See Valley Park Ranch LLC v. Commissioner (2024) 162 TC No. 6] Since the Valley Park Ranch ruling is appealable to the Tenth Circuit, neither the Sixth Circuit's ruling that the regulation is valid, nor the Eleventh Circuit's ruling that the regulation is invalid, will be binding.

To complicate matters, the Supreme Court's 2024 decision overturning the Chevron Doctrine could affect any appellate court decision. [See Loper Bright Enterprises v. Raimondo (2024) _ US _, _, 144 S.Ct. 2244, 2273—per APA, courts may not defer to agency's legal interpretation simply because statute is ambiguous (holding courts must exercise independent judgment in deciding whether agency acted within its statutory authority); Slowey & Cioffi, “IRS Rulemaking Authority on Shaky Ground with Chevron Overturned,” Bloomberg Law, July 1, 2024 (concluding regulations governing syndicated conservation easements are particularly susceptible to judicial review under Loper)]

➪ [13:394.4b] PRACTICE POINTER: To aid taxpayers in complying with the judicial pronouncements on extinguishment clauses, Congress directed the IRS to publish “safe harbor” language for these clauses. In response, the IRS provided the following approved language (Notice 2023-30, § 4.01, 2023-17 IRB 766):

> Pursuant to Notice 2023-30, Donor and Donee agree that, if a subsequent unexpected change in the conditions surrounding the property that is the subject of a donation of the perpetual conservation restriction renders impossible or impractical the continued use of the property for conservation purposes, the conservation purpose can nonetheless be treated as protected in perpetuity if (1) the restrictions are extinguished by judicial proceeding and (2) all of Donee's portion of the proceeds (as determined below) from a subsequent sale or exchange of the property are used by the Donee in a manner consistent with the conservation purposes of the original contribution.

> Determination of Proceeds. Donor and Donee agree that the donation of the perpetual conservation restriction gives rise to a property right, immediately vested in Donee, with a fair market value that is at least equal to the proportionate value that the perpetual conservation restriction, at the time of the gift, bears to the fair market value of the property as a whole at that time. The proportionate value of Donee's property rights remains constant such that if a subsequent sale, exchange, or involuntary conversion of the subject property occurs, Donee is entitled to a portion of the proceeds at least equal to that proportionate value of the perpetual conservation restriction, unless state law provides that the donor is entitled to the full proceeds from the conversion without regard to the terms of the prior perpetual conservation restriction.

It would be wise to reproduce the above language exactly if using an extinguishment clause in a deed. This is so even though Notice 2023-30 does provide a little flexibility, acknowledging that deeds sometimes use different terminology to describe donors as grantors, or use the terms easement or servitude instead of restriction. [Notice 2023-30, § 4.03]

(c) [13:394.4c] Boundary Line Adjustment Clauses: The IRS sometimes challenges deductions when easements contain provisions permitting taxpayers to change the boundary lines of contributed property after the contributions have already been completed. However, these types of clauses may be necessary because of a dispute regarding the location of a boundary line. Nonetheless, such clauses, if not properly worded, have the potential to be abused so as to circumvent the “in perpetuity” requirement. [See, e.g., Balsam Mountain Investments, LLC v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2015-43 (concluding easement agreement did not restrict grant in perpetuity and therefore did not constitute “qualified conservation contribution”)—deduction denied because easement reserved to T right to change conservation area's boundaries; compare BC Ranch II, L.P. v. Commissioner (5th Cir. 2017) 867 F3d 547, 551-554 (concluding easements' homesite adjustment provisions did not prevent easement grants from being deemed made “in perpetuity”)—deduction permitted where right to change boundaries was only within tracts subject to easement and without increase to acreage of any homesite parcels]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

➪ [13:394.4d] PRACTICE POINTER: As with extinguishment clauses (¶ 13:394.4b), Congress directed the IRS to publish “safe harbor” language for boundary line adjustment clauses. In response, the IRS provided the following approved language for such clauses (Notice 2023-30, § 4.02, 2023-17 IRB 766):

> Pursuant to Notice 2023-30, Donor and Donee agree that boundary line adjustments to the real property subject to the restrictions may be made only pursuant to a judicial proceeding to resolve a bona fide dispute regarding a boundary line's location.

It would be wise to reproduce the above language exactly if using a boundary line adjustment clause in a deed. This is so even though Notice 2023-30 does provide a little flexibility, acknowledging that deeds sometimes use different terminology to describe donors as grantors or use the terms easement or servitude instead of restriction. [Notice 2023-30, § 4.03]

(d) [13:394.4e] Constructive approval or denial clauses: Conservation easement deeds may include a clause stating certain uses of the land are only permitted with the easement holder's express approval. In some cases, there is a clause indicating a request for approval of a proposed use will be deemed approved if the easement holder fails to respond to the request within a certain time period. This automatic approval has been held to violate the perpetuity clause because it could allow the donor to make changes that are inconsistent with the conservation purpose. [See Hoffman Properties II, LP v. Commissioner (6th Cir. 2020) 956 F3d 832, 834-835]

On the other hand, if there is a clause indicating that a request for approval of a proposed use will be deemed denied if the easement holder does not respond to the request, the IRS has opined that such clauses are not inconsistent with the perpetuity clause. [ILM 202002011]

(2) [13:394.5] Irrevocable requirement: The donation cannot be revocable or conditionally revocable. [See Graev v. Commissioner (2013) 140 TC 377, 409; Carpenter v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2013-172; but see also Kaufman v. Shulman (1st Cir. 2012) 687 F3d 21, 26, fn. 3—deduction permitted where easement was extinguished by judicial proceeding rather than at parties' option]

(3) [13:394.6] No quid pro quo arrangements: The donation cannot be part of an arrangement by which the donor receives something in return for granting the conservation easement. [See Triumph Mixed Use Investments III, LLC v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2018-65—deduction denied where easement donation was conditioned on government granting T development rights; Pollard v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2013-38—deduction denied where 67 acres of donor's farm were contributed as part of quid pro quo arrangement that included approval of subdivision exemption request to build second home on another portion of donor's property; see also Lindstrom, “4 Tax Issues for Conservation Easement Transactions” (Aug. 31, 2015) 148 Tax Notes 953, 954-955]

(a) [13:394.6a] Substantiation: The donor should receive a contemporaneous written acknowledgement of the gift indicating whether the donee provided any goods or services in consideration, in whole or in part, for the donation, as well as a description and good faith estimate of the value of any goods or services received (IRC § 170(f)(8)). Some courts have held, however, that an easement deed constitutes contemporaneous written acknowledgment for these purposes. [See Big River Development, L.P. v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2017-166 (finding mention of $93,500 one-time donation fee in “historic preservation and conservation easement” deed to be sufficient good faith estimate of donee's legitimate monitoring services); 310 Retail, LLC v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2017-164 (finding reference to “consideration of One Dollar ($1.00) … and other good and valuable consideration” in deed of easement to be mere “boilerplate language”)]

d. [13:394.7] Valuation: The charitable contribution amount equals the easement's fair market value at the time of the contribution, typically determined by using a “before and after” calculation of the value of the underlying property to which the easement is attached. The “before and after” calculation should also take into account any effect from zoning, conservation, or historic preservation laws that restrict the use of the property even without the presence of an easement. [See Buckelew Farm LLC v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2024-52 (characterizing valuation as “fantasy” because it relied upon unreasonable assumption re chances property would receive rezoning and development approval)] It is also possible for an easement to increase the value of the underlying property (e.g., when it preserves an unobstructed view of a lake or other natural feature). [Treas.Reg. § 1.170A-14(h)(3)(i); see also Glade Creek Partners, LLC v. Commissioner (11th Cir. 2022) 2022 WL

Commissioner*, TC Memo 2020-153 (reducing deduction amount because local laws limited taxpayer's activities on property); CCA 201334039]

(1) [13:394.7a] Inventory issue: The fair market value at donation must be reduced by the amount of gain that would not have been long-term gain if the taxpayer had sold the property, effectively reducing the deduction's value to the basis in the property. [See IRC § 170(e)(1)(A)]

The IRS has challenged some deductions on the ground the donated property was inventory in the taxpayer's hands and therefore was either sold in violation of the five-year disposition rule or excluded from the capital asset definition (IRC §§ 724(b), 1221(a)(1)). Moreover, in each case, the Tax Court sided with the IRS and characterized the property as inventory because the partner that contributed the property to the partnership originally held it as inventory and that characterization carried over to the partnership in the contribution. [See Glade Creek Partners, TC Memo 2023-82; Mill Road 36 Henry, LLC v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2023-129; Oconee Landing Property LLC v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2024-25; Hoard, Nelson & Young, “Taking Inventory of the IRS's Latest Attack on Qualified Conservation Easements” 181 Tax Notes 833]

(2) [13:394.7b] Qualified appraisal: The taxpayer must provide a “qualified appraisal” to substantiate the fair market value and it must specify the method for determining the valuation (Treas.Reg. § 1.170A-13(c)(3)(ii)). Some courts have accepted almost any appraisal as evidence for valuation purposes. [See Scheidelman v. Commissioner (2nd Cir. 2012) 682 F3d 189, 197 (noting “regulation requires only that the appraiser identify the valuation method ‘used’; it does not require that the method adopted be reliable”); Elgin 78 LLC v. Commissioner, No. 26892-21 (TC 2024) (accepting appraisal despite failing to (i) specifically discuss exclusion in property description, (ii) mention expected contribution date, and (iii) provide fair market value as of that date); Friedberg v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2013-224 (finding qualified appraisal requirement fulfilled if appraiser's analysis is present, even if Commissioner deems it “unconvincing,” “sloppy or inaccurate,” or “haphazardly applied”); Emanouil v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2020-120 (accepting qualified appraisal for charitable donation of real estate even though it did not include date, expected contribution date, or statement indicating it was prepared for income tax purposes); compare Savannah Shoals LLC v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2024-35 (rejecting even “qualified” appraisal where conclusions were inconsistent with facts of case)—appraisal failed to account for transfer occurring before donation and was inconsistent with comparable values in area; see also Downs & Englebrecht, “Scenic and Conservation Easement: Keys to a Successful Valuation Challenge,” (2d Quarter 2021) Real Est. Tax'n 4; McLaughlin, “Conservation Easements and the Valuation Conundrum” (2016) 19 Fla. Tax Rev. 225]

The appraisal also must include the cost basis of the land on which the easement has been granted. [See Treas.Reg. § 1.170A-13(c)(4)(ii)(E); Brooks v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2022-122—reporting cost basis over entire parcel, rather than smaller portion of property encumbered by easement, failed to comply with Reg. § 1.170A-13(c); Oakhill Woods, LLC v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2020-24—although cost basis information could be derived from other information supplied by taxpayer, appraisal did not satisfy regulatory reporting requirements because it did not explicitly disclose easement's cost basis]

Caution: In recent cases, the IRS has targeted inadequate appraisals when contesting charitable deductions for conservation easements. [See Jordan, “Appraisers as Collateral Damage in the Syndicated Conservation Easement War”(Nov. 7, 2022) 177 Tax Notes 837; Parillo, “Easement Appraisals Based on Lies and Fantasy, IRS says,” (June 6, 2022) 175 Tax Notes 1612; Sheppard, “Valuation, Highest and Best Use, and Easements: New IRS Attacks,” (May 16, 2022) 175 Tax Notes 1061]

The above targeting includes the criminal tax indictment of two appraisers, one of whom pled guilty and was sentenced to a year in prison. [See Richman, “Hammer Falls on Conservation Easement Criminal Defendants”(2024) 182 Tax Notes 560]

➪ [13:394.7c] PRACTICE POINTER: If a conservation easement is donated shortly after the property is sold, the sales price will likely substantially constrain the conservation easement's valuation. [See TOT Property Holdings, LLC v. Commissioner (11th Cir. 2021) 1 F4th 1354, 1368 & fn. 21—taxpayer's $6.9 million valuation of conservation easement deemed “dubious” where donation made two weeks after 98.99% of entity that owned underlying property sold for $1,039,200]

(3) [13:394.8] Taxpayer's "good faith" investigation: While the presence of a qualified appraisal is one element that satisfies the reasonable cause exception to an accuracy-related penalty, taxpayers also must make their own good faith investigation into an easement's value. [See Kaufman v. Commissioner (1st Cir. 2015) 784 F3d 56, 58-62 (upholding Tax Court's finding that taxpayers were liable for gross underpayment penalty (40%) because they ignored "warning signals" regarding appraisal)]

(a) [13:394.9] Listed transactions: Due to concerns regarding overvaluation of conservation easements, the IRS issued Notice 2017-10 which identifies certain syndicated conservation easement transactions and substantially similar transactions as listed transactions. Under Notice 2017-10, these transactions are supposed to be reported on the taxpayer's return. [See IRC § 6111; Notice 2017-10, 2017-4 IRB 544; Sheppard, "Conservation Easements and the Potential Reach of Notice 2017-10" (2019) 47 Real Estate Tax'n 10; Starkman, "Conservation Easements: The 21st Century Abusive Tax Shelter" (2018) 159 Tax Notes 1475; Hagen & Weller, "Recent Attacks by the IRS and the Tax Court on Façade Easement Contributions" (4th Quarter 2017) Real Estate Tax'n 28]

In several recent cases, however, courts struck down the IRS' syndicated conservation easements listing notice, finding that it failed to comply with the notice and comment requirements of the Administrative Procedure Act. [See Green Rock, LLC v. Internal Revenue Service (11th Cir. 2024) 104 F4th 220, 222; GBX Associates, LLC v. United States (ND OH 2022) (2022 WL 16923886, *18) (slip copy)—Notice 2017-10 deemed "unlawful" as to plaintiff only; Green Valley Investors, LLC v. Commissioner (2022) 159 TC No. 5—citing Sixth Circuit's ruling involving different IRS notice]

Other funds are also contesting the listing requirement. [See Parillo, "Limited Vacatur of Easement Notice Opens Floodgates, Funds Say," (Nov. 21, 2022) 177 Tax Notes 1177]

➪ [13:394.10] PRACTICE POINTER: Whether the above rulings (¶ 13:394.9) invalidate the listing requirement nationwide, or just for the individual litigants, is not yet clear. At present, however, it is advisable to continue proceeding with caution when undertaking one of the transactions identified on Notice 2017-10. After there were reports that the IRS counsel's office was under a directive to not settle cases involving syndicated conservation easements (see Stone, "Conservation Easement Settlements Appear to be Eradicated"(2023) 181 Tax Notes 1563). Indeed, the IRS has challenged some deductions on the ground the donated property was inventory in the taxpayer's hands and therefore either sold in violation of the five-year disposition rule or excluded from the capital asset definition. [IRC §§ 724(b), 1221(a)(1)] The IRS started a settlement initiative to clear a backlog of cases. [See Sheppard, "Conservation Easement Settlement Initiatives in 2020 and 2024" 182 Tax Notes 2355] That initiative, however, could end at any time.

(b) [13:394.11] 2.5 Times Rule: In response to continuing concerns about overvaluation in syndicated conservation easement transactions, Congress passed the SECURE 2.0 Act in December 2022, which adopts a new standard for deductions in these transactions. Under this rule, a partnership's contribution is not treated as a qualified conservation contribution if it exceeds 2.5 times the sum of the partner's relevant bases in the partnership. (IRC § 170(h)(7)(A))."Relevant basis" is the portion of each partner's modified basis allocable to the property with respect to which the contribution was made. [IRC § 170(h)(7)(B); see also Treas.Reg. § 1.170A-14(k)-(l) (on computing modified basis)]

The 2.5 times rule does not apply to certain historic preservation easements, family limited partnerships, and contributions outside a three-year holding period. [See IRC § 170(h)(7)(C), (D), (E)]

If a deduction is disallowed because of the 2.5 Times Rule, the consequences are severe. The taxpayer is subject to a gross valuation misstatement penalty of 40 percent and may not invoke a reasonable cause defense such as relying upon a qualified professional. [IRC §§ 6662(b)(10), (h)(2)(D), 6664(c)(2)]

(c) [13:394.12] Penalties: The IRS has imposed "gross valuation misstatement" and "substantial valuation misstatement" penalties in an amount equal to 20-40% of the underpayment in cases involving overvaluations of conservation easements donated to charity. [See IRC § 6662; Roth v. Commissioner (10th Cir. 2019) 922 F3d 1126, 1128-1129 & fn. 1 (imposing gross valuation misstatement penalty for donation of easement for gravel mining, which was deemed worthless because land was more valuable for farming than gravel mining); Belair Woods, LLC v. Commissioner (2018) TC Memo 2018-159 (imposing gross valuation misstatement penalty when deduction was overvalued by 1,380% and failure to submit valuation appraisal was "conscious election not to supply the required information"); see also Ware, "Valuing Conservation Easements: An Empirical Analysis of Decided Cases"(July 22, 2019) 164 Tax Notes 495]

In addition to the above penalties, the IRS has increased its use of a 75% civil fraud penalty, asserting it in sixty-six syndicated easement cases in 2021 alone. [See IRC § 6663(a); Parillo, "Civil Fraud Penalty on the Line in Tax Court Easement Petitions"(Dec. 13, 2021) 175 Tax Notes 1587]

Comment: Notwithstanding the above, disclosing the taxpayer's cost basis in the donated property may negate the intent to conceal which is necessary for a fraud penalty (see Mill Road 36 Henry, LLC v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2023-129). On the other hand, doing so may not be enough on its own if there are other indicia of fraud. [North Donald LA Property LLC v. Commissioner, No. 24703-21 (TC 4/10/24)]

2) [13:410.3] Recourse debt
(2) [13:410.4] Accrual method taxpayers
f. [13:411] Partnership debt

1. [13:395] General Principles: Where gain or loss is realized and recognized (¶ 13:301 ff.), the next step is to compute the taxpayer's "amount realized." If the amount realized exceeds adjusted basis, the taxpayer has a gain; if the amount realized is less than adjusted basis, the taxpayer has a loss.

a. [13:396] "Amount realized": The Code defines "amount realized" as "the sum of any money received plus the fair market value of the property (other than money) received." [IRC § 1001(b)] Selling expenses reduce amount realized. [Treas.Reg. § 1.263(a)-2(e)]

b. [13:397] Exception—real estate taxes: Real property taxes must be apportioned between the buyer and seller on a daily basis. [IRC § 164(d), discussed at ¶ 13:201] Where the sale price of property includes reimbursement for real property taxes paid by the seller, the amount realized does not include reimbursement of such taxes if the taxes are treated as imposed on the purchaser. Similarly, the purchaser does not include the amount of such reimbursement in the purchaser's basis for the property. [IRC § 1012]

In contrast, the seller's amount realized includes amounts representing real property taxes which are treated as imposed on the seller if the taxes are paid or to be paid by the purchaser, and the purchaser includes such amounts in basis. [IRC § 1001(b); Treas.Reg. § 1.1001-1(b)]

2. [13:398] Property of Indeterminate Value: Where the seller receives property of indeterminate value, the amount realized is established by the value of the property surrendered, since it is presumed the property surrendered and property received are equivalent in value. [United States v. Davis (1962) 370 US 65, 72, 82 S.Ct. 1190, 1194—taxpayer who transfers stocks to spouse in exchange for discharge of marital claims is presumed to have realized amount equal to value of stock]

3. [13:399] Transfers of Property Subject to Debt and Cancellation of Debt Income; General Considerations: The transfer of property subject to debt (whether in a voluntary conveyance or by foreclosure) generally triggers gain or loss because the taxpayer is treated as having realized the amount of the debt. However, the rules relating to recourse and nonrecourse debt are not identical (¶ 13:400 ff.; and see generally, Onsager & Becker, "The Federal Income Tax Consequences of Foreclosures and Repossessions" (1991) 18 J. Real Est. Tax 291; IRS Publication 4681, "Cancelled Debts, Foreclosures, Repossessions, and Abandonments"). Lenders are required to inform the IRS if they acquire an interest in property in full or partial satisfaction of the debt. [IRC § 6050J; see ¶ 13:524]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

It is necessary to distinguish the gain or loss resulting from the transfer of property subject to debt from cancellation of debt income. Both gain or loss and cancellation of debt income can arise from foreclosures, short sales, etc., but the tax rules relating to them are entirely different.

Cancellation of debt income normally is treated as ordinary income and therefore is fully taxable. Creditors are required to report this income to the IRS and send the debtor a Form 1099 reflecting the income. [IRC §§ 6041, 6050P] However, several exceptions exist, including the exclusion for qualified principal residence indebtedness (¶ 13:399.4 ff.).

a. [13:399.1] Cancellation of debt (COD) income: In general, COD income occurs when a taxpayer's liabilities decline by more than the taxpayer's assets. For example, a taxpayer has $400 of COD income if the taxpayer's creditor reduces an outstanding $1,000 debt to $600 or if the taxpayer discharges a $1,000 debt by paying the creditor $600. [IRC § 61(a)(11)]

(For a comprehensive treatment of the rules relating to COD income, see Lipton, “Real Estate Debt Workouts in 2008—The Rules Have Changed” (2008) 108 J. of Tax 207, 214-223; Bittker & Lokken, “Federal Taxation of Income, Estates & Gifts,” Ch. 7 (3d ed. 1999 and current supp.).)

(1) [13:399.1a] Government “incentive” payments under Homes Affordable Mortgage Program (HAMP): HAMP is a government program intended to facilitate mortgage modifications. Distressed homeowners whose mortgages have been modified may receive federal assistance under this program in the form of incentive payments to their lenders that reduce their principal loan amount. These payments are tax-free to the borrowers under the nonstatutory “general welfare” rule (i.e., welfare payments do not constitute IRC § 61 income). [Rev.Rul. 2009-19, 2009-28 IRB 111; see also IRS Notice 2011-14, 2011-11 IRB 544—payments to homeowners under various federal/state programs through Treasury's “Hardest Hit Fund” are tax-free under “general welfare rule”]

(a) [13:399.1b] National Mortgage Settlement payments: In 2012, the federal government, 49 state attorneys general and the District of Columbia entered into settlement agreements with five bank mortgage servicers to provide compensation to borrowers who lost their homes to foreclosure in 2008-2011, under conditions indicating loan servicing or foreclosure abuse. The IRS has ruled that the settlement payments are intended to compensate the borrowers for the loss of their homes and therefore may be eligible for exclusion under IRC § 121 (¶ 13:345 ff.). [Rev.Rul. 2014-2, 2014-2 IRB 255]

(2) [13:399.2] Substitution of one debt instrument for another: The substitution of one debt instrument for another (or a material modification of a debt instrument) can produce COD income if the principal amount is reduced or if the interest rate is reduced below the applicable federal rate. [IRC § 108(e)(10); Treas.Reg. § 1.1001-3; Lipton, “Real Estate Debt Workouts in 2008—The Rules Have Changed” (2008) 108 J. of Tax 207, 208-214; Barrance, “Financial Workouts and Partnerships—A Primer” (2001) 28 J. Real Est. Tax 141]

(3) [13:399.3] COD income from reduction of nonrecourse debt: A taxpayer probably has COD income where a creditor reduces an undersecured nonrecourse debt without taking back the property. [Gershkowitz v. Commissioner (1987) 88 TC 984, 1014; Rev.Rul. 91-31, 1991-1 CB 19; but see Fulton Gold Corp. v. Commissioner (1934) 31 BTA 519, 520 (reduction in basis rather than COD income); see also 2925 Briarpark, Ltd. v. Commissioner (5th Cir. 1999) 163 F3d 313, 318 (per curiam)]

However, exclusions from COD income may be applicable in these cases. Indeed, there are exclusions that arise from the reduction of a purchase money debt, qualified real property business indebtedness or qualified principal residence indebtedness (QPRI). See ¶ 13:399.8 ff.

(4) [13:399.4] Exceptions to COD income: COD income is not recognized or it can be deferred under a variety of statutory exceptions:

(a) [13:399.5] Insolvency, bankruptcy, farm indebtedness exceptions: COD income is not recognized when (i) the taxpayer is insolvent; (ii) discharge of the debt occurs in a Title 11 bankruptcy action; or (iii) the debt is “qualified farm indebtedness.” [IRC § 108(a)(1)(A)-(C), (d)(3), (e), (g); and see Rev.Rul. 92-53, 1992-2 CB 48—amount by which nonrecourse debt exceeds value of asset securing it is considered in determining insolvency when nonrecourse debt is reduced or forgiven, but not when other debts are reduced or forgiven]

1) [13:399.5a] Reduction of tax attributes: Where the insolvency, bankruptcy or farm exceptions apply, the taxpayer must reduce various tax attributes. The first attribute reduced is net operating loss, followed by general business credits, minimum tax credits, capital loss carryovers, basis of depreciable and nondepreciable property, passive activity loss and credit carryovers, and foreign tax credit carryforwards. [IRC § 108(b)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

When the basis of property must be reduced, it occurs in the following order: real property used in business or for investment; personal property used in business or for investment; remaining property used in business or for investment; inventory and stock in trade, including dealer real property (¶ 13:422 ff.); and property not used in business or for investment. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1017-1(a)] Taxpayers can elect to reduce the basis of depreciable property and dealer real property instead of reducing other tax attributes first. [IRC § 108(b)(5)]

2) [13:399.6] Application of insolvency exception to entities: In the case of a partnership, insolvency is determined at the partner level. Thus, where a real estate partnership is insolvent, but the individual partners are not, the insolvency exception does not apply. [See IRC § 108(d)(6)]

In the case of an S corporation, insolvency is measured at the corporate level and the insolvency exception thus applies at the corporate level. [IRC § 108(d)(7)(A)] ➪ [13:399.7] PRACTICE POINTER: The difference in applying the insolvency exception to a partnership vs. an S corporation (¶ 13:399.6) may be something to consider in setting up your client's real estate venture.

(b) [13:399.8] Exception for purchase price reduction: No COD income is realized if a seller of property reduces a buyer's purchase money debt. The reduction is treated as a purchase price adjustment, meaning the buyer must reduce basis by the amount of the reduction. However, this rule does not apply if the debtor is insolvent or the reduction occurs in bankruptcy. [IRC § 108(e)(5); see Preslar v. Commissioner (10th Cir. 1999) 167 F3d 1323, 1331—applies only to direct agreements between buyer and seller and, therefore, settlement with FDIC (not original seller) cannot be treated as purchase price reduction; and Taggart, "Revenue Reconciliation Act of 1993—Real Estate Indebtedness" (1994) 23 Real Est. L.J. 48, 54-55]

1) [13:399.9] Example: B buys property from S for $100, paying $12 and borrowing $88 from S. Later, the debt is still $88 and the adjusted basis of the property is $85. The value has dropped to $80. B is solvent. S reduces the $88 debt to $80. Because of the purchase price reduction rule, B does not have $8 of COD income. The basis of the property is reduced to $77.

[13:399.10] Reserved.

(c) [13:399.11] Exclusion of qualified real property business indebtedness: COD income does not include the discharge of qualified real property business indebtedness. This means recourse or nonrecourse debt incurred or assumed by the taxpayer in connection with real property used in a trade or business and secured by such property. The election applies only to depreciable real property; it does not apply to dealer real property held for sale to customers (¶ 13:422 ff.). [IRC §§ 108(a)(1)(D), (c) & 1017(b)(3)(F)(ii); Rev.Rul. 2016-15, 2016-26 IRB 1060; see Johnson & Harmon, "Clarifying Standards for Trade or Business Real Estate Debt"(Aug. 24, 2015) 148 Tax Notes 875; Taggart, supra, at 55-65]

1) [13:399.12] "Qualification" of prevs. post-1993 debt: If the debt was incurred or assumed after January 1, 1993, to be "qualified" it must be qualified acquisition indebtedness (i.e., incurred or assumed to acquire, construct, reconstruct or substantially improve the property). On the other hand, debt assumed or incurred before January 1, 1993 can be "qualified" even if it is not acquisition indebtedness. [IRC § 108(c)(3)]

2) [13:399.13] Election required: This exclusion provision applies only if the taxpayer so elects on the return for the taxable year in which the discharge occurs or at such other time as provided by regulations. (The taxpayer should file IRC Form 982 to claim the exclusion.) [IRC § 108(d)(9)]

If no election is filed, the COD income is taxable (unless it falls within some other exception).

3) [13:399.14] Basis reduction: If the taxpayer elects to exclude COD income arising from the discharge of qualified real property business indebtedness, the taxpayer must reduce the basis of the property with respect to which the debt was reduced by the amount of the excluded COD income. Moreover, the basis reduction must occur in the disposition year, rather than the following year. [IRC § 1017(b)(3)(F)(iii); Hussey, 156 TC No. 12 (2021)]

If there is insufficient basis in that property to absorb the entire reduction, the basis of all of the taxpayer's other depreciable property should be proportionately reduced. [IRC §§ 108(c)(1) & (2)(B), 1017]

4) [13:399.15] Exceptions: The § 108(a)(1)(D) exclusion for qualified business real property indebtedness does not apply to debt owed by a C corporation; nor does it apply to debt relief that occurs in a bankruptcy proceeding or if the taxpayer is insolvent. [IRC § 108(a)(1)(D) & (2)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Additionally, this exclusion apparently does not apply if the purchase price reduction rule applies (¶ 13:399.8 ff.).

5) [13:399.16] Value limit: The amount excluded under this provision cannot exceed the excess of the outstanding principal amount of the discharged or reduced debt over the fair market value of the property (reducing that value by any other qualified business real property indebtedness secured by such property). [IRC § 108(c)(2)(A)]

6) [13:399.17] Example: T owns Black Arms, an apartment building, worth $700; this is the only real estate she owns. The property's basis is $1,200 and it is subject to a trust deed in favor of Bank for $1,000. This debt was incurred in year 1 when T purchased Black Arms. T is neither bankrupt nor insolvent.

In year 3, Bank reduces the debt to $700. The debt represents qualified real property business indebtedness. If T so elects, she can exclude $300 of COD income. And if she so elects, the basis for Black Arms is reduced by $300 to $900.

(d) [13:399.18] Exclusion for qualified principal residence indebtedness (QPRI): COD income does not include QPRI reductions (i.e., reductions in acquisition debt secured by a principal residence). These reductions reduce the basis of the principal residence (but not below zero). [IRC § 108(a)(1)(E), (h)]

The current exclusion applies for QPRI that was discharged before January 1, 2026. [IRC § 108(a)(1)(E)] The exclusion is claimed on IRC Form 982. For examples of QPRI, see IRS Pub. 4681 (available online at www.irs.gov).

1) [13:399.19] Definitions: For purposes of applying the IRC § 108 exclusion, "principal residence" is defined exactly as it is under the IRC § 121 exclusion for gain from sale of a personal residence (¶ 13:346.10)—i.e., the property must have been used as the taxpayer's principal residence for at least two of the five years preceding the sale. [IRC § 108(h)(5)]

"Acquisition indebtedness" is defined as it is for IRC § 163 qualified residence interest purposes (¶ 13:177)—i.e., the debt must be incurred to acquire, construct or substantially improve a qualified residence, and must be secured by that residence. Acquisition indebtedness also includes any debt secured by the residence resulting from the refinancing of debt (but only to the extent the debt resulting from refinancing does not exceed the amount of refinanced debt). [See IRC §§ 108(h)(2) & 163(h)(3)(B)]

a) [13:399.20] Monetary cap on acquisition indebtedness: For purposes of the QPRI exclusion from COD income, acquisition indebtedness is capped at $2,000,000 ($1,000,000 for a married person filing separately). [IRC § 108(h)(2)] By contrast, these figures are $1,000,000 and $500,000 for purposes of deducting the loan interest. [IRC § 163(h)(3)(B)(ii)]

2) [13:399.21] "Short sale": A "short sale" occurs when the lender reduces the amount of debt encumbering property before it is sold. There are two ways to account for a short sale: One way is to separate the debt reduction from the sale of the property (¶ 13:409.3), in which case the QPRI exclusion applies to the debt reduction (provided the taxpayer otherwise qualifies for QPRI treatment), or one of the other COD exclusions (¶ 13:399.5 ff.) also might apply.

The second way to account for a short sale is to ignore the debt reduction and treat the seller as realizing the full amount of the unreduced debt as consideration for the sale of the property (¶ 13:409.4). In this situation, particularly if the debt involved is nonrecourse (¶ 13:400 ff.), there is no COD income and COD exclusions are inapplicable.

There appears to be some latitude for taxpayers to structure a short sale in either of the above ways, depending on which is more favorable taxwise (¶ 13:409.5).

a) [13:399.21a] Example: T's principal residence (Oak Street) was purchased two years ago for $1,000,000. It is subject to a $900,000 nonrecourse purchase money lien in favor of Bank. The value of Oak Street declines to $600,000. Bank reduces the lien to $600,000. T sells the residence to X for $600,000 in a short sale. Assuming the debt reduction is treated as separate from the sale of Oak Street, T excludes the $300,000 of COD income because it qualifies for the QPRI exclusion. T reduces the basis of Oak Street by $300,000 to $700,000. T sustains a nondeductible personal loss of $100,000 upon the sale to X. [See IRS Pub. 4681 (applying the QPRI exclusion to a short sale)]

(Note: The IRS could choose to integrate the debt reduction and sale. Under this approach, the debt reduction is ignored and T has a $400,000 nondeductible personal loss.)

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

3) [13:399.22] Exclusion relates only to residence's value or taxpayer's financial condition: The QPRI exception to COD income does not apply to a loan discharge on account of services performed for the lender or for any other reason not directly related to a decline in the residence's value or the taxpayer's financial condition. [IRC § 108(h)(3)]

4) [13:399.23] Coordinating with other exceptions: The QPRI exception does not apply if the debt is discharged in a Title 11 case (i.e., a bankruptcy action). And the insolvency exception (¶ 13:399.5), if elected, is "in lieu of" the qualified principal residence exception. [IRC § 108(a)(2)(A),(C)]

5) [13:399.24] Phaseout: The amount of debt subject to the QPRI exclusion cannot exceed $2,000,000 ($1,000,000 for married persons filing separate returns). If only a portion of the discharged loan is QPRI, the COD exception "shall apply only to so much of the amount discharged as exceeds the amount of the loan (as determined immediately before such discharge) which is not qualified principal residence indebtedness." [IRC § 108(h)(2), (4)]

a) Examples

• [13:399.25] T, a single and solvent taxpayer, owns a principal residence purchased for $3,000,000. The residence is subject to a $2,500,000 lien in favor of Bank. The residence's value declines to $2,100,000, and Bank reduces its lien to $2,100,000.

In the above example, $500,000 of the loan is not QPRI because the $2,500,000 loan exceeded the $2,000,000 limit by $500,000. In addition, reduction of the loan was only $400,000. Since the amount discharged did not exceed the amount of the loan that was QPRI, the QPRI exception does not apply.

• [13:399.25a] Assume in the example at ¶ 13:399.25 that the loan is reduced from $2,500,000 to $1,800,000. Of the $700,000 in potential COD income, $200,000 qualifies for the QPRI exception, but $500,000 does not because the $700,000 reduction exceeded $500,000 by $200,000.

Of course, if T is insolvent, T may instead rely on the insolvency exception (¶ 13:399.5).

6) [13:399.26] Basis reduction and exclusion of ultimate gain: In many cases, the QPRI provision will result in exclusion rather than deferral of income to a taxpayer who is able to hold onto their residence.

• [13:399.26a] Example: T's basis for her principal residence (Oak Street) is $1,000,000. It is now worth $600,000. It is subject to a $900,000 nonrecourse purchase money lien in favor of Bank. Bank reduces the loan to $600,000. T does not sell the house but continues to make payments on the loan. Because of the QPRI provision, the basis of Oak Street is reduced from $1,000,000 to $700,000. Several years later, price levels recover and T sells the house for $850,000. Because T meets the requirements for exclusion under IRC § 121 (¶ 13:345 ff.), her gain of $150,000 on the sale is not recognized. Consequently, T's gain from COD is never taxed.

7) [13:399.27] Compare—California law: California's counterpart to the federal QPRI exclusion applies to debt forgiveness on a principal residence that occurs on or after January 1, 2013, and before January 1, 2014. The maximum amount that can be excluded is $500,000 ($250,000 on the return of a married person filing separately). For California purposes, the amount of debt subject to the QPRI exclusion cannot exceed $800,000 ($400,000 for married persons filing separately). [Rev. & Tax.C. § 17144.5]

b. [13:400] Gain or loss on property transferred in discharge of nonrecourse debt: Where property is subject to nonrecourse debt, a transferor realizes the full amount of the debt upon a sale or other disposition of the property regardless of the value of the property. [IRC § 7701(g); Treas.Reg. § 1.1001-2(b); Commissioner v. Tufts (1983) 461 US 300, 316, 103 S.Ct. 1826, 1836]

This result occurs even though the transfer is in the form of a mortgage foreclosure or other transfer to the creditor in discharge of the debt. If the lender is in the lending trade or business, it must report such transactions to the IRS. [IRC § 6050J; see ¶ 13:524]

(1) [13:401] Example: T owns Blackacre, which is encumbered by a $1,000 trust deed. The creditor is C. The debt is nonrecourse. Blackacre is worth only $700. T's adjusted basis for Blackacre is $560. C forecloses (or takes back Blackacre in lieu of foreclosure). T has a gain of $440 on the foreclosure because the value of Blackacre is ignored and the full amount of the debt is the taxpayer's amount realized. Assuming Blackacre is a capital asset, the entire gain is capital gain. [Commissioner v. Tufts (1983) 461 US 300, 316, 103 S.Ct. 1826, 1836]

(2) [13:402] Not COD income: The gain occurring upon the property transfer in discharge of a nonrecourse debt is not COD income (¶ 13:399.1 ff.). Reason: The debt is treated as if it were paid in full by transfer of the property in discharge of the debt as opposed to being canceled. Therefore, the exceptions to COD income (e.g., insolvency, bankruptcy, qualified real property business indebtedness and qualified personal residence indebtedness) do not apply.

(3) [13:403] Consequences to creditor upon foreclosure: Upon foreclosure, a lender who was not the original seller of the property is entitled to a bad debt deduction for the difference between the value of the property (which is presumed to be the bid price at the foreclosure sale) and the creditor's basis for the debt. [Treas.Reg. § 1.166-6—difference between debt and bid price is bad debt]

If the foreclosing lender was the original seller, gain or loss normally is not recognized upon repossession of the property, whether the debt was recourse or nonrecourse. [See IRC § 1038] One exception to this rule is if the seller originally excluded gain from recognition under the IRC § 121 principal residence exclusion and did not resell the property within one year following its reacquisition. [See DeBough v. Commissioner (8th Cir. 2015) 799 F3d 1210, 1211-1212 (construing relationship between § 1038 and § 121 in case of first impression)]

(For detailed discussion of foreclosure or repossession consequences to the creditor, see Onsager & Becker, "The Federal Income Tax Consequences of Foreclosures and Repossessions" (1991) 18 J. Real Est. Tax. 291, 303-313.)

c. [13:404] Gain on property transferred in discharge of recourse debt: The rule for transfer of property in discharge of a recourse debt is different: The amount realized on a foreclosure or other transfer of property to the creditor in discharge of the debt is the fair market value of the property or the face amount of the debt, whichever is less. [Treas.Reg. § 1.1001-2(a)(2) & (c) ex. 8; see Rev.Rul. 90-16, 1990-1 CB 12; Frazier v. Commissioner (1998) 111 TC 243, 245; and Aizawa v. Commissioner (1992) 99 TC 197, 200-201, aff'd (9th Cir. 1994) 29 F3d 630—proceeds from foreclosure sale (not amount of deficiency judgment) is "amount realized"]

If the value of the property is less than the amount of the recourse debt, the difference is COD income (¶ 13:399.1 ff.).

• [13:404a] Comment: Apparently, the QPRI exception to COD income (¶ 13:399.18 ff.) applies to the foreclosure of a recourse acquisition loan on a qualified personal residence. This situation will be relatively rare in California, however, because acquisition loans on personal residences usually are nonrecourse under the antideficiency rules (¶ 6:563 ff.).

Nonetheless, if a principal residence is secured by a recourse loan, and the requirements for the QPRI exception are met, the homeowner-borrower should have no COD income on foreclosure. While the QPRI exception requires reduction of the basis of the property so that the taxpayer has a gain upon foreclosure, that gain normally is excludable under IRC § 121 (¶ 13:345 ff.).

(1) [13:405] Example: In the example at ¶ 13:401, assume the debt was a recourse debt and that C discharged the debt by foreclosing on the property. Assume further that the property was a vacation home and therefore did not qualify for QPRI treatment. T has a capital gain of $140 ($700 less $560) and COD income of $300.

Now assume the property qualifies for QPRI treatment because it is a personal residence, the acquisition debt is below $2,000,000 and the foreclosure occurs before the end of 2012. On these facts, T has no COD income; rather, the basis of the property must be reduced by $300 to $260. As a result, T has a capital gain of $440. However, that gain is not recognized because of the personal residence exclusion (¶ 13:345 ff.). [IRC § 121]

(2) [13:405.1] Foreclosure bid presumed fair market value: Absent clear and convincing proof to the contrary, the sale price of property at a foreclosure sale is presumed to be its fair market value. [See Community Bank v. Commissioner (1982) 79 TC 789, 792, aff'd (9th Cir. 1987) 819 F2d 940]

However, courts are not "bound to blindly accept a transaction" and may look behind the foreclosure sale to determine the fair market value if the presumption is rebutted by clear and convincing proof. [Frazier v. Commissioner (1998) 111 TC 243, 245-246—presumption that lender's bid at foreclosure sale was fair market value rebutted by appraisal showing fair market value substantially less than bid and fact lender resold property for amount comparable to appraisal]

d. [13:409] Short sales: A "short sale" occurs when a lender agrees to reduce the debt on encumbered property; the owner (debtor) then sells the property for an amount equal to or slightly more than the reduced debt.

Example: T bought a home for $660,000, subject to a $500,000 nonrecourse debt owed to L. The value of the home has declined to about $420,000. L agrees to reduce the outstanding principal obligation to $420,000. T then sells the house to B for $423,000. T keeps $3,000; $420,000 is paid to L.

(1) [13:409.1] Practical advantages: A short sale avoids a default on the loan. It is also advantageous to the lender since it motivates the owner/debtor to keep the property in good repair in order to find a buyer (rather than neglecting and then walking away from the property).

(2) [13:409.2] Tax treatment: The short sale transaction could be taxed in one of two ways:

(a) [13:409.3] COD income: The debt reduction could give rise to COD income, which would be taxable as ordinary income unless it qualified for one of the exceptions to COD income (¶ 13:399.4 ff.). [See Stevens v. Commissioner (2008) TC Summ.Opn. 2008-61—imposing penalties on borrower for failure to report COD income in short sale]

In the example at ¶ 13:409, assuming no exception applied, T would have ordinary income from COD of $80,000. Then T would have a nondeductible personal loss of $237,000 ($660,000 less $423,000) (see ¶ 13:303.5).

On the other hand, if an exception were applicable, T could avoid COD income. (The exceptions for insolvency, qualified personal residence indebtedness (QPRI) and qualified business real property indebtedness should be considered; ¶ 13:399.4 ff.)

In particular, the QPRI exception is applicable (assuming the home is T's principal residence) because the $500,000 debt is acquisition debt and it is less than $2 million (¶ 13:399.20 ff.). As a result, T can avoid COD income. The basis of the home is reduced by $80,000 to $580,000, and T has a nondeductible loss of $157,000 ($580,000 less $423,000). [See IRS Pub. 4681 (available online at www.irs.gov) for an example of the application of the QPRI exception to short sales]

(b) [13:409.4] Sale for unreduced loan amount: Alternatively, the debt reduction could be ignored and the taxpayer treated as having sold the property for the amount of the unreduced loan (see ¶ 13:400) plus any cash received. In the example at ¶ 13:409, T would then have a $157,000 nondeductible personal loss.

➪ [13:409.5] PRACTICE POINTER: Taxpayers should choose whichever approach is better for them and attempt to structure the transaction accordingly. In many situations, the first method will be better (as where the debt qualifies for an exception to COD income); however, the transaction must be structured carefully and the taxpayer should document the independence of the two steps (the debt reduction and subsequent sale). [See Raby, “Bifurcation & Excess Debt” (Jan. 10, 1994) 62 Tax Notes 211; Gershkowitz v. Commissioner (1987) 88 TC 984, 1014—reduction of nonrecourse debt produces COD income where not integrated with subsequent sale of properties]

The IRS may disregard an attempt to structure the transaction to produce separate debt cancellation and sale transactions if it finds that the two transactions are “closely intertwined.” In that event, the transaction will be taxed under the second approach (¶ 13:409.4). [2925 Briarpark, Ltd. v. Commissioner (5th Cir. 1999) 163 F3d 313, 319 (per curiam) (debt reduction integrated with property sale)—debt cancellation ignored and entire difference between debt and basis of property is capital gain; Lipton, “Briarpark and the Unexpected Limits to Careful Tax Planning” (April 1999) 90 J. of Tax. 198]

e. [13:410] Accrued interest: Normally, when a loan is foreclosed or reduced by the creditor, both the principal and interest are in default. Discharge (forgiveness) of the accrued interest obligation may be a realizing event to the taxpayer:

(1) Cash method taxpayers

(a) [13:410.1] COD income: A debtor who uses the cash method of accounting is not permitted to deduct unpaid interest as it accrues (¶ 13:167 ff.). If the interest would have been deductible had it been paid (e.g., trade or business interest, investment interest, or qualified residence interest), and the unpaid accrued amount is forgiven as part of a debt reduction, there is no COD income. [IRC § 108(e)(2)—no COD income to extent payment of debt would have given rise to deduction]

On the other hand, if the interest when paid would not have been deductible, the forgiven accrued interest will be COD income to the debtor.

(b) Interest deduction

1) [13:410.2] Nonrecourse debt: Accrued interest that is canceled as part of a foreclosure of a nonrecourse debt likely will be treated as if it was paid. The amount of the debt (which is automatically treated as the taxpayer's amount realized, ¶ 13:400 ff.) should also include accrued interest. As a result, the debtor/cash method taxpayer would have an interest deduction (if the item is deductible) and also additional capital gain equal to the amount of the interest deemed paid. [Allan v. Commissioner (1986) 86 TC 655, aff'd (8th Cir. 1988) 856 F2d 1169, 1174—taxpayer's amount realized on transfer in lieu of foreclosure of nonrecourse debt includes interest added to principal of loan]

2) [13:410.3] Recourse debt: If, however, the debt is a recourse debt and the amount of the principal obligation exceeds the value of the property, it is unlikely that any of the amount realized at the foreclosure would be allocated to interest. Consequently, nothing would be deductible. [See Aizawa v. Commissioner (1992) 99 TC 197, aff'd without opn. (9th Cir. 1995) 29 F3d 630; and ¶ 13:404; see also Note, "Determining Amount Realized on Foreclosure of a Recourse Mortgage: Aizawa v. Commissioner" (1993) 46 Tax Lwyr. 643, 644-646]

(2) [13:410.4] Accrual method taxpayers: A debtor who uses the accrual method of accounting is permitted to deduct the unpaid interest as it accrues even though it has not been paid (¶ 13:167). If the unpaid interest is forgiven as part of a debt reduction, the taxpayer probably has additional COD income but, in many cases, can use the exceptions to COD income to avoid immediate taxation (¶ 13:399.4 ff.). [See Taggart, "Revenue Reconciliation Act of 1993—Real Estate Indebtedness" (1994) 23 Real Est. L.J. 48, 64-65]

If the property is foreclosed, the taxpayer will probably be treated as having received an additional amount equal to the accrued interest and thus will be considered to have paid the interest and to have additional capital gain in the amount of the interest. [Allan v. Commissioner (8th Cir. 1988) 856 F2d 1169, 1171-1172 & fn. 4—taxpayer has capital gain, not ordinary income, on amount of accrued interest and real estate taxes when property transferred to creditor in lieu of foreclosure]

f. [13:411] Partnership debt: Upon a sale of a partnership interest, the seller realizes the amount of partnership liabilities previously allocated to the seller. [IRC § 752(b), (d); Treas.Reg. § 1.1001-2(c), ex. (3)]

a. [13:458] Holding period carryover
b. [13:462] Inherited property—one-year minimum deemed satisfied
c. [13:463] Holding period for profit interests

1. [13:415] Overview: A gain on the disposition of property that is characterized as long-term capital gain is subject to preferential tax treatment—i.e., a lower tax rate (¶ 13:416).

However, capital losses have restricted deductibility: They can be deducted only to the extent of capital gains plus $3,000 per year (¶ 13:418).

In deciding whether capital gain or loss occurs, the following questions are relevant:

• How are capital gains and losses taxed? (¶ 13:416 ff.)

• Is the asset a capital asset or a IRC § 1231 asset? (¶ 13:420 ff.)

• Was there a “sale or exchange”? (¶ 13:452 ff.)

• What is the “holding period”? (¶ 13:457 ff.)

(For a further overview and discussion of capital gains and losses, see Cummings, “Reexamining Capital Gains for Real Estate”(2015) 147 Tax Notes 1409.)

2. Taxation of Capital Gains and Losses

a. Capital gains

(1) [13:416] Rates: There are three general tiers of capital gain rates. The top rate of 20% is on incomes exceeding $400,000 for single filers, and $450,000 for married joint filers (these thresholds are adjusted annually for inflation). Individuals in the 10% or 15% tax bracket have no capital gain tax. All others pay capital gain tax at the rate of 15%. [See IRC § 1(h)(1)]

(a) [13:417] “Net capital gain”: “Net capital gain” means the excess of the net long-term capital gain over the net short-term capital loss. [IRC § 1222(11)]

“Long-term” means more than one year (see ¶ 13:457 ff.).

[13:417.1 - 13:417.4] Reserved.

(2) [13:417.5] Sales of real estate: Gain on depreciable real estate is recaptured to the extent of depreciation on the property. The tax on the recaptured portion of the gain is 25%. The tax on additional gain, if any, is 15%. [IRC § 1(h)(1)(E), (h)(6)]

• [13:417.6] P bought Factory in Year 1 for $1,000,000 and sold it in Year 4 for $960,000. P correctly claimed depreciation of $100,000 on Factory, so P's adjusted basis at the time of sale was $900,000. The long-term capital gain on the sale is $60,000. Because $60,000 was less than the depreciation previously taken on Factory, the entire gain is taxed at the rate of 25%.

• [13:417.7] Suppose instead that Factory was sold in Year 4 for $1,150,000. The gain is $250,000, of which $100,000 would be taxed at 25% and $150,000 at 15%.

b. Capital losses

(1) [13:418] Restricted deductibility: Deductibility of a capital loss (assuming a loss is otherwise recognized) is sharply restricted: Capital losses may only be deducted to the extent of capital gains plus $3,000 (or $1,500 in the case of a married individual filing a separate return). In the case of corporations, capital losses can be deducted only to the extent of capital gains. [IRC § 1211]

(2) [13:419] Carryover: Individuals can carry forward capital losses for an indefinite period, offsetting them in each future years against capital gains plus $3,000. Corporations, on the other hand, can carry capital losses back three years and forward five years. [IRC § 1212]

3. [13:420] Capital Asset vs. § 1231 Asset: To qualify for the favorable treatment of capital gains (and the unfavorable treatment of capital loss), an asset must be a “capital asset.” IRC § 1231 assets, by contrast, receive favorable treatment of both gains and losses (¶ 13:442 ff.).

a. [13:421] “Capital asset”: The term “capital asset” means any property held by the taxpayer subject to certain specific exceptions. [IRC § 1221] However, as explained at ¶ 13:424 ff., case law has broadened the exceptions.

(1) [13:422] “Dealer property” not capital asset: The most important exception to capital treatment is “property held by the taxpayer primarily for sale to customers in the ordinary course of his trade or business”—often called “dealer property.” [IRC § 1221(1)]

(a) [13:423] Significance: Identifying dealer property is important for numerous reasons in addition to the question of capital gain or loss treatment. For example, dealer property does not qualify for IRC § 1031 like-kind exchange treatment (¶ 13:304) or for the installment method (¶ 13:469), and it cannot be depreciated. [IRC §§ 453(b)(2)(A), (l) & 1031(a)(2)(A)]

(b) [13:424] Application: IRC § 1221(1) distinguishes property held as an investment, where appreciation is attributable mostly to a rising market, from property held for sale by a dealer—a taxpayer who buys wholesale and adds value to the property in the course of selling it at retail.

In some cases, this Code Section is easy to apply, while in others it is more difficult. A taxpayer who occasionally sells a parcel of land or a building that was held for farming or rental qualifies for capital gain. A home builder who subdivides land, builds hundreds of homes, and sells them one at a time, is clearly a dealer. But there are innumerable situations that fall in between.

1) [13:425] “Primarily”: As used in IRC § 1221(1), the word “primarily” means “of first importance” or “principally.” [Malat v. Riddell (1966) 383 US 569, 572, 86 S.Ct. 1030, 1032]

If, for example, holding for rental or farming purposes was more important during the holding period (before taxpayer decided to sell the property) than holding for sale, the property is a capital asset.

2) [13:426] “For sale to customers in ordinary course of trade or business”: Application of this phrase depends on a multi-factor formula to determine whether the sale is in the “ordinary course” of business. Consequently, the results are rather unpredictable. [See, e.g., Suburban Realty Co. v. United States (5th Cir. 1980) 615 F2d 171; Biedenharn Realty Co., Inc. v. United States (5th Cir. 1976) 526 F2d 409; and generally, Sonnier, “How to Preserve Predevelopment Appreciation of Real Estate” (2014) 42 Real Est. Tax. 19; Hauser, “Dealer Status and the Condominium Conversion” (2007) 34 J. Real Est. Tax. 100; Swad, “Understanding Dealer Status on the Sale of Real Estate”(Oct. 2002) 80 Taxes 31]

The relevant factors are:

a) [13:427] Frequency and substantiality of sales: The higher the volume of sales, and the more frequently they occur, the more likely the taxpayer is a dealer. This is clearly the most important factor, since a regular flow of selling tends to establish the taxpayer is holding the property "primarily" for sale and that the sale is in the "ordinary course" of business. [Suburban Realty Co. v. United States (5th Cir. 1980) 615 F2d 171, 178; Maddux Const. Co. v. Commissioner (1970) 54 TC 1278; see also Bennett v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2012-193—single sale of unfinished house over 5-year period unlikely to be sufficient absent preexisting contract or some other evidence of sales activity]

b) [13:428] Improvements: If the taxpayer improved the property (e.g., by adding streets or sewers), the taxpayer is more likely to be a dealer. However, some improvement activity does not negate capital asset treatment, since it is obviously necessary to improve property to use it for farming or rental. [See Maddux Const. Co. v. Commissioner, supra]

c) [13:429] Solicitation and advertising: The more the taxpayer does (personally or through employees) to solicit sales, the more likely the taxpayer is a dealer. Use of independent contractors to solicit sales can also be attributed to the taxpayer, although less strongly than sales made through employees. [See Maddux Const. Co. v. Commissioner, supra]

d) [13:430] Relation to taxpayer's other activities: A taxpayer engaged in some other business who sells real estate as a "sideline" is less likely to be a dealer than one engaged full-time in land development. [See Pool v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2014-3—fact that taxpayer identified its principal business activity as "development," its principal product/service as "real estate" and filed affidavit identifying itself as developer that entered into buy-sell agreement for individual lots showed taxpayer bought land to develop and sell it]

e) [13:431] Liquidating investments: Some cases hold that a taxpayer who liquidates an investment by selling it off in small increments and not reinvesting the proceeds can still qualify for capital gain treatment. However, the better view is that liquidation produces capital gain only where the liquidation is caused by some externally-induced factor that makes the preexisting use of the property impracticable.

Thus, a taxpayer would be treated as a dealer where they made a voluntary switch from farming or rental to liquidating sales, but not where the switch was involuntary. [Biedenharn Realty Co., Inc. v. United States (5th Cir. 1976) 526 F2d 409, 422 (voluntary switch); Gangi v. Commissioner, TC Memo 1987-561—taxpayers who abandoned rental business and sold 26 condominiums not dealers because change in business resulted from their deteriorating relationship; but see Boree v. Commissioner (11th Cir. 2016) 837 F3d 1093, 1101-1103—property sold due to zoning change that made development prohibitively expensive not eligible for capital gain treatment because, among other things, taxpayer continued to engage in development activities until sale actually concluded]

f) [13:431.1] Change in use of property: A taxpayer who originally acquires property for resale purposes but then decides to hold it as an investment may not be a dealer. [Maddux Const. Co. v. Commissioner (1970) 54 TC 1278; compare Allen v. United States (ND CA 2014) 113 AFTR2d 2014-2262—taxpayers who purchased property for development and resale did not change their intent just because development was delayed due to financing issues; Fargo v. Commissioner, TC Memo 2015-96—taxpayers who continued to spend significant sums on development after supposedly changing their use to investment denied capital gain treatment]

(c) [13:432] Section 1237 capital gain treatment—real estate sellers: Notwithstanding ¶ 13:422 ff., one narrowly-drafted Code provision allows capital gain to real estate sellers. [IRC § 1237]

1) [13:432.1] Minimum five-year holding period; no substantial improvements: IRC § 1237 requires that the property be held at least five years (unless it was inherited) and prohibits any substantial improvements that substantially enhance the value of the lot or parcel. [IRC § 1237(a)(2) & (3); see English v. Commissioner, TC Memo 1993-111—substantial improvements rendered § 1237 inapplicable; McKinley & Zilber, "When Subdividing Real Estate Might Result in a Capital Gain" (2016) 43 J. Real Est. Tax. 80]

An improvement is not substantial if it increases value by no more than 10%. And more substantial improvements are permitted if the property is held at least 10 years (water, sewer, drainage or roads.) [See IRC § 1237(b)(3); Treas.Reg. § 1.1237-1(c)(3)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

2) [13:432.2] No other property for sale: Further, IRC § 1237 applies only if the taxpayer holds no other real property for sale to customers in the ordinary course of business. [IRC § 1237(a)(1)]

3) [13:432.3] Partial allocation to ordinary income: If more than five parcels are sold from the same tract, 5% of the selling price is ordinary income (starting with the sixth parcel). [IRC § 1237(b)(1)]

(d) [13:432.4] Land sale to corporation: A taxpayer owning undeveloped land might sell it to a corporation for its present value; then, the corporation could subdivide the land, build houses on it, and sell the houses individually. Arguably, since the taxpayer is not a dealer, the taxpayer's gain on the sale of the land to the corporation (the difference between the undeveloped value of the property and the taxpayer's basis) is treated as a capital gain. On the other hand, because the corporation is a dealer, its gain from the sale of the homes (the income received from sale of the homes less the costs paid to purchase the land) is treated as ordinary income.

However, the gain from the sale of property by an individual to a corporation of which the individual owns more than 50% of the outstanding stock is treated as ordinary income if the property in the hands of the corporation is depreciable. [IRC § 1239(a), (b)(1), (c)(1)(A)]

Accordingly, because the property became depreciable once the corporation improved it with homes, for the taxpayer's gain from the land sale to be treated as capital gain, the taxpayer cannot own more than 50% of the corporation's outstanding stock. On the other hand, if the corporation buys the land from the taxpayer, subdivides it and sells the subdivided parcels without improving them, the property in the hands of the corporation is not depreciable, and the taxpayer can own more than 50% of the corporate stock without jeopardizing the capital gain treatment of the land sale. (The above analysis could apply equally to a taxpayer who owns multi-family rental property and sells it to a corporation that then converts it to condominiums for sale.)

• [13:432.5] Comment: Where the taxpayer sells property to a corporation of which the taxpayer owns stock, the IRS can be expected to challenge the taxpayer's claimed capital gain treatment of the sale on the ground that the corporation is merely the taxpayer's agent. However, taxpayers have successfully refuted such challenges by keeping meticulous records showing that they did not act in the name of or on account of the corporation, did not have authority to bind the corporation, and all contracts relating to development of the property were in the name of the corporation only. [See Bramblett v. Commissioner (5th Cir. 1992) 960 F2d 526, 534; Glasgow Village Develop. Corp. v. Commissioner (1961) 36 TC 691, 702; Gordy v. Commissioner (1961) 36 TC 855, 859-860; and see generally, Raby & Raby, "Capital Gain and the Real Estate Developer" (Nov. 10, 1997) 77 Tax Notes 717]

(2) [13:433] Case law exclusions: Numerous cases have found particular property interests ineligible for capital asset treatment even though they are not specifically listed in IRC § 1221. In these cases, the courts often refer to the consideration received as a "substitute for ordinary income" (although this is obviously inexact—i.e., the sale price of any asset is really the present value of all the income the property is expected to produce). [United States v. Dresser Industries, Inc. (5th Cir. 1963) 324 F2d 56, 58-59]

• [13:434] Comment: There is a close match between assignment of income cases and capital gain cases: If a donor could not transfer the income from an item by giving it away, the same item is not a capital asset if the owner sells it. [See generally, Bittker & Lokken, "Federal Taxation of Income, Estates & Gifts" p. 51-46 to 51-77 (2d ed. 1989 and current supp.)]

(a) [13:435] Carveouts: Where the taxpayer retains income-producing property and receives an amount that is the economic equivalent of rent, the amount is treated as ordinary income. Such transactions are often referred to as "carveouts."

1) [13:436] Tenant's lease cancellation payments: A payment made by a tenant to the lessor to terminate its lease is considered a substitute for rent (ordinary income to the lessor) and not capital gain from a sale of the lease. [Hort v. Commissioner (1941) 313 US 28, 32-33, 61 S.Ct. 757, 759; compare ¶ 13:440]

• [13:436.1] Comment: Arguably, under IRC § 1234A, income received by a lessor from a tenant to cancel a lease should be treated as capital gain, but the IRS has not yet stated its position on the issue. (See ¶ 13:283.1; and Roche, "Lease Cancellation Payments Are Capital Gain? Yes! The TRA '97 Change to 1234A overturned Hort" (2005) 102 J. of Tax. 364.)

• [13:436.2] Section 1231 property: Even if a tenant's lease cancellation payment normally should be treated as capital gain under IRC § 1234A (¶ 13:436.1), that is only true if the underlying property is itself a capital asset.

[See CRI-Leslie, LLC v. Commissioner (11th Cir. 2018) 882 F3d 1026, 1028 (denying capital gain treatment for tenant's lease cancellation payment on property classified as IRC § 1231 asset rather than capital asset)]

(Section 1231 assets are discussed in detail at ¶ 13:442 ff.)

2) [13:437] Compensation for government taking: Similarly, compensation paid by the government for a temporary taking of the taxpayer's property is treated as rent (ordinary income), not the sale of a capital asset. [Commissioner v. Gillette Motor Transport, Inc. (1960) 364 US 130, 136, 80 S.Ct. 1497, 1501]

3) [13:438] Sale of mineral deposit production payments: The sale of production payments in mineral deposits is treated as the mere anticipation of ordinary income (but the sale of a royalty interest would produce capital gain). [Commissioner v. P.G. Lake, Inc. (1958) 356 US 260, 265-266, 78 S.Ct. 691, 694-695]

(b) [13:439] Sale of entire interest: In contrast, a sale of the taxpayer's entire interest in property (or a fraction of the entire interest) will generally produce capital gain.

For example:

• [13:440] A tenant's sale of its lease to the landlord produces capital gain to the tenant. [Commissioner v. Ferrer (2nd Cir. 1962) 304 F2d 125, 130-133; see IRC § 1241]

• [13:441] And a sale by a life tenant of their entire life estate produces capital gain … although, under present law, the life tenant is denied any basis if they received the life estate by gift or bequest and the remainder is not sold at the same time. [IRC § 1001(e); McAllister v. Commissioner (2nd Cir. 1946) 157 F2d 235, 236]

b. [13:442] Section 1231 assets: Section 1231 assets (¶ 13:443) receive extremely favorable tax treatment: If all IRC § 1231 transactions together produce a net gain, all transactions are capital. But if they produce a net loss, all transactions are ordinary rather than capital. [IRC § 1231(a)(1) & (2); see IRC § 1221(2)—excluding such assets from capital asset treatment (but this is a conduit to § 1231, which gives taxpayers better than capital asset treatment)]

Thus, if there were only one § 1231 transaction that produced a $100,000 loss, and the taxpayer had no capital gains, the loss would be currently deductible; conversely, if it were a capital loss, it would be deductible only to the extent of $3,000 (with the balance carried forward; ¶ 13:418 ff.).

(1) [13:443] "Section 1231 assets" defined: IRC § 1231 assets are depreciable personal property used in a trade or business or any real property (depreciable or not) used in the trade or business. In each case, the asset must be held more than one year. [IRC § 1231(b)]

(a) [13:444] Not dealer property: However, "dealer property" (¶ 13:422) is excluded from IRC § 1231 treatment. [IRC § 1231(b)(1)]

(b) [13:445] Trade or business requirement: Real estate qualifies for favorable IRC § 1231 treatment only if held for use in a trade or business. [IRC § 1231(b), ¶ 13:443] If held simply for the production of income, it would be a capital asset, not a § 1231 asset. (See ¶ 13:303.10 for discussion of property "held for the production of income.")

1) [13:446] Rental property: Real estate rental property qualifies as a trade or business "if the taxpayer-lessor engages in regular and continuous activity in relation to [renting] the property." [Keefe v. Commissioner (2nd Cir. 2020) 966 F3d 107, 113 (internal quotes omitted); see also Fackler v. Commissioner (6th Cir. 1943) 133 F2d 509, 511-512; Curphey v. Commissioner (1980) 73 TC 766, 774—rental of single unit can qualify as trade or business]

Relevant factors include whether the taxpayer (or their agent) performs maintenance and repairs; employs labor to manage property or provide tenant services; purchases materials; collects rent; and pays expenses. The taxpayer's efforts to rent the property also are considered. [See Keefe v. Commissioner, supra, 966 F3d at 113-116—taxpayers who only had a "few causal conversations" with prospective tenants, and instead tried to sell their property, did not use property in trade or business]

(c) [13:447.4] Residence also used for business: Taxpayers who use their homes for personal and rental purposes are required to prorate any applicable business deductions between the two uses of the property (see ¶ 13.294 ff.). Similarly, when such property is sold, the sale price must be allocated between the portions of the property used for personal versus business reasons.

As such, any gain on the sale of the personal portion of the property is treated as capital gain, unless the property qualifies as a "principal residence" (¶ 13:356), in which event the gain may qualify for IRC § 121 nonrecognition; and any loss on the personal portion sale is not deductible (¶ 13:345 ff.). On the other hand, gain or loss on the rental portion of the property is treated as a IRC § 1231 transaction. (For a discussion of the tax treatment of various sales of property used for personal and rental purposes, see Everett, Duncan & Lassar, "Assessing the Tax Consequences of a Sale of Rental Property with Varying Degrees of Personal Usage"(Oct. 2005) 83 Taxes 45.)

(d) [13:447.5] Partnership interest: IRC § 1231 does not apply to the sale of a partnership interest at a loss, even though the only partnership asset is a building used in a trade or business. Sale of a partnership interest normally produces capital gain or loss. [IRC § 741; Baker v. Commissioner, TC Memo 1997-442]

(2) [13:448] Treatment of § 1231 transactions: Under IRC § 1231, all gains and losses from sale or exchange of § 1231 assets are netted. [IRC § 1231(a)(1) & (2)]

(a) [13:449] Involuntary conversions: In addition, recognized gains or losses from involuntary conversion (i.e., casualties or condemnation) on all capital assets held more than one year and used in a trade or business or in a transaction entered into for profit are included in the equation, except that casualties are included only if losses on casualties exceed gains. [IRC § 1231(a)(3) & (4)(B)]

(Recall that gains from involuntary conversion are not recognized if appropriately reinvested under IRC § 1033; see ¶ 13:375 ff.)

(b) [13:450] Capital or ordinary: If this netting process produces a gain, all transactions are long-term capital gains or losses. But if the netting produces a loss, all transactions are ordinary income or ordinary loss. [IRC § 1231(a)(1) & (2)]

(c) [13:450.1] Depreciation recapture: Normally, depreciation on real property is not recaptured as ordinary income when the property is sold (unlike personal property). [IRC § 1250 (depreciable real property); compare IRC § 1245 (depreciable personal property)] However, the Taxpayer Relief Act of 1997 introduced a form of depreciation recapture for real estate: To the extent of depreciation, capital gain is taxed at the rate of 25% rather than the usual 20%. [IRC § 1(h)(1) & (6)]

(For depreciation recapture rules relating to property purchased before 1987, see Maule, "Re-Use Gain Taxation Relief Keys: Unlock Section 1245(a)(5) Ordinary Income" (Nov. 10, 1997) 77 Tax Notes 721.)

Examples

• [13:450.2] TP purchases Mall, a IRC § 1231 real property asset, for $5,000,000 in 1987 and correctly claims straight-line depreciation of $2,000,000 between 1987 and 1999. Thus, Mall's adjusted basis is $3,000,000 in 1999. Mall is sold in 1999 for $3,500,000. This is TP's only IRC § 1231 transaction in 1999. TP's gain is $500,000. It is capital gain but is taxed at the rate of 25% rather than the normal 20%.

• [13:450.3] If instead, TP sold Mall in 1999 for $5,800,000, the gain would have been $2,800,000. Of that amount, $2,000,000 would be taxed at the rate of 25%; the remaining $800,000 would be taxed at the rate of 20%.

(d) [13:451] Caution—losses followed by gains: If in one year there are net IRC § 1231 losses (deducted as ordinary loss) and in any of the next five years there are net § 1231 gains, these gains are turned from capital gain to ordinary income to the extent of the losses. [IRC § 1231(c)]

4. [13:452] Sale or Exchange Requirement: A capital asset transaction can produce capital gain or loss only if characterized as a "sale or exchange." [IRC § 1222(1)-(4)] The phrase is a term of art and is narrower than "sale or other disposition." [See generally, Bittker & Lokken, "Federal Taxation of Income, Estates & Gifts" Ch. 52 (2d ed. 1989 and current supp.)]

Some of the sale or exchange issues significant to real estate investors include:

a. [13:453] Leases: Amounts received by a lessee to cancel a leasehold interest are considered received in exchange for the lease. [IRC § 1241]

b. [13:454] Foreclosures: The transfer of property by a debtor in connection with a foreclosure sale is treated as a sale or exchange of the property to the debtor. [Helvering v. Hammel (1941) 311 US 504, 512, 61 S.Ct. 368, 372]

c. [13:455] Casualties: A gain or loss resulting from casualty insurance compensation is not treated as a sale or exchange. [Helvering v. William Flaccus Oak Leather Co. (1941) 313 US 247, 251, 61 S.Ct. 878, 881] However, such transactions normally are treated as IRC § 1231 transactions (and thus give rise to capital gain or ordinary loss, depending on the results of § 1231 netting; see ¶ 13:448 ff.).

d. [13:456] Worthless and abandoned property: A loss resulting from abandonment of property is an ordinary loss since there is no sale or exchange. [Matz v. Commissioner, TC Memo 1998-334] However, if the abandonment effectively returns the property to a lender, there is a sale or exchange because the transaction is akin to foreclosure. [See Bittker & Lokken, supra at ¶ 52.1.3; Harris, "Section 165(a): Losses on Troubled Real Estate" (1993) 71 Taxes 171; Citron v. Commissioner (1991) 97 TC 200, 213-217—ordinary loss on abandonment of partnership interest where partnership had no debt]

5. [13:457] Minimum "Holding Period": To be eligible for favorable capital gain treatment, the taxpayer, at a minimum, must have held the property for more than one year. [IRC § 1222(3)] Normally, the holding period is measured from the time the taxpayer is treated as being the owner of the property until they are no longer treated as the owner (see ¶ 13:46 ff. for discussion of acquisition and disposition dates).

a. [13:458] Holding period carryover: Ordinarily, under circumstances in which basis is carried over, the holding period is carried over as well. For example:

- [13:459] In the case of a IRC § 1031 (like-kind) exchange or IRC § 1033 nonrecognition after an involuntary conversion, the holding period of the new property includes the holding period of the old. [IRC § 1223(1)]
- [13:460] Similarly, in the case of a gift, the donee's holding period includes the donor's. [IRC § 1223(2)]
- [13:461] And, in the case of a tax-free transfer of property to a partnership or corporation, the entity's holding period includes that of the transferor. [IRC § 1223(2)]

b. [13:462] Inherited property—one-year minimum deemed satisfied: In the case of inherited property, the taxpayer is deemed to have held the property more than one year regardless of when it is sold. [IRC § 1223(11)]

c. [13:463] Holding period for profit interests: The required holding period for favorable capital gains treatment is three years for partnership interests that are transferred to the taxpayer in connection with substantial services performed by the taxpayer (or by any related person) in a trade or business that is (i) involved in raising capital; and (ii) either investing in or disposing of certain assets, including real estate held for rental or investment, or in developing those assets. [IRC § 1061(a), (c); see generally Rubin et al., "Real Estate Owners: Don't Get Carried Away by New Carried Interest Rule" (2018) 159 Tax Notes 45; Magette, "Carried Interest in a Tax Partnership: Reflection, Reaction, and Regs" (2018)]

1. [13:465] Methods of Accounting—In General: Most individual taxpayers use the cash method of accounting, under which items of income are recognized when cash is received and items become deductible when cash is paid. Business taxpayers often use the accrual method of taxation, under which items of income are recognized when they are earned and items of income become deductible when the obligation to pay is incurred. But in no event are these items recognized or deducted any later than when they (or a portion thereof) are taken into account as revenue in the taxpayer's financial statement. [See IRC §§ 446(c), 451(a), (b)]

Normally, gain (but not loss) on the sale of property is recognized under the installment method of taxation, pursuant to which gain is recognized pro rata as cash payments are made by the buyer. [IRC § 453; see ¶ 13:466 ff.] However, the IRS can change a taxpayer's accounting method when necessary to clearly reflect income. [IRC § 446(b)]

2. Installment Method

a. [13:466] When applicable: Most sales of real property that result in recognized gain are taxed under the installment method. [IRC § 453] The installment method applies to a disposition of property where at least one payment is to be received after the taxable year in which the disposition occurs. [IRC § 453(b)]

(1) [13:467] "Election-out" option: When income is otherwise taxable under the installment method, the seller may avoid that method only by "electing out"—i.e., by reporting income on the tax return for the year of sale and following the appropriate instructions on the forms. [IRC § 453(d)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

If the seller elects out of the installment method, the transaction is accounted for under the seller's normal accounting method (generally, cash or accrual).

(2) [13:468] Compare—losses: The installment method cannot be used if the seller has a loss rather than a gain. [Rev.Rul. 70-430, 1970-2 CB 51]

(3) [13:469] Inapplicable to dealer property: The installment method is not applicable to sales of "dealer property" (i.e., property held primarily for sale to customers in the ordinary course of business; ¶ 13:422 ff.). Gain on such property is taxed under the cash or accrual method, depending on the method the seller uses. [IRC § 453(b)(2)(A) & (l)]

(a) [13:470] Exceptions: The installment method can be used in connection with a "dealer disposition" of (i) property used for farming, (ii) residential lots if neither the seller nor a related party made any improvements to the lots, or (iii) timeshares in residential real property. [IRC § 453(l)(2)]

However, in the case of residential lots and timeshares, a seller who uses the installment method must pay interest on any deferred tax. (See IRC § 453(l)(3) for details of computing interest.)

b. [13:471] Installment method mechanics: Under the installment method, the income recognized each year is equal to the same fraction of the payments received in that year as the "gross profit" bears to the "total contract price." [IRC § 453(c)]

For this purpose, the "gross profit" is equal to the sale price less basis. The "total contract price" is the total payments the buyer promised to make. [Treas.Reg. § 15A.453-1(b)(2)(iii)]

• [13:472] Example: S owns Blackacre, which is a capital asset or a IRC § 1231 asset. The basis of Blackacre in S' hands is $6,000. Blackacre is sold to B for $10,000. The purchase contract calls for interest on the unpaid balance at the rate of 10% (which is above the applicable federal rate).

In the year of sale, B pays $3,000 of principal and $400 of interest. S recognizes capital gain of $1,200 (i.e., $3,000 payment times $4,000/$10,000). The $400 of interest is ordinary income to S, because interest is taxed separately and is not involved in the installment method calculation, unless the imputed interest rules apply (see ¶ 13:491 ff.).

c. [13:473] Treatment of debt to which property subject: Any debt to which the property sold is subject is treated as part of the seller's amount realized and therefore determines the gross profit on the sale (see ¶ 13:399).

Ordinarily, however, the debt is not taken into account in the installment sale computation—either in measuring payments or total contract price. But there is an important exception: To the extent the debt exceeds basis of the property, it is treated as a payment in the year of sale and is included as part of the contract price. [Treas.Reg. § 15A.453-1(b)(2)(iii), (iv) & (3)(i)]

(1) Examples

• [13:474] Assume in the example at ¶ 13:472 (S' basis for Blackacre is $6,000 and it is sold for $10,000) that Blackacre was subject to $2,500 debt. Therefore, Buyer owes Seller only $7,500, of which $3,000 was paid in the year of sale. The gross profit remains $4,000 because the debt (whether Buyer assumed it or took subject to it) is part of the amount realized. However, the debt is not part of the total contract price or the payments received. Consequently, the total contract price is only $7,500. The income in the year of sale is $1,600 ($3,000 x $4,000/$7,500).

• [13:475] Compare: In the example set forth at ¶ 13:474, assume instead that S' basis was only $1,000. Since the $2,500 debt to which Blackacre was subject exceeds basis, the excess of $1,500 is treated as both a payment in the year of sale and as part of the total contract price. The gross profit and the total contract price are both $9,000. In the year of sale, S has capital gain of $4,500 (i.e., payments of $4,500 x $9,000/$9,000).

(2) [13:476] Wraparound mortgages: In a wraparound mortgage, the buyer does not assume or take subject to the existing debt but simply promises to pay the seller an amount that includes both the existing debt and the new purchase money debt. The Regulations treat a wraparound mortgage as if the buyer took subject to the existing mortgage. [Treas.Reg. § 15A.453-1(b)(3)(ii)] However, the courts have held this Regulation invalid and the IRS has acquiesced in this decision. [Professional Equities, Inc. v. Commissioner (1987) 89 TC 165, 181, acq. 1988-2 CB 1]

Evidently then, the wraparound mortgage technique can be used to avoid income under the installment method in the year of sale where the existing debt exceeds basis.

d. [13:477] Interest on deferred tax liability: In the case of certain large debts, a taxpayer using the installment method must pay interest to the Treasury on the deferred tax due. [IRC § 453A] The interest is potentially deductible if the taxpayer can surmount the various obstacles to the deduction of interest (see ¶ 13:165 ff.).

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(1) [13:478] Installment sales affected: The deferred interest rule applies only to installment sales for a price exceeding $150,000. Moreover, it applies only if the installment obligation is outstanding at the end of the year and the total of all such obligations which arose during and are outstanding at the end of the year exceed $5,000,000. [IRC § 453A(b)]

(a) [13:479] Exceptions: The deferred interest rule does not apply to personal use property, property used in farming, or certain timeshares and residential lots. [IRC § 453A(b)(3) & (4)]

(2) [13:480] Interest calculation: To calculate the interest on deferred tax, start by figuring the amount of deferred tax. This figure is that amount of gain not yet recognized times the maximum rate of income tax applicable to the taxpayer. The deferred tax figure is then multiplied by the "applicable percentage" of the deferred tax. The applicable percentage is the portion of the amount of the obligations arising in the taxable year in excess of $5,000,000 over the total of such obligations. Finally, the remaining figure is multiplied by the interest rate presently charged on tax underpayments. [IRC § 453A(c), referring to IRC § 6621(a)(2) for interest rate]

(3) [13:481] Pledging: As to installment obligations subject to the interest charge requirement (i.e., any obligation over $150,000 regardless of whether the $5,000,000 floor is met), if such obligations are pledged, the amount borrowed is treated as if it were collected from the installment debtor. [IRC § 453A(d)]

e. [13:482] Payments received: Since receipt of payment triggers recognition of income under the installment method (¶ 13:471), it is important to know what constitutes payment. "Payment" includes actual or constructive receipt of money or property (other than the buyer's promise to pay). [Treas.Reg. § 15A.453-1(b)(3)(i)]

(1) [13:483] Demand or readily-tradable instruments: The seller is treated as receiving a payment if the evidence of debt received by the seller is in the form of an instrument that is payable on demand or is issued by a corporation or government entity and is readily tradable. [IRC § 453(f)(4); Treas.Reg. § 15A.453-1(e)]

(2) [13:484] Security: A seller does not receive payment simply because the buyer's promise to pay is secured by a mortgage or trust deed. Nor is payment received if the buyer's promise is secured by a third party guaranty or a standby letter of credit. A standby letter of credit is a nonnegotiable, nontransferable letter of credit issued by a bank or other financial institution which guarantees payment of the debt but cannot be drawn upon in the absence of default in payment on the underlying debt. [Treas.Reg. § 15A.453-1(b)(3)]

[13:484.1 - 13:484.4] Reserved.

(3) [13:484.5] Deferred exchange: Many real property dispositions take the form of deferred exchanges intended to qualify for nonrecognition under IRC § 1031 (¶ 13:332 ff.). If the transaction fails to qualify under § 1031, however, the installment method may still be available to defer taxation of the funds until they are actually paid over to the taxpayer. Receipt by the third-party qualified intermediary is not treated as constructive receipt of the proceeds by the taxpayer for purposes of IRC § 453. [See Smalley v. Commissioner (2001) 116 TC 450; and ¶ 13:339.1]

f. [13:485] Contingent payment obligations: The installment method can be used even for contingent payment obligations as to which the gross profit and the total contract price cannot be ascertained in the year of sale. [IRC § 453(j)(2)] The Regulations provide the ground rules for applying the installment method to contingent payment obligations. [Treas.Reg. § 15A.453-1(c)]

(1) [13:486] Maximum price stated: If the amount of the sale price is contingent but is subject to a stated maximum, the installment method is applied as if the maximum price will in fact be paid. If the maximum is in fact not obtained, the gross profit ratio will then be recomputed. [Treas.Reg. § 15A.453-1(c)(2)]

(2) [13:487] Fixed period: If the amount of the sale price is contingent but the maximum period over which payments can be received is fixed, the taxpayer's basis is allocated equally to each taxable year in which payment might be received. However, no loss is permitted if the amount received in a given year is less than the basis allocated to that year. [Treas.Reg. § 15A.453-1(c)(3)]

(3) [13:488] Neither maximum price nor fixed period: If there is neither a maximum price nor a fixed period, and if it is determined that a sale has actually occurred (as opposed to a lease or some other arrangement), basis is recovered over an arbitrary period of 15 years (but taxpayers can try to persuade the IRS that a shorter period should be used). [Treas.Reg. § 15A.453-1(c)(4)]

g. [13:489] Second dispositions: If a taxpayer sells property to a related person ("first disposition") and the related person disposes of the property before paying the original seller all that is owed ("second disposition"), the amount realized in the second disposition is treated as received by the original seller. [IRC § 453(e)(1) & (f)(1) (definition of "related person"); see Harris, "Installment Sales of Real Estate: Second Disposition by Related Party Can Backfire on Seller" (2000) 27 J. Real Est. Tax 84]

However, in the case of real property, this provision does not apply if the second disposition is at least two years after the first disposition. [IRC § 453(e)(2)]

h. [13:490] Dispositions of installment obligations: If a seller deferred recognition of gain by using the installment method and disposes of the installment obligation before it is paid off, the deferred gain is recognized at the time of the disposition. If the obligation is disposed of other than by sale or exchange (i.e., disposition by gift), the transferor is treated as receiving the fair market value of the obligation. [IRC § 453B(a)]

However, this provision does not apply to a IRC § 1041 transfer to a spouse or former spouse incident to divorce (¶ 13:385). [IRC § 453B(g)]

3. [13:491] Imputed Interest: Where the contract of sale fails to provide for interest on deferred payments at or above the applicable federal rate, interest must be imputed. This rule affects both the seller (who has imputed interest income) and the buyer (who has imputed interest payments that may be deductible). [IRC §§ 483, 1274; see generally, Bittker & Lokken, "Federal Taxation of Income, Estates & Gifts," Chs. 56, 57 (2d ed. 1989 and current supp.)]

a. [13:492] Imputed interest Code provisions: Two separate Code Sections are potentially applicable to such transactions:

(1) [13:493] Section 1274: Under IRC § 1274, the imputed interest rate is tied to the rates the federal government pays on its debt of varying maturity ("the applicable federal rate" or AFR). There is a short-term rate (for obligations up to three years), a mid-term rate (three-to-nine years), and a long-term rate (over nine years). These rates are announced periodically by the IRS. Unless an obligation calls for interest at least equal to the AFR, interest is ordinarily imputed at that rate. [IRC § 1274]

(a) [13:493.1] Sale-leasebacks: In the case of a sale and leaseback, the imputed interest rate is 110% of the AFR. [IRC § 1274(e)]

(b) [13:494] Smaller transactions: An interest rate of 9% is provided for certain sales of real property or used personal property (where the AFR is above 9%). A sale qualifies for the 9% rate if the sale price is less than $2,000,000. If the price is between $2,000,000 and $4,000,000, the applicable rate is a blend of the 9% rate and the AFR. [IRC § 1274A]

(2) [13:495] Section 483: Generally, IRC § 483 uses the AFR, but the method of accounting differs from the rule applicable under IRC §§ 1274 or 1274A. Section 483 is applicable to sales of farms (if the sale price does not exceed $1,000,000), sales of a principal residence, or any sale for less than $250,000 in principal and interest payments. [IRC § 1274(c)(4)]

b. [13:496] Imputed interest computations: Assume the AFR is 9%. Start with the sum of the principal payments due under the contract (the "stated principal" amount). Subtract the sum of the present values of the principal and interest payments called for by the contract. The present value is determined by using an actuarial table and by discounting the stream of payments at 9%. This figure is called the "imputed principal amount."

The imputed principal amount is included in the seller's income as the seller's amount realized (regardless of the actual fair market value of the note). If the seller uses the installment method, this figure is used to establish the gross profit and the total contract price. The imputed principal amount also will be the buyer's basis for the property.

Next, subtract the imputed principal amount from the stated principal amount. The difference is "original issue discount" (OID). The amount of OID must be included in the seller's income (in addition to the stated interest under the contract) and will be treated as an additional interest payment by the buyer (potentially deductible if all the requirements for deducting interest are met). [IRC §§ 1274(b), 483(a) & (b)]

(1) [13:497] Example: In Year 1, S sells Blackacre (a capital asset) for $1,000,000 to B. B will pay nothing down and will make payments of $200,000 per year for five years beginning in Year 2. B will pay interest on the unpaid balance at the rate of 5%, but the AFR is 9%.

The "stated principal" amount is $1,000,000. However, the present value of the payments of principal and interest due is only $820,000 (using a 9% discount rate compounded semi-annually). Thus, the imputed principal amount is $820,000. S' amount realized is $820,000 and B's basis for Blackacre is $820,000. The $180,000 difference is OID; it will be taxed as interest income to S over the life of the loan and will be deductible by B (assuming B meets the requirements for deductibility of interest). [IRC §§ 1274(b), 483(a) & (b)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

(2) [13:498] Special computation for "potentially abusive situations": A different method of computation applies in the case of any "potentially abusive situation." [See IRC § 1274(b)(3)]

c. [13:499] Timing: Interest imputation under IRC § 483 occurs as payments are made. Part of each principal payment will be treated as interest, rather than principal. Over the course of the contract, the entire amount of OID ($180,000 in the example set forth at ¶ 13:497) will be treated as interest payments from buyer to seller. [IRC § 483(a)]

IRC § 1274, on the other hand, uses an accrual method: Each year a portion of the OID is treated as interest regardless of whether any payments of principal are made. [IRC § 1272(a)]

d. [13:500] Exceptions: There are several exceptions to the imputed interest rules:

(1) [13:501] Section 1041 transactions: Interest is not imputed in connection with IRC § 1041 transfers between spouses or former spouses incident to divorce. [Treas.Reg. §§ 1.483-1(c)(2)(iii), 1.1274-1(b)(10)]

(2) [13:502] Maximum $3,000 sale price: IRC § 483 does not apply if the selling price (as determined at the time of the sale or exchange) does not exceed $3,000. [IRC § 483(d)(2)]

(3) [13:503] Intrafamily real estate deals: The imputed interest rate cannot exceed 7% in respect to land sales between family members (up to $500,000 per sale). [IRC § 483(e)]

(4) [13:504] Personal use property: If the buyer will use the property for personal rather than business or investment purposes, interest imputation applies only to the seller—not to the buyer (who thus is denied a deduction for imputed interest). [IRC § 1275(b)]

4. [13:505] Accounting for Sales if Seller Elects Out of Installment Method: If the seller elects out of the installment method (¶ 13:467) or does not qualify for it (¶ 13:469), gain should be reported under the taxpayer's normal method of accounting—either the cash or accrual method. Broadly, under the cash method, income is recognized when cash or a cash equivalent is received. Under the accrual method, income is recognized when earned (normally, at the time the sale is made).

a. [13:506] Cash method—exceptions: There are two important exceptions to the rule that income is recognized under the cash method only when cash is received:

(1) [13:507] Constructive receipt: Taxpayers cannot turn their backs on income. When a taxpayer has both the right and the power to receive an item of income, the item becomes taxable even though it is not in fact received—i.e., in this situation, the income is deemed "constructively received." [See Reed v. Commissioner (1st Cir. 1983) 723 F2d 138, 142; Goldsmith v. United States (Ct.Cl. 1978) 586 F2d 810, 815]

However, income is not constructively received where by contract it is not yet payable (even if the taxpayer was responsible for the decision to make the contract deferring the income). [See Treas.Reg. § 1.451-2]

(2) [13:508] Equivalent of cash: Cash method taxpayers recognize income when they receive "the equivalent of cash" even though they have not actually received cash. Sometimes this rule is referred to as the "economic benefit doctrine" (taxpayer receives income when taxpayer receives an "economic benefit"). [See Goldsmith v. United States (Ct.Cl. 1978) 586 F2d 810, 820; Drysdale v. Commissioner (6th Cir. 1960) 277 F2d 413, 418]

(a) [13:509] Special rule for sales of property: Under the Regulations, if a taxpayer elects out of (or is ineligible to use) the installment method, the fair market value of the buyer's promise to pay is treated as property and included at its fair market value, regardless of whether it is transferable. Thus, it is necessary to value and include in income any legally enforceable promise to pay, regardless of whether it is embodied in a formal note, whether it is secured by a mortgage or trust deed, or whether it can be readily sold on the market. Consequently, unsecured notes, executory land sale contracts, or even an oral promise to pay must be valued if enforceable under local law. [Treas.Reg. § 15A.453-1(d)(2); Warren Jones Co. v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 1975) 524 F2d 788, 793-794; but see also Craven, "'Money' and 'Property (Other Than Money)': An Exploration of 'Amount Realized' Under Section 1001(b)"(1992) 70 Taxes 912, 914-917 (questioning this result and validity of Regulation)]

(b) Valuation of promise to pay

1) [13:510] Fixed obligations: In the case of a fixed amount obligation, the seller must value the obligation. In no event will that value be considered to be less than the fair market value of the property surrendered and in no case will the sale be considered an "open transaction." [Treas.Reg. § 15A.453-1(d)(2)(ii)]

2) [13:511] Contingent obligations: In the case of a contingent payment obligation, if neither the obligation nor the underlying property is subject to valuation, an "open transaction" method can be used, pursuant to which the amounts received are applied first against basis with the excess being gain. [Treas.Reg. § 15A.453-1(d)(2)(iii)]

b. [13:512] Accrual method: A seller using the accrual method must accrue as income the entire amount payable under an installment obligation, regardless of the value of the obligation, unless the debt is of doubtful collectibility. [Treas.Reg. § 15A.453-1(d)(2)(ii); Rev.Rul. 79-292, 1979-2 CB 287; Craven, supra at 918-922]

(1) [13:513] Application to land sale contract: In the case of a land sale contract (under which the buyer takes possession but the seller retains title, ¶ 13:48), an accrual basis seller must accrue as income the gain arising from such sale in the year when the right to receive the income becomes fixed—i.e., when the contract is executed and the buyer takes possession. [Keith v. Commissioner (2000) 115 TC 605, 616-619 (applying rule to "contract for deed" under Georgia law)]

5. [13:514] Long-Term Contracts: When a contract to perform services extends more than one year (as in the development and construction of real property), there are two methods of accounting for the expenses and reporting the gain, and one optional "safe harbor" method relating to common improvement costs (¶ 13:514.1 ff.).

a. [13:514.1] Complete contract method: All income and most deductions associated with the contract are deferred until the year in which the contract is substantially completed. This occurs when 95% of the total allocable costs have been incurred or when the contract has been accepted as completed. [Treas.Reg. § 1.460-1(c)(3)(i)]

This method permits income to be deferred and some expenses not directly associated with the contract (e.g., marketing) to be taken currently. Thus, Congress has limited its availability to home construction contracts and any other construction contract entered into by a taxpayer who (i) expects the construction to be completed within two years and (ii) has gross receipts for the previous three years of not more than $25 million. [IRC §§ 460(e), 448(c)(i); Shea Homes, Inc. v. Commissioner (9th Cir. 2016) 834 F3d 1061, 1070 (permitting developer to classify completion as not only construction of single house, but also entire development); TAM 2016650014—complete contract method permitted for grading and soil compaction of pad area needed for house foundations; compare Howard Hughes Co., L.L.C. v. Commissioner (5th Cir. 2015) 805 F3d 175, 182-184—complete contract method denied where taxpayer did not incur any construction costs in conjunction with its common improvement costs; see also Friedline, "The Completed Contract Method and Master Planned Communities" (4th Quarter 2017) Real Estate Tax'n 17]

Caution: The IRS has announced it will not acquiesce in Shea Homes, Inc. [See AOD 2017-03, 2017 IRB 1072]

b. [13:514.2] Percentage of completion method: Unless the construction project qualifies for the complete contract method (¶ 13:514.1), the taxpayer must report income each year in an amount that roughly corresponds to the percentage of the contract completed that year. This is done by comparing the costs incurred in the taxable year with the costs estimated for the entire contract. [IRC § 460]

The taxpayer may receive interest on overpayments, or be required to pay interest on underpayments, upon completion of the contract when the actual costs are known. [IRC § 460(b)(2)]

c. [13:514.3] Common improvement costs: For common improvement costs, which include improvements to real property that benefit two or more properties held for sale (e.g., streets, sidewalks, sewer lines, playgrounds, clubhouses, tennis courts, and swimming pools that developers are required by contract or law to provide and for which the costs are not recoverable through depreciation), developers may use an optional "safe harbor" method of accounting. It is referred to as the "Alternative Cost Method" and is used to determine the allocable share of the estimated costs of the common improvement costs that may be included in the basis of an individual real property unit held for sale. This may include costs not actually incurred by the end of the tax year but may not exceed the cumulative amount of common improvement costs for all tax years that have been incurred as of the end of the tax year. [See Rev.Proc. 2023-9, 2023-7 IRB 471; Seago & Orbach, "Home Construction Common Improvement Costs: The Matching Issue"(2023) 180 Tax Notes 709]

6. Abandonment Losses

a. [13:515] Loss treatment, generally: Where property used in business or for investment becomes worthless, its owner may seek a loss deduction equal to the property's adjusted basis. [IRC § 165(a), (c); Harris, "Section 165(a): Losses on Troubled Real Estate" (1993) 71 Taxes 171] (For a discussion of whether such loss is ordinary or capital, see ¶ 13:456.)

(1) [13:515.1] Compare—treatment upon transfer of encumbered property: The tax treatment may be different if the property is conveyed to a lender (or to a taxing authority where real property taxes are delinquent): Here, the amount of discharged debt is considered an amount realized; and the taxpayer may have a gain on abandonment rather than a loss. [Tufts v. Commissioner (1983) 461 US 300, 317, 103 S.Ct. 1826, 1836; see L & C Springs Assocs. v. Commissioner (7th Cir. 1999) 188 F3d 866, 868]

Moreover, the “sale or exchange” requirement is met so that the loss may become a capital loss or a IRC § 1231 loss (see ¶ 13:418 ff., 13:448 ff.). [Freeland v. Commissioner (1980) 74 TC 970, 979-981]

b. [13:516] Timing of loss deduction: Generally, a loss deduction must be evidenced by closed and completed transactions and fixed by identifiable events. [Treas.Reg. § 1.165-1(b), (c)]

(1) [13:516.1] Land: In the case of land, a loss deduction is allowed in the year the land becomes worthless, which may precede the year in which there is an overt act of abandonment or loss of title.

Worthlessness occurs in the year the taxpayer decides the property has become worthless if the property is objectively worthless in that year and the “identifiable event” test is met. [Treas.Reg. § 1.165-2(a); Echols v. Commissioner (5th Cir. 1991) 935 F2d 703, 707, rhng.den. (5th Cir. 1991) 950 F2d 209] However, some cases require an act of abandonment in this situation. [See Corra Resources, Ltd. v. Commissioner (7th Cir. 1991) 945 F2d 224, 226-227; A.J. Industries, Inc. v. United States (9th Cir. 1974) 503 F2d 660, 668]

(2) [13:516.2] Buildings: A loss deduction on abandoned (worthless) buildings requires an overt act of abandonment—i.e., the taxpayer's intent must “be irrevocably to discard the asset so that it will neither be used again by him nor retrieved by him for sale, exchange or other disposition.” [Treas.Reg. § 1.167(a)-8(a)(4)]

(3) [13:516.2a] Mortgaged property: Since abandonment of mortgaged property to the lender often generates income rather than loss (¶ 13:515.1), the taxpayer may attempt to delay the year in which abandonment occurs. In this situation, no overt act is required and an abandonment can be found to have occurred based on all the facts and circumstances. [L & C Springs Assocs. v. Commissioner (7th Cir. 1999) 188 F3d 866, 870-871—test is whether for all practical purposes taxpayer will not retain the property]

(4) [13:516.3] Partnership interest: In the case of a partnership interest, a loss deduction is allowed in the year the taxpayer can establish either worthlessness or abandonment. [Echols v. Commissioner (5th Cir. 1991) 935 F2d 703, 707]

Purchase and Sale Tax Concerns

Part III. Disposition of Real Property

G. Withholding and Reporting on Sale of Property

- 1. Withholding Obligations
  - a. [13:520] FIRPTA withholding
  - b. [13:521] California withholding
    - (1) [13:521.1] Exempt sellers
    - (2) [13:521.2] Exempt sales conditions
    - (3) [13:521.3] Installment sales
    - (4) [13:521.7] Withholding mechanics
    - (5) [13:521.8] Alternative withholding amount pursuant to transferor election and certification
      - (a) [13:521.9] Non-California "S" corporations
- 2. Reporting Requirements
  - a. [13:522] "Real estate transaction" information return upon closing
    - (1) [13:522.1] Exception for certain principal residences
  - b. [13:524] Lender's information return upon foreclosure

1. Withholding Obligations

a. [13:520] FIRPTA withholding: Under the Foreign Investment in Real Property Tax Act (FIRPTA), a nonresident alien individual or corporation who sells real property located in the United States is subject to U.S. individual or corporate tax on the gain (even if the alien is not engaged in a U.S. trade or business). To facilitate enforcement of this requirement, as of February 17, 2016, the buyer of the property must withhold tax at the rate of 15% on the amount paid for the property (10% for pre-2/17/16 dispositions and personal residences valued above $300,000 and below $1 million), or such lesser amount as set forth in a certificate provided by the IRS. In certain circumstances, these provisions also apply to the sale of stock in a domestic corporation or in a partnership or trust that owns a U.S. real property interest, depending on whether foreign persons own 50% or more of the entity's fair market value. [IRC §§ 897, 1445(a); see also Treas.Reg. § 1.897-1(c) (applying a look-through approach for determining direct or indirect ownership); IRS Pub. 515 ("Withholding of Tax on Nonresident Aliens and Foreign Entities"), p. 46; Diosdi, "An Introduction to the Taxation of U.S. Real Estate Held by Foreign Investors" (2024) 140 J. Tax'n 7; Cohen, "A Complete History of Firpta Reform"(2018) 127 J. Tax'n 26]

However, there are numerous exceptions to the withholding requirements, including one covering the purchase of a residence for $300,000 or less (IRC § 1445(b)(5)). [IRC §§ 897, 1445; see also ¶ 4:510.1 ff.]

b. [13:521] California withholding: Buyers of California real property interests for a price exceeding $100,000 generally must withhold and pay to the Franchise Tax Board 3 1/3% of the sale price. The tax must be withheld regardless of whether the proceeds will be distributed locally or out of state. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 18662(e)(1)-(2)(A), (3)(A); but see ¶ 13:521.8]

Other withholding rates, specified as a percentage of the gain, may apply to sales of California real property by non-California partnerships and non-California "S" corporations (¶ 13:521.9). [See Rev. & Tax.C. § 18662(e)(2)(B)]

 © 2025 Thomson Reuters. No claim to original U.S. Government Works.

Escrow holders are required to give buyers written notice of the withholding requirements. [See generally, Rev. & Tax.C. § 18662(e)(3)(B); and Rev. & Tax.C. § 18668 (withholding liability to FTB; interest assessment for failure to withhold and pay to FTB)]

(1) [13:521.1] Exempt sellers: The following sellers are exempt from the California withholding requirements:

• Corporations and partnerships having a permanent place of business in California after the transfer of title (see Rev. & Tax.C. § 18662(e)(1)(A) & (B)); and

• Banks acting as trustees other than as trustees of deeds of trust (Rev. & Tax.C. § 18662(e)(3)(C)(ii)).

(2) [13:521.2] Exempt sales conditions: In addition, the withholding requirements do not apply when any of the following conditions exist:

• The sale price does not exceed $100,000 (Rev. & Tax.C. § 18662(e)(3)(A));

• The escrow holder failed to give the transferee written notice of the withholding obligations, unless the transferee was a qualified intermediary or accommodator in a deferred IRC § 1031 exchange (¶ 13:338) (Rev. & Tax.C. § 18662(e)(3)(B));

• The transferee acquired the property by foreclosure or by deed in lieu of foreclosure (Rev. & Tax.C. § 18662(e)(3)(C)(i));

• The transferee relies in good faith on the transferor's written certificate (executed under penalty of perjury) that either:

— The property was last used as the transferor's principal residence within the meaning of IRC § 121;

— The property being conveyed is exchanged, or will be exchanged, for IRC § 1031 like-kind property (¶ 13:332 ff.), but only to the extent of the gain not recognized under § 1031;

— The property has been "compulsorily or involuntarily converted" under IRC § 1033 (¶ 13:347.26), and the transferor intends to acquire property similar to or related in service or use so as to be eligible for nonrecognition of any gain under IRC § 1033; or — The transaction will result in a net loss or gain not required to be recognized for California income tax purposes (Rev. & Tax.C. § 18662(e)(3)(D)).

(3) [13:521.3] Installment sales: In the case of an "installment sale" within the meaning of IRC § 453(b), for California income tax purposes, the provisions of Rev. & Tax.C. § 18662(e) must be separately applied to each principal payment made under the installment sale agreement. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 18662(e)(3)(E)]

[13:521.4 - 13:521.6] Reserved.

(4) [13:521.7] Withholding mechanics: Amounts withheld under Rev. & Tax.C. § 18662 must be reported and remitted to the FTB in the form and manner specified by the FTB. Notwithstanding the foregoing, funds withheld on individual transactions by real estate escrow persons may, at the option of the real estate escrow person, be remitted by the 20th day of the month following the close of escrow for the individual transaction or may be remitted on a monthly basis in combination with other transactions closed during that month. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 18662(e)(4)(A)]

(5) [13:521.8] Alternative withholding amount pursuant to transferor election and certification: Upon the transferor's election and written certification under penalty of perjury on a prescribed FTB form, rather than withholding the typical 3 1/3% amount (¶ 13:521), the transferee may be required to withhold an amount not less than the gain required to be recognized by the taxpayer. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 18662(e)(2)(B), (C)]

(a) [13:521.9] Non-California "S" corporations: In the case of a sale by a non-California "S" corporation, the "S" corporation may elect the alternative withholding rate of 10.8% or 12.8%, as applicable, of the gain recognized by the "S" corporation instead of the default withholding rate of 3 1/3%. [Rev. & Tax.C. § 18662(e)(B)(ii)]

Cross-refer: For excellent guidance on the California real estate withholding requirements and applicable forms, see FTB Pub. 1016 (accessible online at www.ftb.ca.gov).

2. Reporting Requirements

a. [13:522] "Real estate transaction" information return upon closing: The escrow company or other person who closes a real estate transaction (designated by the Code as a "reporting person") must file an information return reporting the transaction to the IRS. IRS Form 1099 is used for such reporting. The form generally is required for any sale or exchange of realty, whether or not the transaction is taxable, but does not cover transfers by corporations or government units. In addition, the reporting person must furnish a written statement containing such return to the seller of the property. [See IRC § 6045(e); Treas.Reg. § 1.6045-4; Prescott & Teichner, "Information Reporting Requirements for Real Estate Transactions" (1992) 44 U.S.C. Tax Inst. Ch. 18]

(1) [13:522.1] Exception for certain principal residences: The reporting requirement does not apply to the sale or exchange of a residence for $250,000 or less ($500,000 or less in the case of a married couple) if the person otherwise responsible for reporting receives written assurance from the seller that (a) the residence is the seller's principal residence (as defined in IRC § 121, see ¶ 13:345 ff.), (b) no federally-subsidized mortgage assistance is involved, and (c) the full amount of the gain is excludable from gross income. [IRC § 6045(e)(5); Rev.Proc. 98-20, 1998-1 CB 549]

➪ [13:523] PRACTICE POINTER: IRC § 6045(e) and the Regulations designate one "reporting person" for each real estate transaction. Generally, the reporting person is the person responsible for closing the transaction; this could be the transferee's or transferor's attorney, in which event, the attorney (like any reporting person) could be subject to penalty assessments for failure to comply (IRC §§ 6721, 6722, 6723). [See IRC § 6045(e)(2); Treas.Reg. § 1.6045-4(e)(1), (3)]

Under the standards adopted by the Regulations, it is not always easy to decipher who, in a particular real estate transaction, is required to act as a reporting person. However, the parties can resolve this problem by appointing a reporting person in a written "designation agreement" executed at or before the closing and signed by the designated person. The designated person must be someone who is "responsible for closing the transaction"; the transferee's or transferor's attorney; the disbursing title or escrow company that is "most significant" in terms of gross proceeds to be disbursed; or, the mortgage lender. Such appointment is expressly permitted by the Regulations and will supersede the criteria otherwise used to identify the reporting person. [See Treas.Reg. § 1.6045-4(e)(5)]

b. [13:524] Lender's information return upon foreclosure: A lender who forecloses on property must file an information return with the IRS on the foreclosure transaction. Lenders also must file an information return if they know that property in which they have a security interest has been abandoned. [IRC § 6050J] Thus, gains arising under Tufts (¶ 13:400 ff.) will be drawn to the IRS' attention.
